One who learns of a conspiracy after it is formed, and then joins it, or knowingly aids in the execution of its scheme, or shares in its profits, becomes from that time as much a "co-conspirator" as if he were one of those who originally designed it and put it in operation. United States v. Standard Oil Co., 152 Fed. 290, 294 (citing Lincoln v. Claflin, 7 Wall. 132, 138, 19 L. Ed. 106; United States v. Babcock, 24 Fed. Cas. 913; United States v. Cassidy, 67 Fed. 698, 702; Spies v. People, 12 N. E. 865, 976, 17 N. E. 898, 122 Ill. 1, 3 Am. St. Rep. 320; United States v. Johnson, 26 Fed. 682, 684).

CODE

See Criminal Code.

"When a code is adopted, the understanding is that such code is a declaration of established law, rather than an enactment of new and different rules. This is the idea of a 'code,' except as to matters of procedure and jurisdiction, which often ignore the past, and require affirmative description." Bassett v. United States, 11 Sup. Ct. 165, 167, 137 U. S. 506, 34 L. Ed. 762.

The fact that Acts 1907, p. 847, § 120, relating to a special road and bridge tax, is embodied as a section in the printed Code of 1907, imparts to it no validity, because it was approved after the approval of the "Code," which is properly the manuscript prepared by the code commissioner, revised by the code committee, and adopted by the Legislature, and not the printed volumes labeled "Code of Alabama." City of Anniston v. Court of County Com'rs of Calhoun County, 48 South. 605, 158 Ala. 68.

CODEBTOR

A surety on an appeal bond, against whom judgment has been jointly rendered under Code 1906, § 86, providing that judgment on appeal from a justice court should be rendered jointly against the principal and his surety, is a "codebtor," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 16, 30 Stat. 550, which provides that the liability of a codebtor with a bankrupt shall not be altered by the discharge of such bankrupt. Bailey v. Reeves (Miss.) 59 South. 802.

CODEFENDANT

Two persons indicted separately, one for theft, the other for receiving the stolen property, are "codefendants," within the rule preventing the wife of one defendant, who has not been tried, testifying against his codefendant. Bowmer v. State, 116 S. W. 798, 800, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 416.

CODICIL

A "codicil" is some addition to or qualification of a will, and is dependent for its life and force on the life and force of the will, and cannot be admitted to probate where the will to which it refers has been revoked. In re Nokes' Estate, 130 N. Y. Supp. 187, 71 Misc. Rep. 383.

A "codicil" is a clause added to a will after its execution, and does not revoke the will, but is to be construed with it as one entire instrument. Lee v. Lee, 91 N. E. 507, 45 Ind. App. 645.

"A 'codicil' is some addition to or qualification of a last will and testament. A codicil is part of a will to which it is attached or referred, and both must be taken and construed together as one instrument." "By its very definition, the word 'codicil' imports a reference to some paper as a will; and the fact that the 'codicil' is written upon a sheet of paper containing a writing which purports to be testamentary in character is sufficient to justify the inference that such writing is the will referred to by the 'codicil.'" In re Plumel's Estate, 90 Pac. 192, 193, 151 Cal. 77, 121 Am. St. Rep. 100 (quoting and adopting definition in Proctor v. Clarke [N. Y.] 3 Redf. Sur. 445, 448).

"A 'codicil' is a supplement or an addition to a will, made by the testator, to be taken as part of the testament, and having for its object the explanation, modification, addition to, subtraction from, or alteration of some or all of the provisions contained in the will. A 'codicil' may confirm, re-execute, revive, republish, or revoke any will with which it may be incorporated." Logan v. Cassidy, 50 S. E. 794, 802, 71 S. C. 175.

In reply to counsel's argument that the term "codicil," used by the notary, designated the last bequest as a separate act, and not as a part of the one will, the district court said that the notary did not use the term "codicil" alone, but styled the additional bequest a "codicil and addition to the will"; but, if he had used the term "codicil" alone, he would have been using a term synonymous with the word "bequest" or "disposition"; that the Civil Code uses the word "codicil" as synonymous with the word "disposition" or "legacy," in the provision that no "disposition" mortis causa shall henceforth be made otherwise than by a last will or testament; but the name given to the act of last will is of no importance, and dispositions may be made by testament or under that institution of heir, legacy, codicil, donation mortis causa, or under any other name indicating the last will, provided that the act be clothed with the forms required for the validity of the testament, and the clauses it contains clearly establish that it is a disposition of last will. The conclusions of the district court were affirmed. Oglesby v. Turner, 50 South. 859, 864, 124 La. 1084.

CODIFYING ACT

Laws 1896, c. 908, §§ 130 and 151 (Gen. Tax Law), providing that the county treasurer shall publish notice of tax sales and of redemptions in newspapers designated for the publication of the session laws, is a "codifying act," designed to reduce all statutes relating to taxation into a complete and harmonious system. A "codifying act" is presumed to exhaust the subject to which it relates, unless a different intention appears on the face of the statute or is an irresistible inference from special circumstances. The new enactment is substituted in place of all statutes previously existing, and becomes the sole rule of action. In re Troy Press Co., 79

N. E. 1006, 1007, 1008, 187 N. Y. 279 (citing Suth. St. Const. [Lewis' Ed.] §§ 269, 270; King v. Cornell, 1 Sup. Ct. 312, 106 U. S. 395, 27 L. Ed. 60; Tracy v. Tuffy, 10 Sup. Ct. 527, 130 U. S. 206, 223, 33 L. Ed. 879; State v. Wilson, 43 N. H. 415, 419, 82 Am. Dec. 163; Bartlett v. King, 12 Mass. 537, 545, 7 Am. Dec. 99).

"A 'codifying act' is presumed to exhaust the subject to which it relates, unless a different intention appears on the face of the statute, or is an irresistible inference from special circumstances. The new enactment is substituted in the place of all statutes previously existing and becomes the sole rule of action." Pratt Institute v. City of New York, 75 N. E. 1119, 1121, 183 N. Y. 151, 5 Ann. Cas. 198.

COEMPLOYÉ

"Coemployé" is used with the same meaning as fellow servant. Jarnek v. Manitowoc Coal & Dock Co., 78 N. W. 62, 97 Wis. 537.

An interruption having occurred in the circuit of an electric light company, a lineman before making the necessary repair, in the presence of his foreman, the electrician and engineer, turned off the current, and told them not to turn it on until they heard from him. Within half an hour the electrician and engineer tested the circuit, and, no break being disclosed, the engineer turned on the current with the result that the lineman, then repairing the break, received the charge. Neither the electrician nor engineer exercised any supervisory power over the lineman or the work. Held, that the electrician and engineer were "coemployés" of the lineman, for whose negligence the company was not liable. Shank v. Edison Electric Illuminating Co., 74 Atl. 210, 212, 225 Pa. 893, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 46, 17 Ann. Cas. 465.

COERCE—COERCION

See, also, Duress; Intimidation.

Persuasion is not "coercion." Van Valkenburgh v. Oldham, 108 Pac. 42, 44, 12 Cal. App. 572.

Putting one in actual fear of loss of his property or of injury to his business unless he submits to demands made upon him is often not less potent in "coercing" than fear of violence to his person. Purvis v. Local No. 500, United Brotherhood of Carpenters & Joiners, 68 Atl. 585, 587, 214 Pa. 348, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 642, 112 Am. St. Rep. 757, 6 Ann. Cas. 275.

"Coercion," which results, however directly and intentionally, from the exercise of the absolute right to refrain from contracting, cannot amount to a tort, because it is not a violation of any legal right. Al- fred W. Booth & Bro. v. Burgess, 65 Atl. 226, 232, 72 N. J. Eq. 181.

"The word 'coerce' means to restrain by force, especially by law or authority; to repress. In the sense in which it now prevails, it differs but little from the word 'compel,' yet there is a distinction between them; 'coercion' being usually accomplished by indirect means as by threats or intimidation, physical force being more rarely used in coercing. It imports some actual or threatened exercise of power possessed, or supposed to exist or be possessed, by the party who, it is claimed, so acted." The federal anti-trust act prohibits any combination which obstructs the free flow of commerce between the states, or restricts, in that regard, the liberty of a trader engaged in business. This includes restraint of trade aimed at compelling third parties and strangers involuntarily not to engage in the course of interstate trade or commerce except on conditions that the combination imposes. United States v. American Naval Stores Co., 172 Fed. 455, 462.

"To constitute the 'coercion' or duress which will be regarded as sufficient to make a payment involuntary, there must be some actual or threatened exercise of power possessed, or believed to be possessed, by the party exacting or recovering the payment over the person or property of another, for which the latter has no means of immediate relief than by making the payment." Where a mortgage provided that on default of interest the mortgagee could treat principal and interest as due, and on such default he brought suit for foreclosure, which constituted an election to treat the mortgage as due, and where the mortgagor tendered the amount of the mortgage and interest, and the mortgagee then stated that the foreclosure suit had been discontinued and insisted on payment of $1,000, which the mortgage provided for in case the mortgagor elected to pay the amount of the mortgage before it was due, and the mortgagor, to procure the discharge of the mortgage, paid such bonus, the payment was under "duress" and involuntary, and could be recovered back in an action for that purpose. Kilpatrick v. Germania Life Ins. Co., 75 N. E. 1124, 1126, 183 N. Y. 163, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 574, 111 Am. St. Rep. 722 (quoting and adopting definition in Radich v. Hutchins, 95 U. S. 210, 213, 24 L. Ed. 409).

Rev. Laws 1905, § 5097, so far as it makes it an offense for an employer to require or influence any person to agree not to join or remain in labor union as a condition of obtaining or retaining employment, violates Const. U. S. Amend. 14, prohibiting any state from depriving any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; the liberty and right of property thereby protected including the employer's right to contract for the purchase of labor. State

Pen. Code, § 171a, provides that any person who shall "coerce or compel" any employé not to join any labor organization as a condition of such person securing employment or continuing the same shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. Held, that the words "coerce or compel" do not imply the use of unlawful means, but mean the coercion or compulsion resulting from the desire to obtain work and the inability to obtain it without entering into such agreement. People v. Marcus, 97 N. Y. S. 322, 324, 110 App. Div. 255.

Of jury

The court's action, in recalling the jury after it had been out several hours and urging an agreement, and later recalling it a second time and again urging them to strenuous effort to reach an agreement, in order that the work of the court might progress and cases not accumulate, and calling their attention to the rule that, if the evidence did not sustain the contention of the party who had the affirmative of the issue, the verdict should be for the other party, did not amount to "coercion" or otherwise to reversible error. Karner v. Kansas City Elevated R. Co., 109 Pac. 676, 677, 82 Kan. 842.

COFFEE

See Substitute for Coffee.

Articles used as, see Articles Within Tariff Act.

As provisions, see Provisions.

Coffee essence is not "coffee," within Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 529, but is dutiable as "articles used as coffee or as substitutes for coffee under section 1, Schedule G, par. 283." E. C. Hazard & Co. v. United States, 175 Fed. 967, 968, 99 C. C. A. 357.

COFFIN

There is no law which requires a "coffin" to be made of any certain material, so that, where a father properly clothed his deceased baby before burying it, he is not liable criminally for his failure to provide other than a worthless paper box as a coffin, and a home-made wooden box in which to contain it, though his selection offended the sense of propriety of his neighbors and the people of the community. Seaton v. Commonwealth, 149 S. W. 871, 873, 149 Ky. 498.

COGNIZANCE

In ordinary parlance, to have cognizance of means to have knowledge of. But the legal meaning of the word "cognizance" is broader than its ordinary meaning. It not only implies knowledge of the subject-matter, but power to deal with it. The term "the court having cognizance thereof," as used in section 4819, Civ. Code 1895, authorizing the party distrained for rent to replevy the property distrained by making a counter affidavit and giving security, and providing that in such case the levying officer shall return the same to "the court having cognizance thereof," means the justice which issued the distress warrant, and, unless the amount claimed exceeds $100, such justice has jurisdiction to try the issue made by the counter affidavit, whether defendant resides in his district or the property is to be found in his district or not, provided the county be that of defendant's residence. Dean v. Donalson, 58 S. E. 679, 680, 2 Ga. App. 462.

Rev. Code 1852, amended to 1893, p. 852, c. 114, § 7, provides that if one sue in any court upon a cause of action cognizable before a justice of the peace under chapter 99, and shall not recover more than $50, besides costs, he shall not recover costs, unless he shall have previously filed with the prothonotary a written affidavit that plaintiff had a just cause of action against defendant exceeding in amount $50. Rev. Code, p. 813, c. 110, § 22, provides that the real estate of a decedent shall not be bound by a judgment against his executors or administrators, unless such judgment be rendered upon a verdict or referee's report or a rule of reference. Held, that the purpose of section 7 was to compel creditors to resort to justices' courts to collect small debts, so that where the maker of a note was dead, and it was impossible to satisfy the note out of his personal estate, and the executor had not sold the realty for the payment of debts, so that the only remedy was to obtain a judgment, which would be a lien upon the realty, a suit on the note to obtain such judgment was not one "cognizable before a justice of the peace," within that section, though the amount recovered was less than $50 and no affidavit was filed as provided, and hence plaintiff was entitled to costs. Tappan v. Bacon (Del.) 78 Atl. 294, 295.

The term "offenses cognizable by justices of the peace," in Const. art. 1, § 7, providing that no person shall be held to answer for a capital or other infamous crime unless on presentment or indictment by a grand jury, except in cases of impeachment or of such offenses as are cognizable by a justice of the peace, etc., embraces such causes as may be made so cognizable in the future. State v. Nichols, 60 Atl. 763, 765, 27 R. I. 69.

COHABIT—COHABITATION

See Illicit Cohabitation; Living in State of Cohabitation and Adultery.

The word "cohabit," in criminal statutes relating to lewdness, means dwelling together as husband and wife. State v. Dashman, 101 S. W. 597, 598, 124 Mo. App. 238.

The crime of incest was not cognizable at common law in 1805, the date of the passage of the act adopting the common law of England as to the definition of crimes; and hence, to determine the elements of incest, we must look to the statutes of this state alone. Act 78 of 1884, p. 101, provides: "Whoever shall hereafter knowingly intermarry, or cohabit without marriage, being within the degrees of consanguinity within which marriage is prohibited by articles 94 and 95 of the Civil Code of the state of Louisiana, shall be deemed guilty of the crime of incest." It cannot be said that the word "cohabit," as used in the statutes, is to be understood as requiring the consent of both parties. According to the dictionaries and the decisions of the courts, the word "cohabit" means "to dwell together as husband and wife," thus implying a relation based on the consent of both parties. But in the construction of the statute above referred to the word "cohabit" must be taken as meaning sexual intercourse, and to constitute the crime of incest the concurrence of both parties is not essential. State v. Freddy, 41 South. 436, 437, 117 La. 121, 116 Am. St. Rep. 195 (citing People v. Jenness, 5 Mich. 305, 321; De Groat v. People, 39 Mich. 124; People v. Burwell, 63 N. W. 988, 106 Mich. 27; People v. Skutt, 56 N. W. 11, 96 Mich. 449; State v. Ellis, 74 Mo. 385, 41 Am. Rep. 321; State v. Eding, 42 S. W. 935, 141 Mo. 283; State v. Jarvis, 26 Pac. 302, 20 Or. 437, 23 Am. St. Rep. 141; Noble v. State, 22 Ohio St. 545; State v. Thomas, 4 N. W. 908, 53 Iowa, 214; Baumer v. State, 49 Ind. 544, 19 Am. Rep. 691; State v. Markins, 95 Ind. 464, 48 Am. Rep. 733; and State v. Fritts, 2 S. W. 256, 48 Ark. 66; distinguishing Cannon v. United States, 6 Sup. Ct. 278, 116 U. S. 55, 29 L. Ed. 561).

"Cohabitation" between a husband and wife, essential to common-law marriage, contemplates a dwelling or living together as husband and wife. Bishop v. Brittain Inv. Co., 129 S. W. 668, 677, 229 Mo. 699, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 868.

The "cohabitation" meant by the act of February, 1879 (Laws 1879, p. 136, c. 73), adding to the canons of descent by legitimizing children of colored parents born at any time before January 1, 1868, of persons living together as husband and wife, and conferring on such children all the rights of heirs at law or next of kin with respect to the estate of such parents or either of them, is not casual sexual intercourse, but an exclusive cohabitation such as is usually signified by the words "living together as man and wife." Spaugh v. Hartman, 64 S. E. 198, 199, 150 N. C. 454.

As continuous and public

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 2353, providing that whoever cohabits with another in a state of adultery or fornication shall be fined, etc., does not contemplate private acts of incontinence and unchastity, but designs to prohibit and punish the illicit relations of persons who without lawful marriage cohabit or live together as man and wife; to "cohabit," within the statute, meaning a dwelling together for some period of time as distinguished from occasional transient interviews for illicit intercourse. Richey v. State, 87 N. E. 1032, 1033, 172 Ind. 134, 139 Am. St. Rep. 362, 19 Ann. Cas. 654.

In a prosecution for fornication under Gen. St. 1894, § 6557, a single act does not constitute "cohabiting" within the statute. State v. Williams, 102 N. W. 722, 94 Minn. 319.

Merely visiting

"Cohabitation," necessary to establish a common-law marriage, must consist of a living or dwelling together in the same habitation as husband and wife, and not merely a sojourning or a habit of visiting or remaining together for a time, with sexual intercourse. Klipfel's Estate v. Klipfel, 92 Pac. 26, 28, 41 Colo. 40, 124 Am. St. Rep. 96.

Code 1906, § 1029, provides that if any man and woman shall unlawfully cohabit, whether in adultery or fornication, they shall on conviction be punished, etc., and that the offense may be proved by circumstances showing habitual sexual intercourse. Held, that "cohabitation," within such statute, means habitual indulgence in sexual intercourse to such an extent that, if publicly known, it would lead men to characterize the woman as the man's mistress; and mere proof of one or more occasional separated acts of sexual intercourse is not sufficient. Spikes v. State, 54 South. 1, 2, 98 Miss. 483.

Sexual intercourse implied

The word "cohabit," used in the statutes defining "incest," means sexual intercourse, whether within a common dwelling or elsewhere. State v. Spurling, 40 South. 167, 115 La. 789.

COHABIT AS HUSBAND AND WIFE

"Cohabitation as husband and wife" is a manifestation of the parties having consented to contract that relation inter se. It is a holding forth to the world by the manner of daily life, by conduct, demeanor, and habit, that the man and woman who live together have agreed to take each other in marriage and to stand in the mutual relation of husband and wife; and when credit is given by those among whom they live, by their relatives, neighbors, friends, and acquaintances, to these representations and this continued conduct, then habit and repute arise and attend upon the cohabitation, and the parties are holden and reputed to be husband and wife. The cohabitation must be matrimonial. The repute, to have its fullest effect, should be uniform. It then casts upon the party denying the marriage the burden of proving it did not take place." In re Peterson's Estate, 134 N. W. 751, 758, 22 N. D. 480 (quoting definitions in Bishop v. Brittain Inv. Co., 129 S. W. 668, 677, 229 Mo. 699, 728, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 868, and Bish. Mar., Div. & Sep.).

In an indictment of an unmarried man for fornication, charging that he and an unmarried woman did "live and cohabit together as man and wife," etc., the words "as man and wife" give to the word "cohabit" a meaning equivalent to that conveyed by the words "in a state of fornication." State v. Smith, 47 N. E. 685, 18 Ind. App. 179.

The term "cohabiting as husband and wife" is ambiguous, and may mean either cohabitation under the assumption of the relation of husband and wife, or, without regard to any such actual relation, in the manner of cohabitation as between husband and wife. In re Boyington's Estate, 137 N. W. 949, 951.

COIN

An information charging the larceny of "one gold coin current as money in this state, of the value of $5.00," etc., sufficiently describes the property stolen in view of Rev. Code Cr. Proc. § 219, providing that all the forms of pleading in criminal actions and rules by which the sufficiency of pleadings is to be determined are those prescribed by the Code and section 237, providing that, in an indictment or information for the larceny of money, it is sufficient to allege the larceny without specifying the coin, number, denomination, or kind thereof, for the term "coin" has a definite signification, and the designation used was in effect an allegation that it was a gold coin stamped by government authority. State v. Faulk, 116 N. W. 72, 74, 22 S. D. 183.

So-called "coin swords," which consist of copper coins corded together and securely fastened around an iron bar or rod covered by metal foil, and are used for ornamental purposes, are not within the provision for "coins," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 530, 30 Stat. 197, but are dutiable under section 1, Schedule C, par. 193, of the act. Soy Kee & Co. v. United States, 177 Fed. 601.

COINCIDENT

The statement of one in a position to know at the time of the act or near thereto, spontaneously made without design, that characterizes and explains the act, is admissible in evidence. "The coincident rule"—that is that the declarations or admissions must be strictly contemporaneous with the act—does not prevail in Texas. However, the tendency of the later cases in the United States is to regard the point of time as less material and to treat the declarations and admissions as admissible, if they spring from the transaction in controversy, and tend to qualify, characterize, or explain it, and are voluntary and spontaneous, and are made at a time so near as to preclude the idea of deliberate design. According to the doctrine of these cases, each transaction is to be judged by its own peculiar facts, without conclusive regard to a fixed interval of time, and with more regard to the question whether the declaration or admission seems to have been voluntarily and spontaneously made under the immediate influence of the principal transaction, and are so connected with it as to characterize or explain it. City of Austin v. Nuchols, 94 S. W. 336, 342, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 5.

A statement in a patent for a process for bleaching nuts that acid is added to the solution "coincidentally" with the dipping of the nuts therein should be reasonably construed, and does not require that the acid should be added at the instant of the dipping, but a successive dipping of different crates of nuts after the acid has been added and while it remains effective is fairly within the process. Fullerton Walnut Growers' Ass'n v. Anderson-Barngrover Mfg. Co., 166 Fed. 443, 452, 92 C. C. A. 295.

COINSURANCE

See Double Insurance.

There is a wide distinction between "coinsurance" and "concurrent insurance"; the latter term being used to designate insurance placed in other companies covering the same risk, while there is no "coinsurance" where the insured does not bear a proportion of the risk. Oppenheim v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 138 N. W. 777, 779, 119 Minn. 417.

"Double insurance," or "coinsurance," occurs when several policies are effected for the benefit of the same person on the same subject-matter, while "reinsurance" is effected by the insurer for his own protection. Where a marine carrier issued insured bills of lading, which bound it as an insurer of the cargo covered, and against the risks so assumed it took out a marine policy, providing that it was understood and agreed to be in effect a reinsurance of the risks assumed by insured, the latter contract was one of "reinsurance," and not of "coinsurance," such as would entitle the insurance company to pro-rate the loss with the carrier. Ocean S. & Co. v. Aetna Ins. Co., 121 Fed. 882, 887.

COKE

See Metallurgical Coke.

COLD CHISEL

A "cold chisel" is a tool designed for cutting iron by holding it against the iron to be cut and striking it with a hammer. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Walker, 84 N. E. 730, 736, 41 Ind. App. 588.

COLD-DRAWN

Within Tariff Act July 24, 1897, Schedule C, par. 141, imposing an additional duty on iron rods, cold-drawn, in addition to the ordinary process of hot-rolling, screw rods, which are first hot-rolled and then cold-drawn, are "cold-drawn" rods, and subject to the additional duty, although the cold drawing of a screw rod is not an additional process, but a process incidental to their preparation. United States v. George Nash & Co., 158 Fed. 401, 402, 85 C. C. A. 511.

COLD-ROLLED

In construing the paragraph of the Tariff Act of July 24, 1897, relating to steel strips, "cold-rolled, smoothed only," the point to be determined is whether they have acquired a trade meaning or a trade understanding. United States v. Crucible Steel Co. of America, 137 Fed. 384, 385, 69 C. C. A. 576.

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 141, 30 Stat. 162, relating to steel strips "cold-rolled, * * * brightened * * * or polished by any process to such perfected surface finish, or polish better than the grade of cold-rolled, smoothed only," these words were employed by Congress with the meaning theretofore given them by customs authorities under earlier acts, and therefore they do not include strips whose only polish or brightening is incidentally acquired during the cold-rolling, and which were not included in similar former provisions. United States v. Crucible Steel Co., 147 Fed. 537.

COLLAR

A "collar," in mechanics, is a ring or a round flange upon or against an object. Beardsley v. Howard & Bullough American Mach. Co., 176 Fed. 619, 621.

The straight piece of timber, stretching across the top of the upright square pieces used to support the roof of a mine, is called a "collar." Birmingham Min. & Const. Co. v. Skelton, 43 South. 110, 111, 149 Ala. 465.

COLLARED

Rev. Laws, c. 102, § 143, authorizes any one to kill a dog not "collared" according to the statute, and section 128 requires the owner or keeper to cause it to wear a collar marked with the owner's name and its registered number. Held, that the killing of a dog was justifiable where it had on a collar with its owner's name, but without a registered number upon it, though the owner of the dog acted in good faith, and had understood that the dog was to have the same registered number as another one of his that had died. Moore v. Mills, 77 N. E. 638, 191 Mass. 56.

COLLATERAL

A word used to designate property which is pledged as security. Ikelheimer v. Consolidated Tobacco Co. (N. J.) 59 Atl. 363, 364.

An instrument in the ordinary form of a negotiable note, except that it contained at the end thereof, and before the signatures the added words, "Collateral for S. B. note," constituted a contract of suretyship as defined by Civ. Code, § 2831. National Bank of Commerce of San Diego v. Schirm, 86 Pac. 981, 983, 3 Cal. App. 696.

COLLATERAL ATTACK

A "collateral attack" on a judicial proceeding is an attempt to avoid, defeat, or evade it, or deny its force and effect, in some incidental proceeding not provided by law for the express purpose of attacking it. Continental Gin Co. v. De Bord, 123 Pac. 159, 161, 34 Okl. 66; Lieber v. Lieber, 143 S. W. 458, 475, 239 Mo. 1.

By "collateral attack" is meant any proceeding in which the integrity of a judgment is challenged, except in the action wherein the judgment is rendered, or by appeal, and except a suit to declare the judgment void ab initio. McKinney v. Adams, 50 South. 474, 476, 95 Miss. 832 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, pp. 1249, 1250).

"Collateral attack" is a proceeding aside from or outside of the regular proceeding in the case. A motion to set aside a default judgment on the ground of want of jurisdiction is a "collateral attack." People v. Norris, 77 Pac. 998, 999, 144 Cal. 422.

An attempt to impeach a judgment by matters dehors the record is a "collateral attack." Parsons v. Wels, 77 Pac. 1007, 1009, 144 Cal. 410.

A "collateral attack" on a judgment is an attempt to avoid its binding force in a proceeding not instituted for one of the purposes aforesaid, as where, in an action of debt on the judgment, defendant attempts to deny the fact of indebtedness, or where, in a suit to try the title to property, a judgment is offered as a link in the chain of title, and the adverse party attempts to avoid its effect. Scudder v. Cox, 80 S. W. 872, 873, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 416 (citing Crawford v. McDonald, 33 S. W. 327, 87 Tex. 626).

A "collateral attack" on a judgment is, in its general sense, any proceeding which is not instituted for the express purpose of annulling, correcting, or modifying such decree. The fact that the parties are the same, and that the defendants seek to attack the decree by allegations in their answer, cannot change the rule, or make the attack any the less a collateral one. It is well settled that judgments of a court of competent jurisdiction are not subject to collateral attack, unless they are void, and by "void" is meant that they are an absolute nullity. People v. McKelvey, 74 Pac. 533, 534, 19 Colo. App. 131 (citing Cochrane v. Parker, 54 Pac. 1027, 12 Colo. App. 169).

"A plea to a writ of scire facias to revive a judgment denying service of process is a 'collateral attack' on the judgment." Bank of Eau Claire v. Reed, 83 N. E. 820, 821, 232 Ill. 238, 122 Am. St. Rep. 66.

An attempt by an independent proceeding to impeach a foreclosure decree rendered in another court is a "collateral attack" on such decree. Cohen v. Portland Lodge No. 142, B. P. O. E., 152 Fed. 357, 359, 81 C. C. A. 483.

There is a distinction between the attack on a judgment in a collateral proceeding, and the attack on a judgment by appeal. Where the return to a summons failed to show it served by one qualified to serve it, the recital of the judgment to the effect that defendant was "personally served" did not conclusively show legal service, on an appeal from an order denying a motion to vacate the judgment and permit a defense; the attack not being "collateral," and the court not having certified due and legal service. French v. Ajax Oil & Development Co., 87 Pac. 359, 360, 44 Wash. 305 (distinguishing Rogers v. Miller, 42 Pac. 525, 13 Wash. 82, 52 Am. St. Rep. 20).

"A proceeding which attempts to avoid or defeat the force and effect of a judgment in a manner not authorized by law is a 'collateral attack' on such judgment." A proceeding to compel contribution by heirs whose allowances had been all charged to the executrix's annual allowances and approved by the probate court upon settlement of the administrator de bonis non, after due notice, is a "collateral attack." Mueller v. Grunker, 123 S. W. 469, 471, 145 Mo. App. 611 (quoting and adopting Smith v. Young, 117 S. W. 628, 136 Mo. App. 65).

A "collateral attack" on a judgment is an attempt to avoid its binding force in a proceeding not instituted to amend, correct, reform, vacate, or enjoin its execution, as where, in an action of debt on a judgment, defendant attempts to deny the fact of indebtedness, or where, in a suit to try the title to property, a judgment is offered as a link in the chain of title, and the adverse party attempts to avoid its effect. In an action of debt on a judgment by default, a plea that the citation in the case wherein the judgment was obtained did not have the seal of the district court affixed thereto was a "collateral attack" on the judgment. Newman v. Mackey, 83 S. W. 81, 33, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 85.

The attack upon a judgment is a "collateral attack," if the action or proceeding has an independent purpose and contemplates some other relief or result than the mere setting aside of the judgment, although the setting aside of the judgment may be necessary to secure such independent purpose. Where an action was instituted to quiet title to land, and in order to so quiet the title a judgment must be held to be void, the action is clearly a "collateral attack" on that judgment. O'Neill v. Potvin, 93 Pac. 20, 21, 13 Idaho, 721 (citing 1 Black, Judg. § 252).

A plea of former jeopardy in prosecution for assault to murder, setting up that at a former trial for the same offense the jury reported and were discharged, in the absence of defendant and his counsel, may be entered at a subsequent trial on the same indictment, after change of venue to a different county and at a subsequent term of court, without making a copy of the judgment discharging the jury an exhibit; such a plea not being a "collateral attack" on an existing judgment not appealed from. Vela v. State, 95 S. W. 529, 530, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 588.

A proceeding to vacate a divorce decree, under Code, § 4091, providing that the district court may vacate a judgment after the term for certain causes, is not a "collateral attack" on the decree. Wood v. Wood, 113 N. W. 492, 495, 136 Iowa, 128, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 891, 125 Am. St. Rep. 223.

Direct attack distinguished

Where a judgment set up in bar is directly assailed as procured by fraud, it is a "direct" and not a "collateral" attack. Houser v. W. R. Bonsal & Co., 62 S. E. 776, 778, 149 N. C. 51.

In a proceeding to revive a judgment, an attack on the jurisdiction of the court by answer is a "direct attack," and not a "collateral attack." Waterman v. Bash, 89 Pac. 556, 558, 46 Wash. 212.

Where certain claims were allowed against a decedent's estate, and the administrator was ordered to sell certain real estate for the payment thereof, a contest filed by plaintiff, objecting to the confirmation of a sale had under such order because the debts were barred by limitations, and charging fraud on the part of the husband of one of the heirs in procuring the administration to be opened for the purpose of allowing such claims, constituted a "direct," and not a "collateral," attack on the proceeding allowing the claims. Smart v. Panther, 95 N. W. 679, 681, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 262.

A suit by a judgment debtor to vacate the judgment and to enjoin the execution of the same on the ground of its invalidity is a "direct," and not a "collateral," attack. Lane v. Moon, 108 S. W. 211, 214, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 625.

A suit to redeem from a mortgage which has been foreclosed by a decree of court, on the ground that complainant, who was made a defendant in the foreclosure suit, was not legally served with process therein and his right of redemption was therefore not cut off, is a "collateral," as distinguished from a "direct," attack on the foreclosure decree. Cohen v. Portland Lodge No. 142, B. P. O. E., 144 Fed. 266, 268.

Where a petition, in a suit to quiet title to certain land, alleges that an order of court directing a guardian to sell land was procured by fraud, and prays to have the order of sale and subsequent orders approving the sale canceled, the suit is a "direct attack" on the orders, and not a "collateral attack." Brown v. Trent (Okla.) 128 Pac. 895, 897.

COLLATERAL BEQUEST OR DEVISE

"Collateral" means on the side of, or at one side of, the subject. Hence the word used in the title of the collateral inheritance tax law, an act establishing a tax on collateral inheritances, bequests, and devises cannot be construed as merely qualifying the words "bequests and devises," and thus rendering the act which imposes a tax on devises to persons not akin to the testator unconstitutional, because such classes are not within the purview of the title. In re Campbell's Estate, 77 Pac. 674, 676, 143 Cal. 623.

COLLATERAL CONSANGUINITY

Illegitimate children acknowledged by their father in accordance with Civ. Code, § 1387, are not "collateral heirs," and any inheritance passing to such a child from its father is not a collateral inheritance subject to a collateral inheritance tax. Wirringer v. Morgan, 106 Pac. 425, 426, 12 Cal. App. 26.

Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 46, providing by sections 6, 14, and 21 for the descent of real estate, declares by section 27 that if, in the descending or collateral line, any parent shall be dead, a child or children shall, by representation, be considered in the same degree as the parent would have been if living, and shall have the same share of the estate as the parent would have been entitled to if living, "provided that there be no representation admitted among 'collaterals' after brother's and sister's children"; and article 93, § 129, provides: "After children, descendants, father, mother, brothers and sisters of the deceased, and their descendants, all collateral relations in equal degree shall take, and no representation among such collaterals shall be allowed." Testatrix directed her estate to be converted into cash and distributed among her "heirs at law and next of kin, who should be entitled thereto under the laws of Maryland." Held, in a contest between the first cousins of the deceased and the children of a deceased first cousin, that the children of the deceased first cousin were not within the class described by the will and took nothing thereunder. Suman v. Harvey, 79 Atl. 197, 204, 114 Md. 241; Hettinger v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. of Baltimore (Md.) 79 Atl. 205.

COLLATERAL CONSIDERATION

See Consideration.

COLLATERAL COVENANT

A "collateral covenant" is such as appears to be foreign from the instrument, not touching the land or its value, or the value of its reservation, or of the term, but a distinct matter put in by the parties, which does not appear necessarily to influence the demise or grant. Withers v. Wabash R. Co., 99 S. W. 34, 37, 122 Mo. App. 282 (quoting and adopting the definition in Poage v. Railway Co., 24 Mo. App. 199, and citing Coughlin v. Barker, 46 Mo. App. 53).

By the term "collateral covenants," which do not pass to the assignee, "are meant such as are beneficial to the lessor, without regard to his continuing the owner of the estate." Where the lessee of premises deposited money with the lessor, to be returned at the end of the lease if all rent should be paid and the premises left in good order, the lessee's assignee could not recover the deposit against the lessor's grantees; there being no claim that they ever came in possession of the deposit, and the covenant to return the money not running with the land. Joseph Fallert Brewing Co. v. Blass, 103 N. Y. Supp. 865, 866, 119 App. Div. 53.

COLLATERAL FACTS

The test whether a matter is "collateral" is whether the cross-examining party is entitled to go into such matter in chief; if not, it is "collateral." Dotterrer v. State, 88 N. E. 689, 693, 172 Ind. 357, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 846.

The phrases "immaterial matters" and "collateral attendant facts" are primarily not absolutely synonymous, for collateral attendant facts may be material; but, when used in an instruction, where the phrase "collateral attendant facts" is placed in antithesis to the phrase "material facts," they by every fair rule of construction become, for the nonce, equivalent in meaning. Blanchard v. State, 69 S. E. 313, 8 Ga. App. 419.

In an action for services rendered on defendant's farm at her request and for her benefit, defendant admitted on cross-examination that, after plaintiff's claim had been made known to her, she mortgaged the farm for $900 for the purpose of taking up a mortgage given by her husband on property belonging to him, but on redirect examination the inquiry whether in giving this mortgage she had any purpose to defeat the collection of the plaintiff's claim was excluded by the court. Held: (1) That, if the testimony be called purely collateral, it was not for the plaintiff to call out collateral facts which might prejudice, and then object to an explanation of them. (2) That the testimony that the defendant had given the mortgage under such circumstances might operate as an implied admission of liability on her part, and was therefore material and not purely "collateral evidence." Pelkey v. Hodgdon, 67 Atl. 218, 219, 102 Me. 426 (citing Wig. Ev. § 282; 1 Ency. Evidence, p. 366; Heneky v. Smith, 10 Or. 349, 45 Am. Rep. 143).

A witness cannot be cross-examined as to a "collateral fact," which the cross-examining party may not prove as a part of his own case, merely to contradict the witness and discredit his testimony. Citizens' Ry. & Light Co. v. Johns, 116 S. W. 62, 64, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 489.

COLLATERAL FRAUD

COLLATERAL HEIRS

See Collateral Consanguinity.
Heirs as including, see Heirs.

COLLATERAL IMPEACHMENT

"A 'collateral impeachment' of a judgment or decree is an attempt made to destroy or evade its effect as an estoppel by reopening the merits of the case, or by showing reasons why the judgment should not have been rendered, or should not have a conclusive effect in a collateral proceeding (i. e., in any action other than that in which the judgment was rendered); for, if this be done upon appeal, error, or certiorari, the impeachment is direct." An action to set aside a divorce decree on the ground that it was obtained without legal service or appearance by defendant, that the affidavit for service by publication was defective, and that it was obtained through fraud, was a collateral and not a direct attack on the decree. Racey v. Racey, 73 Pac. 305, 306, 12 Okl. 650 (quoting and adopting definition in Black's Law Dict.).

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX

See, also, Privilege Tax.

"The 'collateral inheritance tax' is on the right to succession to property, and not on the property itself, and it is collectible out of each specific share or interest, not out of the general property of the estate." In re Kennedy's Estate, 108 Pac. 280, 283, 157 Cal. 517, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 428.

A tax on the interests of lineal descendants is a lineal inheritance tax, and that on collateral descendants a "collateral inheritance tax." In re Macky's Estate, 102 Pac. 1075, 1078, 46 Colo. 79, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1207.

"A 'collateral inheritance or succession tax' is a duty or bonus exacted in certain instances by the state upon the right and privilege of taking legacies, inheritances, gifts, and successions passing by will, by intestate laws, or by any deed or instrument, made inter vivos, intended to take effect at or after the death of the grantor. The burden or the tax is not imposed upon the property itself, but upon the privilege of acquiring property by inheritance. In nearly all inheritance tax laws the statutes provide for appraising the property to be inherited, but the object of such valuation is not to tax the property itself. It is to arrive at a measure of price by which the privilege of inheritance can be valued." In re Tuohy's Estate, 90 Pac. 170, 171, 35 Mont. 431 (quoting Gelsthorpe v. Furnell, 51 Pac. 267, 20 Mont. 299, 39 L. R. A. 170).

COLLATERAL LINE

See Collateral Consanguinity.

COLLATERAL MATTER

A "collateral matter," within the meaning of the rule that a witness cannot be contradicted as to "collateral matter" brought out on cross-examination, is a matter concerning facts not bearing upon the issue. Finn v. New England Telephone & Telegraph Co., 64 Atl. 491, 101 Me. 279.

"Collateral matter" solicited on cross-examination is defined to be a matter which the cross-examining party would not have been permitted to introduce in evidence as a part of his original case. State v. Matheson, 103 N. W. 137, 140, 130 Iowa, 440, 114 Am. St. Rep. 427, 8 Ann. Cas. 430.

COLLATERAL POWER

A "collateral power" is a bare power given to a mere stranger, who has no interest in the estate or property to which it relates. Columbia Trust Co. v. Christopher (Ky.) 117 S. W. 943, 946.

COLLATERAL PROCEEDING

A "collateral proceeding," as opposed to direct attack on a judgment, is an action having an independent purpose and contemplates some relief or result other than the overturning of the judgment, though it may be essential to its success that the judgment be overthrown. Hence, on motion for writ of possession under a sheriff's deed, a plea by the judgment debtor and his wife attacking the validity of the judgment was improper, being a collateral attack. Alford v. Guffy (Ky.) 115 S. W. 216, 217.

COLLATERAL PROMISE

Where, on death of one under contract with defendant to labor for a share of the crop, his wife contracted with defendant to do the work for a share of the crop, less the amount due by deceased to defendant, her agreement is not a "collateral promise to pay the debt of another," within the statute of frauds, but an original agreement, supported by a new consideration. Wilkie v. Murphy, 70 S. E. 1028, 1030, 38 S. C. 415.

COLLATERAL SECURITY

The legal definition of "collateral security" is "security for the payment of money besides the original security." A note signed by the Journal Publishing Company to the bank is not security besides the original security, and hence not collateral security to a note signed by said company and three indorsers to said bank. Schnitzler v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 42 Pac. 496, 500, 1 Kan. App. 674.

A contract for the sale of buggies provided that all goods on hand and the proceeds of all sales of goods shipped under the contract, and on all subsequent orders, whether the proceeds are in notes, cash, or book accounts, should be held as "collateral security" by the buyer, in trust and for the benefit of and subject to the order of the seller, until all obligations of the buyer arising under the contract had been paid in cash. All goods on hand were to be kept insured by the buyer for the seller's benefit, so far as its interest might appear, and a failure to do so, in case of fire, obligated the buyer to assume all liability or loss, and that the title to all goods so shipped should remain in the seller until the price was paid, and until all notes given were paid in cash. The seller however contemplated that the buyer might make sales of the goods on its own terms, with power to give an absolute title in due course of business, and without any liability to account to the seller for the proceeds of such sales, except to hold such proceeds and the goods remaining as its own property in trust or as "collateral security" for the unpaid portion of the price due to the seller. Held, that such contract was not a valid conditional sale, but an attempt to reserve a lien to secure payment of the price of the goods, the title to which vested at once in the buyer on delivery. Pontiac Buggy Co. v. Skinner, 158 Fed. 858, 864.

Rev. St. 1899, § 3710, provides that in an action to enforce a lien on personal property pledged or mortgaged, or involving the validity of such lien, proof that the party holding the lien has exacted usurious interest for the debt shall render any mortgage or pledge of personal property, or any lien thereon, invalid. Held, that the delivery of a promissory note as collateral security for a principal note given for the same amount as the balance due on the first note, and executed to plaintiff the day that a payment was made on the first note, was a "pledge" within the meaning of the statute, though it was signed by an additional maker. The authorities have defined "collateral security" as a pledge of incorporeal property as distinguished from chattels. The words necessarily indicate something additional to the principal obligation, and running along with it as security therefor. Winfrey v. Strother, 128 S. W. 849, 850, 145 Mo. App. 115.

COLLATION

"Collation" is the supposed or real return to the mass of the succession, which an heir makes of property which he received in advance of a share or otherwise, in order that such property may be divided, together with the other effects of the succession, under the express provisions of Civ. Code, art. 1227, and does not apply to purchasers not coheirs of the undivided interest of certain of the heirs. Sibley v. Pierson, 51 South. 502, 513, 125 La. 478.

The obligation as to "collating," defined (Rev. Civ. Code, art. 1227) to be the return to the mass of the succession which an heir makes of property received in advance of his share in order that such property may be divided with the other effects of the succession, is confined to children or grandchildren succeeding to their mothers and fathers and other descendants. Succession of Watt, 48 South. 335, 340, 122 La. 952; Lindsley v. McIver, 48 South. 628, 57 Fla. 466.

In the absence of anything in an ordinance itself to indicate that the word "collation" has not been used in its ordinary meaning, the court will understand that it has been so used. In its ordinary meaning, it describes a "luncheon," "a devout work," etc.; and, so understanding the word, it describes nothing that could fall within the cognizance of the police powers of police juries, which possess only such powers as are expressly conferred on them by law. Therefore a police jury ordinance making it an indictable offense to "give or hold or participate at what is commonly called a 'collation'" is void. State v. Denoist, 40 South. 365, 115 La. 949.

An heir who comes to a succession under the terms of the Civil Code, and as authorized thereby, must return to his coheirs of that which he has received from the common ancestor; he cannot retain anything donated unless he has a defense. This is the interpretation given to Civ. Code, art. 1227, defining "collation" as the supposed or real return to the mass of the succession which the heir makes of property which he received in advance of his share or otherwise, in order that such property may be divided, together with the funds of the succession. Blank v. Blank, 50 South. 745, 747, 124 La. 832.

COLLECT—COLLECTION

See For Collection and Credit; Indorsement for Collection; In Process of Collection; With Collection.

Expenses of collection, see Expenses.

The word "collect" in some revenue laws is synonymous with the word "levy," while in others the word "levy" is not used in the sense of collecting a tax by execution. The word "levy" in a proclamation of the Governor calling a special session of the Legislature to provide necessary revenue and to enact a revenue law for the assessment of property for taxation and the levy and collection of taxes, does not show intention of the Governor that a measure for taxation of property should only be passed, rather than a revenue law, since the word "levy" is sometimes used in the sense of raising or imposing, and not in the sense of collecting, a tax by execution. Parsons v. People, 76 Pac. 666, 669, 32 Colo. 221.

The word "collections," as used in Rev. St. c. 41, § 61, requiring fines, penalties, and "collections" under the act to be paid in to the county treasury, taken in connection with the other language of the act, if it means anything, seems to refer to moneys collected, and not to fines and penalties imposed and paid. State v. Hanna, 58 Atl. 1061, 1062, 99 Me. 224.

Means of collection included

The word "collect," in Gen. St. 1909, § 3497, requiring an administrator to "collect" the assets of an estate within one year, does not mean merely assemble or reduce to possession, but, in the case of assets in the form of enforceable obligations, the word has its ordinary signification, which includes the use of the usual means for accomplishing collection. Ekblad v. Hanson, 117 Pac. 1028, 1030, 85 Kan. 541 (citing Ryan v. Tudor, 2 Pac. 797, 31 Kan. 366).

"The meaning of the word 'collect,' as given by the lexicographers, is 'to gather; to assemble.' When used with reference to the collection of money, it often implies much more than the mere act of receiving the money." Hubbell v. Board of Com'rs of Bernalillo County, 86 Pac. 430, 13 N. M. 546 (quoting Purdy v. City of Independence, 39 N. W. 641, 75 Iowa, 356).

Note or mortgage

"Collection" may perhaps involve a full discharge of a debtor's liability; but where defendant agreed to pay plaintiff for assisting in the collection of certain notes and mortgages, without specifying any particular method of collection, and plaintiff procured money from a bank by becoming personally bound therefor, which money was received by defendant on his transfer of a note and mortgage to the bank without recourse, the defendant received the full benefit of even a technical "collection." Koch v. Lunschen, 123 N. W. 692, 693, 24 S. D. 227.

As obtain payment

"The words 'collect taxes,' as used in a statute relating to the collection of taxes, mean to obtain payment of the same from the taxpayers. In most cases such payments will be voluntary; but the power to collect carries with it the authority to use force in the manner pointed out by the laws to obtain payment. * * * The securing of these taxes from the taxpayers, therefore, is the collection referred to in the statute." Hubbell v. Board of Com'rs of Bernalillo County, 86 Pac. 430, 13 N. M. 546 (quoting Taylor v. Kearney County, 53 N. W. 211, 35 Neb. 381-387).

COLLECT ON DELIVERY

See C. O. D.

COLLECTED

See Amount Collected; Earned and Collected; Sum Collected.

The word "collected," as used in Laws 1896, p. 859, § 187, as amended by Laws 1901, c. 118, § 1, imposing an annual state tax on domestic insurance companies, and providing that the term "gross premiums" shall include such premiums as are "collected" from policies subsequently canceled and from reinsurance, applies to the latter subject with the same force as to the former. The act does not refer to what is paid out, for it permits no deduction, even for expenses, for what is paid in. The premium paid for reinsurance is an expense of the business, but a premium collected from reinsurance is part of the gross receipts from the corporate business, which is what the statute aims at. People ex rel. Continental Ins. Co. v. Miller, 70 N. E. 10, 11, 177 N. Y. 515.

Where fines and costs against defendants in criminal cases are not paid, and they are placed at hard labor for the benefit of the county, such fines are not "collected," within the meaning of Gen. St. 1888, p. 182, providing that the county attorney can demand his per centum only after fines are collected; the word "collected" being used in the statute in its ordinary sense. Power v. Fleming County, 35 S. W. 541, 99 Ky. 200.

Where a complaint demanded judgment that a cotenant in possession account for rents and profits thereof received by him, and an interlocutory judgment directed the referee to take and state an account of the rents and profits collected and received, the rents and profits "collected and received" could only mean what he actually collected, less what he during the same time paid out, and, the interlocutory judgment being affirmed on appeal by the Appellate Division and Court of Appeals, the question cannot be again raised on appeal from the final judgment; Code Civ. Proc. § 1316, providing that an appeal from a final judgment brings up for review an interlocutory judgment which has not already been reviewed upon a separate appeal, and section 1350 providing that an appeal to the Appellate Division from a final judgment after its affirmance upon appeal of an interlocutory judgment brings up for review only the proceedings to take the final judgment, or upon which it was taken.

Adams v. Bristol, 111 N. Y. Supp. 231, 234, 126 App. Div. 660.

The phrases "issued in the regular way" and "collected in the regular way," in a contract providing for the redemption of trading stamps so issued and collected, have the same meaning and describe the same transaction. Sperry & Hutchinson Co. v. Hertzberg, 60 Atl. 368, 370, 69 N. J. Eq. 264.

COLLECTING OFFICER

A justice of the peace is a "collecting officer" as to debts sued in his court, and may, on an execution from his court against joint defendants, enter payment by one of them, as required by Civ. Code 1910, § 5971, to authorize enforcement of contribution against the other defendants. Higdon v. Williamson, 78 S. E. 528, 529, 10 Ga. App. 376.

COLLECTION OF ANTIQUITIES

A painting and its frame, both produced before the year 1700, are dutiable under Act Oct. 1, 1890, par. 465, imposing a duty on paintings, and is not exempt from duty as a part of a "collection of antiquities," under paragraph 524 of the free list. United States v. Gunther, 71 Fed. 499, 500, 18 C. C. A. 219.

COLLECTION OF MONEY

An injunction restraining a substituted trustee under a deed of trust from selling the land, but saying nothing about the collection of the notes for which the deed of trust was security, was not one restraining the "collection of money," within Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 3008, requiring a refunding bond in such cases. Hicks v. Murphy (Tex.) 151 S. W. 845, 847.

COLLECTOR

See Tax Collector.

One who procures regularly from various places in a city fragments and scraps of food left over and transports them in wagons to a farm for use as food for swine is a "collector" of garbage and kitchen refuse within a municipal ordinance prohibiting such collection by any persons not having a contract with the municipality therefor. City of Rochester v. Gutherlett 133 N. Y. Supp. 541, 545, 73 Misc. Rep. 607.

COLLEGE

Regular college, see Regular School or College.

A "college," as an institution, means, or ought to mean, growth; the elimination of the false; the fostering of the true. As it is expected to be perpetual in its service, it must conform to the changed condition of each new generation, possessing an elasticity of scope and work commensurate with the changing requirements of the times which it serves. Central University of Kentucky

v. Walter's Ex'rs, 90 S. W. 1066, 1070, 122 Ky. 65.

Under Act Cong. July 2, 1862, c. 130, 12 Stat. 503, and Act Cong. Aug. 30, 1890, c. 841, 26 Stat. 417 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3214), granting certain public lands or land scrip to the several states, providing that the proceeds thereof shall be invested to constitute a perpetual fund for the endowment of one "college," where the leading object shall be instruction in mechanic arts and agriculture, and appropriating money arising from the sales of the public lands to the states for the benefit of such schools, "the law does not require that the 'leading object' of the aided institution in its entirety, or as a complete institution, be the teaching of the branches of learning related to agriculture and mechanic arts." A university may, and usually does, embrace several colleges. Our statutes expressly declare that the State University "shall embrace colleges or departments of letters of science, and the arts"; that the "college or department of the arts shall embrace courses of instruction in the practical and fine arts, especially in the application of science to the arts of * * * mechanics, engineering, architecture, agriculture, and commerce, together with instruction in military tactics." It is sufficient if the aided institution maintains a college or department whose leading object is instruction in the prescribed branches, and applies the funds to the support of such college or department; and the institution will not be rendered incapable of appropriating the donations from the fact that a majority of its students are enrolled in other departments. State ex rel. Wyoming Agricultural College v. Irvine, 84 Pac. 90, 99, 14 Wyo. 318.

"Whether any particular school is a 'college,' or not, depends upon the facts of the particular case. It may ambitiously so style itself, and not be such. Here, however, is an institution stamped as a university or college by law. Its curriculum shows it to be one of high order, and its reputation so stamps it. Its 'school of pharmacy' is merely one of its departments; and when the term is thus applied in an advanced institution of learning, it and the term 'college' are convertible into each other." Within the Pharmacy Act (Gen. St. p. 993), a "school of pharmacy," which is one of the departments of an advanced institution of learning, is a "college of pharmacy." State Board of Pharmacy of Kentucky v. White, 2 S. W. 225, 227, 84 Ky. 626.

Property owned by a private individual and used by him directly and exclusively for educational purposes is exempt from taxation, under Code 1906, § 4251, par. "d," as property belonging to a "college or institution for the education of youth"; the statute making no distinction between natural and artificial persons. City of Jackson v. Pres-

A "hospital," with incidental educational features, such as the training of nurses and the instruction of medical students, is not an "institution incorporated or established solely for * * * educational * * * purposes," nor a "college, academy, school, or seminary of learning," within the meaning of paragraph 638 of the Tariff Act of 1897; and surgical instruments or appliances imported by such a hospital for its use are not entitled to admission free of duty under said paragraph. Massachusetts General Hospital v. United States, 112 Fed. 670, 672, 50 C. C. A. 417.

COLLE'S FRACTURE

A "Colle's fracture," referring to a fracture in the lower joint of the arm, is a split in the lower end of the arm bone. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Sandifer, 69 S. W. 461, 463, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 356.

COLLISION

See Risk of Collision.

"Collision" means the act of colliding, and imports striking together; violent contact. Both bodies need not be in motion. Harris v. American Casualty Co. of Reading, Pa., 85 Atl. 194, 195, 83 N. J. Law, 641.

Where plaintiff's automobile, on meeting a team, was compelled to steer into the grass at a point on a level with the roadbed, and while endeavoring to return to the roadbed it was overturned, there was a sufficient "collision" with the shoulder of the roadbed, within the meaning of a policy insuring against collision, to justify a verdict for plaintiff, if the automobile did not strike the roadbed. Hardenburgh v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp., 138 N. Y. Supp. 662, 663, 78 Misc. Rep. 105.

The word "collision," as used in a policy covering an automobile, was not to be confined to a case where both of the colliding objects were in motion. Lepman v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corporation, Ltd., of London, 170 Ill. App. 379, 380.

The word "collision," as used in marine insurance, is no longer strictly limited to that fortuitous injurious contact of navigating vessels which is its natural and obvious signification. Western Transit Co. v. Brown, 152 Fed. 476, 477 (citing London Assur. v. Companhia De Moagens Do Barreiro, 17 Sup. Ct. 785, 167 U. S. 149, 42 L. Ed. 113; Cline v. Western Assur. Co., 44 S. E. 700, 101 Va. 496; Burnham v. China Mut. Ins. Co., 75 N. E. 74, 189 Mass. 101, 109 Am. St. Rep. 627; Newtown Creek Towing Co. v. Aetna Ins. Co., 57 N. E. 302, 163 N. Y. 114; Wright v. Brown, 4 Ind. 95, 58 Am. Dec. 622).

A vessel which struck a wrecked vessel, sunk several hours before and never raised, though practicable to do so at a cost exceeding her value when raised, did not come into "collision" with another vessel, within the meaning of a policy insuring her against collision with another vessel. Burnham v. China Mut. Ins. Co., 75 N. E. 74, 189 Mass. 100, 109 Am. St. Rep. 627.

A running-down or collision clause in a marine policy of insurance on a vessel, providing that the insurer shall indemnify the insured if the vessel insured shall come in collision with another vessel, applies only where there is an actual contact between the insured vessel and another, and the insured is not liable in case of a collision between a tow of the insured vessel and another, although the insured vessel may have been subjected to liability for such collision. Coastwise S. S. Co. v. Aetna Ins. Co., 161 Fed. 871, 872.

COLLOQUIUM

A "colloquium" only serves to show that the words were spoken in reference to the matter of the averment. Penry v. Dozier, 49 South. 909, 913, 161 Ala. 292.

The office of a "colloquium," as formerly used, was to connect the libelous words with the plaintiff by setting forth facts with much nicety, showing that they applied to him, and were so intended by the defendant. A complaint for libel, showing the name, age, occupation, character, and reputation of the plaintiff are not the same as those of the person mentioned in the libelous article, not showing that the libel referred to plaintiff, except by the general allegation that it was published of and concerning plaintiff, is demurrable as not stating facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; Code Civ. Proc. § 535, providing that the pleader need not allege extrinsic facts for the purpose of showing the application of the defamatory matter to plaintiff, not applying. Corr v. Sun Printing & Publishing Ass'n, 69 N. E. 288, 289, 177 N. Y. 131.

"The 'colloquium' in libel actions should connect the introductory matter with the speaking of the libelous words, leaving it for the innuendo to give such words the explanation of the particular meaning." Hamilton v. Lowery, 71 N. E. 54, 55, 33 Ind. App. 184 (quoting and adopting the definition in Harrison v. Manship, 22 N. E. 87, 120 Ind. 43).

"Colloquium," used with reference to a petition in an action for slander, has the sense of "inducement," meaning a statement of sufficient circumstances to import a defamatory meaning to words which form the basis of the complaint, where they are not in themselves actionable. Krup v. Corley, 69 S. W. 609, 612, 95 Mo. App. 640.

COLLUSION

"Collusion" implies a concerted or agreed purpose to commit a fraud or accomplish a wrong. Wallace v. Jones, 107 N. Y. Supp. 288, 290, 122 App. Div. 497.

"Collusion" implies the existence of fraud of some kind, the employment of fraudulent means, or lawful means for the accomplishment of an unlawful purpose." Dickerman v. Northern Trust Co., 20 Sup. Ct. 311, 314, 176 U. S. 181, 44 L. Ed. 423.

In French law, a "collusion" is "a fraudulent arrangement between two or more persons to give a false or deceptive appearance to a transaction in which they engage." This definition does not render a party to the collusion incompetent to testify. Sere v. Darby, 43 South. 255, 258, 118 La. 619 (quoting definition from Black, Law Dict.).

Accused notified a justice that he had had a fight and would have to suffer for it, and asked that a warrant against him should be made returnable at noon so that he and his friends might conveniently attend. An affidavit was made at the justice's instance by a person designated as a state's witness, several eyewitnesses were summoned and examined and the assaulted person, his brothers who were present at the fight, and his father, were notified to attend the trial, delayed for their coming, but they did not attend. Several witnesses who saw the fight were examined, two of them not of kin to accused, but cousins of the assaulted person, and accused was found guilty and fined. Held, that there was no "collusion" rendering the proceedings void and not a bar to another prosecution. State v. Cale, 63 S. E. 958, 960, 150 N. C. 805, 134 Am. St. Rep. 957.

In divorce proceedings

The term "collusion," as used in divorce suits means an agreement between husband and wife to procure a judgment dissolving the marriage contract, which judgment, if the facts were known, the court would not grant. Doeme v. Doeme, 89 N. Y. Supp. 215, 217, 96 App. Div. 284.

"Collusion" in cases of divorce is not only a corrupt agreement between the parties whereby one shall commit the matrimonial offense, or under the terms of which evidence of an offense not committed is fabricated, but also includes any agreement whereby evidence of a valid defense is suppressed. Griffiths v. Griffiths, 60 Atl. 1090, 1091, 69 N. J. Eq. 689.

"Collusion," in the law of divorce, is a corrupt agreement between a husband and wife, whereby one of them, for the purpose of enabling the other to obtain a divorce, commits a matrimonial offense, or whereby for some purpose evidence is fabricated of an offense not actually committed, or evidence of a valid defense is suppressed. 14 Cyc. 640. Again, 'collusion' has been defined as a corrupt combining of married parties to procure a sentence of judicial order by some false practice, as for one of them to appear to, or in fact, do what would otherwise be the ground of divorce, or in any way deceive the court in a cause that is seeking its interposition as for a real injury." Bowe v. Bowe, 106 N. Y. Supp. 608, 610, 55 Misc. Rep. 403 (quoting 2 Bish. Marr., Sept. & Div. 249).

The term "collusion," as used in the law of divorce, is not to be limited to a corrupt bargain to impose a case on the court, either by the suppression of evidence or by the manufacture thereof, but includes any agreement between the parties as the result of which no defense shall be made to the dissolution of the marriage tie which would not otherwise be dissolved, in violation of public policy. Sheehan v. Sheehan (N. J.) 77 Atl. 1063.

"Collusion" is defined to be "a conspiracy of the husband and wife to obtain a decree of divorce by false or manufactured testimony." A more comprehensive definition is: "'Collusion,' in the law of divorce, is a corrupt agreement between the husband and wife, whereby one of them, for the purpose of enabling the other to obtain the divorce, commits a matrimonial offense, or whereby, for the same purpose, evidence is fabricated of an offense not actually committed, or evidence of a valid defense is suppressed." State v. Richardson, 48 South. 458, 468, 122 La. 1064 (dissenting opinion of Provosty, J.).

An agreement between a husband and wife, made pending a suit by her for divorce, which provides for alimony, but which is unaccompanied by any understanding that she shall have a divorce, or be unresisted at the trial, is not collusive, barring a divorce; a "collusion" to bar a divorce being a conspiracy of husband and wife to obtain a divorce by false testimony, as distinguished from "connivance," which is a corrupt consenting. Rapp v. Rapp, 145 S. W. 114, 115, 162 Mo. App. 673.

Rev. Codes 1905, § 4053, defines "collusion," as a ground for denying a divorce, as an agreement between the husband and wife that one of them shall commit, or appear to have committed, or be represented in court as having committed, acts constituting a cause for divorce, to enable the other to obtain a divorce. Held, that "represented," within the statute, means misrepresented, and such collusion is not proved by evidence failing to show any agreement between the husband and wife that one of them should commit or appear to have committed acts constituting cause for divorce, where it does not appear that defendant was represented as having committed acts for such purpose, which he had not committed. Wiemer v. Wiemer, 130 N. W. 1015, 1017, 21 N. D. 371.

COLLUSIVELY

In an action under the taxpayer's act (Laws 1881, p. 709, c. 531, as amended by Laws 1887, p. 885, c. 673, and Laws 1892, p. 620, c. 301), the complaint sought to recover from the board of supervisors certain items which it alleged were illegally and "collusively" audited. The schedules were attached to the complaint, and set forth in detail the illegality and fraudulent character of the several claims allowed, and charged that each defendant presenting such claims knew that the sums claimed were in excess of the fees allowed him by law. Held, that the complaint was not demurrable because failing to allege that the defendants auditing such claims also knew that they were in excess of the fees allowed by law, as the word "collusively" sufficiently implies such fact. That word is one used in the statute, and is defined by the lexicographers to mean "fraudulently concerted." Wallace v. Jones, 74 N. E. 576, 577, 182 N. Y. 37.

COLONEL

Under the well-understood meaning of the military titles used in Const. art. 7, § 1, relating to militia officers, the title of an officer commanding a regiment was "colonel." Campbell v. Gilkyson, 75 Atl. 160, 161, 78 N. J. Law, 327.

COLOR

See Give Color.

"Color" is the impression given to the eye by lines of light of various rates of vibration. The reason for the natural color of bodies has perhaps some relation to molecular or atomic structure of such bodies, but there is no scientific distinction, so far as producing color is concerned, between imitating and producing color by the addition of an ingredient known as a dye and added for the purpose alone of producing a given color and the selection and addition of an ingredient which performs the same coloring function, but at the same time adds other qualities to the compound. Meyer v. State, 114 N. W. 501, 504, 134 Wis. 156, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1061.

Chlorophyll, a coloring matter used in staining oils and foodstuffs, is not a "color," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 1, § 1, Schedule A, par. 58, 30 Stat. 154, but is dutiable as an unenumerated manufactured article under section 6, 30 Stat. 205. United States v. Magnus & Lauer, 159 Fed. 751, 752.

Lakes containing lead are more specifically provided for as "colors * * * containing lead," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 54, 30 Stat. 154, than as "lakes * * * not specially provided for," under paragraph 58, 30 Stat. 154. United States v. G. Siegle Co., 175 Fed. 885, 886.

An article which contains all the essential elements and determining characteristics of a color or dye, needing only to have its coloring properties rendered accessible by dropping it into water containing an alkali, is a "color or dye," with the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 15, 30 Stat. 152. Küttroff, Pickhardt & Co. v. United States, 154 Fed. 1004, 83 C. C. A. 679.

As apparent or prima facie right

"Color," in law, means not the thing itself, or the right to the thing, but only an appearance thereof." Where a county judge has exclusive jurisdiction over estates and administration thereof, his office gives him "color" of right to obtain possession of money of a deceased, so as to sustain a prosecution against him for embezzling the money. Hendee v. State, 113 N. W. 1050, 1054, 80 Neb. 80.

In pleading

"Color," as a term of pleading, signifies an apparent or prima facie right; and the meaning of the rule that every pleading in confession and avoidance must give color is that it must admit an apparent right in the opposite party and rely therefor on some new matter by which that apparent right is defeated." Before a defendant, sued for slander, can plead that the words spoken were a privileged communication, he must admit the speaking of the words charged in the petition, or at least enough to give plaintiff an apparent cause of action. Shipp v. Patton, 93 S. W. 1083, 1084, 123 Ky. 65 (quoting and adopting definition in Steph. Pl. p. 206).

A plea of "son assault demesne," which is in the nature of a confession of the assault charged, and an avoidance thereof, by showing that the plaintiff first assaulted the defendant, and that the injuries grew out of his assault, must, even under the Code, give "color," which, as a term of pleading, signifies an apparent or prima facie right in the plaintiff; the Code, while having abolished forms, not having changed the substance of various pleas. Shirley v. Renick, 151 S. W. 357, 358, 151 Ky. 25.

COLOR BLINDNESS

"Color blindness," as defined in Cent. Dict., is an incapacity for perceiving colors, or certain colors. It is not a mere incapacity for distinguishing colors, which might be due to want of training or the absence or great weakness of the sensations upon which the power of distinguishing colors must be founded. A railway night switchman, becoming color blind during his employment, is thereby disabled by sickness, within the meaning of his employer's contract that it will pay him sick benefits for a limited period while he is disabled by sickness or accidental injury, provided the fact be established by proof of acute or constitutional disease. Kane v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 182 N. W. 920, 921, 90 Neb. 112, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1145, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 764.

COLOR OF APPARENT ORGANIZATION

Where persons act as a corporation under color of apparent organization pursuant to some charter or enabling act, their authority cannot be questioned collaterally, and "color of apparent organization" does not mean a full or substantial compliance of the statute, but merely an apparent attempt under the law to perfect an organization followed by user. Kwapil v. Bell Tower Co., 104 Pac. 824, 825, 55 Wash. 583.

COLOR OF AUTHORITY

"Color of authority," as applied to a de facto officer, means authority derived from an election or appointment, however irregular or informal. In re Krickbaum's Contested Election, 70 Atl. 852, 854, 221 Pa. 521.

"Color of authority," as applied to de facto officers, is authority derived from an election or appointment, however irregular or informal, so that the incumbent is not a mere volunteer. One acting as judge in a new judicial district before the law establishing it has become operative, by appointment of the Governor under the erroneous belief that the district was already in existence, is a de facto judge having color of authority, and his acts are valid as to third persons and the public. State v. Ely, 113 N. W. 711, 713, 16 N. D. 569, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 638 (quoting and adopting definition in McCrary, Elect. § 253).

An execution under which land was taken, which did not include the land taken, was not "color of authority" so as to prevent the person ousted from recovering possession of such land by forcible entry and detainer. Granberry v. Storey (Tex.) 127 S. W. 1122, 1124.

COLOR OF LAW

"Color of law" means mere semblance of legal right; "color," as a modifier, in legal parlance, meaning appearance, as distinguished from reality. City of Topeka v. Dwyer, 78 Pac. 417, 420, 70 Kan. 244.

COLOR OF OFFICE

See Color of Title (To Office).

Extortion by color of office, see Extort—Extortion.

"Color of office" is an appointment or election of some kind. Buck v. Hawley & Hoops, 105 N. W. 688, 689, 129 Iowa, 406.

Where the act of an officer is in the line of his duty, it is what is termed in the books "colore officii." Board of Com'rs of Ramsey County v. Sullivan, 93 N. W. 1056, 89 Minn. 68.

An act done "colore officii" is an act done, not only by an officer, professing to act as such, but also under color of authority to act in or about the particular matter in connection with which it is done. State v. Man-kin, 70 S. E. 764, 766, 68 W. Va. 772.

Acts of particular officers

The acts for which a sheriff or his sureties may be held liable are termed acts done "virtute officii," and those for which they cannot be held liable are termed "colore officii." The distinction is that acts are done "virtute officii" when they are within the authority of the officer, but done in an improper exercise of his authority or in abuse of the law, while acts are done "colore officii" where they are of such nature the office gives him no authority to do them. Gold v. Campbell, 117 S. W. 463, 468, 469, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 269 (citing Leger v. Warren, 57 N. E. 506, 62 Ohio St. 500, 51 L. R. A. 193, 78 Am. St. Rep. 738).

"Color of office" is a claim or assumption of right to do an act by virtue of an office, made by a person who is legally destitute of any such right." Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 247, provides that a peace officer may, without a warrant, arrest an offender when the offense is committed in his presence or within his view, if the offense is a felony or against the public peace, and Pen. Code 1895, tit. 9, c. 3, declares that the act of a person rudely displaying any pistol near any private house in a manner calculated to disturb the inhabitants will constitute a disturbance of the peace. Pen. Code 1895, tit. 9, c. 4, provides for the arrest of any person unlawfully carrying a pistol without a warrant by any peace officer; and Pen. Code 1895, art. 342, declares that a peace officer who shall fail or refuse to arrest such person "on his own knowledge or information from some credible person" shall be punished by a fine. Held, that where certain deputy sheriffs, having heard a shot fired by certain persons on horseback, attempted to stop and search them, and in doing so shot and injured plaintiff without either having seen a pistol in his possession or having been informed that he had one, their act was without authority and under "color of office" only, for which the sheriff was not liable. Brown v. King, 93 S. W. 1017, 1019, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 588 (quoting and adopting definition in Black, Law Dict.).

"Color of office," as used in 2 Rev. St. § 286, prohibiting a sheriff or other officer from taking any bond, obligation, or other security by color of his office in any other case or manner than such as is provided by law, and declaring every such bond or obligation void, implies an illegal claim of right or authority to take the security. A bond taken by an officer which would be valid at common law is not unlawful merely because not expressly authorized by statute. Griffiths v. Hardenbergh, 41 N. Y. 464-469.

Virtute officii distinguished

Acts done by an officer "virtute officii," for which the sureties on his bond are liable, are such as are done within the authority of the officer, but in the doing of which the authority is improperly exercised or the confidence reposed in him by the law is abused; while acts done "colore officii," for which the sureties are not liable, are such as the office gives him no authority to do. Gold v. Campbell, 117 S. W. 463, 469, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 269.

A distinction is taken between acts of an executive officer, done by virtue of his office, or "virtute officii," and acts done under color of his office, or "colore officii"; illegal acts done only "colore officii" make bondsmen liable, if the illegality consists in an abuse of authority, instead of an outright usurpation. State ex rel. Brennan v. Dierker, 74 S. W. 153, 155, 101 Mo. App. 636.

Acts done "virtute officii" are within the authority of an officer, but which are accomplished by the improper exercise of that authority and in violation of the confidence which the law reposes in him, and his sureties are liable for such acts; whereas acts "colore officii" are unauthorized by the office and do not amount to a breach of the bond. Stephens v. Hendee, 115 N. W. 283, 284, 80 Neb. 754 (quoting and adopting definition in Mechem, Pub. Off. § 284, and State, to use of Goodin v. McDonough, 9 Mo. App. 63; citing State v. Porter, 95 N. W. 769, 69 Neb. 203; Ottenstein v. Alpaugh, 2 N. W. 219, 9 Neb. 237; State ex rel. Leidigh v. Holcomb, 65 N. W. 873, 46 Neb. 612; State v. Moore, 76 N. W. 474, 56 Neb. 82; Comstock-Castle Stove Co. v. Caulfield, 95 N. W. 783, 1 Neb. [Unof.] 542; Snyder v. Gross, 95 N. W. 636, 69 Neb. 340, 5 Ann. Cas. 152; Wilson v. State, 72 Pac. 517, 67 Kan. 44).

In considering this question—liability on official bonds—some courts have adopted a distinction between acts "virtute officii" and acts "colore officii," holding sureties on official bonds liable in the former case, and not in the latter. A definition of such acts is thus stated in People v. Schuyler, 4 N. Y.

173, founded on the common law: "Acts done 'virtute officii' are where they are within the authority of the officer, but in doing them he exercises that authority improperly, or abuses the confidence which the law reposes in him, whilst acts done 'colore officii' are where they are of such nature that his office gives him no authority to do them." This distinction is said to be disregarded in most jurisdictions. 25 Ency. Law (2d Ed.) 724. And in a very full and able note in Feller v. Gates (Or.) 91 Am. St. Rep. 511, Mr. Freeman, the author, says, as our investigation convinces us is true: "The distinction suggested has been productive of anything but harmony among the authorities, and, in its attempted application to particular cases, it has served to confuse rather than clarify. It is a distinction hard to make in theory, and even more difficult to apply in practice. Not only do courts differ as to liability of sureties for acts colore officii, but, among those authorities which agree that such acts are covered by the obligation of the bond, the most widely divergent views are entertained as to what constitute acts colore officii, within the meaning of the definition." If a state constable, in an attempt to discharge a duty of his office, in the seizure of contraband liquor or the arrest of one openly violating the dispensary law, should, without just excuse, commit an assault and battery, or if, in overcoming resistance, he should so exceed his duty as to become the aggressor in an assault and battery, to the injury of another, then there is liability upon his bond. But an assault and battery committed by a constable under a bald assumption and usurpation of authority, without process or authority of any kind, would not be covered by the terms of his bond. Wieters v. May, 50 S. E. 548, 549, 71 S. C. 9.

The "color of right" which constitutes one an officer de facto may consist in an election or appointment, or in the holding over after the expiration of one's term, or acquiescence by the public in the acts of such officer for such length of time as to raise the presumption of colorable right by election or appointment. Heard v. Elliott, 92 S. W. 764, 766, 116 Tenn. 150 (citing Hamlin v. Kassafer, 15 Pac. 778, 15 Or. 456, 3 Am. St. Rep. 176).

"Color of right," which constitutes one an officer de facto, may consist in an election or appointment, or in holding over after the expiration of one's term. In re Krickbaum's Contested Election, 70 Atl. 852, 855, 221 Pa. 521 (citing Hamlin v. Kassafer, 15 Pac. 778, 15 Or. 456, 3 Am. St. Rep. 176).

There is a vast difference between "color of title" and "color of right." The first is a technical term, and the second, when used in a finding in a suit by an equitable owner to charge a purchaser as trustee of the legal title, that a party has no right or "color of right" in the property, refers in no manner to the legal title, but to the equitable rights in the premises. Tye v. Manley, 104 S. W. 686, 688, 7 Ind. T. 332.

COLOR OF TITLE

"Color of title" is a technical term, and means that which in appearance is title, but in fact is not a good title. United States v. Casterlin, 164 Fed. 437, 439; W. O. Whitney Lumber & Grain Co. v. Crabtree, 166 Fed. 738, 740, 92 C. C. A. 400; Knight v. Grim, 66 S. E. 42, 43, 110 Va. 400, 19 Ann. Cas. 400; Montoya v. Unknown Heirs of Vigil, 120 Pac. 676, 688, 16 N. M. 349 (quoting and adopting the definition in Wright v. Mattison, 18 How. 50, 15 L. Ed. 280); Nunn v. Lynch, 115 S. W. 926, 927, 89 Ark. 41, 16 Ann. Cas. 852; Point Mountain Coal & Lumber Co. v. Holly Lumber Co. (W. Va.) 75 S. E. 197, 199.

"Color of title" is such a defective muniment of title as is not wanting in intrinsic fairness and honesty. Veeder v. Gilmer, 105 S. W. 331, 333, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 464.

"Color of title" is that which in appearance is title, but which in reality is not title. Color of title exists wherever there is a reasonable doubt regarding the validity of an apparent title, whether such doubt arises from the circumstances in which the land is held, the identity of the land conveyed, or the construction of the instrument under which the party in possession claims his title. Johnson v. Hurst, 77 Pac. 784, 791, 10 Idaho, 308 (citing Cameron v. United States, 148 U. S. 301, 308, 13 Sup. Ct. 595, 37 L. Ed. 459, 462).

Act of Legislature

Acts of the Legislature attempting to convey to railroads rights of way across land, all rights of the state in which were afterwards conveyed to a city, whether or not within the provisions of the Constitution as to appropriation of public property for private purposes, were not utterly void or nugatory, but were at least effective to prevent the railroad being naked trespassers and their tracks nuisances; so that being continued in open possession thereof for more than 50 years, claiming title under such acts, the railroads acquired title. Pryor v. City of Buffalo, 90 N. E. 423, 428, 429, 197 N. Y. 123.

Administrator's or guardian's deeds

An administrator's deed was such an appearance of title as to constitute "color of title" in the grantee, though the administrator's sale was void for want of jurisdiction in the court to order the same, and there had been no confirmation thereof. Fletcher v. Josephs (Ark.) 152 S. W. 293, 294 (citing 2 Words & Phrases, p. 1264).

A valid security deed, converted into an absolute conveyance by the grantor's administrator, constitutes "color of title" sufficient to support limitations in favor of the grantee, if followed by seven years' possession, although the administrator had not been authorized to make the conveyance. English v. Marshall, 58 S. E. 351, 352, 128 Ga. 730.

An administrator's deed, conveying decedent's homestead pursuant to an order of court directing the sale, after hearing of the petition to sell real estate to pay debts, is "color of title," within St. 1898, §§ 4211, 4212, 4215, barring actions to recover real estate held adversely under an instrument purporting to convey title. Steinberg v. Salzman, 120 N. W. 1005, 1007, 139 Wis. 118.

Possession by a grantee in a deed under the belief that he is the actual possessor, and he intends to so hold, is a holding under "color of title." In re City of Seattle, 100 Pac. 1018, 1015, 52 Wash. 588.

Good faith in the acquirement of title within Limitation Law § 6, authorizing the acquisition of title by possession under "color of title," does not require ignorance of adverse claims or defects in the title, and there is good faith where there is no fraud, and the color of title is not acquired in bad faith. Where a party to a suit in partition obtained a decree vesting title in him, and he was not guilty of fraud or bad faith in procuring it, and believed it gave him title, and he knew that a third person had an interest in the premises, and his sole heir and widow were parties to the suit, he acquired "color of title" in good faith, though the third person's administrator and a part of the tenants in common, not made parties, were not bound by the decree. Peters v. Dicus, 98 N. E. 560, 562, 254 Ill. 379.

Where a duly qualified trustee's successor, without authority from the court, conveyed a portion of the trust estate, such deed, though ineffective to convey a valid title to the property, when taken in good faith under the belief that he had authority to sell, induced by his representation that an order had been passed conferring it, constituted "color of title." Maynard v. Greer, 59 S. E. 798, 129 Ga. 709.

Bond or contract for title

The words "color of title," having received a judicial interpretation prior to the enactment of Acts 1883, p. 106, § 1, relative to the right of occupants of land to compensation for improvements made by them, are presumed to have been used in the act according to that interpretation. A bond for title is not "color of title," within the meaning of Acts 1883, p. 106, § 1, providing for compensation for improvements made by an occupant, under color of title, of land belonging to another. Beasley v. Equitable Securities Co. (Ark.) 84 S. W. 224, 228 (citing Suth. Stat. Const. § 255; Black, Interp. Laws, pp. 130, 131; End. Interp. St. § 367).

Certificate of sale

A sheriff's certificate of sale issued to the purchaser at a mortgage foreclosure constitutes "color of title" within Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5504 (Pierce's Code, § 1162). Goetter v. Moore, 101 Pac. 365, 367, 53 Wash. 5.

A certificate of sale acquired by the purchaser at a mortgage foreclosure, constitutes "color of title" sufficient to support limitations if followed by seven years' possession. Olson v. Howard, 80 Pac. 170, 171, 38 Wash. 15.

A certificate of purchase at tax sale is not "color of title," within Kirby's Dig. § 5057, providing that unimproved and uninclosed land shall be deemed and held to be in possession of the person who pays the taxes thereon if he have color of title thereto; the deed executed pursuant to the statute being the only evidence of title under a tax sale. Townsend v. Penrose, 105 S. W. 588, 589, 84 Ark. 316.

As chain of transfers

To render a possession of three years a bar to an action by the true owner, the person in possession must have held under title or "color of title," and, to constitute title or color of title, there must be a chain of transfer from or under the sovereignty of the soil, necessarily presupposing a grant from the government as the basis of transfer, and the grant must be effectual to convey to the grantee whatever right the government had in the land at the time of the grant. Hulett v. Platt, 109 S. W. 207, 211, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 377.

Claim of title distinguished

While "color of title" is appearance of title, which in reality is not title, "claim of title" is entering and occupying by one with intent to hold land as his own against the world, irrespective of color of right or title as a foundation for his claim; the two terms being distinct but supplementary to each other, in that, while "color of title," without claim, is of little effect, "claim of title," without color, may ripen into title to land actually occupied, while with color it may ripen into title not only to land actually occupied, but by a legal fiction may extend to all land described in the color of title, if that actually occupied be part of it. Roe v. Doe ex dem. Tennessee Coal, Iron & Ry. Co., 50 South. 230, 232, 162 Ala. 151, 136 Am. St. Rep. 17.

As to what constitutes "color of title" and "claim of title" the courts differ in the different states, because it largely depends upon the language of the different statutes. The term "color of title" is not synonymous with "claim of title," as used in the statutes of some states. To constitute "color of title" there must be a paper title to give color to the adverse possession, whereas a "claim of title" may be constituted wholly by parol. Revisal, § 382, provides that when one in possession of realty, or those under whom he claims, shall have been possessed thereof, under known boundaries, and under color of title for seven years, no entry shall be made or action maintained against the possessor for a recovery of the land. Held, that the colorable title required must be a writing upon its face professing to bear title, but which does not do so because of want of title in the person making it, or the defective mode of conveyance that is used. A "descent cast," where an ancestor is in possession, gives color of title. The term "privity," within the rule that color of title must purport to convey title to the claimant thereunder or to those with whom he is in privity, means privity of possession, and not privity of blood, for a "privity in blood" is one who derives his title by descent, and privity of title applies to a real title, which can descend, and not to a mere colorable title. To show privity of possession, so as to avail of the color of title of a prior occupant, the later occupant must enter under the prior one and obtain his possession either by purchase or descent from him. Barrett v. Brewer, 69 S. E. 614, 615, 153 N. C. 547, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 403 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, pp. 5608, 5609; Hamilton v. Wright, 30 Iowa, 490; Tate's Heirs v. Southard, 10 N. C. 120, 14 Am. Dec. 578).

Decree of court

A decree in partition is "color of title," within the statute of limitation, giving ownership to an actual possessor for seven years under claim and color of title in good faith, with payment of taxes. Carpenter v. Fletcher, 88 N. E. 162, 164, 239 Ill. 440.

A decree by the circuit court having jurisdiction of partition of real estate, the enforcement of trusts, and of matters of account, which shows that a petition was filed by the executors of a deceased trustee against the surviving trustee, the surviving parties to the trust agreement who had not assigned their interests, the assigns of such as had assigned their interests, and the heirs of deceased parties, that all the defendants were in court, that some defendants were defaulted, that a hearing was had on the pleadings and report of the master, and that a decree was entered decreeing that the title to the real estate vested in fee simple in the surviving trustee in trust for the persons and in the proportions mentioned in the decree, settling the account between the parties, indicates a proceeding of the subject-matter of which the court has jurisdiction and shows jurisdiction of the parties, and, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, the decree is "color of title," within Limitation Law (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 83) § 6, authorizing the acqui-tion of title by possession under color of title. Peters v. Dicus, 98 N. E. 560, 562, 254 Ill. 379.

Under the statute authorizing the court in partition to determine questions of conflicting titles and by its decree invest titles in the parties to whom the premises are allotted, a decree in partition which vests title in a party thereto is "color of title," within Limitation Law (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 83) § 6, authorizing the acquisition of title by possession under color of title, though there was a defect of parties in the partition suit. Peters v. Dicus, 98 N. E. 560, 562, 254 Ill. 379.

Deed from life tenant

Where a remainderman in expectancy took a deed in January, 1902, from the life tenant and at a time when it could not be known or foreseen whether the life estate would mature into a fee-simple title or the remaindermen would ever acquire any title or interest in the estate, and the deed thus executed purported to convey an absolute and fee-simple title to the estate, and the purchaser took such conveyance, believing she was acquiring an absolute estate, and entered into the possession of the property thereunder and continued in the open, exclusive, and notorious possession thereof, occupying and cultivating the same continuously until the commencement of an action by the other remaindermen in expectancy in November, 1908, paying all taxes and assessments thereon, and making improvements, held, that such facts constitute "color of title" and adverse possession within the meaning of sections 4038, 4039, and 4040, Rev. Codes, and bar any right of recovery on the part of the other remaindermen in expectancy. Wilson v. Linder, 123 Pac. 487, 491, 21 Idaho, 576, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242.

As extending possession beyond actual possession

"Color of title" is not necessary to give title by adverse possession, but it is necessary to extend the title acquired beyond the limits of the actual possession. Actual possession of part of a tract, with color of title for the whole tract, carries the possession to the limits of the land described in the deed giving color. Bradbury v. Dumond, 96 S. W. 390, 391, 80 Ark. 82, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 772.

"Color of title" is that which in appearance is title, but which in reality is no title, and, if an instrument itself passes or constitutes title, it is not color, and hence if grantor had legal title to one 40 only of a tract described, or had color only, possession of grantee of that 40 under the deed could not be extended to the other 40's described. Roe v. Doe ex dem. Tennessee Coal, Iron & Ry. Co., 50 South. 230, 231, 162 Ala. 151, 136 Am. St. Rep. 17.

Where, in a boundary dispute, plaintiff claimed under a patent to the northwest quarter of a specified section, while defendants claimed that the land in controversy was no part of such section, a requested charge that if plaintiff for more than 20 years held possession of the land in controversy under claim and "color of title," etc., he was entitled to recover, was erroneous, since the patent could not operate as color of title, unless the land was within the boundaries of the tract described therein. Coulter v. Gudehus (S. D.) 139 N. W. 330, 333.

Formal requisites and description

"'Color of title' is anything in writing connected with the title which serves to define the extent of the claim. It is wholly immaterial how imperfect or defective the writing may be considered as a deed. If it is in writing and defines the extent of the claim, it is a sign, semblance, or claim of title." Randolph v. Casey, 27 S. E. 231, 233, 43 W. Va. 289.

"'Color of title' is anything in writing connected with the title which serves to define the extent of the claim. It matters not how imperfect or defective the writing may be, considered as a conveyance, if there is a writing which defines the extent of the claim." Moore v. Mobley, 51 S. E. 351, 352, 123 Ga. 424 (quoting and adopting definition in Street v. Collier, 45 S. E. 294, 118 Ga. 470).

A deed, though actually conveying nothing, may be sufficient on which to found a tangible successful claim of adverse possession, if such possession continues sufficiently long to ripen into an absolute title. Crisswell v. Noble, 113 N. Y. Supp. 954, 957, 61 Misc. Rep. 483.

A writing purporting to contain an agreement to convey land, but which is so indefinite as to the description of the land that the same cannot be thereby identified without extrinsic evidence showing the description applicable to the particular parcel of land, does not constitute "color of title." Priester v. Melton, 51 S. E. 330, 123 Ga. 375.

The office of "color of title" is to determine the character of the occupants' possession, and define its limits and extent, and hence presence in the record of a document purporting to vest one with title may amount to color of title in him, though it be so defective as to be utterly insufficient to convey, and in such cases it is immaterial that the instrument is void as a source of title by grant. Hassam v. J. E. Safford Lumber Co., 74 Atl. 197, 199, 82 Vt. 444.

"'Color of title' is anything in writing purporting to convey the title to the land which defines the extent of the claim; it being immaterial how defective or imperfect the writing may be, so that it is a sign, semblance, or color of title." "Its effect is to fix the character of the occupant's possession and to define its extent and limits." A contract of partition in writing under seal, partitioning between the parties thereto, describing and defining the boundaries of the land to be held by each in severalty, and mutually binding the parties to each other in a specified sum that, if any of them should lose any of the land so held and improved by him, the others should make it good, under which contract each of the parties enters into possession of the portion so set apart to him, and continues in open, notorious, and adverse possession thereof, such contract, with such possession, is "color of title." Stover v. Stover, 54 S. E. 350, 353, 354, 60 W. Va. 285 (citing Core v. Faupel, 24 W. Va. 238, 247; Kincheloe v. Tracewells, 11 Grat. [52 Va.] 587; Creekmur v. Creekmur, 75 Va. 430, 438; Oney v. Clendenin, 28 W. Va. 34-54; Adams v. Alkire, 20 W. Va. 480, 485; Randolph v. Casey, 27 S. E. 231, 43 W. Va. 289; Swann v. Thayer, 14 S. E. 423, 36 W. Va. 46; Shanks v. Lancaster, 5 Grat. [46 Va.] 110, 50 Am. Dec. 108).

A deed conveying land described by metes and bounds and a decree of court distributing to the grantee the land described as in the deed are "color of title." Owsley v. Matson, 104 Pac. 983, 156 Cal. 401.

Where an instrument in the form of a deed was signed by mark and bore an acknowledgment by one purporting to be an officer, which, though invalid as an acknowledgment, was good as an attestation, the deed was "color of title." Davis v. Arnold, 39 South. 141, 143 Ala. 228.

A deed, though dated as of a time prior to its execution, is "color of title" from the time of its execution, as is also an instrument describing the land and containing a warranty of title, though containing no words of transfer. Doe ex dem. Anniston City Land Co. v. Edmondson, 40 South. 505, 507, 145 Ala. 557.

"Color of title" is that which has the semblance of title, but which in fact is no title, and is anything in writing, however defective or imperfect, purporting to convey title to the land, and which defines the extent of the claim. An essential requisite of it is that it purports to pass title. As a court of law takes cognizance of nothing but a legal title, it is difficult to see how a colorable equitable title, such as a title bond or other executory contract, could be treated or regarded in that court as color of title. There is authority for the position that a title bond is color of title if the purchase money has been wholly paid, so that nothing remains to be done except the delivery of a deed. It is difficult, however, to see how the payment or nonpayment of purchase money can make any difference, inasmuch as the holding must proceed upon the theory that the sole object of color of title is to define boundaries, and that it need not purport to pass any legal title. Lewis v. Yates, 59 S. E. 1073, 1075, 62 W. Va. 575.

"What constitutes 'color of title' has been a subject of discussion in the courts of all states and frequently by our own court." As defined in other cases, "It is the apparent right in the tenant which he has derived by his paper title, which distinguishes him from a trespasser or intruder." A claim or "color of title" may be shown by any paper purporting to convey the land or the right to its possession into the party asserting adverse possession, however and for whatever reason such paper might be lacking in the essentials of a valid title, provided the party claims under it in good faith." "Color of title is that which in appearance is title, but which in reality is not title." If it appears from an instrument that it was the intention of the grantors to transfer lands described to the grantees in division of an estate, it is sufficient to constitute color of title in the grantees to support an adverse possession, although it may lack words of conveyance, technically speaking; nor is it necessary that the grantor shall have had title. Henry v. Brown, 39 South. 325, 327, 143 Ala. 446 (quoting definitions in Saltmarsh v. Crommelin, 24 Ala. 352; Goodson v. Brothers, 20 South. 443, 111 Ala. 596; Black v. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co., 9 South. 538, 93 Ala. 113).

The limitation act (Act April 4, 1872 [Laws 1871-72, p. 557], § 6) provides that every one in the actual possession of land under claim and color of title made in good faith, who for seven successive years continues in such possession and pays all taxes, shall be adjudged the legal owner to the extent of his paper title, and extends the benefit of the section to purchasers during the seven years who shall continue such possession and the payment of taxes, so as to complete such payment of taxes and possession for seven years; and section 7 provides the same as to vacant and unoccupied land. Held, that any instrument having a grantor and grantee, apt words of conveyance, and describing the lands to be conveyed, gives "color of title" within the statute, and a conveyance from children to mother, which contains such requisites, was sufficient color of title, though the only consideration was love and affection. Wells v. Wells, 92 N. E. 932, 934, 246 Ill. 469.

According to Beverly v. Burke, 9 Ga. 944, 54 Am. Dec. 351, defining "color of title" as "a writing upon its face professing to pass title, but which does not do it, either from a want of title in the person making it, or from the defective conveyance that is used, a title that is imperfect, but not so obviously so that it would be apparent to one not skilled in the law," and to Veal v. Robinson, 70 Ga. 816, defining the term as "anything in writing purporting to convey title to land which defines the extent of the claim, it being immaterial how defective or imperfect the writing may be, so that it is a sign, semblance, or color of title" and to other decisions of our court giving substantially the same definition, it would seem that the character of the instrument relied on as "color of title" is immaterial. Luttrell v. Whitehead, 49 S. E. 691, 692, 121 Ga. 699 (citing Field v. Boynton, 33 Ga. 239; Griffin v. Stamper, 17 Ga. 108; Millen v. Stines, 8 S. E. 815, 81 Ga. 655).

A deed to tenants in common gives good "color of title" to one of such tenants, and actual and exclusive possession under known boundaries, pursuant to a division of the premises by the parties in interest, for seven years at law, gives an indefeasible title as against one not claiming to be tenant in common. Sutton v. Jenkins, 60 S. E. 643, 645, 147 N. C. 11.

Must be valid on its face

A deed void for defects apparent on its face constitutes "color of title," open, notorious, exclusive, and hostile possession under which for 10 years gives title. Russell v. Tennant, 60 S. E. 609, 610, 63 W. Va. 623, 129 Am. St. Rep. 1024.

A wholly unauthorized grant of public land in the Philippine Islands by subordinate Spanish officials, showing its invalidity on its face, cannot serve as the basis of a prescriptive title under the Spanish royal decree of June 25, 1880, under which a prescriptive right can be founded on possession for 10 years under just title and in good faith. Tig-lao v. Insular Government of Philippine Islands, 30 Sup. Ct. 129, 130, 215 U. S. 410, 54 L. Ed. 257.

Must purport to convey title

"Any instrument of writing which purports to convey a certain tract of land, describing the same, is 'color of title.'" Though no jurisdiction was obtained over the person of defendant in divorce, a sheriff's deed in a sale under execution based on a personal money judgment for alimony constituted color of title. Joplin Brewing Co. v. Payne, 94 S. W. 896, 897, 197 Mo. 422, 114 Am. St. Rep. 770 (citing Hamilton v. Boggess, 63 Mo. 233; Hickman v. Link, 10 S. W. 600, 97 Mo. 482; Allen v. Mansfield, 18 S. W. 901, 108 Mo. 343; Suddarth v. Robertson, 24 S. W. 151, 118 Mo. 286; Quick v. Rufe, 64 S. W. 102, 164 Mo. 408).

"Color of title" may be defined to be a writing upon its face professing to pass title, but which does not do it, either from a want of title in the person making it, or the defective mode of conveyance which is used, and it would seem that it must not be so obviously defective that no man of ordinary capacity could be misled by it. Bond v. Beverly, 67 S. E. 55, 57, 152 N. C. 56.

A deed which one, who has given a warranty deed of the property, thereafter takes from a third person, is "color of title," and, when accompanied by adverse possession for the legal period, ripens into actual title against any one, including his prior grantee. Chatham v. Lansford, 63 S. E. 81, 82, 149 N. C. 363, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 129.

Defendants went into possession of land in 1900 under a conveyance from a mortgagee in possession under a mortgage executed in 1894, and they were in possession in 1905. They took possession from a lessee of the mortgagee who had taken possession from a person who had contracted to buy the place from the mortgagee by verbal bargain and sale, but had not paid for it. Held, that the mortgage, as it conveyed legal title, constituted "color of title" in the mortgagee in possession. Stewart v. Lowdermilk, 61 S. E. 523, 147 N. C. 583.

Must show title in grantor

"Color of title" does not depend on the validity or the effect of the grant, but wholly on its intent and meaning. There may be color of title, even if the grantor had nothing to convey. A grant by a city to a railroad of the right to erect, maintain, and operate an elevated road in a street gives to the railroad the apparent authority to appropriate the easements of light, air, and access appurtenant to the lots abutting on the street, and is color of title on which the railroad may acquire a prescriptive right to the easements, though the city had no power to transfer the easements. Hindley v. Manhattan R. Co., 78 N. E. 276, 282, 185 N. Y. 335.

Where a patentee of certain land conveyed to a third person before conveying to defendant's prior grantors, and it was not shown that there had been any reconveyance of such outstanding title, defendants had not "color of title" from the sovereignty of the soil and could not therefore claim under the three-year statute of limitations. Saxton v. Corbett (Tex.) 122 S. W. 75, 78.

Paper title required

A purchaser at a void partition sale does not have "color of title" until the deed is delivered to him, within Kirby's Dig. § 2754, providing that if any person, believing himself to be the owner, either in law or equity, under "color of title," has peaceably improved any land which on judicial investigation shall be decided to belong to another, the value of the improvements shall be paid by the successful party before the court shall cause possession to be delivered. Cowling v. Nelson, 88 S. W. 913, 915, 76 Ark. 146.

Condemnation proceedings do not constitute "color of title" to sustain adverse possession until a final order has been entered confirming the report of commissioners, and reciting that the damages have been paid, and hence limitations do not start to run until such order. Knight v. Grim, 66 S. E. 42, 43, 110 Va. 400, 19 Ann. Cas. 400.

A successful contestant for homestead entry on government lands, who has made proper filing of his homestead entry after the final determination of his contest, is entitled to the undisturbed possession of the lands filed upon; and may proceed before a justice of the peace, in an action of forcible entry and detainer, against the unsuccessful contestant, and those in possession, under a claim of license from such unsuccessful contestant, and such unsuccessful contestant, and those persons in possession under him, after a final determination of the contest adverse to him, are mere trespassers, in possession without "color of title," within the meaning of section 6430, Snyder's Comp. L. Oklahoma, Session Laws 1907-08, § 3, p. 459. Hibbard v. Craycraft, 121 Pac. 198, 199, 32 Okl. 160.

Possession required

Possession is essential to title under "color of title." Mere "color of title" does not draw possession to one who is not in, or does not take, actual possession of some part of the land. Bush v. Thomas, 50 South. 133, 134, 162 Ala. 168.

Quitclaim deed

A deed, not being a mere quitclaim, is "color of title." McBride v. Caldwell, 119 N. W. 741, 743, 142 Iowa, 228.

"Color of title" is that which in appearance is title, but which in reality is not. Where a person claims under a quitclaim deed, he is claiming under "color of title." Little v. Crawford, 88 Pac. 974, 975, 13 Idaho, 146 (citing Johnson v. Hurst, 77 Pac. 784, 10 Idaho, 308; Wright v. Mattison, 59 U. S. [18 How.] 50, 15 L. Ed. 280).

Where a quitclaim deed was claimed to have conveyed the property in controversy to defendant, and possession of at least a portion of the land in controversy was taken under the deed, it was sufficient to give "color of title," though there was nothing contained therein showing that the grantor claimed any interest in the property at the date of its execution. Archer v. Beihl, 136 Fed. 113, 118, 69 C. C. A. 101.

Recording required

Failure to record a receipt from the sheriff to a tax-sale purchaser, as expressly required by statute, goes to invalidate the deed, but does not affect the "color of title" afforded by the deed. Greenleaf v. Bartlett, 60 S. E. 419, 422, 146 N. C. 495, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 660.

Sheriff's deed

A certificate of sale acquired by the purchaser at a foreclosure and a sheriff's deed delivered to the purchaser under an order confirming the sale are "color of title," within Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5503 (Pierce's Code, § 1160), providing that every person in actual, open, and notorious possession of lands under color of title in good faith for seven years shall be the legal owner. Johnson v. Bartlett, 96 Pac. 833, 864, 50 Wash. 114.

A tax deed to land is "color of title." Morgan v. Pott, 101 S. W. 717, 719, 124 Mo. App. 371.

A void tax deed constitutes "color of title." State v. Harman, 50 S. E. 828, 838, 57 W. Va. 447; Lara v. Sandell, 100 Pac. 166, 167, 52 Wash. 53.

A tax deed, void for insufficiency of the description as "part of" a certain section, does not constitute "color of title." Gannon v. Moore, 104 S. W. 139, 140, 83 Ark. 196.

A tax deed, void on its face because not acknowledged before the proper officer, does not constitute "color of title" and is ineffective to start the six-year statute of limitations. Matthews v. Blake, 92 Pac. 242, 243, 16 Wyo. 116, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 339.

"Color of title" is a paper writing, usually a deed, which professes and appears to pass the title, but fails to do so. A tax deed of land sold for default in payment of taxes by a life tenant, in whose name it was listed, and conveying the title, but not that of the remaindermen, is not "color of title" as against them. Smith v. Proctor, 51 S. E. 889, 892, 139 N. C. 314, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 172 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1264).

A tax deed constitutes "color of title" under Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 83, § 6, providing that every person in actual possession under color of title, who shall for seven successive years continue in possession and pay all legal taxes, shall be held to be the legal owner of said lands. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Cavins, 87 N. E. 371, 372, 238 Ill. 330.

A tax deed, executed to a purchaser at a tax sale under a judgment in a suit against the original owner brought after the recording of a tax deed to another purchaser at a prior tax sale under a prior judgment for taxes in a suit against the original owner, is "color of title" within Rev. St. 1899, § 4268 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2342), and one claiming under such deed and entering into possession and improving and claiming the property has lawful possession; "color of title" being any writing purporting to convey title to land by appropriate words of transfer and describing the land. Dunnington v. Hudson, 116 S. W. 1083, 1085, 217 Mo. 93.

A tax deed reciting that the land was sold for taxes and bid in by the grantee, and that the owner had failed to redeem, was "color of title," within Revisal 1905, § 382, barring actions for land where defendants had been in possession thereof for 7 years under colorable title, etc., though the deed was invalid and conveyed no title because of the sheriff's failure to comply with Laws 1881, p. 218, c. 117, § 36, requiring him to bid in land sold for taxes for the county, if no one will pay the tax for a less number of acres than the whole. Greenleaf v. Bartlett, 60 S. E. 419, 420, 146 N. C. 495, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 660.

Under Laws 1899, c. 158, providing that title to real property may be acquired by adverse, open, exclusive, and undisputed possession for 10 years under claim of title and by paying all taxes for such period, a deed executed and delivered by a county auditor of land sold to the state for taxes and to which the title of the state had been perfected by the lapse of time allowed for redemption pursuant to Laws 1890, c. 132, §§ 86, 87, though void on its face, constituted "color of title" sufficient on which to base an adverse claim. Woolfolk v. Albrecht, 133 N. W. 310, 312, 22 N. D. 36.

An unauthorized conveyance by the surviving husband of community property after the death of the wife does not convey title or "color of title," and as to such interest the conveyance will not support a defense of limitations of three years. Hardy Oil Co. v. Burnham (Tex.) 124 S. W. 221, 223.

Where a grantee in a deed conveying a community homestead of 240 acres entered into the immediate possession of the premises and continuously occupied the same for over 10 years, the deed, though void because executed by the grantor in direct hostility to his wife's homestead rights, and therefore not "color of title," within Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 3340, providing that an action for real estate against a person in the possession thereof under color of title shall be instituted within a specified time after the accrual of the cause of action, was admissible in trespass to try title brought by an heir of the grantor's wife on the issue of the extent of the grantee's disseisin of the grantor's wife, notwithstanding article 3344, providing that adverse possession shall not be construed to embrace more than 160 acres, or the number of acres actually inclosed, where the same exceeds 160 acres, etc. Sanders v. Word, 110 S. W. 205, 206, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 294.

Though a deed under which a defendant in possession claims is absolutely void and conveys nothing, it is nevertheless "color of title," and, with seven years' adverse continuous possession under it, a legal title is perfected. McFarland v. Cornwell, 66 S. E. 454, 457, 151 N. C. 428.

A deed not void on its face, but referring as a part of its description to another deed which is void on its face, is "color of title," within Civ. Code 1901, par. 2937, barring after five years actions for the recovery of real estate in the adverse possession of another claiming under a recorded deed.

Work v. United Globe Mines, 100 Pac. 813, 815, 12 Ariz. 339.

A deed by an Indian, conveying land patented to him by an instrument in the usual form of homestead patents, constitutes "color of title," within Rev. Code Civ. Proc. § 54, making 10 years' actual possession and payment of taxes under color of title ground for an adjudication of ownership, whether or not such deed is actually void under the United States laws prohibiting Indians from conveying land within five years from the date of patents to them. Murphy v. Nelson, 102 N. W. 691, 693, 19 S. D. 197.

A deed from the proper officer on foreclosure sale, even though the proceedings are void, is sufficient to give "color of title," and if the grantee entered under such color, and remained in active possession for the proper time, he acquired an indefeasible title as against all persons not under disability. Sutton v. Jenkins, 60 S. E. 643, 645, 147 N. C. 11.

Will

A will may be color of title, but it must furnish a sufficient description to identify the land; and a mere "devise of all lands belonging to the testator in this state" will not constitute "color of title," within section 6 of the limitation law (Hurd's Rev. St. 1911, c. 83), providing that title may be acquired by one in possession of land by payment of taxes thereon for seven years under claim and color of title. Peabody v. Burrl, 99 N. E. 690, 693, 255 Ill. 592.

COLOR OF TITLE (To Office)

"Color of title" to an office is the authority derived by an election or an appointment, however irregular or informal, so that the incumbent be not a mere volunteer. Howard v. Burke, 93 N. E. 775, 777, 248 Ill. 224.

"Color of title" to an office is that which in appearance is title, but which in reality is no title. It is this color of title, or, as it has been said, color of authority, which distinguishes the de facto officer from a mere intruder or usurper. Nall v. Coulter, 78 S. W. 1110, 1111, 117 Ky. 747, 4 Ann. Cas. 671.

"Color of title" to office is analogous to color of title to land. The latter does not mean a good title, or even a defective conveyance from one having a title, but only the appearance of title; that is, a deed to the premises in due form of law." A person acting as judge in a new judicial district, before the law establishing it has become operative, by appointment of the Governor, under an erroneous belief that the district was already in existence, is a de facto judge acting under color of title. State v. Ely, 113 N. W. 711, 713, 16 N. D. 589, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 638 (quoting and adopting definition in Re Ah Lec, 5 Fed. 899).

"Color of title" to an office is defined to be that which in appearance is title but which in reality is no title." It is this color of title which distinguishes the de facto officer from a mere intruder or usurper, whose acts are absolutely void. Where a de jure chief of police is, pending suit on charges against him in the district court, wrongfully suspended by order of the judge thereof at chambers, which order is later set aside and the suit dismissed, and where the city pays a chief of police de facto, during his incumbency, the salary provided by law, the officer de jure after obtaining possession of the office cannot recover from the city the salary for the same period. Stearns v. Sims, 104 Pac. 44, 46, 24 Okl. 623, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 475.

The essential to the creation of an "officer de facto" is that his incumbency should not be legal, but that it should be exercised by some election or appointment, attempted as of legal right, but invalid for want of power in the appointing body, or because of a defect in the election, and an officer so elected or appointed actually in possession of the office exercising its functions and acting under "color of title," which means an apparent right to the office, is an "officer de facto." Coquillard Wagon Works v. Melton, 125 S. W. 291, 292, 137 Ky. 189.

COLORABLE ASSIGNMENT

"Colorable assignment of a lease" means, not an assignment to avoid liability for rent under the lease, but that, the assignor retaining possession, the assignment was made to conceal that possession. Adams v. H. Koehler & Co., 121 N. Y. Supp. 390, 392, 136 App. Div. 623.

COLORABLE CAUSE

A "colorable cause" or a "colorable invocation of jurisdiction," as applied to the jurisdiction of an inferior court, means that some person apparently qualified to do so has appeared before the judge and made complaint under oath, stating some fact which may, with other facts unstated, constitute a criminal offense, or stating some fact which bears some general similitude to a fact designated by law as an offense, calling on the judge to pass on the sufficiency of the affidavit to elicit the process issued. Broom v. Douglass (Ala.) 57 South. 860, 864.

COLORABLE IMITATION

A trade-mark constitutes a "colorable imitation" to another if the resemblance is such as to deceive an ordinary purchaser giving such attention to the same as such a purchaser usually gives, and to cause him to purchase the one supposing it to be the other. Cusimano & Co. v. Olive Oil Importing Co., 38 South. 200, 201, 114 La. 312.

COLORED

Under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule 1, pars. 305, 309, providing for colored cotton cloth, the character of the fabrics as "colored" is determined by the condition of the warp and the filling threads alone; and cottons having colored figures but an uncolored foundation are not "colored" within the act, though the figures cover most of the foundation fabric and give the effect of a colored fabric. United States v. Rusch & Co., 160 Fed. 279, 280.

The word "colored" by a consensus of opinion means of some other color than white, having a dark or black color of the skin, specifically in the United States belonging wholly or partly to the African race, having or partaking of the color of the negro. Throughout the United States, except on the Pacific Slope, the word "colored," when applied to race, has the definite and well-known meaning of a person having negro blood in his veins. State v. Treadaway, 52 South. 500, 502, 126 La. 300, 139 Am. St. Rep. 514, 20 Ann. Cas. 1297.

COLORED CHILD

"Colored children," within Const. § 187, providing for separate schools for white and colored children, include all children wholly or in part of negro blood, or having any appreciable admixture thereof; and a child having one-sixteenth negro blood may not attend a school for white children. Mullins v. Belcher, 134 S. W. 1151, 142 Ky. 673, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 456.

COLORED PERSON

A person of "color," within statutes relating to their qualification as witnesses, is one in whom there is a distinct and visible admixture of negro blood. State v. Davis (S. C.) 2 Bailey, 558, 559.

In ancient times in the territory of Orleans, the term "persons of color" was used to designate persons who were neither white nor black. "'Persons of color' may have descended from Indians on both sides, from a white parent, or mulatto parents in possession of freedom" (quoting Adelle v. Beauregard, 1 Mart. [La.] 184, where it was held that a "person of color" was presumed to be free, while in the case of blacks the presumption was that they were slaves, since during the regime of slavery all free persons of African descent were styled either "persons of color" or "free colored persons").

The word "colored," however, as used in Acts La. 1890, No. 111, p. 152, requiring railroads to provide separate accommodations for white and colored persons, means negroes or persons having an admixture of colored blood. Webster's International Dictionary. The same word is also often applied to black people, Africans or their descendants, mixed or unmixed, and to persons who have any appreciable mixture of African blood. Lee v. New Orleans Great Northern R. Co., 51 South. 182, 183, 125 La. 236 (citing 7 Cyc. pp. 400, 401).

Acts 1901-02, c. 137, § 29, provides that when any minor child under 14, by reason of neglect, crime, or other vice of the parents, is growing up without education or salutary control, and in circumstances exposing it to a vicious life, the child may be committed to the care of the Children's Home Society. Held, that where minor daughters of a mother of gentle birth were not neglected, but were comfortably cared and provided for by their mother, and their stepfather, and it did not appear that from neglect or any vice of the mother or her husband the children were growing up without education or salutary control, and in circumstances exposing them to a vicious life, the mere fact that their mother married for her second husband one who had less than one-fourth negro blood in his veins, and was therefore not a "colored person," within Code 1904, §§ 2252, 2253, 3783, 3788, defining a colored person as one having one-fourth or more colored blood in his veins, and prohibiting such a person from intermarrying with a white woman, was insufficient to justify the commitment of the children to the custody of the society. Moon v. Children's Home Society of Virginia, 72 S. E. 707, 708, 112 Va. 737, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 418.

A covenant in a deed that the title to the land should never vest in a person of African descent or "colored person" was not breached by a conveyance of the land to a corporation composed of negroes, since the corporation was a community distinct from its members, and was not a "colored person" within the covenant. People's Pleasure Park Co. v. Rohleder, 61 S. E. 794, 796, 109 Va. 439.

COLORED RACE

Any person having an appreciable mixture of negro blood belongs to the colored race, within Acts 1890, p. 152, No. 111, requiring railroad companies to provide separate accommodations for white and colored races. Lee v. New Orleans Great Northern R. Co., 51 South. 182, 183, 125 La. 236.

COLPORTAGE

"Colportage" is the sending forth of persons to labor for the spread of the gospel by distributing religious books and tracts, and so a bequest for that purpose is exempt from a transfer tax under Tax Law, § 221, as amended by Laws 1905, c. 368. In re McCormick's Estate, 99 N. E. 177, 206 N. Y. 100.

COLT

An information for the larceny of one gray horse "colt" is not insufficient because the word "colt" is not included within the term grand larceny as defined by section 7048, Rev. St. 1887, providing that the taking a "horse, mare, gelding," etc., is larceny, as the word "colt" merely described the age of the animal. State v. Williams, 86 Pac. 53, 56, 12 Idaho, 492.

COM.

"Com." and "Co." are both well understood abbreviations for the word "company," when used as a part of the name of a commercial firm. Where a declaration alleged the making and delivery of a note to, and indorsement by, S. & Com., and the evidence showed that it was indorsed by S. & Co., there was no variance. Keith v. Sturges, 51 Ill. 142, 143.

COMAKER

Defendant was properly held to be a "comaker" of a note, where it indorsed its name on the back of the note before delivery to the payee, and there was no evidence of any agreement or understanding that it should be considered merely an indorser. First Nat. Bank of Kansas City v. Guardian Trust Co., 86 S. W. 109, 115, 187 Mo. 494, 70 L. R. A. 79.

COMBED SILK

In construing the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 660, for "silk, raw, or as reeled from the cocoon, but not * * * advanced in manufacture in any way," held: (1) That the provision does not cover any form of raw silk advanced beyond the condition of skeins; (2) that silk known as "singles" or "silk on tubes," which has been wound from the skeins onto tubes, the effect of this process being to advance the silk a stage in preparation for its ultimate use, has been "advanced in manufacture"; and (3) that silk in this form is not free of duty under this provision, but dutiable under paragraph 384, § 1, Schedule L, of said act, as "silk * * * not further advanced or manufactured than carded or combed silk." Klots v. United States, 139 Fed. 606, 607, 71 C. C. A. 590.

"Combed silk" that has fallen from or been caught in the machines in which it was undergoing further operations is dutiable under the provision in paragraph 384, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, 30 Stat. 185, for silk not further manufactured than combed, and is not subject to the provision for silk waste in paragraph 661, § 2, Free List, 30 Stat. 201. Fawcett v. United States, 154 Fed. 1003, 83 C. C. A. 197.

COMBINATION—COMBINE

A tacit understanding between conspirators to work to a common purpose is a "combination." In re Friedman, 164 Fed. 131, 140.

A "combination" is "the union or association of two or more persons or parties for the attainment of some common end." Where a holding corporation was organized to control the patents and business of all the wire glass manufacturing companies, including defendant, and the latter received its proportion of the stock of the holding company as its share of the consideration for a transfer of patents, etc., and was entitled to be represented on the holding company's board of directors, the organization of such company, etc., constituted a "combination" within a contract by which plaintiff gave defendant a license to use certain patents in the manufacture of such glass, providing that if defendant should enter any trust, pool, combination, or trade arrangement with other manufacturers to control the output or regulate the prices of wire glass, plaintiff should be deemed beneficiary under such contract, combination or trade arrangement. Brownville Glass Co. v. Appert Glass Co., 136 Fed. 240, 245 (quoting and adopting definition in Cent. Dict.).

In the case of an indictment for conspiracy charging that defendants did unlawfully and willfully "combine, confederate, and conspire," etc., it was said that it seems impossible to ascribe to the words "combine, confederate, and conspire" any meaning other than that the defendants mutually engaged to accomplish the purposes charged. When it is said that A. and B. confederated or conspired to do an act, the words seem to have a well-defined significance. The etymological, technical, and popular significance of these words, when predicated of two or more persons, is that they reciprocally will to assist in a common enterprise; and the enterprise being common, and the will of all the defendants being common, the agreement was common and between each and all of the defendants. State v. Nugent, 71 Atl. 485, 486, 77 N. J. Law, 84.

COMBINATION (In Patent Law)

"To sustain a patent on a 'combination' of a device, * * * a new result must be obtained which is due to the joint and co-operating action of all the old elements." Safety Car Heating & Lighting Co. v. Consolidated Car Heating Co., 160 Fed. 476, 491 (quoting and adopting definition from Brinkerhoff v. Aloe, 13 Sup. Ct. 221, 224, 146 U. S. 515, 516, 36 L. Ed. 1068).

A combination of old elements to be patentable must operate in a new way to produce a new or an improved result, and the change from the old art must be such a one as would not occur to the ordinary mechanic skilled in the art. Fellows v. Borden's Condensed Milk Co., 180 Fed. 421, 428.

To constitute a patentable combination of old elements, they must co-operatively perform a different function from what they did before, unless it is shown that, in the combination as applied to a machine or device in its entirety, a new and useful result is produced. Elliott-Fisher Co. v. Donning, 171 Fed. 96, 103.

A "combination," as used in the patent law, is a union of elements which may be partly old and partly new, or wholly old or wholly new. But, whether new or old, the combination is a means—an invention—distinct from them. If new, they may be inventions, and the proper subjects of patents, or they may be covered by claims in the same patent with the combination. They are not identical with the combination. One element is not the combination, and cannot be regarded as a substantive part of the invention represented by the combination, and it can make no difference whether the element was always free or becomes free by the expiration of a prior patent, foreign or domestic. In making a combination, an inventor may draw from the whole field of mechanics. Crown Cork & Seal Co. v. Standard Brewery, 174 Fed. 252, 262 (adopting definitions in Leeds & Catlin Co. v. Victor Talking Machine Co., 29 Sup. Ct. 495, 500, 213 U. S. 301, 325, 53 L. Ed. 805, 813).

To constitute a "combination" in patent law it is essential that there should be some joint operation performed by the elements, producing a result due to their joint and co-operating action, while in an "aggregation" there is a mere adding together of separate contributions each operating independently of the other. Portland Gold Min. Co. v. Hermann, 160 Fed. 91, 99, 100, 87 C. C. A. 247 (quoting and adopting definition in American Chocolate Machinery Co. v. Helmstetter, 142 Fed. 978, 74 C. C. A. 240).

A "combination" in patent law is a union of elements which may be partly old and partly new, or wholly old or wholly new; but, whether the elements be old or new, the combination is distinct from them. The elements thereof, if new, may be inventions so as to be the subject of patent or may be covered by claims in the same patent with the combination. A "combination" and not a function of a machine is embodied in a claim of a patent for a "sound-producing apparatus consisting of a traveling tablet having a sound record formed thereon and a reproducing stylus shaped for engagement with said record and free to be vibrated and propelled by the same, substantially as described." Leeds & Catlin Co. v. Victor Talking Machine Co., 29 Sup. Ct. 495, 500, 503, 213 U. S. 301, 53 L. Ed. 805.

A "combination" in a patent for a combination described in the specifications and stated in the claim is an entirety, and, where one of its elements is omitted, it ceases to exist. Where a patent is for an improvement on a known machine by a mere change of form or a new combination of parts, the patentee cannot invoke the doctrine of equivalents to establish infringement by another, who has also improved the original machine by the use of a different form or combination performing the same functions. Central Foundry Co. v. Coughlin, 141 Fed. 91, 94, 72 C. C. A. 93.

To constitute a "combination" it is essential that there should be some joint operation performed by its elements producing a result due to their joint and co-operating action, as distinguished from an "aggregation," in which there is a mere adding together of separate contributions, each operating independently of the other. Hence a patent for a combination of elements in a machine is not infringed by a machine in which the elements of the combination are merely aggregated operating successively and independently of each other. American Chocolate Machinery Co. v. Helmstetter, 142 Fed. 978, 979, 74 C. C. A. 240.

The bringing together of old elements, so as to do no more than their original work and which do not co-operate with other elements in doing something new and useful, is not invention; but, if they co-act with each other in a new and unitary organization so as to produce a more beneficial result than by their separate operation, it may constitute a patentable combination. National Tube Co. v. Aiken, 163 Fed. 254, 261, 91 C. C. A. 114.

COMBINATION IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE

See Illegal Combination in Restraint of Trade; Unlawful Combination.

See, also, Restraint of Trade.

A "combination" to destroy competition between dealers in a commodity is a conspiracy in law whenever the act to be done has a necessary tendency to prejudice the public or oppress individuals by unjustly subjecting them to the power of the confederate and giving effect to the purpose of the latter, whether of extortion or mischief. Total suppression of trade in the commodity is not necessary in order to render the combination one "in restraint of trade." Where an association of retail druggists in a certain city and wholesale druggists formed a combination to maintain a maximum schedule of prices, and in pursuance of the plan refused to sell to plaintiff, a retailer who had refused to join the combination, and coerced and intimidated vendors of like commodities by means of threats to blacklist and boycott such vendors if they sold to plaintiff, whereby such vendors were deterred from selling to plaintiff, the parties to the combination were liable to plaintiff for resulting damages to his business. Klingel's Pharmacy v. Sharp & Dohme, 64 Atl. 1029, 1030, 104 Md. 218, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 976, 118 Am. St. Rep. 399, 9 Ann. Cas. 1184.

A grocery company and a photographic company agreed that the latter should furnish the former with trading tickets, each entitling its holder to a photo art calendar at the photographic company's studio when countersigned by the grocery company, and the grocery company agreeing to pay a certain amount for each ticket three months from date, or as soon as the tickets should be disposed of it before that time, and to dispose of the tickets as soon as possible, and it was further agreed that from the date of the contract the photographic company should not, without the consent of the grocery company, or until the disposal of the tickets furnished, sell any other local grocery company any of such tickets. Held, that such a contract was not a combination of persons, within the meaning of the act of 1903 (Gen. Laws 1903, p. 119, c. 94), prohibiting trusts, monopolies, and conspiracies in restraint of trade. Forrest Photographic Co. v. Hutchinson Grocery Co. (Tex.) 108 S. W. 768, 769.

The Duluth Board of Trade, as constituted under its charter and rules, is not a conspiracy or combination in restraint of trade or which restrains, limits, or interferes with free competition in the production of grain, or in the purchase and sale thereof, in violation of the anti-trust law (Gen. Laws 1899, p. 487, c. 359; Rev. Laws 1905, § 5168). State v. Duluth Board of Trade, 121 N. W. 395, 406, 107 Minn. 506, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1260.

An information for quo warranto alleged that defendant and another company were competitors in buying cotton seed, and agreed that defendant would not buy any seed in the territory adjacent to the plant of the other concern if it would ship defendant a certain amount of seed at certain prices, and that the agreement was an unlawful combination to restrain trade, for the purpose of limiting the price of a commodity, etc. Held, that the information alleged a single cause of action, and was sufficient under Laws 1900, p. 125, c. 88, defining a "combine" to be a combination to hinder competition. State

v. Jackson Cotton Oil Co., 48 South. 300, 301, 95 Miss. 6.

The freedom of contract is not unreasonably abridged, in violation of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, by Code Miss. § 5002, which, as construed by the state court, condemns as a combination in restraint of trade an agreement between retail lumber dealers not to deal with any manufacturer or wholesale dealer who sells direct to consumers in localities in which such retail dealers conduct their business and keep a sufficient stock to meet demands, and to inform each other of any such sales. Grenada Lumber Co. v. Mississippi, 30 Sup. Ct. 535, 537, 217 U. S. 433, 54 L. Ed. 826.

Within Const. art. 15, § 12, providing that no incorporation, stock company, person, or association should combine or form what is known as a "trust" for the purpose of fixing the price or regulating the production of any article of commerce or product of the soil for consumption by the people, the terms "combine" and "form a trust" are of equal dignity, and both are to be regarded as modified and explained by the clause "for the purpose," etc. MacGinniss v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 75 Pac. 89, 95, 29 Mont. 428.

A "combine," to fall within the purview of Code 1892, § 4437, must have as a constituent element, either a violation of public policy, in that it tends to create a monopoly, or is in restraint of trade, or that it involves a delegation and abandonment of corporate powers, and is inimical to the public welfare. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Searles, 37 South. 939, 943, 85 Miss. 520, 68 L. R. A. 715.

Only acts, contracts, agreements, or combinations which operate to the prejudice of the public interests by unduly restricting competition, or unduly obstructing the due course of trade, or which, either because of their inherent nature or effect, or because of their evident purpose, injuriously restrain trade, fall within the condemnation of Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209, of combinations in restraint of interstate or foreign trade or commerce, or monopolization or attempts to monopolize any part of such trade or commerce. United States v. American Tobacco Co., 31 Sup. Ct. 632, 634, 221 U. S. 106, 55 L. Ed. 663.

"The word 'combination,' as used in the anti-trust law, is a word not yet possessed of an accurate legal meaning. Its place in the terminology of criminal law is, I believe, no older than this statute. Of itself it means no more than 'co-operation'—a union of effort—and, if I am right in believing the act to be aimed at the result of such united effort or co-operation, it can make no difference whether those personally assisting in or contributing to such wrongful result were original laborers in the vineyard or came at the eleventh hour; their statutory recompense is the same." United States v. MacAndrews & Forbes Co., 149 Fed. 823, 831.

To constitute a trust, within the anti-trust law (Rev. St. 1890, c. 143), there must be a combination of capital, skill, or acts; "combination," as so used, meaning "union" or "association." State ex inf. Hadley v. Standard Oil Co., 116 S. W. 902, 1044, 218 Mo. 1.

To show a "combination" in violation of the anti-trust statute, it is necessary that the combination was entered into to increase the price of an article above its real value or depreciating the price below its real value.—Stahr v. Hickman Grain Co., 116 S. W. 784, 785, 132 Ky. 496.

The test of legality of a combination under Anti-Trust Act July 2, 1890, c. 657, is its necessary effect on competition in commerce among the states or with foreign nations, and where its necessary effect is but incidentally or indirectly to restrict competition, while its chief result is to foster the trade and increase the business of those who make and operate it, it is not violative of the act; but, where its necessary effect is to stifle or directly and substantially to restrict free competition in commerce among the states or with foreign nations, the combination is in restraint of trade and falls under the ban of the act. United States v. Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, 173 Fed. 177, 188.

The combination of the stocks of the various corporations trading in petroleum and its products in the hands of a holding company, with the intent to exclude others from the trade, and thus centralize in the combination the perpetual control of the movement of these commodities in the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, constitutes a violation of the prohibitions of Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, §§ 1, 2, 26 Stat. 209, against combinations in restraint of interstate or foreign commerce, or the monopolization or attempt to monopolize any part of such trade or commerce. Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey v. United States, 31 Sup. Ct. 502, 505, 221 U. S. 1, 55 L. Ed. 619, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734.

Sherman Anti-Trust Law (Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, § 3) declares that every contract, combination, and form of trust or otherwise, and conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce, in any territory of the United States, or in restraint of trade or commerce between any such territory and another, etc., are declared illegal, and that every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such "combination, or conspiracy," shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. Held, that the words "combination or conspiracy" as so used were synonymous, and hence an indictment alleging that defendants entered into a "combination or conspiracy" in restraint of trade was not duplicitous as alleging two distinct offenses. Tribolet v.

A combination of shipowners to prevent competition between members by maintaining uniform freight rates in South African trade, and to eliminate the possibility of competition with other lines by requiring shippers to pay forfeit money in case they patronized other lines, constituted a combination in restraint of competition and foreign commerce, in contravention of the federal anti-trust statute. Thomsen v. Union Castle Mail S. S. Co., 166 Fed. 251, 252, 92 C. C. A. 315.

A combination by stockholders in two competing railway companies to form a stockholding corporation, which should acquire, in exchange for its own capital stock, a controlling interest in the capital stock of each of such railway companies, is a combination in restraint of interstate and international commerce, and violates Anti-Trust Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, 20 Stat. 209, declaring illegal every combination in restraint of interstate or foreign commerce. Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 452, 193 U. S. 197, 48 L. Ed. 679.

The International Harvester Company, a foreign corporation, which absorbs the property and business of six separate, independent, competing corporations, manufacturing from 80 to 90 per cent. of the agricultural implements of the country, and which thereafter conducts the business of manufacturing agricultural implements under the respective names of such corporations, and which thereby obtains power to suppress competition, is an unlawful combination to suppress competition within the anti-trust laws, though it has used its power only in a moderate degree, since, where persons deliberately acquire power that will enable them to control the market if they choose to exercise such power, they cannot show to escape liability under the anti-trust laws that they did not intend to control trade or limit competition; the laws forbidding the acquisition of power to influence the market by combinations of interests that otherwise would compete in the market. State ex inf. Major v. International Harvester Co. of America, 141 S. W. 672, 676-678, 237 Mo. 369.

The provisions of Anti-Trust Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, §§ 1, 2, 26 Stat. 209, making unlawful any combination "in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states" or to monopolize any part of such trade or commerce, do not make every combination in restraint of competition in interstate trade unlawful, but there may be a restraint of competition that does not amount to a restraint of trade within the meaning of the act. On the other hand, a combination cannot escape the condemnation of the act merely because of the form it assumes, and a single corporation, if it arbitrarily uses its power to force weaker competitors out of business, or to coerce them into a sale to or union with such corporation, puts a restraint on interstate commerce, and monopolizes or attempts to monopolize a part of such commerce, in a sense that violates the act. United States v. E. I. Du Pont De Nemours & Co., 188 Fed. 127, 149.

The combination and unification of the terminal facilities at St. Louis under the exclusive ownership and control of less than all the railway companies under compulsion to use them—the inherent conditions being such as to prohibit any other reasonable means of railway access to that city—violates the provisions of the Sherman anti-trust act of July 2, 1890, §§ 1 and 2, in that it constitutes a contract or combination in restraint of commerce among the states, and an attempt to monopolize such commerce which must pass through the gateway at St. Louis. United States v. Terminal R. R. Ass'n of St. Louis, 32 Sup. Ct. 507, 509, 224 U. S. 383, 56 L. Ed. 810.

Any combination whatever to secure action which essentially obstructs the free flow of commerce between the states, or restricts in that regard the liberty of a trader to engage in business, is within the inhibition of Anti-Trust Act July 2, 1890, against "combinations in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states." A combination by members of labor organizations to destroy an existing interstate traffic in hats by preventing the manufacturers, though the instrumentality of a boycott, from manufacturing hats intended for transportation beyond the state, and to prevent their vendees in other states from reselling the hats so transported, and from further negotiating with the manufacturers for the purchase and transportation of such hats from the place of manufacture to the various places of destination, is a "combination in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states," within the meaning of Anti-Trust Act July 2, 1890, the members of which are liable for the threefold damages which, under section 7 of that act, may be recovered by those injured in business or property by violations of the act, although a negligible amount of intrastate business may be affected in carrying out the combination, and although the members of the combination are not themselves engaged in interstate commerce. Loewe v. Lawlor, 28 Sup. Ct. 301, 303, 208 U. S. 274, 52 L. Ed. 488, 13 Ann. Cas. 815.

The acquisition by the Union Pacific Railroad Company, then operating a line from Missouri river points to Portland, and thence to San Francisco by steamship connection, of 46 per cent. of the outstanding capital stock of the Southern Pacific Company, with the intent and result, not only of securing the California connection at Ogden over the Central Pacific line, and thus effecting such a continuity of the Union Pacific and Central Pacific lines from the Missouri river to San Francisco, as was contemplated by Act July 1, 1862, c. 120, 12 Stat. 489, Act July 2, 1864, c. 216, 13 Stat. 356, and Act June 20, 1874, c. 331, 18 Stat. 111, but of obtaining the dominating control of the entire Southern Pacific system, consisting of lines by water and rail, together forming a transportation system from New York and other Atlantic ports to San Francisco and Portland and other Pacific coast points, with various branches and connections, besides a steamship line from San Francisco to Panama, and from San Francisco to the Orient, and a half interest in another line between the two latter points, which system was actively competing with the purchasing road for interstate business, large in volume, though small in comparison with the total traffic carried, creates, contrary to the act of July 2, 1890, a combination in restraint of interstate trade. United States v. Union Pac. R. Co., 33 Sup. Ct. 53, 61, 226 U. S. 61, 57 L. Ed. 124.

The test of an unlawful combination in restraint of trade, under Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, § 1, 26 Stat. 209, is its necessary effect upon free competition in commerce, and a combination, the effect of which is to stifle and substantially restrict such competition, is unlawful; but if the effect is only indirectly to restrict competition, while its chief result is to foster the trade to those who make it, it is not within the law. Union Pac. Coal Co. v. United States, 173 Fed. 737, 739, 97 C. C. A. 578.

See Trust (Combination).

COMBINATION CAR

A car about 60 feet long with a door in each side and each end, and with a platform at the end next the locomotive, but none at the other, is called a "combination car." Lewis v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co., 38 South. 92, 114 La. 161, 108 Am. St. Rep. 335.

COMBINATION PATENT

See Combination (In Patent Law).

COMBINED DRAINAGE

The term "combined drainage" is defined thus: "Where there are lands so related that the same system will benefit all of them more or less, and it is proposed to construct at the expense of all the owners, in proportion to the benefits to their respective lands received, they may proceed to accomplish it without resort to condemnation, in the mode prescribed. That is the system of combined drainage. The combination referred to is not of ditches, though that may generally be required, but of contribution to the expense of constructing, extending, improving, and maintaining them." People ex rel. Harrison v. Commissioners of Mineral Marsh

Drainage Dist., 62 N. E. 225, 228, 193 Ill. 428 (quoting and adopting the definition in Klinger v. People ex rel. Conkle, 22 N. E. 600, 602, 130 Ill. 509, 513).

COMBUSTIBLE

See Incombustible.

The Charter of the City of Hoboken empowered the council to regulate the manufacture and keeping of gunpowder, fireworks, and other dangerous and combustible articles, and the city's Building Code prohibited the erection of any building for the manufacture or repair of mattresses or any other article wherein excelsior or other combustible material was used, or the storage of such materials within certain distances of designated buildings. Held, that the word "combustible" was broad enough to include articles likely to cause a conflagration, and that ordinary materials for mattresses were within the class of articles prohibited by the Code. Neumann v. City of Hoboken, 82 Atl. 511, 512, 82 N. J. Law, 275.

COMBUSTION

See Slow Combustion.

Spontaneous combustion, see Spontaneous.

COMBUSTION TOOK PLACE

To say that "combustion took place" means took fire. Per Porter, J., dissenting. Sun Ins. Office of London v. Western Woolen-Mill Co., 82 Pac. 513, 519, 72 Kan. 41.

COME

See May Come; To Come.

To reside

A girl who comes to a town to work as a maid is a person who has "come to reside" within the meaning of section 3 of the statute relating to paupers. Middlebury v. Waltham, 6 Vt. 200, 202.

A woman who took up her abode in a town under a contract to make cheese, and who had no regular home, is a person who has "come to reside" within the meaning of section 4 of the statute relating to paupers. Town of Berlin v. Town of Worcester, 50 Vt. 23, 25.

A stranger, who with his family takes up his abode in a town with the intention of building a home in some other town at some indefinite future time, held to have "come to reside" within the meaning of the statute relating to paupers. Town of Jamaica v. Town of Townshend, 19 Vt. 267, 271.

A pauper, who came to the town of P. to hire out for the summer, but who intended to leave in the fall, was a person who "came to reside" within the meaning of the statute relating to paupers. Town of Pittsford v. Town of Chittenden, 44 Vt. 382, 384.

A pauper went to, S., where his wife from whom he had separated resided, without any intention of remaining. He decided to live with his wife while there and went to work and boarded his wife. Held, that he had "come to reside" within the meaning of the pauper statute. Town of Sharon v. Town of Cabot, 29 Vt. 394, 395.

One who had a wife but did not live with her, but who was hired for a term in another town, was a person who had "come to reside" within the meaning of the statute regarding paupers. Town of Stamford v. Town of Readsboro, 46 Vt. 606, 611.

COME BY THE FATHER

Where a child, whose father was a member of the Creek Tribe of Indians, but whose mother was not, was born May 6, 1901, and died in November of the same year, thus becoming entitled to enrollment in the tribe, but without receiving his allotment at the time of his death, the land to which he was entitled came to him by the blood of his tribal parent, or "from his father," within the meaning of Mansf. Dig. Ark. c. 49, providing that on the death of a person intestate, unmarried, and leaving no children, the estate if it "came from the father," shall go to the father, and hence on his death, and the subsequent allotment, his father took the full title. Shulthis v. McDougal, 170 Fed. 529, 533-535, 95 C. O. A. 615.

COMING

A coal miner who approaches the bottom of the shaft from above with a view of leaving the cage or who approaches the bottom of the shaft from his working place below with a view of entering the cage is within the protection given by Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, c. 93, § 28, par. "b," providing that, so long as there are miners underground, the operator shall maintain sufficient light at the bottom of the shaft thereof so that persons "coming to the bottom" may discern the cage and objects in the vicinity. Robertson v. Donk Bros. Coal & Coke Co., 87 N. E. 373, 375, 238 Ill. 344.

A petition in an action for the conversion in October, 1907, of animals, describing them as "coming twos" and as part of property mortgaged to plaintiff in November, 1906, is supported by the mortgage which describes them as "yearlings," since, if they were yearlings when mortgaged, they would be "coming twos" the following October at the time of the alleged conversion. Barron v. San Angelo Nat. Bank (Tex.) 138 S. W. 142, 144.

COMET

A "comet," as defined by Stand. Dict., is a heavenly body consisting of a coma, surrounding a bright star-like nucleus, with a nebulous tail or train, often of great length. A "comet" consisting of a five-pointed solid star with a nebulous tail, together with the word "Coma," does not infringe a trade-mark using a six-pointed star with the word "Star."—Hutchinson, Pierce & Co. v. Loewy, 163 Fed. 42, 43, 90 C. C. A. 1.

COMFITS

The term "comfits" in paragraph 263, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, 30 Stat. 171, is practically synonymous with "confections," and includes boiled marrons (chestnuts) preserved in syrup. Schall & Co. v. United States, 154 Fed. 1005, 83 C. C. A. 329.

COMFORT

Some of the synonyms of "comfort" are "consolation," "contentment," "ease," "enjoyment," "happiness," "pleasure," and "satisfaction." It is a common English word. A person publishing a magazine under the name "Comfort" has a trade-name in such title, which is infringed by the use of the name "Home Comfort" for a magazine, entitling him to an injunction, without proof of damages. Gannert v. Rupert, 127 Fed. 962, 963, 62 C. C. A. 594.

Under the statute (Rem. & Bal. Code, § 8309) defining a nuisance as an act or omission which either annoys, injures, or endangers the comfort, health, or safety of others, the maintenance in a residential district of a city of a sanitarium for the treatment of tuberculosis patients is a nuisance, where the fear induced by the proximity of the sanitarium disturbs the "comfortable enjoyment" of adjacent property, whether the fear is founded on scientific facts or not, for "comfortable enjoyment" means mental quiet as well as physical comfort, and the word "comfort" implies whatever is requisite to give security from want and furnish reasonable physical, mental, and spiritual enjoyment. Everett v. Paschall, 111 Pac. 879, 880, 61 Wash. 47, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 827, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1128.

COMITY

The doctrine of "comity" is "in general terms that there are, between nations at peace with one another, rights both national and individual resulting from the comity or courtesy due from one friendly nation to another. Among these is the right to sue in their courts, respectively." Disconto Gesellschaft v. Terlinden, 106 N. W. 821, 823, 127 Wis. 651, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1045, 115 Am. St. Rep. 1063 (quoting and adopting definition in 6 Webster's Works, p. 117).

"Comity" is not a rule of law, but of practice, convenience, and expediency, and, while it is something more than mere courtesy, its obligation is not imperative. Continental Securities Co. v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 165 Fed. 945, 960.

"Comity" is not a rule of law, but one of practice, convenience, and expediency. It is something more than mere courtesy, which implies only deference to the opinion of others, since it has substantial value in securing uniformity of decision and discouraging repeated litigation of the same question, but its obligation is not imperative. * * * It recognizes the fact that the primary duty of every court is to dispose of cases according to the law and the facts; in a word, to decide them right. In doing so, the court is bound to determine them according to his own convictions. If he be clear in those convictions, he should follow them. It is only in cases where, in his own mind, there may be a doubt as to the soundness of his views, that comity comes into play and suggests a uniformity of ruling to avoid confusion, until a higher court has settled the law."—Norwich Union Fire Ins. Soc. v. Stanton, 191 F. 813, 815, 112 C. O. A. 327 (quoting and adopting definition in Mast, Foos & Co. v. Stover Mfg. Co., 20 Sup. Ct. 708, 177 U. S. 485, 44 L. Ed. 856).

Under the rule of "comity," a foreign corporation is not required to domesticate to maintain an action in the state courts, but a foreign corporation, to enjoy the privileges of a domestic corporation, must comply with the laws of the state. A foreign corporation not complying with Const. art. 10, § 5, and Rev. St. 1899, § 3058, relating to the right of foreign corporations to transact business in the state, may not maintain an action to enforce a contract with a telephone company based on the latter's failure to transmit a message correctly, where the defense of noncompliance is raised. Gould Land & Cattle Co. v. Rocky Mountain Bell Tel. Co., 101 Pac. 939, 941, 17 Wyo. 507.

"Comity," with reference to the treatment of the citizen of another state on an order of arrest, means that this state will do by courtesy what the other state would do under like circumstances in connection with a citizen of this state, so that, where the New York courts hold that a citizen of another state surrendered by extradition is not entitled to an exemption in New York from arrest for other crimes or upon civil process, a New York citizen extradited into this state will not be exempt from arrest while herein. Rutledge v. Krauss, 63 Atl. 988, 990, 73 N. J. Law, 397.

Comity depends, not alone on a disposition to favor the citizens of another state, but rests on settled principles of practice, expediency, and convenience, and is a rule recognized by courts, when applied within bounds of discretion, and based on the statute law or decisions of courts of general jurisdiction of other states, which will be given force if they do not conflict with the local law, inflict an injustice, or violate public policy. State ex rel. Baker River & S. R. Co. v. Nichols, 99 Pac. 876, 877, 51 Wash. 619.

"Comity" is not a rule of law, but one of practice and convenience and expediency. It is something more than mere courtesy, which implies only deference to the opinion of others, since it has a substantial value in securing uniformity of decisions and discouraging repeated litigation of the same question, but its obligation is not imperative. If it were, the indiscreet action of one court might become a precedent, increasing in weight with each successive adjudication, until the whole country was tied down to an unsound principle. Comity persuades, but it does not command. It demands of no one that he shall abdicate his individual judgment, but only that deference shall be paid to the judgments of other co-ordinate tribunals. Clearly it applies only to questions which have been actually decided and which arose under the same facts. * * * Comity, however, has no application to questions not considered by the prior court or, in patent cases, to alleged anticipating devices which were not laid before that court." Torrey v. Hancock, 184 Fed. 61, 69, 107 C. C. A. 79 (quoting Mast, Foos & Co. v. Stover Mfg. Co., 20 Sup. Ct. 708, 177 U. S. 485, 44 L. Ed. 856).

COMITY OF NATIONS

"Comity," in the legal sense, is neither a matter of absolute obligation, on the one hand, nor of mere courtesy and good will, upon the other. But it is the recognition which one nation allows within its territory to the legislative, executive or judicial acts of another nation, having due regard both to international duty and convenience and to the rights of its own citizens or of other persons who are under the protection of its laws." Hilton v. Guyot, 16 Sup. Ct. 139, 143, 159 U. S. 113, 40 L. Ed. 95; The Disconto Gesellschaft v. Umbreit, 28 Sup. Ct. 337, 340, 208 U. S. 570, 52 L. Ed. 625 (quoting and adopting the definition in Hilton v. Guyot, 16 Sup. Ct. 139, 143, 159 U. S. 113, 40 L. Ed. 95, 108); Prentiss v. Atlantic Coast Line Co., 29 Sup. Ct. 67, 74, 211 U. S. 210, 53 L. Ed. 150 (quoting and adopting definition in Hilton v. Guyot, 16 Sup. Ct. 143, 159 U. S. 163, 40 L. Ed. 108).

"Comity" is defined as a courtesy; a disposition to accommodate. By the rules of comity between nations, the courts of one state will voluntarily enforce the laws of a friendly state or nation when, by such enforcement, they will not violate their own public policy or laws or injuriously affect the interests of their own state or of their own citizens." Disconto Gesellschaft v. Terlinden, 106 N. W.

"Comity of nations" is defined as the courtesy by which nations recognize within their own territory, or in their own courts, the peculiar institutions of another nation, or the rights and privileges acquired by its citizens in their own land. Comity can only arise when a citizen, whether natural or artificial, of one state, having certain powers, rights, or privileges in the state of its domicile, passes into another state and there exercises or attempts to exercise the same privileges or powers. Myatt v. Ponca City Land & Imp. Co., 78 Pac. 185, 188, 14 Okl. 189, 68 L. R. A. 810.

Courts recognize the laws of other states and countries pertaining to contracts, and give them force and effect, upon the principle of "comity," which is the voluntary act of the state or nation by which it is offered, and is inadmissible when contrary to its policy or prejudicial to its interests. The "comity of nations," rightly understood, cannot violate, because it is a part of, the law of this and every other civilized country. It being upon the principle of the voluntary act of comity that contracts valid where made, but invalid in the state of the forum, will be in force in the latter state, if not contrary to the established policy or a positive statute of that state, it is within the discretion of the lawmaking power of the state of the forum to limit the extent to which the principle of comity shall be applicable; and the Legislature of the state has the power to say that this principle of comity shall not be extended to a contract, the result of which is to give one of the parties thereto the means of violating the laws of the state and its established policy in relation to the sale therein of commodities believed to be prejudicial to the interests of its citizens. In furtherance of the established policy of the state to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors within its limits Rev. St. Me. c. 29, § 64, was enacted forbidding a remedy to certain suitors, under conditions named, even if they were innocent in making the contract of sale which placed in the possession of the purchaser the means of violating the prohibitory laws. The legal effect of this enactment was simply to limit the application of the principle of comity, and to extend the well-established principle that courts will not enforce a contract made by both parties with the view and for the purpose of violating the laws of the state of the forum to the case of a contract where one of the parties only to it, the purchaser, had that purpose in view. This enactment was within the discretion of the lawmaking powers of the state and is not violative of the interstate commerce clause of the federal Constitution. Corbin v. Houlehan, 61 Atl. 131, 135, 100 Me. 246, 70 L. R. A. 568.

COMMENCE

See Duly Commenced.

Webster defines the word "commence" to mean to start, to begin, to originate, to perform the first act of. The word "commence," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 28, relating to a proceeding commenced before a judge of the court, means to start, begin, originate, or to perform the first act of. Bridges v. Koppelman, 117 N. Y. Supp. 306, 312, 63 Misc. Rep. 27.

L. O. L. §§ 363-377, abolished the writ of quo warranto, and provided that the remedies obtainable under that proceeding might be obtained by an action at law in the name of the state by the prosecuting attorney. Subsequently, by L. O. L. § 2666, the office of Attorney General was created, and section 2670 makes it his duty to appear, prosecute, and defend for the state all suits or proceedings in the Supreme Court in which the state is a party or interested, to appear, prosecute, or defend any action in any court in which the state is a party or interested, and, when requested, to consult and advise with the district attorneys. Held, that it being the duty of the courts to reconcile, if possible, two apparently conflicting statutes, so that both may stand, the enactment of these later statutes did not deprive prosecuting attorneys of the exclusive right to commence those actions given in place of quo warranto; the word "commence" having rather a different significance from "prosecute," which may mean to prosecute an action to completion after it has been commenced by another. State v. Millis, 119 Pac. 763, 765, 61 Or. 245.

To "commence" is to "institute," and, where a statute authorized a householder to "institute" an action for breach of any condition of the bond of a school district treasurer, he was also authorized to maintain it to adjudication. School Dist. No. 9, Kingman County, v. Brand, 81 Pac. 473, 474, 71 Kan. 728.

To initiate means to "commence." "Commence" is defined in Cent. Dict. as "to cause to begin to be, perform the first act of, enter upon, begin." Webster defines it: "To begin, to originate, to do the first act in anything, to take the first step." In England it is settled that the filing of a bill or declaration is to be regarded for every essential purpose as commencement of the suit. Whether we give the word "commenced" its common meaning, or whether it be construed in the light of the General Statutes, the filing of the bill of complaint "commences" foreclosure proceedings. J. I. Kelly Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 47 South. 742, 750, 56 Fla. 456 (quoting and adopting Schroeder v. Imperial Ins. Co., 63 Pac. 1074, 132 Cal. 18, 84 Am. St. Rep. 17).

COMMENCEMENT

As applied to the employment of teachers, the word "commencement," when used in connection with colleges, according to American usage, does not mean the commencement of the college year, but the last day of the college year, when degrees are conferred upon the graduates. Brookfield v. Drury College, 123 S. W. 86, 94, 139 Mo. App. 339.

COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION

See Attempt to Commence Action; Commencement of New Action.

Date of commencement of action, see Date.

To "commence a suit" is to demand something by the institution of process in a court of justice. Eckerle v. Wood, 69 S. W. 45, 46, 95 Mo. App. 378 (quoting and adopting Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. [19 U. S.] 403, 5 L. Ed. 257).

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 966, authorizing the issuance of a garnishee summons where at the time the "action is commenced" plaintiff files with the clerk an affidavit averring that any person has the control of any property of defendant, etc., a garnishee summons may issue on the filing of the complaint, the issuance of summons, returned "Not found," and the filing of an affidavit averring that the party sought to be summoned as garnishee has property of a nonresident defendant; for the quoted words must be taken in their ordinary sense, and not within the definition of the commencement of an action under section 317. Northern Indiana R. Co. v. Lincoln Nat. Bank, 92 N. E. 384, 386, 47 Ind. App. 98.

Appointment of commissioners in condemnation proceedings

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 66 (Judiciary Law [Laws 1909, c. 29; Consol. Laws, c. 30] § 475), giving an attorney a lien from the "commencement" of a proceeding, no right of lien attached under a retainer to obtain for an owner of land a proper award in condemnation proceedings by New York City, where the land was conveyed to a corporation before application was made for the appointment of the commissioners of estimate and assessment in the condemnation proceeding, which was the "commencement" of such proceeding; any remedy of the attorneys being action against their client for breach of contract. In re Albers Realty Co., 125 N. Y. Supp. 179, 182, 140 App. Div. 277.

Filing complaint or petition

A suit is "commenced" when it is brought by the filing of a petition within Code Ga. 1895, §§ 4960, 4973, providing that the clerk shall indorse the date of the filing of a petition only when the suit is perfected by service, or waived by the defendant. Bentley v. Reid, 133 Fed. 698-700, 66 O. C. A. 528.

An action against a nonresident, who is outside of the state, to defeat a tax title is to be deemed begun, within Gen. St. 1901, § 7680, requiring a suit to be begun within five years from the recording of the deed, where the plaintiff, without causing a summons to be issued, has filed his petition and affidavit for publication, and caused notice to be delivered to the only newspaper printed in the county, with directions for its insertion, provided a proper publication results. Canaday v. Davis, 101 Pac. 626, 627, 79 Kan. 816.

Rev. Codes, § 6428, provides that "civil actions can only be commenced within the periods prescribed in this title [relating to commencing actions], after the cause of action shall have accrued, except where a different limitation is prescribed." Section 6457 declares that an action is commenced within the meaning of the title before referred to, when the complaint is filed. Section 6464 provides that if, in an action commenced in time, judgment is reversed without a new trial, or the action is terminated otherwise than by voluntary discontinuance, dismissal for want of prosecution, or final judgment on the merits, the plaintiff may sue anew after the time limited, and within a year after such reversal or termination. Section 6532 requires the complaint to state the facts of a cause of action in ordinary and concise language. Defendant may demur for want of a sufficient statement of facts, and under section 6539 this objection is never waived. By section 6588 plaintiff may amend once as of course. By section 6589 the court may allow a party to amend by adding or striking out the name of the party, or correcting a mistake therein, or a mistake in any other respect, and may likewise allow an amendment in other particulars. By section 6591 on decision of a demurrer the court may allow the party in fault to plead anew or amend. Held, that an action was commenced by the filing of the complaint, though it was insufficient in its allegations of defendant's capacity and plaintiff's ownership of property alleged to have been injured, and that the court, after demurrer sustained, properly allowed an amendment perfecting the only cause of action claimed, and thus relating back to the date of filing the original complaint. Clark v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 99 Pac. 298, 301, 38 Mont. 177.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 566, authorizing institution of a suit by filing a petition in the clerk's office and suing out a summons thereon against defendant, a suit is "commenced," so as to arrest the bar of the statute, from the time the petition is filed, though the summons is not issued till later and after the expiration of the period of limitation, unless plaintiff directed the clerk not to issue till further orders; in which latter case the suit is to be treated as not commenced till a purpose to proceed with it is manifested by causing the summons to actually issue. McCormick v. Clopton (Mo.) 130 S. W. 122, 124.

The "commencement of an action" within Pol. Code, § 3417, providing that, unless the party contestant in proceedings to determine a conflict commences his action within 60 days after the order of reference is made, his rights in the premises and under his application cease, means the filing of a complaint, and the "filing of a complaint" means the setting forth of the facts on which the contestant relies. Polk v. Sleeper, 76 Pac. 819, 821, 143 Cal. 70.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, subd. 4, 30 Stat. 544, defines a "bankrupt" as a person against whom an involuntary petition has been filed, and subdivision 10, 30 Stat. 544, defines the terms "date of bankruptcy," "time of bankruptcy," or "commencement of proceedings," or "bankruptcy," with reference to time, to mean the date when the petition is filed. Section 8, 30 Stat. 549, declares that the death of a bankrupt shall not abate the proceedings. Held, that the death of a bankrupt after the filing of an involuntary petition against him, though prior to service, does not abate the proceedings. Shute v. Patterson, 147 Fed. 509, 510, 78 C. C. A. 75 (citing In re Hicks, 107 Fed. 910; Scheuer v. Smith & Montgomery Book & Stationery Co., 112 Fed. 407, 50 C. C. A. 312).

Filing indictment or information

A petition for the removal of a criminal prosecution commenced in a state court against a revenue officer of the United States, under Rev. St. § 643, need not be filed until after the indictment of the defendant, where an indictment is required by the state law, until which time the prosecution has not been "commenced" within the meaning of the statute. Virginia v. Felts, 133 Fed. 85, 87 (citing Virginia v. Paul, 13 Sup. Ct. 536, 148 U. S. 107, 37 L. Ed. 386; Georgia v. O'Grady, 10 Fed. Cas. 245, 3 Woods, 496; Pennsylvania v. Artman, 19 Fed. Cas. 187, 3 Grant, Cas. 436).

The affidavit of the prosecuting attorney is not the "commencement of a criminal proceeding," but the information filed by him is the legal basis thereof, so as to enable the person informed against to maintain an action for malicious prosecution. Carp v. Queen Ins. Co., 101 S. W. 78, 98, 203 Mo. 295.

Filing præcipe

Under section 7342, Gen. St. 1901, providing that the repeal of a statute does not revive a statute previously repealed, nor does such repeal affect any right which accrued, any duty imposed, any penalty incurred, nor any proceeding "commenced," a proceeding to reverse a judgment of the trial court is not "commenced" within the provisions of the statute until the petition in error with the case-made or transcript attached are filed with the clerk together with a præcipe for summons. Kansas City v. Dore, 88 Pac. 539, 540, 75 Kan. 23.

The commencement of an action in a justice court, that will arrest the running of limitations, is not the order for summons or attachment, the two kinds of process provided for in such court, but the issuance thereof, so that filing a præcipe before the justice, commanding the issuance of summons or attachment, is not a "commencement of action" with such effect. McMullin v. Beck (Del.) 80 Atl. 524.

Foreclosure proceedings

Where insured had no knowledge, at the time of loss, of the filing of the petition to foreclose a mortgage on the premises, by which the suit was begun according to statute, there was no forfeiture of the policy under a clause providing that it should be void "if with the knowledge of the insured foreclosure proceedings be commenced," etc., though insured had been previously served with citation. London & L. Fire Ins. Co. of Liverpool v. Davis, 84 S. W. 260, 262, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 348.

"Commencement of foreclosure proceedings," as used in a standard policy, providing that it shall be void if with the knowledge of the insured foreclosure proceedings be commenced, or notice given of sale, means the institution of judicial proceedings for the enforcement of the mortgage, and waivers of legal delays and other waivers of a nature to greatly facilitate and expedite the judicial proceedings, if ever begun, do not constitute of themselves the "commencement of foreclosure proceedings." Strictly speaking, there is in this state no such thing as a foreclosure proceeding, but, as elsewhere, mortgages have to be enforced, and the clause evidently applies to whatever proceedings may be appropriate for the enforcement of mortgages, and this in Louisiana means judicial proceedings. "Commencement of foreclosure proceedings" must be held to be synonymous with "filing of suit." Stenzel v. Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co., 35 South. 271, 273, 110 La. 1019, 98 Am. St. Rep. 481.

Holding to bail in criminal cases

Code 1906, § 1402, provides that, when an embezzlement is committed, it may be prosecuted either in the county in which the money or property, or some part thereof, was received or converted, or in the county in which the party charged was under obligation to pay over the funds or the property embezzled; and section 1406 declares that when an offense is committed partly in one county and partly in another, or where the acts, effects, means, or agency occur in whole or in part in different counties, the jurisdiction shall be in either county in which the offense was committed, prosecuted, or consummated, where prosecution shall be first begun. Held that, where accused was charged with embezzlement in the county where the embezzlement was alleged to have occurred, and he was arrested and held to bail, but the charge was dismissed by the grand jury, such proceedings constituted the "commencement of a prosecution," under section 1415, declaring that a prosecution may be commenced by the issuance of a warrant, or by binding over or recognizing the offender to compel his appearance to answer, which conferred exclusive jurisdiction on the courts of such county, and precluded subsequent prosecution in another county under section 1402. State v. Hughes, 51 South. 464, 98 Miss. 581.

Issuance of summons

A suit is "commenced" by filing a petition and causing a summons to be issued thereon. Code, § 57; Gen. St. 1901, § 4487. Barnett v. Schad, 85 Pac. 411, 91 Pac. 539, 73 Kan. 414.

A suit is "brought" when in law it is "commenced," the two words meaning the same thing and being interchangeable; and while an action is said to be commenced or brought, so far as plaintiff is concerned, when the complaint is filed, the general rule in the United States, in the absence of statute, is that the action is deemed in law to be brought, so far as the defendant is concerned, from the time the summons or other appropriate process is issued and delivered to the officer with a bona fide intent to have it served. A suit in equity to cancel and set aside certain patents issued by the government to lands described in the bill is not "commenced" by the issuance of a subpoena to be served outside the territorial jurisdiction of a federal court, the service of which is a mere nullity for all purposes, so as to stop the running of limitations. United States v. American Lumber Co., 80 Fed. 309, 315 (citing and adopting Goldenberg v. Murphy), 2 Sup. Ct. 388, 108 U. S. 162, 27 L. Ed. 686).

Laws Nev. 1861, c. 12, § 20, providing that an action shall be deemed "commenced" when the complaint has been filed and summons issued and placed in the hands of one authorized to serve the same, is not controlling on the question of the time of commencement of an action founded on an adverse claim, authorized by Rev. St. U. S. § 2326, providing that an adverse action must be commenced within 30 days after the filing of the adverse claim, because the limitation within which such an action must be commenced is fixed by the federal statute; but the question as to what constitutes the commencement of an action is determined by Code Civ. Proc. § 22, providing that a civil action shall be commenced by the filing of the complaint and the issuance of a summons, etc. Harris v. Helena Gold Min. Co., 92 Pac. 1, 2, 29 Nev. 506.

Ky. St. 1903, § 2524, provides that an action shall be deemed "commenced" when the first summons or process is issued in good faith, and by Code Civ. Proc. § 39, an action is commenced by filing the petition in the clerk's office, and causing a summons to be issued thereon. Held, that an action was commenced when the petition was filed and the summons issued, although the petition was not verified until subsequently. City of Dayton v. Hirth, 87 S. W. 1136, 1137, 121 Ky. 42.

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 817, providing that a civil action shall be commenced by filing in the office of the clerk a complaint, causing a summons to issue thereon, and the action shall be deemed to be commenced from the time of issuing the summons, except as to those against whom publication is made, in which case the action is deemed commenced from the time of the first publication, taken from Rev. St. 1881, § 314 (Code Civ. Proc. § 55), following Code Civ. Proc. §§ 37-54 (Rev. St. 1881, §§ 292-306), relating to limitations of time within which actions may be commenced after their accrual, is enacted primarily to fix a definite time within which the plea of limitations may be made; but it is not limited to that purpose, and the provisions thereof must be applied to other statutes, where the time of the commencement of an action is material, unless such statutes show a contrary intent, or the construction by such application will frustrate the legislative purpose. Northern Indiana R. Co. v. Lincoln Nat. Bank, 92 N. E. 384, 386, 47 Ind. App. 98.

Under Code 1906, § 728, providing that certain actions shall be commenced by filing a declaration on which a summons shall immediately issue, and that an action is deemed to have been commenced at the filing of the declaration, if a summons issue thereon, etc., an action cannot relate back to the filing of a claim before a justice, but must relate to the issuance of summons, where issuance was delayed at plaintiff's direction. Stewart v. Pettit, 48 South. 5, 6, 94 Miss. 769.

Issuance of warrant in criminal case

The mere filing of a complaint before a magistrate charging the commission of a felony, upon which no warrant is issued nor arrest made, is not such a "commencement" of the prosecution as will take the case out of the operation of the statute of limitations. In re Griffith, 11 Pac. 174, 175, 35 Kan. 377.

"A criminal prosecution is 'commenced' when the warrant is duly issued and placed in the hands of a proper officer to be executed in good faith, and with due diligence, and if so issued within the time limited by law for the commencement of such criminal prosecution, and executed thereafter without unnecessary delay, even though the arrest be made after the statutory limitation has run, the prosecution will still be deemed to have been commenced in time." State v. Waterman, 88 Pac. 1074, 75 Kan. 253 (quoting and adopting definition in Re Clyne, 85 Pac. 23, 52 Kan. 441).

Issuance of writ of replevin

Where replevin for certain mules was brought in the county where the mules were at the time of filing the petition, the issuance of the writ, and the placing of the same in the hands of the officer for service, the fact that thereafter some of them were taken to another county did not defeat the action, but the officer could follow the property to the other county as authorized by Code, § 4169, providing that, when any property is removed to another county after the commencement of the action, the officer may follow the same and execute the writ in any county of the state where the property is found; the phrase "commencement of the action" referring to the issuance of the writ. Rummelhart v. Boone, 126 N. W. 338, 339, 147 Iowa, 390.

Motion

A receiver operating a railroad during the pendency of a foreclosure suit under an order expressly providing that the operating expenses should be paid out of the proceeds of the sale, if the income was insufficient for that purpose, audited and vouched claims incurred by him, and they were approved for payment by the master in chancery. The income not having produced a sufficient fund, they were not paid for several years, and until a motion was made for their payment from the distribution of the proceeds of the sale. Held, that the claimants were not barred by the statute of limitations, the allowance and approval preventing its running, and the motion of the creditors not constituting the "commencement of an action" within the meaning of the statute. St. Louis Union Trust Co. v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Tex.) 146 S. W. 348, 350.

After sale of certain real estate in partition for an alleged inadequate price, plaintiffs were employed to have the sale set aside and procure a new sale; the owners agreeing each to pay 20 per cent. of their proportion of any increase obtained on resale. A new sale was ordered and an appeal to the Supreme Court dismissed, and on a new sale the property was sold at an increase of $5,200; but in the meantime the original purchaser, who became the purchaser at the resale, had obtained by assignment the interest of two of the co-owners of the property, with notice of the contract for plaintiffs' fees, and refused to pay plaintiffs the proportionate share of the increase to which the purchaser's assignors were entitled. Held, that the filing of the motion to set aside the original sale was the "commencement of an action," within Rev. St. 1909, § 964, providing that from the commencement of an action, or the service of an answer containing a counterclaim, the attorney appearing for a party has a lien on his client's cause of action and on the proceeds of a report, decision, or judgment in the client's favor, in whosever hand they may come, and that plaintiffs were entitled to enforce such lien to the extent of their fees against the purchaser. Smoot v. Shy, 139 S. W. 239, 241, 159 Mo. App. 126.

Notice

Under the Employers' Liability Act (Laws 1902, p. 1749, c. 600, § 2), providing that no action for injuries thereunder shall be "maintained" unless notice of the time, place and cause of injury is given to the employer, the word "maintained" is synonymous or equipollent with the word "begun" or "commenced," to the effect that the requirement is a condition precedent, and hence the provisions of the statute make the giving of such notice a condition precedent to the bringing of an action under the act. Grasso v. Holbrook, Cabot & Daly Contracting Co., 92 N. Y. Supp. 101, 103, 102 App. Div. 49 (citing Burbank v. Inhabitants of Auburn, 31 Me. 590; Boutiller v. The Milwaukee, 8 Minn. 97, 105 [Gil. 72]; Smith v. Lyon, 44 Conn. 175; Byers v. Bourret, 64 Cal. 73, 28 Pac. 61; Merz v. City of Brooklyn, 11 N. Y. Supp. 778).

Service of summons or writ

A civil action is "commenced" by filing in the office of the clerk of the proper court a complaint and causing summons to be issued thereon, and where the service is constructive as authorized by Kirby's Dig. §§ 6055, 6056, the action commences when the proceedings therein provided for are complied with. Boynton v. Chicago Mill & Lumber Co., 105 S. W. 77, 80, 84 Ark. 203 (quoting and adopting definition in Kirby's Dig. § 6033).

An action is "commenced," within the meaning of Rev. St. Wyo. 1899, § 3465, providing that if, in an action commenced in due time, plaintiff fail otherwise than upon the merits, he may commence a new action within one year thereafter, in which case the bar of limitations shall not apply, where the service of summons was quashed because made by the coroner authorized to serve process only where the sheriff is a party, based on the fact that the sheriff was improperly joined as a party. Clause v. Columbia Savings & Loan Ass'n, 95 Pac. 54, 60, 16 Wyo. 450.

An action is "commenced" as to each defendant when the summons is served on him, and it is deemed to be pending from the time of such service until there is a final determination of the action. In case of service on a nonresident by publication, the action is commenced by the first publication. H. L. Spencer Co. v. Koell, 97 N. W. 974, 975, 91 Minn. 226.

An action is "commenced," within the meaning of the statute of limitations, when the summons is directed to the sheriff or other officer with the intent that it shall be actually served; but it applies only to defendants who are parties to the action at the time of such delivery, or who have been made parties before the statute of limitations had run against the claim upon which the action is brought. Such delivery of summons does not prevent the running of the statute in favor of parties or persons who, although liable upon the obligation, are not parties named as defendants in the action; and it is immaterial whether the omission was by design or through ignorance, mistake, or inadvertence. So, also, when by order amending a summons a new party defendant is brought in, if between the time of the commencement of the action as to the original parties and the time when the new defendant is brought in the period of limitation has expired, the plea of the statute of limitation interposed by the party made defendant by the amendment is a bar to his liability and is good. The date of the commencement of a suit in chancery as to a defendant who is made a party by the amendment to the original bill is the time of filing the amended bill, and he will be protected by the statute of limitation if the period prescribed by the statute had elapsed before the amended bill was filed. Nunn v. Louisville (Ky.) 105 S. W. 119, 121 (quoting and adopting definition in Shaw v. Cock, 78 N. Y. 194; Brown v. Goolsby, 34 Miss. 437).

An action is not "commenced" until the court has in some manner acquired jurisdiction of something in relation to the controversy; but ordinarily the commencement of an action does not depend on service of process on defendant or jurisdiction over him, and, when plaintiff submits himself and the subject-matter to the jurisdiction of the court, he has commenced his suit. Northern Indiana R. Co. v. Lincoln Nat. Bank, 92 N. E. 384, 388, 47 Ind. App. 98.

Under Comp. Laws 1909, § 5552, providing that an action shall be deemed commenced as to each defendant when summons is served on him, or on a codefendant united in interest with him, where a proceeding in error is brought to reverse a judgment for defendants in error, who are joint contractors or otherwise united in interest, and service is made on one of them, the action, for purposes of limitation, is to be deemed commenced as to all. First State Bank of Davidson v. Clingan, 109 Pac. 69, 70, 26 Okl. 150.

The "commencement" of an action is not postponed to the time when service of the writ is effected. An action begins with the issue of the summons or capias, and not with the date of the præcipe. Bovaird & Seyfang

Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 64 Atl. 513, 514, 215 Pa. 235.

Where a judgment sought to be reviewed was rendered November 23, 1909, and petition in error and case-made, with præcipe for summons in error were filed July 10, 1910, but no summons in error issued until May 10, 1911, held, that the proceeding was not commenced within one year of judgment appealed from, within Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, §§ 4218, 4748, providing that an action shall be deemed commenced at the date of service of summons. W. N. & D. B. Tallaferro v. James, 120 Pac. 651, 31 Okl. 168.

By the terms of section 3892, St. Okl. 1893, an action is deemed to be "commenced" as to each defendant at the date of the summons which is served on him; and where a plaintiff in error causes summons to issue on the last day within the year following the date of the final judgment appealed from, but fails to serve it on one of the necessary defendants in error, and also fails to secure service on him within 60 days after the issuance of the first summons (as provided in the same section), the appeal should be dismissed on the ground of defect of parties. Wedd v. Gates, 82 Pac. 808, 809, 15 Okl. 602.

The general rule that a suit is "commenced" when the summons is taken out is changed by section 416, Code Civ. Proc. N. Y., providing that a civil action is "commenced" by the service of a summons. A circuit court has authority, under Rev. St. U. S. § 716, to issue a writ for the seizure of infringing copies of a copyright publication alleged to be in the possession of the infringer, preliminary to an action under Rev. St. U. S. § 4965, to recover the penalty prescribed therein for each copy found in the possession of the defendant; such writ being one necessary for the exercise of the court's jurisdiction, notwithstanding that the New York statute provides that a civil action is "commenced" by the service of a summons. Stern v. Jerome H. Remick & Co., 164 Fed. 781, 782.

An action against a nonresident is not "commenced," within the statute of limitations, by the filing of the petition or of the affidavit for publication for service of process, nor until the completion of the service of process by publication, and, where the publication was not completed until after the running of the statute, a personal judgment could not be rendered, though the nonresident personally appeared after the claim was barred. Slater v. Roche, 126 N. W. 925, 928, 148 Iowa, 413, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 702.

Same—Bona fide attempt to serve

To constitute the "commencement of a suit" in equity in a federal court, which will stop the running of the statute of limitations, there must be the filing of a bill and the due issuance of a writ of subpoena, which must come to the hands of the serving officer with intent that it be served, and there must be a bona fide attempt to serve it, followed, if unsuccessful, by reasonable diligence to procure service through further or additional process. United States v. Miller, 164 Fed. 444, 445.

Service of writ of attachment

An action to subject property of a non-resident to the payment of a foreign judgment is commenced, within the statute of limitations, when the property is levied on under a writ of attachment, if not before, and the statute then ceases to run. Slater v. Roche, 126 N. W. 925, 926, 927, 148 Iowa, 413, 28 L. R. 'A. (N. S.) 702.

COMMENCEMENT OF BUILDING

Under Act Pa. June 4, 1901 (P. L. 437) § 13, which provides that a mechanic's lien, in case of an original construction, shall take effect "as of the date of the visible commencement upon the ground of the work of building the structure or other improvement," the mere doing of half a day's work by a subcontractor in tearing down a part of a brick wall of a building left standing after a fire was not the visible "commencement of a new building," which would fix the date of the contractor's lien therefor, as against a mortgage taken several days after, and before any further work was done. George M. Newhall Engineering Co. v. Egolf, 185 Fed. 481, 483, 107 C. C. A. 581.

COMMENCEMENT OF NEW ACTION

A mere change in a party to an action does not of itself change the cause of action or ground of recovery, and, unless the cause of action is a new one, the amended declaration is not subject to the statute of limitations, and the substituting of the party having the legal right to sue on the claim for which the action has been brought, instead of another improperly named as plaintiff, is not the "commencement of a new action" within the statute of limitations. Beresh v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor, 99 N. E. 349, 351, 255 Ill. 122.

COMMENCEMENT OF TRIAL

"Commencement of the trial," as used in Code Cr. Proc. § 292, permitting accused before commencement of the trial to file an affidavit of prejudice of the presiding judge, means the calling of the case for trial and the drawing of a jury. As said in Lipscomb v. State, 25 South. 158, 76 Miss. 223, "a trial is commenced, within the meaning of the statute construing its terms according to the ordinary and common acceptance and meaning, when all dilatory proceedings have been disposed of and when all ordinary affairs, the object of which is to prevent a trial, have been ineffectually exhausted and the cause is called for trial and nothing remains to be done except to proceed therein." State v. Johnson, 124 N. W. 847, 851, 24 S. D. 590.

Code, § 4502, authorizes either party to a suit before a justice of the peace to obtain a change of venue "before the trial is commenced"; section 3649 defines a trial as the judicial examination of the issues in an action, "whether of law or fact"; section 3647 provides that an issue arises in the pleadings where a conclusion of law is maintained by one party and controverted by the other; and section 3557 includes motions and demurrers within the definition of pleadings. Held, that the submission of a motion to strike matter from an answer filed by defendant on the return day, in a suit before a justice, and to make the same more specific, which was sustained, constituted the commencement of the trial within section 4502, after defendant was not entitled to a change of venue. Columbus Junction Tel. Co. v. Overholt, 102 N. W. 498, 126 Iowa, 579.

COMMENT

Under St. 1893, § 5206 (Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 5494), providing that in criminal trials accused shall be a competent witness, but his failure to testify shall not create any presumption against him, and shall not be mentioned at the trial, and, if "commented" on by counsel it shall be ground for new trial, it is immaterial what words are used; and if they are clearly calculated to attract the attention of the jury to the fact that accused has not testified in his own behalf, that he might have done so, and that by such failure some inference might be indulged against him, the statute is violated. Perkins v. Territory, 87 Pac. 297, 17 Okl. 82.

"Commerce," as used in Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, providing that Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, among the several states, and with the Indian tribes, involves trade and commercial relations and intercourse among citizens of different states or countries and comprehends navigation between the United States and foreign countries, and the transportation by land or water of persons or property between the different states and in foreign countries constitutes interstate and foreign commerce. People ex rel. Freel v. Downs, 136 N. Y. Supp. 440, 447.

"Commerce" is defined as follows: "'Commerce,' undoubtedly, is traffic, but it is something more; it is intercourse. It describes the commercial intercourse between nations, and parts of nations in all its branches, and is regulated by prescribing rules for carrying on that intercourse." "'Commerce,' in its simplest signification, means an exchange of goods; but, in the advancement of society, labor, transportation, intelligence, care, and various mediums of exchange become commodities, and enter into commerce. The subject, the vehicle, the agent, and the various operations become the objects of commercial regulation." "'Commerce' is a term of the largest import. It comprehends intercourse for the purpose of trade in all its forms, including the transportation, purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities." Snead v. Central of Georgia R. Co., 151 Fed. 608, 613 (citing Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. [22 U. S.] 1, 229, 6 L. Ed. 23; Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 280, 23 L. Ed. 347).

"Commerce" within the federal Constitution comprehends all of the intercourse between the parties necessarily or ordinarily involved in a commercial transaction with reference to merchantable commodities. Loverin & Browne Co. v. Travis, 115 N. W. 829, 832, 135 Wis. 322; F. A. Patrick & Co. v. Deschamps, 129 N. W. 1096, 1097, 145 Wis. 224; Snead v. Central of Georgia R. Co., 151 Fed. 608, 613; *Imperial Curtain Co. v. "Commerce," in its simplest signification, means an exchange of goods; but in the advancement of society, labor, transportation, intelligence, care, and various mediums of exchange, become commodities, and enter into commerce. S. 196, 203, 29 L. Ed. 158).

Webster defines "commerce" to be "the exchange or buying and selling of commodities, especially the exchange of merchandise on a large scale between different places or communities; extended trade or traffic." In Gibbons v. Ogden it was said that "commerce" is more than traffic; it is intercourse, and that it is regulated by prescribing rules for carrying on that intercourse. It has even been held that "commerce" includes navigation and transportation of both persons and property, as well as traffic generally, and all the cases agree in treating the word "commerce" as one of large and extensive meaning. In Hopkins v. United States, 171 U. S. 597, 19 Sup. Ct. 47 (43 L. Ed. 290), it is said that the term "interstate commerce" is one of very large significance; that it comprehends intercourse for the purposes of trade in any and all its forms, including transportation, purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities between the citizens of different states, and the power to regulate it embraces all the instruments by which such commerce may be conducted. Brooks v. Southern Pac. Co., 148 Fed. 986, 991 (citing Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. Ed. 347; Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. Ed. 238; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 5 Sup. Ct. 826, 114 U. S. 196, 29 L. Ed. 158; Hooper v. California, 15 Sup. Ct. 207, 155 U. S. 648, 653, 39 L. Ed. 297; United States v. E. C. Knight Co., 15 Sup. Ct. 249, 156 U. S. 1, 39 L. Ed. 325).

In determining the meaning and scope of the clause of the federal Constitution giving Congress power to regulate commerce, the Supreme Court has deemed it undesirable to give to the words employed therein any hard and fixed definition, or to mark with absolute certainty the extent of the power thereby conferred. It has been declared that "interstate commerce" is a term of very large significance, and that the power conferred by the Constitution as to interstate and foreign commerce, one without limitation. It authorizes legislation with respect to all subjects of foreign and interstate commerce, the persons engaged in it, and the instruments by which it is carried on. "Commerce" undoubtedly is traffic, but it is something more; it is intercourse. In view of the large significance given to the terms of the commerce clause and the scope of the power thereby conferred, Act Cong. June 11, 1906, 34 Stat. 232, c. 3073, commonly called the "Federal Employers' Liability Act," is a "regulation of commerce between the states, or with foreign nations," within the meaning of the commerce clause of the Constitution, and hence within the power of Congress. Kelley v. Great Northern R. Co., 152 Fed. 211, 217 (citing Hopkins v. United States, 19 Sup. Ct. 40, 171 U. S. 578, 597, 43 L. Ed. 290; Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 101, 23 L. Ed. 819; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 460, 464, 26 L. Ed. 1067; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. [22 U. S.] 1, 189, 194, 6 L. Ed. 23).

The "power to regulate commerce" conferred by the federal Constitution on Congress is the power to regulate; that is, to prescribe the rule by which "commerce" is to be governed, like all other powers vested in Congress, it is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than those prescribed by the Constitution. Webster defines "commerce" as the "exchange, or the buying and selling of commodities; intercourse." In Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. (22 U. S.) 1, 6 L. Ed. 23, etc., it is said that "commerce undoubtedly is traffic; but it is something more. It is intercourse." In Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 7 Sup. Ct. 4, 118 U. S. 557, 30 L. Ed. 244, etc., it is held that "transportation of freight and passengers is commerce." "Interstate commerce" is the trading and trafficking in commodities between and amongst citizens of different states. It is transporting by common carriers passengers and property from one state into another state. It is the selling and buying of a commodity, or commodities, by a citizen of one state to a citizen of another state, which commodity is to be transported from the state of the seller to the state of the buyer, or to another state, and there resold, or used, as may serve the purpose of the buyer. Under these definitions Act June 11, 1906, c. 3073, 34 Stat. 232, "relating to the liability of common carriers * * * engaged in commerce between the states * * * to their employes," and which makes every such carrier liable to any employe or his personal representative for all damages which may result from the negligence of any of its officers, agents, or employes, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency due to its negligence in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, roadbed, ways, or works, is not a regulation of "interstate commerce," but establishes new rules of liability, growing out of the relation of master and servant, which, if valid, are binding on all courts, both state and federal, but which have no such relation to "interstate commerce" as to bring them within the constitutional power of Congress to regulate such commerce, and the act is, for that reason, void. Howard v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 148 Fed. 997, 999, 1000 (citing Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. Ed. 238; Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. Ed. 347; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 5 Sup. Ct. 826, 114 U. S. 196, 29 L. Ed. 158; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 7 Sup. Ct. 4, 118 U. S. 557, 30 L. Ed. 244; Hopkins v. United States, 19 Sup. Ct. 40, 171 U. S. 578, 43 L. Ed. 290).

Use of buildings along a city thoroughfare chiefly for trade, the buying and selling of goods, and to some extent for manufacturing, is not "commerce" in such a sense that money can be raised by taxation to promote it, as it can be for the improvement of a harbor or the construction of a railroad. In re Opinion of Justices, 91 N. E. 405, 408, 204 Mass. 607, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 483.

"Commerce" is traffic, the buying, selling, and exchanging of commodities, and comprehends more than the mere contracts by which merchandise is bought, sold, and exchanged, and includes the actual transfer of merchandise and delivery of manual possession thereof and its transportation from one place to another, and hence Employers' Liability Act June 11, 1906, c. 3073, making interstate carriers liable for injuries to employes notwithstanding the latter's negligence, if the carrier's negligence was gross in comparison with that of the employe, is not unconstitutional as not within the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce. Plummer v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 152 Fed. 206, 208.

"Commerce" is a term of the largest import. It comprehends intercourse for the purposes of trade in any and all of its forms, including the transportation, purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities between the citizens of our country and the citizens or subjects of a foreign country, and between the citizens of different states." It is said that "commerce" with foreign countries and among the states, strictly considered, consists in intercourse and traffic, including in those terms navigation and the transportation of persons and property as well as the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities. Commerce is undoubtedly traffic, but it is something more. It is intercourse. It describes the commercial intercourse between nations and parts of nations in all its branches and is regulated by prescribed rules. Within the comprehensive definition given the term "commerce," a newspaper is a subject of commercial intercourse and sale between state and state like any other article in which a right to traffic exists. Preston v. Finley, 72 Fed. 850, 859 (quoting Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 280, 23 L. Ed. 347; Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 703, 26 L. Ed.

"Commerce" comprehends intercourse for the purpose of trade in any of its forms, including the transportation, purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities between the citizens of our country and the citizens or subjects of other countries, and between the citizens of different states, and power to regulate it embraces all the instruments by which such commerce may be conducted." Acts Okl. 1907, p. 586, c. 87, which prohibits, except for private use, the construction of pipe lines for the transportation of natural gas within the state, except by corporations organized thereunder by charters providing that such gas shall not be transported out of the state, nor sold or delivered to any one else to be taken out of the state, is void as an attempt to interfere with interstate commerce, in violation of the commerce clause of the federal Constitution. Kansas Natural Gas Co. v. Haskell, 172 Fed. 545, 560 (quoting and adopting the definition in Hopkins v. United States, 19 Sup. Ct. 40, 171 U. S. 578, 43 L. Ed. 290; Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. Ed. 347).

"Commerce" undoubtedly is traffic, but it is something more; it is intercourse. It describes the commercial intercourse between nations and parts of nations in all its branches and is regulated by prescribed rules for carrying on that intercourse. That which belongs to 'commerce' is within the jurisdiction of the United States, but that which does not belong to commerce is within the jurisdiction of the police power of the state." A state law prohibiting the docking of horses and the importation and use of them, in so far as it prohibits the importing from other states, or the using of them while they are still owned by the person who brought them into the state, violates the commerce clause of the federal Constitution. Stubbs v. People, 90 Pac. 1114, 1115, 1120, 40 Colo. 414, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1071, 122 Am. St. Rep. 1068, 13 Ann. Cas. 1025 (quoting and adopting definition in United States v. E. C. Knight Co., 156 U. S. 1, 15 Sup. Ct. 249, 39 L. Ed. 325).

The word "commerce," as used in Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, means something more than traffic; it is intercourse. It describes the commercial intercourse between nations and parts of nations in all its branches, and is regulated by prescribed rules for carrying on that intercourse. Where legislation by Congress does not regulate commercial intercourse among the states, but only regulates certain phases of the intercourse between a person or corporation engaged in interstate commerce, and its employes, it cannot be maintained as constitutional. United States v. Scott, 148 Fed. 431, 434 (citing Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. [22 U. S.] 189, 6 L. Ed. 23).

tion was interstate commerce, whether the negotiations were conducted by mail, by traveling salesmen, by telegraph, or by telephone. Every negotiation, initiatory and intervening act, contract, trade, and dealing between citizens of any state or territory, or the District of Columbia, with those of another political division of the United States, which contemplates and causes importation from one such division to another, whether it be of goods, persons, or information, is a transaction of interstate commerce. United States v. Tucker, 188 Fed. 741, 743.

Exchange or sale of commodities

"Commerce" is defined as "the exchange of merchandise on a large scale between different places or communities." In re Opinion of Justices, 91 N. E. 405, 408, 204 Mass. 607, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 483.

"Commerce" is the interchange or mutual change of goods, productions, or property, of any kind between nations or individuals. City of Council Bluffs v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 45 Iowa, 338, 349, 24 Am. Rep. 773.

"Commerce among the several states" includes not only the transportation of commodities from one state to another, but as well the sale of such commodities in one state to be transported into another. Corbin v. Houlehan, 61 Atl. 131, 133, 100 Me. 246, 70 L. R. A. 568.

According to the derivation, history, and use of the word "commerce," it is the exchange of property and includes the usual agencies of communication and transportation employed to effect the exchange. Thus it extends to whatever is used to move the property involved and the persons engaged in making the contract. People ex rel. Hatch v. Beardon, 77 N. E. 970, 977, 184 N. Y. 431, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 314, 112 Am. St. Rep. 628, 6 Ann. Cas. 515.

The common idea of commerce is reciprocal agreements by which one person delivers to another a material thing for money, which is a sale, or for another thing, which is an exchange. International Text-Book Co. v. Lynch, 69 Atl. 541, 543, 81 Vt. 101.

Ferryboat

A "ferryboat" is as much an instrument of commerce as a bridge. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Hudson County, 65 Atl. 860, 863, 74 N. J. Law, 367.

Franks

Gratuitous carriage by the issuing of franks by an express company to officers, agents, attorneys, or employes, cannot be said to be in no way connected with "commerce." United States v. Wells Fargo Exp. Co., 161 Fed. 606, 613.

Freight and passenger traffic

"Transportation of persons and property is 'commerce.'" United States v. Southern Ry. Co., 164 Fed. 347, 348, 352.

Transportation of persons as well as of property is "commerce," and Congress may regulate their interstate transportation. Bennett v. United States, 194 Fed. 630, 631, 114 C. C. A. 402.

"Transportation for others, as an independent business, is commerce, irrespective of the purpose to sell or retain the goods which the owner may entertain with regard to them after they shall have been delivered." Holmes, J. Hanley v. Kansas City Southern R. Co., 23 Sup. Ct. 214, 187 U. S. 619, 47 L. Ed. 333.

The transportation of oysters out of one state into another is "commerce" within the meaning of Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, granting to Congress the right to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states. D. E. Foote & Co. v. Clagett, 81 Atl. 511, 515, 116 Md. 228.

The construction by the city of New York of a subway devoted to the carriage of passengers is within a grant to the city by Greater New York Charter (Laws 1901, c. 466) §§ 83-88, for the general purpose of navigation, intercourse, and commerce; the word "commerce" embracing the carriage of passengers for hire. In re McClellan, 131 N. Y. Supp. 633, 638, 146 App. Div. 504.

The power to regulate commerce between the states and with foreign countries conferred on Congress by the federal Constitution includes the power to regulate the transportation of persons. United States v. Hoke, 187 Fed. 992, 994.

Shipments of live stock from growers, dealers, and traders in various states and territories to defendants, commission merchants at Kansas City, were solicited by the latter chiefly through personal solicitation of traveling agents and through advertisements. The course of business involved frequent loans to shippers in other states, secured by chattel mortgages on herds, and frequent drafts drawn by shippers on the defendants, and discounted at their local banks in other states on the strength of bills of shipment attached thereto. Shipments were made to Kansas City, and the loans or drafts paid from proceeds of sale, and the balance remitted to the shippers. Sales at Kansas City were made for shipment to markets in other states, as well as for slaughter at packing houses near by. The traffic was of immense proportions, and defendants were active promoters, and frequently interested parties, and gathered in for sale and slaughter millions of cattle, sheep, and hogs; and their rules and regulations covered the entire business, and extended over the whole field of operation. Held, that defendants were engaged in "commerce between the states," and were subject to the provisions of the law of July 2, 1890, against trusts and monopolies. United States v. Hopkins, 82 Fed. 529, 537.

Insurance

The business of life insurance conducted in the state by a foreign corporation under a certificate of authority from the state, collecting premiums and paying losses on policies and making loans to policy holders on the security of their policies, is not "commerce" within Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8. New York Life Ins. Co. v. Deer Lodge County, 115 Pac. 911, 912, 43 Mont. 243.

The statutes requiring foreign insurance companies only to take out licenses for their agents as a condition to doing business in the state do not violate the clause of the United States Constitution, giving Congress power to regulate interstate commerce; insurance not being commerce. Commonwealth v. Gregory, 89 S. W. 168, 170, 121 Ky. 256.

The business of insurance is not commerce in any proper sense, within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States. The commerce clause of the federal Constitution does not limit the power of the state to impose conditions on which a foreign insurance company may transact business in the state. Fisher v. Traders' Mut. Life Ins. Co., 48 S. E. 667, 669, 136 N. C. 217 (citing Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 15 Sup. Ct. 207, 39 L. Ed. 297).

Lottery tickets

"Commerce" among the states embraces navigation, intercourse, communication, traffic, the transit of persons and the transmission of messages by telegraph. Lottery tickets are subjects of traffic, and therefore are subjects of commerce, and the regulation of the carriage of such tickets from state to state is a regulation of commerce among the several states. Champion v. Ames, 23 Sup. Ct. 321-325, 188 U. S. 321, 47 L. Ed. 492.

Navigation

The word "commerce," as used in the clause of the federal Constitution giving Congress power to regulate "commerce," includes navigation. United States v. Union Bridge Co., 143 Fed. 377, 391.

"Commerce" includes navigation, and the power to regulate commerce comprehends the control for that purpose, and to the extent necessary, of all the navigable waters of the United States which are accessible from a state other than that in which they lie. United States v. Greene, 146 Fed. 803, 822.

Const. art. 15, § 1, after authorizing the Legislature to establish harbor lines in front of cities, declares that the state shall not grant rights in the waters beyond such lines, nor relinquish control of any area lying between the harbor line and the line of ordinary high tide or such other line not less than 50 nor more than 600 feet from the harbor line as may be determined by the commissioners, but such area shall be reserved for "landings, wharves, streets and other conveniences of navigation and commerce." Section 2 directs that the Legislature shall provide for leasing the right to build wharves, docks, and other structures on the harbor areas, and Laws 1907, p. 674, c. 244, empowers railroads to appropriate lands by condemnation, but exempts harbor areas. Held, that the word "commerce" as used in section 1 included commerce by both land and sea, and that the words "other structures" in section 2 was equivalent in meaning to the words "other conveniences" in the first section; and hence neither the Constitution nor the statute precluded a railroad company from acquiring the right to cross the harbor area by obtaining a lease of the right of way from the state, provided that in doing so it did not interfere with navigation of the stream. State ex rel. Hulme v. Grays Harbor & P. S. Ry. Co., 103 Pac. 809, 811, 812, 54 Wash. 530.

Production of plays

The owning, controlling, and leasing of theaters, and the producing of plays and entertainments, and the booking of contracts for the production of plays, is not "trade or commerce" within Pen. Code, § 168, subds. 5, 6, prohibiting a conspiracy to commit any act injurious to "trade or commerce." People v. Klaw, 106 N. Y. Supp. 341, 350, 55 Misc. Rep. 72 (citing Webster's Dict. Stand. Dict.; Bouvier's Law Dict. vol. 2, 1127; Jacob's Law Dict.; United States v. Cassidy, 67 Fed. 698; United States v. Coal Dealers' Ass'n, 85 Fed. 252; Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. [9 Wheat.] 1, 6 L. Ed. 23; Henderson v. New York, 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. Ed. 543; Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. Ed. 347; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465, 24 L. Ed. 527).

"Commerce," in the constitutional sense, includes the instrumentalities by which commerce is carried on, and extends to the coal cars owned by a railway company engaged in interstate commerce, in which it receives from the tipples of the coal mines along its line coal purchased by it and used solely for its own fuel purposes. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 30 Sup. Ct. 155, 159, 215 U. S. 452, 54 L. Ed. 280; Same v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 30 Sup. Ct. 163, 215 U. S. 479, 54 L. Ed. 291.

Railroad companies are "instruments of commerce, and their business is commerce itself," and such companies operate "public highways established primarily for the convenience of the people, and therefore are subject to governmental control and regulation." Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 463, 193 U. S. 197, 48 L. Ed. 679 (quoting United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n, 17 Sup. Ct. 540, 166 U. S. 290, 41 L. Ed. 1007, and citing Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas R. Co., 10 Sup. Ct. 905, 135 U. S. 641, 34 L. Ed. 295; Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Pullman Southern Car Co., 11 Sup. Ct. 490, 139 U. S. 79, 35 L. Ed. 97; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 14 Sup. Ct. 1125, 154 U. S. 447, 38 L. Ed. 1047, 4 Interst. Com. R. 545; Smyth v. Ames, 18 Sup. Ct. 418, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. Ed. 819; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio, 19 Sup. Ct. 465, 173 U. S. 285, 43 L. Ed. 702).

Sale of liquors

By the decisions of the federal Supreme Court, it is settled that intoxicating liquors are articles of "commerce," and, as such, while being transported from state to state, are within the protection of that clause in the Constitution of the United States which gives to Congress the power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states, and with the Indian tribes," and thus are subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress. State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 67 Atl. 312, 316, 102 Me. 385, 120 Am. St. Rep. 504.

Telegrams

Communication by telegram constitutes "commerce" within the regulation of federal authority in so far as it involves transmission of messages from one state to another, but it is subject also to state regulation so far as it concerns transmission of messages wholly intrastate. Postal Telegraph Co. v. State, 73 Atl. 680, 683, 110 Md. 608 (citing Postal Telegraph Company v. Umstadter, 50 S. E. 259, 103 Va. 742, 2 Ann. Cas. 513).

Intercourse between private parties by means of telegraphic communications is "commerce," although carried over routes which are post roads. State ex rel. Coleman v. Western Union Tel. Co., 90 Pac. 299, 316, 75 Kan. 609.

Use of mails

It may well be doubted whether the mere occupation of giving instruction by correspondence involving, among other things, the distribution of text-books and various additional outfits to points in the same and other states, is "commerce," and whether, the main purpose being classified as noncommercial, the incidents thereof must not also be classified in the same way. International Text-Book Co. v. Auburn, 155 Fed. 986, 987.

White slavery

Act June 25, 1910, c. 395, 36 Stat. 825, known as the "White Slave Traffic Act," making it a criminal offense to knowingly transport or to procure the transportation of women from one state into another for immoral purposes, is not unconstitutional as an attempted infringement of the police powers of the states, and is within the powers conferred on Congress by the commerce clause of the Constitution. United States v. Westman, 182 Fed. 1017, 1018.

COMMERCE AMONG STATES

See Commerce.

COMMERCIAL

The owners of land conveyed it to the state, and covenanted that certain remaining land belonging to them should not be sold for commercial, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes, but should be used and sold exclusively for permanent forestry, hotel, camp, and cottage purposes, and that all deeds given by either of such grantors should contain a clause binding the purchaser, his heirs and assigns, to a perpetual use of the lands for permanent forestry, hotel, camp, and cottage purposes. Held, that the term "commercial" should not be construed as limited only to "agricultural" but also as applicable to "manufacturing or other purposes," and hence a contract to cut timber from the reserved land for pulp manufacture was unauthorized; nor was it allowable by way of preparing the land for sale for camp and cottage purposes. People v. Thistlethwaite, 119 N. Y. Supp. 690, 692, 134 App. Div. 876.

COMMERCIAL AGENCY

A "commercial agency" is a person, firm, or corporation engaged in the business of collecting information as to the financial standing, ability, and credit of persons engaged in business, and reporting the same to subscribers or customers applying and paying therefor. Zugalla v. International Mercantile Agency, 142 Fed. 927, 930, 74 C. C. A. 97.

COMMERCIAL BUSINESS

Civ. Code, § 393 (25), providing that a corporation may be formed for the transaction of any "commercial business," authorizes a corporation for warehousing goods for shipment. Orient Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn. v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 78 Pac. 1036, 1038, 31 Mont. 502.

COMMERCIAL CLAUSE

The clause of the federal Constitution prohibiting any state from laying any imposts or duties on imports or exports is what is known as the "commercial clause." State v. Bengsch, 70 S. W. 710, 720, 170 Mo. 81.

COMMERCIAL CORPORATIONS

A corporation engaged in leasing its own property and collecting rents therefor, with power to sue and be sued, to contract debts, and to dispose of its property, is a "moneyed, business, or commercial corporation," against which involuntary proceedings in bankruptcy may be had under Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, 30 Stat. 547, as amended by Act June 25, 1910, c. 412, § 4, 36 Stat. 839. In re R. L. Radke Co., 193 Fed. 735, 737.

COMMERCIAL LAW

See, also, Law Merchant.

"Mercantile law is a system of jurisprudence recognized by all commercial nations, and upon no subject is it of more importance that there should be, as far as practicable, uniformity of decision throughout the world." Ross v. Jones, 22 Wall. (89 U. S.) 576, 594; Goodman v. Simonds, 20 How. (61 U. S.) 343, 364, 15 L. Ed. 934; Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. v. National Bank of Republic, 102 U. S. 14, 32, 26 L. Ed. 61.

COMMERCIAL PAPER

A note specifying no place of payment is not commercial paper as defined by Code 1896, §§ 869, 870, and hence whether transferred before or after maturity is subject to defenses. Holloway v. Darden, 53 South. 187, 188, 168 Ala. 256.

COMMERCIAL PARTNERSHIP

"Commercial or trading partnerships" are such as engage in trading in merchandise or in financial operations. Spotswood v. Morris, 85 Pac. 1094, 1103, 12 Idaho, 380, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 665.

"Commercial partnerships" are such as are formed for the buying and selling of personal property and the carrying of such property for hire by ships or other vessels. Shreveport Ice & Brewing Co. v. Mandel Bros., 54 South. 831, 832, 128 La. 314.

COMMERCIAL POWER

The "commercial power" conferred by the Constitution upon Congress is one without limitation. It authorizes legislation with respect to all the subjects of foreign and interstate commerce, the persons engaged in it, and the instruments by which it is carried on. Kelley v. Great Northern R. Co., 152 Fed. 211, 222 (quoting and adopting statement in Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 101, 23 L. Ed. 819).

COMMERCIAL PROPERTY

Pension checks, or warrants, issued by a pension agent of the United States on an Assistant Treasurer, are commercial paper, and the right of the United States to recover from one to whom such a check was paid on a forged indorsement of the name of the payee is governed by the ordinary rules applicable to such paper. National Exch. Bank of Providence v. United States, 151 Fed. 402, 407, 80 C. C. A. 632.

COMMERCIAL RAILROAD COMPANY

By "commercial railroads" is meant those larger, more expensive, and more permanent lines or systems extending from town to town and city to city, accommodating a heavier and more miscellaneous traffic and requiring larger forces of employes, who are exposed to greater risks than is the case with street car lines and systems. McLeod v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 101 N. W. 77, 80, 125 Iowa, 270.

Commercial railroads embrace all railroads for general freight and passenger traffic between one town and another, or between one place and another. They are usually not constructed upon the public streets or highways, except for short distances. Diebold v. Kentucky Traction Co., 77 S. W. 674, 676, 117 Ky. 146, 63 L. R. A. 637, 111 Am. St. Rep. 230, 4 Ann. Cas. 445 (citing 1 Lewis, Em. Dom. § 110a).

A "commercial railroad" is a railroad for general freight and passenger traffic between one town and another, and differs from a "street railway," in that the latter operates on public streets for the purpose of carrying passengers with ordinary luggage from one point to another on the street. An electric railway which was chartered under the general railway act and authorized to operate between two cities, and transport passengers, mail, express, and other matter, is a "commercial railroad," and not a "street railroad." City of Aurora v. Elgin, A. & S. Traction Co., 81 N. E. 544, 547, 227 Ill. 485 (citing 1 Lewis, Em. Dom. § 110a).

A municipal corporation has no power to levy an occupation tax on what is known as a "commercial railroad company" as distinguished from a "street railroad company." Town of Arlington v. Cent. of Georgia Ry. Co., 56 S. E. 1015, 1016, 127 Ga. 761.

"The fact that a railroad running through a coal section does most of its business in the hauling of coal does not make it any the less a 'commercial road' such as is contemplated by the General Statutes." Collier v. Union Ry. Co., 83 S. W. 155, 161, 118 Tenn. 96.

A "commercial railroad" is not a street railroad, and its use of a street constitutes a new and additional servitude upon the fee of the property owner to the center of the street. Greene v. Aurora Rys. Co., 157 Fed. 85, 86, 84 C. C. A. 589 (citing Wilder v. Aurora, De Kalb & R. Electric Traction Co., 75 N. E. 194, 216 Ill. 493, 526).

It is the nature of the business and manner of its authorized operation, and not the commercial character of the railroad, nor power that propels its cars, that determines whether it is in accord with legitimate highway purposes, or a new use incompatible therewith. The operation by a corporation, organized under the statute providing for the incorporation of street railway companies, of interurban cars on streets of a city with its permission for the carriage of passengers, express, and light freight, is not an additional servitude on the streets so as to entitle abutting owners to compensation therefor, though the company is a "commercial railroad." Kinsey v. Union Traction Co., 81 N. E. 922, 943, 169 Ind. 563.

The word "railway" or "railroad," when not qualified by the word "street" or other expression of similar import, has special reference to what are sometimes denominated "commercial railroads." McLeod v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 101 N. W. 77, 80, 125 Iowa, 270.

"Railroads now exist in great variety as regards motors and motive power, the size and style of cars and coaches, and methods of operation and construction. It is probable that these variations will be multiplied in the coming years. It is doubtful whether any permanent and satisfactory classification can now be made. There has been a general concurrence, however, in embracing all railroads in two divisions or classes: (1) Commercial railroads, and (2) street railroads. 'Commercial railroads' embrace all railroads for general freight and passenger traffic between one town and another or between one place and another. So far they have not been successfully operated, to any extent at least, except by steam. They are usually not constructed upon the public streets or highways, except for short distances. 'Street railroads' embrace all such as are constructed and operated in the public streets for the purpose of conveying passengers, with their ordinary hand luggage, from one point to another on the street." Where an electric street railway company was organized under the railroad law, as distinguished from the street railroad act, and by the terms of its charter was authorized to operate through several counties and transport passengers, their ordinary baggage, United States mail, express, and milk, it was a "commercial railroad," and was not entitled to lay its tracks in a street, the fee of which was in the abutting owners, without condemning a right to do so. Wilder v. Aurora, De Kalb & R. Electric Traction Co., 75 N. E. 194, 196, 216 Ill. 493 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Lewis, Em. Dom. § 110a).

COMMERCIAL SYSTEM

In the "commercial system" of testing sugar with the polariscope, which is an instrument so adjusted that when a polarized light passes through a tube filled with a certain solution of sugar the scale indicates the percentage of pure sugar, the actual readings of the scale and the eyepiece of the polariscope are taken as showing the actual value of the sugar for sale or duty purposes; that is, the test was one made by reading by the eye. In the case of disagreement in the tests between the parties in interest, a settlement was reached by a third or compromise test. Under the later "treasury method," the test is not absolutely determined by the eye, but the regulations provide that the reading must be corrected by certain arbitrary additions as prescribed in a table prepared by the officers of the government, and that duty must be paid upon such increased value as shown by such corrections or additions. Bartram Bros. v. United States, 123 Fed. 327, 328.

COMMERCIAL TRAVELER

License taxation of "commercial travelers" selling by sample or by taking orders for future delivery is not germane to license taxation of "peddlers or hawkers" selling and delivering goods carried by them on foot or on horseback, or in vehicles, or on water craft. Beary v. Narrau, 37 South. 961, 962, 113 La. 1034.

The term "drummer," meaning a "traveling salesman," has come to have a fixed and proper place in our language as well as in our law. L. A. Becker Co. v. Alvey (Ky.) 86 S. W. 974, 976.

COMMERCIALLY

The word "commercially," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 134, prescribing the duty on sheets or plates of iron and commercially known as tin plates, cannot be construed as meaningless, and tin plates are "commercially" known as rectangular sheets of various sizes but do not include small disks. Shallus v. United States, 162 Fed. 653, 655, 89 C. C. A. 445.

COMMISSION

The idea of the word "commission" involves the meaning that a sum of money is paid to an agent for effecting a sale to a third person; and, while it is not customary for a seller to pay a commission to a purchaser, it is competent for a seller to offer a purchaser a rebate and call it a commission; but, where that is intended, the expression of the intention of the parties must be clear. Oliver Refining Co. v. Aspegren, 137 N. Y. Supp. 1057, 1059, 152 App. Div. 877.

The word "commission," as used in a contract with reference to the compensation, does not necessarily show that the contract was not one of sale, but of agency only. Undoubtedly that word is usually employed to mean "the compensation allowed agents, factors, executors, trustees, receivers, and other persons who manage the affairs of others in recompense for their services." Bouv. Law Dict. 340. Standing alone, the expression may be strong to show an agency. But in placing a construction upon this correspondence we must have regard to the entire agreement to determine the meaning of any part of it. Kelley, Maus & Co. v. Sibley, 137 Fed. 586, 590, 69 C. C. A. 674.

The words "commissions" and "profits," when used in relation to business of selling stock, are substantially synonymous. Van Tine v. Hilands, 131 Fed. 124, 127.

Under Const. art. 7, § 2 (Bunn's Ed. § 170), giving the Supreme Court jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus, etc., only to inferior courts, "commissions" or boards created by law, "the words 'commissions' and 'boards' as used in connection with the term 'inferior courts,' mean such commissions or boards as judicial power may be vested in, pursuant to Const. art. 7, § 1 (Bunn's Ed. § 169); and the hearing and determination of matters by commissions from which appeals may be taken or to which writs of certiorari and other like writs lie appear to be the test." The word does not include the state insurance commissioner. Homesteaders v. McCombs, 103 Pac. 691, 694, 24 Okl. 201, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1000, 20 Ann. Cas. 181.

Act of commission

The act of a railroad company in closing or obstructing a drain so as to damage lands and crops was an act of "commission," and not of "omission." Brown v. Louisiana & N. W. R. Co., 42 South. 656, 118 La. 87.

COMMISSION (Of Officer)

See Special Commission.

Members of, as judges, see Judge.

The word "commission," in the phrase "that one held a commission as deputy sheriff," does not constitute such person a deputy sheriff, since, under Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 3756, more is required to constitute one a deputy sheriff than the mere issuance and delivery of a commission. Robinson v. Territory, 85 Pac. 451, 453, 16 Okl. 241.

The term "commission," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1127, providing that whenever an election is annulled or set aside by the judgment of a superior court, and no appeal has been taken within ten days thereafter, the commission, if any is issued, is void and the office vacant, included a "certificate of election" issued to petitioner as superintendent of schools, so that, on no appeal being taken within ten days after judgment, declaring petitioner's certificate of election invalid in a contest regularly instituted, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1111-1127, the judgment rendered petitioner's certificate finally ineffectual as evidence of title to the office. Wilson v. Fisher, 82 Pac. 421, 422, 148 Cal. 13 (citing People ex rel. Finigan v. Perkins, 28 Pac. 245, 85 Cal. 509, 512; People ex rel. Barker v. Shaver, 59 Pac. 784, 127 Cal. 347, 350; Bledsoe v. Colgan, 70 Pac. 924, 138 Cal. 34, 36, 39).

COMMISSION MERCHANT

See, also, Factor.

A person having possession and absolute control of merchandise shipped to him to sell and collect the price is a commission merchant. T. M. Sinclair & Co. v. National Surety Co., 107 N. W. 184, 186, 132 Iowa, 549.

A "selling agent," "factor," or "commission merchant" is one who sells goods which another person has delivered to him for that purpose and receives compensation for his services by a commission or otherwise. Ommen v. Talcott, 188 Fed. 401, 403, 112 C. C. A. 239.

The words "commission merchant" have a fairly well defined meaning. There is involved always in the meaning of "commission merchant" the authority to sell the merchandise or products consigned for his principal and the right to receive compensation therefor, usually called "commission." These consignments were usually made by the principal to his commission merchant at a remote point, where the owner would have no control, supervision, and but little information of the details of sales of his product and especially in the matter of weighing. The words as used in Rev. St. 1895, art. 4314, providing that no "commission merchant" or other person shall employ any person other than a public weigher to weigh produce sold and offered for sale, mean a person having possession of merchandise with authority to sell, not including a mere warehouseman. Hedgepeth v. Hamilton Warehouse Co., 140 S. W. 1084, 1085, 104 Tex. 496.

As warehouseman

Rev. St. 1895, art. 4314, provides that no factor, commission merchant, or other person shall employ any person other than a public weigher to weigh produce sold and offered for sale. Held, that the words "commission merchant" and "factor" mean a person having possession of merchandise with authority to sell, not including a mere "warehouseman," and that the statute had no application to a "warehouseman" weighing produce merely for sale or to loan money thereon. Hedgepeth v. Hamilton Warehouse Co., 140 S. W. 1084, 1085, 104 Tex. 496.

COMMISSIONER

See Insurance Commissioner; Live Stock Sanitary Commissioner; Special Commissioner.

As used in a constitutional provision that when private property is taken for public use the compensation therefor shall be ascertained by commissioners appointed, etc., "commissioners" means commissioners clothed with such powers as prior to the adoption of the Constitution they had been clothed with; that is, the right to decide all questions by a majority vote. Serrell v. Oakland Probate Judge, 65 N. W. 107, 108, 107 Mich. 234.

As referee

In an action on a deficiency judgment on mortgage foreclosure, the word "referee," as used in an allegation that the sale was made by a referee, is synonymous with "commissioner," within Code Civ. Proc. § 726, requiring a foreclosure sale to be made by a commissioner when not made by the sheriff. Hibernia Savings & Loan Society v. Boyd, 100 Pac. 239, 241, 155 Cal. 193.

COMMISSIONERS' COURT

"The name 'Commissioners' Court' is as distinctly the name of that court as is the 'District Court' the name of the court presided over by the district judge. * * * While the district and county courts were established for the trial of litigated cases, the commissioners' court is a political body; the powers and duties of its members being largely legislative and ministerial." *Robinson v. COMMITMENT

"A 'commitment' means a judicial order." State ex rel. Million v. Allen, 86 S. W. 144, 187 Mo. 560.

"A 'commitment' is a warrant, order, or process by which a court or magistrate directs a ministerial officer to take a person to prison or to detain him there." People ex rel. Bidwell v. Pitts, 97 N. Y. Supp. 509, 510, 111 App. Div. 319 (quoting People ex rel. Allen v. Hagen, 170 N. Y. 48, 49, 82 N. E. 1086).

The detention of one held under legal process in any suitable place until he may be tried or properly committed to some reformatory or penal institution is not deemed a "commitment" to jail; and the placing of a delinquent girl in the custody of the sheriff, after she had escaped from the custody of the constable having her in charge to take to the state industrial school, when she was placed in the women's ward at the jail with two other women above 18 years of age, was not a "commitment," contrary to P. S. 6116, providing that a child under the age of 16 years, committed to a jail, shall be kept separate from older persons committed to await trial, or on conviction for crime; the word "committed" being used in the statute in its technical sense, in view of section 6115, which uses the word in an obviously technical sense. In Penal Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 40) § 1692, relating to rescue, the terms "commitment," "conviction," and "sentence" relate to a case where an officer or another holds a prisoner under lawful custody after he has been judicially held under a commitment, conviction, or sentence for misdemeanor. *People v. COMMITTED

In Act March 3, 1897, c. 895, 29 Stat. 695, giving jurisdiction of suits for the infringement of letters patent to the Circuit Court of the district where defendant shall have committed acts of infringement and have a regular and established place of business, "committed" relates to a time prior to the bringing of a suit, while the words "have a regular and established place of business" refer to the time when the suit is brought. Underwood Typewriter Co. v. Fox Typewriter Co., 158 Fed. 476, 483.

Under an indictment alleging the grand jury's return of indictment against the defendant of having committed the crime of grand larceny in the first degree, "committed as follows," the words "committed as follows," following the allegation that defendants were indicted by the grand jury, are equivalent to "which said crime was by them committed as follows." So that the indictment is sufficient as charging a crime, though the introductory charge be rejected as surplusage, or as insufficient but as charging the crime by inference and recital only. State v. King, 92 N. W. 965, 967, 88 Minn. 175.

COMMITTEE

See Party Committee; Township Committee.

Where testatrix bequeathed a legacy to her incompetent brother's trustee, in trust for the brother's benefit, a description of the trustee as the beneficiary's "committee" was equivalent to a designation as trustee. Boring v. Faris, 104 S. W. 1022, 1024, 127 Ky. 67.

A deed in consideration of an amount specified, paid by persons named, "a committee of the Society called Particular Baptist, or their successors in that office for the time being," granting to the persons named land described, "to have and to hold" to the persons named, and "to their successors in office," and covenanting with the persons named and their successors in office that grantor was lawfully seised in fee and had good right to convey, and would forever warrant and defend, conveys the land to grantees, not in their individual right, but as trustees; the word "commit" meaning "committee," and being equivalent to trustees, and the words "successors in office" providing for a continuance of the trust. Hamlin v. Particular Baptist Meeting House, 69 Atl. 315, 318, 103 Me. 343.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The practice of conducting business through a "committee of the whole" has for many years prevailed in legislative and deliberative bodies. Such a committee is no more than the assembly or body itself transacting a part of its business through what is termed the committee of the whole. The committee, therefore, as its name implies, amounts to this: That the particular body or assembly is carrying on a part of its legislative or deliberative functions as a committee composed of all its members. The committee, as is well known, cannot be in session unless the legal or parliamentary body of which it is composed is in session. It cannot adjourn to meet again at some other time or place. Whenever it rises, it must at once report its conclusions to the main body, and that body either rejects, approves, or modifies any matter reported to it. It is quite true that, since a majority of the committee is also generally a majority of the whole body, any matter agreed to in committee of the whole will likely be agreed to when it comes before the main body. The committee of the whole has, in modern times, in legislative and deliberative bodies become almost a matter of necessity. When the main body resolves itself into such committee, it does so for the purpose of escaping from the restraint that is placed upon its members under the rules governing the procedure of the main body. Acord v. Booth, 98 Pac. 734, 735, 33 Utah, 279.

"Committee of the whole" is defined as a meeting of a legislative body consisting of all the members sitting in a deliberative, rather than a legislative character, for formal consultation and preliminary consideration of matters awaiting legislative action. The consideration of an ordinance by the city council in committee of the whole meets the requirements of a statute providing that no bill shall be considered unless referred to a joint or separate committee. Hallock v. City of Lebanon, 64 Atl. 362, 363, 215 Pa. 1 (quoting and adopting Cent. Dict.).

COMMODATUM

When goods or chattels that are useful are lent to a friend gratis to be used by him, it is called a "commodatum," because the thing is to be returned in specie. Where a plaintiff allowed defendant to wear a diamond ring and diamond stud and sleeve buttons, and he did wear them presumably to decorate his person, this was a bailment for defendant's sole benefit such as is denominated in law "commodatum." Woods v. Latta, 88 Pac. 402, 405, 35 Mont. 9 (quoting and adopting definition in Jones, Bailm. 118; Van Zile, Bailments & Carriers, § 101).

COMMODITY

See Convenience or Commodity; Sale of Commodities.

Where one buys property outside of the state and stores it in the state awaiting a sale elsewhere, it is not in transit during its stay, but is a "commodity kept for sale" and is not exempt from taxation as subject to interstate commerce under St. 1898, § 1040. State ex rel. Globe Elevator Co. v. Patterson, 114 N. W. 441, 442, 134 Wis. 214.

Business privileges

Under Acts 1889, p. 141, c. 17, avoiding the enforcement of every contract whereby a combination, etc., is formed to prevent competition in the sale and purchase of commodities, the dealing in liquors contemplated by a lease of a saloon by a coal company with covenants not to permit the sale of liquor by any one else on its land and to redeem all its employes' checks which the lessee might take in payment for liquors in consideration of the payment as rent of two-thirds of the profits of the business is a dealing in "commodities." Texas & P. Coal Co. v. Lawson, 34 S. W. 919, 920, 89 Tex. 394.

Corporate franchise

The right to exist and carry on business as a corporate entity is a "commodity," subject to the power of the Legislature to lay an excise, under Const. pt. 2, art. 4, c. 1, § 1. Farr Alpaca Co. v. Commonwealth, 98 N. E. 1078, 1079, 212 Mass. 156.

The word "commodities," in the constitutional provision authorizing the Legislature to impose an excise upon any commodities within the commonwealth, includes the privilege of transacting business as a corporation, whether domestic or foreign. S. S. White Dental Mfg. Co. v. Commonwealth, 98 N. E. 1056, 1058, 212 Mass. 35, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 805.

Ice

Ice harvested and stored in icehouses by a corporation engaged in the sale thereof is a "commodity," within St. 1898, § 1040, as amended by Laws 1909, c. 70, providing for the assessment of personal property, including goods, merchandise, wares, commodities kept for sale, etc. State ex rel. Lake Nebagamon Ice Co. v. McPhee, 135 N. W. 470, 471, 149 Wis. 76 (citing 2 Words & Phrases, p. 1309).

Labor

Code, § 5060, prohibiting any combination to regulate the price "of any article of merchandise or commodity or to fix * * * the amount or quality of any article, commodity or merchandise to be manufactured, mined, produced or sold," does not, when construed as required by section 48 by giving to the words and phrases the meaning of approved usage of the language, cover combinations to fix the price of skilled or unskilled labor, and does not prevent physicians from combining to fix charges for professional services; the word "merchandise" referring primarily to those things which merchants sell, and the word "commodity" qualified by the words "manufactured, mined, produced, or sold," not including labor either skilled or unskilled, though the word "commodity" primarily means a convenience, profit, benefit, or advantage, and, in reference to commerce, comprehends everything movable—that is, sold or bought—except animals. Rohlf v. Kasemeier, 118 N. W. 276, 277, 140 Iowa, 182, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1284, 132 Am. St. Rep. 261, 17 Ann. Cas. 750.

In the light of the history of legislation relating to agreements and combinations to fix and regulate wages, the often-declared rule of public policy with reference thereto, the purposes for which combinations are specifically forbidden by the statute, and the fact that such combinations affect production and the price of commodities but indirectly, labor, whether physical, intellectual, or a combination of the two, is not an article of trade, manufacture or use or an article, "commodity," or utility, which enters into the manufacture of any article of utility, within the meaning of those words as used in Minnesota anti-trust statute (Gen. Laws Minn. 1899, c. 359, p. 487; Rev. Laws 1905, § 5168), and combination to fix and regulate the prices which shall be charged for wages, and other forms of personal service, are not within the prohibitions of the statute. State v. Duluth Board of Trade, 121 N. W. 395, 412, 107 Minn. 506, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1260 (citing Rohlf v. Kasemeler, 118 N. W. 276, 140 Iowa, 182, 23 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1284, 132 Am. St. Rep. 261, 17 Ann. St. Rep. 216).

Under Pen. Code, § 321, providing that every person, corporation, etc., who shall combine or form what is known as a trust, to limit productions, or increase or reduce the price of merchandise or commodities, or to prevent competition in merchandise or commodities, etc., the term "commodities" would not include a combination of laborers. State v. Cudahy Packing Co., 82 Pac. 833, 834, 33 Mont. 179, 114 Am. St. Rep. 804, 8 Ann. Cas. 717.

Sales of stock certificates

Under Const. pt. 2, c. 1, § 1, art. 4, authorizing the Legislature to impose reasonable excises on any produce, goods, wares, "commodities," and merchandise brought in-to, or produced, manufactured, or being within, the commonwealth, etc., the Legislature may impose a tax on sales of certificates of stock of domestic and foreign corporations, associations, or companies; such a transfer being an exercise of a right, within the meaning of the word "commodities," as used in the section. Opinion of the Justices, 85 N. E. 545, 196 Mass. 603.

Stocks and bonds

"Commodities" include all movable chattels which are the objects of commerce, unless, perhaps, animals may be excepted. It is broad enough to include stocks and bonds. People v. Federal Security Co., 99 N. E. 668, 669, 255 Ill. 561.

Trading stamps

The term "commodities," as used in Const. Mass. art. 4, § 1, authorizing the Legislature to impose reasonable duties and excises upon any produce, goods, wares, merchandise, and "commodities," does not include the selling, giving or delivering of trading stamps, in connection with the sale of articles, entitling the holder to receive other articles than those so sold, and St. 1904, p. 376, c. 408, § 1, levying an excise tax for carrying on such business, is unconstitutional. O'Keeffe v. Somerville, 76 N. E. 457, 458, 190 Mass. 110, 112 Am. St. Rep. 316, 5 Ann. Cas. 684.

Transmission of telegram

In the popular and received import of the word, a "commodity" is a tangible article, and the service or labor of transmitting a telegram is not a "commodity" within the meaning of Laws 1899, p. 1514, c. 690, providing for the prevention of monopolies in the manufacture, production, and sale of commodities, etc. In re Jackson, 107 N. Y. Supp. 799, 801, 57 Misc. Rep. 1.

COMMON

See Benefits Common to Other Property; Interest in Common; Wall in Common.
See, also, Public.

What is "common" is generally known to all. Pickrell v. City of Carlisle, 121 S. W. 1029, 1033, 135 Ky. 126, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 193.

The word "common" is ordinarily understood to apply to the general public when not qualified by some word or phrase of limitation. Spokane Traction Co. v. Granath, 85 Pac. 261, 264, 42 Wash. 506 (quoting and adopting the definition in Kirkendall v. City of Omaha, 57 N. W. 752, 39 Neb. 1).

The word "public" in its common acceptance and use has all the significance of and is synonymous with the word "common." People ex rel. Clark v. Keeper of New York State Reformatory for Women at Bedford, 68 N. E. 884, 887, 176 N. Y. 465 (dissenting opinion).

COMMON ARRANGEMENT

That a defendant made contracts for the through carriage of interstate shipments and settlements therefor, solely with one railroad company, although such shipments passed over the lines of other companies also, sufficiently proves a "common arrangement" between the carriers for a continuous carriage. United States v. Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, 155 Fed. 305, 311.

Under the provision of Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 1, 24 Stat. 379, that "the provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property * * * under a common control, management or arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipment from one state * * * to any other state," as a general rule a "common arrangement" is established by proof of a shipment under a through bill of lading and a continuous interstate carriage thereunder, coupled with proof of concerted action among the connecting carriers with regard to the payment of the charges and the receipt and movement of the traffic, even if an agreed division of a single through rate is not shown. Standard Oil Co. of New York v. United States, 179 Fed. 614, 621, 103 C. C. A. 172.

In the concert of action, in the successive receipt and movement of traffic by connecting carriers under through bills of lading for continuous carriage is manifested the "common arrangement" contemplated by the interstate commerce laws, and no previous formal contract is necessary to bring the carriers under the provisions of the law. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. United States, 157 Fed. 830, 833, 85 C. C. A. 194.

A steamship company, which joins with a railroad carrier in making, filing, and publishing joint through rates for interstate traffic, is as to such traffic used under a "common arrangement" with the railroad company, within the meaning of Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 1, 24 Stat. 379, as amended by Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 1, 34 Stat. 584, and subject to regulation and control by the Interstate Commerce Commission; but such power to regulate and control does not extend to the other port-to-port business of the company, whether interstate or intrastate. Under section 20 of the act as so amended, and as further amended by Act June 18, 1910, c. 309, § 14, 36 Stat. 555, the Commission has power to require reports from such company, and to prescribe a system of bookkeeping and accounting with respect to such joint traffic and directly relating thereto, but it has no power to extend such requirements to include other matters or business of the company having no direct relation to such joint traffic. Goodrich Transit Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 190 Fed. 943, 957.

A carrier by water which has not joined in a tariff and division sheet filed and published by connecting railroad carriers for the through carriage of interstate shipments between two points does not become a party to a "common arrangement" for the carriage of such a shipment within the meaning of Elkins Act Feb. 19, 1903, c. 708, § 1, 32 Stat. 847, by accepting and carrying the same under a through bill of lading issued by the initial railroad carrier stating the published tariff rate and the division of the charges in accordance therewith, nor by receiving its divisional part of such rate, where it had previously privately contracted with the shipper to "protect" a lower through rate, pursuant to which contract the shipment was made, and its return to the shipper of a part of its divisional share of the freight paid, in fulfillment of the contract, was not the "giving of a rebate" in violation of the act. Mutual Transit Co. v. United States, 178 Fed. 664, 667, 102 C. C. A. 164.

Defendant as shipper made an agreement with the Mutual Transit Company, which was a carrier by water only on the Great Lakes, by which the transit company agreed to protect a rate of 45 cents per hundred on a shipment of iron pipe from Philadelphia to Winnipeg, Man. The transit company routed the shipment over a railroad to a port on Lake Erie, thence over its own water line to West Superior, Wis., and from there over two railroads to Winnipeg. The shipment was made on through bills of lading issued by the receiving railroad carrier, in which a rate of 49½ cents was charged, that being the sum of its own published through rate to West Superior and the published rates of the other two railroad companies from there to Winnipeg, and such rate was paid by defendant. From the portion of such rate received by the transit company it refunded to defendant 4½ cents per hundred on the shipment. The transit company had not published nor filed any schedule of rates under the interstate commerce law. Held, that its participation in the transportation of the property under the through bills of lading and in the rate charged therein was not under a "common arrangement" between the carriers with respect to such shipment within the meaning of the act so as to make such rate the lawful rate as against the shipper, nor to render the latter subject to criminal prosecution for receiving a rebate under the Elkins Act of Feb. 19, 1903, c. 708, § 1, 32 Stat. 847. Camden Iron Works v. United States, 158 Fed. 561, 563, 85 C. C. A. 585.

COMMON BAIL

"Common bail" is bail given by merely nominal parties, and not by responsible parties, as in special bail. Preston v. McNeill Lumber Co., 148 Fed. 555, 557.

COMMON BARRATOR

"A 'common barrator' is a common mover or exciter or maintainer of suits, quarrels of parties either in courts or elsewhere: * * * First, in the disturbance of the peace; second, in taking and keeping possession of lands in controversy not only by force but also by subtlety and deceit, and most commonly by suppression of truth and right; thirdly, by false inventions and sowing of calumination, rumors, and reports whereby discord and disquietude may grow up between neighbors." Ingersoll v. Coal Creek Coal Co., 98 S. W. 178, 182, 117 Tenn. 263, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 282, 119 Am. St. Rep. 1003, 10 Ann. Cas. 829 (quoting and adopting definition in Coke, Litt. 368).

COMMON BENEFITS

"The term 'general benefits,' when unqualified, should probably be accepted in the same sense as the term 'common benefits'; that is to say, when there is no limitation expressed, it should be deemed applicable to the general public rather than as embracing, as general, but a limited part of the public." Spokane Traction Co. v. Granath, 85 Pac. 261, 263, 264, 42 Wash. 506 (quoting and adopting Kirkendall v. City of Omaha, 57 N. W. 752, 39 Neb. 1).

COMMON BOUNDARY

Code Supp. 1902, § 2539, declares fish seines kept to catch fish contrary to law to be a common nuisance, and requires their seizure and destruction. Section 2540 prohibits the catching of fish other than minnows for bait from any of the waters of the state by any other means than a hook and line, and section 2547 declares that the prior sections shall not apply to fishing in the Mississippi river. Act Cong. March 3, 1845, c. 48, 5 Stat. 742, gives to a state concurrent jurisdiction on the Mississippi river and every other river bordering on the state so far as it shall form a "common boundary" to such state and any other state then or thereafter to be formed bounding the same. Held, that the term "common boundary," as applied to the Mississippi river, meant the common way of commerce, exclusive of the non-navigable waters, belts, streams, etc., emerging from the main river and flowing inland; and hence seine fishing on a nonnavigable slough formed by the separation of a part of the river from the main body and cutting off a large body of land wholly within the state of Iowa was prohibited. Little v. Green, 123 N. W. 367, 370, 144 Iowa, 492, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 649.

COMMON CARRIER

See, also, Forwarding Carrier; Private Carrier; Public Carrier; Telephone Company.

A "common carrier" is one who transports such passengers as choose to employ him from place to place for reward. Burke v. State, 119 N. Y. Supp. 1089, 1104, 64 Misc. Rep. 558.

A "common carrier" is one who, by virtue of his business or calling, undertakes for compensation to transport personal property from one place to another, either by land or water, and deliver the same, for all such as may choose to employ him; and every one who undertakes to carry and deliver for compensation the goods of all persons indifferently is, as to liability, to be deemed a "common carrier." United States v. Ramsey, 197 Fed. 144, 146, 116 C. C. A. 568.

"A 'common carrier' is one who holds himself out in common, that is, to all people alike, that he is engaged in the business of transporting persons, or certain kinds of property, and is prepared and ready to carry for all who apply, on the same terms." Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Henry, 83 N. E. 710, 712, 170 Ind. 94.

A "common carrier" is one who undertakes as a public employment the transportation of goods for persons generally from place to place, to be delivered at the place appointed, for hire or reward, and with or without a special agreement as to price. Carpenter v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (Del.) 64 Atl. 252, 253, 6 Pennewill, 15 (quoting and adopting definition in McHenry v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. [Del.] 4 Har. 448).

A "common carrier" is one who openly professes to carry for hire the goods of all who choose to employ him, and whose duty it is to carry for all who comply with the terms as to freight, etc.; while a "private carrier" is one who, without being engaged in the business generally, undertakes to carry goods for hire in a particular case. The Cape Charles, 198 Fed. 346, 349.

One holding out to the public as ready to undertake for hire the transportation of goods and so inviting custom of the public is a "common carrier." Lloyd v. Haugh & Keenan Storage & Transfer Co., 72 Atl. 516, 517, 223 Pa. 148, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 188.

A "common carrier" is one whose business it is to carry chattels for all persons who may choose to employ and remunerate him; and this applies to carriers by land and water without regard to distance or motive power. Nicolette Lumber Co. v. People's Coal Co., 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 575, 578.

The tests whether a carrier is a "common carrier" are: First, he must be engaged in the business of carrying goods for others as a public employé, and so hold himself out; second, he must undertake to carry goods of the kind to which his business is confined; third, he must undertake to carry by the methods by which his business is conducted and over his established roads; fourth, transportation must be for hire; and, fifth, an action must lie against him if he refused without reason to carry such goods for those willing to comply with his terms. Santa Fé, P. & P. Ry. Co. v. Grant Bros. Const. Co., 108 Pac. 467, 469, 13 Ariz. 186.

A "common carrier" is a public carrier. He engages in a public employment and takes upon himself a public duty and exercises a sort of public office. His duty being public, the correlative right is public. This public right is a common right, and a common right signifies a reasonably equal right. Hilton Lumber Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 53 S. E. 823, 828, 141 N. C. 171, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 225 (quoting and adopting definition in McDuffee v. Portland & B. R. R., 52 N. H. 430, 13 Am. Rep. 72).

There are two kinds of carriers, a common carrier and a private carrier; a common carrier being one who undertakes to transport goods for the general public, and is compelled to do so by law. O'Rourke v. Bates, 133 N. Y. Supp. 392, 393, 73 Misc. Rep. 414.

The term "common carrier," as used in Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 1, 24 Stat. 379, as amended by Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 1, 34 Stat. 584, is to be given its ordinary meaning of one engaged in the actual work of transportation; and a corporation not so engaged is not within the statute merely because it is authorized by its charter to engage in such business. United States v. Union Stockyard & Transit Co. of Chicago, 192 Fed. 330, 341.

A railroad's liability as "common carrier" does not cease until the goods are deposited in a depot or warehouse. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Naive, 79 S. W. 124, 125, 130, 112 Tenn. 239, 64 L. R. A. 443.

"All persons who transport goods from place to place for hire for such persons as see fit to employ them, whether usually or occasionally, whether as a principal or an incidental and subordinate occupation, are 'common carriers.'" Hahl v. Laux, 93 S. W. 1080, 1081, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 182.

The word "carrier," in Civ. Code Prac. § 73, providing that an action against a common carrier for an injury to a passenger or other person must be brought in a county in which the defendant resides or in which the plaintiff is injured or in which he resides, if he resides in the county into which the carrier passes, applies not alone to the operation of trains, but includes a railroad preparing to operate trains into a county and having a roadbed with ties and rails thereon therein. Louisville, H. & St. L. R. Co. v. Sanders' Adm'r (Ky.) 92 S. W. 937, 938.

"No one should be treated as a 'common carrier' unless he has in some way held himself out to the public as a carrier in such manner as to render himself liable to an action if he should refuse to carry for any one who wished to employ him in the particular kind of service which he thus proposes to undertake; otherwise he does not come within the description, nor can he be subjected to the liability of the common carrier when the goods have been lost without negligence." Where, in an action for loss of a cargo of brick towed by one of defendant's steamers, defendant denied that it was a "common carrier," the court should have charged on such issue that, if defendant had expressly and publicly offered to carry for all persons indiscriminately, or by its conduct and manner of business it held itself out as ready to carry for all on such trips as the boat was then making, it was a "common carrier," and plaintiff was entitled to recover, though there was no negligence on defendant's part in the loss of the brick, but that if it had not offered to carry for all persons indiscriminately, etc., but merely carried the brick in pursuance of a special employment, it was not a "common carrier," nor liable, in the absence of negligence. Bassett & Stone v. Aberdeen Coal & Mining Co., 88 S. W. 318, 320, 120 Ky. 728 (quoting and adopting definition in Hutch. Carr. § 55).

"A 'common carrier' has been defined to be one who undertakes for hire to transport goods of such as choose to employ him from place to place." A continual practice by owners of a stage coach of carrying parcels of merchandise for hire will make them common carriers. Beckman v. Shouse (Pa.) 5 Rawle, 179, 187, 28 Am. Dec. 653.

A corporation is none the less a "common carrier," as defined by Gen. St. 1894, § 379, because its articles do not in terms prescribe that one of its powers is to carry freight. In re Minneapolis & St. P. Suburban Ry. Co., 112 N. W. 13, 16, 101 Minn. 132.

To constitute a "common carrier," it is not essential that the person or corporation undertaking such service own the means of transportation; it being sufficient that a contract is made by which the carrier agrees to transport and deliver the goods. J. H. Cownie Glove Co. v. Merchants' Dispatch Transp. Co., 106 N. W. 749, 750, 130 Iowa, 327, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1060.

Belt line and terminal railroad companies

A belt line railway company, chartered as a railroad company, owning four or five locomotives and one flat car and about 14 or 15 miles of track, which makes connection with various railroad companies, and switches cars for these companies to stockyards and other railroad connections, but which has no depot or loading facilities, furnishes no cars, makes no charges to shippers or contract with them, and is paid for its services by the railroad companies, is not a "common carrier" within the meaning of Acts 1905, p. 29, c. 25, § 1, providing that any common carrier doing business as such in the state may be sued for any cause arising out of transportation in any court of competent jurisdiction in any county in which such carrier does business, or has an agent or representative. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Henson, 121 S. W. 1127, 1128, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 468.

A "common carrier" of personal property is one who undertakes for hire to transport from place to place the goods of others who may choose to employ him for that purpose, including a terminal railroad company owning no cars of its own and transporting only the railroad cars of other companies. United States v. Sioux City Stock Yards Co., 162 Fed. 556, 560.

Carriage as part of business only

One who agrees to cut, prepare, and transport to market dock sticks, spars, etc., for another is not while transporting the timber acting as a "common carrier." Pike v. Nash, 40 N. Y. 335, 338.

As carrier as a business

If one is accustomed to undertake, for hire, to transport the goods of those who choose to employ him, though it be not his constant or usual, but only an occasional, occupation, he is a "common carrier" within the rule laid down in Chevaillier v. Strahan, 2 Tex. R. 115, "that all persons who transport goods from place to place, for hire, for such persons as see fit to employ them, whether usually or occasionally, whether as principal or incidental or subordinate occupation, are common carriers, and incur all their responsibilities"—at least, whenever he holds himself out in any way to the public as a carrier, or undertakes as a matter of business and profit, the transportation of goods. But because one whose principal occupation is farming does this occasionally and at certain seasons only, he is not necessarily to be deemed to incur the responsibility of a common carrier, at all seasons, and in reference to every contract he may make to carry goods under whatever special circumstances. Haynie v. Baylor, 18 Tex. 498, 507 (citing 1 Para. Cont. 639 et seq. and notes; Ang. Carr. § 72).

"A 'common carrier' is one who undertakes to transport from place to place for hire the goods of such persons as think fit to employ him" as the proprietors of wagons, barges, lighters, merchant ships, railway companies, or other instruments for the public conveyance of goods. To make one a common carrier, his business of carrying must be habitual and not casual, and his undertaking must be general and for all people indifferently, and must be evidenced by his known notice or by his known habitual continuance in such business. He must assume to be the servant of the public. One who follows wagoning for a livelihood, and gives general notice that he will take goods for transportation whether for a year, a season, or a less time, is a "common carrier"; but a wagoner who undertakes to transport goods by a single special contract and to deliver them in good order and condition unavoidable accidents excepted, though not a common carrier, is responsible on his contract as one. Fish v. Chapman, 2 Ga. 849, 352, 353, 354, 46 Am. Dec. 393 (citing 2 Kent, Comm. 598; Story, Ballm. § 495).

A ditch company is not in the strict legal sense of the term a "common carrier." Wright v. Platte Val. Irr. Co., 61 Pac. 603, 606, 27 Colo. 322.

Elevators in buildings

A company operating an elevator in its office building for the use of tenants and their visitors is a common carrier of passengers for hire. Goldsmith v. Holland Bldg. Co., 81 S. W. 1112, 1114, 182 Mo. 597.

Persons operating elevators for public use in stores are common carriers of passengers, and bound to exercise the highest practicable care used by prudent men in operating elevators to prevent injury to passengers. Hensler v. Stix, 88 S. W. 108, 111, 113 Mo. App. 162.

The owner of a building operating a freight elevator in which a person engaged in moving the effects of a tenant from the building is riding according to custom is a "common carrier," and the relation of carrier and passenger exists. Orcutt v. Century Bldg. Co., 99 S. W. 1062, 1064, 201 Mo. 424, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 929 (citing and adopting Beldler v. Branshaw, 65 N. E. 1086, 200 Ill. 425; Springer v. Ford, 59 N. E. 953, 189 Ill. 430, 52 L. R. A. 930, 82 Am. St. Rep. 464).

A landlord who maintains an elevator in his private building for the use of tenants and their employes and customers is not a common carrier, nor bound to the same degree of care as that imposed upon a common carrier, but is bound only to exercise reasonable care for the safety of those who enter upon his premises and use the elevator. Edwards v. Manufacturers' Bldg. Co., 61 Atl. 646, 27 R. I. 248, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 744, 114 Am. St. Rep. 37, 8 Ann. Cas. 974.

The owner of an office building, who maintains and operates therein a passenger elevator for the use of his tenants and the public who choose to use the same, is, as to those who ride in the elevator, a "common carrier of passengers" for hire. Ohio Val. Trust Co. v. Wernke, 84 N. E. 999, 1002, 42 Ind. App. 326.

Express and messenger companies

Express companies are "common carriers." Southern Exp. Co. v. Ramey, 51 South. 314, 315, 164 Ala. 206; American Exp. Co. v. United States, 29 Sup. Ct. 315, 317, 212 U. S. 522, 53 L. Ed. 635.

"The general rule of law is that express companies are 'common carriers,' and, in the absence of a contract limiting their liability, it is an insurer of the safe delivery of goods which they receive for carriage." Boehrer v. Juergens & Anderson Co., 113 N. W. 655, 657, 133 Wis. 426 (citing Marshall v. American Exp. Co., 7 Wis. 1, 73 Am. Dec. 381).

Where a bill for rent was intrusted to a messenger furnished by a messenger company, and the amount collected by the messenger, the company did not become a "common carrier" and insurer of the bill and the money. The knowledge of the company that messengers sent out by it were sometimes employed to carry money does not render the company a "common carrier," where the company exercises no control over the messenger during his employment by a patron. Haskell v. Boston Dist. Messenger Co., 76 N. E. 215, 216, 190 Mass. 189, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1091, 112 Am. St. Rep. 324, 5 Ann. Cas. 796.

The status of an express company as a "common carrier" is fixed by Acts 1891-92, p. 971, c. 614, § 18, providing that the term "common carriers" shall include express companies chartered by this or any other state and doing business in the state. Shannon's Adm'r v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 52 S. E. 376, 377, 104 Va. 645.

Under Act Cong. June 29, 1906, § 1, the term "common carrier" includes express companies. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Beatty, 118 Pac. 367, 368, 126 Pac. 736, 34 Okl. 321, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 988; United States v. American Express Co., 199 Fed. 321, 322.

A special contract with an express company exempting it from liability for loss or damage except such as shall have occurred from fraud or gross negligence changes the relation of the parties, and the carrier becomes as to that transaction an ordinary bailee and private carrier for hire. Moriarty v. Harden's Express (N. Y.) 1 Daly, 227, 230.

Companies engaged in supplying messenger service to the public are to a certain extent common carriers, must serve impartially all who require their services, are liable on proof of negligence; and under some circumstances, and always by special contract, they may make themselves insurers. White v. Postal Telegraph & Cable Co., 25 App. D. C. 364, 367, 4 Ann. Cas. 767.

A common carrier is one who undertakes for hire or reward to transport from place to place the goods of those who choose to employ it, and an express or teaming company which owns horses and wagons and hires teamsters, by means of which merchandise is carried throughout a city for the public generally, is a common carrier within the meaning of an ordinance requiring the licensing of public carts, notwithstanding such express or teaming company exercises a discretion as to the person or persons whom it will serve. Hastings Express Co. v. City of Chicago, 135 Ill. App. 268, 273.

Under Rev. Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 1577, providing that every one who offers to carry persons, property, or messages is a "common carrier," an express company offering to carry money for hire is a "common carrier of money." Platt v. Le Cocq, 150 Fed. 391, 397.

A ferryman is a "common carrier." Smith v. Seward, 3 Pa. 342, 345.

A ferryman is a common carrier of goods, and like other common carriers is an insurer of the property committed to his care, and is responsible for all injuries to it except such as may be caused by the act of God or a public enemy. The ferryman's liability as a common carrier is not relieved or lessened by the fact that the goods are usually accompanied by the owner. His responsibility in regard to animals is the same as in the case of other property, except where the loss or injury is due to the animal's own restiveness or viciousness of temper. Bauer v. Verona Ferry Co., 33 Pa. Super. Ct. 607, 609.

A corporation incorporated under Comp. Laws, §§ 6646-6659, to own and operate ferries on a river, which owns and operates an amusement park and steamers for the transportation of persons to and from the park, is not a common carrier while engaged in transporting such persons, and may refuse transportation to any one at its pleasure. Melsner v. Detroit, B. I. & W. Ferry Co., 118 N. W. 14, 15, 154 Mich. 545, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 872, 129 Am. St. Rep. 493.

Hackmen and truckmen

A drayman who is directed by a shipper to take her goods to the depot and ship them is a "common carrier." Benson v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 99 Pac. 1072, 1074, 35 Utah, 241, 136 Am. St. Rep. 1052, 19 Ann. Cas. 803 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1317).

A "common carrier" is one who undertakes for hire to transport the goods of such as choose to employ him, and ordinarily carters and expressmen engaged in carrying freight to and from a depot or warehouse, or between places in the same locality, or between different localities, are common carriers. One holding himself out as engaged in the general business of moving household goods from one residence to another in a city, for all who choose to employ him, is a "common carrier." Collier v. Langan & Taylor Storage & Moving Co., 127 S. W. 435, 441, 147 Mo. App. 700.

A holding company is not a "common carrier," within the meaning of Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 1, 24 Stat. 379, as amended by Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 1, 34 Stat. 584, because of the fact that it owns all of the stock of a corporation which is such a common carrier. United States v. Union Stock Yard & Transit Co. of Chicago, 192 Fed. 330, 342; O'Malley v. Board of Com'rs of Riley County, 121 Pac. 1108, 86 Kan. 752, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 576.

Private railroad

"A private railroad established as an incident to a private business is not a 'common carrier.'" A spur railway line built by a lumber company on its own land, forming a connecting line between a railroad and its mill, some miles distant, to transport its own products to the railroad for shipment, which had no rolling stock except an engine and logging cars, and which did not hold itself out to do carrying for the public, is not a "common carrier." E. E. Taenzer & Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 170 Fed. 240, 249, 95 C. C. A. 436 (quoting and adopting definition in McKivergan v. Alexander & Edgar Lumber Co., 102 N. W. 332, 124 Wis. 60; Moore, Carr. p. 72, § 35).

One who constructs a railroad switch, under Ky. St. 1909, § 815 (Russell's St. § 5352), authorizing the owner of a coal mine within three miles of a railroad to condemn a right of way for a railroad switch to get his product to market, and providing that the owner of such road shall be, so far as they are applicable, governed by the laws relating to other railroads, is not a "common carrier," in contravention of Const. § 210, providing that no corporation engaged in the business of common carrier shall own a mine, so that it can either ship or permit to be shipped by the lessees of its mine all products thereof free of charge. Straight Creek Coal Mining Co. v. Straight Creek Coal & Coke Co., 122 S. W. 842, 844, 135 Ky. 536.

"While the Pullman Company may not be technically a 'common carrier,' still we think it comes within the scope and meaning of this act [an act providing that no carrier is required to admit any passenger to his car or means of transportation]. A sleeping car is obviously a public means of transportation." Allen v. Pullman's Palace Car Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 39, 42, 191 U. S. 171, 48 L. Ed. 134.

Railroad company

The fact that one has a private arrangement with a railroad whereby he can ride on freight trains does not render the road's relation to him other than that of a "common carrier." Gardner v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 93 S. W. 917, 919, 117 Mo. App. 138.

Under the facts of this case, it is held that a railway company holding itself out to the public as ready, and as undertaking, to do switching which requires it to have its rails and right of way and go upon the rails and right of way of another company with which it has no express contract relating either to compensation for switching or to track rights, is a "common carrier," and as such must switch cars without discrimination against a disfavored shipper. Larabee Flour Mills Co. v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 88 Pac. 72, 76, 74 Kan. 808.

A railroad company is not a "common carrier" of the sleeping cars of another, and may impose terms on which it will haul such cars. Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Whan, 89 Pac. 39, 41, 39 Colo. 230, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 432, 12 Ann. Cas. 732.

Under Const. art. 10, § 2, providing that all railroads are public highways and all railway companies are common carriers, a railroad company doing a general business was also a common carrier in switching cars over its switch tracks to and from warehouses situated on its spurs and switches, and delivering them upon the transfer tracks of other railroad companies in the same town. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Rosebrook-Josey Grain Co., 114 S. W. 436, 439, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 156.

Pub. Acts 1909, No. 300, as amended by Pub. Acts 1911, No. 139, creating the Railroad Commission, defining the term "common carrier" as one operating as a common carrier any railroad, spurs, terminal facilities necessary in the transportation of persons or property, and defining the term "railroad" as meaning all railroads, provided that the act shall not apply to any logging or other private railroad not doing business as a common carrier, and conferring on the Commission jurisdiction over side tracks and branches, in so far as the same are used by common carriers, includes branch roads built by railroads for lumbermen. Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Michigan R. R. Commission, 137 N. W. 329, 332, 171 Mich. 335.

Under the rule of the American courts of admiralty a lighter hired exclusively to convey the goods of one person to a particular place for an agreed compensation is not a "common carrier" with respect to such goods, but a "private carrier," and liable only as a bailee for hire. The Wildenfels, 161 Fed. 864, 866, 89 C. O. A. 58.

A person employed by a liquor dealer to carry liquors to the place of residence of the customers, deliver the liquors, and collect the price, is not a "common carrier." United States v. Lackey, 120 Fed. 577, 579.

A stockyards company maintaining tracks connecting with the tracks of railroad companies, and which by its own locomotives and servants transports cars containing interstate shipments to and from the tracks of the railroad companies, is a "common carrier" engaged in interstate commerce, though it collects compensation only from the railroad companies and is paid under a contract between it and them. Union Stockyards Co. of Omaha v. United States, 169 Fed. 404, 94 C. C. A. 626.

A stockyards company owning stockyards and doing what is known as a terminal business, having switch tracks encircling its yards and connecting therewith and with trunk line railroads so that all cars of stock in and out of its yards must pass over its tracks, which it alone operates with its own engines and crews, which issues no bills of lading and receives no part of the freight paid the trunk line railroads, but charges a fixed price per car for all cars moved from the connection therewith to its yards or to packing houses, is a railroad company and a common carrier of freight for hire with the rights, duties, and obligations of a common carrier for hire, and subject to the provisions of Twenty-Eight Hour Law June 29, 1906, c. 3594, 34 Stat. 607, where it partici-

A stockyards company, authorized by its charter to build and operate a railroad, and which did build and operate one in interstate commerce, on leasing its equipment for a term of years to an independent operating company, ceased to be a "common carrier" engaged in interstate commerce, within the meaning of Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 1, 24 Stat. 379, as amended by Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 1, 34 Stat. 584, and is not subject to the provisions of the act as such because it receives as rental a share of the net earnings of its road, nor because the owner of a majority of its stock also owns a majority of the stock of the lessee. United States v. Union Stockyard & Transit Co. of Chicago, 192 Fed. 330, 342.

A stockyard company, which receives live stock from carriers at its yards, pens, feeds, and cares for the same, and maintains a public market for its sale, and which unloads and reloads it when required, receiving fixed prices for its services, is not a "common carrier," within the meaning of Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 1, 24 Stat. 379, as amended by Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 1, 34 Stat. 584. United States v. Union Stockyard & Transit Co. of Chicago, 192 Fed. 330, 341.

A union stockyards company operating 35 miles of railroad, over which are hauled all cars offered for shipment by any industry located on the line of the road and all cars consigned to such industry, and all cars from one railroad to another in course of shipment from one state to another for which an arbitrary switching charge is made in operating such road, is a common carrier engaged in interstate commerce within safety appliance act (Act March 2, 1893, c. 196, 27 Stat. 531, amended by Acts April 1, 1896, c. 87, 29 Stat. 85, and March 12, 1903, c. 976, 32 Stat. 943). United States v. Union Stock Yards Co. of Omaha, 161 Fed. 919, 923.

A stockyards company owned about 35 miles of railway track, including what was known as a transfer track. Several private industries were conducted adjacent to the premises of the company. The transfer track connected with the track of several railroads. The stockyards company was engaged in the carrying of freight in car load lots. Cars billed to the stockyards or the industries adjacent thereto were placed on the transfer track by the railroad over whose line shipped, and from there hauled by the stockyards company, with its own engines, to the pens or sheds in the yards, or to the industries which were to receive the freight. Outgoing cars were hauled by the stockyards company to the transfer track, where they were received by a railroad. The railroads for such service were charged $1 per car. The stockyards company did not deal with the general public, but only with the railroads and the industries located adjacent to its premises, and with the consignees and consignors of live stock who received shipments or loaded shipments in its yards. It transported freight over its own tracks from one industry to another, and was not engaged in the production of commodities. Its vocation was purely one of service to others, and, with the exception of feeding live stock in transit, the service rendered was the transportation of freight. Held, that the stockyards company was a common carrier within the constitutional amendment adopted at the general election in 1906, creating a state railway commission, and Laws 1907, p. 320, c. 90, § 4, defining a common carrier to be any corporation, etc., owning, operating, etc., any railroad, etc. State ex rel. Winnett v. Union Stockyards Co. of Omaha, 115 N. W. 627, 631, 81 Neb. 67.

Street railway

Street railway companies are common carriers of passengers. As such they are bound to exercise for the safety of their patrons more than ordinary care. They are required to exercise the utmost skill, diligence, and foresight consistent with the business in which they are engaged, and are liable for the slightest negligence. Lincoln Traction Co. v. Heller, 100 N. W. 197, 199, 72 Neb. 127 (citing Lincoln St. Ry. Co. v. McClellan, 54 Neb. 672, 74 N. W. 1074, 69 Am. St. Rep. 736); Hurley v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 96 S. W. 714, 715, 120 Mo. App. 262 (citing Nelson v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 88 S. W. 1119, 113 Mo. App. 702; Ridenhour v. Kansas City Cable Ry. Co., 13 S. W. 889, 14 S. W. 760, 102 Mo. 270); Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Chicago, 65 N. E. 451, 461, 199 Ill. 484, 59 L. R. A. 631 (citing North Chicago St. Ry. Co. v. Williams, 29 N. E. 672, 140 Ill. 275; Same v. Wrixon, 51 Ill. App. 307; Same v. Cook, 33 N. E. 958, 145 Ill. 551); Denham v. Washington Water Power Co., 80 Pac. 546, 547, 38 Wash. 354.

Telegraph or telephone company

A telephone like a telegraph company is a "common carrier" of news. State v. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co., 86 S. W. 390, 391, 114 Tenn. 194; State ex rel. Goodwine v. Cadwallader, 87 N. E. 644, 647, 89 N. E. 819, 172 Ind. 619; Brandon v. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co., 143 S. W. 11, 12, 146 Ky. 639; Mooreland Rural Telephone Co. v. Mouch, 96 N. E. 193, 195, 48 Ind. App. 521.

A telegraph company is a "common carrier" by statute. Blackwell Milling & Elevator Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 89 Pac. 235, 236, 17 Okl. 376, 10 Ann. Cas. 855.

A telephone company is a "common carrier" within Civ. Code, § 73, providing for the bringing of actions against a "common carrier." Louisville Home Telephone Co. v. Bee-ler's Adm'r, 101 S. W. 397, 401, 125 Ky. 366.

A telegraph company is in the nature of a common carrier, and, subject to reasonable regulations, is required to receive and promptly transmit and deliver all messages tendered in good faith. Cogdell v. Western Union Tel. Co., 47 S. E. 490, 491, 135 N. C. 431.

Public telephone lines are "common carriers," and by Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 5802, telephone companies must supply all applicants within local limits with telephone connections and facilities without discrimination. Home Telephone Co. v. North Manchester Telephone Co., 92 N. E. 558, 47 Ind. App. 411.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 1576, 1577, a carrier of messages by telegraph is a "common carrier," and required to use "the utmost diligence." Lothian v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 126 N. W. 621, 622, 25 S. D. 319.

A telephone company is a "common carrier" of communication, and as such must supply all alike who are situated alike, without discrimination. Southwestern Telegraph & Telephone Co. v. Danaher (Ark.) 144 S. W. 925, 927.

Where title to Laws 1907, c. 90, recited that the act created and defined powers of railway companies and common carriers, etc., and in the act defined telegraph companies as common carriers, it substantially complied with Const. art. 8, § 11, providing that no bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. State, 124 N. W. 937, 940, 86 Neb. 17.

Code 1906, § 5007, being part of chapter 145, relating to trusts and combines, and providing that, in a suit by any person injured by a trust or combine, proof that such person has been compelled to pay more for services rendered by a public service corporation by reason of such combine than he would have been compelled to pay but for such agreement or combine, shall be conclusive evidence of damage and of unlawful purpose, does not indicate an intention of the Legislature that the anti-trust laws should apply to discriminations in rates made by a telephone company, defined to be a "common carrier" by the laws for the supervision of common carriers. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. State ex rel. Attorney General, 54 South. 446, 450, 99 Miss. 1; Same v. McCorkle (Miss.) 54 South. 450; Same v. Patrick & Smith, Id.; Same v. J. Y. Harris & Co., Id.; Same v. McDade, Id.

The owner of a toll bridge is not a "common carrier," for in general he has no possession or control over the goods passing over it, and he is not like a stageowner or a railroad company, yet he is under the duty to keep the bridge in a reasonably safe condition for travel, and is only liable for negligence in failing to so keep it. Gibler v. Terminal R. R. Ass'n of St. Louis, 101 S. W. 37, 39, 208 Mo. 208, 11 Ann. Cas. 1194.

Towboats, tugs, etc.

A towing tug is not a "common carrier" nor an insurer, and is bound only to the exercise of reasonable skill and care taking into consideration the fact that it contracts as an expert and is bound to know the channel and its usual currents and dangers and to avoid obstructions which ought to be known to men experienced in its navigation. The El Rio, 162 Fed. 567.

"A tug is not, in relation to its tow, a 'common carrier,' being only bound to the exercise of ordinary care." A contract of towage by which the tow assumes all risks, releases the tug from the liability for her own negligence resulting in injury to the tow. The Oceanica, 170 Fed. 893, 894, 96 C. C. A. 69 (quoting and adopting definition in The Margaret, 94 U. S. 495, 24 L. Ed. 146).

Wharfage business

A corporation created to carry on, conformably to a municipal ordinance and a confirmatory statute intended to secure public shipping facilities, a wharfage business at a seaport and to furnish terminal facilities for a railway and steamship system of which it forms a part and by which it is controlled through a holding company, is a common carrier, and as such is subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission acting in the exercise of its authority, under the act to regulate commerce, to prohibit undue preferences. Southern Pac. Terminal Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 31 Sup. Ct. 279, 286, 219 U. S. 498, 55 L. Ed. 310.

COMMON CARRIER OF BANK BILLS

A "common carrier" is one carrying passengers, or goods, wares, and merchandise for compensation or hire. A river steamboat carrying goods, wares, and merchandise and passengers, but not ordinarily or usually engaged in the business of carrying bank bills, is not a common carrier of bank bills. Lee v. Burgess, 9 Bush (72 Ky.) 652-655 (citing 2 Pars. Cont. 163).

COMMON CARRIER OF CATTLE

A "common carrier" of goods which transports live stock is as to the latter property also a common carrier. Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Hall, 52 S. E. 679, 681, 124 Ga. 322, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 898, 110 Am. St. Rep. 170 (citing Hutchinson on Carriers [2d Ed.] § 221).

COMMON CARRIER OF PASSENGERS

"A 'common carrier of passengers' is one who is engaged in a public calling which imposes upon him the duty to serve all without discrimination." Birmingham R., Light & Power Co. v. Adams, 40 South. 385, 386, 146 Ala. 267, 119 Am. St. Rep. 27 (citing 6 Cyc. p. 533).

A "common carrier" of passengers is one who undertakes for hire to carry all persons indifferently who may apply for passage. To constitute one a "common carrier" it is necessary that he should hold himself out to the community as such. A livery stable keeper, who lets a conveyance for a special journey, and furnishes a driver therefor, is merely a private carrier for hire, and is bound only to exercise that degree of care and skill in the selection of a vehicle, team, and driver which a prudent man would bestow in such a matter, and is not liable for injuries caused to a person in the vehicle, occasioned by negligent driving. McGregor v. Gill, 86 S. W. 318, 319, 114 Tenn. 521, 108 Am. St. Rep. 919 (quoting and adopting definition in Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Messino, 1 Sneed [33 Tenn.] 220).

The state owned and operated an inclined railway at a park. It posted notices calling attention to the railway, the fare charged to ride thereon, had ticket offices, maintained the structure, provided the cars and machinery which ran them, and received the revenue of its operation. Held, that the state was a common carrier of passengers for hire, subject to liability as such. Burke v. State, 119 N. Y. Supp. 1089, 1104, 1105, 64 Misc. Rep. 558.

One who occasionally carries a passenger as a matter of special accommodation and agreement does not thereby become a "common carrier of passengers"; he only becomes such when the carrying of passengers becomes an habitual business. The fact that a railroad had been in the habit of occasionally transporting some passengers upon freight trains did not make such railroad a common carrier of passengers upon such freight trains. Murch v. Concord R. Corp., 9 Fost. (29 N. H.) 9, 42, 61 Am. Dec. 631.

Elevators in buildings

A company operating a passenger elevator in a large building used by tenants is a "common carrier of passengers." Ohio Val. Trust Co. v. Wernke, 84 N. E. 999, 1002, 42 Ind. App. 326.

COMMON COUNTS

The "common counts" charge a general right to money based on something that has been done, that is, fully performed, so that nothing remains but the payment of the money so earned; hence a real estate commission fully earned under express contract may be recovered under the common counts. Risley v. Beaumont, 59 Atl. 145, 146, 71 N. J. Law, 372.

COMMON DESIGN

As used in an instruction to a jury that "a 'common design' and unlawful purpose by two or more persons is the essence of the charge of conspiracy, and this common design or unlawful purpose must be proved in order to warrant a conviction, either by direct evidence, or by proof of such circumstances as naturally tend to prove it and sufficient in themselves to satisfy the jury of the existence of such common design beyond a reasonable doubt," the phrases "common design" and "unlawful purpose" must be construed as having been used as synonymous. Imboden v. People, 90 Pac. 608, 622, 40 Colo. 142.

COMMON EARTHENWARE

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 94, 30 Stat. 156, providing for "common yellow * * * earthenware," "common" is not a commercial, but a descriptive, term; and Sarreguemines ware, which is of a superior quality, is not within said provision. United States v. Reugger, 167 Fed. 142, 143.

So-called "carmelite ware," consisting of earthen cooking ware of a dark brown color, some of the articles having a white lining and some no lining, are not within the provision for "common * * * brown * * * earthenware," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 94, 30 Stat. 156. G. M. Thurnauer & Co. v. United States, 165 Fed. 62.

COMMON EMPLOYMENT

An employment is "common" to the servants of the same master, where performed as part of the duty owed by them to the common master. Laragay v. East Jersey Pipe Co., 72 Atl. 57, 59, 77 N. J. Law, 516.

The essence of "common employment" within the fellow-servant rule is a common employer and payment from a common source, and all who work for a common master or who are subject to a common control or derive their compensation from a common source and are engaged in the same general employment, working to accomplish the same general end, though it may be in different departments or grades of it, are coemployees. A member of a railroad fence gang and the foreman are fellow servants. Sartin v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 76 Pac. 219, 220, 27 Utah, 447.

Whether an employment is common in the legal sense, so as to render employees fellow servants, is not determined by the character of work done by each, but by the purpose towards which the work is directed, and, if the purpose be a common one and the work of each servant be but complementary to that of the other in accomplishing the general purpose, it is a common employment. Sloppy v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 77 Atl. 1010, 1011, 228 Pa. 636.

COMMON FAME

"Common fame," which serves to establish a character either of a person or thing, is competent evidence to substantiate an issue as to whether a house in question is habitually used as a disorderly house. State v. McGinnis, 108 Pac. 132, 133, 56 Or. 163 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2672).

COMMON FIELDS

The terms "common fields" and "commons" are of French origin, and were used in Acts Cong. June 13, 1812, c. 99, 2 Stat. 748, May 26, 1824, c. 184, 4 Stat. 65, and Jan. 27, 1831, c. 12, 4 Stat. 435, relating to title to such lands in Louisiana Purchase territory—"common fields" to designate fields cultivated outside a village by the inhabitants, in severalty, though generally under a common fence; and "commons" to designate a large body of land held in common and used for pasturage, fuel, etc. City of St. Louis v. St. Louis Blast Furnace Co., 138 S. W. 641, 643, 235 Mo. 1.

COMMON GAMBLER

Whoever, for the purpose of gaming with cards or otherwise, travels about from place to place, or frequents any place where gambling is permitted, or engages in gambling for livelihood, is a "common gambler." Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2180. Bickell v. State, 70 N. E. 548, 32 Ind. App. 656.

A person who deals faro once may not be a "common gambler," but he may be taken and held to be such or, in other words, may rank as a common gambler in point of criminality where the statute expressly so provides. State v. Melville, 11 R. I. 417, 418.

Under Penal Law, § 970, which provides that a person "who engages as dealer, gamekeeper or player in any gambling or banking game, where money or property is dependent upon the result," is a "common gambler," a person participating in a game of draw poker, and who, before the hand is opened, takes off one or two chips or checks from the pile in the center of the table, and places them in front of him in a separate pile from the chips he is playing with, so distinguishes his conduct from that of the other players as to justify a finding that he was a common gambler. People v. Bright, 96 N. E. 362, 363, 203 N. Y. 73, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 771.

Pen. Law, § 970, provides that a person who "engages" as player, gamekeeper, or dealer in any gambling or banking game, where money or property is dependent on the result, is a "common gambler." Code Cr. Proc. § 399, provides that a conviction cannot be had on the testimony of an accomplice, unless corroborated by such other evidence as tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime. The only witness in a prosecution under section 970 was a person who had participated in a game of draw poker at which defendant, before the hand was opened, took one or two chips from the pile in the center of the table, and put them in a separate pile from the chips he was playing with, and had himself acted as dealer when it came to his turn to deal. Held, that the phrase "who engages" means something more than occasional participation, and imports some continuity of practice, just as the word "common" implies that a common gambler is a person who customarily, or habitually, or frequently carries on the gambling practices in violation of the statute, as a money-making pursuit; and hence that the witness was not an accomplice whose testimony required corroboration. People v. Bright, 96 N. E. 362, 364, 203 N. Y. 73, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 771.

COMMON HIGHWAY

The provision in Const. art. 9, § 1, that navigable waters therein referred to "shall be common highways and forever free," etc., does not refer to physical obstructions of the waters, but refers to political regulations which would hamper the freedom of commerce. In re Southern Wisconsin Power Co., 122 N. W. 801, 807, 140 Wis. 245.

Under Rev. Code 1852, p. 491, c. 60, § 1, as amended in 1893, "all public roads, causeways and bridges heretofore laid out as such, or made by lawful authority, or which have been used as such, and maintained at the public charge for twenty years, are declared to be 'common highways.'" The provision relates only to public highways existing when the act was passed and was intended to modify the common-law rule respecting roads claimed to be such by the indulgence of landowners, so as to prevent forfeiture of their lands. State v. Southard (Del.) 66 Atl. 372, 373, 6 Pennewill, 247.

COMMON INFORMERS

As informer, see Informer.

A "common informer" is one who, without being specially required by law or by virtue of his office, gives information of crimes, offenses, or misdemeanors which have been committed, in order to prosecute the offender. Bryant v. Skillman Hardware Co., 69 Atl. 23, 24, 76 N. J. Law, 45 (quoting and adopting definition in Bouv. Law Dict.).

"It would seem at the common law actions to recover penalties prescribed by the law were often prosecuted by what was known as 'common informers.'" Williams v. Wells, Fargo & Co. Express, 177 Fed. 352, 355, 101 C. C. A. 328, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1034, 21 Ann. Cas. 699 (citing 3 Bl. Comm. [Coolidge Ed.] 160).

COMMON INJURY

"Common injury," within the rule that for damages arising from a purely public nuisance producing no special damage to one as distinct from the rest of the public there can be no action, means an injury of the same kind and character and such as naturally arises from the nuisance. Wilcox v. Henry, 77 Pac. 1055, 1057, 35 Wash. 591.

"By 'common injury' is meant an injury of the same kind and character, and such as naturally and necessarily arises from a given cause, but not necessarily similar in degree or equal in amount. If the injury is the same in kind to all, it is a common injury, although one may actually be injured or damaged more than another." The injury or damage to one landowner from an unauthorized, illegal assertion by another landowner of a right to the exclusive possession of public land, is an injury suffered in common with all members of the public whose live stock grazes in the vicinity of such public lands, and, if a nuisance, is a public nuisance, which cannot be enjoined by the individual landowner unless he shows some special injury peculiar to himself, differing in kind, and not merely in extent and degree, from the general injury to the public. Anthony Wilkinson Live Stock Co. v. McIlquam, 83 Pac. 364, 371, 14 Wyo. 209, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 733 (quoting and adopting Wood on Nuisances, § 69).

COMMON LABORER

One who seeks to assert a laborer's lien for work performed under an employment as "superintendent and general manager" of a sawmill does not show a right to foreclosure; he not being a common laborer. Cox v. Fletcher & Adams, 63 S. E. 61, 5 Ga. App. 297.

To speak in a judicial decision of a witness who merely undertook to qualify himself by saying that he had been on the railroad off and on for 12 or 15 years, as being a "common laborer," was to use the phrase quoted as merely descriptive personæ. It could not have been intended to mean that a common laborer was not qualified to speak of the rate of speed of a going railroad train, since a common laborer, as such, on the witness stand in a nonexpert matter, is under no ban known to the law. Stotler v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 98 S. W. 509, 514, 200 Mo. 107.

COMMON LANDS

The phrase "common lands," in Laws 1818, c. 153, relative to the power by town trustees over common lands of the town, designates lands held in common by the proprietors and not in any technical sense, and the term is used interchangeably with the term "undivided lands." Trustees of Freeholders, etc., of Town of Southampton v. Beets, 47 N. Y. Supp. 697, 700, 21 App. Div. 435.

COMMON LAW

The "common law" imports a system of unwritten law, not evidenced by statute, but by tradition, and the opinions and judgments of the sages of the law. State ex rel. O'Malley v. Musick, 130 S. W. 398, 402, 145 Mo. App. 33.

The term "common law" does not have a fixed meaning, the law varying in different centuries and states; but, viewed objectively and at large as a system of deducing from litigated instances just, reasonable, and consistent rules, the common law never changes. Metropolitan Casualty Ins. Co. v. Clark, 129 N. W. 1065, 1068, 145 Wis. 181, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 717.

That which is termed the "common law" is simply the "right reason of the thing" in matters as to which there is no statutory enactment. When it is misconceived, and wrongly declared, the common rule is equally subject to be overruled, whether it is an ancient or recent decision. Geddis v. Northwestern Trust Co., 122 N. W. 587, 590, 23 S. D. 531 (citing Wilson v. Leary, 26 S. E. 630, 120 N. C. 90, 38 L. R. A. 240, 58 Am. St. Rep. 778).

"The 'common law' includes those principles, usages, and rules of action applicable to the government and security of persons and property, which do not rest for their authority upon any express and positive declaration of the will of the Legislature." Kansas v. Colorado, 27 Sup. Ct. 655, 667, 206 U. S. 46, 51 L. Ed. 956. (quoting 1 Kent. Comm. p. 471).

There is no "common law of the United States." When a common-law right is asserted, we look to the state in which the controversy originated. Judicial decisions of the state must determine how far the common law has been introduced in each state. Kennedy v. Delaware Cotton Co. (Del.) 58 Atl. 825, 828, 4 Pennewill, 477.

"The common law has been aptly called the 'lex non scripta,' because it is a rule prescribed by the common consent and agreement of the community as one applicable to its different relations, and capable of preserving the peace, good order, and harmony of society, and rendering unto every one that which of right belongs to him. Its sources are to be found in the usages, habits, manners, and customs of a people; its seat in the breast of the judges who are its expounders. * * * The common law of a country will never be entirely stationary, but will be modified and extended by analogy, construction, and custom, so as to embrace new relations." Moss Point Lumber Co. v. Board of Sup'rs of Harrison County, 42 South. 290, 309, 89 Miss. 448.

There is no common law of the United States. Rev. St. § 4965, imposing a penalty for infringement of the copyright of any map, picture, work of sculpture, etc., unlike section 4964, relating to books, does not give the proprietor a right to maintain a civil action at law to recover damages for the infringement, and, the exclusive right of property in such artistic productions being purely statutory, the remedy for infringement is limited to that prescribed by the statute; there being no common law of the United States which can be invoked to supplement such remedy. Walker v. Globe Newspaper Co., 130 Fed. 598, 596.

According to Kent, the "common law" is the common jurisprudence of the people of the United States, and was brought with them as colonists from England, and established here so far as it was adapted to our institutions and circumstances. From the time of their acquisition by the United States until 1868, the "common law" was prevalent over the separate portions of the region from which the state of Kansas was erected, under all civilized forms of governmental organization established for them; and from 1855 until 1868 the "common law," not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, the Kansas-Nebraska act, or statute law, was the rule of action and decision, any law, custom, or usage to the contrary notwithstanding. Clark v. Allaman, 80 Pac. 571, 575, 71 Kan. 206, 70 L. R. A. 971.

The phrase "common law," as used in Rev. St. Wyo. 1899, § 2695, providing that the common law of England as modified by judicial decisions, so far as the same is of general nature and not inapplicable, and all declaratory or remedial acts or statutes made in aid thereof, or to supply defects therein, shall be the rule of decision in the state, does not include the judicial decisions of England on a subject rendered subsequently to the independence of America; but, as evidence of what the common law as adopted is, such decisions are entitled to respect and in particular cases may properly be regarded as conclusive. The common law of England at the time of its adoption by the statute had no relation to a master's liability for injuries to a servant. Hence the decisions of the English courts prior to the adoption of the employers' liability act are not binding on the courts in a case involving the right of a servant to recover of his master for injuries received while in the service of the master. Johnson v. Union Pac. Coal Co., 76 Pac. 1089, 1093, 28 Utah, 46, 67 L. R. A. 506.

The common law of England will be applied here when it is not changed by statute, unless new conditions or a different public policy demand that it be modified, and the adoption by the people of the state of such parts of the common law as were in force April 20, 1777, does not compel adoption of principles inapplicable to different circumstances. Town of Brookhaven v. Smith, 80 N. E. 666, 667, 188 N. Y. 74.

The phrase "common law as practiced and understood," as used in St. 1779, providing that the common law as it is generally practiced and understood in the New England states be established as the common law of the state, probably meant as considered or altered by statute or by judicial construction and as it was adapted to the local circumstances and usages. Under V. S. § 896, providing that so much of the common law of England as is applicable to the local situation and circumstances and not repugnant to the Constitution and laws shall be the law of the state, St. 9 Anne, c. 20, providing that in mandamus to municipal corporations and their officers relator may plead to or traverse the material facts contained in the return, to which defendant may reply, take issue, or demur, and authorize such further proceedings as could have been had if relator had brought his action on the case for a false return, is a part of the common law of Vermont, as is St. 4 Anne, c. 16, § 4, making it lawful for any defendant or tenant in any action or suit in a court of record to plead as many several matters in distinct pleas as he thinks necessary. Clement v. Graham, 63 Atl. 146, 148, 78 Vt. 290.

COMMON-LAW ACTION OR CASE

Mandamus is a common-law action. People ex rel. Baumann v. Gest, 148 Ill. App. 560, 565.

"Common-law cases" embrace only cases which were the subject of real, personal, or mixed actions according to the practice of the English common-law courts, and not those proceedings which were not known to the common law and are only authorized under statute, such as possessory warrants and the like. Lippitt v. City of Albany, 63 S. E. 33, 34, 131 Ga. 629 (citing and quoting De Lamar v. Dollar, 57 S. E. 85, 128 Ga. 57).

The phrase "common-law causes," as used in Rev. St. § 916, providing that the party recovering a judgment in any common-law cause in any Circuit or District Court shall be entitled to similar remedies on the same by execution or otherwise to reach the property of the judgment debtor as are provided in like causes by the laws of the state in which such court is held, does not apply to judgments in criminal cases. Allen v. Clark, 126 Fed. 738, 740, 62 C. C. A. 58.

COMMON-LAW ARBITRATION

See Arbitration.

COMMON-LAW ASSIGNMENT

Under Comp. Laws, § 9539, providing that all assignments commonly called common-law assignments for the benefit of creditors shall be void unless they shall be without preferences as among creditors, and shall be of all the property of the assignor not exempt from execution, the term "common-law assignment for the benefit of creditors" imports a writing amounting to a conveyance of the title to all or substantially all of a debtor's property to another in trust for the purpose of closing out his business, converting his property into money and distributing it among his creditors to the extent of payment, if possible, and, if not, proportionally or with prescribed preferences. A debtor who had several creditors gave one of them an order on a school board which owed him money, as follows: "Board of Education City: Please pay to Norton Bros. or order the sum of five hundred and forty-two dollars, and charge same to my account, and oblige, Leonard Gonhue." The order was given with the agreement that the payees should collect the money, pay their own claim, and pay the remainder to certain other creditors of the drawer whose names were furnished. The aggregate of these claims was more than the amount of the order, and the drawer had other debts amounting to about $700 and other property worth from $200 to $300. Held, that the order was not a common-law assignment for the benefit of creditors within Comp. Laws, § 9539, providing that such assignments must be without preferences as among creditors, and must be of all of the property of the assignor. Charles Maloney & Co. v. Gonhue, 116 N. W. 436, 152 Mich. 325.

COMMON-LAW BOND

"Common-law bonds" and "statutory bonds" are to be distinguished, in that the latter conform to a statute, while the former do not, though so intended. City of Mt. Vernon v. Brett, 86 N. E. 6, 10, 193 N. Y. 276.

COMMON-LAW CRIMES

See Common-Law Murder.

Embezzlement as, see Embezzle—Embezzlement.

It is well settled that there are no "common-law offenses" against the United States. United States v. Hoover, 133 Fed. 950, 952.

There is no "common law" of the United States in criminal cases; each crime being the creation of the statute defining it. It is competent for Congress to designate that as perjury which, in a state where the common law prevails, would be treated as false swearing. United States v. Hardison, 135 Fed. 419, 422.

There are no "common-law crimes" in Ohio. Whenever the Legislature has deemed it necessary to penalize the acts of one which are done and performed after the commission of the principal offense, it has enacted statutes to meet the case, and such acts are made a substantive offense as distinguished from the relation of accessory after the fact as recognized at common law, as in cases for receiving stolen goods and the like. State v. Lingafelter, 83 N. E. 897, 898, 77 Ohio St. 523.

COMMON-LAW DEDICATION

See Dedication.

Statutory dedication distinguished, see Statutory Dedication.

COMMON-LAW JURISDICTION

See Error or Mistake as to Common-Law or Equity Jurisdiction.

Courts having "common-law jurisdiction," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 2165, relating to naturalization, are those which have the power to punish offenses, enforce rights, or redress wrongs recognized by the common law, or courts which are governed by the principles and rules of the common law. The term is used to distinguish courts which have some common-law jurisdiction from those which have no jurisdiction save in equity, in admiralty, or in matters not involving offenses or rights under the common law. Levin v. United States, 128 Fed. 826, 832, 63 C. C. A. 476.

COMMON-LAW LIEN

See Lien.

A "common-law lien" is "a right in one man to retain that which is in his possession belonging to another till demands of him (the person in possession) are satisfied." * * * It is founded upon the immemorial recognition of the common law of a right to it in particular cases, or it may result from the established usage of a particular trade." Nicolette Lumber Co. v. People's Coal Co., 62 Atl. 1060, 1061, 213 Pa. 379, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 327, 110 Am. St. Rep. 550, 5 Ann. Cas. 387.

"Common-law liens arise by implication of law, and not by express contract." Where a corporation advanced money to a bankrupt with which to purchase tobacco to be shipped to the corporation for sale, under an agreement that the corporation was to have a lien on the tobacco so purchased, and that the debt for advanced commissions, insurance, etc., was to be "paid out of the proceeds of the sales when made," the lien of the corporation was not a common-law lien, personal to the corporation, but was an equitable lien, which attached to the claim and passed to the corporation's successor, which purchased its assets on its insolvency. Cincinnati Tobacco Warehouse Co. v. Leslie & Whitaker's Trustee, 78 S. W. 413, 415, 117 Ky. 478, 64 L. R. A. 219.

COMMON-LAW MARRIAGE

See Marriage Per Verba de Futuro Cum Copula.

A "common-law marriage" is one not consummated by ceremony but arising out of express contract or continued cohabitation as man and wife. In re Imboden's Estate, 107 S. W. 400, 404, 128 Mo. App. 555.

Under Code, § 3139, defining marriage as a civil contract, and section 3145, declaring who may solemnize marriages, a common-law marriage consisting of a present agreement to be husband and wife, followed by cohabitation as such, is valid. Pegg v. Pegg, 115 N. W. 1027, 1028, 138 Iowa, 572.

A "common-law marriage" is defined as any mutual agreement between the parties to be husband and wife in present, especially where it is followed by cohabitation, if there is no legal disability on the part of either to contract matrimony. In re Wells'

Estate, 108 N. Y. Supp. 164, 166, 123 App. Div. 79 (citing 2 Kent's Comm. 87; Rose v. Clark [N. Y.] 8 Paige, 574, 580).

To constitute a "common-law marriage" there must be an agreement expressed or implied to become man and wife, and, while cohabitation is one of the evidences of marriage, cohabitation without the agreement to become man and wife does not raise that relation. Where a man and woman commenced to cohabit at a time when the woman was the wife of another, and there was no evidence of any subsequent change in their intention as to the relations existing between them, the fact that after she secured a divorce they held themselves out as husband and wife was not sufficient to establish a common-law marriage. Edelstein v. Brown, 80 S. W. 1027, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 625.

A "common-law marriage" is not effected by occasional cohabitation after an express promise to have a marriage ceremony performed, which is not fulfilled, but cohabitation and reputation conjoined are the essential facts from which a presumption of common-law marriage arises. In re Calley's Estate, 75 Atl. 672, 673, 226 Pa. 469 (citing In re Yardley's Estate, 75 Pa. 207).

Living together as man and wife under a mutual agreement to live in the relation constitutes a "common-law marriage" under the laws of Texas, which do not make a license a prerequisite to a valid marriage. Knight v. State, 116 S. W. 58, 59, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 243.

An agreement to live together as husband and wife, made with the intention of being carried into effect, is not sufficient to constitute a "common-law marriage," unless it is acted upon by the parties living together as husband and wife. Sorensen v. Sorensen, 100 N. W. 930, 933, 68 Neb. 483.

A marriage may be good and valid at common law, though not solemnized in any particular form; it being sufficient if there is an actual and mutual agreement to enter into a matrimonial relation between parties capable in law of making such a contract. White v. Hill (Ala.) 58 South. 444, 447.

A "marriage" is valid at common law where the parties of marriageable ages and under no legal disability agree to live together as husband and wife, and the agreement is consummated by their living together as husband and wife. Porter v. United States, 104 S. W. 855, 857, 7 Ind. T. 616.

A common-law marriage prior to the act of 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 317), amending the law on the subject is established where what is done and said evidences an intention by the parties to assume the marriage status, and the parties thereupon enter into the relation of husband and wife. Herald v. Moker, 100 N. E. 277, 278, 257 Ill. 27.

The essential element of a "common-law marriage" is a mutual agreement of the man and woman to become then and thenceforth husband and wife. Wofford v. State, 132 S. W. 929, 931, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 624.

COMMON-LAW MURDER

"Common-law murder" may be committed without any actual design to take life, and drunkenness can be no defense to that charge; but, under a statute which divides murder into degrees, drunkenness may reduce a homicide from murder to manslaughter where it is so extreme as to prevent the existence of an intention to kill. State v. Rumble, 105 Pac. 1, 3, 81 Kan. 16, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 376.

COMMON-LAW REMEDY

Under federal Judiciary Act Sept. 24, 1789, c. 20, § 9, 1 Stat. 76, giving the federal District Courts admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, but "saving to suitors a common-law remedy, where the common law is competent to give it," the quoted clause is intended to save the right of action in those courts which follow the common law as distinguished from admiralty proceedings; the words "common-law remedy" not necessarily implying remedy obtainable in a common-law court, or being equivalent to "means employed to enforce a right or redress an injury," and they are not limited to such causes of action as existed at common law at the passage of such act. Johnson v. Westerfield's Adm'r, 135 S. W. 425, 427, 143 Ky. 10.

COMMON-LAW SPECIALTY

See Specialty.

There are two classes of specialty contracts in the English law—"common-law specialties" and "mercantile specialties." The first class includes bonds and covenants, i. e., instruments under seal; the second class includes bills and notes, and policies of insurance, and possibly other mercantile instruments. Purcell v. Armour Packing Co., 61 S. E. 138, 141, 4 Ga. App. 253.

COMMON-LAW WRIT

See Scire Facias.

COMMON NIGHT WALKER

The words "common night walker" have a technical meaning in law, and in a complaint charging such offense it is not necessary to allege particular acts; the offense not consisting of particular acts but of a habitual practice evidenced by a series of acts. State v. Russell, 14 R. I. 506.

COMMON NUISANCE

See Public or Common Nuisance.

Private nuisance distinguished, See Private Nuisance.

COMMON OF WAYS IMPLIED

Most "common of ways implied" are ways from necessity, as, where one sells another land so surrounded by other land as to be inaccessible except by passing over such grantor's land, the law implies a grant of way over such land. Graham v. Olson, 92 S. W. 728, 729, 116 Mo. App. 272.

COMMON OR CORPORATE SEAL

A "common or corporate seal" at common law was the seal of a corporation by which the corporate body manifested its acts as such. Morrill's Adm'x v. Catholic Order of Foresters, 65 Atl. 526, 527, 79 Vt. 479.

COMMON PLEAS

See Court of Common Pleas.

COMMON PROSTITUTE

A woman who submits herself to indiscriminate sexual intercourse without hire is as much a "common prostitute" as one who does so solely for hire. State v. Thuna, 109 Pac. 331, 59 Wash. 689, 140 Am. St. Rep. 902.

COMMON PROSTITUTION

See House of Common Prostitution.

COMMON RIGHT

"It [common right] is so called because it exists in all the subjects by the common law, a universal custom; and is thus distinguished from the same right, claimed by a local custom in favor of the inhabitants of a particular place." Strother v. Lucas, 12 Pet. (37 U. S.) 410, 437, 9 L. Ed. 1137.

COMMON ROAD

Code, § 422, subd. 16, empowers the board of supervisors to discontinue any state or territorial highway, and subdivision 17 empowers them to establish or discontinue any county highway through or within the county. Section 751 empowers cities and towns to establish or vacate streets and alleys. Section 48, subd. 5, provides that the words "highway" and "road" include public bridges, and may be held equivalent to the words "county road," "county way," "common road," and "state road." Section 1507 provides that all public streets of villages are a part of the road. Held that, where a plat was made of land dividing it into lots, streets, and alleys prior to the incorporation of a town embracing the land platted, the streets and alleys became county roads subject to the jurisdiction of the board of supervisors, and though after the incorporation of the town the control may have passed to the city council, yet the incorporation of the town having been vacated, the control of the streets and alleys reverted to the board of supervisors. Chrisman v. Brandes, 112 N. W. 833, 835, 137 Iowa, 433.

The authority granted to a railroad by the territorial Legislature of Colorado, by act passed February 9, 1865 (Priv. Laws 1865, p. 111), to construct its railroad on or across "common roads" did not include streets of the several municipalities through which the road might pass. Colorado & Southern Ry. Co. v. City of Ft. Collins, 121 Pac. 747, 749, 52 Colo. 281, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 646.

COMMON SCHOOL

System of common schools, see System.
See, also, Public School.

"The word 'common,' as applied to schools, bears the broadest and most comprehensive signification. It is equivalent to 'public,' subject only to such general statutory regulations as are prescribed by the Legislature. They are 'common' to children in the sense public highways are common to all persons who choose to ride or drive thereon, observing only the law of the road." People ex rel. Brooklyn Children's Aid Soc. v. Hendrickson, 104 N. Y. Supp. 122, 124, 54 Misc. Rep. 337 (quoting and adopting People v. Board of Education of City of Brooklyn [N. Y.] 13 Barb. 400, 401).

A "common school," within Const. art. 9, §§ 2, 3, is one that is common to all children of proper age and capacity, free, and subject to, and under the control of, the qualified voters of a school district. School Dist. No. 20, Spokane County, v. Bryan, 99 Pac. 28, 29, 51 Wash. 498, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1033.

Const. art. 6, § 2, declares that the Legislature shall encourage the promotion of intellectual, moral, scientific, and agricultural improvement by establishing a uniform system of common schools. Held, that the term "common schools" means free common schools. The phrase "common schools" is synonymous with "public schools." Both have been defined by lexicographers and by judicial interpretation to mean "free schools." In 25 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of L., it is said: "Common or public schools are, as a general rule, schools supported by general taxation, open to all of suitable age and attainments, free of expense, and under the control of agents appointed by the voters." Mr. Black, in his Law Dictionary, defines "common schools" to be "schools maintained at the public expense and administered by a bureau of the state, district, or municipal government, for the gratuitous education of the children of all citizens without distinction." Mr. Anderson, in his Law Dictionary, says: "Common or public schools are schools supported by general taxation, open to all free of expense, and under the control of agents appointed by the voters." Rapalje & Lawrence define "common schools" to be "public or free schools, maintained at public expense, for the elementary education of children of all classes." Mr. Bouvier, in his Law Dictionary, says that "common schools" are "schools for general elementary instruction, free to all the public." Chancellor Kent, in his Commentaries (volume 2, p. 195), in discussing free common schools in the several states of the Union, on the continent, and in many European countries, uses the phrase "common schools" exclusively. Board of Education of City of Lawrence v. Dick, 78 Pac. 812, 814, 70 Kan. 434 (citing Jenkins v. Inhabitants of Andover, 103 Mass. 94; Merrick v. Inhabitants of Amherst [Mass.] 12 Allen, 509; Roach v. Board, etc., of St. Louis Public Schools, 77 Mo. 484; Collins v. Henderson, 74 Ky. [11 Bush.] 74; Irvin v. Gregory, 13 S. E. 120, 86 Ga. 605; Roach v. Board, etc., of St. Louis Public Schools, 7 Mo. App. 587; People v. Board of Education of City of Brooklyn [N. Y.] 13 Barb. 400).

Under the legislation relating to the public schools of the state, the charter of the city of Troy, a city of the second class, as amended, and the Constitution, providing for the establishment of a public school system, the schools of the city of Troy are common schools, and a part of the common school system of the state. In re Harris, 109 N. Y. Supp. 983, 985, 58 Misc. Rep. 297.

Graded schools are "common schools." Jeffries v. Board of Trustees of Columbia Graded Common School, 122 S. W. 813, 815, 135 Ky. 488.

The college created by Laws 1910, c. 119, creating a state normal college, is neither a "private school" nor a "common school," within Const. 1890, § 90, subd. "p," prohibiting any local law for the management or support of any private or common school. Turner v. City of Hattiesburg, 53 South. 681, 683, 98 Miss. 337; Same v. County of Forrest (Miss.) 53 South. 684.

"The phrases 'public schools' and 'common schools' have acquired under the legislation and practice a well-settled significance. They are never applied to the higher seminaries of learning, such as incorporated academies and colleges." In re Townsend, 88 N. E. 41, 43, 195 N. Y. 214, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 194, 16 Ann. Cas. 921 (quoting and adopting definition in Merrick v. Inhabitants of Amherst, 12 Allen [94 Mass.] 500).

The term "public schools," as used in Const. Okl. art. 13, § 5, providing that supervision of instruction in the public schools shall be vested in a board of education, means the "common schools" and does not include the University of Oklahoma; the terms having acquired in popular significance in the United States the same meaning and being used interchangeably, and there being nothing apparent in the nature and manner of the use of the term "public schools" in the Constitution to indicate that it is intended to attach to it any other significance than its well-known popular one. Regents of University v. Board of Education, 95-Pac. 429, 432, 20 Okl. 809; Elsberry v.

A high school is part of the uniform system of "common schools" provided for by Const. art. 6, § 2. Board of Education of City of Topeka v. Welch, 33 Pac. 654, 657, 51 Kan. 792.

Where a high school maintained by a district was a department of the common schools, under the Constitution, which declares that the General Assembly shall provide a system of free schools, the children of the district and of other districts of school age sustained no different relation to the high school from that sustained to any of the grades or other departments of the schools, but the entire system of schools altogether constituted the "common schools" of the district. People v. Moore, 88 N. E. 979, 980, 240 Ill. 408.

Model training school

A model training school, intended to be established by Laws 1907, p. 181, c. 97, by drafting as many pupils as are necessary from the school district in which each normal school is situate, is not a common school within Const. art. 9, §§ 2, 3, requiring that the revenue for common schools shall be exclusively applied to the use and support thereof, and hence so much of such chapter as provides (section 4) for an apportionment of the funds of the school district to the support of such training school contravenes the Constitution. School Dist. No. 20, Spokane County v. Bryan, 99 Pac. 28, 29, 51 Wash. 498, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1033.

COMMON SHOW

Under section 51 of the Greater New York charter, and sections 305 and 352 of ordinances passed pursuant to such charter provision, providing that a license may be required of all common shows, and providing that a "common show" shall be deemed to include Ferris wheel, gravity steeplechase, chute, scenic cave, bicycle carrousel, scenic railway, striking machines, switchback, merry-go-round, puppet shows, ball games, and all "other shows of like character," the giving of a free moving picture show in an ice cream saloon and candy store, while not within the term "other shows of like character," is included in the words "common shows," since those words are not limited by the list given, but include many others not given. Weistblatt v. Bingham, 109 N. Y. Supp. 545, 546, 58 Misc. Rep. 323.

COMMON STOCK

Preferred stock distinguished

Stock Corporation Law, § 47, provides that "every domestic stock corporation may issue 'preferred stock' and 'common stock' and different classes of preferred stock, if the certificate of incorporation so provides, or by the consent of the holders of record of two-thirds of the capital stock, given at a meeting called for that purpose, upon notice such as is required for the annual meeting of the corporation. * * * And the corporation may, upon the written request of the holders of any 'preferred stock,' by a two-thirds vote of its directors, exchange the same for 'common stock,' and issue certificates for common stock therefor, upon such valuation as may have been agreed upon in the certificate of organization of such corporation, or the issue of such 'preferred stock,' or share for share, but the total amount of such capital stock shall not be increased thereby." Held, that the "preferred stock" represented a contribution of capital precisely the same as "common stock," differing only as to the preferred right of the holders to share in dividends or interest. People ex rel. S. Cohn & Co. v. Miller, 72 N. E. 525, 526, 180 N. Y. 16.

COMMON STREET

"A 'common street' and public highway are the same, and any way which is common to all the people may be called a highway." Skinner v. Town of Weathersfield, 63 Atl. 142, 143, 78 Vt. 410 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Wilkinson, 2 Vt. 480, 21 Am. Dec. 560).

COMMON SURETY

A "common surety" is one which is engaged in business for profit and on terms and conditions fixed by itself. Long Brothers Grocery Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 110 S. W. 29, 31, 130 Mo. App. 421.

COMMON TOOLS OF TRADE

The phrase "common tools of trade," as used in an exemption statute, has uniformly been construed to refer, not to tools in common use by the debtor, regardless of their value, but to those simple and inexpensive appliances used in his trade. A dentist's chair is not exempt from levy and sale as a common tool of trade. Burt v. Stocks Coal Co., 46 S. E. 828, 829, 119 Ga. 629, 100 Am. St. Rep. 203.

COMMON TRAVELING PACE

Under Gen. Laws 1896, c. 74, § 5, as amended by Pub. Laws 1901, p. 336, c. 925, providing that every person who shall ride or drive faster than a common traveling pace in certain cities, or the compact part of any town, shall be fined, etc., a "common traveling pace" means a pace which is reasonable and proper considering the place and circumstances, an ordinary pace, a pace recognized by reasonable men as a common traveling pace. State v. Smith, 69 Atl. 1061, 1063, 29 R. I. 245; Same v. McCabe (R. I.) 69 Atl. 1064; Same v. Peterson, Id.; Same v. Samuels, Id.; Same v. Durfee, Id.; Same v. Knott, Id.

COMMON USAGE

The phrase according to "common usage," as used in Rev. St. § 866, authorizing the court to "grant a dedimus potestatem to take depositions according to 'common usage,' means according to the existing practice, whether at law or in equity; that is, by a commission upon interrogatories and cross-interrogatories, as was the common usage both at the time when section 866 was passed in 1874, and at the time of the passage of the judiciary act of 1789, in which substantially the same provision was enacted." Encyclopædia Britannica Co. v. Werner Co., 138 Fed. 461, 462 (quoting United States v. Fifty Boxes and Packages of Lace, 92 Fed. 602).

COMMON USE

A street railway company obtained from a borough the right to use a certain street; the borough reserving the right to reserve the "common use" of such street to another company in common with the first company, and the street being sufficiently broad to accommodate two parallel tracks. Held, that the "common use" of the street did not mean common use of the first company's tracks, and that the borough could not require a later company having permission to use the same street to so lay its track as to straddle the tracks of the other company. Commonwealth v. Bond, 63 Atl. 741, 742, 214 Pa. 307, 112 Am. St. Rep. 745.

COMMON WOMEN

"A condition attached to a devise to sons, that if at any time they should marry 'common women' then their interest in the estate devised should terminate, was void for uncertainty. The word 'common' means not excellent or distinguished in tone or quality; ordinary; commonplace; plebeian; hackneyed; coarse; low; unclean; or given to habits of lewdness. These are some of its accepted definitions, and we can easily see from them that its meaning has a very wide range and is capable of almost indefinite expansion. It certainly embraces a very large class of people of different types and characteristics, and, apart from any objection that, perhaps, may properly be urged against the condition as being too comprehensive by reason of the broad signification of the word which was used to describe the persons intended, it has not the element of certainty which the law requires, as it refers to different classes of individuals, without in any way indicating which one of those classes was meant." Watts v. Griffin, 50 S. E. 218, 220, 137 N. C. 572.

COMMONS

See, also, Park.

"The word 'commons,' as used in 2 Wagner's St. 1872, p. 1314, § 1 (Rev. St. 1899, § 6004; Ann. St. 1906, p. 3032), means lands included in or belonging to a town, set apart for public use." State ex inf. Rosenberger v. Town of Bellflower, 108 S. W. 117, 119, 129 Mo. App. 138 (quoting and adopting definition in State ex rel. Patterson v. McReynolds, 61 Mo. 203).

The terms "common fields" and "commons" are of French origin, and were used in Acts Cong. June 13, 1812, c. 99, May. 26, 1824, c. 184, and Jan. 27, 1831, c. 12, relating to title to such lands in Louisiana Purchase territory—"common fields" to designate fields cultivated outside a village by the inhabitants, in severalty, though generally under a common fence; and "commons" to designate a large body of land held in common and used for pasturage, fuel, etc. City of St. Louis v. St. Louis Blast Furnace Co., 138 S. W. 641, 643, 235 Mo. 1.

Rev. St. 1909, § 8529, provides that, if a majority of the inhabitants of a portion of a city or town desire incorporation, they may present a petition setting forth the metes and bounds of their city and town, and commons, and pray that they may be incorporated, and for the preservation and regulation of any commons. Held, that the word "commons," as so used, should not be construed to mean the narrow rectangular pieces of ground appertaining to French and Spanish villages as anciently established, and hence as obsolete and without effect, but to mean land held in common, according to modern acceptance, as by all the members of a community, a tract intended for pleasure, pasturage, etc., the use of which was to belong to the public or a number of persons, including parks, squares, and public grounds intended for general public purposes, and hence a petition for incorporation omitting all reference to "commons" was insufficient to confer jurisdiction on the county court to grant incorporation. State ex rel. Major v. Wood, 135 S. W. 932, 933, 934, 233 Mo. 357.

The word "commons," in Rev. St. 1889, § 1666, providing for the incorporation of towns and villages on petition of over two-thirds of the inhabitants, setting forth the metes and bounds of their village and commons, means public grounds belonging or appurtenant to the town or village, and not farms or agricultural lands in the vicinity. State ex rel. White v. Small, 109 S. W. 1079, 1081, 131 Mo. App. 470.

COMMUNICATE

See Paid Communication.

Any communication, see Any.

written statement by reading it to him and delivering it to him, that statement has been "made to" such other person, within the meaning of the law. The words "made to" do not necessarily imply that the one communicating and using the statement also composed it or made it up. "Made known" is a synonym of "communicate," according to Soule's Dictionary of English Synonyms, 84. The verb "make" has many significations and conveys many meanings, among which is "to put forth; give out; deliver." Also, "to inform; apprise." Century Dictionary. Thus when a person seeking credit hands to a merchant a materially false written statement concerning his financial condition, no matter who composed and signed it, if it be one calculated to deceive, and then reads it to such merchant, and thereby obtains property from him on credit, he has obtained property on credit upon a materially false statement in writing "made to" such person. In re Aldridge, 168 Fed. 93, 98, 99.

The word "communicating," when used to refer to the different portions of dwelling houses, whether constructed originally under one roof or not, means houses so connected by some structure forming a part of both as to afford a passageway without going into the yard or getting on the ground. Under an insurance policy covering a two-story frame building and its additions adjoining and communicating, a servant's house 150 feet distant from the two-story building, although occupied exclusively by domestic servants employed in the dwelling house and connected therewith by a system of call bells, was not an addition adjoining and communicating. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Tye, 58 S. E. 110, 112, 1 Ga. App. 380.

An indictment charging that defendant "did by a written communication threaten injury to A. G., etc.," is a sufficient allegation that there was a delivery to A. G., being substantially the words of the statute (L. O. L. § 1929); a threat being a declaration of a purpose to work an injury to another and designedly put forth by the individual making the threat, either directly or indirectly, so as to operate upon the mind of the person threatened, and a "communication" being that which is communicated or imparted; intelligence; news; a verbal or written message; and these two words in the indictment include not only the utterance of the threat, but also the bringing the same to the notice of the person threatened. State v. Scott, 128 Pac. 441, 442, 63 Or. 444 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 8964).

COMMUNICATION OF DISEASE

COMMUNICATIONS

See Confidential Communication; Personal Communication; Privileged Communication.

The terms "transactions" and "communications," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 829, which provides that upon the trial of an action a party or person interested in the event shall not be examined as a witness in his behalf or interest, against the executor, administrator, or survivor of a deceased person, concerning a personal transaction or communication between the witness and the decedent, embraces every variety of affairs which can form the subject of negotiations, interviews, or actions between two persons, and includes every method by which one person can derive impressions or information from the conduct, condition, or language of another. Wilber v. Gillespie, 112 N. Y. Supp. 20, 25, 127 App. Div. 604 (quoting and adopting definition in Holcomb v. Holcomb, 95 N. Y. 316); Holland v. Holland, 90 N. Y. Supp. 208, 211, 98 App. Div. 366 (citing Holcomb v. Holcomb, 95 N. Y. 316).

A claimant against decedent's estate cannot prove by his own testimony either an express contract for services, which would be a "communication" with the deceased, nor an implied contract, by showing a "personal transaction" as services rendered. Knight v. Everett, 67 S. E. 328, 152 N. C. 118.

On the issue as to whether a will was the result of an insane delusion, conceived by testator towards his wife about the time of his mother's death, testimony of the wife that, while traveling to the mother's funeral on a train, the testator sat several seats behind his wife, and that every time she looked back at him he was "gazing" at her, was not inadmissible as being a "communication" with the testator. Lanham v. Lanham (Tex.) 146 S. W. 635, 638, 641.

The court did not err in permitting Mrs. Hilley, the plaintiff, to testify, over objections made, as follows: "Captain Hall [the husband and agent of Mrs. Hall, the defendant] came to my house while Mr. Shindlebower was living; was there while Mr. Shindlebower was there on one occasion before Shindlebower left only a few days. With Captain Hall was his son, Dr. Hall. Heard no conversation between my husband and Captain Hall, or Mr. Shindlebower and Captain Hall, on that occasion in regard to the property, except Captain mentioned something about the cistern. Captain Hall inquired of me the dimensions of the house. I gave them to him—how many rooms there were, and the sizes of them. Nothing said on that occasion by me and Mr. Hilley to Captain Hall with reference to the improvements, only what was said concerning the back porch and the cistern. My husband spoke to Mr. Hall's son; said we had one of the best cisterns in Polk county, as well as I recollect; said he put a good substantial porch there. Mr. Hilley just spoke up in this way—says: 'I have built one of the best cisterns in Polk county, and I have built a porch.'" This testimony was objected to on the grounds: (a) "That it occurred in the presence of W. M. Shindlebower. (b) That said testimony about improvements tended to set up the alleged title of the plaintiff, and to affect adversely the defendant's title; it appearing that W. M. Shindlebower was dead." Such conversation was neither a "transaction" nor a "communication" between the plaintiff and the deceased, or between the deceased and any one else. Ray v. Camp, 36 S. E. 242, 110 Ga. 818 (2); Reid v. Sewell, 36 S. E. 937, 111 Ga. 880 (1); Hall v. Hilley, 76 S. E. 566, 139 Ga. 13.

Vituperative epithets and personal abuse transpiring between husband and wife alone are not communications within the rule excluding the testimony of husband or wife as to communications made between each other in the absence of any other person, and may be proved in an action for divorce. Meyer v. Meyer, 138 S. W. 70, 72, 158 Mo. App. 299.

Under Civ. Code Prac. § 606, prohibiting one to testify to a "communication" by a spouse, in a will contest, based on undue influence exercised over testatrix by decedent, her husband, it was improper to allow their grandson's former wife to testify that during her marriage her husband showed her letters from decedent in which he said that her husband should not have any share in decedent's or testatrix's estate unless he did certain things, and that her husband afterwards destroyed the letters; the word "communication" meaning any information acquired by one spouse from the other through the marital relation. Wall's Ex'r v. Dimmitt, 117 S. W. 299, 300, 132 Ky. 747.

In an action for the alienation of a husband's affections, statements to the wife by the husband in the absence of any other person, indicating that defendant was trying to separate the wife and the husband, are within Civ. Code Prac. § 606, forbidding either husband or wife to testify as to any communication between them during the marriage; the word "communication" embracing all knowledge on the part of one or the other, obtained by reason of the marriage relation, and which but for the confidence growing out of it would not have been known to the party. Leucht v. Leucht, 112 S. W. 845, 847, 129 Ky. 700, 130 Am. St. Rep. 486.

COMMUNITY

The term "community" or "neighborhood" is not susceptible to exact, geographical definition, but means, in a general way, where the person is well known and has established a reputation. In impeaching a witness by proof of bad character in the "neighborhood" or "community," the inquiry is not necessarily confined to the domicile, but may extend to any community or society in which he has a well-known or established reputation. Where a witness resided in Baltimore, but had an established business in Mobile and spent much of his time there, it was permissible to testify as to knowledge of his character in Mobile. Richard P. Baer & Co. v. Mobile Cooperage & Box Mfg. Co., 49 South. 92, 93, 96, 159 Ala. 491.

Under Const. § 183 (Va. Code 1904, p. cclxvii), providing that the exemption of educational institutions from taxation conferred by subsection "d" shall not apply to any industrial school, individual or corporate, not the property of the state, which does work for compensation, or manufactures and sells articles in the community in which such school is located, provided that the school may do work for or sell its own products or any other articles to any of its students or employees, the sale of articles manufactured at such institute in the market of Newport News, located eight or nine miles from such institute, did not constitute a sale in the same "community," within such section, though the institute and the city were connected by an electric railway. Commonwealth v. Trustees of Hampton Normal & Agricultural Institute, 56 S. E. 594, 597, 106 Va. 614.

Act approved February 23, 1907, provides that whenever 50 or a majority of the owners, who are also the owners of a majority of the lands of any farming or other community or neighborhood within this state, which lands lie in one body, and are liable to overflow or damage from the waters of any unnavigable stream, and may be protected by the same system of works, desire to provide for the protection of such lands, they may petition the board of supervisors in the county in which the lands of the community or neighborhood and within the proposed district or the greater portion thereof are situated for the organization of such protection district. Held, that these provisions do not limit the area of any district to a territory which might afterwards be determined by a court to be a single community or neighborhood, or give the court power to declare the district organization invalid if it should find that the boundaries included two or more such communities or neighborhoods, as the term "community" refers rather to the people who reside in a given locality, in more or less proximity, than to the territory which includes them, and the term "neighborhood" describes a territory of indefinite size and without fixed limits, and therefore a district may be organized which embraces two or more communities or neighborhoods, provided the lands lie in one body, and are liable to damage from the same stream and may be protected therefrom by the same system of works. Keech v. Joplin, 106 Pac. 222, 227, 157 Cal. 1; Timmons v. Same, 106 Pac. 223, 157 Cal. 15; Lamb v. McMullen, 106 Pac. 229, 157 Cal. 14.

The location and operation of a railroad upon a public highway may occasion incidental inconvenience and injury to an abutting landowner, but, until it cuts off or materially interrupts his means of access to his property or imposes some additional burden on his soil, his injury is the same in kind as that suffered by the community in general and he cannot recover in an action therefor, and by the term "community in general" it is not meant those who use the street and yet reside at such a distance of the railroad as to suffer none of the annoyances incident to its construction and operation, but it means those who reside in the immediate vicinity of the railroad and are subject to the inconveniences incident to such a structure. Scrutchfield v. Choctaw, O. & W. R. Co., 88 Pac. 1048, 1049, 18 Okl. 308, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 496.

As partnership

See Partnership.

COMMUNITY DEBT

A debt incurred by the husband during the existence of the marriage relation is prima facie a "community debt," and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, a judgment for the debt will be deemed to have established it as such. Dever v. Selz, 87 S. W. 891, 892, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 558.

A man, during his first marriage, acquired slaves constituting his separate property. After the death of his second wife, he executed an instrument, disclosing that during his second marriage he was, on a designated date, indebted to his children for the amount of the proceeds of a sale of the slaves, as their guardian, and executed a note to a daughter for the amount of her share, with interest from the designated date, and executed a deed of trust to secure such note, reciting that it was given for the daughter's portion of the slaves. Held, to show that he had given the slaves to his children, and that the obligation evidenced by the note was a community debt created during marriage, and the deed of trust was enforceable against the community property owned by himself and his second wife. A "community debt" is a liability made by a husband during marriage. Word v. Colley (Tex.) 143 S. W. 257, 259.

COMMUNITY HOUSE

See Apartment House.

A flat or flat house is really a "community house" designed for more than an individual and his household. Lignot v. Jaekle, 65 Atl. 221, 224, 72 N. J. Eq. 233 (quoting and adopting definition in Skillman v. Sma-theurst, 40 Atl. 855, 57 N. J. Eq. 1).

COMMUNITY OF INTEREST

"Community of interest," in a common title or security, implies a mutual obligation not to impair it. It creates such a relation of trust and confidence that it is inequitable to permit one of the parties in interest to do anything to the prejudice of others, and when one of them obtains superior titles or liens he holds them in trust for the benefit of all who share in the common title or security, and who within a reasonable time after notice of his purchase contribute their share of his necessary expenditure." Booker v. Crocker, 132 Fed. 7, 8, 65 C. O. A. 627.

COMMUNITY OF PROFITS

"Community of profits," in reference to a partnership, means a proprietorship in them, distinguished from a personal claim upon the other associate; in other words, a property right in them from the start in one associate, as much as in another. Stipulating for a compensation in proportion to the profits or payable out of them will not confer the privileges or import the liabilities incident to a partnership, unless it confers a jus in re, as distinguished from a demand or chose in action. Altgelt v. Alamo Nat. Bank (Tex.) 79 S. W. 582, 586.

"Community of profits" means a proprietorship in them as distinguished from a personal claim upon the other associate. In other words, a property right in them from the start in one associate as in the other. Breinig v. Sparrow, 80 N. E. 37, 38, 39 Ind. App. 455.

COMMUNITY PROPERTY

Property acquired by either spouse after marriage is presumed to be "community property." Colpe v. Lindblom, 106 Pac. 634, 637, 57 Wash. 106.

The "community" arising under Civ. Code Porto Rico art. 1315, by virtue of marriage, embraced, under article 1392, all "the earnings or profits indiscriminately obtained by either of the consorts during the marriage," and also embraced, under article 1401, all "property acquired during the marriage by onerous title at the expense of the community property, whether the acquisition is made for the community or for only one of the consorts." Garzot v. Rios de Rubio, 28 Sup. Ct. 548, 555, 209 U. S. 283, 52 L. Ed. 794.

Separate property is defined by statute, and law provides that all other properties acquired after marriage by either husband or wife or both is "community property." From these provisions of the law limiting the separate property by description and proclaiming all other property not so limited and described as community property, it is held, in accordance with the elementary idea running through the community property system of laws, that all property acquired after marriage is presumptively community property. A homestead entry during the life of the wife, but on which the husband did not make final proof, or obtain patent, until after her death, was "community property." Ahern v.

"The legal import of the words 'community property' is a community of property. Rev. Civil Code, 2402, declares that the community consists of 'the profits of all the effects of which the husband has the administration and enjoyment, either of right or in fact; of the produce of the reciprocal labor and industry of both husband and wife,' etc. In the same manner the debts contracted during the marriage enter into the community, and must be acquitted out of the common property. Rev. Civil Code, 2403. At the dissolution of the community 'all effects which both husband and wife possess reciprocally are presumed common effects or gains' until the contrary is shown. Rev. Civil Code, 2405. It is provided by Rev. Civil Code, 2406, that 'the effects which compose the * * * community of gains are divided into two equal portions between the husband and the wife, or between the heirs at the dissolution of the marriage; and it is the same with respect to the profits arising from the effects which both husband and wife brought reciprocally in marriage, and which have been administered by the husband, or by the husband and wife conjointly, although what has thus been brought in marriage by either the husband or wife be more considerable than that what has been brought by the other, or even although one of the two did not bring anything at all." Bartoli v. Huguenard, 2 South. 196, 197, 39 La. Ann. 411.

The amendment of March 3, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 71, c. 62), to Civ. Code, § 164, providing that where married women have conveyed land acquired prior to May 19, 1889, the husband, his heirs, or assigns shall be barred from suing to show that the land was community property, or to recover it after July 1, 1894, and the amendment of March 4, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 63, c. 72), making the provision applicable where a wife shall thereafter convey, and providing that, as to future conveyances, the action must be commenced within a year from the filing for record of the conveyances, were simply statutes of limitation, and did not change the presumption that land conveyed to a wife before the amendment of March 19, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 328, c. 219), which took effect May 19, 1889, by other than a deed of gift, was community property. Booker v. Castillo, 98 Pac. 1067, 1069, 154 Cal. 672.

If a wife inherited a lot from her father and her husband erected improvements thereon, the improvements would be "community property," so that the husband would have an interest in the property. Brady v. Maddox (Tex.) 124 S. W. 739, 743.

Where money acquired in the course of trade in another state is the separate property of the husband there, it will continue to be his property when brought into this state, as will property purchased here with it, whether real or personal, notwithstanding Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. Wash. § 4490, providing that property acquired by a husband after marriage, otherwise than by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, is community property, since a contrary construction would destroy vested rights. Brookman v. Durkee, 90 Pac. 914, 915, 46 Wash. 578, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 921, 123 Am. St. Rep. 944, 13 Ann. Cas. 839.

While a title taken in the name of either spouse is presumably community property, such presumption is rebutted by evidence that the purchase price was the separate fund of the one in whom the title was taken, or by subsequent oral declarations and admissions of the separate character of the purchase, by the act of the parties in the treatment of the land as to voluntary liens, or by the expressed intention of the spouses at the time of the conveyance. Carpenter v. Brackett, 107 Pac. 359, 361, 57 Wash. 460.

Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. §§ 4488-4490 (Pierce's Code, §§ 3875, 3867, 3876), providing that land acquired during marriage otherwise than by gift, bequest, devise, or descent shall be "community property," was applicable to land acquired by a husband from the federal government under the federal laws. Curry v. Willson, 107 Pac. 867, 868, 57 Wash. 509.

"Community property," within the meaning of such statute, includes the interest remaining in property purchased by a husband in his own name mainly with his wife's money subsequent to their marriage, after allowing his wife an interest proportionate with the part of the purchase price paid by her. Hines v. Sparks (Tex.) 146 S. W. 289, 298.

Under Civ. Code, § 164, providing that all property acquired after marriage is "community property," the right to recover damages from a common carrier for injuries to a wife received while riding as a passenger on one of the carrier's trains is "community property." Justis v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 108 Pac. 328, 329, 12 Cal. App. 639.

Property purchased in the name of a wife during the existence of the community becomes community property, unless the purchase is made by way of investment of paraphernal funds, or by way of administration of paraphernal property. Knoblock & Rainold v. Posey, 52 South. 847, 848, 126 La. 610.

Under the statute of this state (sections 2680, 3060, Rev. Codes), all property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife not defined by sections 2676 and 2679 as the separate property of the husband or wife is community property. Kohny v. Dunbar, 121 Pac. 544, 546, 21 Idaho, 258, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1107, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 492.

A right of action against a railroad for personal injuries sustained by a husband after he and his wife have separated with the intention of never again living together as man and wife is "community property," one-half of which may be set apart to the wife on her obtaining a divorce from the husband. Ligon v. Ligon, 87 S. W. 838, 839, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 392.

The fact that a husband and wife are in possession of money after their marriage raises a presumption that it was acquired after marriage and constitutes "community property" under Civ. Code, § 164, declaring that all property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife is community property. Lynam v. Vorwerk, 110 Pac. 355, 13 Cal. App. 507.

Where title to land purchased with money earned after marriage is taken in the name of the wife the land is "community property" under the husband's control, so that an action for injury thereto may be maintained by him alone. Malmstrom v. People's Drain Ditch Co., 107 Pac. 98, 102, 32 Nev. 246.

Civ. Code, §§ 162, 163, define the separate property of the spouses as that owned by them, respectively, before marriage, and that acquired afterwards by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, and section 164 declares that all other property acquired after marriage by a husband or wife or both is community property. This section was amended in 1889 (St. 1889, p. 328, c. 219) by the addition of a provision that, whenever any property is conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing, the presumption is that the title vests in her as her separate property. Held that, prior to the amendment, the presumption was that the property conveyed to either husband or wife after marriage by a conveyance other than a deed of gift vested the title in the community. Nilson v. Sarment, 96 Pac. 315, 318, 153 Cal. 524, 126 Am. St. Rep. 91.

The damages resulting from a personal injury to the wife are a part of the "community property." Paine v. San Bernardino Valley Traction Co., 77 Pac. 659, 660, 143 Cal. 654; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Campbell, 81 S. W. 580, 581, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 276.

Under a statute providing that all property which the husband or wife may bring into the marriage, except land and slaves and the wife's paraphernalia, shall be common property of the husband and wife, if the parties were not man and wife when a land certificate issued to the man, if it had not ceased to be personal property, by its location, when they married, it became then "community property." Phillips v. Palmer, 120 S. W. 911, 913, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 91.

All property acquired under the régime of the community, whether in the name of one spouse or the other, is presumed to be community property, and the wife claiming it as hers must establish her claim by proof and the fact that title was taken in her name does not even raise presumption in her favor. Succession of Graf, 51 South. 115, 116, 125 La. 197.

COMMUTE—COMMUTATION

Of punishment

See Parole.

In a legal sense, to "commute" would mean to change from a higher to a lower penalty, to change the penalty from the hard work of a chain gang to work on a farm, for instance. Hence under Const. Ga. (Code 1873, § 5075), declaring that the governor shall have power to "commute" penalties, such power cannot be performed by county commissioners. McDonald v. State, 64 S. E. 1108, 1111, 6 Ga. App. 339.

Acts 32d Leg. c. 44, is not unconstitutional in authorizing district courts to suspend sentences in certain cases as an invasion of the right to "reprieve" or grant "commutations of punishment" reserved to the Governor by Const. art. 4, § 11, as a "reprieve" postpones the execution of a sentence to a day certain, whereas a "suspension" is for an indefinite time, and a "commutation" is the changing of the punishment assessed to a less punishment. Snodgrass v. State (Tex.) 150 S. W. 162, 164, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1144 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, pp. 6115, 6116).

There is a technical difference between the "commutation of a sentence" and its mitigation; "commutation" being a change of punishment to which a person has been condemned into one less severe, substituting a less for a greater punishment by authority of law. The reducing of the sentence of a court-martial, which dismissed a naval officer from the service, to suspension for five years on one-half sea pay to a reduction in rank to the foot of the list of officers of his grade is a mitigation of the sentence, within an act of Congress providing that every officer who is authorized to convene a general court-martial shall have power on revision of its proceedings "to remit or mitigate" but not to "commute" the sentence of any court he is authorized to approve or confirm. Mullan v. United States, 29 Sup. Ct. 330, 332, 212 U. S. 516, 53 L. Ed. 632 (citing Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Ohio Brass Co., 130 Fed. 549; Perkins Electric Switch Mfg. Co. v. Buchanan & Co., 129 Fed. 135).

The power of "commutation of sentence" is the power to change a greater punishment to a less punishment of which both are known to the law. People ex rel. Patrick v. Frost, 117 N. Y. Supp. 524, 526, 133 App. Div. 179.

Of taxes

"Commutation" is a passing from one state to another; an alteration; a change; the act of substituting one thing for another; a substitution of one sort of payment for another, or of a money payment in lieu of a performance of a compulsory duty or labor, or of a single payment in lieu of a number of successive payments, usually at a reduced rate. The judicial sale of property under a decree of foreclosure for what it will bring, although it be less than the amount of the taxes assessed and delinquent against it, cannot be said to be a commutation of taxes, within the meaning of Const. art. 9, § 6, prohibiting the commutation of taxes. Woodrough v. Douglas County, 98 N. W. 1092, 1095, 71 Neb. 354.

COMMUTATION TICKET

The words "commutation ticket" seem to have no definite meaning. They are defined by Webster (edition of 1891) as "a ticket, as for transportation, which is the evidence of a contract for service at a reduced rate." In the language of the railway, however, they are principally, if not wholly, used to designate tickets for transportation during a limited time between neighboring towns or cities and suburban towns. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 12 Sup. Ct. 844, 848, 145 U. S. 263, 36 L. Ed. 699.

Passenger tickets sold by a carrier at reduced rates, good for a limited time only, held to be commutation tickets within Acts 1905, p. 96, c. 53, § 14, prohibiting unjust discrimination in rates, but permitting the sale of commutation tickets. Etter v. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co., 86 N. E. 1020, 1023, 171 Ind. 581.

COMMUTATIVE CONTRACTS

A so-called mineral lease based on a royalty, in which the lessee does not obligate himself to develop the premises, and in which the lessee reserved the right to terminate the lease after finding oil or gas in paying quantities, is void, as to the lessor for want of consideration, under Civ. Code, arts. 1761, 1768, defining a contract as an agreement to give or permit another to do, or not to do, something; and a commutative contract is one in which what is done, given, or promised by one party is considered as an equivalent of what is done or promised by the other. Goodson v. Vivian Oil Co., 57 South. 281, 282, 129 La. 955.

COMPACT

"Compacted" means "closely and firmly united, as the parts or particles of solid bodies; having the parts or particles pressed or packed together; solid, dense." American Sulphite Pulp Co. v. De Grasse Paper Co., 151 Fed. 47, 58 (quoting and adopting Cent. Dict.).

The word "compactness" means the state or quality of being compact; firmness; close union of parts; while the word "form" refers to the external shape or configuration of a body; the figure as defined by lines and surfaces. In re Sherill, 81 N. E. 124, 139, 188 N. Y. 185, 117 Am. St. Rep. 841 (dissenting opinion, citing Cent. Dict.).

COMPACT PART OF TOWN

The phrase "near the compact part of a town" in Rev. St. c. 52, § 86, providing that no engine or train shall run across a highway near the compact part of a town at a speed greater than 6 miles an hour, unless the railroad maintains a flagman, a gate, or certain signals at such crossing, is not limited to the largest or principal compact part of a town, but applies to any compact portion, and includes a village with church, schoolhouse, engine house, store and dwelling houses, in all at least 25 buildings, and all situated within 350 feet of the central point. Moore v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 76 Atl. 871, 873, 106 Me. 297.

COMPANY

See Banking Company; Co.; Com.; Commercial Railroad Company; Construction Company; Express Company; Guaranty Company; Insurance Company; Investment Company; Joint-Stock Companies and Associations; Life Insurance Company; A Like Company; Mixed Company; Mutual Fire Insurance Company; Mutual Irrigation Company; Railroad Company; Safe Deposit Company; Stock Insurance Company; Street Railway Company; Surety Company; Telegraph Company; Terminal Company; Trading Stamp Company; Transmission Company; Transportation Company; Trust Company.

The word "company" does not necessarily mean a corporation, but may mean a firm, partnership, or individual. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. State, 69 S. E. 725, 729, 135 Ga. 545, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 20.

The word "company" may be construed to include all corporations, companies, firms, or individuals when used in statutes passed in promotion of the public good, such as the enforcement of the collection of revenue, regulation of the exercise of quasi public franchises, and similar matters. As used in Revisal 1895, c. 61, prohibiting transportation companies from charging more than the legal and published rate allowed by law and chapter 20 dealing with cognate subjects and giving the corporation commissioners power to establish regulations as to companies engaged in domestic traffic, the term was intended to include all corporations, companies, firms, or individuals engaged as common carriers of freight, so that the law does not deny to corporate common carriers the equal protection of the law by arbitrarily imposing a penalty on corporations and not on individuals. Effland v. Southern Ry. Co., 59 S. E. 355, 357, 146 N. C. 185.

By common usage the use of "company" is as applicable to partnerships and to unincorporated associations as to corporations, and the mere name is no evidence of corporate existence. Owen v. Shepard, 59 Fed. 746, 749, 8 C. C. A. 244; Clark v. Jones, 6 South. 362, 363, 87 Ala. 474.

The use of the term "company" in a trading or manufacturing business does not necessarily import corporate existence. The word may be employed equally well by a corporation, a partnership, or an individual doing business under a trade-name. Keystone Pub. Co. v. Hill Dryer Co., 105 N. Y. Supp. 894, 55 Misc. Rep. 625.

As used in Ky. St. § 841, providing that no "company, association or corporation" of another state shall operate a railroad within this state until by incorporation it becomes a corporation citizen and resident of the state, the words "company, association or corporation" necessarily mean an association of natural persons into one common undertaking. Whether it be a partnership, spoken of as company, a joint-stock association, or a regularly chartered corporation, that composes the foreign railway company, when it comes into this state it must be and become a domestic corporation—a citizen and resident of this state—which can only be done by being created and organized under our law into a corporation. Davis' Adm'r v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (Ky.) 70 S. W. 857, 862.

Association

As association, see Association.

Code 1906, § 2559, specifies the concerns subject to the insurance laws as "all companies, partnerships, associations, individuals and fraternal orders whether domestic or foreign," and by section 2562 the word "company" as used in section 2606, prohibiting any "foreign insurance company" from doing business in this state until it shall have complied with its provisions, is defined to mean "all corporations, associations, partnerships, or individuals," etc. Held, that section 2562 shows that the provisions of the statute apply to insurance associations in the broadest possible way, and that section 2559 indicates a purpose to include within its provisions all organizations doing an insurance business of any kind on any plan. State v. Alley, 51 South. 467, 475, 96 Miss. 720.

The word "company," in an application for a mutual benefit certificate containing the question, "Has any * * * application to insure your life ever been made to any company * * * upon which a policy has not been issued?" refers only to regular insurance companies, and excludes fraternal associations; Civ. Code, § 451, declaring that benefit associations are not insurance companies within the insurance laws, recognizing a distinction between regular insurance companies and benefit associations. Lyons v. United Moderns, 83 Pac. 804, 807, 148 Cal. 470, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 247, 113 Am. St. Rep. 291, 7 Ann. Cas. 672.

Benevolent fraternal associations are not included in the class of insurance companies referred to in Rev. Laws 1905, § 1616, which provides that neither the application nor the by-laws shall be considered as a part of the contract, unless incorporated in the policy. Loudon v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 119 N. W. 425, 426, 107 Minn. 12.

One of the meanings of the word "company" is "an association of persons for the purpose of carrying on some enterprise or business," and one of the meanings of the word "association" is a "union of persons in a company or society for some particular purpose." Webst. Dict. So the word "association," when used with descriptive adjectives as the name of a business entity, is as much indicative of a corporation as the word "company" when so used. Some courts, in determining whether a particular name imported a corporation, have made no distinction between these two words. Georgia Co-Operative Fire Ass'n v. Borchardt & Co., 51 S. E. 429, 432, 123 Ga. 181, 3 Ann. Cas. 472.

Bridge company

Under Pub. Acts 1901, p. 236, Act No. 173, as amended by Pub. Acts 1903, p. 52, Act No. 45, authorizing specific taxation by state tax commissioners of the property of railroad companies, union station and depot companies, express companies, car loaning companies, stock car companies, refrigerator companies, and fast freight line companies; section 4, Act No. 173, p. 238, Pub. Acts 1901, making it the duty of the board to make an annual assessment of the property of such companies and "all other corporations owning, leasing, running, or operating any freight, stock, refrigerator, or other cars" not being exclusively the property of any railroad company paying taxes on its rolling stock, etc., and section 5, defining the term "company, corporation, or association" to refer to any railroad, union station and depot company, express company, car loaning or refrigerator or fast freight line company, and any or all other corporations subject to specific taxation under such act, a bridge company owning a bridge exclusively leased to a street railway company was not subject to specific taxation under such act. North Park Bridge Co. v. Township of Walker, 107 N. W. 711, 712, 143 Mich. 693.

Corporation

The name Americus Furniture & Undertaking "Company," indicates a corporation, and an allegation in a criminal accusation that the company is a corporation is surplusage and need not be proved. Ager v. State, 58 S. E. 874, 2 Ga. App. 158.

Under General Corporation Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 23) § 6, as amended by Laws 1911, c. 638, and Laws 1912, c. 2, requiring the names of corporations to bear some additional words of prefix or affix indicating their corporate character, the application of the American Cigar Lighter Company for leave to change its name to "Electric Cigar Lighter Company" must be denied; the word "company," though used colloquially as importing "corporation," not necessarily involving that meaning in law. In re American Cigar Lighter Co., 188 N. Y. Supp. 455, 456, 77 Misc. Rep. 648.

The words "Valdosta Foundry & Machine Company" import a corporation, and are sufficient as against a special demurrer on the ground that there is no party plaintiff. Charles v. Valdosta Foundry & Machine Co., 62 S. E. 493, 494, 4 Ga. App. 733.

Crew

Act June 14, 1906, c. 3299, § 1, 34 Stat. 263, makes it unlawful for aliens or any "company" not organized in the United States or authorized to fish in Alaska waters, "to catch or kill, or attempt to catch or kill, except with rod, spear or gaff, any fish of any kind or species whatsoever in any of the waters of Alaska under the jurisdiction of the United States." Held, that the officers and crew of a vessel composed entirely of aliens may be considered a "company" within the meaning of the statute, and a single fine imposed upon them for its violation and made a lien on the vessel. The Tokai Maru, 190 Fed. 450, 457, 111 C. C. A. 282.

Holding company

A holding corporation controlling the stock of certain railroad companies executed a collateral trust deed to secure bonds issued by it, which deed provided that the proceeds of the bonds should be used, not only to make purchases of stock of railroad companies, and for betterments, improvements, and extensions of their properties, but for other purposes "of company." The deed also indicated that the operating companies had an existing bonded indebtedness, and a further provision dealing with the voting power of their stocks pledged to the trustee to secure the holding company's bonds provided that such power should not be exercised to increase the capital stock of such companies, or to create any but current obligations in addition to the above, and authorized bonded indebtedness of the operating companies, except in the instances specified. Held, that the "company" referred to in the quoted clause was the holding company, and that the provisions of the trust mortgage were sufficient to authorize the latter to loan the proceeds of its bonds to the operating companies to enable them to pay interest coupons on their bonded indebtedness. Finance Co. of Pennsylvania v. New Jersey Short Line R. Co., 198 Fed. 507, 510.

Individuals

The word "companies," as used in Acts 1891, p. 297, c. 96, relating to franchises granted to companies for the operation of telephone lines, includes an individual or individuals as well as incorporated companies, so that a county court was authorized to consent to the placing of poles and wires for a telephone for public use along a county road by an individual. Lowther v. Bridgeman, 50 S. E. 410, 412, 57 W. Va. 306.

Partnership

Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4875, authorizing service of process on a nonresident corporation, "company" or "association" by delivering the summons and complaint to its secretary, cashier, or managing agent, when construed with section 4881, which was originally part of the same act with section 4875 (Laws 1893, p. 407, c. 127), and which provides that, where the action is against two or more defendants and summons is served on one of them, if the action is against defendants jointly indebted upon a contract, plaintiff may proceed against defendants served, unless the court otherwise directs, and, if he recovers judgment, it may be entered against all defendants jointly indebted so far only as it may be enforced against the joint property of all and the separate property of defendants served, does not authorize service of process on a nonresident partnership by delivering the summons and complaint to a resident superintendent and managing agent. Coughlin v. Pinkerton, 84 Pac. 14, 15, 41 Wash. 500.

State

The state is not a "company, association or corporation" within Const. 1870, art. 2, § 29, prohibiting giving or lending of the credit of counties or municipalities in aid of any person unless authorized by the electors, and hence bonds issued in aid of a state normal school, under Acts 1909, c. 580, need not be authorized under that section. Ransom v. Rutherford County, 180 S. W. 1057, 1065, 123 Tenn. 1, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1356.

COMPARATIVE NEGLIGENCE

An instruction, in an action for injuries, that to authorize a recovery a person need not be wholly free from negligence, provided his negligence is but slight and the other party is guilty of gross negligence in comparison therewith, is erroneous as endorsing the doctrine of "comparative negligence." Franklin v. Engel, 78 Pac. 84, 85, 34 Wash. 480.

Contributory negligence, in most jurisdictions, is used as referring to such negligence on the part of plaintiff contributing to or causing the injury to himself as will prevent a recovery by him. In Georgia, there is a doctrine, sometimes called that of "comparative negligence," under which, if plaintiff is not without fault, but his negligence does not amount to such failure to use ordinary care as will prevent a recovery, he may recover damages of defendant in a proper cause, but the amount of his recovery will be reduced in proportion to the amount of default attributable to him. In this term, contributory negligence will generally be found to have been used in Georgia rather than in the sense of negligence which will prevent a recovery. Savannah Electric Co. v. Crawford, 60 S. E. 1056, 1057, 1058, 130 Ga. 421.

COMPARISON

"Comparison" is the act of bringing together for the purpose of observing, not only likenesses, but differences as well. A familiar mode of comparison is the contract. Succession of Baker, 55 South. 714, 717, 129 La. 74, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1181.

COMPARISON OF WRITINGS

With reference to expert opinion as to handwriting, a "comparison of hands" may consist not only of a comparison of the disputed signature with one admitted to be genuine, but may also consist in the opinion of an expert who has seen signatures admitted to be genuine and whose only method of comparison is by recalling them with more or less distinctness and comparing them with the one presented for his opinion. In re Burbank's Will, 93 N. Y. Supp. 866, 879, 104 App. Div. 312 (quoting and adopting the definition in Miles v. Loomis, 75 N. Y. 288, 31 Am. Rep. 470).

COMPEL—COMPELLED

The provision of Rev. St. § 4075, that no physician or surgeon shall be "compelled" to disclose any information acquired in his professional capacity, which was necessary to enable him to prescribe for a patient, is for the benefit of the patient, and renders the information privileged, so that the physician not only cannot be "compelled" to disclose it, but will not be allowed to disclose it, without patient's consent. Boyle v. Northwestern Mut. Relief Ass'n, 70 N. W. 351, 353, 95 Wis. 312.

Make

Where defendant testified that his brother said he was going to "ask" decedent to apologize, but it was shown that defendant's mother stated that defendant's brother said he would "make" decedent apologize, an instruction that if defendant and his brother armed themselves with the intention of "compelling" decedent to apologize, and on his failing to do so killed him, they would be guilty of murder, was not objectionable in the use of the word "compelling," which was practically synonymous with "make"; no witness having used the word "compel." Pipkin v. State, 97 S. W. 61, 63, 80 Ark. 617.

COMPENSATION

See Due Compensation; Extra Compensation; Full Compensation; Just and Adequate Compensation; Just Compensation; Reasonable Compensation. Fair and just compensation, see Fair and Just.

Increase of salary or compensation, see Increase.

Other compensation, see Other.

"Compensation" means that which compensates for loss or privilege; a recompense for some loss. Champlain Stone & Sand Co. v. State, 123 N. Y. Supp. 546, 553, 66 Misc. Rep. 434.

"Compensation" is a recompense or reward for some loss, injury, or service, especially when it is given by statute. Holley v. City of Mt. Vernon, 126 N. Y. Supp. 460, 461, 141 App. Div. 823.

Mutual debts are extinguishable at common law, but by the civil law, under the doctrine of compensation, relief is granted by the reciprocal acquittal of debts between two persons who are indebted to each other; "compensation" being the extinction of debts for which two persons are reciprocally debtors to one another, by the credits for which they are reciprocally creditors to one another. Tuttle v. Bisbee, 120 N. W. 699, 701, 144 Iowa, 53.

As fees, salary, allowances, etc.

To "compensate" is to make suitable reward for services. The word as used by the makers of the Constitution relating to officers means a compensation or reward paid in return for the performance of an official duty. State v. Sheldon, 111 N. W. 372, 373, 78 Neb. 552.

The words "salary" and "compensation," in Const. art. 6, § 25, providing that the judges of the superior and circuit courts and the state's attorney of Cook county shall receive the same salaries payable out of the state treasury, as may be paid to the circuit judges and state's attorneys of the state and such other compensation, to be paid by the county of Cook, as may be provided by law, are used interchangeably. Cook County v. Healy, 78 N. E. 623, 625, 222 Ill. 310.

The surplus of moneys furnished the sheriff by the county for the policing of the jail, after paying the salaries of the deputy keepers, comprised "compensation" for services rendered as custodian of the jail, and therefore, under the above act of 1905, belonged to the county. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Hudson County v. Kaiser, 69 Atl. 25, 27, 75 N. J. Law, 9.

"Compensation," in its ordinary acceptation, applies not only to salaries, but to compensation by fees for specific services, and was so understood by the people whose votes made it a part of the organic law of the state." In so far as Ky. St. § 8948, as amended by Act March 23, 1908 (Acts 1908, p. 116, c. 44), provides for an annual appropriation for labor and materials necessary to keep buildings at the county seat, including the jailer's residence, owned by the county, in a clean, comfortable, and presentable condition, and heat and light the same, it increases the compensation of jailers who before such enactment were required to keep such property in such condition, and heat and light the jail and the jailer's residence at his own expense and without compensation therefor; and hence, under Const. § 161, forbidding a change in the compensation of a county officer during his term of office, the amended statute was inapplicable to jailers holding office when the act became effective. Frizzell v. Holmes, 115 S. W. 246, 248, 131 Ky. 373 (citing Commonwealth v. Carter [Ky.] 55 S. W. 701, which cited Bright v. Stone [Ky.] 43 S. W. 207).

"Salary" in its general sense is a compensation for services rendered by one to another, and because it may be stipulated for beforehand the word "salary" has no meaning not included in the word "compensation," and where an employé is paid a stipulated and fixed salary, and in addition thereto compensation at a fixed percentage on the amount of his sales or other considerations, the extra percentage whether called compensation or salary may together with the fixed salary be recovered in one common-law action. United Boxboard & Paper Co. v. McEwan Bros. Co. (N. J.) 76 Atl. 550, 554.

Const. § 161, providing that the compensation of any officer shall not be changed after his election, does not prohibit the fixing of the compensation of an officer after his election, where it was not fixed before; but, when once fixed, it cannot be changed during his term of office, and, while the Legislature may change his duties, by either increasing or decreasing them, it cannot change his compensation, which is the sum paid for all that he may be required to do as an officer; and where the "compensation" of an officer is salary the salary must remain the same throughout his term, and where the compensation is fees the same scale of fees must prevail for the same services, and where new duties are imposed, with fees attached, the incumbent cannot charge for the new duties. James v. Duffy, 131 S. W. 489, 490, 140 Ky. 604, 140 Am. St. Rep. 404.

"Salary" and "compensation" are treated as synonymous and used interchangeably in the Constitution, and section 20 of article

8, relating to the "salaries" of judges should be construed as if it read "compensation." Marionaux v. Cutler, 91 Pac. 355, 356, 32 Utah, 475.

The word "compensation," used in Civ. Code 1902, § 1080, providing that a magistrate may appoint a constable at a fixed salary or may direct his papers to the sheriff, who shall receive the same compensation for serving them as a constable would be entitled to, includes costs and fees as well as salary. Mullins v. Marion County, 51 S. E. 535, 72 S. C. 84.

Laws 1889, c. 263, provided that each of the several judges of the circuit courts of the state should receive $400 per annum as and for his necessary expenses in the discharge of his duties, in addition to his salary then provided by law, and that the act should apply to the several judges then in office. Held, that such allowance was not a part of the "compensation" of the judges within Const. art. 4, § 26, providing that the compensation of a public officer shall not be increased or diminished during his term of office. Milwaukee County v. Halsey, 136 N. W. 139, 141, 149 Wis. 82.

The word "compensation," as used in Sess. Laws 1909, c. 240, providing that county game wardens shall receive such compensation as the state game warden shall determine not to exceed $50 per month, includes pay for expenses incurred as well as for services rendered, and such compensation cannot in any one month exceed $50. Jenkins v. Hallstrom (S. D.) 138 N. W. 12, 14.

The common council of a city having adopted as an amendment to the city's special charter St. 1898, § 925—80, authorizing the council by ordinance to provide such salaries or compensation for the officers and employees of the city as it shall deem proper, provided that in cities of the second, third, and fourth classes no salary shall be paid to the mayor or members of the council, except when ordered by a vote of three-fourths of the members of the council, such provisions superseded all former portions of the city charter inconsistent therewith, and authorized the payment of salaries or compensation to the mayor and aldermen in common with other officers of the city, since, if any distinction was intended by the use of the words "compensation" and "salary," the restriction, and not the grant of authority, was limited thereby. State ex rel. Rudolph v. Hutchinson, 114 N. W. 453, 454, 134 Wis. 283.

The furnishing of meals to members of the Legislature attending the services on the dedication of the Grant monument in New York, as was done pursuant to a contract made by a committee authorized to attend to the matter, was a part of the state's expenses in making suitable recognition of the ceremony, and payment therefor cannot be regarded as "compensation" within Const. art.

2, § 8, prohibiting the members from receiving any compensation other than the statutory salary. Russ v. Commonwealth, 60 Atl. 169, 174, 210 Pa. 544, 1 L. E. A. (N. S.) 400, 105 Am. St. Rep. 825.

The term "compensation," as used in Const. art. 2, § 25, declaring that the "compensation" of any public officer shall not be increased or diminished during his term of office, is broad enough to include any kind of remuneration from the public treasury for a public officer by way of what is called "salary" or otherwise. State ex rel. Funke v. Board of Com'rs of Pierce County, 93 Pac. 920, 922, 48 Wash. 461.

"The terms 'fees,' 'compensations,' and 'commissions,' are distinguishable in meaning." Harrington v. Bayles, 82 N. Y. Supp. 379, 388, 40 Misc. Rep. 388 (citing Delavan v. Payn [N. Y.] 8 Paige, 459; Guinivan v. Carroll, 4 N. Y. Law Bul. 6; Innes v. Purcell (N. Y.) 2 Thomp. & C. 539; Hobart v. Hobart, 86 N. Y. 636; Race v. Gilbert, 6 N. E. 592, 102 N. Y. 298).

Compensation of a condemnation commissioner of New York appointed by a justice of the Supreme Court, not paid at stated times or in stated amounts, but allowed in bulk by a justice of the Supreme Court, is not "wages," "salary," or "earnings," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1391, providing that, where wages, earnings, or salary are due to the amount of $12 or more per week, an order directing execution may issue, which shall become a lien on such wages, the amount specified not exceeding 10 per cent. thereof, and shall be a continuing levy until the execution is paid. Jones v. Nicoll, 131 N. Y. Supp. 341, 342, 72 Misc. Rep. 483.

The compensation of an attorney for a savings bank, consisting of various sums paid to the bank from time to time for the examination of the titles to securities of applicants for loans from the bank, is in no sense a "salary," as that word means "a fixed sum to be paid by the year or periodically for services." Rebadow v. Buffalo Savings Bank, 117 N. Y. Supp. 282, 284, 63 Misc. Rep. 407.

Acts 1903, p. 84, in so far as it relates to judicial districts composed of one county, provides that a stenographer shall be appointed in such district, and fixes his compensation at $5 a day for each day he is in attendance; and by section 5 the clerk of the court is required to tax in each civil case a stenographer's fee of $3, which shall be paid by the clerk into the general fund of the county; and section 9 authorizes the appointment of a stenographer in judicial districts composed of more than one county, and provides that in every civil case in such district a stenographer's fee shall be taxed as provided for in section 5, and that the stenographer so appointed shall receive the compensation "hereinbefore provided" out of the fees collected for that purpose by the counties composing such judicial district, and that each county shall be liable only for such services as are rendered by the stenographer for the district court of the county sought to be charged. Held, that the phrase "compensation hereinbefore provided" refers to the amount of the per diem specified in the statute only, and the stenographer of a district composed of more than one county is not entitled to receive his fees out of the general fund of a county. Robertson v. Ellis County, 84 S. W. 1097, 1100, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 146.

As remuneration for injury

An instruction on damages in a personal injury action is not erroneous, because failing to use the word "reasonably" before "compensate," since the word "compensate" means equal remuneration, and could not carry with it authority to award more damages than were actually proved. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Elliott, 52 South. 28, 30, 166 Ala. 419.

"Compensation" is the bottom principle of the law of damages, and consists in the restoration of the party injured, as near as may be, to his former position by allowing a money equivalent of his property which has been taken, injured, or destroyed. If the thing taken or destroyed can be replaced in the market, then that sum of money which will buy another like it will repair the injury. So, if property is injured but not destroyed, ordinarily the measure of damages, where the property can be repaired so as to be as it was before, is that sum which will restore the former condition. If the injury is such that it cannot be repaired by bestowing something upon or add it to the injured property, then the measure of damages would be the value of the property just before its injury and its market value afterward. The latter measure of damages is adopted, not as the ideal one, but as the surest of which the case is susceptible. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Falconer (Ky.) 97 S. W. 727, 728.

"The term 'compensation,' when applied to damages, has a fixed legal signification much more restricted than its general or common acceptance. In an action for personal injuries, where death does not ensue, it is confined to the expense of cure, the value of time lost, a fair 'compensation' for the physical and mental suffering caused by the injury, and for any permanent reduction of power to earn money." Louisville Gas Co. v. Fuller, 92 S. W. 566, 568, 122 Ky. 614 (quoting and adopting definition in Louisville, O. & L. R. Co. v. Case's Adm'r, 9 Bush [72 Ky.] 736).

Under Act April 4, 1868, limiting the amount to be recovered for wrongful death to "compensation for loss and damages peculiarly suffered," no exemplary damages can be recovered for injuries resulting in death in an action by a parent. Palmer v. Phila-

A charge, in an action for the death of an engineer, that, if the jury should decide that the company was liable, then to consider the amount of damages that ought to be awarded plaintiff as compensation for the life of her husband, even if open to the criticism that it permitted a recovery for loss of the companionship of her husband when she was only entitled to recover the financial value of his life earnings or capacity to earn, was entirely remedied by other portions of the charge, making it clear that the court meant by the expression "compensation for the life of her husband" the value of his life as measured by his earning capacity, actual and prospective. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Jones, 63 S. E. 834, 837, 132 Ga. 189.

In an action by a street car passenger for injuries caused by an assault by the conductor, the court charged that, if the conductor's acts subjected plaintiff to bodily pain, he was entitled to recover such damages as the jury might believe from the evidence would compensate him for such bodily pain so suffered, if any, and if the conductor's acts were done willfully, and without reasonable justification and provocation, the jury might assess damages against defendant in such sum as they might believe from the evidence would be suitable punishment for defendant for such wrongful conduct, but that the jury could not allow punitive damages until they found that he was entitled to actual damages in such amount. The court further charged that, if the jury found for plaintiff, then, in assessing damages, they were not limited to physical injury inflicted, if any, but in addition thereto, if they found that the wrongful acts of the conductor were "malicious," i. e., the intentional doing of a wrongful act without cause or excuse, they might allow such punitive damages as would be a punishment and a wholesome warning to others. Held, that the word "compensation," as so used, should be construed as modified by the adjective "reasonable" or "actual," and that, in the absence of a request for a more specific instruction on the measure of damages, the instructions given were not objectionable as misleading. Mills v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 137 S. W. 1006, 1008, 157 Mo. App. 529.

For taking property by eminent domain

"Compensation" in the law of eminent domain means a recompense in value, a quid pro quo, and must be in money. Oregon Short Line R. Co. v. Fox, 78 Pac. 800, 801, 28 Utah, 311.

The term "compensation," as used in the law allowing a seizure of property under right of eminent domain, and just "compensation" to the party whose property is taken, "imports that a wrong or an injury has been inflicted and must be redressed in money." City of Rawlins v. Jungquist, 94 Pac. 464, 467, 96 Pac. 144, 16 Wyo. 403 (quoting Sutherland, Damages [3d Ed.] § 1063).

While "compensation" and "damages" are sometimes used interchangeably to represent purchase money for rights acquired by eminent domain, "compensation" more properly signifies purchase money and "damages" indemnity for a trespass. Abernathy v. South & W. Ry. Co., 63 S. E. 180, 185, 150 N. C. 97 (citing Randolph, Em. Dom. § 222).

The compensation guaranteed to the owner whose property is taken for public use is its fair market value at the time of the taking for any use to which the property is adapted by its location, and for which it is available, not to be limited by the present use or the use for which it is sought to be taken. In re Simmons, 114 N. Y. Supp. 575, 577, 130 App. Div. 356.

"Compensation," as the term is used in the constitutional provisions against taking private property for public use without making a just compensation, means recompense or remuneration for the property which is taken or injured. In re Water Front on North River, 105 N. Y. Supp. 750, 757, 120 App. Div. 849 (quoting and adopting Cooley's Const. Lim. [7th Ed.] p. 822).

That there is a distinction, in regard to property taken for public use, between "compensation" (for property actually taken) and "damages" (to the remainder of it), is indicated by Code 1896, § 1718, providing merely that the compensation must not be reduced because of benefits. Town of Eutaw v. Botnick, 43 South. 739, 740, 150 Ala. 429.

The word "taken," as used in the charter of the town of Newborn, providing that the mayor and council shall have power to lay out and abolish streets and alleys and to extend and change the same as the public interest may require "by paying the owner just compensation for the property taken for any such purposes," means property actually seized or appropriated, and the word "compensation" means the value of property without reference to any agreement between the parties, and therefore the statute by implication empowers the municipality to condemn land for the purposes named in the charter. Stowe v. Town of Newborn, 56 S. E. 516, 127 Ga. 421.

An instrument, executed by an owner of a lot extending to the center of the street in front thereof, by which he consents to the maintenance of an elevated railroad in the street, and operation thereof "as the same is now constructed without compensation therefor," and releases all claim arising from the maintenance of the structure and the operation of the railroad "as now constructed and operated," is more than a mere license, and is effective at least as an estoppel for any compensation that might be awarded in condemnation proceedings, "compensation" being the word used in Const. 1894, art. 1, § 7, regulating the taking of private property, and, as used in the consent, indicating a continued invasion of the abutting owner's rights in the street without payment therefor. Smyth v. Brooklyn Union Elevated R. Co., 85 N. E. 1100, 1102, 193 N. Y. 335, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 433.

COMPENSATORY DAMAGES

"Compensatory damages" include such as will compensate the injured party for injuries to the person, expenses immediately resulting therefrom, loss of time, disabilities, loss of health, bodily pain, and mental suffering, including allowance on these accounts for the future. Huber v. Teuber (D. C.) 3 MacArthur, 484, 492, 497, 36 Am. Rep. 110.

"Compensatory damages" include all other damages than punitive and embrace not only special damages, as direct pecuniary loss, but includes injury to feelings, mental anguish, and damages to character or reputation. Green v. Western Union Tel. Co., 49 S. E. 165, 168, 136 N. C. 489, 67 L. R. A. 985, 163 Am. St. Rep. 955, 1 Ann. Cas. 349 (citing Hale, 106, 99).

Punitive damages are not recoverable against the sureties in an ordinary attachment bond in a suit brought on the bond. The damages recoverable on such bond are compensatory in their nature, such as loss or depreciation in value of the attached property, interest, costs, and expenses, including, under our statute, reasonable attorney's fees, and which are the proximate results of the attachment, when the order therefor has been wrongfully obtained. Floyd v. Anderson (Okla.) 128 Pac. 249, 250, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 788.

"The very term 'compensatory damages' implies that there must be actual loss before compensation can be given." Compensatory damages cannot be recovered of a railroad company for breach of a covenant to fence its track, when the land through which the railroad passes is used, not for stock, but only for cropping, and no damages are shown otherwise than the omission by the owner to graze stock on the land because of his fear of possible injury to it from train or loss of estimated profits by grazing over those from agriculture, which might have been realized if fences had been made. Douglass v. Ohio River R. Co., 41 S. E. 911, 916, 51 W. Va. 523.

"The term 'compensatory damages,' by necessary implication, intends a recompense or reward for some loss or service; a reimbursement for loss suffered by reason of injury or to property. They proceed from a sense of actual justice and are designed to repair that of which one has been deprived by the wrong of another." Mere fright unattended by any harmful results to the person frightened, in mind or body, furnishes no ground for the recovery of compensatory damages. Pullman Co. v. Lutz, 45 South. 675, 676, 154 Ala. 517, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 907, 129 Am. St. Rep. 67 (citing and quoting from 13 Cyc. p. 22).

Exemplary damages distinguished

While the damages to which a plaintiff may become entitled in an action of tort to the amount of his expenses in litigation in addition to his actual damages are in fact and in effect "compensatory damages" and not punitive, they are in practice variously termed "exemplary," "punitive," "vindictive," or "smart money," and, in an action for personal injuries in which plaintiff was entitled to recover such additional damages, it was not error to refer to them as "exemplary." Hull v. Douglass, 64 Atl. 351, 353, 79 Conn. 266.

The term "exemplary damages," as used in Comp. Laws, § 5398, providing that one selling intoxicating liquors to a minor shall be liable for both actual and exemplary damages, does not mean smart money, but means compensatory damages for wounded pride, mortification, injury to feelings, mental anxiety, and the like. Hink v. Sherman, 129 N. W. 732, 733, 164 Mich. 352.

Mental suffering

"Compensatory damages" are those by which the actual loss sustained is measured and the injured party recompensed therefor. "Compensatory damages" include all damages other than punitive, and thus embrace not only special damages but mental suffering. Ammons v. Southern Ry. Co., 52 S. E. 731, 732, 733, 140 N. C. 196 (citing Joyce on Damages, § 26; Hale, Damages, pp. 99, 106).

"An impression not infrequently exists, and is sometimes acted on, that in the large number of ordinary causes 'compensatory damages' should be confined to actual pecuniary loss, and that any recovery above actual loss in money or time, having definite pecuniary value, partakes of the nature of punitive damages. * * * 'Where the facts and nature of the action so warrant, actual damages include pecuniary loss, physical pain, and mental suffering,' etc." "Compensatory damages" include all other damages than punitive, thus embracing not only special damages as direct pecuniary loss, but injury to feelings, mental anguish, etc. Where a telephone company operating under a public franchise disconnected the telephone of a customer, who refused to pay an unjust demand, and who, to obtain a restoration of the telephone service, paid the sum demanded, and it appeared that the telephone service was for household purposes, the customer could for the wrong recover the damages resulting from the annoyance and inconvenience, together with the special damages resulting from the fact that the customer's father-in-law was at the time in a hospital, dangerously sick; the company at the time of the discontinuance of service having notice of that fact. Carmichael v. Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co., 72 S. E. 619, 622, 157 N. C. 21, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 651, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1117 (citing Osborn v. Leach, 47 S. E. 811, 135 N. C. 628, 66 L. R. A. 648).

In particular torts

The words "compensatory damage," as used in an action for the wrongful death of an employé, means such a sum of money as will fairly and reasonably compensate the estate of deceased for the destruction of his power to earn money which is the direct and natural result of gross negligence on the part of defendant. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Cane's Adm'r (Ky.) 90 S. W. 1061, 1064.

In an action of negligence for injuries received from an explosion, "damages" are of two kinds, "compensatory," such as make the wrong to be whole as of the time of the injury, or "punitive," where the tortious act is aggravated by evil motive, malice, violence, oppression, or fraud. The probable loss of profits to plaintiff which might have been earned except for the injury depends on so many contingencies that such damages are termed "speculative" and are not recoverable. James McNeil & Bro. Co. v. Crucible Steel Co., 56 Atl. 1067, 1070, 1071, 207 Pa. 493.

"Compensatory damages," in an action for general damages for defamation of character, injustice, and indignity, means such sum of money as will compensate plaintiff for the injury done to his feelings, his character, and his reputation. Times Pub. Co. v. Carlisle, 94 Fed. 762, 770, 36 C. C. A. 475.

"Compensatory damages" for a libel include reasonable compensation for any wrong done to the injured person's reputation, good name, or fame, and for any mental suffering caused thereby. Todd v. Every Evening Printing Co. (Del.) 66 Atl. 97, 99, 6 Pennewill, 233.

COMPETENCY

See Incompetent—Incompetency; Mental Competency.

"By 'competency' is meant intelligence sufficient to understand the act he is performing, the property he possesses, the disposition he is making of it, and the persons or objects he is making the beneficiaries of his bounty. Imperfect memory caused by sickness or old age, forgetfulness of the names of persons he has known, idle questions in requiring a repetition of information, will not be sufficient to establish incompetency, if he has sufficient intelligence remaining to fulfill the above definition." Gibony v. Foster, 130 S. W. 314, 322, 230 Mo. 106 (quoting and adopting definition in Sehr v. Lindemann, 54 S. W. 540, 153 Mo. 288).

A master is bound to exercise ordinary care to employ competent servants; "competency" in that sense meaning both capable and reasonably careful servants, which includes sober persons, where the work is such that an intoxicated person could not perform it without danger to himself and other employes. Columbia Creasoting Co. v. Beard, 89 N. E. 321, 323, 44 Ind. App. 810.

As respects the duty of a master to employ competent servants for the protection of fellow servants, the word "competency" should be given a comprehensive interpretation, so as to include within its range of meaning all that is essential to make up a reasonably safe person, considering the nature of the work and the general safety of those who are required to associate with such person in the common general employment. Swift Mfg. Co. v. Phillips, 69 S. E. 585, 8 Ga. App. 425.

"By 'competency' (to make a will) is meant intelligence sufficient to understand the act he (the testator) is performing, the property he possesses, the disposition he is making of it, and the persons or objects he makes the beneficiaries of his bounty." Hughes v. Rader, 82 S. W. 32, 52, 183 Mo. 630; Winn v. Grier, 117 S. W. 48, 55, 217 Mo. 420 (quoting and adopting definition in Sehr v. Lindemann, 54 S. W. 537, 540, 153 Mo. loc. cit. 288).

A testator is "competent" to make a will though he has exhibited numerous eccentricities such as unbounded belief in a patent medicine as a cure for all ills, wanting to make political speeches, getting up in the night, singing psalms in his room, taking the house dogs hunting and returning without any game, the exhibition of live stock at church meetings, failure to recognize acquaintances, a roaring in the head and disconnected conversations, where he has at all times been able to carry on his business and when making the will understood all that was said and done. Winn v. Grier, 117 S. W. 48, 55, 217 Mo. 420.

COMPETENT

See Fit and Competent; Legally Competent.

"Competent" means answering to all requirements; adequate; sufficient. Hart v. Hart (Tex.) 110 S. W. 91, 92 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1358).

"Competent" is the equivalent of "efficient," as used in an instruction in an action against a railroad company for personal injuries, which stated that it was the duty of defendant to provide efficient men for its service. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Ampey, 25 S. E. 226, 232, 93 Va. 108.

In an action against a master for injury to a servant from the negligent employment of an incompetent foreman, an instruction that a competent man is a reliable man; that "incompetency" means want of ability suitable to the task, or want of disposition to use one's experience and abilities properly; that incompetency may exist not alone in physical or mental attributes, but in the disposition to perform duties; and that, though a foreman may be physically and mentally able to do all that is required of him, his disposition may make him an incompetent man—is not misleading and is a correct statement of the law. Young v. Milwaukee Gaslight Co., 113 N. W. 59, 60, 133 Wis. 9.

For an applicant to office under the veteran's preference law (Laws 1907, p. 541, c. 374, § 1) providing that veterans in the United States service in the Civil War shall have a preference for appointment to public offices in cities and towns if competent to perform such services, to be "competent," he must possess every qualification essential to the prompt, efficient, and honest performance of the duties pertaining to the office to be filled. Dever v. Platt, 105 Pac. 445, 446, 81 Kan. 200.

The consent of the city of New York to the use of its streets by a corporation using lines of electric conductors to be placed underground is not a contract with the corporation, or a property right, which the city may not take without compensation, until the consent has been acted upon and subways have been constructed; and where the consent has been revoked before using, the corporation is not "competent to manufacture or supply electricity," within Laws 1887, c. 716, § 7, and is not entitled to mandamus under such chapter. In re New York Electric Lines Co., 126 N. Y. Supp. 831, 832, 69 Misc. Rep. 200.

COMPETENT APPRAISER

The fact that one selected as an appraiser in an insurance case had an intimate knowledge of the subject-matter and on that account a preconceived opinion did not of itself disqualify him, because it was such knowledge and such experience which made him the better qualified to ascertain the true value if he was free from bias and prejudice. In other words, this preconceived opinion as an expert, derived from personal inspection, did not make him other than a "competent and disinterested" appraiser within the meaning of the appraisal clause of the policy, providing for the selection of competent and disinterested appraisers to estimate the loss. National Fire Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn. v. O'Bryan, 87 S. W. 129, 131, 75 Ark. 198, 5 Ann. Cas. 334.

COMPETENT BOOKKEEPER

A "competent bookkeeper" is one who is qualified by education and experience to examine and compare the various books kept by a bank, and trace the bearing of one entry upon another in the different books. Mason v. Moore, 76 N. E. 932, 935, 73 Ohio St. 275, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 597, 4 Ann. Cas. 240.

COMPETENT COURT

Within the meaning of the habeas corpus statute, a court has no jurisdiction, and so is not "competent," by its judgment to give force to an unconstitutional law. Servonitz v. State, 113 N. W. 277, 279, 133 Wis. 281, 126 Am. St. Rep. 955.

A de facto court is a "competent court" within the purview of Rev. Laws 1905, § 4587, providing that, if it shall appear on the return of a writ of habeas corpus that the prisoner is in custody by virtue of a process of a court duly constituted, he can only be discharged in certain cases. State ex rel. Bales v. Bailey, 118 N. W. 676, 678, 106 Minn. 138, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 775, 130 Am. St. Rep. 592, 16 Ann. Cas. 838.

COMPETENT EVIDENCE

"Competent evidence" means that which the nature of the fact to be proved requires. Goltra v. Penland, 77 Pac. 129, 133, 45 Or. 254 (quoting 1 Greenl. Ev. [14th Ed.] § 2).

Pen. Code, Alaska, § 128, making common fame "competent evidence" in support of an indictment for keeping a bawdy house, does not make common fame sufficient proof to warrant a conviction, and there must be some evidence direct or circumstantial that it was so kept. Botts v. United States, 155 Fed. 50, 51, 83 C. C. A. 646, 12 Ann. Cas. 271; Hall v. Same, 155 Fed. 52, 53, 84 C. C. A. 215.

An instruction that evidence of the declaration of a testator before and after the execution of a will is not admissible to prove the actual fact of undue influence being exercised upon the testator in making the will, but competent to establish the effect of external acts of undue influence, if any are shown, upon the mind of the testator, is improper as a charge upon the weight of the evidence, for the word "competent" means answering to all requirements, adequate, sufficient; and the word "establish" means "to fix or settle unalterably." Hence the instruction being about evidence, and the connection in which the term was used being with reference to evidence, the jury would naturally imply the word "evidence" in the term and construe the words as meaning "sufficient evidence to settle unalterably, or prove, the effect of the external acts of undue influence." Hart v. Hart (Tex.) 110 S. W. 91, 92.

COMPETENT INSPECTOR

The "competent inspector" which a railroad may be required to furnish for the proper and reasonable inspection of appliances used by his employes need not be a man of the highest efficiency, skill, and ability, but must be one in whose selection reasonable care has been taken to see that he is fit to perform the duties of his position. The term means such an inspector as prudently conducted and operated railroads use for the same sort of inspection. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Reed, 122 S. W. 645, 648, 92 Ark. 350.

COMPETENT JURISDICTION

A court of competent jurisdiction is one having authority of law to do the particular act. Ex parte Justus, 104 Pac. 933, 935, 3 Okl. Cr. 111, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 483.

Under the habeas corpus act of the territory of Oklahoma (St. 1893, § 4578), excluding from its benefits persons committed or detained by virtue of any process issued on any final judgment of a "court of competent jurisdiction," a court of "competent jurisdiction" is one having power and authority of law at the time of acting to do the particular act. A court of "competent jurisdiction" for the trial of the crime of perjury consists of a presiding judge and a jury. It is not a court unless there be both judge and jury. The presence, actual or constructive, of a judge at every stage of the proceedings, is necessary, or the proceedings will be coram non iudice. Where, during the trial of a prosecution for perjury and while the jury was in charge of the bailiffs deliberating on a verdict, the court was adjourned for two days, and the judge went into another county, and opened and held a term of court there, the term terminated by operation of law, as to that case, when the judge left the place where the court was by law required to be held, and went to the other county, and there opened court; the jury in his absence had no authority to consider the case; the jurisdiction, having been suspended by the dissolution of the court, could not be resumed by the return of the judge; and a verdict to return by the jury and a judgment thereon were not by a court of "competent jurisdiction," but were coram non iudice and void. In re Patzward, 50 Pac. 139, 143, 5 Okl. 789.

Pub. St. p. 416, § 23, subd. 1, providing that a guardian's sale shall not be avoided on account of any irregularity in the proceedings, if it shall appear that the guardian was licensed to make the sale by a probate court of "competent jurisdiction," signifies that the guardian was licensed to make the sale by the probate court of the county in which he was appointed. Montour v. Purdy, 11 Minn. 384, 404 (Gil. 278, 296).

Rev. Laws, c. 167, § 126, provides that an attachment of property on mesne process shall be dissolved by the appointment by "any court of competent jurisdiction in this commonwealth" of a receiver to take possession of the property, etc. Section 127 provides that, when at attachment has been so dissolved, the proceedings for the appointment of a receiver shall not thereafter be dismissed, and the receiver discharged, until all the assets which have come into his hands as receiver have been fully distributed, or the claim upon which the attachment was made has been fully paid and discharged, etc. Held, that the words "any court of competent jurisdiction in this commonwealth" means any court which is subject to the legislation of the commonwealth, and the act does not apply to receivers appointed by federal courts. Reynolds v. Enterprise Transportation & Transit Co., 85 N. E. 110, 112, 198 Mass. 590.

COMPETENT JUROR

Under Code 1906, § 2685, providing that any person otherwise competent who will make oath that he is impartial in the case shall be a "competent juror" in a criminal case, though he has an impression or opinion as to the guilt or innocence of accused, etc., light impressions which may fairly be supposed to yield to the testimony and leave the mind open to a fair consideration thereof do not disqualify a juror. Whitehead v. State, 52 South. 259, 260, 97 Miss. 537.

COMPETENT OFFICER

The word "competent," when used to indicate the qualifications which a public officer should possess, necessarily includes every qualification essential to the prompt, efficient, and honest performance of the duties pertaining to the office to be filled. An applicant to office under the Veterans' Preference Law (Laws 1907, c. 374, § 1), providing that veterans in the United States service in the Civil War shall have a preference for appointment to public office if "competent," must possess the qualifications essential to the prompt, efficient, and honest performance of the duties pertaining to the office to be filled. Dever v. Platt, 105 Pac. 445, 446, 81 Kan. 200 (citing State ex rel. Taggart v. Addison, 92 Pac. 584, 78 Kan. 707).

An applicant for appointment under the Veterans' Preference Law, to be "competent" within the meaning of the law, must possess the qualities which are essential to the prompt, efficient, and honest performance of the duties pertaining to the office for which application is made. State ex rel. Taggart v. Addison, 92 Pac. 581, 584, 78 Kan. 699.

"Competent" is a comparative term as applied to the qualifications for office, and must be construed in the sense of fully capable of adequately rendering all the services demanded. The word "competent," in Laws 1907, c. 374, relative to the employment of ex soldiers and sailors, is necessarily a comparative word, and the utmost good faith by the appointing power is demanded in the rejection of applicants qualified under the preference law. State v. Addison, 96 Pac. 66, 68, 78 Kan. 172.

COMPETENT PERSON

which it is used, and it does not mean "disinterested" in all cases. Competency may have reference to fitness, qualification, sufficient ability and training to successfully execute the work to be undertaken. The term "competent," as used in Rev. St. 1898, § 1379—13, providing for the appointment of three competent persons as drainage commissioners, does not mean disinterested, and owners of land within the proposed district are not disqualified. In re Cranberry Creek Drainage Dist., 107 N. W. 25, 26, 128 Wis. 98 (citing Crabb, Eng. Synonyms; Stand. Dict.; 2 Words & Phrases, p. 1358; Bowes v. Haywood, 35 Mich. 241; In re Pacheco's Estate, 23 Cal. 476; Aetna Ins. Co. v. Stevens, 48 Ill. 33; Tenney v. State, 27 Wis. 387).

The requirement of Local Improvement Act, § 38, that the person appointed to make an assessment for a street improvement shall be a "competent person," means only that he shall be free from legal disqualification. The law has established no standard ability or experience, and the word 'competent' is not used with reference to those qualities." On the hearing of objections to the confirmation of an assessment, evidence to show the business qualifications of the person appointed to make the assessment is inadmissible. City of Marengo v. Eichler, 91 N. E. 758, 759, 245 Ill. 47.

COMPETENT SCALER

The court below properly instructed that a "competent" scaler of logs within the meaning of a contract was not such a person as would commit no mistakes or errors in rejecting logs that he ought to have accepted, or in accepting logs that he ought to have rejected, but an average man, as competent as such men ordinarily are who are employed in that capacity. The instruction did not fix too low a standard of competency. McIlquham v. Barber, 53 N. W. 902, 905, 83 Wis. 500.

COMPETENT SERVANT

A "competent servant" is one reasonably safe for the performance of the duties assigned to him, considering the nature of the work and the safety of his coemployees. Warren v. Harlan & Hollingsworth Corp. (Del.) 84 Atl. 215, 220.

COMPETENT TRIBUNAL

The "competent tribunal" referred to in 1 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 393, relating to the duties of county auditor, providing that he shall audit all claims, demands, etc., chargeable against the county except such cost or fee bills as are by law to be examined or approved by some other judicial tribunal or officer, and that he shall draw a warrant for cost bills and other lawful claims duly approved by the competent tribunal designated by law for their allowance, clearly refer to the judicial tribunal, or officer as used in the same section, and means a court or judge.

State ex rel. Egbert v. Blumberg, 89 Pac. 708, 709, 46 Wash. 270.

Under the provision of the Denver city charter giving property owners an opportunity to be heard before the city council in relation to an assessment, holding that the hearing contemplated must be before a board or tribunal competent to administer proper relief, the word "competent," as employed in such provision, cannot convey the meaning that where the judgment of the city council is not final, but its action is subject to revision by the board of public works, therefore it is not a competent tribunal. City of Denver v. Londoner, 80 Pac. 117, 119, 83 Colo. 104.

COMPETENT WITNESS

In the statutes relating to the attestation of wills, the phrase "'competent witness' means a person not legally disqualified by reason of mental incapacity, interest, or conviction of crime, from testifying in courts of justice, but who at the time of subscribing the will would be competent to testify to the facts attested in a proper proceeding to probate the will." Under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 522, specifying who are incompetent as witnesses, a nominated executor was not an incompetent attesting witness merely because the will might be drawn into private litigation between heirs and beneficiaries by a suit to which he became a voluntary party. Hiatt v. McColley, 85 N. E. 772, 774, 171 Ind. 91 (citing Belledin v. Gooley, 60 N. E. 708, 157 Ind. 49, 50; Jenkins v. Dawes, 115 Mass. 601; Morrill v. Morrill, 53 Vt. 78, 38 Am. Rep. 659; In re Holt's Will, 57 N. W. 219, 56 Minn. 33, 22 L. R. A. 481, 45 Am. St. Rep. 434; In re Noble, 15 N. E. 850, 124 Ill. 266, 270; Fuller v. Fuller, 83 Ky. 345, 349; Sears v. A four year old child, apparently utterly unable to realize the meaning of an oath, is not a "competent witness." Mays v. State, 127 S. W. 546, 547, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 651.

COMPETING

Where, by a railway charter, a general power is given to consolidate with, purchase, lease, or acquire the stock of other roads which has remained unexecuted, it is within the power of the Legislature to declare by subsequent acts that the power shall not extend to the purchase, lease, or consolidation with parallel or competing lines, and a contract by which one railroad agrees to guaranty the bonds of a parallel competing road, in consideration of which half the stock of the latter road is to be transferred to the stockholders of the former road or to a trustee for their use, is within Laws Minn. 1874, c. 29, providing that no railroad shall consolidate with, lease, purchase, or in any way control any parallel or competing line. Pearsall v. Great Northern R. Co., 16 Sup. Ct. 705, 713, 161 U. S. 646, 40 L. Ed. 838.

A railroad's main line ran southeasterly from N. to C. and a division ran from H. in the same direction to N. Its line of leased road began at Paducah and ran southeast to Hollow Rock, and there crossed the division, and thence ran in a southwest direction to Memphis. Held, with reference to a map filed as an exhibit, that whether considered as one or two roads, and whether its termini be regarded as Memphis and Texas, Tenn., or Memphis and Paducah, there was no competition possible between them save for a comparatively short distance, and that the lines were not parallel or "competing"; the mere intersection with another line not being the sort of competition which concerns the public. Rogers v. Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 91 Fed. 299, 317, 33 C. C. A. 517.

Where one line of railroad would traverse the same territory and follow for its entire length practically the same route over which another road was authorized by proclamation to construct its projected line of road, the roads are "competing lines," under Code 1892, § 8587, and Acts 1898, p. 95, c. 80, both of which forbid parallel or competing railroads to consolidate. State v. Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co., 38 South. 732, 737, 86 Miss. 172, 122 Am. St. Rep. 277.

The prohibition in the Constitution against consolidation of competing railroad companies applies to a railroad company organized before the adoption of the Constitution. State ex rel. Leese v. Atchison & N. R. Co., 38 N. W. 43, 45, 24 Neb. 143, 8 Am. St. Rep. 164.

Two connecting roads running from Butte to Anaconda, were controlled by the Northern Pacific and formed a route which was practically as direct a line between the two cities as the line of the railroad company which leased one of the roads. Held, that the lessor and lessee roads were "competing" lines in so far as the power to lease was concerned, though the lessor road was not parallel, and, if it stood by itself, there would be no competition. State v. Montana R. Co., 53 Pac. 623, 625, 21 Mont. 221, 45 L. R. A. 271.

The consolidation of railroad companies owning and operating lines used in terminal business only is not repugnant to Const. art. 12, § 17, forbidding the consolidation of railroad companies whose lines are parallel or "competing." State ex inf. Attorney General v. Terminal Ass'n of St. Louis, 81 S. W. 395, 396, 182 Mo. 284.

Railroad companies having a through and separate line between two points are "competing" companies between such points, within the rule that contracts tending to stifle competition or create or foster monopolies are invalid, and agreements between such roads for division of earnings are not valid. Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Southern Pac. Ry. Co., 6 South. 888, 889, 41 La. Ann. 970, 17 Am. St. Rep. 445.

A railroad by its relations to other roads may be a "competing" line with a road with which it is not parallel and does not connect, within the meaning of an act forbidding it to consolidate with a competing road. East Line & R. R. Ry. Co. v. State, 12 S. W. 690, 694, 75 Tex. 434.

Two belt lines of railway intended principally to connect the termini of railroads in East St. Louis with the river transfers to St. Louis, not geographically parallel, and neither touching all the places touched by the other and not competing in respect to local industries because not having access to them, but cutting rates against each other in the principal business and finally brought under the same management, are "competing" lines within Const. Ill. art. 11, § 11, forbidding consolidation of competing lines. East St. Louis Connecting R. Co. v. Jarvis, 92 Fed. 735, 742, 34 O. C. A. 639.

Const. Pa. art. 17, § 4, forbidding the consolidation, by purchase or lease, of any railroad, canal, or other transportation companies owning, or having under their control parallel or "competing" lines, does not apply to street railway companies, since street railways, though parallel, cannot be "competing" in the sense of the mischief intended to be prevented. The travel over parallel streets is not necessarily a "competing" travel. Each street has travel of its own which is conducted upon its own railway. That travel may be almost entirely conducted without competition with the travel on another, though parallel, street. Two roads would be "competing" if laid upon the same street and running in the same direction. Gyger v. Philadelphia City P. Ry. Co., 20 Atl. 399, 400, 136 Pa. 96.

Under the Constitution prohibiting railroads from controlling "competing" or parallel lines, an agreement forming a traffic association between a number of railroads for the purpose of "preventing sudden and extreme changes in rates," by which a managing committee is authorized to fix freight rates, no member being allowed to reduce them, is illegal, though a unanimous vote is required to establish the rates, which may be reduced as provided by the agreement, and though punishment is provided for violating the agreement and any member is at liberty to withdraw upon notice. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. State, 10 S. W. 81, 84, 72 Tex. 404, 13 Am. St. Rep. 815, 1 L. R. A. 849, 2 Interst. Com. R. 335.

Where the Railroad Commission has established rates for a street railway company, and it does not appear that other lines, operating in a part of the territory covered by its lines, have station facilities at any of the points affected by the established rates except at one or two places, or that they are seeking to handle the traffic or had time schedules to handle it, and where it appears that people living in territory outside of those places must travel on the appellant's line or be deprived of direct access by railway into certain towns, such other lines are not "competing lines"; and hence the order of the commission, reducing rates below the rates permitted to be charged by such other roads, cannot be discrimination. Puget Sound Electric Ry. v. Railroad Commission of Washington, 117 Pac. 739, 749, 65 Wash. 75, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 763.

Where a foreign railroad reached the termini of a local road, but its line between such termini was longer and more indirect, requiring a change of cars and ferrying and ran no through trains between such termini, solicited no through business, and provided no terminal facilities at one terminus, and did not make any freight or passenger rates to compete with the local road, the two roads were not parallel or "competing lines." Illinois State Trust Co. v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 75 N. E. 562, 566, 217 Ill. 504.

By the terms of Gen. Code Ohio, § 8806, allowing a railroad to acquire stock in another line, no road or line may be termed competing until it is constructed. Competition as between railroads, necessarily relates to transportation, and, in respect to transportation, the term "competing" signifies a road complete and ready for operation. Mannington v. Hocking Val. R. Co., 183 Fed. 133, 150.

A "competing" line of railroad, within Const. 1874, art. 17, § 4, forbidding the control of parallel and competing lines by any company, includes a projected road, surveyed and laid out, and in process of construction, if such road when completed and in operation would actually compete with the road seeking control. Commonwealth v. South Pennsylvania R. Co., 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 214, 221.

Railroads approaching their connecting point almost at right angles are not parallel and "competing" lines, and hence contracts between them to interchange traffic and cars, sell coupon passenger tickets, make through bills of lading, and apportion their earnings, is not forbidden by the Constitution. Cumberland Val. R. Co. v. Gettysburg & H. Ry. Co., 35 Atl. 952, 954, 177 Pa. 519.

Stock in a Georgia railroad corporation was registered in the name of a foreign corporation and its voting power was held by another foreign corporation, neither of which was a carrier; but the voting power was controlled by a foreign carrier corporation competing with the railroad as to interstate traffic, though not as to domestic traffic. No contract affecting such stock was shown to have been made by the parties in Georgia or with any Georgia corporation. It was held that the right to vote on such stock was not affected by the Georgia Constitution, declaring illegal all contracts with corporations which may lessen competition. Clarke v. Richmond & W. P. Terminal Railway & Warehouse Co., 62 Fed. 328, 334, 10 C. C. A. 387.

Where separate lines of railway start out at right angles from a seaport, transport freight and passengers from widely separate sections of two states, and no point on either road can be reached in any reasonable time by a passenger starting out on the other, a consolidation of such roads does not tend to defeat competition merely because both lines cross two shallow rivers on which steamboats carrying freight and passengers occasionally ply; the occasional delivery of freight by the roads to the steamboats not constituting a competitive business within the meaning of the law. Dady v. Georgia & A. Ry., 112 Fed. 838, 844.

COMPETITION

See Reasonable Competition; Unfair Competition.

"Competition" means selection and not inclusion, and the courts interfere therewith only when it becomes combined force seeking to injure another. Helm v. New York Stock Exchange, 118 N. Y. Supp. 591, 596, 64 Misc. Rep. 529.

"Monopoly" and "competition" being the exact opposites, anything tending to destroy competition tends toward monopoly. State v. Central Lumber Co., 123 N. W. 504, 512, 24 S. D. 136, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 804.

"The law does not visit with its reprobation a fair 'competition' in trade; its tendency is rather to discourage monopolies, except where protected by statute, and to build up new enterprises from which the public is likely to derive a benefit. If one person can by superior energy, by more extensive advertising, by selling a better or more attractive article, outbid another in popular favor, he has a perfect right to do so, nor is this right impaired by an open declaration of his intention to compete with the other in the market." Brown Chemical Co. v. Meyer, 11 Sup. Ct. 625, 627, 139 U. S. 544, 35 L. Ed. 247.

At common law a trader may, to obtain another's customers, use any means not involving violation of the criminal law, or amounting to fraud, duress, or intimidation, and he may boast untruthfully of the merits of his wares so long as it does not amount to a slander or willful misrepresentation of the quality of a rival product, or a libel on the character, business standing, and credit of a rival, and Const. Ala. 1901, § 103, empowering the Legislature to prevent unreasonable competition, does not narrow the play of the law of "competition" as defined at common law. Citizens' Light, Heat & Power Co. v. Montgomery Light & Water Power Co., 171 Fed. 553, 561.

In order to establish "competition" between two roads, it is necessary that the "two roads in question tend in the same direction or to the same commercial center." Webster defines "competition" to be "the act of seeking or endeavoring to gain what another is endeavoring to gain at the time; rivalry; mutual strife for the same object." State v. Port Royal & A. Ry. Co., 23 S. E. 363, 369, 45 S. C. 413 (quoting Burke v. Big Four [Ohio] 22 Wkly. Law Bull. 14).

The word "competition," in Const. art. 4, § 2, par. 4 (Civ. Code, § 5800), prohibiting the Legislature from authorizing any corporation to buy stock in any other corporation or to make any agreement with such corporation which may defeat or lessen competition in their respective businesses or to encourage monopoly, is used in its common-law sense, and the competition, so far as applicable to railroads which the provision is designed to prevent, is competition between lines of railroad viewed with reference to their general business in and through the territory traversed by them, and not competition which may incidentally exist at mere points or particular places, and a combination of railroad lines is not violative of the Constitution, though it may lessen or defeat competition at some point or points, if as a general result, the public at large, as distinguished from people of special or particular communities, is, in consequence, benefited. State v. Central of Georgia R. Co., 35 S. E. 37, 38, 109 Ga. 716, 48 L. R. A. 351.

The word "competition," in Const. art. 4, § 2, par. 4 (Civ. Code, § 5800), prohibiting the Legislature from authorizing any corporation to buy stock in any other corporation or to make any contract with any such corporation or to make any contract with any such corporation which may defeat or lessen "competition" in their respective businesses, is applicable to all corporations including street railroad corporations, and whether a combination between street railroads defeats or lessens competition to the injury of the public is at least a question of fact, and in its application the court must be governed by the fundamental principle as to whether there is such a creation of a monopoly or defeating of competition as will result in injury to the public. Trust Co. of Georgia v. State, 35 S. E. 323, 330, 109 Ga. 736, 48 L. R. A. 520.

COMPETITOR

A labor organization seeking to compel a manufacturer to unionize his plant is not such a "competitor" in the labor market as to justify it in enticing employees to leave the service of their master, or to induce persons seeking employment with him from so doing, when the enticer does not employ labor. The competition which the law upholds must be honest competition, and not a malicious attempt to injure another. George Jonas Glass Co. v. Glass Bottle Blowers' Ass'n of United States and Canada, 66 Atl. 953, 954, 72 N. J. Eq. 653.

COMPLAIN

The meaning of the word "complain" is to express regret or pain. Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Davis, 69 N. E. 550, 553, 32 Ind. App. 569.

COMPLAINT

See Cross-Complaint; Mimeograph Complaint; Supplemental Complaint; Sworn Complaint.

Filing, as commencement of action, see Commencement of Action.

There is no material difference between the word "complaint" as signifying illness and "ailment." The object of asking "for what complaint" in a question to an applicant for insurance, "when, and by what physician, were you last treated, and for what complaint?" was not to ascertain if he ever had any serious illness or personal injury; such words were added to ascertain what the sickness was, without regard to its being serious or trivial, and to show what kind of attendance of a physician was referred to. McDermott v. Modern Woodmen of America, 71 S. W. 833, 840, 97 Mo. App. 636 (citing and quoting Providence Sav. Life Assur. Soc. v. Reutlinger, 25 S. W. 835, 58 Ark. 528).

In civil proceedings

The term "complaint" is not always limited to the charges of crime or wrong, and it may be that as used in some statutes it comprehends oral as well as written allegations, but, whenever used, it means the making of a statement of facts as the basis for taking legal action. A sheriff acting under the statute for the protection of cattle against Texas fever can seize and quarantine cattle only on a complaint made to him that such cattle are capable of communicating the disease. A communication, addressed to him, which merely informs him that the live stock sanitary commission requests him to quarantine certain cattle, is not a "complaint," and does not protect him when sued in replevin for the cattle. Asbell v. Edwards, 66 Pac. 641, 642, 63 Kan. 610.

A hearing "upon complaint," within the meaning of the statute providing that if the orders of the railroad commissioners are not complied with the commissioners, "upon complaint," shall proceed to enforce the same, means a full hearing of which the railroad company has been notified and at which it may appear and participate. State ex rel. Taylor v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 92 Pac. 606, 611, 78 Kan. 467.

The primary function of a complaint is to so plainly state the facts constituting the cause of action as to apprise the party sought to be charged of what the pleader relies on and intends to prove. Willison v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 127 N. W. 4, 111 Minn. 370.

"The relief sought by the evidence was of an affirmative character, as much so as payment, set-off, settlement, accord and satisfaction, or account stated. It was in the nature of a 'counterclaim,' which is defined by statute to be 'any matter arising out of or connected with the cause of action which might be the subject of an action in favor of the defendant or which would tend to reduce plaintiff's claim or demand for damages.' Rev. St. 1894, § 353. The pleading denominated a 'counterclaim' is not in the nature of a complaint against the plaintiff." Tron v. Yohn, 43 N. E. 437, 438, 145 Ind. 272 (citing and adopting Branhan v. Johnson, 62 Ind. 259; Wills v. Browning, 96 Ind. 149; Brower v. Nellis, 33 N. E. 672, 6 Ind. App. 323; Rev. St. 1894, § 350).

In criminal proceedings

The requirement by Rem. & Bal. Code, § 2457, that prosecution for adultery shall be commenced only on "complaint" by the injured spouse, is mandatory, and a formal complaint by such person is necessary; the word "complaint" being used in its strict legal sense. State v. La Bounty, 116 Pac. 1073, 64 Wash. 415.

A "complaint" for a crime is a formal allegation or charge, preferred by some one against another, to an appropriate court or officer. The fact that a wife testified before a grand jury, in obedience to a subpoena, on the question of her husband's adultery, does not show a complaint made by her, within Code, § 4008, providing that no prosecution can be commenced but on the complaint of the husband or wife. State v. Stout, 32 N. W. 372, 373, 71 Iowa, 343, 344.

Under Pen. Code, §§ 811, 812, providing for the verification of facts by complainant prior to the issuance of a warrant of arrest by a magistrate, the instrument on which the warrant is authorized is not a "complaint" in the sense of a pleading, but is more like a deposition only, stating the facts verified by the informant. People v. Sacramento Butchers' Protective Ass'n, 107 Pac. 712, 716, 12 Cal. App. 471.

Under Rev. Laws, c. 212, § 36, authorizing the arrest without warrant for drunkenness in a public place, and St. 1905, c. 384, § 1, requiring an officer arresting one for drunkenness without warrant to make complaint to the court having jurisdiction of the offense, the arrest is only preliminary; and, though "complaint" means the oral allegations by the officer, which are reduced to writing in proper form by the magistrate or court, the officer is liable to an action for assault and false imprisonment, unless he makes the complaint. Horgan v. Boston Elevated R. Co., 94 N. E. 386, 387, 208 Mass. 287.

Same—As deposition

The word "complaint" in Act 1905, amending Pen. Code, § 872, providing that if it appeared from the examination of accused that a public offense had been committed, and there was cause to believe him guilty thereof, the magistrate should indorse on the deposition an order for his commitment, etc., is synonymous with the word "deposition" as used in the Code prior to its amendment. People v. Lapique, 103 Pac. 164, 165, 10 Cal. App. 669.

Same—Indictment distinguished

As indictment, see Indictment.

The word "complaint," in St. 1886, c. 87, §§ 2, 3, as extended in St. 1895, c. 438, Rev. Laws, c. 106, § 62, and St. 1909, c. 514, §§ 112, 113, providing a fine for failure to pay employes weekly, etc., means a complaint as distinguished from an indictment. Commonwealth v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 92 N. E. 766, 769, 206 Mass. 417, 19 Ann. Cas. 529.

In justice court

Under Rev. St. 1887, § 4668, a "complaint" in a justice's court is a concise written statement of the facts constituting plaintiff's cause of action or a copy of the account, note, bill, bond, or instrument on which the action is based. Purdum v. Neil, 77 Pac. 631, 632, 10 Idaho, 263.

Of crime

A statement made by prosecutrix in a rape case four months after the alleged assault, and not voluntarily, but in response to a demand for explanation of her condition, is not a "complaint" but a mere explanation. State v. Bebb, 101 N. W. 189, 190, 125 Iowa, 494.

COMPLAINANT

"Complainant" is a term usually applied to describe the complaining party in an equity suit, * * * and the plaintiff is always a 'complainant.' The complaint in an action determines whether the action is at law or in equity; it being immaterial whether the complaining party is described as plaintiff or as "complainant." Motley, Green & Co. v. Detroit Steel & Spring Co., 161 Fed. 389, 393.

A witness appearing voluntarily before the grand jury and testifying relative to double voting will not be treated as the "complainant," thus rendering his evidence on the trial incompetent, on the ground that he is entitled to half the penalty, where the record does not show that he was the complainant. The complainant must be such throughout; he cannot be a complainant at one stage of the proceedings and cease to be such at another. State v. Bailey, 21 Me. 62, 67.

COMPLEMENT

As used in Laws 1905, p. 163, c. 103, § 6, providing that one who has not purchased one complement of school land may buy not to exceed eight sections or such part thereof as will complete his complement, the word "complement" clearly means eight sections. Ross v. Terrell, 90 S. W. 1093, 1094, 99 Tex. 502.

A complement of a number is the difference between that number and a higher power of ten; for example the complements of 25 are 75 (100-25), 975 (1,000-25), etc. Comptograph Co. v. Mechanical Accountant Co., 140 Fed. 186.

COMPLETE—COMPLETION

See For the Completion of; Incomplete; Not Completed.

Erected as completed, see Erected.

"Complete" means filled up; with no part, item, or element lacking; free from deficiency; entire; perfect; consummate. Town of Checotah v. Town of Eufaula, 119 Pac. 1014, 1017, 31 Okl. 85.

"The word 'complete' is generally defined to mean: to finish; to perfect; to bring to a desired condition of something already commenced, rather than the bringing into existence of something new." An assignment of patents, including all inventions which might thereafter be "completed," held not to include inventions which had not been conceived at the time the assignment was executed. Davis & Roesch Temperature Controlling Co. v. Tagliabue, 159 Fed. 712, 713, 86 C. C. A. 466.

"Substantial" as well as "complete" performance means performance according to the terms of the agreement, not the doing of some act which is as advantageous financially to the promisee as the agreed act would have been. Clough v. A. J. Stillwell Meat Co., 86 S. W. 580, 582, 112 Mo. App. 177.

The word "completed" in the phrase "to be completed in workmanlike style for the sum set opposite," as used in a contract, does not mean that nothing is to be paid until the job is finished, nor refer to a limit of time with regard to payment, but means that the work throughout is to be done in a workmanlike manner. Ganong & Chenoweth v. Brown, 40 South 556, 557, 88 Miss. 53, 117 Am. St. Rep. 731.

Under St. 1898, § 926—11, as amended by Laws 1903, cc. 228, 428, authorizing a city to vote bonds "for the erection, construction and completion" of school buildings, a city may issue bonds for the erection, construction, and equipment of a manual training school, since a school building is not completed within the statute until it is ready for use and occupancy, and since the word "completion" must be given some force, and is not synonymous with the words "erection" and "construction." Maxcy v. City of Oshkosh, 128 N. W. 899, 912, 144 Wis. 238, 81 L. R. A. (N. S.) 787.

The word "completing" has substantially the same meaning as the word "constructing" as used in a bond conditioned for the full and faithful performance of a contract, which provided for the construction and equipment of two steamers within a fixed period, according to certain plans and specifications, providing that on failure so to do the other party might complete the same by contract. United States v. Perth Amboy Shipbuilding & Engineering Co., 137 Fed. 685, 689.

The precise meaning of the words "to complete" or "for the completion of," when used in statutes appropriating money for public work, is sometimes uncertain and indefinite, and the idea intended to be conveyed by them may depend upon the connection in which they are used and the object to which they refer. Claimants having contracted to construct a state capitol, but having failed to do so satisfactorily, the Legislature passed Act May 12, 1909, to provide for carrying forward the work of the new state capitol, making appropriations therefor, and paying any sums that might be found due the former contractors, for the appointment of a capitol commission, and defining its duties, and appropriated by section 6 for the purpose of "completing" the work covered by claimants' prior contract, subject to certain changes, $330,000. Sections 7 and 8 directed the new capitol commission to remove all defective work and materials already done, and appropriated $175,000 for replacing such work. By section 12 the commission was required to certify to the State Auditor the amount which might be found due claimants by the commission created to settle the controversy with them, under Act of April 20, 1909, sufficient money being appropriated to pay the award of such commission. Held, that such act did not appropriate any money to pay claimants' claims for work done on the capitol under their contracts, except in accordance with the findings of the commission, under the Act of April 20, 1909, since the appropriation carried by section 6 was limited to future activities looking to the completion of the work, the words "to complete" not being broad enough to cover work already done but to signify the finishing of unfinished work. Jobe v. Caldwell & Drake, 125 S. W. 423, 427, 98 Ark. 508.

As completion of substantial part

The "completion" of a contract to do the plumbing in a building, within 60 days after which B. & C. Comp. § 5644, requires the claim for a lien to be filed, is the time when the contractor substantially completed it, supposed he had finished the work, got the city plumbing inspector to examine and pass on the work, and took his tools and men away and not the time when, several months later, after a dispute as to amount due, he did a few hours work, nor the time when thereafter the plumbing inspector issued his certificate, though by the contract the work was to be done to his satisfaction as regards quality. Coffey v. Smith, 97 Pac. 1079, 1081, 1082, 52 Or. 538.

The excavation of a tunnel and its completion to a temporary grade, over which is laid a temporary track which is but a few inches from the level of the regular grade, the tunnel being completed, except for timbering and completing the excavation to the regular grade, is a substantial completion of the portion of the tunnel so excavated, within the rule making the completed portion of the tunnel an appliance and means to prosecute the work, furnished by the master, which he is bound to use ordinary care to render a safe place in which to work. McRae v. Erickson, 82 Pac. 209, 210, 1 Cal. App. 326.

Where one having a building constructed was under his contract entitled to change the work, and thereafter sold the building, agreeing to "complete" it according to the plans and specifications, the word "complete" referred to the work necessary to finish the building and not to the work already done, but after the contract of sale, the vendor had no right to depart from the plans and specifications, under his reserved right to make changes. Marx v. Oliver, 92 N. E. 864, 867, 246 Ill. 816.

Where a building contract calls for completion by a certain date, and the building is completed by that date except as to a platform, the construction of which was postponed by request of the owners and afterwards erected promptly on request and in the manner directed by their superintendent acting under their instructions, the building is "completed" at the required date within the meaning of the contract. Iron Clad Mfg. Co. v. Stanfield, 76 Atl. 854, 858, 112 Md. 360.

A lien is not allowed for the construction of a sidewalk called for in a building contract, and the completion of the building, within L. O. L. § 7420, fixing the time for filing lien notices after the completion of the work does not depend on finishing the sidewalk. Where the rights of the owner, who relied on the completion by the contractor of the building, and paid the contract price, are involved, the fastening of an electrical switch or the placing of a pipe through a wall should not be regarded, in determining the time of the completion of the building, within L. O. L. § 7420. Sarchet v. Legg, 118 Pac. 203, 204, 60 Or. 213.

Within the Mechanics' Lien Law authorizing the filing of liens within two months after the completion of buildings, the word "completion," in the absence of any statutory qualifications or definition, means actual completion, dated from the time when the last work is done. Where an owner accepted a building from the principal contractor, who had completed his contract, this did not start the statute running as against one furnishing material to such contractor, where, at the time of the acceptance, the building was not completed because there had been placed therein a certain grate mantel and tiling, subsequently placed therein by another contractor. Lichty v. Houston Lumber Co., 88 Pac. 846, 847, 39 Colo. 53.

Abandonment of an enterprise will come fairly within the meaning of the term "completion" within the meaning of the Mechanic's Lien Law making the filing of a statement premature if filed before "completion" of the building; this being an equitable construction of the term. Catlin v. Douglass, 33 Fed. 569, 570.

Of contract

The uncovering by a subcontractor for the plumbing of a building of a sewer pipe for inspection by the city officials, made necessary for want of inspection before the pipe was covered, is not work in the "completion of the contract," within the statute fixing the time for the filing of a lien claim after the completion of the contract. Schade v. Alton, 121 Pac. 898, 899, 61 Or. 187.

The complaint of an original contractor for a mechanic's lien for work, under a contract to do the plumbing in a building, fails to show that the contractor filed his claim for a lien within 60 days "after completion of his contract," the time limited therefor by B. & C. Comp. § 5644, it averring that he filed it within 60 days after "completion of the building." Coffey v. Smith, 97 Pac. 1079, 1081, 1082, 52 Or. 538.

A lien law, providing that the notice of a mechanic's lien may be filed within 90 days after the completion of the contract, means within 90 days after the substantial completion of the contract. Delany v. Carpenter, 114 N. Y. Supp. 990, 991, 62 Misc. Rep. 416.

Act Feb. 24, 1905, c. 778, 33 Stat. 811, amending Act Aug. 13, 1894, c. 280, 28 Stat. 278, provides that, if no suit is brought on a federal contractor's bond by the United States within six months from the completion and final settlement of the contract, any included creditor may sue, provided such suit shall not be commenced until after the complete performance of the contract and final settlement thereof and shall be commenced within one year after such final settlement and performance and not later. Held, that the words "completion and final settlement," as used in such provision, were not equivalent, though the latter may by inference be held to include the former, but that both constitute an essential prerequisite to a subcontractor's right to sue, and hence where a contract was still open and unsettled as late as July 12, 1909, a suit on the contractor's bond, begun October 21st following, was premature and unsustainable. Stitzer v. United States, 182 Fed 513, 518, 105 C. C. A. 51.

Act Feb. 24, 1905, c. 778, 33 Stat. 811, amendatory of Act Aug. 13, 1894, c. 280, 28 Stat. 278, provides that a contractor with the United States for any public work shall give a bond in usual form with the additional obligation that the contractor shall pay all persons supplying labor or material for the work; that, in case of suit thereon by the United States, any creditor having a claim for labor or materials may intervene therein and have his claim adjudicated and paid, "subject, however, to the priority of the claim and judgment of the United States"; that, in case no suit is brought by the United States within six months from the completion and final settlement of the contract, any such creditor may bring suit on the bond in the name of the United States for the benefit of himself and all other similar creditors, provided that such suit "shall not be commenced until after the complete performance of said contract and final settlement thereof and shall be commenced within one year after the performance and final settlement of said contract and not later." A contractor who had given such bond, and whose contract contained the usual provision giving the United States in case of his default the right to have the contract completed at his cost, became insolvent and abandoned the work. Held, that such abandonment was not a "complete performance of said contract" which gave a right of action to creditors for labor and materials on the bond under the statute, which contemplates a completion of the work, whether by the contractor or the United States, and a final settlement to determine the prior rights and claim of the United States under the contract and the lapse of six months thereafter for the bringing of suit to enforce such rights against the bondsmen before an action can be maintained by such creditors. United States v. Winkler, 162 Fed. 397, 401.

In an action on a bond for the performance of a contract which provided for the construction of two steamers within a fixed period, according to certain plans, and that on failure to do so the United States might complete the same, the declaration alleged the steamers were not completed, that the contractor abandoned the contract, that a new contract was thereupon made, and they were completed thereunder. Held, that a demurrer to the declaration, for the reason that the new contract was for the construction and completion of said steamers, whereas under the original contract it should have been for their completion only, would not lie, the words "construction" and "completion" having substantially the same meaning. United States v. Perth Amboy Shipbuilding & Engineering Co., 137 Fed. 685, 688.

Of public improvement

Lien Law, § 12, provides a lien on the amount due the contractor from a city under a contract for the construction of a public improvement for material or labor furnished for such improvement by giving notice of such lien to specified officers before the improvement is completed and accepted by the city or within 30 days thereafter. Held that, with reference to the time for filing a notice of lien, the improvement is completed when it is turned over to and accepted by the city on the architect's certificate, though a specified sum is retained for one year by the city under the contract, as a guaranty, and a further sum is retained for uncompleted work specified. Milliken Bros. v. City of New York, 120 N. Y. Supp. 841, 844, 135 App. Div. 598.

Of railroad

A contract to build a "complete railroad" does not impose on the contractor an obligation to equip it with rolling stock. Central Trust Cor. v. Condon, 67 Fed. 84, 91, 14 C. C. A. 314.

The word "completion," in a statute empowering county commissioners to subscribe stock when necessary to aid in the "completion" of any railroad, is not synonymous with "construction" and does not authorize the issuance of policies in aid of a railroad not then begun. Graves v. Board of Com'rs

To entitle a railroad company to receive county bonds in payment of the county's subscription to the capital stock of the railroad company, on condition that the railroad company should receive the bonds when its road should be "completed" as first class, and in operation by lease or otherwise, the road, if constructed according to the terms of the contract, need not have been perfect in every respect at the prescribed date for its completion, but it should have been completed and in operation at that date in such a manner that it might be properly and regularly used for the purpose of transporting freight and passengers. Southern Kan. & P. R. Co. v. Towner, 21 Pac. 221, 224, 41 Kan. 72 (citing Brokaw v. Board of Com'rs of Gibson County, 73 Ind. 543; Freeman v. Matlock, 67 Ind. 998).

The word "completed," in an agreement to pay money when a railroad is completed, may have a different meaning from what it would have in a contract for the construction of the road. In a contract for construction it would mean a completion in accordance with the specifications, but in a contract to pay money in aid of a railroad, if "completed," by a date specified a less perfect construction might specify the intent of the parties provided the road is in condition to be opened for regular passenger and freight traffic and is actually in use. Tower v. Detroit, L. & L. M. R. Co., 84 Mich. 328, 338.

Of sale

"A sale on credit is a complete sale." Therefore a sale of whisky in Georgia since January 1, 1908, whether for cash or on credit, or whether subsequently paid for or not, constitutes a violation of law. Finch v. State, 64 S. E. 1007, 6 Ga. App. 338 (citing Acts 1907, p. 81; Civ. Code 1895, § 3526; Lupo v. State, 45 S. E. 602, 118 Ga. 759; Cook v. State, 53 S. E. 104, 124 Ga. 653).

Plaintiff contracted to furnish certain pumping machinery, to be installed in the hull of a dredge being constructed by defendant. The contract further provided that plaintiff should install the machinery at its own expense; that defendant should afford the facilities of its yards for such installation and furnish men and material for that purpose at cost; that defendant should keep the machinery insured for the benefit of plaintiff; and that it should pay one-third of the price when the machinery was delivered, one-third when it was installed on board the dredge, and the balance on completion of the test by the party for whom the dredge was being constructed. Held that, on delivery of the machinery and payment of the first installment of the purchase price, there was a "completed sale," and not a mere bailment, of the machinery to defendant. William R.

Of street

Ordinarily, a public improvement such as the laying out, or widening, or extension of a street is not "completed," within the meaning of the statute providing for assessments for public improvements completed within six years before the passage of the statute, until it is put in condition for public use. New England Hospital for Women & Children v. Street Com'rs of City of Boston, 74 N. E. 294, 295, 188 Mass. 88.

Of work

Expenses of completion of work, see Expenses.

Where the liability of a contractor's surety was to continue until "completion and acceptance of the work," the time of the completion of the work should be construed as coexistent with the acceptance thereof, so that the surety's liability continued until both contingencies occurred. Ætna Indemnity Co. v. Ryan, 103 N. Y. Supp. 756, 760, 53 Misc. Rep. 614.

Under Act April 23, 1889, § 3 (P. L. 44), providing that no assessment for paving, etc., shall be a lien on real estate for more than six months from the time of the "completion of such work," unless a claim for the same shall be filed in the office of the prothonotary within that time, the words "completion of such work," relate to the completion of the entire improvement authorized by the ordinance, and not merely the completion of the work in front of a property subject to a claim filed. Borough of Tarentum v. Moorhead, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 273, 277; Same v. Dunlap, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 281.

COMPLETE ABSTRACT

A "complete abstract," within the meaning of a contract for the sale of land, requiring the vendors to deliver a "complete abstract" to the vendees, means an abstract that is certified up to date by the abstractor. Davis v. Fant (Tex.) 93 S. W. 193, 195.

COMPLETE ALIBI

The word "complete" as applied to an alibi has no reference to the quality of the testimony on the subject, but only to the quantity. A witness testifies to a complete alibi when he swears to such a state of facts as to make the presence of the defendant at the scene of the crime reasonably impossible; to a partial or incomplete alibi when he swears to such a state of facts as to make the presence of the defendant at the scene of the crime in some degree improbable, though not reasonably impossible. A defendant has therefore offered a complete alibi when he has introduced witnesses who testify to a state of facts which render his presence reasonably impossible, whether the witnesses are, in the eyes of the jury, credible or not.

Smith v. State, 61 S. E. 737, 738, 3 Ga. App. 808.

COMPLETE BARGAIN

A covenant to renew a lease at an appraised value, though unilateral in the sense that the tenant makes no agreement to make a new lease, can be enforced as a "completed bargain" to the extent of compelling an appraisal as the lease provides. Simon v. Schmitt, 118 N. Y. Supp. 826, 833.

COMPLETE CONTRACT

"The elements of a 'complete contract' are: A lawful subject-matter, a sufficient consideration, and the aggregatio mentium, or natural assent of the parties." A provision in a contract employing one to drill a well that he would, if a second well was drilled, do the work for a fixed compensation, was a mere offer which to become binding must be accepted by the employer. Kernan v. Carter (Ky.) 104 S. W. 308, 309 (quoting and adopting definition in Beach, Cont. § 1).

A contract that is incomplete, uncertain, or indefinite in its material terms will not be specifically enforced in equity. Following the general principles of equity, there is required a greater degree of "certainty" and definiteness for specific performance than to obtain damages at law. For specific performance is required that degree of "certainty" which leaves in the mind of the chancellor or court no reasonable doubt as to what the parties intended, and no reasonable doubt of the specific thing equity is to compel done. The element of "completeness" denotes that the contract embraces all the material terms; that of "certainty" denotes that each one of these terms is expressed in a sufficiently exact and definite manner. An "incomplete contract," therefore, is one from which one or more material terms have been entirely omitted. An uncertain contract is one which may, indeed, embrace all the material terms, but one or more of them is expressed in so inexact, indefinite, or obscure language that the intent of the parties cannot be sufficiently ascertained to enable the court to carry it into effect. Van Dyke v. Norfolk Southern R. Co., 72 S. E. 659, 665, 112 Va. 835 (citing 6 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 764).

COMPLETE DETERMINATION

The phrase "complete determination of the controversy," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 452, providing that the court may determine the controversy as between the parties before it, where it can do so without prejudice to the rights of others, but, where a complete determination of the controversy cannot be had without the presence of other parties, the court must direct them to be brought in, means that when there are persons not parties, whose rights must be ascertained and settled before the rights of the parties to the suit can be determined, such other persons must be made parties. Shanks v. National Casket Co., 88 N. Y. Supp. 839, 841, 95 App. Div. 187.

COMPLETE DOMINION

"A married woman incidental to her ownership of a separate estate had power of disposing of her property in equity as a feme sole. It was competent for her to exercise such right in favor of her husband, which power of a married woman in equity over her separate estate is described as 'complete dominion' over her separate property." Mathewson v. Mathewson, 63 Atl. 285, 289, 79 Conn. 23, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 611, 6 Ann. Cas. 1027 (quoting Imlay v. Huntington, 20 Conn. 146).

COMPLETE EDUCATION

A contract by a former husband with his divorced wife to pay for the "complete education" of the children of the marriage will be construed with reference to the social and financial standing of the parties at the time and in the light of all the surrounding circumstances, and where the former husband was worth about $15,000 and a son had been given a six-year preparatory course costing $520, two years in the electrical and mechanical engineering department of a university of the state would be a compliance with the contract, and a three-year post-graduate course in a distant university costing $3,000 is not required. McGaw v. O'Beirne, 52 South. 775, 777, 126 La. 584.

COMPLETE HIS PURCHASE

The phrase "pay the purchase money into court," in an order requiring the purchaser to pay into court either the whole amount of his purchase money or such sum as would indemnify the mortgagee for the failure to complete the purchase, is synonymous with the phrase "complete his purchase." State Bank v. Wilchinsky, 112 N. Y. Supp. 1002, 1005, 128 App. Div. 485.

COMPLETE INVENTORY

A rough inventory taken in pencil and on tablet paper, subject to revision and correction, and afterwards to be copied in ink in a bound book, according to custom, is not a "complete inventory" contemplated by the iron-safe clause of an insurance policy, to be kept in a fire proof safe or other place of security. St. Landry Wholesale Mercantile Co. v. Teutonia Ins. Co. of New Orleans, 37 South. 967, 969, 113 La. 1053.

COMPLETE RECORD

A clause in a fire policy, requiring the insured to keep a set of books which shall present "a complete record of business transacted, including all purchases, sales, and shipments, both for cash and credit," is not complied with where it appears that the only record of cash sales kept is a cash book, which only shows the amount of cash taken in at the end of each day, giving no indication of the source from which the cash is derived, whether from such sales, from the payment of past-due bills, or what not. Everett-Ridley-Ragan Co. v. Traders' Ins. Co., 48 S. E. 918, 121 Ga. 228, 104 Am. St. Rep. 99.

COMPLETE TITLE

The "complete equitable title" which one may obtain under the mining laws of the United States accrues immediately upon purchase, as an entry entitling the purchaser to a patent, and the right to a patent once vested is equivalent to a patent issued. O'Connell v. Pinnacle Gold Mines Co., 131 Fed. 106, 110 (quoting and adopting definition in Benson Mining & Smelting Co. v. Alta Mining & Smelting Co., 12 Sup. Ct. 877, 145 U. S. 428, 36 L. Ed. 762).

COMPLETED CRIMINAL CONSPIRACY

A "conspiracy" in general terms is a combination of two or more persons by concerted action to accomplish some criminal or unlawful purpose; or to accomplish some purpose, not in itself criminal or unlawful, by criminal or unlawful means. The act intended need not be punishable by indictment. The essence of the offense is the unlawful agreement and combination of the parties, and therefore it is complete whenever such combination is formed, though no act be done toward carrying the main design into effect. A combination and agreement between two or more persons willfully and maliciously to injure and destroy the property of a third person is a "completed criminal conspiracy," and is the subject of indictment; it not being necessary to the completion of the crime that the conspirators should determine in advance what particular property should be injured or destroyed. Lanasa v. State, 71 Atl. 1058, 1060, 109 Md. 602.

COMPLETED MANUFACTURED ARTICLE

Imports in the form of pieces of granite dressed, cut, and bored, ready to be assembled as ornamental garden lanterns, are not "dressed granite" under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 118, 30 Stat. 159, but should be classified as "completed manufactured articles," and as such are dutiable as unenumerated manufactured articles under section 6 (30 Stat. 205). A. A. Vantine & Co. v. United States, 159 Fed. 289.

COMPLETELY ORGANIZED

See County Completely Organized.

COMPLICATION

A broken sternum was not a "complication" within an accident policy provision for indemnity for fractured "ribs with complications." Hastings v. Bankers' Accident Ins.

Co. of Des Moines, 119 N. W. 79, 80, 140 Iowa, 626.

COMPLY—COMPLIANCE

See Substantial Compliance.

The words "complied with," as used in Rev. St. 1895, art. 2673, subd. 8, requiring a guardian on a sale of the ward's real estate to report to the court within 30 days thereafter whether the purchaser had complied with the terms of the sale, mean "perfected or carried into effect, completed," and convey the idea that the consideration of the purchase had been made complete. McMinn v. Cope (Tex.) 112 S. W. 809, 811 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1870).

A complaint on a fraternal benefit certificate, which alleges that the member "complied with" the conditions of the certificate, alleges performance of the contract, within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 376, providing that it shall be sufficient to allege generally that the party performed the conditions on his part. Supreme Tent, Knights of the Macca-bees of the World, v. Ethridge, 87 N. E. 1049, 1050, 43 Ind. App. 475.

As used in Ky. St. § 753, providing that, if the insurance commissioner is of the opinion on examination of other evidence that foreign insurance company has failed to comply with the law, he shall revoke or suspend all certificates of authority granted to it or its agents, have the same meaning as the words "fully complied with the laws of this state," as used in section 634, providing that the commissioner on being satisfied that the company has fully complied with the laws of the state shall furnish to such agents as the company directs a license to transact business as agent, etc. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Prewitt, 105 S. W. 463, 465, 127 Ky. 399.

COMPONENT MATERIAL

See Single Component Material.

Fabrics in chief value of flax, but in part of wool, are dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule J, par. 346, 30 Stat. 181, relating to goods "the component material of chief value" in which is flax, and not under Schedule K, par. 386, 30 Stat. 184, relating to cloths "in part of wool." United States v. Walsh, 154 Fed. 749, 750 (citing Hartranft v. Meyer, 10 Sup. Ct. 751, 135 U. S. 237, 34 L. Ed. 110).

COMPOSITION

See Musical Composition.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, § 12a, authorizing the bankrupt to offer a "composition" after, but not before, he has been examined in open court or at a meeting of his creditors and has filed in court the required schedule and list of creditors, and providing for its acceptance by the creditors, does not authorize a composition prior to or without an adjudication. In re Back Bay Automobile Co., 158 Fed. 679, 684.

A "composition agreement" is one made upon a sufficient consideration between an insolvent or embarrassed debtor and his creditors, or a considerable proportion of them, whereby the latter for the sake of immediate or sooner payment agrees to accept a dividend less than the whole amount of their claim, to be distributed pro rata, in discharge and satisfaction of the whole. Reynolds v. Pennsylvania Oil Co., 89 Pac. 610, 612, 150 Cal. 629.

A "composition with creditors" has been defined to be an agreement made by a debtor, either insolvent or in embarrassed circumstances, with two or more of his creditors, by which it is agreed, on the one side, that each of the creditors who enters into the agreement shall be paid a specified amount or percentage, in either case less than the whole, of their respective claims, or that all of a specified portion of the debtor's property shall be applied toward the payment of those claims pro rata, while, on the other side, the creditors agree to accept in satisfaction of their claims whatever is thus proffered. Abe Block & Co. v. Largent (Tex.) 135 S. W. 1078, 1079.

A "composition with creditors" is an arrangement between a debtor and creditors, the latter agreeing with the debtor, and mutually between themselves, to receive and the debtor to pay, a certain part or portion of the demands due the several creditors in full payment and in discharge of the debt. An agreement between a debtor and a single creditor, whereby the latter agrees to discharge the former on the payment of a less sum than the whole debt, is void for lack of consideration. But composition agreements between a debtor and several creditors are sustained on the theory that the mutual covenants and agreements between the several creditors by which they relinquish their claim on payment of a part constitute a consideration sufficient to support the agreement. Anderman v. Meier, 98 N. W. 327, 328, 91 Minn. 413.

COMPOSITION METAL

"Composition metal" is a commercial designation for all composite metals of copper, tin, lead, and spelter containing 70 per cent. or more of copper, and articles made of that metal are not "old brass" within the commercial meaning of that term. "Composition scrap" is the commercial designation which includes old cannon and various other articles made of composition metal which are dealt in by the old-metal trade. Downing v. United States, 122 Fed. 445, 446, 58 C. C. A. 427.

So called "fitters," made from sheets of copper and zinc, and reduced to a fine condition for use in the same manner as bronze powder, is "composition metal," within Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 533, 30 Stat. 197, admitting free of duty all composition metal of which copper is a component material of chief value. Geo. Meier & Co. v. United States, 128 Fed. 472, 473.

The article commercially known as "fitters," produced from the thin sheets which constitute the composition metal of commerce, by a process of manufacture that makes it no longer available for the uses to which composition metal of trade is put, but adapts it for other uses, is not free of duty as "composition metal," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 533, 30 Stat. 197, but is dutiable as manufactures of metal under paragraph 193, § 1, Schedule C, of said act (30 Stat. 167). United States v. George Meier & Co., 136 Fed. 764, 765, 69 C. C. A. 421 (citing Erhardt v. Hahn, 55 Fed. 273, 5 C. C. A. 99; De Jonge v. Magone, 16 Sup. Ct. 119, 159 U. S. 562, 40 L. Ed. 260; Grempler v. United States, 107 Fed. 687, 46 C. C. A. 557; United States v. Binney, 82 Fed. 992, 27 C. C. A. 347; Boker v. United States, 97 Fed. 205, 38 C. C. A. 114; United States v. Leonard, 108 Fed. 42, 47 C. C. A. 181; Marsching v. United States, 113 Fed. 1006).

COMPOSITION SCRAP

See Alcoholic Compounds; Chemical Compound; Compromise.

In view of Food and Drugs Act June 30, 1906, c. 3915, § 8, 34 Stat. 770, providing that the term "blend" shall be construed to mean a mixture of like substances, and regulation 27a made under the authority of such act and providing that the terms "mixture" and "compound" are interchangeable, "blend" is a "compound," but a "compound" may or may not be a "blend." In other words, the term "compound" does not necessarily denote a mixture of unlike substances. The term "Compound White Pepper" does not so naturally imply to the average purchaser a mixture of white pepper with an ingredient other than pepper as to make it a proper branding, where the statement of its ingredients is so placed and in such type as not to be readily noticed by the purchaser, and as to be calculated and intended to deceive and mislead the latter. Frank v. United States, 192 Fed. 864, 869, 113 C. C. A. 188.

Food and Drugs Act June 30, 1906, c. 3915, § 8, 34 Stat. 770, provides that the term "blend" shall be construed to mean a mixture of like substances. Regulation 27a, made under the authority of the act, provides that the terms "mixtures" and "compounds" are interchangeable, and indicate the result of putting together two or more food products. Held, that a blend is a compound, but a compound may or may not be a blend; in other words, that the term "compound" does not necessarily denote a mixture of unlike substances. Frank v. United States, 192 Fed. 864, 869, 113 C. C. A. 188.

Under a claim in a patent, reading "as a new article of manufacture, a compound of the crystalizable blood pressure raising constituent of the suprarenal glands substantially free from noncrystalizable constituents thereof, which is soluble in water and which when in a water solution is practically inert to the oxygen of the air," etc., the word "compound" indicates atomic association in a single molecule. Parke-Davis & Co. v. H. K. Mulford Co., 189 Fed. 95, 110 (quoting and adopting definition in Eleventh Edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica, subtit. Chemistry).

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 2, 30 Stat. 151, relating to alcoholic compounds, the word "compound" is not limited by any trade usage or technical adaptation, but is used in its common broad sense of being any union or mixture of elements, ingredients, or parts, as fine-cut herbs commingled with alcohol and constituting to some degree an infusion. United States v. Stone & Downer Co., 175 Fed. 83, 37, 99 C. C. A. 49.

The provisions of War Revenue Act June 13, 1898, § 20, 30 Stat. 456, that the stamp taxes provided for in Schedule B "shall apply to all medicinal articles compounded by any formula, published or unpublished," but that they shall not apply to any uncompounded medicinal drug or chemical, contemplate a compound made after some formula and a natural product, such as papain, which is prepared from the juice of the paw-paw and cannot be made artificially, although it may be a chemical compound, is not "compounded" within the meaning of the statute, and is not taxable, whether used as the basis of a plaster, or prepared in the form of tablets or pills by being mixed with an excipient which has no medicinal effect. Johnson & Johnson v. Herold, 161 Fed. 593, 604.

The manufacture of buchu gin by pouring pure gin on a bed or mat of buchu leaves and allowing it to percolate through; then adding distilled water and syrup, the gin comprising some 50 per cent. or more of the compound, which is 46 per cent. alcohol and designed for use as a beverage, constitutes a "compounding or adulterating" within St. 1909, § 4114A et seq., imposing a license tax of 1¼ cents a wine gallon on such business. Dr. C. Bouvier Specialty Co. v. James, 118 S. W. 381, 133 Ky. 580.

As discharge of debt

The word "compound" in Rev. St. 1899, § 897, allowing a creditor to compound with debtors and release them from further liqbility, means the same as compromise, so that there must be consideration for the compounding. De Buhr v. Thompson, 114 S. W. 557, 558, 134 Mo. App. 21.

"To compound" is to compromise or make a composition whereby a creditor discharges his debtor on payment of a smaller sum than that actually owing. Williams-Thompson Co. v. Williams, 73 S. E. 409, 410, 10 Ga. App. 251.

COMPOUND INTEREST

Computing interest with annual rests constitutes compound interest. Bullis v. Somerville, 117 S. W. 736, 745, 218 Mo. 624.

An agreement turning interest after maturity into principal, bearing interest, is not compounding interest. Wigton v. Elliott, 111 Pac. 713, 714, 49 Colo. 115.

COMPOUND LARCENY

The crime of larceny from a store (B. & C. Comp. § 1799) is a compound larceny, consisting of simple larceny (section 1798), aggravated by the circumstance of taking the property from a store, in which the value of the property is not an ingredient of the offense, as in case of simple larceny. State v. Reynier, 91 Pac. 301, 302, 50 Or. 224.

COMPOUND PLEA

A "compound plea" is where two or three matters of defense are set up in the conjunctive form. A plea alleging that the plaintiff negligently attempted to leave the car in an improper manner and at an improper time and place, and as a proximate result thereof was injured, was a "compound plea." Southern R. Co. v. Burgess, 42 South. 35, 38, 143 Ala. 364.

COMPOUNDING A CRIME

See Compounding a Felony.

COMPOUNDING A FELONY

"Thief bote" is when a party robbed not only knows the felon but also takes his goods again, or other amends, upon agreement not to prosecute and is frequently called "compounding of felony" and formerly was held to make a man an accessory. State v. Hodge, 55 S. E. 626, 627, 142 N. C. 665, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 709, 9 Ann. Cas. 563 (quoting and adopting definition in Blackstone [4 Comm. 134], and citing Russell, Crimes, 194; Bishop, Crim. Law, 648; Bl. Law Dict. 240; 8 Cyc. 492).

Under Pen. Code, N. Y. § 125, defining the compounding of a crime, notes given by an employé for money embezzled from his employer, and signed by an indorser on an understanding with the payee that the principal would not be prosecuted, are in part for an illegal consideration, and, as against the indorser, are void. In re Lawrence, 166 Fed. 239, 242, 92 C. C. A. 251.

COMPOUNDING PENALTIES

"The 'compounding of penalties' is an offense at common law, of dangerous tendency, highly derogatory to public example, and prosecutions are no more to be improperly suppressed by public informing officers than by common informers." State v. Wilson, 67 Atl. 533, 534, 80 Vt. 249 (quoting and adopting definition in Town of Hinesburgh v. Sumner, 9 Vt. 23, 31 Am. Dec. 599).

COMPRISE

The term "comprise" means embraced or included. De Nobili v. Scanda, 198 Fed. 341, 346.

COMPROMISE

Offer of compromise distinguished from admission, see Admission.

A "compromise" is an agreement between two or more persons, who, to avoid a lawsuit, amicably settle their differences on such terms as they can agree upon. Armijo v. Henry, 89 Pac. 305, 308, 14 N. M. 181, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 275; City of Anadarko v. Argo, 128 Pac. 500, 501, 35 Okl. 115.

A "compromise" is any adjustment of matters in dispute by mutual concession without resort to law. Matthews v. Matthews, 49 Me. 586, 587.

The words "or to compromise or compound any debt or claim" owing by the estate of their testator or intestate, in Laws 1893, p. 200, c. 100, amending Laws 1888, p. 928, c. 571, by which the surrogate was granted power to authorize executors and administrators to compromise or compound any debt or claim, indicate an intent of the Legislature to confer power on the surrogate to permit a settlement or compromise of the claim, either made for or against the estate. In re Gilman's Estate, 87 N. Y. Supp. 128, 129, 92 App. Div. 462.

Compromise is a species of novation, and it is a condition that neither the original claim nor the subsequent agreement shall be illegal. Wadsworth v. Board of Sup'rs of Livingston County, 115 N. Y. Supp. 8, 18.

The phrase, by way of "compromise of all matters in controversy in this suit" between the plaintiff and the defendant, Pullman Palace Car Company, found in the agreement entered into between them, and upon which a judgment was rendered, clearly imported a settlement by compromise of the entire subject-matter of the litigation; such an agreement releasing the railroad company from any liability for the ejection, which was the subject of the suit. Blake v. Kansas City Southern R. Co., 85 S. W. 430, 433, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 337.

Plaintiffs, who sold sheep to defendant, claimed that defendant was to pay the freight charges. Defendant, upon ascertaining the number of the sheep, paid the amount to plaintiffs' agent during their absence. No freight bills were then presented, or mentioned, and no question as to the terms of the contract had then arisen. The agent might have assumed that defendant would pay the freight direct to the railroad company or later settle with plaintiffs. Held, that receipt of the check might properly be considered by plaintiffs as payment of that portion of the price then ascertainable, and it did not amount to a compromise of a disputed claim. Beach v. Schroeder, 107 Pac. 271, 274, 47 Colo. 312.

COMPROMISE VERDICT

While jurors may properly give great weight to the opinions of the other jurors, and may make reasonable concessions as a result of argument and persuasion, a verdict arrived at by their surrender of conscientious convictions upon a material question by some of the jurors in return for a life surrender by others is a "compromise verdict," and invalid. Simmons v. Fish, 97 N. E. 102, 105, 210 Mass. 563, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 588.

COMPULSION

COMPULSORY ARBITRATION

The appraisers appointed under Rev. St. § 3084, made applicable by section 2915 in proceedings by a city to condemn land for waterworks, providing that compensation to be paid the owner shall be ascertained by three disinterested appraisers appointed by the district court or the judge thereof, are not a court of arbitration or a compulsory board of arbitration within the meaning of either Const. art. 5, § 1, vesting the judicial power in certain courts, including courts of arbitration, or section 28, authorizing appeals to the Supreme Court from decisions of compulsory boards of arbitration; the tribunals referred to in such sections being those contemplated by the constitutional provision authorizing the Legislature to establish courts of arbitration to hear controversies between labor organizations and their employers. Edwards v. City of Cheyenne, 114 Pac. 677, 683, 122 Pac. 900, 19 Wyo. 110.

COMPULSORY PAYMENT

A payment is deemed "compulsory" when made to free property from an actual and existing duress imposed on it by the party to whom the money is paid, or to prevent a seizure by a party armed with apparent authority to seize the property. Goodhue v. Hawkins (Tex.) 133 S. W. 288, 292.

The doctrine of contribution rests upon a payment which is compulsory, in the sense that there must be a legal obligation to pay; and a payment by a mere volunteer is not compulsory, and gives rise to no right of contribution in favor of such voluntary pay-or. Yore v. Yore, 144 S. W. 847, 850, 240 Mo. 451.

Where the payee of a note indorsed it for the accommodation of the maker before delivery and the maker failed to pay, payments made on the note by the indorser were not voluntary, as the indorsement under Laws 1897, c. 612, §§ 113, 116, was the agreement of the indorser that on due presentment the note should be paid, and that, if it were dishonored and the necessary proceedings taken, he would pay to the holder. A payment is compulsory when the party making it cannot legally resist it. Blanchard v. Blanchard, 94 N. E. 630, 631, 201 N. Y. 124, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 783.

COMPULSORY PROCESS

The right of accused to "compulsory process" for witnesses in his favor, conferred by Const. 1901, § 6, means the right to ordinary compulsory process by subpoena, and not necessarily to extraordinary compulsory process by attachment in case a subpoena, duly served, is not obeyed. Sanderson v. State, 53 South. 109, 110, 168 Ala. 109.

The right to "compulsory process" referred to in the Constitution is the right of accused persons to demand the issuing of subpoenas for their witnesses and of having the same served. The right to have attachments issued to compel the attendance of witnesses exists only when circumstances and conditions are such as to call legally for that writ. State v. Stewart, 41 South. 798, 802, 117 La. 476 (citing State v. Allemand, 25 La. Ann. 526; State v. Comstock, 36 La. Ann. 310; 3 Wig. Ev. § 2191; 4 Wig. Ev. § 2595; 3 Rice, Ev. § 188).

COMPUTATION

Acts Ex. Sess. 1890, p. 50, c. 24, as amended by Acts 1897, p. 141, c. 17, relating to the purity of elections, provides that it shall apply to towns, cities, and civil districts having a population of 2,500 or more computed by the federal census of 1890, or which may afterwards have that number or over by any subsequent federal census. Acts Ex. Sess. 1890, p. 59, c. 25, providing for the registration of voters, declares that it shall apply to civil districts having a population of 2,500 computed by the federal census of 1880, or which may thereafter have that number or over computed by any subsequent federal census. Held, that "computation" was not used in the sense of "enumeration," so that, where civil districts which did not have a population of 2,500 in 1890 were subsequently consolidated by Acts 1907, p. 284, c. 102, and the districts as consolidated, by adding their inhabitants according to the census of 1900, contained more than 2,500 inhabitants, the acts immediately became applicable thereto. McMinn County v. Allen (Tenn.) 105 S. W. 67, 68.

CONCEAL—CONCEALMENT

See Artful Concealment; Fraudulent Concealment.

Decedent cannot be deemed to have concealed an imported violin, brought into the United States without payment of duty in violation of the customs laws, within Act June 22, 1874, c. 391, § 22, 18 Stat. 190, which provides that the time of the concealment of property shall not be considered within the limitation fixed for bringing suit to recover a penalty or forfeiture accruing under the customs laws, where decedent exhibited the violin to many guests, including well-known violinists, at musicales. United States v. One Stradivarius Kleserwetter Violin, 197 Fed. 157, 159, 116 C. C. A. 594; United States v. Phillips, 196 Fed. 574; In re Doyle, 199 Fed. 247.

In Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 14b (4), 30 Stat. 550, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 4, 32 Stat. 797, which makes it a ground for refusing a discharge that a bankrupt has "at any time subsequent to the first day of the four months immediately preceding the filing of the petition * * * concealed or permitted to be * * * concealed any of his property with intent to hinder, delay or defraud his creditors," the word "concealed" includes a continuous concealment, and a bankrupt who concealed property from his creditors while insolvent before the four-month period, and kept the same concealed until within the four months, and until it was discovered by another, is not entitled to a discharge. In re James, 181 Fed. 476, 478, 104 C. C. A. 224.

H., in January, 1906, purchased a violin in London, to be delivered in New York or Boston free of all expense. It was delivered shortly thereafter without duty being paid thereon. H. thereafter habitually kept it in his drawing-room where it was used, displayed and admired by various artists at Sunday afternoon concerts held by H. It was never absent but always present in the house of H., though the revenue officers acquired no information concerning its wrongful importation until July, 1910. Held, that such lack of information by government officers, and the fact that H. knew or had reason to believe the instrument had been imported without paying duty, did not constitute "concealment" so as to bar limitations prescribed by Act Cong. June 22, 1874, c. 391, § 22, 18 Stat. 190, requiring an action to forfeit merchandise unlawfully imported, within three years, provided that the time of the absence from the United States or concealment of property shall not be a part of the period of limitation. United States v. One Stradivarius Violin, 188 Fed. 542, 543.

Gen. St. 1902, § 880, providing that when the effects of defendant are "concealed in the hands of his agent or trustee so that they cannot be found or attached," etc., plaintiff may garnishee the agent or trustee, and thereby secure all effects of defendant in the hands of his agent or trustee, do not mean that personalty can only be reached by garnishment when it is hidden from sight by the agent or trustee. Sutherland v. Brown, 81 Atl. 1033, 1035, 85 Conn. 67.

Ann. Code 1892, § 2731, provides that in every case of a "concealed fraud" the right to bring suit in equity for the recovery of land shall be deemed to have accrued at the time when the fraud was, or with reasonable diligence might have been, first known. Section 2749 makes the same provision as to personal actions. Section 2762 provides that, whenever there is concurrent jurisdiction at law and equity, provisions relative to limitations at law shall apply to suits in chancery. Land was deeded to a city for a money consideration, and the deed provided that it should be held by the city for burial purposes and no other, and after an abandonment of use for burial purposes the grantors sued in equity for a reconveyance and accounting or for an injunction. Held, that complainants could have no relief against the 10-year statute of limitations on the ground of concealed fraud; concealment in such a case being impossible. Thornton v. City of Natchez, 41 South. 498, 501, 88 Miss. 1.

A debtor's voluntary transfer of his property, without consideration, to his wife, for the purpose of defrauding his creditors and placing the property beyond their reach, while he continues in the full use and enjoyment thereof and the receipt of its rents and profits, with a failure to disclose the true facts regarding the property in his schedule in bankruptcy, or surrender it to his trustee, renders him guilty of having "concealed, while a bankrupt, from his trustee, property belonging to his estate in bankruptcy," within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 29b, 30 Stat. 544. In re Dauchy, 122 Fed. 688, 693.

Where a debtor retained a sum of money derived from a fraudulent conveyance for several months prior to the filing of a bankruptcy petition against him, and he did not inform the court where or how it was kept, but declared that since the filing of the petition he had invested it in distant states, such sum should be treated as "concealed assets," and deducted from his available assets, for the purpose of determining his insolvency. In re Shoesmith, 185 Fed. 684, 687, 68 C. C. A. 322.

Design or intent imported

The "concealment" of facts by a party to a contract, which amounts to fraud, implies design or purpose, and mere silence is not itself concealment. Barrett v. Lewiston, B. & B. St. R. Co., 85 Atl. 306, 308, 110 Me. 24.

To "conceal" means purposely to keep from sight or discovery. Where an application for a life insurance policy expressly made a part of the policy, contained a stipulation limiting the time within which any action should be brought, a complaint in an action on the policy, alleging that insurer "purposely and willfully concealed" from plaintiff the contents of the application to induce delay in bringing suit until after the expiration of the time limited, was insufficient for failing to aver facts on which to predicate relief from the consequences of the delay; the words "purposely" and "willfully" adding nothing to the charge that the insurer concealed the contents of the application. Gill v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co., 95 Pac. 89, 90, 11 Ariz. 232.

Pen. Code, § 32, defining "accessories" as those who after knowledge of the commission of a felony conceal it from the magistrate or protect the person charged with the crime, states the common-law rule that a person must know that he is assisting a felon or else he cannot be charged as an accessory, and the mere neglect to inform the authorities that a felony has been committed is not sufficient; the word "conceal" in the statute including some affirmative act on the part of the person looking to the concealment of the felony. Ex parte Goldman (Cal.) 88 Pac. 819, 820.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 1562, defining an "accessory after the fact" as one who, after a full knowledge that a crime has been committed conceals it from the magistrate, the word "conceals" implies some act or refusal to act by which it is intended to prevent or hinder the discovery of the crime; and for one to merely remain passively silent as to what was told him is not enough; and so does not make his testimony objectionable as that of an accomplice. Davis v. State, 130 S. W. 547, 549, 96 Ark. 7.

The word "conceal," as used in the provision of Bankr. Act 1898, § 29a, 30 Stat. 554, subjecting any person to criminal prosecution for "having knowingly and fraudulently concealed while a bankrupt or after his discharge from his trustee any of the property belonging to his estate in bankruptcy" is of plain import, and when coupled in an indictment with the words "unlawfully, knowingly, and fraudulently," clearly excludes unintentional acts. United States v. Comstock, 161 Fed. 644, 645.

Where a bankrupt assigned to the executors of a decedent to be administered as the property of his estate, the assets of the bank, which she, in fact, owned, undoubtedly for the purpose of conserving it in some manner for her own use, retaining an equity in the same to redeem in case there was more property than sufficient to pay the creditors her intent concerning the bank and its assets must be regarded as one to conceal her property, whether she had any right to or control of all her property during the time of such concealment not being material as to the question of her intent. In re Glazier, 195 Fed. 1020, 1022.

As harbor or hide

If accused brought or assisted in bringing stolen cattle into T. county, and there had them shipped to market under an assumed name, he would be guilty of concealing the property in T. county within White's Ann. Code Cr. Proc. art. 237, permitting the prosecution of the offense of receiving and concealing stolen property in the county where the theft was committed, or into any other county into which the property was carried by the thief, or in any county in which it was received or concealed by the offender; the word "conceal" not meaning to hide, but the handling of property so as to mislead the owners in their search for it. Polk v. State, 131 S. W. 580, 582, 80 Tex. Cr. R. 150.

To "conceal" is to hide, withdraw, remove, or shield from observation, cover or keep from sight. Where a debtor retained a sum of money derived from a fraudulent conveyance for several months prior to the filing of a bankruptcy petition and did not inform the court where or how it was kept, but declared that since the filing of the petition he had invested it in distant states, such sum should be treated as "concealed assets" and deducted from his available assets for the purpose of determining his insolvency. In re Shoesmith, 135 Fed. 684, 687, 68 C. C. A. 322 (citing Cent. Dict.).

Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 3a(1), 30 Stat. 546, provides that acts of bankruptcy by any person shall consist of having conveyed, transferred, "concealed," or removed, or permitted to be concealed or removed, any part of his property with intent to delay or defraud his creditors, or any of them. Held, that the word "conceal" means to hide or withdraw from observation, to carry or keep from sight, to prevent discovery of, or to withhold knowledge of; and hence a petition alleging that the bankrupt did deny and conceal ownership of a particular bank, so that the creditors, by virtue of deposits carried by them in the bank, were, by the acts and declarations of the bankrupt, misled into the belief that the bank belonged to another, and that within four months the petitioner concealed the assets of the bank by turning the same over to the executrices of decedent, to be by them administered as his property, sufficiently alleged concealment of property with intent to defraud creditors, and constituted an "act of bankruptcy." In re Glazier, 195 Fed. 1020, 1021.

Intentional withholding of facts

A "concealment," when applied to insurance, is the designed and intentional withholding of any fact material to the risk which insured in honesty and good faith ought to communicate. A concealment involves not only the materiality of the fact withheld, but the design and intention of insured in withholding it. A concealment, within a fire policy stipulating that it should be void if insured conceals any material fact concerning the insurance or the subject-matter thereof, involves not only the materiality of the fact withheld, and which he ought to have communicated, but also the design of insured in withholding it, and the facts alleged to have been concealed must be material and insured must have intentionally and fraudulently concealed them. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. v. Colorado Leasing Min. & Mill. Co., 116 Pac. 154, 157, 50 Colo. 424, Ann. Cas. 1912Q, 597.

"Ordinarily, to constitute legal 'concealment of a material fact' to the risk, such as would avoid a policy of insurance, there must be something more than the mere existence of such fact and failure on the part of the insured to disclose it. Where no specific inquiry has been made touching facts material to the risk, and there is no misrepresentation respecting the same on the part of the insured, and no intentional concealment thereof, their existence will not invalidate the policy. When the insurer issues the policy without inquiry, he assumes the risk, unless some unusual fact exists which affects the risk." Thus, a fire policy, providing that it shall be void if insured has concealed or misrepresented any material fact or circumstance concerning the insurance or the subject thereof, is not avoided by the fact that insured said nothing about a gambling concern being connected with his insured saloon; it not being shown that the fact that such a connection was regarded as increasing the risk was known by insured, or that he consciously neglected to speak of it, and no inquiry having been made of him concerning it. American Cent. Ins. Co. v. Nunn (Tex.) 79 S. W. 88, 89.

As secretion

An answer, in an action on an indemnity bond to save harmless a surety on a contractor's bond, which alleges that the surety, to induce the indemnitor to furnish the indemnity, falsely represented that the contract was an advantageous one, and that the contractor was solvent, that the contractor was insolvent, and known to be so by the surety, "which said fact was willfully concealed"; and that by virtue of the fraudulent misrepresentations "and concealments" the indemnitor was greatly damaged, etc., charges fraud through the suppression of truth by falsehood, and not its secretion by silence; the words "conceal" and "concealment" expressing an idea in consonance with the allegations of the defense of active fraud. American Surety Co. of New York v. Pacific

Surety Co., 70 Atl. 584, 586, 81 Conn. 252, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 83.

The word "conceal," as used in the first part of the statute providing that whoever shall offer for sale any horse, knowing it to be broken winded, and shall conceal the existence of such disease from the person to whom he is offering the animal for sale, or shall employ any trick, artifice, drug, etc., to conceal the existence of such disease, and shall thereby effect the sale of such animal, shall be fined, etc., is not used in its primary sense, meaning to hide, to cover up, to withhold from observation, but is used in its secondary sense or meaning, which is to withhold from utterance, or declaration, to keep secret, to fail to disclose. The first purpose of a statute is to make it a crime of one to offer such an animal for sale, if the person so doing has knowledge of the defect, and conceals its existence from the one to whom it is offered for sale by failing to disclose the facts, while the second purpose is to prohibit the employment of any artifice to conceal the infirmity, and thereby effect a sale. Boyer v. State, 83 N. E. 350, 352, 169 Ind. 691 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1377; 8 Cyc. pp. 543, 544).

"The term 'conceal' implies something more than the mere failure to disclose. We do not, in general, speak of a person concealing a thing unless he is in some way called upon to produce it." Where persons were under no obligation to disclose to sureties on a bond facts showing embezzlement by the principal, a failure to disclose such facts was not a concealment so as to amount to fraud. Watertown Sav. Bank v. Mattoon, 62 Atl. 622, 624, 78 Conn. 388 (quoting and adopting definition in Bartholomew v. Warner, 32 Conn. 98, 108, 85 Am. Dec. 251).

Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, c. 83, § 22, provides that, if a person liable to an action fraudulently conceals the cause of such action from the knowledge of the person entitled thereto, the action may be commenced at any time within 5 years after the person entitled to sue discovers that he has a cause of action, and not afterwards. Held, that mere silence by the person liable is not concealment, but there must be some affirmative act or representation designed to prevent, and which does prevent, the discovery of the cause of action. Lancaster v. Springer, 88 N. E. 272, 275, 239 Ill. 472.

The information having shown knowledge of the felon's abode, an allegation that defendant "did 'conceal and keep secret' contrary to the law of the land" was insufficient as not showing a neglect to discover the felon and his place to the officers of justice. State v. Wilson, 67 Atl. 533, 534, 80 Vt. 249.

An owner of household furniture in an apartment leased the apartment as furnished to a tenant who entered into possession, and who held, in the apartment, the furniture, either under the lease or after its expiration. A creditor of the owner sued the owner, and garnisheed the tenant, who did not offer to surrender the furniture to the officer nor give permission to the officer to enter the apartment to take it. Held, that the property was sufficiently concealed within Gen. St. 1902, § 880; and, where the garnishee subsequently delivered the goods to the officer pursuant to an execution issued in the garnishment, a chattel mortgagee of the owner in a mortgage not filed until after the service of garnishment could not enjoin a sale of the chattels under the execution. Sutherland v. Brown, 81 Atl. 1033, 1035, 85 Conn. 67.

Where household goods claimed to have been purchased with the earnings of a bankrupt's wife and children were claimed both by her and the bankrupt to be her property, the bankrupt's failure to schedule the same did not constitute a concealment thereof precluding an allowance of exemptions to him from other property, though such goods belonged to him as a matter of law. In re Diamond, 158 Fed. 370, 371.

CONCEALED WEAPONS

See Carrying Concealed Weapons.

A person carrying a deadly weapon, a part of which only is concealed, carries a "concealed weapon," within Code 1906, § 1108, punishing one who carries concealed "in whole or in part" any deadly weapon; and a conviction may be had on proof that the weapon was only partially concealed. Martin v. State, 47 South. 426, 427, 93 Miss. 764.

Evidence merely that defendant, while riding in a wagon in which were two other persons, on the arising of a difficulty between him and another, took a pistol from a satchel under the wagon seat, is not sufficient to warrant a conviction of carrying a pistol "concealed upon or about his person." Commonwealth v. Sturgeon (Ky.) 37 S. W. 680.

Revisal 1905, § 3708, forbids the carrying of deadly weapons about the person, except on one's premises, and declares that the possession of a deadly weapon, if carried about the person, shall be prima facie evidence of concealment, if the accused is at the time off his premises. Held, in a prosecution for carrying a "concealed" pistol, where accused himself testified that he had the pistol in his pocket a part of the time, and that it was then hidden from view, his further testimony that "he did not intend to 'conceal' the pistol" was inadmissible. State v. Simmons, 56 S. E. 701, 702, 148 N. C. 613 (citing State v. McDonald, 45 S. E. 582, 133 N. C. 684; State v. Dixon, 19 S. E. 364, 114 N. C. 850; State v. Reams, 27 S. E. 1004, 121 N. C. 556; State v. Brown, 34 S. E. 549, 125 N. C. 704; State v. Woodfin, 87 N. C. 526; State v. Lilly, 21 S. E. 563, 116 N. C. 1049; State v. Erwin, 91 N. C. 545; Broom's Legal Maxims [8th Ed.] p. 506 et seq.; State v. Pigford, 23 S. E. 182, 117 N. C. 748; State v. Brown, 34 S. E. 549, 125 N. C. 704).

CONCEIVE

Under the forty-fourth rule of practice for the circuit court in common-law actions, objections to interrogatories, or their form, must be assigned in writing, before the commission issues or the deposition is taken; and the word "conceive," as used in such rule providing that objections to the form in which interrogatories are "conceived," etc., means expressed in a particular way—formulated. Canon v. Green, 47 South. 935, 56 Fla. 211.

CONCENTRATED FEEDING STUFF

Acts 1907, p. 355, c. 206, § 2, requires sellers of "concentrated commercial feeding stuff" to affix a label thereto reciting certain facts, section 6, makes the failure to do so a misdemeanor, and section 11 provides that the term "concentrated commercial feeding stuff" shall include wheat middlings, etc., but shall not include unmixed meals made directly from the entire grain of the wheat, etc. Held, that, since wheat middlings are a by-product containing only part of the wheat grain, it was a "concentrated commercial feeding stuff," within the statute, and the provisions of section 11 were not repugnant. State v. Weller, 85 N. E. 761, 171 Ind. 53.

CONCERN

See Going Business or Concern; Local Concern.

The word "concerned" in the statute providing that, where two or more persons are jointly concerned in the commission of a crime, either of them may be sworn as a witness in relation thereto, but his testimony shall not be used against him, is used in the sense of the word "participants." Under this statute and one making it an offense for legislators to accept railroad passes, a legislator cannot be compelled to testify as to his acceptance and use of a pass, for he alone in using it committed an offense. He was not entitled to refuse to answer questions put to him with reference to bribery, though jointly concerned. Ex parte Butt, 93 S. W. 992, 994, 78 Ark. 262.

Rev. St. § 601, provides that if the judge of any District Court is in any way concerned in interest in any suit pending therein, or has been of counsel for either party, it shall be his duty, on application by either party, to certify the case to another court. The judge before whom defendant was brought for trial on an indictment for suborning a witness at a hearing in bankruptcy to commit perjury while conducting a hearing in a bankruptcy case to discover assets, appeared to be angry and said in the presence of accused: "This is a nasty piece of business. This estate has been looted by some one"—and then turned to an officer of the court and directed that he use what was left of the estate, even to the last penny, to investigate the matter, and if any one, whoever he might be, had committed any act that could be reached and punished under the law, to institute proceedings against him. Held, that the judge merely performed his duty to direct an official inquiry of what appeared to be a criminal offense, and did not thereby become disqualified to try accused therefor, as being either "concerned in interest" or "of counsel" for the prosecution. Epstein v. United States, 196 Fed. 354, 355, 116 C. C. A. 174.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 21a, 30 Stat. 552, provides that a court of bankruptcy, on application of any officer, bankrupt, or creditor, may by order require a designated person, including the bankrupt, to appear before a referee or judge of any state court to be examined concerning the acts, conduct, or property of the bankrupt whose estate is in process of administration under the act. Held, that the words "concerning the property of a bankrupt" limit the examination to the discovery of the existence, whereabouts, or disposition of property, and hence did not authorize the court to compel an officer of a corporation in which the bankrupt had stock, which was admittedly in the bankrupt's possession, to give evidence as to his opinion concerning the value of the stock, and to produce in support thereof the records relating to the financial condition of the corporation. In re Seligman, 192 Fed. 750, 751.

As interested in

The "persons concerned" who are required by P. L. 1898, p. 718, § 13, to be cited on the filing of a caveat to the probate of a will, include not only those interested to support the probate, but also heirs at law and next of kin of the alleged testator. In re Young's Will, 59 Atl. 154, 155, 67 N. J. Eq. 553.

As relating or pertaining to

A newspaper published an article stating that plaintiff's father had been charged with using the mails to defraud in selling land, and would be arrested, giving the details of the fraudulent operations, and published a photograph of the members of his family, including plaintiff, his young daughter. Held, that the photograph published being a true likeness of plaintiff, its publication in connection with the article did not make the article "of or concerning" plaintiff, so as to constitute libel within Rem. & Bal. Code, § 292, making it sufficient to state generally in libel actions that the defamatory matter was published or spoken of or concerning plaintiff, which allegation plaintiff must establish. Hillman v. Star Pub. Co., 117 Pac. 594, 596, 64 Wash. 691, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 595.

CONCESSI

The words "dedi," "concessi," and "demisi," when used in a conveyance of real estate, import and make a conveyance in law. Headley v. Hoopengartner, 55 S. E. 744, 747, 60 W. Va. 626.

"If a man make a lease for years by the word 'concessi' or 'demisi' (which implies a covenant), if the assignee of the lessee be evicted, he shall have a writ of covenant." Wiggins v. Pender, 44 S. E. 362, 365, 132 N. C. 628, 61 L. R. A. 772 (quoting Rawle, Covenants for Title [5th Ed.] § 818).

CONCESSION

A rebate or concession from a part of a single rate whereby property is transported thereunder at a less rate than the established rate is a "concession" from the entire rate, and renders all transportation thereunder illegal. Armour Packing Co. v. United States, 153 Fed. 1, 9, 82 C. C. A. 135, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 400.

In the federal statute forbidding carriers to offer, grant, or give, and shippers to solicit, accept, or receive, any rebate, concession, or discrimination in respect of transportation, etc., the word "concession" in and of itself implies a comparison with, a measurement by, and a departure from, a determined standard. Standard Oil Co. of Indiana v. United States, 164 Fed. 376, 390, 90 C. C. A. 364.

Under Elkins Act Feb. 19, 1903, c. 708, 32 Stat. 847, making the willful giving of concessions by interstate carriers from the established and published tariff rates an offense, an indictment alleging that the established and published rate per car for bulk lime between two points was $70 per car of 40,000 pounds minimum, and that defendant charged and received for a specified car the sum of $64.75 and no more, sufficiently charged that defendant granted a "concession" prohibited by the statute, though the count did not use the word "concession" to describe the alleged rebate. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. United States, 170 Fed. 250, 256, 95 C. C. A. 446.

The word "concession," as used in section 1 of the Elkins act, was apparently a "catchall" provision for any practice by either carrier or shipper which by any device whatever would tend to defeat the purpose of the law. The term "concession" does not necessarily imply that the shipper solicited a concession or privilege which the carrier could give. The statute is clearly violated if the defendant has accepted or received any "concession" or discrimination which resulted in the carriage of the freight in question at a less rate than that established under the act. United States v. Vacuum Oil Co., 153 Fed. 598, 604.

A royal title is the highest order of title known by any law, or principle, in the province of east Florida. Titles of this description were designed to convey the fee simple to the grantee. They were usually made by the acting governors of the province in the name of the king. They recited the grant to be in perpetuity, and also the specific metes and bounds of the land. This title may be said to correspond in character with that of a patent issued by our government. "Concessions without conditions" are understood to differ from a "royal title" only in this: That most of the latter recite the metes and bounds, whereas the unconditional concession, although definite in quantity and location of the land, is still subject to a survey, which, when made, was followed by maturing the concession by a royal title. There is also a peculiarity in the legal phraseology of a "royal title." In all the grants of this nature the legal right to the lands is asserted. Florida Town Imp. Co. v. Bigalsky, 38 South. 450, 453, 44 Fla. 771 (quoting from the report of the Land Commissioners of 1826).

CONCISE

"A plain and 'concise' statement of facts required by the statute does not refer so much to the style of the pleader as to his command of terse and simple English as to the attempt sometimes made to give a long and prolix history of the transactions on which the suit is based and incumber the pleadings with a multitude of impertinent allegations." McGlothlin v. Hemery, 44 Mo. 350, 354.

In the statutory rule of pleading requiring a "concise statement" of a cause of action, the term "concise statement" is a relative one, and it would be impossible to formulate a precise rule in any case. The statute must therefore be liberally construed. Fairall v. Cameron, 70 S. W. 929, 930, 97 Mo. App. 1.

CONCLUDE

CONCLUSION

In definue for a mule claimed by plaintiff under a mortgage, plaintiff testified that he sold the mule to the mortgagor, who had had possession prior to the sale and execution of the mortgage, and that the mule was his up to the time that the mortgage was executed, and that it was "so understood." Held, that it was not error to refuse to exclude the expression "it was so understood," since, as used, it should be taken as synonymous with "agreement" and the statement of a fact, and not a "conclusion." Holman

v. Clark, 41 South. 765, 767, 148 Ala. 286 (citing Griffin v. Isbell, 17 Ala. 184; Saltmarsh v. Bower, 34 Ala. 613; E. E. Shafer & Co. v. Hausman, 35 South. 691, 139 Ala. 237).

In an action for the death of a foreman in a lumber yard while riding on the footboard of an engine in consequence of the footboard being caught on a plank walk by the side of the track, a witness testified that decedent was day foreman, and that the witness was night foreman. His testimony showed that he was testifying from actual knowledge as to the duties of decedent, and he stated that he knew it to be a fact that decedent's duties were identical with his own, and that it was not decedent's duty to inspect or repair the track, and if it had been it would have been witness' duty also. Held, that the evidence was not objectionable as the "conclusion" of the witness. Kirby Lumber Co. v. Chambers, 95 S. W. 607, 610, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 632.

In a criminal case, testimony of a witness that, if certain persons had exchanged pistols, witness would have seen it, was inadmissible as "conclusion." Hammond v. State, 41 South. 761, 765, 147 Ala. 79 (citing Reeves v. State, 11 South. 296, 96 Ala. 33; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Watson, 7 South. 813, 90 Ala. 41; Ferguson v. State, 32 South. 760, 134 Ala. 63, 92 Am. St. Rep. 17).

"Lord Coke said the name 'estoppel' or 'conclusion' was given because a man's own act or acceptance stoppeth or closeth up his mouth to allege or plead the truth." Steffens v. Nelson, 102 N. W. 871, 94 Minn. 365.

In an action to recover for transportation furnished by plaintiff to defendants, testimony of defendants as to whether or not they owed plaintiff for the transportation was not a "conclusion," but a collective fact, and competent. Owen v. McDermott, 41 South. 730, 148 Ala. 669.

The distinction between "ultimate facts" to be found by the jury and mere "conclusions" is an interesting one, as is evidenced by the following extract: "It sometimes happens that facts are so close to the line dividing inferential facts from evidentiary facts that the only safe plan is to put them in the special verdict, where they can do no harm if they should turn out, in the opinion of the court, to be evidentiary facts, and where their absence might be fatal if they should turn out to be inferential facts." Republic Iron & Steel Co. v. Jones, 69 N. E. 191, 192, 32 Ind. App. 189 (quoting Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Miller, 37 N. E. 348, 141 Ind. 550).

In an action for the loss of several barrels of molasses in shipment, testimony that the witness had inspected the shipment at a certain point, but was unable to stop the leakage, as all of the barrels seemed to be in good condition, and the leaking appeared to be from fermentation, was not a "conclusion of the witness." Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Davis, 100 S. W. 1013, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 212.

In an action for the loss of several barrels of molasses in shipment, testimony that "some of the barrel heads showed to have been stayed inwards by heavy blows from the outside" was not a "conclusion of the witness," but testimony as to a fact. International & G. N. R. Co. v. H. P. Drought & Co. (Tex.) 100 S. W. 1011, 1012.

"Conclusion of trial," as used in Rev. St. 1895, art. 1365, declaring that any party taking exceptions during the trial shall reduce them to writing and present the bill of exceptions to the judge for his allowance and signature during the term and within ten days after the "conclusion of the trial," is not limited to the date of the rendition of the verdict and judgment, but extends to the date of the entry of the order overruling a motion for a new trial. Palmo v. S. W. Slayden & Co., 92 S. W. 796, 798, 100 Tex. 13.

CONCLUSION OF FACT

Where the conclusion describes a legal status or condition or a legal offense, it is ordinarily termed a "conclusion of law"; but, where the conclusion describes a condition or status not represented or designated by some definite legal term or rule, it is ordinarily deemed a conclusion of fact. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Hallauer, 111 N. W. 527, 528, 131 Wis. 371.

CONCLUSION OF LAW

An allegation of an ultimate fact to be proved, although it be necessarily an allegation of a conclusion of fact, does not amount to an allegation of a conclusion of law. Moser v. Talman, 100 N. Y. Supp. 231, 234, 114 App. Div. 850 (dissenting opinion).

A "conclusion of law" is not a statement of fact upon which a liability can be predicated, and an allegation of indebtedness for money had and received is merely a conclusion of law and not a statement of fact. Tate v. American Woolen Co., 99 N. Y. Supp. 678, 679, 114 App. Div. 103.

Where the conclusion describes a legal status or condition or a legal offense, it is ordinarily termed a "conclusion of law"; but, where the conclusion describes a condition or status not represented or designated by some definite legal term or rule, it is ordinarily deemed a "conclusion of fact." Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Hallauer, 111 N. W. 527, 528, 131 Wis. 371.

It is a rule of pleading that, while it is not allowable to allege a mere "conclusion of law" containing no element of fact, yet it is proper not only to plead the ultimate fact inferable from certain other facts, but also to plead anything which according to the common and ordinary use of language amounts to a mixed statement of fact, and of a legal conclusion. It may not be possible to finally define conclusion of law, so as to distinguish it from a pleadable ultimate fact; but it has been quite generally held that the question of negligence in a particular case is one of mingled law and fact, and a general allegation of negligence as applied to the act of a party is not a mere "conclusion of law," but a statement of an ultimate fact allowed to be pleaded. Jones v. Great Northern R. Co., 97 N. W. 535, 536, 12 N. D. 343.

An allegation that an act was negligently done is not a bare "conclusion of law," but is a conclusion of fact, and may be so pleaded without a statement of the facts constituting the negligence. Lowe v. Miller (Ky.) 104 S. W. 257, 258.

A finding in favor of a defense of limitations does not cease to be a "conclusion of law" because found among the findings of fact, but will be regarded according to its character, notwithstanding its misplacement. Towle v. Sweeney, 83 Pac. 74, 75, 2 Cal. App. 29.

CONCLUSIVE

See Final and Conclusive.

"Conclusive" means decisive; irrefutable. State v. Brandenberger, 130 N. W. 1065, 1070, 151 Iowa, 197.

The word "evident" means "clear to the vision, especially clear to the understanding, and satisfactory to the judgment." Its synonyms are: "Manifest, plain, clear, obvious, visible, apparent, conclusive, indubitable, palpable, notorious." So the word "conclusive" is synonymous with "evident" as used in the constitutional guaranty providing for bail except for capital offenses when proof is evident. State v. Kauffman, 108 N. W. 246, 20 S. D. 620.

Laws 1909, c. 152, provides that any elector, claiming that in taking a vote upon the question of licenses in a town the statutes were not complied with, may petition a judge of the superior court, who shall determine such question, and his decision thereon shall be conclusive. Held, that there is no right of appeal from such decision; the word "conclusive" as used meaning "final." In re Woodruff, 76 Atl. 294, 83 Conn. 330.

CONCLUSIVE EVIDENCE

"'Conclusive evidence' is such evidence as, being uncontradicted, controls the decision." State ex rel. Railroad & Warehouse Com'rs v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 79 N. W. 510, 514, 76 Minn. 469 (quoting and adopting definition And. Law Dict. 421).

"Conclusive evidence" is that which is incontrovertible, that is to say, either not open or not able to be questioned, as, where it is said that a thing is conclusively proved, it means that such result follows from the facts shown as the only one possible; the term conclusive proof meaning either a presumption of law or evidence so strong as to overbear everything to the contrary. Thompson Lumber Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 193 Fed. 682, 684.

CONCLUSIVE JUDGMENT

See, also, Res Adjudicata.

It is an essential requisite of a "conclusive judgment" that it should go to the merits of the controversy in hand, and that it be not based merely upon technical defects in the pleadings. Succession of Herber, 44 South. 888, 890, 119 La. 1064.

"Conclusive" is defined thus: "Shutting up a matter; shutting out all further evidence; not admitting of explanation or contradiction; putting an end to inquiry; final; decisive; putting an end to debate or question; leading to a conclusion or decision." Under a statute providing that bills and petitions in equity which are not pleaded to within the proper time shall, on ex parte motion of complainants, be taken as confessed, and a decree entered accordingly, which, if no motion to set aside be made within five days shall be "conclusive," a decree pro confesso has the same effect as a decree entered after appearance and hearing; and it is not beyond the powers of the court to vacate the same when properly moved there to in accordance with a statute providing that in case of judgment by default or mistake, or in case of decrees in equity cases, the court shall have control over the same for the period of six months after the entry thereof, and may, for cause shown, set aside the same and reinstate the case. Masterson v. Whipple, 61 Atl. 446, 447, 27 R. I. 192 (quoting and adopting definition in 8 Cyc. p. 551).

A judgment is "conclusive" on the parties and privies as to facts which are alleged in the pleading as material allegations and actually tried, but not as to evidentiary facts. Winnipisegee Lake Cotton & Woolen Mfg. Co. v. City of Laconia, 65 Atl. 378, 379, 74 N. H. 82.

A judgment for defendant in ejectment by plaintiff, who alleged that he was the owner in fee, but that defendant was in possession, rendered on a directed verdict for defendant after the court, on motion of plaintiff, had taken from the jury the testimony of defendant, and after plaintiff had failed to prove title, is a judgment on the merits, and is conclusive on the question of title, within L. O. L. §§ 329, 337, requiring the jury to find, if the verdict be for defendant, that plaintiff is not entitled to possession, and that the judgment shall be conclusive as to the estate and the right to the possession thereof, so far as the same is determined. Carroll v. McLaren, 118 Pac. 1084, 1086, 60 Or. 233.

CONCLUSIVE PRESUMPTION OF LAW

A "conclusive presumption" of law is an inference which must be drawn from the proof of given facts, which no evidence may overthrow; while a "rebuttable presumption" is an inference which obtains until overthrown by proof. Barrow v. Territory, 114 Pac. 975, 976, 13 Ariz. 302.

CONCLUSIVE PROOF

Proof may be required to be clear and convincing without transcending the rule of preponderance. But the word "conclusive" has a larger meaning, and, when used in connection with the evidence required to prove a given fact, calls for a much higher degree of proof than has ever been held to be necessary in a civil action. Roberge v. Bonner, 77 N. E. 1023, 1024, 185 N. Y. 265 (citing Rousseau v. Rouss, 72 N. E. 916, 180 N. Y. 116, 121).

CONCRETE

See Small Concrete.

The term "concrete" is almost universally understood to be cement mortar with pebbles or broken stone imbedded in it, and the mortar is often referred to as the "matrix" and the imbedded fragments as the "aggregate." Concrete is a species of artificial stone. Donaldson v. Roksament Stone Co., 170 Fed. 192, 193.

"Concrete" is an artificial stone, the product resulting from a combination of sand or gravel or broken pieces of limestone with water and cement; a combination which requires ordinarily the use of both skill and machinery, so that a corporation engaged in making "concrete" in a shape adapted to use in finished form for a house, bridge, pier, arch, or abutment is engaged in manufacture. Friday v. Hall & Kaul Co., 80 Sup. Ct. 261, 262, 216 U. S. 449, 54 L. Ed. 562, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 475.

A city ordinance, prohibiting the erection of any building within fire limits, except buildings constructed of "brick" or "stone," does not prohibit the construction of a concrete building, since "concrete" is either a species of brick, or is an artificial stone; and the ordinance is not in conflict with Rev. St. 1895, art. 523, authorizing cities to establish fire limits, and to prohibit the construction of buildings therein, except buildings of fire-proof materials. Ex parte Morris, 120 S. W. 1007, 1008, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 533.

CONCUBINAGE

See Open Concubinage.

The word "concubinage" derives from the concubinatus of the Romans, a kind of marriage recognized by law, but of less dignity than the justæ nuptiæ, and not serving, like it, as the source of family and other legal relations. It ceased to describe legal marriage when the law came to recognize only one kind of marriage, but it continued to designate a status resembling marriage, and, at least in the civil law, does so to this day. "Pour qu'il y ait concubinage, il ne suffit pas d'un rapprochement passager et fortuit, c'est la fornication; le concubinage est, au contraire, permanent." Le Nouveau Demisart, vo. "Concubinage." The Grand Dictionnaire of Larousse, vo. "Concubinage," after giving the history of what is meant by concubinage, declares concubinage to be "the status of a man and woman who live together as man and wife without being married"; and it adds: "We must not confound the concubine with the courtesan, or even with what is ordinarily a mistress. The concubine is an entirely different thing. It is the wife without the title; it is marriage without the sanction of the law." The Century Dictionary defines it as "the act or practice of cohabiting without legal marriage"; and it defines the word "cohabit" as "to dwell together; inhabit or reside in company; specifically, to dwell or live together as husband and wife." The Encyclopædia Britannica defines it as "living together as man and wife without legal marriage." The law dictionaries of Black and Bouvier define it as "a species of loose, informal marriage, which took place among the ancients, and which is yet in use in some countries. The act or practice of cohabiting in sexual intercourse without the authority of law or a legal marriage." These law dictionaries have taken their definition word from Merlín, rep. vo. "Concubinage." Webster defines it as "the cohabiting of a man and woman who are not legally married." Succession of Jahraus, 38 South. 417, 418, 114 La. 456.

An instruction was proper that the word "concubinage" meant sexual cohabitation with an unmarried female, and if accused took the girl from her father for the purpose of cohabiting with her for any length of time more than a single act of sexual intercourse, he is guilty, but if he did not take her from her father for that purpose, or if she was 18 years old or over, he is not guilty. State v. Baldwin, 113 S. W. 1123, 1126, 214 Mo. 290.

The term "concubinage," within Rev. St. 1899, § 1842, denouncing the taking away of a female under the age of 18 years from her father or mother, guardian, or other person having legal charge of her person for the purpose of concubinage, does not necessarily contemplate "concubinage" with the person charged with the offense alone. State v. Knost, 105 S. W. 616, 617, 207 Mo. 18.

Under Gen. St. 1901, § 2020, making it a crime to take away any female under the age of 18 for the purpose of concubinage, etc., the term "concubinage" means living together and having sexual relations as husband and wife, and the time during which such relations are intended to or actually do continue is immaterial. State v. Tucker, 84 Pac. 126, 127, 72 Kan. 481.

"'Concubinage' is the act upon the part of the woman of cohabiting with a man without ceremonial marriage, or consent and intent good at common-law." United States v. Bitty, 155 Fed. 938, 939.

Where a single woman consents to unlawfully cohabit with a man generally, as though the marital relation existed between them, without any limit as to the duration of such cohabitation, and actually commences to cohabit with him under that understanding, she becomes his "concubine," or, as expressed in modern times, his "kept mistress." Coy v. Humphreys, 125 S. W. 877, 880, 142 Mo. App. 92.

Prostitution distinguished

A statute punishing the taking away of any female under the age of 18 years from her father, etc., either for the purpose of prostitution or concubinage, is leveled at both "prostitution" and "concubinage," which are entirely separate and distinct offenses. "Concubinage" is defined by Webster to be "the cohabiting of a man and a woman who are not legally married; the state of being a concubine; a woman who cohabits with a man without being married"; and by the law dictionaries as a "species of loose, informal marriage, which took place among the ancients, and which is yet in use in some countries." State v. Adams, 78 S. W. 588, 590, 179 Mo. 334.

CONCUR

CONCURRENCE

Bill of Rights, § 18, provides that a grand jury shall be composed of twelve men, any nine of whom concurring may find an indictment. Snyder's Comp. Laws 1909, § 6687, provides that an indictment cannot be found without the concurrence of at least nine grand jurors. Held, that the words "concurring" and "concurrence" mean "assent" or "consent" indicated by affirmative action of the grand jury by a vote or ballot showing direct approval. Eubanks v. State, 114 Pac. 748, 752, 5 Okl. Cr. 325; Elder v. Same, 114 Pac. 752, 5 Okl. Cr. 688.

CONCURRENT

"Concurrent" means coincident or contemporaneous. Kelly v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co., 112 N. W. 870, 871, 102 Minn. 178 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1891).

The word "concurrent" has various meanings; and, while prosecutions by indictment and information are concurrent remedies in the sense that they are of equal dignity and may apply to the same object or offense, they are not concurrent in the sense that procedure by indictment or by information may be adopted at the same time. State v. Woods (N. D.) 139 N. W. 321, 323.

The term "concurrent with" as used in an Act of Congress declaring that the District Court of the United States shall have cognizance concurrent with the Circuit Courts of the United States of all cases at common law where the United States or any officer thereof shall sue, must be construed to give jurisdiction to the Circuit Courts in such case, if it did not previously exist. State v. Harden, 58 S. E. 715-733, 62 W. Va. 813.

A mortgage given by a purchaser before his deed was delivered and registered is subject to a purchase-money mortgage executed and registered at the time of the delivery and registration of the deed, though the first mortgage was first registered, for the purchaser had no title when he executed the first mortgage, and as the delivery of the deed and execution of the purchase-money mortgage were concurrent the title did not rest in the purchaser for any appreciable length of time, but passed immediately under the purchase-money mortgage, for "concurrent acts" are in law but one act. Hinton v. Hicks, 71 S. E. 1086, 1087, 156 N. C. 24.

CONCURRENT CONDITIONS

See Conditions Concurrent.

CONCURRENT COVENANTS

"Concurrent covenants" are those which by the terms of the contract are to be performed at the same time by each of the parties bound to perform them. Either party must be ready to perform to put the other in default. Thus under a contract for a sale of realty, if no stipulation is made as to the order of time in which the deed is to be delivered and payment made, these acts are concurrent. Neither party can treat the other as being in default either for the purpose of considering the contract as discharged or for bringing an action for damages. Hoard v. Huntington & B. S. R. Co., 53 S. E. 278, 281, 59 W. Va. 91, 8 Ann. Cas. 929.

"Concurrent covenants" are those where mutual conditions are to be performed at the same time. Kelly v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co., 112 N. W. 870, 871, 102 Minn. 178 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1391).

Where the conditions of a contract are such that the parties must perform their promises at the same time, they are known as "conditions concurrent." Neither party is bound to do the first act, but each must be able and ready to perform his own, and the one who is ready and able to perform has a right of action against the one who is not. If the obligations of the parties are mutual and dependent, then the refusal of one to perform without sufficient excuse is equivalent to an abandonment of the contract, and releases the other party from any duty to further recognize the obligations. Haydon v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 93 S. W. 833, 845, 117 Mo. App. 76.

CONCURRENT INSURANCE

"Concurrent insurance" is that which to any extent insures the same interest against the same casualty at the same time as the primary insurance, on such terms that the insurers would bear proportionately the loss happening within the provisions of both policies. It has been held that the word "concurrent," in relation to insurance, meant "running together," and in the connection used had the sense of co-operating, acting in conjunction, agreeing to the same act, and, in the absence of something in the context showing that the word was not used in its ordinary meaning, it must be understood to have been so used. To be concurrent the insurance must operate at the same time, upon the same property, and look to the indemnity of the insured in case of its loss or destruction from the casualty insured against. Kelly v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co., 112 N. W. 870, 871, 102 Minn. 178 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1391; East Texas Fire Ins. Co. v. Blum, 13 S. W. 572, 76 Tex. 653).

The word "concurrent" means acting in conjunction; agreeing in the same act; contributing to the same event or effect; co-operating; existing or happening at the same time, operating on the same subjects. Webster's International Dictionary. The term "concurrent" insurance, as used in a policy granting permission for insurance, cannot be construed as merely embracing the amount covered by the one policy in which the permission is granted, but necessarily embraces another amount or another policy, though it might under some circumstances include the former. None of the definitions give the word the precise meaning of "other," so that one can say that concurrent insurance necessarily means other insurance exclusively, but in every instance the word necessarily implies the existence of two or more things or conditions. L'Engle v. Scottish Union & National Fire Ins. Co., 37 South. 462, 465, 48 Fla. 82, 67 L. R. A. 581, 111 Am. St. Rep. 70, 5 Ann. Cas. 748.

A provision in a fire policy, "$150,000 total concurrent insurance permitted," is susceptible of more than one construction, and it must be construed to permit other insurance to the amount of $150,000; the word "concurrent" meaning "running with." Park- hurst-Davis Mercantile Co. v. Merchant Underwriters at the Indemnity Exchange, 86 N. E. 1062, 1064, 237 Ill. 492.

The words "concurrent herewith," as used in a fire policy for $4,500, which provided that it should be void if the insured should procure other insurance, unless otherwise provided by agreement added to the policy, and which contained the clause, "$3,500 total insurance permitted concurrent herewith on buildings," etc. "Other insurance permitted concurrent herewith on stock" relates to the term "total insurance," and means that the total insurance must all concur with the insurance effected by the policy, and the policy limits the insurance, the limitation taking into account the amount written in the policy; and the policy did not authorize $3,500 additional insurance, and it was forfeited by the insured taking a policy for additional insurance on the same property from another company. Senor v. Western Millers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 79 S. W. 687, 689, 181 Mo. 104.

CONCURRENT JURISDICTION

"Concurrent jurisdiction" between federal and state courts on rivers means the jurisdiction of two powers over one and the same place. The state of Oregon cannot under its concurrent jurisdiction under act of Congress over the Columbia river make criminal the operation of a purse net in that river in the territorial limits of the state of Washington under license from that state. Nielsen v. Oregon, 29 Sup. Ct. 383, 384, 212 U. S. 315, 53 L. Ed. 528.

The "concurrent jurisdiction" on the Mississippi, so far as said river shall form a common boundary to Iowa and any other state, given Iowa by Act March 8, 1845, c. 48, 5 Stat. 742, means that all the jurisdiction which might otherwise have been exercised by it with reference to transactions on the part of the river within its boundary shall be possessed and exercised by it with reference to like transactions on any part of the river between it and another state without regard to boundary; so that, as by Acts 33d Gen. Assem. c. 155, as amended by Acts 34th Gen. Assem. c. 117, it has done, it may prohibit fishing thereon with nets, without a license from Iowa, and in case of violation thereof, though on the Illinois side of the river, punish the same, even though the offender have a license from Illinois. State v. Moyers (Iowa) 136 N. W. 896, 897, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 366.

Laws 1909, c. 14, art. 7, creating county superior courts, gives them, except as to matters of probate, concurrent jurisdiction with county courts. Held, that concurrent jurisdiction within the statute means the jurisdiction of several different tribunals, each authorized to deal with the same subject-matter. Oklahoma Fire Ins. Co. v. Phillip, 111 Pac. 334, 335, 27 Okl. 234.

The word "concurrent," in its legal and generally accepted definition, means acting in conjunction, and, when applied to the jurisdiction of Oregon to enact penal laws for the Columbia river, it can only mean the power to enact such criminal statutes as are agreed to or acquiesced in by the state of Washington, or as are already in force within its jurisdiction. Ex parte Desjeiro, 152 Fed. 1004 (quoting and adopting definition in Re Mattson, 69 Fed. 535, 540).

"Concurrent" is "running together; having the same authority. Thus, we say such and such courts have concurrent jurisdictions; that is, each has the same jurisdiction." Bouv. Law Dic. "By conferring 'concurrent jurisdiction' Congress intended to declare that transactions occurring anywhere on the river between the two states might lawfully be dealt with by the courts of either according to its laws." "The existence of concurrent jurisdiction in two states over a river that is a boundary between them vests in each of such states, and its courts, except as to things permanent, and except as to maritime and commercial matters cognizable by the national government and its courts, jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, from shore to shore, of all matters of rightful state cognizance occurring upon such river in all parts thereof where it forms such common boundary." State v. Faudre, 46 S. E. 269, 273, 54 W. Va. 122, 63 L. R. A. 877, 102 Am. St. Rep. 927, 1 Ann. Cas. 104 (quoting and adopting definition from Bouv. Law Dic.; Rorer, Interstate Law, 337).

Laws 1907, c. 557, regulating the sales of syrups, molasses, and glucose, and mixtures thereof, so far as it affects interstate commerce, falls within the field of "concurrent jurisdiction" of the state and federal governments, and wherein the state may enact appropriate regulations not conflicting with congressional legislation on the subject. McDermott v. State, 126 N. W. 888, 890, 143 Wis. 18, 21 Ann. Cas. 1315.

Where an adjoining state has "concurrent jurisdiction" on the waters forming their boundaries, the laws of each state regulating the common right to take fish from such waters are valid when not in conflict, and where there is a conflict the law of the state which is the most restrictive in its character must prevail. "Concurrent jurisdiction" is not joint in the sense that only legislative acts adopted by both states can be effective on boundary waters. State v. Neilson, 95 Pac. 720, 721, 51 Or. 588, 131 Am. St. Rep. 765, 16 Ann. Cas. 1113.

"Concurrent jurisdiction," properly so called, on rivers, means the jurisdiction of two powers over one and the same place. It is in this sense that the words are used in Virginia Compact 1789, § 11, declaring that the jurisdiction of the proposed state of Kentucky on the Ohio river should be concurrent only with the states which may possess the opposite shores of the river. Hence jurisdiction is acquired by an Indiana court by service of process on the Ohio river on the Kentucky side of the low-water mark on the Indiana shore. Wedding v. Meyler, 24 Sup. Ct. 322, 824, 192 U. S. 573, 48 L. Ed. 570, 66 L. R. A. 833.

CONCURRENT NEGLIGENCE

A paragraph in a petition alleging that the railroad company employed an incompetent person, well knowing him to be such, and was in that respect guilty of willful and wanton negligence, did not charge an act of "concurrent negligence," for it could not be true that the company's negligence in providing a careless and incompetent person was an act in which the latter participated. Adderson v. Southern R. Co., 177 Fed. 571, 573.

Where a person who inflicts an injury has no better opportunity to anticipate the accident nor any better means of preventing it than the person injured, and there is negligence on the part of both parties which is continuous and mutual up to the incident of accident, there is "concurring negligence" which precludes recovery. So where a traveler, when he reaches the point where he was injured by collision with a train, is in a situation to help himself, and by a vigorous use of his eyes, ears, and physical strength can extricate himself and avoid injury, his negligence at that point will prevent a recovery, notwithstanding the fact that the trainmen could have stopped the train in season to have avoided injuring him. His negligence in such a case is said to be "concurrent" with the negligence of defendant, the negligence of which being operative at the time of the accident. Dyerson v. Union Pac. R. Co., 87 Pac. 680, 683, 684, 74 Kan. 528, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 132, 11 Ann. Cas. 207 (citing French v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 58 Atl. 722, 76 Vt. 441).

CONCURRENT RESOLUTION

Though denominated a "concurrent" resolution, a resolution by the state Senate and House of Representatives that the question of nominating United States senators, etc., by direct vote of the electors be submitted at an election, and requiring the Secretary of State to certify the same to the several county clerks and give notice to the sheriffs, etc., is a bill or joint resolution within Const. art. 4, § 19, providing no bill or joint resolution shall become a law without the concurrence of a majority of all the members elected to each house. Kelley v. Secretary of State, 112 N. W. 978, 979, 149 Mich. 343.

CONCURRENTLY

Payment of taxes "concurrently" means that the taxes must be paid from year to year, and one year's taxes may be paid after its termination, or two years after its termination, if it is believed that the party did not intend to abandon his possession, and paid the taxes in continuation of his possession. Hirsch v. Patton, 108 S. W. 1015, 1017, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 499.

As used in the proposition of law laid down in Lombard v. Trustees of Young Men's Library Ass'n Fund, 73 Ga. 322, that the lien of a materialman for lumber furnished on the employment of a contractor could not be foreclosed by a direct suit against the owner of the premises, without previously or "concurrently" suing the contractor to whom the lumber was furnished, is used as the equivalent of the phrase "in the same suit" so far as actions strictly at law are concerned. Buck v. Tifton Mfg. Co., 62 S. E. 107, 4 Ga. App. 695.

CONCURRING

See Concurrence.

CONCUSSION

"Concussion" is the act of shaking or agitating, especially by the shock or impulse of another body, and in surgery the shock or agitation of some organ by a fall or like cause. A person suffered "concussion" of the brain, where he sustained a fracture of the skull and remained unconscious for 17 days, during which time a portion of his skull was removed. Beave v. St. Louis Transit Co., 111 S. W. 52, 59, 212 Mo. 331 (quoting and adopting Webst. Dict.).

CONDEMN—CONDEMNATION

See Stand Condemned.

Expenses of condemnation, see Expenses.

See, also, Expropriation.

"Condemnation" is, in substance, a compulsory sale, and, so far as current taxation is concerned, may properly be treated the same as if the sale had been voluntary. Buckhout v. New York, 68 N. E. 659, 661, 176 N. Y. 363.

Under Gen. St. 1909, § 3006, subd. 4, authorizing the Kaw Valley Drainage District to condemn and cause obstructions in water courses to be removed, it may require the elevation of railroad bridges without condemnation and compensation; the term "condemn" as here used meaning to declare or pronounce a thing unlawful. Kaw Valley Drainage Dist. of Wyandotte County v. Kansas City Terminal Ry. Co., 123 Pac. 991, 994, 87 Kan. 272.

"Condemnation" for felony as a ground for divorce does not refer to conviction merely, but exists as long as the judgment is in force, and the cause is not barred by Civ. Code, § 423, subd. 8, by reason of having existed for more than five years. Davis v. Davis, 43 S. W. 168, 102 Ky. 440, 39 L. R. A. 403.

As purchase

See Purchase; Purchaser.

Of land

"A 'condemnation' is a proceeding at law, and at law the mortgagee is the owner of the property, and even if equity does, for purposes, treat him as merely having a lien on the land." A mortgage is within the protection of a provision of a city charter requiring street commissioners, in condemning land, to ascertain the damages for which the owner or occupant of "any right or interest claimed in any ground or improvements" ought to be compensated. Mayor, etc. of Hagerstown v. Groh, 61 Atl. 467, 468, 101 Md. 560.

The words "condemn or appropriate" in the Constitution of Arkansas mean a taking of private property under the right of eminent domain and not by contract. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Foltz, 52 Fed. 627, 629.

CONDEMNATION JURY

A "condemnation jury" is a jury appointed in an eminent domain proceeding to assess damages and benefits. Such a jury is authorized to assess damages and benefits for and against different property holders for an act affecting all. Hunt v. City of Columbia, 97 S. W. 955, 122 Mo. App. 81.

CONDEMNATION MONEY

The term "condemnation money," mentioned in the conditions of a bond given under Code Civ. Proc. § 677, relating to appeal bonds in an action for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien, means the damages which the party failing in the action is adjudged or condemned to pay; and when the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the lower court, it found the condemnation money against defendant, though the appeal in the Supreme Court was a trial de novo. Maloney v. Johnson-McLean Co., 100 N. W. 423, 424, 72 Neb. 340.

CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS

Any and all suits, see Any.

A proceeding to condemn is, in substance, a proceeding to compel a sale by the owner to the petitioner, and is justified only when the purpose for which the land is to be used is a public one. Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. v. Southern R. Co., 131 Fed. 657, 666, 66 C. C. A. 601.

Election contest distinguished

The distinction between a condemnation suit and a proceeding to contest an election is plain. The one is to recover a judgment for the amount of the compensation and damages which the owner of private property has sustained by reason of the taking of his property for a public use, and may be said to be a case and falling within the language of the statute giving city courts concurrent jurisdiction with circuit courts in all civil cases, while the contest of an election is a proceeding instituted for the purpose of determining which of the contestants has received the greater number of votes of a particular office. Brueggemann v. Young, 70 N. E. 292, 294, 208 Ill. 181.

CONDENSED SKIMMED MILK

Acts 1900, p. 868, c. 532, § 138f, prohibits the manufacture or sale of condensed or preserved milk unless manufactured from pure and unadulterated milk, from which no part of the cream has been taken, or unless the proportion of milk solids therein shall be equivalent to a certain percentage of milk solids in crude milk. Section 233 provides that milk from which a part of the cream has been taken shall be deemed adulterated and unwholesome, but forbids a construction of the sections so as to prohibit the sale of pure skimmed milk when labeled and sold as such, or the addition of sugar to the manufacture of condensed milk, and sections 232 and 234 prescribe the standard for pure milk and the penalty for violating the statute. Held, that the primary purpose of section 235 was not to prevent fraud, but to prohibit the sale of articles deemed unhealthful by the Legislature, and the sale of "condensed skimmed milk," was prohibited by the statute, and the fact that such an article was unknown or not manufactured when the statute was enacted was immaterial. Reiter v. State, 71 Atl. 975, 976, 109 Md. 235.

CONDIMENT

A "condiment" is a "food" and not a "medicine." The "International stock food" is a "food or condiment" within the meaning of the Kentucky pure food law (Laws Ky. 1906, c. 48), and its sale is subject to regulation thereunder. Savage v. Scovell, 171 Fed. 566.

"Condiment," according to Webster, and as generally understood, is something "used to give relish to food and to gratify the taste; a pungent and appetizing substance; seasoning." Capers, which are pungent flower buds, when pickled in vinegar and intended for use in flavoring sauces and as a relish are a "condiment," dutiable under Act 1897, par. 241, as "pickles and sauces of all kinds," rather than as provisions. S. S. Pierce Co. v. United States, 176 Fed. 440, 441, 443, 444.

A "condition" is any qualification, restriction, or limitation annexed to a gift, and modifying or destroying its full enjoyment. Adams v. Johnson, 76 Atl. 174, 227 Pa. 454.

"An 'estate upon condition,' expressed in the grant itself, is where an estate is granted either in fee simple or otherwise, with an express qualification annexed, whereby the estate granted shall either commence, be enlarged, or be defeated upon performance or breach of such qualification or condition." A deed will not be construed as a grant upon condition subsequent, unless the language used by expressed terms create an "estate upon condition," or unless the intent of the grantor to create a conditional estate is manifest from a reading of the entire instrument. Thomson v. Hart, 66 S. E. 270, 272, 133 Ga. 540 (quoting and adopting definition given by Blackstone).

"A 'condition' is a future and uncertain event upon which is made to depend the existence of a juridical tie or obligation, or rather it is a kind of restriction which subordinates the existence of a juridical relation to a future and uncertain event." Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. St. Louis Cypress Co., 46 South. 193, 197, 121 La. 152 (quoted and adopted from Dalloz Code Annoté Nouveau Code Civil, 111, p. 2, No. 27).

A "condition" in the law of realty is a qualification or restriction annexed to a conveyance, providing that if an event does or does not happen, or the grantor or grantee does or omits to do a particular act, an estate shall commence, be enlarged, or defeated. Munro v. Syracuse, L. S. & N. R. Co., 93 N. E. 516, 518, 200 N. Y. 224, 21 Ann. Cas. 594.

The word "condition," in Act March 26, 1897, § 2, providing that the warranty of any fact or "condition" incorporated in any policy of insurance purporting to be made or assented to by the assured, which shall not materially affect the risk insured against, shall be construed as representations only in any suit at law or equity on such policy, refers to facts existing, or said or supposed to exist, at the time the policy is made. Hoover v. Mercantile Town Mut. Ins. Co., 69 S. W. 42, 44, 93 Mo. App. 111.

In a provision of an insurance policy that if, with the consent of the company, an interest thereunder shall exist in favor of a mortgagee or any person or corporation having an interest in the subject of insurance other than the interest of the insured as described therein, the "conditions hereinbefore contained" shall apply in the manner expressed in such provisions and conditions relating to such interest as shall be written upon, attached, or appended thereto, the expression "conditions hereinbefore contained" refers to the preceding conditions set out in the policy of insurance or contained on the back thereof, and such preceding conditions apply to the interest of a mortgagee or other person having an interest therein, but as modified by the provisions contained on a slip attached to the policy. Vancouver Nat. Bank v. Law Union & Crown Ins. Co., 153 Fed. 440, 445.

A judgment granting the husband, because of the wife's use of intoxicants, a limited divorce for two years, though providing that at the end of two years either party "may proceed in the action as he or she shall deem for her best interest," is not an interlocutory judgment, authorized by St. 1898, § 2883, in case of a decision leaving some condition to be performed; leaving it to the husband to ask for an absolute divorce at the end of the two years, on the record as it stood at the time of the trial, if in the meantime the parties had not been reconciled, though the wife had reformed, if such be the intent of the provision of the judgment, not being a "condition" within the meaning of the statute. Graham v. Graham, 136 N. W. 162, 163, 149 Wis. 602.

Const. art. 11, § 19, as amended in 1911 (see Laws 1911, p. 2180), authorizing any municipal corporation to establish and operate enumerated public utilities, and providing that persons or corporations may establish and operate such works under "such conditions and under such regulations as the municipality may prescribe under its organic law, on condition that the municipal government shall have the right to regulate the charges thereof," grants to all municipalities the power to construct and operate public utilities, and to prescribe the conditions on which persons and corporations may establish and operate such works, subject to charter provisions; and an ordinance of a city empowered to regulate conduits and works for the production and distribution of gas, etc., which prohibits excavations in streets without first obtaining permission from the board of public works, is valid when applied to one engaged in laying a gas pipe in a street as a part of the distributing system of a corporation engaged in supplying gas to the inhabitants of the city; the word "condition" meaning something established as a requisite to the doing or taking effect of something else, while the word "regulations" is something distinct from the word "conditions," and implies a broader meaning in the latter word than mere regulation of the manner of use. Ex parte Russell, 126 Pac. 875, 876, 163 Cal. 668.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, providing that a claim of lien by an original contractor must contain a statement of his demand, less credits, the name of the owner, the name of the person by whom he was employed, a statement of the terms, time given, and conditions of the contract, and a description of the property to be charged with the lien, does not require that a claim of lien, to be valid, should set forth that the demand was based on more than one contract, and then segregate and separately state the amount of each, though the evidence in support of the lien showed that the work was performed on separate and distinct structures under separate and distinct contracts; the word "conditions" referring only to those provisions which enter into and form a part of the contract and are essential to make it binding. Acme Lumber Co. v. Wessling, 126 Pac. 167, 170, 19 Cal. App. 406.

In an action to recover unpaid installments under a contract of employment for five years at an annual salary, payable in weekly installments, an allegation in the complaint of "performance of all the conditions" on plaintiff's part, meant only the performance of the obligations placed on him by the contract during the period sued for, or possibly up to the time suit was commenced, and not during the entire term of employment; and hence the fact that the evidence did not show performance during the entire term did not constitute a variance. Tichenor v. Bruckheimer, 81 N. Y. Supp. 653, 655, 40 Misc. Rep. 194.

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 373, providing that in pleading the performance of a condition precedent in a contract it shall be sufficient to allege generally that the party performed all the "conditions" on his part, an allegation in an action on a policy "that plaintiff fully performed all the obligations required of her" was a substantial compliance with the statute. Security Accident & Sick Ben. Ass'n v. Lee, 66 N. E. 745, 746, 160 Ind. 249.

Where practically all the output of a china manufacturer was sold to the United States, special classes manufactured for European trade cannot be said to be in "condition" to supply the American trade, within the meaning of Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 19, providing that dutiable value shall be determined according to the "condition in which * * * merchandise is there bought and sold for exportation to the United States." United States v. Haviland & Co., 167 Fed. 414, 418.

A complaint having predicated the negligence of the master on a "defect in the condition" of the ways, works, etc., a demurrer, in that the count showed no defect in the ways, works, etc., was inapt, under the statute permitting a recovery for a "defect in the condition" of, etc. The employment of the word "condition" widens the statute beyond what would have been its scope had only the word "defect" been used. If one claiming under the statute must show a defect in the ways, the effect would be to counteract the right therein declared, and this by denying the word "condition" its proper influence. Jones v. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co., 50 South. 1017, 163 Ala. 266.

As charge

The word "conditions," as used in Civ. Code, art. 1559, providing for the revocation of donations for nonfulfillment of eventual conditions, is synonymous with the word "charges"; and when a donation contains charges, it is considered as made under the condition that it may be dissolved, or revoked, if they are not executed. Voinche v. Town of Marksville, 50 South. 662, 663, 124 La. 712.

Conditional limitation and limitation distinguished

The distinction between "an estate on condition" and one "on limitation" is that in the latter the event or occurrence relied on to determine the first estate and as the beginning of another merely marks the end or limit of the first, and thus indicates the boundary between the two while in the estate on condition, such event actively defeats what might otherwise be a greater interest. Diamond v. Rotan (Tex.) 124 S. W. 196, 200.

As consideration

A will devised land "upon the condition" that the devisee pay to the testator's widow during life a certain sum, which was made a charge upon the land; but no provision was made for a forfeiture of the title, nor was a devise over made in case of default of payment of such charge. Held, that the word "condition" was used in the sense of "consideration," and that the title was not conditional, but merely incumbered with the charge as a lien which might be foreclosed. Ditchey v. Lee, 78 N. E. 972, 974, 167 Ind. 267.

As defeasance

An instrument which defeats the force or operation of some other deed or of an estate is a "defeasance"; but, if the provision is in the same deed, it is a "condition." Epperson v. Epperson, 62 S. E. 344, 345, 108 Va. 471.

As provisions

Testatrix bequeathed the income of $30,000 to her niece for life, and, after her death, to her children, if any, absolutely, but, if she died without issue, the principal to go to two brothers named, the interest only for their use and to their children, lawful issue, absolutely. The will also contained a clause bequeathing the residue to the niece, subject to the same conditions as the legacy, the interest to be used for her benefit for life, the principal to go to her children, lawful issue, absolutely, but, if she died unmarried, she should have power to devise it to whichever of her brothers she considered most worthy to inherit, the interest only to go to them, the principal to their children. The niece died without issue and without having exercised the power of appointment. Held, that the principal of the residue passed to the children, lawful issue, of the two brothers who took the $30,000 legacy absolutely; the word "conditions," as used in the residuary clause, being construed to mean the same as "provisions" under which the niece took the pecuniary legacy. In re Keene's Estate, 70 Atl. 706, 710, 221 Pa. 201.

The term for which the accident policy was to run was one of the "conditions and provisions," within a clause to the effect that no "condition or provision" should be waived or altered by any one, unless by written consent of an officer of the company. Wheeler v. United States Casualty Co., 59 Atl. 347, 348, 71 N. J. Law, 396.

Of person

In an action for physical pain, and for shame, humiliation, and suffering caused the plaintiff's wife from a conductor's abusive language to her, no element of the damages sued for was ignored by an instruction that the burden is upon the plaintiff to show by a preponderance of the evidence that she was injured and is suffering as alleged in the pleadings, and that "her said condition or her said injury and suffering are the direct and proximate result of the misconduct on the part of the defendant's conductor," and that if the jury should believe, by a preponderance of the evidence, that her "condition" resulted from some misconduct on the part of the conductor they should return a verdict in favor of defendant; the word "condition," as last used, in view of the other quoted phrases, comprehending every element of damage claimed in the petition, and clearly having reference to both her physical and mental condition. Carpenter v. Trinity & B. V. Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 146 S. W. 363, 368.

Covenant distinguished

The difference between a "covenant" and a "condition" in a contract relates largely to the remedy, and, if the breach of the agreement pertains to the validity of the instrument, or is a ground for forfeiture, it is a condition, while, if the remedy for a breach is merely an action at law for damages, the agreement is a covenant. Cavanagh v. Iowa Beer Co., 113 N. W. 856, 858, 136 Iowa, 236.

An agreement in a lease to give a chattel mortgage on personalty as security for future payments of rent is a "condition," which as a mutual agreement is binding on both parties, and a breach of which will work a forfeiture of the estate, rather than a "covenant," which binds only the covenantor, and whose breach only warrants the recovery of damages. Knight v. Black, 126 Pac. 512, 514, 19 Cal. App. 518.

Plaintiff conveyed a strip of land for a railroad right of way on "condition" that the grantee "shall construct and maintain a * * * railroad to be operated by electricity for motive power, * * * and upon the failure or abandonment of said enterprise by the grantee * * * the privileges herein and the property hereby conveyed shall revert to and be fully vested in the grantors, * * * and conditioned also that the construction of such road be fully completed and such road be in operation in or before the year 1900." Held, that the clause requiring the road to be finished before or during the year 1900 was a "covenant" and not a "condition," and a failure to complete the road within that time did not operate as a forfeiture of the right of way. Krueger v. St. Louis, St. C. & W. R. Co., 84 S. W. 898, 901, 185 Mo. 227 (citing Ellis v. Kyger, 3 S. W. 23, 90 Mo. 600; O'Brien v. Wagner, 7 S. W. 19, 94 Mo. 93, 4 Am. St. Rep. 362; Morrill v. Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co., 9 S. W. 657, 96 Mo. 174; Studdard v. Wells, 25 S. W. 201, 120 Mo. 25; Roberts v. Crume, 73 S. W. 662, 173 Mo. loc. cit. 581; Gratz v. Highland Scenic R. Co., 65 S. W. 223, 165 Mo. 211).

Where a deed clearly shows the intention of the parties that on breach of a restriction the estate should be defeated and return to the grantor, the restriction is a "condition," whether the apt words to create a condition are used or not. Ball v. Milliken, 76 Atl. 789, 791, 81 R. I. 36, 87 L. R. A. (N. S.) 623, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 30.

The word "restrictions," when used in connection with the grant of an interest in real property, is the equivalent of "conditions," and either term may be used to denote a limitation upon the full and unqualified enjoyment of the right or estate granted. The word "restrictions," in Pub. St. c. 113, § 7, providing for the location of street railways, subject to such restrictions as required by public interest, is the equivalent of "conditions," and therefore limitations may be imposed on the enjoyment of the right to use the streets granted for such purposes. Blodgett v. Worcester Consol. St. Ry. Co. (Mass.) 79 N. E. 222, 224 (citing Skinner v. Shephard, 130 Mass. 180; Ayling v. Kramer, 133 Mass. 12; Clapp v. Wilder, 57 N. E. 692, 176 Mass. 332, 50 L. R. A. 120).

As term

A resolution adopted by a city council pending a dispute with a street railroad company as to its franchise rights with respect to fares, etc., on certain streets, which permitted the company to continue operations from time to time "upon the same terms and conditions now prevailing in the city, whether due to contract agreement or not," though made when the city knew that the company was collecting extra fares on certain lines which were without the city limits when the franchises for such lines, which authorized extra fares, were granted, did not recognize the company's right to charge extra fares on such lines; the word "prevailing" having no technical meaning and as used signifying that which is common, in operation, or prevalent, while the words "terms" and "conditions" mean the propositions and limitations which comprise the agreement and govern the parties, defining their obligations, and, as applied to an ordinance giving a franchise, signifying the boundary limit or extent of the grant. City of Detroit v. Detroit United Ry., 139 N. W. 56, 59, 173 Mich. 314.

CONDITION CONCURRENT

A contract, by which a purchaser of corporate stock was, at the end of a certain time, if he was dissatisfied therewith, entitled to reconvey and redeliver the same to the corporation and receive the price paid, was, as to the provisions as to satisfaction, reconveyance, and redelivery, within a statute providing that "conditions concurrent" are those which are mutually dependent, and are to be performed at the same time. Porter v. Plymouth Gold Min. Co., 74 Pac. 938, 941, 29 Mont. 347, 101 Am. St. Rep. 569.

CONDITION IN LIFE

An instruction directing the jury to award plaintiff such damages as would fairly compensate him for the injuries sustained, if any, and that, in determining the amount, it was the jury's duty to consider his age, condition in life, physical and mental pain, and suffering, if any, etc. Held, that the words "condition in life" should be considered to refer to plaintiff's physical condition only, and that the instruction was not therefore erroneous. Vandalia Coal Co. v. Yemm, 92 N. E. 49, 53, 175 Ind. 524.

CONDITION OF PEONAGE

A person arbitrarily or forcibly held against his will, for the purpose of compelling him to render personal services in discharge of a debt, is in a "condition of peonage." Hodges v. United States, 27 Sup. Ct. 6, 15, 203 U. S. 1, 51 L. Ed. 65.

The phrase "condition of peonage" means the actual status, physical and moral, with the inevitable incidents, to which the employé, servant, or debtor was reduced under that system, when held to involuntary performance or liquidation of his obligation. A condition of peonage, within the denunciation of Act March 2, 1867, c. 187, § 1, 14 Stat. 546, is the illegal holding of a person to involuntary servitude to work out a debt or contract claimed to be due by the person so held to the person so holding. United States

v. McClellan, 127 Fed. 971, 975 (quoting Peonage Cases, 123 Fed. 679).

CONDITION PRECEDENT

"A 'condition precedent' is one without the performance of which the contract, although in form executed by the parties and delivered, does not spring in life." Everson v. General Accident, Fire & Life Assur. Corp., Limited, of Perth, Scotland, 88 N. E. 658, 660, 202 Mass. 169.

A "condition precedent" in one that must happen or be performed before the estate dependent on it can arise or be enlarged. Frank v. Stratford-Hancock, 77 Pac. 134, 138, 13 Wyo. 37, 67 L. R. A. 571, 110 Am. St. Rep. 963.

"A 'condition precedent' in a contract is an act to be performed by one party before the accruing of the liability of the other party, and proof of such a condition does not vary or contradict the contract, but shows that no contract between the parties ever became effective." Cavanagh v. Iowa Beer Co., 118 N. W. 856, 858, 136 Iowa, 236.

"Conditions precedent" in a deed are those which prevent the vesting of title until the condition is complied with. Koch v. Streuter, 83 N. E. 1072, 1074, 232 Ill. 594.

Where condemnation proceedings were compromised by an agreement providing that the landowners should deed the land, and that the railroad company should within one year change the channel of a certain creek, and should, on the opening of a certain street, erect a bridge in a stipulated manner, the building of the bridge was not a "condition precedent" to the vesting of title, and failure to build it at the required time did not entitle its grantors to recover the land, but merely gave rise to a cause of action for damages. Bright v. Louisville & N. R. Co., (Tex.) 87 S. W. 780, 781.

In determining whether stipulations as to the time of performance of a contract for the sale of chattels are "conditions precedent," if it appears on a fair consideration of the contract and the circumstances that time is of the essence of the contract, stipulations thereto will be held conditions precedent. McIntyre v. Cunningham, 125 N. W. 598, 599, 86 Neb. 383.

"A 'condition precedent' calls for the performance of some act or the happening of some event after the terms of the contract have been agreed on before the contract shall take effect; that is to say, the contract is made in form, but does not become operative as a contract until some future specific act is performed or some subsequent event occurs. Hence it is said: 'A condition precedent doth get and gain the thing or estate made upon the condition by the performance of it, as a condition subsequent keeps and continues the estate by the performance of the condition." Though a policy of insurance provides that the description of the properties shall be a part of the contract and a warranty by the insured, it does not impose on plaintiff, in an action on the policy, the burden of proving the truth of such description as a prerequisite to the right to recover. Morotock Ins. Co. v. Fostoria Novelty Glass Co., 26 S. E. 850, 851, 94 Va. 361 (quoting and adopting definitions in Redman v. Aetna Ins. Co., 4 N. W. 591, 49 Wis. 431).

Where plaintiffs unconditionally accepted a special order for ice cans requiring delivery within 30 days, and plaintiffs knew that the cans were for a special use in the making of defendant's product, and of the importance to defendant of prompt delivery, and that loss would follow delay, the time of performance was a "condition precedent." Wall v. St. Joseph Artesian Ice & Cold Storage Co., 87 S. W. 574, 575, 112 Mo. App. 659.

As warranty

The terms "warranty" and "condition precedent" are used interchangeably, and in many instances a warranty is a condition precedent to the taking effect of the contract, as when the insured warrants the premium will be paid by the date of the policy. Salts v. Prudential Ins. Co., 120 S. W. 714, 717, 140 Mo. App. 142.

Condition subsequent distinguished

"Conditions precedent" and "conditions subsequent" differ, in that the former is one by the performance of which a right, estate, or thing is obtained or gained; the latter one by the performance of which a right, estate, or thing already obtained is kept and continued. Adams v. Guyandotte Valley Ry. Co., 61 S. E. 341, 344, 64 W. Va. 181.

A "condition precedent" requires performance before the estate vests. A "condition subsequent" may cause a forfeiture of a vested estate. Winn v. Tabernacle Infirmary, 69 S. E. 557, 558, 135 Ga. 380, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 512.

Where a condition is "precedent," the estate does not vest until the condition is fulfilled. If "subsequent," it is liable to be divested on the failure of the condition. Adams v. Johnson, 76 Atl. 174, 227 Pa. 454.

"Whether a given stipulation is to be deemed a 'condition precedent,' a 'condition subsequent,' or an 'independent agreement' is purely a question of intent; and the intention must be determined by considering, not only the words of the particular clause, but also the language of the whole contract, as well as the nature of the act required and the subject-matter to which it relates." Skowhegan Water Co. v. Skowhegan Village Corp., 86 Atl. 714, 718, 102 Me. 323.

Conditions in deeds are either "precedent" or "subsequent," and, where a certain condition was to be performed after the right granted had vested in the grantee, it is a "condition subsequent." Munro v. Syracuse, L. S. & N. R. Co., 93 N. E. 516, 518, 200 N. Y. 224, 21 Ann. Cas. 594.

A "condition" is a qualification annexed to any estate whereby it is to arise, in which case it is called a "condition precedent" or is to be defeated, when it is styled a "condition subsequent." A deed in consideration of natural love and affection, whereby land is granted, bargained, sold, and released to the grantee, on condition that she shall hold and enjoy the same for life, and after her death to go to all her children, "to have and to hold all the premises heretofore mentioned unto said grantee, her heirs and assigns, forever," conveys a title in fee simple, and entitles grantee's husband to a third interest therein on the death of the grantee; the condition being but an effort to set limitations on the fee simple, and cut it down to a life estate in the grantee not within the power of the grantor to accomplish. Chavis v. Chavis, 35 S. E. 507, 508, 57 S. C. 173.

A "condition subsequent" keeps and retains the estate by the performance of the condition, while a condition precedent doth get and gain the thing or estate made upon the condition by the performance of it. Though a policy of insurance provides that the description of the property shall be a part of the contract and a warranty by the insured, it does not impose on plaintiff in an action on the policy the burden of proving the truth of such description as a prerequisite to the right to recover. Morotock Ins. Co. v. Fostoria Novelty Glass Co., 26 S. E. 850, 852, 94 Va. 361 (quoting and adopting definitions in Redman v. Aetna Ins. Co., 4 N. W. 591, 49 Wis. 431).

CONDITION SUBSEQUENT

See Right of Entry for Breach of Condition Subsequent; Sale upon Subsequent Condition.

A "condition subsequent" defeats the estate in case it does not happen or is not performed. Frank v. Stratford-Hancock, 77 Pac. 134, 138, 13 Wyo. 37, 87 L. R. A. 571, 110 Am. St. Rep. 963.

A "condition subsequent" is one to be performed or fulfilled after the vesting of the estate, and the intent of which is to defeat it. Potomac Power Co. v. Burchell, 64 S. E. 982, 985, 109 Va. 676.

"Conditions subsequent" are provisions in a deed giving the grantor, by express words or necessary implication, the right to re-enter and repossess the premises upon the violation of the condition. Koch v. Streuter, 83 N. E. 1072, 1074, 232 Ill. 594.

An "estate upon condition subsequent," is one liable to be defeated by the happening of a certain contingency, and the entry by the grantor or his heirs, who thereby regain the estate originally parted with; the estate thus being distinct from conditional limitation, where there is no re-entry for the grantor. Taylor v. McCowen, 99 Pac. 351, 354, 154 Cal. 798 (citing 2 Washb. Real Prop. [6th Ed.] § 1640).

A "condition subsequent" is one that operates upon an estate already created and vested, which, if not performed, renders the estate liable to be defeated at the election of the grantor, provided he re-enters within a reasonable time after default or asserts his rights in an equivalent manner. Such a condition is a qualification or restriction annexed to a conveyance, and so united with it as to qualify or restrain it, and when the grantor re-enters and takes possession of the estate upon a breach of the condition, he holds it on the same terms and in the same manner as he did previous to the grant. Paris Grocer Co. v. Burks (Tex. Civ. App.) 99 S. W. 1135, 1138 (quoting and adopting the definition in 2 Wash. Real Property, § 953).

A deed for a consideration alleged to have been nominal, conveying land to a city to be used as a burying ground, and forever kept, used, and inclosed in a decent and substantial manner, and for no other use or purpose whatsoever, in which the grantors made no record of any intention that the land should ever, under any circumstances, revert to them or their representatives, was not made on a "condition subsequent." Thornton v. Natchez, 129 Fed. 84, 86, 63 C. C. A. 526.

Where a testator devised all his real estate to his sons equally, and provided that none of the property should be sold until 10 years after his death, and that if any of his sons contracted habits of vice before the division he thereby forfeited his share, and if any of the sons died before division his share should go to the remaining heirs unless he left children, the devise vested in the sons the fee subject to divestiture or termination on any son contracting habits of vice before division, which is a "condition subsequent," defined by Civ. Code, § 1349, as where an estate is given so as to vest immediately, subject to be divested by some subsequent act or event, or on the death of any son before division; the gift over in such case being a mere executory devise, which takes effect on the happening of some contingent event in substitution for a fee previously devised. Newlove v. Mercantile Trust Co. of San Francisco, 105 Pac. 971, 973, 156 Cal. 657.

Land was conveyed to a village under agreement between the grantor and a third person whereby the latter paid the grantor one-half the value of the land on the promise of said grantor to donate to the village an equal amount by conveying the entire tract to the village for cemetery purposes. The deed recited that the land was granted in perpetuity for a cemetery, to be used for that purpose only; and the habendum provided that it should be held on the conditions expressed, and that the village should devote the land to cemetery purposes, and that it accepted the same for such purpose and covenanted to observe the condition. There was no provision for re-entry in the event of breach. Held, that the requirement that the land be used for cemetery purposes was not a "condition subsequent." Freer v. Glen Springs Sanitarium Co., 115 N. Y. Supp. 734, 736, 131 App. Div. 352.

A provision in a deed for re-entry in case of breach of conditions is evidence of intention to create "conditions subsequent." Phillips v. Gannon, 92 N. E. 616, 619, 246 Ill. 98.

A deed under which the grantees are to enter immediately into possession, and thereafter have the use of the land, unless some condition in the deed is broken, and by which the grantees, in consideration of the conveyance, covenant to furnish the grantor support and proper attendance during his life, and give him a burial and monument, and to pay a mortgage on the premises, and that he shall have the right to re-enter and take possession for a breach of any of such covenants, though providing that the performance of said covenants is made a "condition precedent to the vesting of the title," creates "conditions subsequent," and not precedent; the word "vesting" not being used in its technical sense, but the clause, in the light of the surrounding circumstances and in connection with the entire instrument, being clearly intended to mean that the title should vest at once, but that the grantees should not have an absolute indefeasible title till they had performed all the conditions of the deed. Id.

If the act required by a deed does not necessarily precede the vesting of the estate, but may accompany or follow it, and if the act may be as well done after as before the vesting of the estate, or, if from the nature of the act to be performed and the time required for its performance it is evident that the intention of the parties was that the estate should vest and the grantee perform the act or acts after taking possession, the condition is "subsequent." Id.

Condition precedent distinguished

See Condition Precedent.

Covenant distinguished

A provision in a deed conveying right of way to a railroad company, requiring the grantee to erect a station house thereon and to stop all passenger trains there which stopped at other stations within three miles, held, in view of other provisions, to constitute a covenant, and not a "condition subsequent." Minard v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 153 Fed. 578, 579, 82 C. C. A. 586.

Creation

"Conditions subsequent," especially when relied upon to work a forfeiture, must be created by express terms, or clear implication, and are strictly construed. A grantee's covenant to pay taxes on the land was not a condition subsequent for a breach of which the grantor could re-enter. Burgson v. Jacobson, 102 N. W. 563, 565, 124 Wis. 295 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Washb. Real Prop. p. 7).

Though the grantees in a deed containing a condition that they should pay a certain sum to third persons were not expressly bound by the condition since they had not sealed the deed, yet, having accepted it, they were bound by an implied promise to pay the sum, for which an assumpsit would lie. Barnes v. Crockett's Adm'rs, 68 S. E. 983, 984, 111 Va. 240, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 464.

The fact that a deed recited that the conveyance was made pursuant to a contract whereby the grantee was to convey certain land to the grantor and erect certain buildings thereon did not create an "estate on condition subsequent," conditioned on the erection of the buildings, as such an estate can only be created by express reservation of right of re-entry. Braddy v. Elliott, 60 S. E. 507, 508, 146 N. C. 578, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1121, 125 Am. St. Rep. 523.

"Conditions subsequent" are those which in terms operate upon an estate conveyed and render it liable to be defeated for breach of the conditions. Such conditions are not favored in law because they tend to destroy estates, and no provision in a deed relied on to create a condition subsequent will be so interpreted, if the language of the provision will bear any other reasonable construction. While no precise form of words is necessary to create a condition subsequent, still it must be created by express terms or by clear implication. Merely reciting in a deed that it is in consideration of a certain sum, and that the grantee shall do other things specified therein, does not create an estate upon condition. There must be language used which is so clear as to leave no doubt but that the grantor intended that an estate upon condition subsequent should be created—language which ex proprio vigore imports such a condition." Hawley v. Kafitz, 83 Pac. 248, 249, 148 Cal. 393, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 741, 113 Am. St. Rep. 282.

"If the condition be a subsequent one—i. e., such a one as concedes the validity of the contract, save as it has been abrogated or destroyed by breach of condition—then parol evidence is not admissible, for its manifestly varies or contradicts the terms of a written contract." Cavanagh v. Iowa Beer Co., 113 N. W. 856, 858, 136 Iowa, 236.

Running with land

"Conditions subsequent" necessarily run with the land where they are attached to the title which may be lost by failure to observe them. Where a deed contains a "condition subsequent" providing that the terms of the agreement shall be binding on the heirs, successors, and assigns of the parties thereto, the successors of the grantee are bound thereby. Munro v. Syracuse, L. S. & N. R. Co., 93 N. E. 516, 519, 200 N. Y. 224, 21 Ann. Cas. 594.

CONDITIONAL

See Unconditional.

A contract, by which a purchaser of corporate stock was at the end of a certain time, if he was dissatisfied therewith, entitled to reconvey and redeliver the same to the corporation and receive the price paid, was, as to the provisions as to satisfaction, reconveyance and redelivery, "conditional" within a statute providing that an obligation is "conditional" when the rights or duties of a party thereto depend on the occurrence of an uncertain event. Porter v. Plymouth Gold Min. Co., 74 Pac. 938, 941, 29 Mont. 347, 101 Am. St. Rep. 569.

CONDITIONAL ACCEPTANCE

A letter from a general manager of a railway company, addressed to a lumber company, contained the following: "In view of our intention of putting down 60-pound rail, we will have several miles of 45-pound rail to sell, which we can offer at $26 per ton." Subsequently the general manager verbally offered to sell to the lumber company five miles of 45-pound steel rail at $26 per ton. After this verbal offer, a letter from the general manager, addressed to the lumber company, contained the following: "My conversation with Mr. Babcock, on his recent visit to Bainbridge: This company can sell you five miles of 45-pound steel rail at $26 per ton, to be delivered as soon as the new rails, which this company has ordered, arrive, which will possibly be within the next 60 days." In reply to this, an authorized agent of the lumber company wrote the railway company as follows: "We have your esteemed favor of April 8th in regard to the 45-pound steel relays, and accept your offer. Please consider the deal closed. In billing these, make two miles cash, and three miles to be paid for by note due a year from now; that is, April 1, 1905. Kindly deliver our first two miles at your early convenience, and the next three miles at your very latest convenience. We mean by this that we need the two miles, and do not need the three miles until early next year." Held, the acceptance was not unconditional, but, construing the whole together, embraced new terms not referred to in the offer, which do not appear to have been accepted by the railway company, and no complete contract was ever made. There was no suggestion of credit in the offer. Babcock Bros. Lumber Co. v. Georgia, F. & A. R. Co., 56 S. E. 457, 127 Ga. 329.

CONDITIONAL BOND

See Simplex Obligatio.

A "conditional bond" does not create an indebtedness absolutely payable in the future, but is an obligation which becomes an indebtedness on the happening of a contingency. In re Chestnut St. Trust & Saving Co.'s Assigned Estate, 66 Atl. 332, 333, 217 Pa. 151, 118 Am. St. Rep. 909.

CONDITIONAL FEE

A "conditional fee" is defined as an estate whose "existence depends on the happening or not happening of some uncertain event, whereby the estate may be either originally created, or enlarged, or finally defeated." Taylor v. Stephens (Ind.) 74 N. E. 12 (citing And. Law Dict. 221).

"A 'conditional fee' is one that restrains the fee to some particular heir to the exclusion of others." A will devising lands to testator's granddaughter, on condition that she pay all taxes, keep up repairs, and do not incumber or sell her interest before she should arrive at the age of 40 years, and giving a remainder over in case of her death under 40, created a conditional fee. Matlock v. Lock, 38 Ind. App. 281, 73 N. E. 171, 180.

A devise to one and to the heirs of his own body is not within the rule in Shelley's Case, but creates in the devisee a conditional fee as it existed at common law before the statute de bonis, which is a part of the common law of the state, and on the birth of issue the estate becomes absolute, while on his death without issue the estate reverts to testator's heirs. A "conditional fee" is one which restricts the fee to some particular heirs, exclusive of others, and at common law is a fee simple on condition that the devisee has the heirs prescribed, and if he dies without issue the property reverts to testator's heirs. Sagers v. Sagers (Iowa) 138 N. W. 911, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 562.

CONDITIONAL GUARANTY

Where defendant guaranteed the collection of amounts to become due under a contract for the sale of goods, the guaranty was "conditional"; defendant not being liable until judgment was obtained and execution issued against the principal. Blanding v. Cohen, 92 N. Y. Supp. 93, 94, 101 App. Div. 442.

CONDITIONAL LIMITATION

A "conditional limitation" is an estate limited to take effect upon the happening of a contingency; an estate limited to take effect after the determination of an estate which, in the absence of a limitation over, would have been an estate upon condition. It cannot be limited after an estate upon limitation, except where the contingency which constitutes the limitation is not sure to happen and the estate is a fee upon limitation. Diamond v. Rotan (Tex.) 124 S. W.

196, 200 (quoting and adopting the definition in Tiedeman Real Prop. § 211).

The word "conditional," as used in a lease for a term of years, reciting that it is subject to the conditional limitations herein stated, and stipulating in the following paragraph that the occupation of the premises by the tenant and his family as a strictly private dwelling apartment is a specific consideration for the granting of the lease, has reference to a situation, state, or external circumstances. Schwoerer v. Connolly, 88 N. Y. Supp. 818, 820, 44 Misc. Rep. 222.

The breach of a tenant's covenant to repair is not in the nature of a "conditional limitation." Kleinstein v. Gonsky, 118 N. Y. Supp. 949, 950, 134 App. Div. 266 (citing Cramer v. Emberg, 4 N. Y. Supp. 618, 15 Daly, 205).

The distinction between "conditional limitations," "contingent remainders," and "estates upon condition subsequent" is stated to be as follows: "If an estate is limited to A. until B. return from Rome, and after B. return to C., the limitation is a contingent remainder, and good as such; but if the estate had been limited to A., which would be for life, if no words of inheritance were annexed, provided that, if B. return from Rome, the estate should go to C., the limitation, though expressly the same in effect as the first, would be, not a remainder, but a conditional limitation. In the one case, if C.'s estate comes into effect at all, it is after the prior estate had terminated by the natural expiration of the time for which it was limited, whereas in the other C.'s estate, if it took effect, came in and displaced the prior estate before its natural termination, and took its place as a substitute therefor. Then, again, though the estate of A. is a conditional one, liable to be defeated by the happening of a contingent event, it is not a case of condition at the common law, where to determine an estate for a breach of it required an entry by the grantor or his heirs, who thereby regained the estate originally parted with; but it is a case where the estate is wholly parted with by the grantor, no interest being left in him, and passes at once, upon the happening of the event, to him to whom it is limited. That contingent event, when it happens, is the limitation of the first estate granted; and the estate, instead of going back to the original grantor, goes over, eo instanti, and without any act but that of the law, to the party named in the very gift itself of the estate as the one to take it in that event." In view of Civ. Code, § 778, declaring that a remainder may be limited on a contingency, the happening of which will abridge or determine the precedent estate, and such remainder shall be deemed a conditional limitation, and section 773, providing that a fee may be limited on a contingency which must happen, if at all, within the period prescribed in the title, where testator bequeathed land to A. for life, and on her death to her heirs, but that, if A. should not reside on the land for her natural life, the land should become the absolute property of T. A's estate was not based on a condition subsequent, but was subject to a conditional limitation, so that, on her removal from the land in her lifetime, the property vested in T. at once, without entry or suit to establish title. Taylor v. McCowen, 99 Pac. 351, 353, 354, 154 Cal. 798 (quoting and adopting the distinction in 2 Washb. Real Prop. [8th Ed.] § 1640).

CONDITIONAL LINE

A "conditional line" is a line made by agreement of parties, generally without the aid of a surveyor. Martin v. Hall, 100 S. W. 343, 344, 30 Ky. Law Rep. 1110.

CONDITIONAL PARDON

An indefinite suspension of the sentence of a prisoner on condition amounts to a "conditional pardon." State v. Hunter, 100 N. W. 510, 512, 124 Iowa, 569, 104 Am. St. Rep. 361.

Const. art. 4, § 11, provides that in all criminal cases, except treason and impeachment, the Governor shall have power after a conviction to grant reprieves, commutations of punishment, and pardons, etc. Acts 32d Leg. c. 44, provides that district judges upon the written request of defendants in certain criminal cases may submit to the jury the issue as to whether or not the defendant had ever before been charged with or convicted of crime, and, if the jury finds that he has not been, such judge may suspend the sentence in case the jury convict. Such suspension is not open to review, and is for an indefinite time, depending on good behavior, and upon the violation of the good behavior provision the defendant may be brought into court, the suspension set aside, and the convict required to undergo the penalty of the original sentence. If the conditions are complied with for double the length of time of the conviction, the judge may bring the convict into court, and set aside and annul the former judgment, and discharge him from all responsibility. Held, the act confers upon the district courts the discretionary power not only to grant a "conditional pardon," which is an indefinite suspension of sentence on conditions, but also to set aside a conviction and restore the convict to all his rights, which is an essential element of the pardoning power, and it is unconstitutional as an invasion of the Governor's prerogative. Snodgrass v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 178, 179.

CONDITIONAL PROMISE

A promise to pay "as soon as possible," made after a discharge in bankruptcy, is not a "conditional promise," and as such insufficient to support an action on the original demand. Sundling v. Willey, 108 N. W. 38, 40, 19 S. D. 298, 9 Ann. Cas. 644.

Statements in letters, concerning a note given by the writer, that he would pay when he was able, that he expected a raise of salary, and that he had other indebtedness to which he felt he must give preference, do not render the promise to pay "conditional," so as to prevent it from removing the bar of limitations. Walker v. Freeman, 70 N. E. 595, 598, 209 Ill. 17.

Where, in an action on a note, plaintiff relied on a new promise to toll limitations pleaded, and the promise proved was that defendant would pay the debt as soon as she could, or as soon as she was able, an instruction that that was an absolute and unqualified promise was erroneous. Barker v. Heath, 67 Atl. 222, 224, 74 N. H. 270 (citing Butterfield v. Jacobs, 15 N. H. 140, 141).

CONDITIONAL SALE

See Sale upon Subsequent Condition.

Conditional sale to bankrupt as preference, see Preference.

Civ. Code, § 1727, defines an "agreement to sell, generally termed a 'conditional sale' as a contract by which one engages, for a price, to transfer to another the title to a certain thing." Ward Land & Stock Co. v. Mapes, 82 Pac. 426, 427, 147 Cal. 747 (citing Van Allen v. Francis, 56 Pac. 339, 123 Cal. 474).

A "conditional sale" is a sale in which the transfer of title to the buyer or his retention of it depends upon the performance of some condition. Poirier Mfg. Co. v. Kitts, 120 N. W. 558, 560, 18 N. D. 556.

A "conditional sale" is one in which the vesting of the title in the purchaser is subject to a condition precedent, or in which its reversion in the seller is subject to the failure of the buyer to comply with a condition subsequent. In re Columbus Buggy Co., 143 Fed. 859, 860, 74 C. C. A. 611.

A "conditional sale" of personal property, as understood in this state, means one in which the title is retained by the vendor, with no right in the vendee to sell the property, and in which the property is not subject to the debts of the vendee. Star Clothing Mfg. Co. v. Nordeman, 100 S. W. 93, 94, 118 Tenn. 384 (citing Houston v. Dyche, Meigs [19 Tenn.] 76, 33 Am. Dec. 130; Price v. Jones, 3 Head [40 Tenn.] 84; Holmark v. Molin, 5 Cold. [45 Tenn.] 482; Acts 1899, p. 119, c. 12, § 1; Shannon's Code Supp. p. 638; Gambling v. Read, Meigs [19 Tenn.] 281; Bradshaw v. Thomas, 7 Yerg. [15 Tenn.] 497).

"A 'conditional sale' of land is a purchase for a price paid or to be paid, to become absolute in the purchaser on the occurrence of a particular event, or it is a purchase accompanied by an agreement to resell to the grantor in a given time for a given price." Kramer v. Wilson, 90 Pac. 183, 185, 49 Or. 333.

Where the owner of a sewing machine places it in possession of a prospective purchaser with an option to purchase at a fixed valuation, and with no agreement to rent, such transaction is not a "conditional sale," within Comp. St. 1907, c. 32, § 26, providing that an agreement for conditional sale must be in writing, and a copy filed with the county clerk. Singer Sewing Mach. Co. v. Omaha Umbrella Mfg. Co., 119 N. W. 958, 959, 83 Neb. 619.

A contract signed by the seller and purchaser of a printing press, in which it is provided that the purchaser will pay for the same in installments at fixed dates, and such payments are evidenced by promissory notes, and in which contract it is also agreed that should default be made in payment of any of the rent at the times or in the amounts, the seller has the right to retake the property, and that all money paid is to be retained, and that the title to the property sold does not pass until the entire payment has been made, is a "conditional sale," wherein the title of the property is reserved in the seller until final payment is made. Pease v. Teller Corp. 128 Pac. 981, 984, 22 Idaho, 807.

A contract made and to be performed in Pennsylvania for the sale and delivery of showcases, by which the seller retained title until the price and all costs representing the same had been paid, was a contract of "conditional sale," and not a bailment. In re G. & K. Trunk Co., 176 Fed. 1007, 1008.

Bankrupts, at the time of the filing of the petition against them, had been for more than 30 days in possession of machinery which had been shipped to them under contracts by which they agreed to pay for the same within one year from shipment, and which provided that a retention of the property after 30 days from date of shipment should constitute a trial and acceptance. Held, that such contracts constituted "conditional sales," and not "bailments," under the law of Pennsylvania, and the property, being subject to transfer by the purchasers or to seizure and sale by their creditors under such law, passed to their trustee in bankruptcy under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 70a (5). In re Burt, 155 Fed. 267, 268.

Machinery was delivered to a bankrupt under a contract which provided that he should pay certain varying sums at irregular intervals as rent for the same, and that on a final small payment he should be entitled to a bill of sale. There was no provision for the return of the machinery aside from one giving the privilege of retaking it on default in making any of the payments. Held, that under the law of Pennsylvania such contract was one of "conditional sale," and not of bailment, and that the property was assets of the bankrupt estate. In re Tice, 139 Fed. 52, 54.

Under a contract called a lease, one of the parties agreed to hire from the other for a definite period a piano, and to pay as security for the contract a certain sum each month, and to return the piano at the end of the period in as good condition as reasonable use would permit; and it was agreed that upon the failure to pay any installment of rent, or upon the removal of the property from his residence, the security money should be retained as damages for the breach, and the owner should have the right to take possession of the piano without demand or notice. It was further agreed that, if the installments of rent were paid as they fell due, the party paying the same should, while the lease continued in force, have the right to purchase the piano at an agreed price, all sums paid as security or as rent to be deducted from that price. Held a "conditional sale," and not a bailment for hire. Hamilton v. Hilands, 56 S. E. 929, 931, 144 N. C. 279, 12 Ann. Cas. 876 (citing Baldwin v. Van Wagner, 10 S. E. 716, 33 W. Va. 293; Kimball v. Post, 44 Wis. 471; Murch v. Wright, 46 Ill. 487, 95 Am. Dec. 455; Ott v. Sweatman, 81 Atl. 102, 166 Pa. 217; Puffer v. Lucas, 17 S. E. 174, 112 N. C. 377, 19 L. R. A. 682; Crinkley v. Egerton, 18 S. E. 669, 113 N. C. 444; Clark v. Hill, 23 S. E. 91, 117 N. C. 11, 53 Am. St. Rep. 574; Barrington v. Skinner, 23 S. E. 90, 117 N. C. 47; Manufacturing Co. v. Gray, 28 S. E. 257, 121 N. C. 168; Thomas v. Cooksey, 41 S. E. 2, 130 N. C. 148; Wilcox v. Cherry, 31 S. E. 369, 123 N. C. 79; Hervey v. Rhode Island Locomotive Works, 93 U. S. 684, 23 L. Ed. 1003; Cottrell v. Merchants' & Mechanics' Bank, 15 S. E. 944, 89 Ga. 508).

Defendant executed a consignment receipt for a ring, reciting that it had been consigned on memorandum by prosecutor, to be returned on demand, that the same had not been sold, and that the title thereto did not pass, that all risks were assumed by the consignee, and that agreements not expressed in the writing were not part of the contract. At the same time defendant and prosecutor signed an alleged "deposit agreement," obligating defendant to deposit with prosecutor $30 on the execution of the agreement, and certain sums on specified dates thereafter, all of which should become prosecutor's absolute property, and that, when $175 had been deposited, prosecutor would deliver to defendant for his own use one diamond ring; that, if defendant made default, prosecutor might deliver articles as near like the article to be delivered as possible, but reasonably worth the sums so deposited, and on delivery the agreement should be fulfilled. Held, that such agreements together constituted a "conditional sale" of the ring. People v. Gluck, 80 N. E. 1022, 1024, 188 N. Y. 167.

A contract between the furnisher of goods and the receiver, that the latter may sell them at such price as he chooses, and that he will account for the goods sold at agreed prices, and will bear the expenses of insurance, freight, storage, and handling, and will hold the merchandise unsold subject to the order from furnisher, is an agreement for bailment for sale, and not a "conditional sale," and is unaffected by the statute rendering unrecorded contracts for conditional sales voidable by creditors and purchasers. In re Columbus Buggy Co., 143 Fed. 859, 861, 74 C. C. A. 611.

To constitute a "conditional sale," within the terms of Code, § 2905, requiring the recording of any written instrument evidencing a conditional sale, there must be a delivery of possession to the purchaser, with the intention of passing immediate ownership, subject only to the reservation of title to the seller as security for the purchase money. Defendant, a sheriff, levied an attachment on property in the hands of F., and sold it. Plaintiff, claiming to have been the owner, had a written agreement with F., reciting that plaintiff agreed to buy eight teams, the property in question; that the teams were to be used by F. in railroad grading; that plaintiff should receive at each pay day one-half of what the teams earned for the month at a certain rate per team, less the cost of keeping, etc., that F. agreed to pay plaintiff one-half of the price of the teams before the completion of the grading, with interest, failing which plaintiff should receive compensation for the work done by the teams at the rate before mentioned; and that it was agreed that, in addition to the moneys paid plaintiff for the use of the teams, he should receive, on the completion of the work, one-half of the profits attributable to the use of the teams. Held, that F. was merely a bailee, with a right of purchase, which, the evidence showed, had not been exercised; and hence the attachment could not be justified under Code, § 2905, requiring the recording of conditional sales in order to affect third persons. Donnelly v. Mitchell, 93 N. W. 369, 371, 119 Iowa, 432 (citing Wright v. Barnard, 56 N. W. 424, 89 Iowa, 188; Gaar, Scott & Co. v. Nichols, 88 N. W. 382, 115 Iowa, 223; Davis v. Giddings, 46 N. W. 425, 30 Neb. 209).

Where goods were delivered to A. before he became bankrupt, under a written agreement expressly providing that the property was delivered to him as a bailee on hire and that if default in payment of any of the rents for the use and hire of the goods, wares and merchandise by the bailee were made, the bailor was authorized to repossess himself of the property, the transaction was a bailment, and not a conditional sale. In re Angeny, 151 Fed. 959, 960.

A contract providing that certain property should be held on consignment until sold by consignee with consignor's approval, that it should be invoiced to the consignee at a fixed price, and, while he could sell it at any price he saw fit, any overplus, after deducting expenses paid by him, should go to him as his compensation, and that the consignor could annul any sale and retake the property, and under which the consignee was not required to pay anything for the property, but was required merely to turn over certain of the proceeds of sales, the consignor having the right at any time to order the property returned, constituted a bailment for sale, and not a "conditional sale," within Rev. St. 1909, § 2889, making conditional sales fraudulent as to creditors, unless acknowledged and recorded. Packard Piano Co. v. Williams, 151 S. W. 211, 212, 167 Mo. App. 515.

Lease distinguished

A lease of property under an agreement that, on payment of a specified sum in installments, title shall pass to the lessee, amounts to a "conditional sale," valid as to third parties, as well as the parties to the transaction. Kidder v. Wittler-Corbin Machinery Co., 80 Pac. 301, 302, 38 Wash. 179.

A contract, though in the form of a lease, and called a lease, by which the vendor reserves title until final payment should be made, and the right of rescission in case the purchaser should fail to pay any installments of the so-called rent, is a "conditional sale." Unitype Co. v. Long, 143 Fed. 315, 317, 74 C. C. A. 453.

A contract, after reciting that the vendors had "rented" certain furniture, provided that the title should remain in the vendors until the purchase money was paid in specified installments, and on default in any payment the vendors reserved the right to take possession without legal process. There was further provision that all payments should be placed to the credit of the vendee as payments on the "lease," or any other goods for which he might owe the vendors on open account on any other "lease," and that the vendee was to have no title to the "lease" until his account should be settled in full. Held, that the contract was one of "conditional sale," entitling the vendors to the protection afforded by Code 1907, § 7342, making it a crime to remove or sell personal property to hinder or defraud any person who has a valid claim thereto, with knowledge of the existence of such claim. Steele v. State, 48 South. 673, 674, 159 Ala. 9.

The owner of land on which there were dumps of slag and smelter products entered into a contract, denominated a "lease," by which he purported to lease the land for a stated term, with the right to remove the dumps on payment of a series of notes maturing at intervals through a portion of the term. The contract provided, in effect, that removal of the dumps should proceed only in proportion as payments were made, that when all the dumps were removed the lease should terminate, and that on payment of all the notes on or before maturity the lessee should be entitled to a bill of sale of the dumps, with the right to remove the same within a specified term. It further provided that: "It is mutually agreed that all work on the said above described slag, slag dumps and materials, and smelter products shall be performed in a thoroughly workmanlike manner, and that any failure of the said party of the first part to do or keep any of the agreements herein, * * * or any failure to pay immediately when due any one or more of said 100 promissory notes, * * * shall work a forfeiture of all rights of the said party of the first part under this agreement, and the said party of the second part shall have the right * * * to declare each and every one and all of the said 100 promissory notes, or whatever number of the said notes may remain unpaid, * * * immediately due and payable, and * * * to collect the same, * * * and in case of forfeiture as aforesaid all work done and money expended by the said party of the first part shall inure to the party of the second part as liquidated damages, * * * and the said party * * * may thereupon * * * enter upon said premises and dispossess all persons occupying the same." Held, that such transaction was not a lease, but a "conditional sale" of the material in the dumps, which gave the owner alternative remedies for breach of the contract, and that, where he declared a forfeiture and took possession because of default in payment of notes, he could not also collect the notes maturing thereafter. Manson v. Dayton, 153 Fed. 259, 264, 82 O. C. A. 588.

A written instrument, denominated a "lease," acknowledging the recipt of $50, and providing for further payments of $10 per month, with interest, until a certain sum was paid, after which the leased personality was to become the property of the lessee, was a "conditional sale." Pringle v. Canfield, 104 N. W. 223, 19 S. D. 506.

Mortgage distinguished

The difference between a mortgage and a conditional sale lies in the fact that a mortgage is a security for a debt, while a "conditional sale" is a deed, accompanied by an agreement to resell on specified terms. Beldelman v. Koch, 85 N. E. 977, 978, 42 Ind. App. 423.

In determining whether a conveyance absolute on its face, with a written agreement to repurchase, signed by the parties, is a mortgage or a "conditional sale," reference must be had to the inquiry whether the relation of creditor and debtor continues to exist. If it does, it is a mortgage; otherwise, a "conditional sale." Goodbar & Co. v. Bloom, 96 S. W. 657, 662, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 434 (quoting and adopting rule as laid down in Alstin's Ex'r v. Cundiff, 52 Tex. 453).

Where there is no continuing debt, the execution of a deed with a simultaneous contract to reconvey upon the payment of certain sums of money by the grantor to the grantee within a specified time, the payment of which is optional with the grantee, is a "conditional sale," and not a mortgage. Fabrique v. Cherokee, etc., Coal Co., 77 Pac. 584, 585, 69 Kan. 733. (citing 2 Kent's Commentaries [14th Ed.] p. 163, note D).

Where plaintiff deeded land to defendant, her husband's creditor, under a separate agreement for a reconveyance on the payment of the amount of the debt, interest, etc., that plaintiff was not bound to pay the amount for which the reconveyance was to be had does not show conclusively that the transaction was a "conditional sale." If an instrument does not show clearly whether a mortgage or conditional sale was intended, equity will construe it as a mortgage, rather than a "conditional sale." White v. Redenbaugh, 82 N. E. 110, 111, 41 Ind. App. 580.

Under the law of Utah a contract whereby one party sells the other personality on condition that no title shall pass until full payment, the purchaser being given possession, the seller having the right to retake the property for default of payments, and the obligation to pay being absolute, is a "conditional sale," and not a mortgage. Studebaker Bros. Co. v. Mau, 80 Pac. 151, 153, 13 Wyo. 358, 110 Am. St. Rep. 1001.

Notes reciting that they are given to secure payment for certain described lands, and deeds reciting that the land is secured by the notes of the grantee (describing them) and that if the notes are not paid at maturity the deeds are to be null and void, constitute mortgages, and not "conditional sales." Land v. May, 84 S. W. 489, 490, 73 Ark. 415 (citing Gibson v. Martin, 38 Ark. 207; Stryker v. Hershey, 38 Ark. 264; Mitchell v. Wade, 39 Ark. 377; Hershey v. Luce, 19 S. W. 963, 20 S. W. 6, 56 Ark. 320).

A mortgage is distinguished from a "conditional sale" by the continued existence of a debt or liability between the parties, and where the conveyance is in reality intended as security, and the grantor is regarded as still liable for it, the transaction is a mortgage, whatever the language and the stipulations of the instrument; but, if no relation of debtor and creditor thereafter subsists, the transaction is a mere conditional sale. American Mortgage Co. v. Williams (Ark.) 145 S. W. 234, 238.

Where a purchaser of a piano agreed to pay $10 down and $6 a month, and executed notes representing the deferred payments and a chattel mortgage to secure the same, and thereafter the piano was delivered, there was not a contract of "conditional sale" within Rev. St. 1906, §§ 4155—2, 4155—3, defining conditional sales, and providing that the title shall remain in the vendor until the price has been paid and for deposit of a copy of the contract with certain officers. Chica- go Cottage Organ Co. v. Crambert, 84 N. E. 788, 789, 78 Ohio St. 149.

Where possession is given on a sale of chattels, but there is a verbal reservation of title to secure the purchase money, it is a chattel mortgage, and not a "conditional sale," in view of Rev. St. 1895, art. 3327, providing that all reservations of title to chattels as security for the purchase money thereof shall be held to be chattel mortgages, and shall, when possession is delivered to the vendee, be void as to creditors and bona fide purchasers, unless such reservations be in writing and registered, as required of chattel mortgages, for it clearly implies that there may have been lawful contracts which reserve the title, although not in writing, and while, without the statute, the agreement in question would have retained the title until the purchase money was paid, the effect of the statute was to pass the title and to degrade the contract from a "conditional sale" to a chattel mortgage. Crews v. Harlan, 87 S. W. 856, 859, 99 Tex. 93, 13 Ann. Cas. 863.

Intervener contracted in writing to deliver certain goods to the bankrupts prior to their bankruptcy, to be sold by them in the usual course of their business, but that the title and right of possession of all such goods and all the proceeds of sales thereof, whether in cash or in book accounts, should be vested and remain in intervener until the purchase price of the goods had been fully paid to it; that, except for the right to resell the goods in the ordinary course of business, the bankrupts should not remove any from the city in which they were doing business; and that they should keep the goods insured for intervener's benefit. Held, that the bankrupts not only held such goods for intervener, but were bound to account for and pay over the proceeds of goods sold as collected, and that the contract was therefore a "conditional sale," and not a chattel mortgage. In re E. M. Newton & Co., 153 Fed. 841, 842, 83 C. C. A. 23.

A contract binding a buyer to buy and unconditionally pay the price of a chattel, and providing that the seller shall retain title as security for the price, and on default he may take possession, is a conditional sale, and not a chattel mortgage; the term "conditional sale" applying to transactions where, by the terms of the contract, the possession of the goods is delivered to the buyer, but the property is to remain in the seller until payment of the price, though the buyer is obligated absolutely to pay the price. McDaniel v. Chlaramonte, 122 Pac. 33, 35, 61 Or. 403.

"In determining whether a conveyance, absolute on its face, with a written agreement to repurchase, signed by the parties, is a 'mortgage' or a 'conditional sale,' reference must be had to the inquiry whether the relation of creditor and debtor continues to exist. If it does, it is a mortgage; otherwise, a conditional sale." Rotan Grocery Co. v. Turner, 102 S. W. 932, 933, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 534 (quoting and adopting definition in Alstin v. Cundiff, 52 Tex. 453).

While parties competent to contract can agree upon terms that will amount to a conditional sale, where a deed is intended to secure a debt, and the relation of debtor and creditor exists between the parties, the legal inference is that a mortgage and not a "conditional sale" was intended; courts being inclined in doubtful cases to treat a transaction as a mortgage rather than a conditional sale. Tucker v. Witherbee, 113 S. W. 123, 124, 130 Ky. 269.

The purchase price of an article may be secured either by a condition in the contract, by which the title is reserved in the vendor until the price is paid, or by a chattel "mortgage" given back to the vendor by the purchaser. While the object to be accomplished by either form of security is substantially the same, the rights of the parties under the two forms of security are materially different, and it is frequently of importance to determine whether the paper constitutes a "conditional sale" or a "mortgage." Tweedle v. Clarke, 99 N. Y. Supp. 856, 858, 114 App. Div. 296.

Plaintiff, having purchased lands at judicial sale, and being unable to pay his bid, obtained the money from defendant, to whom the deed was made, and an agreement between the parties recited that the deed was made to defendant to secure payment of the money advanced by him on or before a specified date. It was agreed that defendant would convey any portion of the land on order of plaintiff, on payment to defendant of the amount paid for the land, and that, if plaintiff should fail to pay the money advanced when due, defendant should retain the land remaining unsold, and parcels of the land were sold and the purchase price paid to defendant. Held, that the transaction was not a "conditional sale" to defendant, so as to enable him to hold all the unsold land for the balance of his advances, but was in effect a mortgage. Guenther v. Wiadom (Ky.) 84 S. W. 771, 772.

Prior to the execution of an absolute deed by defendant to plaintiff, defendant owed plaintiff $1,800. The deed was drawn by plaintiff's attorney pursuant to instructions, and was submitted to plaintiff for approval before execution, reciting an absolute sale of the property for a cash consideration of $1,000. As a part of the same transaction defendant executed to plaintiff a note for $800, after which plaintiff insured the property as its own and executed a separate instrument, by which it agreed to reconvey the property to defendants on repayment of the consideration and interest, within a specified time. Held, that in view of the principles laid down in 3 Pom. Eq. § 1195, and Jones, Mort. §§ 258, 263, 265, 267, and cases in Texas and other states according therewith, the transaction amounted to a "conditional sale," and not a mortgage. Goodbar & Co. v. Bloom, 96 S. W. 657, 661, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 434.

Where R. deeds property to F., and by contemporaneous agreement it is provided that, on payment to F. by R. of a certain sum by a certain day, F. will reconvey the property, and time is expressly made of the essence of the contract, and it is declared that, in default of the payment on or before such time, the agreement shall be null and void, and R. does not promise or bind himself to make the payments, there is a "conditional sale," not a mortgage. Smyth v. Reed, 78 Pac. 478, 479, 28 Utah, 262.

Payment of price

The retention of title by the seller to secure the purchase money until the goods are resold by the buyer in the usual course of trade constitutes a "conditional sale." In re Priegle Paint Co., 175 Fed. 586, 587.

"Conditional sale" of personal property is a sale under an agreement between the vendor and vendee that the title in the property should remain in the vendor in the nature of a lien until the purchase money should be paid. John Deere Plow Co. v. McDavid, 137 Fed. 802, 70 C. C. A. 422.

A sale with title reserved until the price is paid, accompanied by possession by the buyer, is a "conditional sale" with a reservation of title as security for the price, and when the price is paid the condition is extinguished. Hunter v. Crook, 47 South. 430, 431, 93 Miss. 812.

There was a "conditional sale" where defendant hired horses to plaintiff with the understanding that, if a note given for their use should be paid when due, the horses should become plaintiff's. Staunton v. Smith (Del.) 65 Atl. 593, 594, 6 Pennewill, 193.

Where a supplemental agreement attached to a note given for the price of certain live stock, recited that the stock was to be the property of the seller until the note was paid, the sale was a "conditional sale." Townsend v. Melvin (Del.) 63 Atl. 330, 331, 5 Pennewill, 495.

A contract note for a specific amount, providing for its payment in certain weekly installments and given for the price of personal property described therein, reserving the title to the property in the seller until fully paid for, and authorizing the seller, in case of default, to take possession of the property and indorse the value thereof on the note, or resell the same and indorse the proceeds on the note, and in either case to charge the balance due thereon to the maker, constituted a "conditional sale," valid not only between the parties thereto, but, in the absence of fraud as to third parties, and though not recorded, it gave the seller a right to the possession of the property on default of payment, superior to a lien of a mortgage made by the purchaser. Freed Furniture & Carpet Co. v. Sorensen, 79 Pac. 564, 566, 28 Utah, 419, 107 Am. St. Rep. 731, 3 Ann. Cas. 634.

A "conditional sale" is a sale and delivery of personal property with an express stipulation that the title is to remain in the vendor until payment of the price. If the condition of payment is not fully complied with, or is not waived, the vendor's rights become perfect and absolute, and he may follow the property into the hands of third persons, except as provided by Code 1896, § 1017, or he may recover its full value without deduction for partial payments, since such payments are forfeited by the breach. Riley v. Dillon & Pennell, 41 South. 768, 148 Ala. 283 (citing Sumner v. Woods, 67 Ala. 142, 42 Am. Rep. 104; Fields v. Williams, 8 South. 808, 90 Ala. 502; Benj. Sales [American Notes, 7th Ed.] p. 301; Davis v. Millings, 37 South. 737, 141 Ala. 380).

A contract by the United States with a shipbuilding company, whereby all parts of machinery paid for by the United States under a specified system of partial payments became thereby the sole property of the United States, is not a contract of "conditional sale," required to be recorded by Code Va. 1904, § 2462. William R. Trigg Co. v. Bucyrus Co., 51 S. E. 174, 176, 104 Va. 79.

A contract reciting that a party desired to have the use of the adverse party's building and saloon fixtures, to become the owner of the fixtures when paid for, and providing that the party could use the premises for a specified term, and should make specified monthly payments until the total payments, after deducting monthly ground rent, should equal the cost of the building, fixtures, etc., and 8 per cent. per annum interest thereon, when the party should be deemed the owner of the fixtures, thereafter paying the adverse party a specified sum monthly until the expiration of the ground lease, etc., evidenced a "conditional sale" of the fixtures. Coors v. Reagan, 96 Pac. 966, 967, 44 Colo. 126.

A "conditional sale" is one in which the vesting of the title in the purchaser is subject to a condition precedent, or in which its reversion in the seller is subject to a failure of the buyer to comply with a condition subsequent. An agreement that the purchaser will buy and pay for merchandise, that he may sell it in the regular course of his business, but that the proceeds shall be applied as a credit or as collateral security to the debt of the vendee at the option of the vendor, and that the latter will sell and deliver the goods on condition that the title to them shall remain in him until the notes and accounts of the vendee are paid in cash, is a valid contract of conditional sale. In re Dunlop, 156 Fed. 545, 548, 86 C. C. A. 485.

A contract containing a clause reserving the title and ownership of a horse until full payment therefor was made was a "conditional sale," as the term is ordinarily understood, and for the purpose of the sale alone, the absolute title would not pass thereunder until the conditions subsequent thereto have been performed. There is a conflict in the authorities as to whether there can be a recovery for property sold under such condition, when, without the fault of the purchaser, the property is destroyed before the purchase price is due. On death of a stallion sold under agreement for payment from service fees, the loss fell on the vendor. Swaney v. Alstott, 111 N. W. 406, 407, 134 Iowa, 63, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1052.

A contract for the sale of personal property, which expressly stipulates that title shall remain in the seller until the entire purchase money is paid, that upon final payment "then and in that case" the property "shall become the property of said purchaser," and that time is of the essence of the contract, and in case of failure to pay the purchase money the seller may take possession of the property, which shall be turned over to him peaceably and without legal process, is a contract for a "conditional sale," in which title does not pass to the purchaser until its terms are complied with, in default of which the property is subject to recovery by the seller. Page v. Urick, 72 Pac. 454, 455, 31 Wash. 601, 96 Am. St. Rep. 924.

A contract whereby one party agrees to furnish certain machinery, title to remain in him until notes for the price are paid, and providing that, if either note is not paid at maturity, then the entire debt to become due, and that it shall be lawful in such case to take possession of the machinery, but that, if the notes are paid, then title shall vest in the other party, constitutes a "conditional sale." Whitlock v. Auburn Lumber Co., 58 S. E. 909, 910, 145 N. C. 120, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1214, 122 Am. St. Rep. 446.

A sale is "absolute" which has been completed, while a "conditional sale" is one which takes effect on the performance of a condition, though an absolute sale may be subject to a condition subsequent, as where there is complete change of title subject to be defeated by the nonperformance of some annexed condition; the true criterion for determining whether a sale is absolute or conditional being the intent of the parties, to be discovered from their express declarations, and, where this is not possible, from all circumstances of the case, as well as from their declarations, if any. Whitsett v. Carney (Tex.) 124 S. W. 443, 445.

Defendant executed a consignment receipt for a ring, reciting that it had been consigned on memorandum by prosecutor, to be returned on demand; that the same had not been sold, and that the title thereto did not pass; that all risks were assumed by the consignee; and that agreements not expressed in the writing were not part of the contract. At the same time defendant and prosecutor signed an alleged "deposit agreement," obligating defendant to deposit with prosecutor $30 on the execution of the agreement, and certain sums on specified dates thereafter, all of which should become prosecutor's absolute property, and that, when $175 had been deposited, prosecutor would deliver to defendant for his own use one diamond ring; that, if defendant made default, prosecutor might deliver articles as near like the article to be delivered, as possible, but reasonably worth the sums so deposited, and on delivery the agreement should be fulfilled. Held, that such agreements together constituted a "conditional sale" of the ring. People v. Gluck, 80 N. E. 1022, 1024, 188 N. Y. 167.

CONDITIONALLY PRIVILEGED

A defamatory publication which is "conditionally privileged" occupies a middle ground; that is, the publication is privileged, provided it was actuated by a sense of duty growing out of the action, and provided it was not malicious. When the court finds that the publication is conditionally privileged, the effect of the holding is to cast upon the plaintiff the burden of proving that malice prompted the act; not merely malice which arises by implication of law, but malice in fact, otherwise denominated "actual malice." Cranfill v. Hayden, 80 S. W. 609, 613, 97 Tex. 544.

Privileged occasions are divided into two classes, those known as "absolutely privileged" and those "conditionally privileged." Words spoken upon an occasion absolutely privileged, though spoken falsely, knowingly, and with express malice, impose no liability for damages in an action for slander or libel, while, on the other hand, words spoken upon an occasion only "conditionally privileged" impose such liability if spoken maliciously, or not in good faith; the difference between the two being that in the former case the freedom from liability is absolute and without condition, while in the latter case it is made to depend upon the absence of express malice. Sebree v. Thompson, 103 S. W. 374, 375, 126 Ky. 223.

A "conditionally privileged communication" is one made on an occasion which furnishes a prima facie legal excuse for the making of it, and which is privileged, unless some additional fact is shown which alters the character of the action, so as to prevent its furnishing a legal excuse. Richardson v.

CONDONE—CONDONATION

See, also, Forgiveness.

To "condone," as applied to grounds for divorce, is to forgive. Bliss v. Bliss, 142 S. W. 1081, 1082, 161 Mo. App. 70.

"Condonation" is forgiveness for the past upon condition that the wrongs shall not be repeated, and the repetition of the offense revives the wrong condoned; and condonation of extreme cruelty may be avoided by abusive language and the use of opprobrious epithets. Anderson v. Anderson, 131 N. W. 907, 908, 89 Neb. 570, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1.

"Condonation," in the law on divorce, is a conditional forgiveness of all antecedent acts of cruelty, and such acts as may have been condoned will not be revived, except by fresh acts of cruelty. Brown v. Brown, 58 S. E. 825, 129 Ga. 246.

"Condonation" has been defined to be the forgiveness, either expressed or implied, by a husband of his wife, or by a wife of her husband, for a breach of marital duty, with an implied condition that the offense shall not be repeated. Davis v. Davis, 68 S. E. 594, 134 Ga. 804, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 73, 20 Ann. Cas. 20.

If, after an offense has been committed, and the offended party has become possessed of knowledge of the offense and of the means of proving it, the offended party elects to forego a remedy which the law affords, he or she is said to have "condoned the offense." Rogers v. Rogers, 58 Atl. 822, 824, 67 N. J. Eq. 534.

"Condonation" is the forgiveness of the offense followed in fact by a reconciliation, in which the wife is reinstated to such conjugal cohabitation as may be adapted to the circumstances of the parties. Taber v. Taber (N. J.) 66 Atl. 1082, 1084.

A promise of forgiveness for past wrongs is not sufficient to constitute "condonation." It must be followed by a restoration of the offending party to all marital rights. Anderson v. Anderson, 131 N. W. 907, 908, 89 Neb. 570, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1.

"Condonation" in the law of divorce means the blotting out of the offense imputed, so as to restore the offending party to the same position he or she occupied before the offense was committed. Talley v. Talley, 64 Atl. 523, 524, 215 Pa. 281.

"Condonation" amounts to forgiveness on condition of subsequent proper conduct on the part of the other party, and, if the condition is not kept, the rights of the injured party to a divorce are restored. Viertel v. Viertel, 99 S. W. 759, 763, 123 Mo. App. 63.

"Condonation" by one spouse of the misconduct of the other is but forgiveness on condition of subsequent right conduct, and, where the condition is broken, the rights of the injured party are restored. Dimmitt v. Dimmitt, 150 S. W. 1107, 1111, 167 Mo. App. 94.

Civ. Code, § 115, defines "condonation" as the conditional forgiveness of a matrimonial offense constituting a cause of divorce, and section 116 requires knowledge on the part of the condoner of the facts constituting the cause of divorce. Held, that though defendant's physical condition, known to plaintiff long before she ceased to cohabit with him as his wife, was such as would ordinarily be taken as proof of unfaithfulness, yet, where she testified that she believed his representations that his condition was not so occasioned, it was not error, in an action for divorce, to find that the offense had not been condoned; there being some testimony that, after being convinced of the cause of defendant's condition, she never thereafter cohabited with him. Andros v. Andros, 82 Pac. 90, 1 Cal. App. 309.

While a decree dismissing a wife's petition for separate maintenance on the ground of her condonation of the marital wrongs complained of is conclusive against her as to her marital rights, "condonation" in its proper legal sense, referring only to marital rights as such, yet such condonation is only evidence tending to show ratification by her of a deed executed to her husband, through a third person, procured by fraud and duress; and, unless she has by such acts ratified the deed, she may sue to set it aside, unless barred by estoppel or laches. Hoag v. Hoag, 96 N. E. 49, 50, 210 Mass. 94, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 329.

Under Civ. Code § 102, providing that if a husband or wife desert the other, and, before expiration of the statutory period required to make the desertion ground for divorce, returns and offers in good faith to fulfill the marriage contract, and solicits condonation, the desertion is cured, a finding to show cure of desertion must show not only a return, but, in connection therewith, the seeking of "condonation." Kusel v. Kusel, 81 Pac. 297, 147 Cal. 52.

Agreement to separate

An agreement by married persons to live separate and apart, unless explained, operated as a "condonation" of the offense of abandonment. Lemmert v. Lemmert, 63 Atl. 380, 382, 103 Md. 57.

Cohabitation

"Condonation of marital injury" is a voluntary pardon and the remission of a known wrong by a husband to his wife, or vice versa, which would entitle the injured party to a divorce, and the waiver of a right to maintain an action for divorce for such cause, subject to the condition that the misconduct will not be repeated, and in most cases condonation will be presumed from proof of cohabitation subsequent to the knowledge of the injury. Wolverton v. Wolverton, 71 N. E. 123, 126, 163 Ind. 26.

"Condonation" is "the remission by one of the named parties of an offense which he knows the other has committed against the marriage, on the condition of being continually afterward treated by the other with conjugal kindness. All condonation, especially the implied, is upon the condition, both that the offense shall not be repeated and likewise that continually afterwards the party forgiven shall treat the other with conjugal kindness, whereupon a breach of the condition revives the original right of divorce." Hence condonation does not apply where the offense is a continuing one. Hooe v. Hooe, 92 S. W. 817, 318, 122 Ky. 590, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 729, 13 Ann. Cas. 214 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Bishop, Mar., Div. & Sep. §§ 269, 306).

"'Condonation' is based on repentance, and is no defense where the subsequent conduct of the forgiven one negatives the idea of repentance; nor is it necessary, in order to overcome a 'condonation,' to produce 'clear proof of an actual fact of subsequent adultery.' Bish. on M. & D. 373. 'Condonation' is not absolute remission. Its effectiveness depends upon reformation of conduct, and may be destroyed by evidence tending 'to show the revival of the old intent, or to rebut the presumption of a change of intent, growing out of the condonation.' Bish. on M. & D. 878. Where parties between whom an adulterous intercourse has been once established are found living together under circumstances which would induce every unprejudiced mind to conclude their inclinations had not changed, the fair presumption is that the illicit intercourse is still continued." Totten v. Totten, 60 Atl. 1095, 1096 (citing Smith v. Smith [N. Y.] 4 Paige, 432, 437, 27 Am. Dec. 75).

"Condonation" is always conditional on the fact that the party forgiven will thereafter abstain from the commission of like offenses. If they are afterwards committed, the original wrong is revived, and may be counted upon as cause for divorce. Where a husband, after having been unduly intimate with another woman, whom he brought into his home, and, after having used unseemly language toward his wife, asked and received her forgiveness, but thereafter was even more attentive to the other woman than before, and they made open confession of their love to strangers, the wife's forgiveness did not amount to condonation of the husband's offense. Craig v. Craig, 105 N. W. 446, 448, 129 Iowa, 192, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 669.

Knowledge of facts

"Condonation" is the forgiveness of one of the married parties of an offense which he knows the other has committed against the marriage. There can be no condonation without knowledge. Laycock v. Laycock, 98 Pac. 487, 489, 52 Or. 610.

Civ. Code, § 164, provides that, to constitute condonation which will defeat a right to a divorce, the knowledge on the part of the injured party of the facts constituting the cause of divorce, reconciliation, and remission of the offense by the injured party, and restoration of the offending party to all marital rights, are required. Where plaintiff was informed of the commission of adultery by his wife, and thereafter continued to live and cohabit with her, there was a "condonation" under this section. Bordeaux v. Bordeaux, 75 Pac. 524, 527, 30 Mont. 36.

"Condonation" is not an absolute term, applicable alike to all circumstances, and its application may vary as the different offenses alleged to have been condoned may vary. Condonation is upon the implied condition that the offense shall not be repeated, and that plaintiff thereafter shall be treated with conjugal kindness; and hence where a defendant was guilty of subsequent acts of cruelty, after other acts had been condoned, the condonation was not a bar to plaintiff's right to a divorce. Harding v. Harding, 85 Pac. 423, 424, 36 Colo. 106.

Of action

The word "conduct," as used with reference to the "conduct" of an action, means the preparation and management of litigation. Iaquinto v. Bauer, 93 N. Y. Supp. 388, 393, 104 App. Div. 56.

Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. Okl. 1903, § 5210, enacted when the jury for the trial of special proceedings in the district court consisted of 12 men, providing that as to a special proceeding for prohibition, etc., the trial must be by jury and "conducted in all respects in the same manner as the trial of an indictment for a misdemeanor," was intended thereby to require that in the introduction of evidence as to the degree of proof required and in the giving of instructions to the jury the rules of law applicable to a trial upon an indictment for a misdemeanor should apply, and not that such proceeding should be tried by a jury of 6 men, as in cases of misdemeanor. Maben v. Rosser, 103 Pac. 674, 678, 679, 24 Okl. 588.

A foreign railroad corporation operating a line of railroad in the state is a corporation "conducting a business in the state." State v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 128 S. W. 555, 556, 95 Ark. 114.

Where a food company produces such a quantity of canned goods that the major part of them must be disposed of outside the state, a deposit of about one-tenth of its goods in warehouses outside the state and the use of the warehouse receipts as collateral to its commercial paper is a part of the "conduct of its ordinary business," within a provision in a mortgage of the goods, that the company may "conduct its ordinary business, and in so doing dispose of any of the foregoing property." Anderson v. Anderson Food Co., 57 Atl. 489, 495, 66 N. J. Eq. 209.

A receiver in bankruptcy who took possession of, advertised, and sold the property of the bankrupt, consisting of a stock of merchandise, was more than a mere custodian, and entitled to compensation accordingly under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, § 48d, as added by Act June 25, 1910, c. 412, § 9, but where he kept the store open only during the remainder of the day on which he took possession, while a special sale then in progress was continued by the employees of the bankrupt, after which he closed the store, and sold the stock in bulk, he did not "conduct the business" of the bankrupt in such sense as to entitle him to additional compensation under subdivision "e" of said section. In re Charles Knosher & Co., 197 Fed. 136, 141, 116 C. C. A. 560.

Of officer

"The offense of 'conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman' is not the same offense as conspiracy to defraud, or the causing of false and fraudulent claims to be made, although to be guilty of the latter involves being guilty of the former." Carter v. McClaughry, 22 Sup. Ct. 181, 193, 183 U. S. 395, 46 L. Ed. 236.

The expression "conduct unbecoming an officer," when applied to a ground for the removal from office of a policeman, is elastic, and its meaning depends on individual conceptions of what belongs to the office of policeman, and the act of a policeman in stating, while on trial on a former charge of having failed to pay an indebtedness to a third person, that the latter was a liar, made by the policeman while the third person was testifying, was not such conduct as would justify the removal of the policeman from office. People ex rel. Dougan v. Greene, 89 N. Y. Supp. 1067, 1068, 97 App. Div. 404.

CONDUCTING TRANSPORTATION

The term "conducting transportation" is used to distinguish that class of operating expenses of a railroad company which is neither maintenance of way and structures, maintenance of equipment, nor general expenses. Southern Pac. Co. v. Bartine, 170 Fed. 725, 752.

CONDUCTOR

See Given by the Conductor.

The terms "conductor" and "man in charge of the train" should be treated as synonymous. Council v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 100 S. W. 57, 59, 123 Mo. App. 432.

"The 'conductor' of a railway train is the master of the train in the same sense in which the captain of a ship at sea is master of the ship. With respect to those measures which are necessary for the safety of the persons on board the train, he wields the whole power of the railway company, except in so far as those powers have been specially committed to the engineer or to other servants. The better view, therefore, ascribes to him the status and authority of a vice principal of the railway company, so as to render it liable for his negligence resulting in injury to its subordinate servants upon the same train." Tabor v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 109 S. W. 764, 768, 210 Mo. 385, 124 Am. St. Rep. 728 (quoting and adopting definition in Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 5 Sup. Ct. 184, 28 L. Ed. 787).

The words "conductor" and "manager," used in Ky. St. §§ 795-800, requiring segregation of white and negro passengers, and requiring the conductor or manager to see that the statute is obeyed, mean the same person, except where one not designated as conductor is in charge of a train. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Renfro's Adm'r, 135 S. W. 266, 268, 142 Ky. 590, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 133.

A "conductor" of a train is the superior in authority and grade in every train crew, and has charge of the train and its operations. All the other members of the crew are under his control and subject to his orders, which they must obey. He is the representative of the company, is vested with all its authority over the train and its crew, and charged with all the duties and responsibilities which the company owes to its employes. He is vice principal of the company, and it is liable for his negligence when acting in his official capacity. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Baldwin, 82 S. W. 487, 488, 113 Tenn. 409, 67 L. R. A. 340, 3 Ann. Cas. 916.

The word "conductor," in Laws Mont. 1903, c. 83, making every railway corporation liable for damages sustained by an employe caused by the negligence of any train dispatcher, telegraph operator, superintendent, master mechanic, conductor, engineer, or any other employe who has superintendence of any stationary or hand signal, cannot be applied to the foreman of a section gang or a bridge crew, and the word cannot be applied to any other than one who manages a train. Reinke v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 145 Fed. 988, 990.

CONFECTIONERY

So-called dragees, small round bodies with a silver coating, which are composed of sugar and starch, and are used by bakers for decorating cakes, and to some extent by confectioners, are not "sugar candy" or "confectionery," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule E, par. 212, but are dutiable as articles in part of silver under Schedule C, par. 193. La Manna, Azema & Farnan v. United States, 154 Fed. 955, 956 (citing Seeberger v. Schlesinger, 14 Sup. Ct. 729, 152 U. S. 581, 587, 38 L. Ed. 560).

Sweet crackers, known as "wafers and biscuits," in which the proportion of the sweetened centers to the pastry envelopes, is large, but in which flour is used to a substantial extent, are not dutiable either directly or by similitude as "confectionery," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule E, par. 212. United States v. Thomas Meadows & Co., 154 Fed. 1005, 83 C. C. A. 297.

The term "confits" in paragraph 263, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, is practically synonymous with "confections," and includes boiled marrons (chestnuts) preserved in syrup. Schall & Co. v. United States, 154 Fed. 1005, 83 C. C. A. 329.

CONFER TITLE OF NOBILITY.

To "confer a title of nobility" is to nominate to an order of persons to whom privileges are granted at the expense of the rest of the people. It is not necessarily hereditary, and the objection to it arises more from the privileges supposed to be attached than to the otherwise empty title or order. Horst v. Moses, 48 Ala. 129, 142.

CONFESSION

See Express Confession; Extrajudicial Confessions; Judgment by Confession; Judicial Confession; Voluntary Confession.

As acknowledgment of guilt

"A 'confession,' in its legal sense, means an acknowledgment of guilt." Cairo, V. & O. R. Co. v. People, 80 N. E. 1065, 226 Ill. 575.

A statement freely and voluntarily made to defendant, admitting participation in the main facts essential to constitute the crime for which he is being tried, may properly be referred to by the court as a "confession." Fouse v. State, 119 N. W. 478, 479, 83 Neb. 258.

A "confession" is a voluntary statement, made by a person charged with the commission of a crime, wherein he acknowledges himself to be guilty of the offense charged. Weaver v. State, 69 S. E. 488, 490, 135 Ga. 817.

A "confession" is an acknowledgment of guilt. It is a voluntary admission or declaration by a person of his agency or participation in a crime. It is an acknowledgment of guilt, and not of facts criminating in their nature. Johnson v. People, 64 N. E. 286, 287, 197 Ill. 48 (citing 1 Greenl. Ev. § 170).

A "confession" by accused may be a naked statement that he is guilty of a crime, or it may be a full statement of the circumstances of the commission, including his part in it. State v. Brinkley, 105 Pac. 708, 55 Or. 134.

"A 'confession,' in criminal law, is the voluntary declaration, made by a person who has committed a crime or misdemeanor to another of the agency or participation he had in the same." People v. Stokes, 89 Pac. 997, 999, 5 Cal. App. 205 (quoting the definition in People v. Strong, 30 Cal. 151).

A "confession" is criminative evidence, like the facts that other witnesses testify about, and it is not proper for the court to single out a confession, except for the purposes of submitting any issue as to whether proper warning was given accused before he made the confession. Jordan v. State, 101 S. W. 247, 51 Tex. Or. R. 145.

Admissions or declarations distinguished

A "confession" is a voluntary admission of guilt, and an admission, as applied to criminal cases, is an avowal of a fact or circumstance only tending to prove the offense charged, and not amounting to a confession. Riley v. State, 57 S. E. 1031, 1032, 1 Ga. App. 651.

A "confession" is one species of admission, namely, an admission consisting of a direct assertion by the accused of the main fact charged against him. "Admissions" are statements, assertions in words, and conduct cannot of itself be treated as an admission. Admissions are acts, and not assertions, and their use in evidence is a circumstantial one by way of inference from the conduct to the mental state beneath it, and from that to some ulterior fact. Burnett v. State, 124 N. W. 927, 928, 86 Neb. 11.

A "confession" is an acknowledgment of the criminal act or of the facts constituting the crime. Statements of facts and circumstances that do not in effect or by inference admit a crime's commission do not in general constitute a confession. Daniels v. State, 48 South. 747, 748, 57 Fla. 1.

What are called "confessions" in civil actions, in criminal law are called "admissions." The terms are synonymous under the rule of evidence that silence, when the accused is under no restraint, and at full liberty to speak, may sometimes be regarded as a tacit admission. Merrilweather v. Commonwealth, 82 S. W. 592, 596, 118 Ky. 870, 4 Ann. Cas. 1039.

A "confession" is a voluntary admission of guilt, as distinguished from an admission, which, as applied to criminal cases, is the statement by defendant of a fact pertinent to the issues and tending, in connection with proof of other facts or circumstances, to prove the guilt of accused, but which is of itself insufficient to authorize conviction. The nearer an admission approaches the completeness of a plenary confession of guilt without attaining thereto, the more likely is any reference in the charge to the subject of confession to confuse the jury and harm the defendant. Ransom v. State, 59 S. E. 101, 102, 2 Ga. App. 826.

A confession is a person's admission or declaration of his agency or participation in a crime, and is restricted to admissions of guilt. The term "confession" is restricted to acknowledgment of guilt, and is not a mere equivalent of words or statements. A statement which admits the commission of an act, but which also gives legal excuse or justification, is not a confession. Owens v. State, 48 S. E. 21, 22, 23, 120 Ga. 296 (citing People v. Parton, 49 Cal. 632, 637; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 170; Davis v. State, 39 S. E. 906, 114 Ga. 104; Simmons v. State, 42 S. E. 779, 116 Ga. 583).

A confession is a voluntary acknowledgment of a person charged with a commission of crime that he is guilty of the offense. It is a voluntary declaration by a person charged with a crime of his agency or participation in the crime. It is not equivalent to statements, declarations, or admissions of facts criminalizing in their nature or tending to prove guilt. It is limited in its meaning to the criminal act, and is an acknowledgment or admission of participation in it. Offers by a person arrested for forging a check to settle the matter by paying the amount of the check, or a greater sum, were not confessions, so as to authorize an instruction on the subject of confessions, in a prosecution for the crime. Michaels v. People, 70 N. E. 747, 748, 208 Ill. 603 (citing 8 Cyc. p. 562; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 170; Johnson v. People, 64 N. E. 286, 197 Ill. 48).

"A 'confession' is a voluntary admission or declaration by a person of his agency of participation in a crime." When a person only admits certain facts, from which the jury may or may not infer guilt, there is no "confession," and where in a prosecution for murder there was evidence that defendant, when informed that he had been arrested, stated that if deceased had treated his informant as he had treated defendant, informant would have wanted to kill him, it was prejudicial error to instruct that confessions are satisfactory and effectual proofs of guilt, as the evidence did not show a confession, but merely an inculpatory statement. Shelton v. State, 42 South. 30, 32, 144 Ala. 106 (citing People v. Parton, 49 Cal. 633).

"A 'confession' in a legal sense is restricted to an acknowledgment of guilt made by a person after an offense has been committed, and does not apply to a mere statement or declaration of an independent fact from which such guilt can be inferred. Statements and declarations by a defendant in a criminal action, in denial of guilt, while a witness before a grand jury, are not confessions within the rule requiring them first to be shown to have been made voluntarily before they are competent evidence against him. State v. Campbell, 85 Pac. 784, 788, 73 Kan. 688, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 533, 9 Ann. Cas. 1203 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Reinhart, 38 Pac. 822, 26 Or. 466).

A "confession" is a voluntary statement, made by a person charged with the commission of a crime or misdemeanor, communicated to another person, wherein he acknowledges himself to be guilty of the offense charged, and discloses the circumstances of the act, or the share and participation which he had in it. In a prosecution for burglary, statements made by defendant to police officers with reference to his possession of certain of the stolen property before he had been charged with any offense, and without any threats or inducements on the part of the officers, were admissible as admissions. State v. Royce, 80 Pac. 268, 270, 38 Wash. 8, 111, 3 Ann. Cas. 351 (quoting and adopting 8 Cyc. p. 562).

Where accused after his arrest was questioned in the presence of the sheriff and constable and others, and admitted his implication in an affray in which he shot and wounded complainant, but claimed that he acted only in self-defense and used his revolver as a club only, the discharge being accidental, and that after complainant had knocked him off a chair into a bedroom complainant's wife joined in the assault, it was error for the court to refer to such admissions as a "confession" of guilt. People v. Clamadija, 132 N. W. 489, 491, 167 Mich. 210.

Pen. Code, § 647, subd. 4, provides that every person known to be a confidence operator, either by his own confession, or having been convicted of such offense, and having no visible means of support when found loitering around certain public places, shall be deemed a vagrant. Held, that the word "confession" as so used had reference to an admission or declaration as to the party's status as distinguished from his confession of guilt of a particular crime, and was not the equivalent of a "statement" or "declaration," and hence the section does not justify a conviction, or declare the offense established by the confession of the party, but only provides that his admission of the truth of one of the elements, of the offense, to wit, his calling, is sufficient to establish such element. Ex parte Hayden, 106 Pac. 893, 894, 12 Cal. App. 145.

Judicial—Extrajudicial

"Confessions" are either judicial or extrajudicial. "Judicial confessions" are those made in conformity to law before a committing magistrate or in court in the course of legal proceedings. "Extrajudicial confessions" are those which are made by a party elsewhere than before a magistrate or in court. State v. Abrams, 108 N. W. 1041, 1042, 131 Iowa, 479.

Voluntary character

A "confession" procured by a prosecuting officer, or one in official authority over the prisoner, by means of promises or threats, is involuntary per se. People v. Silvers, 92 Pac. 506, 507, 6 Cal. App. 69.

A "confession," if otherwise unobjectionable, is admissible although made while the accused was under arrest, and without his having been put on his guard not to say anything that might incriminate him. State v. Rugero, 42 South. 495, 496, 117 La. 1040.

A "confession" must be free and voluntary, and not exacted by any sort of threats or violence, nor obtained by any direct or implied promises, however slight, nor by the exertion of any improper influence. Sorenson v. United States, 143 Fed. 820, 823, 74 C. C. A. 468 (citing and quoting Bram v. United States, 18 Sup. Ct. 183, 168 U. S. 532, 42 L. Ed. 568; 3 Russ. Cr. [6th Ed.] 478).

CONFESSION IN OPEN COURT

The words "confession in open court," as used in Code Cr. Proc. 1896, art. 786, providing that "no person shall be convicted of perjury except on the testimony of two credible witnesses . . . or upon his own confession in open court," mean a confession made in a case pending against the person so confessing. A confession in another court as a witness in another case is not within the act. Butler v. State, 38 S. W. 46, 47, 86 Tex. Cr. R. 483.

CONFESSION OF FAITH

A "confession of faith" is the construction which a religious organization gives the Holy Book. Boyles v. Roberts, 121 S. W. 805, 818, 222 Mo. 613.

CONFESSION OF JUDGMENT

See Judgment by Confession.

"Confession of judgment," in its ordinary and proper sense, is a voluntary submission to the jurisdiction of the court. Wabaska Electric Co. v. City of Blue Springs, 122 N.

W. 21, 22, 84 Neb. 577 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1420).

A "confession of judgment," as that expression is ordinarily implied, means the entry of a judgment on the admission or confession of the debtor without the formality, time, or expense involved in an ordinary proceeding. When a warrant to confess judgment is presented by an attorney, with direction or demand that judgment be confessed thereon, the acceptance of the same is, within the meaning of the warrant, an appearance at the suit of the holder, and his confession, if otherwise regular, is binding on the debtor. Cuykendall v. Doe, 105 N. W. 698, 701, 129 Iowa, 453, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 449, 113 Am. St. Rep. 472.

CONFESSION OF NEGLIGENCE

In an action for injuries alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff from being thrown from defendant's automobile as a result of excessive speed, the court properly excluded a question asked a witness, who had invited plaintiff to accompany the party in the automobile on the night of the accident, if such witness had not settled with defendant automobile company for injuries received by witness at the same time; the evidence not being admissible against defendant as a "confession of negligence." Routledge v. Rambler Automobile Co. (Tex.) 95 S. W. 749, 750.

CONFIDE

Intrusted or confided, see Intrust.

CONFIDENCE

A use, a trust, and a "confidence" is one and the same thing. Jones v. Jones, 123 S. W. 29, 34, 223 Mo. 424, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 424 (quoting and adopting 1 Perry, Trusts [5th Ed.] § 298).

As belief

In an action for malicious prosecution, the justice before whom plaintiff had been tried and acquitted testified on cross-examination that he had permitted him to go at large on his promise to appear, and on his re-examination, in answer to a question why he had not required bail, stated that he had "confidence" in plaintiff, who had agreed to appear. The word "confidence" amounted to no more than an expression of a personal belief, entertained at the time by the justice, that the plaintiff would appear at the hearing on the day fixed, without reference to any notion he might have had that the plaintiff had theretofore borne a good reputation; and as the evidence was not incompetent as tending to establish a good reputation for the plaintiff in the community, by indirectly introducing the mere personal opinion of the justice. Martin v. Corscadden, 86 Pac. 33, 36, 34 Mont. 308.

CONFIDENCE GAME

As defined in Webster's International Dictionary, a "confidence game" is "any swindling operation in which advantage is taken of a confidence reposed by the victim in the swindler." Lace v. People, 95 Pac. 302, 304, 43 Colo. 199.

A "confidence game" is any swindling operation in which advantage is taken of the confidence reposed by the victim in the swindler. People v. Talmadge, 84 N. E. 655, 656, 233 Ill. 560; Same v. Turpin, 84 N. E. 679, 680, 233 Ill. 452, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 276; People v. Well, 90 N. E. 731, 735, 243 Ill. 208, 134 Am. St. Rep. 357; Hughes v. People, 79 N. E. 137, 138, 223 Ill. 417; People v. Poin-dexter, 90 N. E. 261, 264, 243 Ill. 68; People v. Depew, 86 N. E. 1090, 1092, 237 Ill. 574 (citing Maxwell v. People, 41 N. E. 995, 158 Ill. 248; Du Bois v. People, 65 N. E. 658, 200 Ill. 157, 93 Am. St. Rep. 183; Hughes v. People, 79 N. E. 137, 223 Ill. 417).

The "confidence game" is any swindling operation in which advantage is taken of the confidence reposed by the victim in the swindler, and is very often practiced by the use of cards, dice, checks, or other means, instruments, or devices, in which the victim gets nothing, but is simply swindled out of his money by some trick or device. Jurelich v. People, 79 N. E. 181, 182, 223 Ill. 484 (citing Du Bois v. People, 65 N. E. 658, 200 Ill. 157, 93 Am. St. Rep. 183; Graham v. People, 55 N. E. 179, 181 Ill. 477, 47 L. R. A. 731; Maxwell v. People, 41 N. E. 995, 158 Ill. 248).

Where defendant has, by a course of conduct, led his victim to repose confidence in him, with a view to taking advantage of such confidence and to obtain the money or property of his victim by a betrayal of such confidence, and advantage is taken of the confidence reposed by the victim in the swindler; and the swindler obtains, by reason of the betrayal of such confidence, the money or property of his victim, there is a violation of Cr. Code (Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, p. 692, c. 38) § 98, providing that "every person who shall obtain, or attempt to obtain, from any other person or persons, any money or property by means or by use of any false or bogus checks, or by any other means, instrument or device, commonly called the 'confidence game,' shall be imprisoned," etc. Hughes v. People, 79 N. E. 137, 138, 223 Ill. 417 (citing Maxwell v. People, 41 N. E. 995, 158 Ill. 248; Morton v. People, 47 Ill. 468; Du Bois v. People, 65 N. E. 658, 200 Ill. 157, 93 Am. St. Rep. 183).

"Confidence games," as applied to the postal regulations against the fraudulent use of the mails, are those devices by which the authors of the fraudulent schemes obtain from their victims money or property without any intention of returning to them anything whatever, or anything at all equivalent in commercial value to that which is received as a result of the fraud. Rosenberger v. Harris, 136 Fed. 1001, 1004.

The devices which are commonly included within the term "confidence game" are various; but the essential ingredient therein is a swindling operation, in which advantage is taken of the confidence reposed by the victim in the swindler. Powers v. People, 123 Pac. 642, 645, 53 Colo. 43.

"Confidence game" is defined as any swindling operation in which advantage is taken of the confidence reposed by the victim in the swindler, and as a kind of swindle practiced principally in large cities upon unwary strangers; the swindler, usually under the pretence of old acquaintance, gaining the confidence of his victim, and then robbing or fleecing him at cards or betting or otherwise. From these definitions it is apparent that one of the most essential elements is that of first securing confidence of the victim. State v. Edgen, 80 S. W. 942, 946, 181 Mo. 582 (quoting and adopting the definitions in Webster's Dict. and Cent. Dict.).

In a prosecution for obtaining money by "confidence game," under Mills' Ann. St. § 1332, where the only evidence against the defendant was that she told the prosecuting witnesses that she could see gold all around them, etc., and that she was interested in certain mines, these words, however false and fraudulent, are insufficient to establish the crime. Wheeler v. People, 113 Pac. 312, 314, 49 Colo. 402, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 755.

To constitute the offense of obtaining money by "confidence game," within Mills' Ann. St. § 1332, the money or property must have been obtained or the attempt thereto made by means of some false or bogus means, token, symbol, or device, as distinguished from mere words, however false or fraudulent. Id.

Obtaining money by loans or advancements by false representations in regard to solvency, or ability or purpose to make profitable investments and return large profits, is not within Mills' Ann. St. § 1332, regarding prosecutions for obtaining money by means of a "confidence game." Id.

Where the complaining witnesses were not deceived by the defendant in reposing confidence in her, or misled by any device, scheme, or swindling operation in which advantage was taken of their confidence, the fact that contrary to their expectations promised investments were not made, or, if made, proved a failure, does not transform the transaction into a "confidence game." Id.

Rev. St. 1899, § 2213, provides that "every person who, with intent to cheat and defraud, shall obtain or attempt to obtain from any other person or persons, any money, property or valuable thing whatever, by means or by use of any trick or deception, or false and fraudulent representation or statement or pretense, or by any other means or instrument or device, commonly called the 'confidence game,' or by means or by use of any false or bogus check, or by any other written or printed or engraved instrument, or spurious coin or metal, shall be deemed guilty of a felony," etc. Held, to be manifestly directed against obtaining money or property from one whose confidence has first been secured by false and fraudulent representations in connection with acts done, with intent to cheat and defraud, to provide for a class of false representations not included in some other section dealing with ordinary false representations, and to be intended to reach a class of offenders known as "confidence men," who obtain money by some trick or representation designed to deceive. State v. Wilson, 122 S. W. 701, 223 Mo. 156, 704.

Where defendant obtained the confidence of prosecutor by representing that he would engage in a contemplated real estate business with prosecutor as his partner in another city, and by reason of the confidence so inspired induced prosecutor to pay money to M. for the purchase of certain city lots, and defendant had not intended to engage in the business at all, but falsely pretended he would do so to induce prosecutor to pay his money for the lots, which were of little or no value, defendant was guilty of obtaining money by the "confidence game," and not of a mere "breach of a civil contract." Chilson v. People, 79 N. E. 934, 936, 224 Ill. 535 (citing Maxwell v. People, 41 N. E. 995, 158 Ill. 248; Du Bois v. People, 65 N. E. 658, 200 Ill. 157, 93 Am. St. Rep. 183; Hughes v. People, 79 N. E. 137, 223 Ill. 417).

Where a person, after gaining the confidence of another by misrepresenting his name, and that he was a friend of a person who is the other's friend, and that he was in the employ of a certain company, obtained money from the other upon the representation that he had lost his own money and would return the sum borrowed on the following morning, and left a worthless watch and his I. O. U. for $30, which he never intended to pay, he was guilty of obtaining money by the "confidence game," though the transaction assumed the form of a business transaction. People v. Well, 90 N. E. 731, 732, 734, 243 Ill. 208, 134 Am. St. Rep. 357 (quoting Maxwell v. People, 41 N. E. 995, 996, 158 Ill. 248, 256).

Rev. St. 1899, § 2213, provides that every person who, with intent to cheat and defraud, shall obtain any money or property from another by means of any trick or false representations or pretenses or by any other means, commonly called "the confidence game" etc., shall, on conviction, be punished. Held, that such section applied to a case in which the victim consented to the parting of title and possession to the money obtained, and was not applicable where the property was obtained by a trespass, in which case the person obtaining the same with intent to deprive the true owner thereof was guilty of larceny. Prosecutor was approached by W., who showed him a lock capable of being opened without a key. Thereafter they met defendant, who pretended to be a countryman with a large sum of money, whereupon W. offered to bet dollar for dollar that he could open the lock without a key. Defendant handed W. his money, and W. took out his money, putting it with defendant's, when they turned to prosecutor and asked him how much money he had. Prosecutor took out his money, and W. pulled it out of his hand, handed him the lock, and said, "While [defendant] counts 10, you open the lock." Defendant counted 10, but the lock did not open, whereupon defendant snatched the money which W. handed to him, and, after prosecutor stated that they had robbed him, they departed. Held, that prosecutor never intended to part with the title to his money and hence the offense constituted larceny, and not obtaining money by a trick or "confidence game," prohibited by Rev. St. 1899, § 2213. State v. Copeman, 84 S. W. 942, 945, 186 Mo. 108 (citing 1 Bishop's New Crim. Law, § 585; State v. Murphy, 90 Mo. App. 548; Loomis v. People, 67 N. Y. 322, 23 Am. Rep. 128; State v. Vickery, 19 Tex. 326).

CONFIDENCE MAN

Pen. Code 1901, § 489, providing that any person who, with intent to cheat and defraud, shall obtain money from any other person by means of any trick or deception or false or fraudulent representation or statement of pretense, or any other means or instruments or device commonly called the "confidence game," or by means of any false or bogus check, or any other printed, written, or engraved instrument or spurious coin or metal, shall be guilty of a felony, was intended to reach the class of offenders known as "confidence men," who obtain, through some false representation, trick, or deception, the money of their victim, whose confidence has first been secured through some false representation or deception, and does not cover a case where a party obtains money by falsely pretending that he is an attorney and can obtain a divorce for the party defrauded; such offense being covered by section 481, dealing with the subject of ordinary false representations, and providing that any person who, by false or fraudulent representations or pretenses, defrauds any other person of money or property, and thereby fraudulently gets possession of money or property, is punishable as therein provided. Erickson v. State (Ariz.) 127 Pac. 754, 757.

Two or more confederates, who, by gaining the confidence of a stranger on the ground of alleged professed acquaintance with him or his friends, lure him to a place where he is afterwards fleeced at some game, or robbed of his money, or otherwise victimized, are "confidence men." People v. Simmons, 109 N. Y. Supp. 190, 193, 125 App. Div. 234.

CONFIDENCE OPERATOR

Pen. Code, § 647, subd. 4, declares every person known to be a "confidence operator," either by his own confession, or by his having been convicted of such offense, and having no visible or lawful means of support when found loitering around any steamboat landing, railroad depot, or broker's office, etc., to be a vagrant. Held, that the state's police power was sufficiently broad to warrant legislation looking toward the suppression of "confidence operators," which term implies as its fixed meaning one engaged in swindling operations, in which advantage is taken of confidence reposed by the victim in the swindler. Ex parte Hayden, 106 Pac. 893, 12 Cal. App. 145.

CONFIDENCE SCHEME

A scheme whose sole object and purpose is to trick and defraud one out of his money is a "confidence scheme." Falkenberg v. Allen, 90 Pac. 415, 417, 18 Okl. 210, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 494.

CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATION

Any confidential communication, see Any. See, also, Communications.

Defendant after being subpoenaed by the grand jury, informed the prosecuting attorney that he would like to talk to an attorney before testifying, and asked if he could not talk to the judge who had impaneled the grand jury. The prosecuting attorney took defendant to the judge's room, to whom defendant stated that he wanted advice. The judge refused to give advice, but told defendant he was not obliged to say anything before the grand jury to incriminate himself, and advised him to see an attorney; but defendant stated that he was not acquainted with any attorneys whom he trusted, whereupon the judge told him he could not advise him for his personal benefit, but that if he testified before the grand jury he should tell the truth, whatever it was, whereupon defendant, after a little delay, made a confession to the judge. Held, that such confession was a "confidential communication," and was inadmissible against defendant, on the ground of public policy. People v. Pratt, 94 N. W. 752, 754, 133 Mich. 125, 67 L. R. A. 923.

Between attorney and client

Communications made to an attorney while acting merely as a scrivener and not as an attorney are not "confidential communications" within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 520, providing that attorneys are not competent witnesses as to confidential communications made to them in the course of their professional business. Allen v. Bollenbacher, 97 N. E. 817, 818, 49 Ind. App. 589.

Between husband and wife

"Confidential communications" between husband and wife embrace all information coming to a husband or wife in consequence or by reason of the existence of the marriage relation. Lanham v. Lanham (Tex.) 145 S. W. 336, 337.

A letter in which the writer called the addressee his wife, and in which he subscribed himself as her loving husband, and containing no fact of a confidential nature, is admissible in evidence as against the objection that the same is a "confidential communication" between husband and wife, where a third person testified that he saw the letter delivered by mail. Caldwell v. State, 41 South. 473, 146 Ala. 141.

"Any communication" is in form of words of broader import than the expression "confidential communication." Code § 46071, providing that "neither husband nor wife can be examined in any case as to any communication made by one to the other while married," was intended to protect only marital communications. Sexton v. Sexton, 105 N. W. 314, 315, 129 Iowa, 487, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 708.

On the issue as to whether a will was the result of an insane delusion, conceived by testator toward his wife about the time of his mother's death, testimony of the wife that, while traveling to the mother's funeral on a train, the testator sat several seats behind his wife and that every time she looked back at him he was "gazing at her" did not relate to a "confidential communication" between husband and wife. Lanham v. Lanham (Tex.) 146 S. W. 635, 637.

Question asked the wife of prosecuting witness as to a promise made by prosecuting witness in the presence of third persons was not a "confidential communication" between husband and wife, made inadmissible in evidence by Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 774, providing that neither husband nor wife may testify in a criminal action as to communications made by one to the other while married, with immaterial exceptions. Richards v. State, 116 S. W. 537, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 278.

In an action on a note against a husband and wife, by the wife's mother, plaintiff submitted a letter, which the husband had written to the wife, relating small items of news and small domestic matters, containing the sentence, "I will settle with your mother just as soon as I can get my hands on the money from the mortgage, which I hope to do next week." Held, that this was not a "confidential communication," within the inhibition of the statute, and was properly admitted. Norris v. Lee, 121 N. Y. Supp. 512, 513, 136 App. Div. 685.

Between physician and patient

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 505, prohibiting physicians from testifying to "confidential communications" between themselves and their patients, does not forbid the testimony of a physician to the fact of his employment by a patient. Haughton v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 78 N. E. 592, 165 Ind. 32.

"Confidential communication," as used in Code, § 4608, providing that no practicing physician shall be allowed to disclose any confidential communication intrusted to him in his professional capacity and necessary and proper to enable him to discharge the functions of his office, is not to be restricted to the mere verbal statements made by the patient, but must be construed to include all knowledge or information acquired by the physician through his own observation or examination. In an action for injuries, an objection to a question put to the physician who had attended plaintiff as to whether he found plaintiff conscious or unconscious at the time he attended him, and whether plaintiff talked to persons in an intelligent way, was properly sustained. Battis v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 100 N. W. 543, 545, 124 Iowa, 623.

CONFIDENTIAL POSITION

The court stenographer of a judicial district does not hold a "confidential position," within the civil service law; the stenographer being only required to attend the terms of court, make stenographic record of all proceedings in court, preserve the minutes, supply copies to the court, attorneys, and the parties, and owing no duty of a confidential nature to the presiding justice holding trial terms away from the county of his residence. People ex rel. Weatherly v. Milliken, 130 N. Y. Supp. 1, 2, 72 Misc. Rep. 430.

Where the duties of a position are not merely clerical, and are such as especially devolve upon the head of the office, which, by reason of his numerous duties, he is compelled to delegate to others, the performance of which require skill, judgment, trust, and confidence, and involve the responsibility of the officer or the municipality which he represents, the position should be treated as "confidential." The registrar of a water bureau, who is appointed by the commissioner of public works, and whose duties are delegated to him by the commissioner, and who is given special charge of the general office, having supervision over many subordinates, who receive all the water rates paid to the city, and is required to examine vouchers for expenditures of the water bureau for maintenance and pipe extensions, and in the absence or inability of the deputy commissioner is charged by the commissioner with the entire control of the bureau, and whose duty it is to hear and adjust complaints made by users of water, and who would be liable on his bond for misappropriating funds of the city, holds a "confidential position." People ex rel. Coit v. Wheeler, 106 N. Y. Supp. 450, 453, 56 Misc. Rep. 289 (quoting and adopting Chittenden v. Wurster, 46 N. E. 857, 861, 152 N. Y. 345, 360, 37 L. R. A. 809).

The position of stock transfer tax examiner, under Tax Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 60) § 270, imposing a stock transfer tax, and prohibiting the sale of stamps denoting the payment of the tax except by agents of the comptroller, is not a "confidential position" within the civil service law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 7), empowering the Civil Service Commission to make rules for the classification of offices and employments in the classified service, and the action of the commission in exempting the position from the competitive classes is unauthorized, though the examiner occupies a confidential relation to corporations, transfer agents, and stockbrokers examined to determine whether the law has been complied with. Merritt v. Kraft, 129 N. Y. Supp. 636, 641, 643, 71 Misc. Rep. 492.

A classification of positions under the civil service law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 7), depending on whether positions are confidential, presents a question of law for the courts, and the matter is not within the discretion of the Civil Service Commission. Id.

CONFIDENTIAL RELATION

See Fiduciary Relation.

"Confidential relations" exist between parties to an exchange of property when the parties do not meet upon an equality, one having a full knowledge of the subject of traffic, and the other a slight knowledge and no ability to acquire full knowledge, and the innocent party relies on and places confidence in the representations made by the other. Lland v. Tweto, 125 N. W. 1032, 1035, 19 N. D. 551.

The term "confidential relation" is not confined to any specific association of the parties to it, and exists between client and attorney, principal and agent, principal and surety, guardian and ward, parent and child, ancestor and heir, or husband and wife. In such cases the law, to prevent undue advantage, requires the utmost good faith in all transactions between the parties. An agent and his principal are not prohibited from dealing with each other, but the utmost good faith is required, and the burden of proof is on the agent to show affirmatively that he acted in good faith, fairly, and honestly. Hemenway v. Abbott, 97 Pac. 190, 195, 8 Cal. App. 450.

The terms "confidential relation" and "fiduciary relation" are frequently used interchangeably; in general the relationship is one in which, if a wrong arise, the same remedy exists on behalf of the injured party as would exist against a trustee on behalf of the cestui que trust. A person is said to stand in a fiduciary relation to another when he has rights and duties which he is bound to exercise for the benefit of that other person; in such case he is not allowed to derive any profit or advantage from the relation between them, except upon proof of full knowledge and consent of the other person. The relations of attorney and client, principal and agent, or guardian and ward, are familiar illustrations for fiduciary relations. The relation exists in all cases where there has been a special confidence reposed in one who in equity and good conscience is bound to act in good faith and with due regard to the interests of the one reposing the confidence. The rule embraces both technical and fiduciary relations and those informal relations which exist wherever one man trusts in and relies in another." A son does not as a matter of law stand in a fiduciary relation to his father as to transactions between them. Dick v. Albers, 90 N. E. 683, 685, 243 Ill. 231, 134 Am. St. Rep. 369.

The term "fiduciary or confidential relation" is a very broad one. It exists, and relief is granted, in all cases in which influence has been acquired and abused, in which confidence has been reposed and betrayed. The origin of the confidence and the source of the influence are immaterial. The rule embraces both technical fiduciary relations and those informal relations which exist whenever one man trusts in and relies upon another. Stahl v. Stahl, 73 N. E. 319, 321, 214 Ill. 131, 68 L. R. A. 617, 105 Am. St. Rep. 101, 2 Ann. Cas. 774 (quoting and adopting Thomas v. Whitney, 57 N. E. 808, 186 Ill. 225).

The principle that, when a gift or conveyance to one standing in "confidential relations" to the donor is in question, the burden is on the donee to prove that the conveyance was the volutary act of the donor and made by him with full knowledge of its effect, applies in its strictest sense to cases of parent and child, guardian and ward, trustee and cestui que trust, or principal and agent; but its application is not confined to transactions between parties standing in these relations, but extends to all relations in which confidence is reposed, and in which dominion and influence resulting from such confidence may be exercised by one person over another. Horner v. Bell, 62 Atl. 736, 740, 102 Md. 435.

A "confidential relation," with which a "fiduciary relation," is ordinarily synonymous, and like it is founded on trust or confidence reposed by one person in the integrity and fidelity of another, and precludes the idea of profit or advantage to the person in whom confidence is reposed from dealings with the other, is any relation existing between parties to a transaction whereby one of them is in duty bound to act with the utmost good faith for the benefit of the other. Bacon v. Soule, 126 Pac. 384, 385, 19 Cal. App. 428; Ewing v. Ewing, 126 Pac. 811, 818, 88 Okl. 414.

CONFINEMENT—CONFINEMENT

See Close Confinement; Constantly Confined; Entirely and Continuously Confined; Solitary Confinement.

Animals

Under the night herd law, requiring an animal to be "confined" in the nighttime, the confinement must exclude the animal from the premises of the party complaining of the trespass; so that, where a railroad ran through a quarter section surrounded by a fence, but the right of way was not fenced off, an animal at large in the tract was not "confined," so as to warrant recovery for the killing the animal on the track at night. Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Lands, 24 Kan. 406, 408.

It has been held that, where the owner of land adjoining a railroad turns stock into a pasture surrounded by a legal fence on all sides excepting along the right of way, which the company, in violation of its duty, leaves open, the animals are not deemed to be "running at large"; but under similar circumstances it was held that the owner had failed to "confine" his stock, a distinction being made between the two expressions, and it has been said that the words "confined" in one act and "prohibited from running at large" in another act mean substantially the same thing, but the difference has since been noted and acted upon, but decisions defining the phrase "running at large," made in railroad cases, necessarily apply whenever the statute is invoked in behalf of one whose injury has been occasioned by a failure in the performance of his own duty. Consequently, where a bull escapes from the land of the owner to that of a neighbor by reason of the failure of the latter to keep up a portion of the division fence in accordance with an agreement between them, no action for the resulting damages can be maintained under the statute (Gen. St. 1901, § 7380) forbidding owners of animals to permit them to run at large. McAfee v. Walker, 107 Pac. 637, 638, 82 Kan. 182, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 646 (citing Gooding v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 4 Pac. 136, 32 Kan. 150; Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Landis, 24 Kan. 406; St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Mossman, 2 Pac. 146, 30 Kan. 836, 341; Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Riggs, 3 Pac. 305, 31 Kan. 622, 630; Railroad Co. v. Jackson, 79 Pac. 662, 70 Kan. 791; Mo. Pac. Ry.

Co. v. Shumaker, 27 Pac. 126, 128, 46 Kan. 769, 772).

Prisoners

"Confinement" in the county jail before execution of the death penalty and "close confinement" in the penitentiary substituted therefor by Act N. D. March 9, 1903, claimed to be an ex post facto law, means only such custody as will safely secure the production of the body of the prisoner on the day ordered. Rooney v. North Dakota, 25 Sup. Ct. 264, 266, 196 U. S. 319, 49 L. Ed. 494, 3 Ann. Cas. 76.

V. S. 1610 (P. S. 1965), entitling one "confined" for contempt to a writ of habeas corpus, does not apply where the penalty imposed is merely a fine. In re Consolidated Rendering Co., 66 Atl. 790, 792, 80 Vt. 55, 11 Ann. Cas. 1069.

CONFINED TO BED

Under a life policy which provided that the insured should not be liable to a member for disability while convalescing from any disease, but that it should accept liability only for the actual time the member is necessarily and continuously "confined to bed," the insured could collect benefits if his sickness was such as would reasonably confine a person continuously to bed or substantially so confine him, though he may have been up at times to get fresh air or for other purposes. Home Protective Ass'n v. Williams, 151 S. W. 361, 151 Ky. 146.

CONFINED TO THE HOUSE

See Necessarily Confined to House.

The words "confined to the house," in a policy insuring against diseases, which provided for a weekly indemnity for the period assured should be necessarily confined to the house, when applied to one taking treatment for tuberculosis, meant confined to any part of the house, either inside or upon the porches attached to it on the outside. Dulaney v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 66 Atl. 614, 617, 106 Md. 17.

CONFINEMENT ON THE STREETS

A sentence on conviction of violating a city ordinance, directing "confinement on the streets," means that defendant be confined at labor on the streets. Shuler v. Willis, 54 S. E. 965, 966, 126 Ga. 73.

CONFINEMENT UNDER SENTENCE

"In confinement under sentence" means in confinement under an imprisonment imposed as a punishment by force of a judicial sentence, and the imprisonment of one awaiting execution under a death sentence is not a part of the punishment; and hence the insanity of one who is in confinement awaiting execution under a capital sentence cannot be tested by a proceeding under P. L. 1906, p. 722 (Act July 5, 1906, § 13), authorizing an inquiry into the sentence of one in confinement under sentence. In re Herron, 72 Atl. 123, 134, 136, 77 N. J. Law, 315 (quoting and adopting the definition in McGinn v. State, 65 N. W. 46, 46 Neb. 427, 30 L. R. A. 450, 50 Am. St. Rep. 517).

CONFINEMENT UNTIL DISCHARGED BY DUE COURSE OF LAW

A judgment and commitment to the penitentiary, reciting that the court sentenced accused to confinement and hard labor in the state penitentiary "until discharged therefrom by due course of law," are void for uncertainty. Ex parte Howard, 83 Pac. 1032, 1033, 72 Kan. 273.

CONFIRM—CONFIRMATION

See Final Confirmation.

"Confirmation" implies a deliberate act intended to renew and ratify a transaction known to be voidable." Wagg v. Herbert, 92 Pac. 250, 266, 19 Okl. 525 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 965).

"A 'confirmation' is making firm what was before infirm." Where land which was a separate estate of a wife was sold and conveyed by her husband under a power of attorney from her, and the purchaser complied with the terms of the sale, and before the rights of third persons intervened the husband and wife joined in an instrument declaring that they "fully ratified and confirmed" the acts of the husband in the sale of the land, it was held that the latter instrument cured the defects in the deed executed by the husband, so as to vest title in the grantees. Scales v. Johnson (Tex.) 41 S. W. 828, 830.

"Confirmation of a judicial sale" of land is the judicial sanction of the court; and by confirmation the court makes the sale its own, and the purchaser is entitled to the full benefit of his contract, which is no longer executory but executed, and which will be enforced against him and for him. Ladd v. Craig, 47 South. 777, 780, 94 Miss. 659.

"Confirmation" is the approbation or assent to an estate already created, which so far as lies in the confirmer's power makes it good and valid, so that the "confirmation" does not merely create an estate. A patent from the United States government, confirming the Mexican title to certain lands in territory acquired from Mexico, and releasing that of the United States, is a "confirmation," rather than a quitclaim. Boquillas Land & Cattle Co. v. Curtis, 29 Sup. Ct. 493, 494, 213 U. S. 339, 344, 53 L. Ed. 822 (quoting and adopting the definition in Gilbert, Tenures, p. 75).

In proceedings for the partition of a decedent's real estate, the court directed the sale of the land because the same could not be divided. The administrator sold the same and executed a deed therefor. Subsequently, on the administrator reporting the sale to the court, it ordered that the administrator distribute the proceeds. Held, that the sale was "confirmed," giving the purchaser title. Rye v. J. M. Guffey Petroleum Co., 95 S. W. 622, 627, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 185.

"Confirmation" of a sale under mortgage foreclosure is simply the judicial sanction of the court of the sale, completing the legal transaction. It does not have the virtue of the sale itself, but is judicial evidence of the sale. It relates back to the time of sale, and supplies all defects excepting those founded in want of jurisdiction or in fraud. Though it was more than six years after the sale of land, under confirmation of the sale, the purchaser obtained a valid title, in the absence of any negligence on his part to the prejudice of innocent parties, as the purchaser obtained the equitable title on the sale, and the statute prescribing the duration of liens and judgments did not affect him. Hyde v. Heaton, 86 Pac. 664, 666, 43 Wash. 433.

"A 'confirmation' is a conveyance of an estate or right in esse, whereby a voidable estate is made sure and unavavoidable, or where a particular estate is increased" (quoting Coke's definition). Where a person claimed a right of way over land, and the owner of the land executed a deed ratifying, confirming, and acknowledging such right, and granting to the claimant the right to pass and re-pass, this was not merely a confirmation of such right as the claimant previously had, but a grant of a right, whether or not the claimant had any right theretofore. Knight v. Dyer, 57 Me. 174, 177, 99 Am. Dec. 765.

Act June 2, 1887, relating to proceedings for condemnation of a turnpike road, provides (section 6) that exceptions may be filed to the report of the jury of view within 30 days from filing of such report, and the court, after considering such exceptions, may refer the report back to the jury or may set it aside or confirm it, and if no exceptions are filed to any such report, unless appeal is taken as provided for in section 8 (and in such case the final confirmation of the proceedings shall await the result of the appeal from the assessment within 30 days from the filing thereof), then such report shall be confirmed or dismissed by the court. Section 8 provides that an appeal to the common pleas for the assessment of damages may be taken within 30 days after the approval of the report. Held, that exceptions may be filed within 30 days from the time the report is filed, and if the exceptions filed are withdrawn or dismissed and the report is not referred back to the jury or set aside, it is to be marked "confirmed nisi," which is equivalent to the approval referred to in section 8, and another 30 days is then given to allow time for an appeal to the common pleas, and if no appeal is taken within such time the report is to be finally confirmed or disapproved at the end thereof, and if an appeal is taken the final confirmation cannot take place until 30 days after the result of the appeal is remitted from the common pleas and filed in the quarter sessions, and if no exceptions are filed or appeal taken to the common pleas within the times fixed by the act, the court may of its own motion confirm or dismiss the report; the phrase "filing thereof" within the parentheses in the sixth section referring to the filing in the quarter sessions of the result of the appeal from the assessment when it is remitted from the common pleas, and the word "confirm" where it first occurs in section 6, meaning a confirmation nisi or approval to await the running of the other 30 days given by section 8, and "approval" as used in section 8 being synonymous with "confirm" in section 6. Chestnut Hill & Spring House Turnpike Road Co. v. Montgomery County, 76 Atl. 726, 727, 228 Pa. 1.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 57n, provides that claims shall not be proved subsequent to one year after the adjudication. "Adjudication" is defined by section 1, subsec. 2, as the date of entry of a decree that the defendant is a bankrupt, or, if such decree is appealed from, then the date when it is finally confirmed. Held, that the word "confirmed" is not synonymous with "affirmed," but includes termination of an appeal from an adjudication by dismissal, so that where an adjudication was appealed from, and the appeal dismissed, creditors were entitled to prove their claims within a year from date of such dismissal. In re Lee, 171 Fed. 266, 268.

As conveyance

"A 'confirmation' is a conveyance of an estate or right in lands to one who has the possession or some estate therein." Morrow v. Whitney, 95 U. S. 551, 554, 24 L. Ed. 456.

As ratification

"Ratification" and "confirmation" appear to be considered as almost, if not quite, synonymous. In Black's Law Dictionary, p. 995, "ratification" is defined as being the confirmation of a previous act, done either by the party himself or by another; confirmation of a voidable act. The word "confirm" is held by the same author, at page 249, to mean to ratify what has been done without authority or insufficiently. Each of these words apparently carries with it the idea of the recognition of a previous unauthorized act of an agent done, or purported to be done, for a principal who subsequently ratifies or confirms it. Capps v. Hensley, 100 Pac. 515, 517, 23 Okl. 311.

"'Confirmation' and 'ratification' imply to legal minds the knowledge of a defect in the act to be confirmed and of the right to reject or ratify it." The act of a ward after reaching his majority in mortgaging his real estate to reimburse his guardian for expenditures in excess of the income of the estate was not a ratification of such expenditures, where the ward acted on the guardian's advice, without knowledge of his rights, under Ky. St. 1908, § 2084, exempting his real estate from liability for such expenditures. Fidelity Trust Co. v. Butler (Ky.) 91 S. W. 676, 681.

The word "confirmation," as used in the definition of "ratification," to the effect that it is the confirmation of a previous act done, necessarily supposes a knowledge of the thing ratified. Russell v. Erie R. Co., 59 Atl. 150, 153, 70 N. J. Law, 808, 67 L. R. A. 483, 1 Ann. Cas. 672 (citing Blen v. Bear River & Auburn Water & Mining Co., 20 Cal. 603, 81 Am. Dec. 132; San Diego, O. T. & P. E. R. Co. v. Pacific Beach Co., 44 Pac. 383, 112 Cal. 53, 83 L. R. A. 788).

CONFIRMING MY LAST WILL

Testator devised all of his property to his wife in fee. Thereafter he made a codicil, giving all his estate to his legal heirs after the death of his wife, who was to have the use of the estate if she survived him. Held, that the language of the codicil, "hereby confirming my last will made" in 1881, did not show an intention on the part of the testator to confirm such will, but only confirmed it as modified by the codicil, and the wife took an estate for life with power to dispose of any portion thereof during her lifetime, and at her decease the remainder went to testator's heirs at law. Williams v. Dearborn, 64 Atl. 851, 852, 101 Me. 506.

CONFISCATORY

To make the word "confiscatory" appropriate to statutes regulating passenger rates, it must be given the meaning of having an inevitable tendency to confiscate and not actually confiscating. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Philadelphia County, 68 Atl. 676, 678, 220 Pa. 100, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 108.

"Confiscatory orders" are ordinarily, but not always, unlawful and unreasonable, and to be confiscatory an order of the railroad commission regulating rates, etc., must deprive the railroad of a fair return upon its property, and not merely reduce former rates or charges. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Wisconsin, 116 N. W. 905, 912, 136 Wis. 146, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 821.

CONFLICT IN EMBLEMS

There is no "conflict in emblems" at a primary election, within Election Law, § 57, so as to authorize determination thereof by an election officer, and summary review by the Supreme Court, where a political "party" is merely using on its primary ballots the emblem of an "independent body," which by its definition (Consol Laws 1909, c. 17, § 2, as amended by Laws 1911, c. 649) nominates by petition only, and so takes no part in primary elections. Schieffelin v. Britt, 135 N. Y. Supp. 62, 63, 150 App. Div. 568.

CONFLICT WITH GENERAL LAW

A county ordinance imposing a maximum penalty of $600 or imprisonment for seven months, or both, for one to sell intoxicating liquors in the county, it being provided the ordinance shall not apply to sales made at his regular place of business, under authority of a license issued by city or county, in effect penalizes the business of selling liquor without a license, and so is in conflict with a general law, within Const. art. 11, § 11, authorizing counties to make and enforce regulations "not in conflict with general laws," Pen. Code, § 435, making it a misdemeanor to commence or carry on without procuring the license any business for the carrying on of which a license is required by any law of the state, and section 19 prescribing as a maximum penalty for a misdemeanor, except where a different punishment is prescribed by the Code, imprisonment for six months or a fine of $500, or both. Arfsten v. Superior Court in and for Mendocino County (Cal.) 128 P. 949.

CONFLICTING EVIDENCE

A conflict in the evidence, within the rule that, where the evidence is conflicting, the question is for the jury, must be real; and, where the testimony of a witness is contradicted by all the other evidence and the physical facts there is no conflict. Zibbell v. Southern Pac. Co., 116 Pac. 513, 515, 160 Cal. 237.

CONFORM

Within a statute providing that exceptions, being examined and found conformable to the truth, should be allowed by the presiding judge, a bill of exceptions is "conformable" to the truth when, taken as a whole, it is in such form as to indicate that the excepting party has, in good faith, made an honest effort to present the exceptions truly. In re O'Connell, 53 N. E. 1001, 1003, 174 Mass. 253.

CONFORMABLY WITH THE LAWS

The treaty of May 8, 1878, between the United States and Italy, by article 17, provides that the respective consuls shall enjoy in both countries all the rights and privileges which are or hereafter may be granted to the officers of the same grade of the most favored nation. The treaty of July 27, 1853, between the Argentine Republic and the United States, by article 9, provides that, if any citizen of either country die without will in the territory of the other, the consul of the nation to which decedent belongs shall have the right to intervene in the administration of decedent's estate conformably with the law, for the benefit of creditors, etc. Held, that the Italian consul was entitled to letters of administration upon the estate of an Italian subject killed in this country, as against a creditor of decedent. In re Scutella's Estate, 129 N. Y. Supp. 20, 21, 145 App. Div. 158.

CONFORMED TO THE LAW

Pol. Code, § 1083, as amended in 1899, provides that only those who have "conformed to the law governing the registration of voters are qualified electors"; but the section, as it originally stood, made those qualified whose names were "enrolled on the great register." By the act amending section 1083, and providing for the use of affidavits as a register in the various precincts, sections 1094, 1095, 1096, 1097, 1103, and 1105 were also amended (pages 60-62) so as to require the one charged with the registration of voters to keep in his office a register giving the names of qualified electors the entries in which register shall be made on affidavit showing the facts required to be stated in the entry; and such person is required to preserve all affidavits used before him or his deputies in procuring registration, and to arrange the same in a book, which shall be delivered to the boards of election, and "constitute the register to be used at such election." During the absence of a deputy registration clerk, electors visited his store to be registered, and their registrations were made out by a person employed in the store, who was not a deputy, but what purported to be the affidavits of such persons were contained in the book of affidavits delivered to the board of election. Held, that such persons were qualified electors; the affidavits merely constituting an official list of voters who have been enrolled by the registration officer on the great register, and the phrase in section 1083, "conformed to the law governing registration," merely meaning those who have caused themselves to be enrolled on the authentic list. Huston v. Anderson, 78 Pac. 620, 626, 632, 145 Cal. 320.

CONFORMITY

The word "conformity," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 540, providing that writ of attachment directed to the sheriff must require him to attach so much of defendant's property "as may be sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's demand, the amount of which must be stated in 'conformity' with the complaint," etc., is not the equivalent of "identical," but rather means "in accordance and character and in harmony or congruity." Under the above section, the basis for a writ of attachment is the affidavit therefor, which must specifically state the amount of the indebtedness, and, where a complaint in an action on notes set out the notes, and demanded judgment for the principal with interest according to their terms, and the affidavit for attachment stated the amount of the indebtedness to be the principal of the notes "besides interest," and the writ of attachment recited the amount claimed in the complaint, the writ was issued for an amount in excess of the amount imported by the affidavit, and was properly dissolved on motion. Finch v. McVean, 91 Pac. 1019, 1020, 6 Cal. App. 272 (quoting and adopting the definition in De Leonis v. Etchepare, 52 Pac. 718, 120 Cal. 407, approved in Baldwin v. Napa & Sonoma Wine Co., 70 Pac. 732, 137 Cal. 649).

CONFRONT

"Confrontation" in criminal law, as defined in Black's Law Dictionary and Anderson's Law Dictionary, is the act of setting a witness face to face with the prisoner in order that the latter may make any objection he has to the witness, or that the witness may identify the accused. The primary object of the constitutional requirement is to prevent the use of depositions or ex parte affidavits against the prisoner in place of a personal examination and cross-examination of the witness in which the accused has an opportunity not only of testing the recollection and sifting the conscience of the witness, but of compelling him to stand face to face with the jury in order that they may look at him and judge by his demeanor upon the stand and the manner in which he gives his testimony whether he is worthy of belief. The guaranty of this right does not preclude a trial of an accused who is deaf or blind, but his physical infirmity will merely lessen his capacity to utilize the right. Ralph v. State, 52 S. E. 298, 299, 124 Ga. 116, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 509, 4 Ann. Cas. 501 (citing Mattox v. United States, 15 Sup. Ct. 337, 156 U. S. 237, 39 L. Ed. 409; State v. Mannion, 57 Pac. 542, 19 Utah, 505, 45 L. R. A. 638, 75 Am. St. Rep. 753; Summons v. State, 5 Ohio St. 325).

"Confrontation" is, in its main aspects, merely another term of the test of cross-examination. It is the preliminary step to securing the opportunity of cross-examination; and, so far as it is essential, this is only because cross-examination is essential. The right of confrontation is the right to the opportunity of cross-examination. Confrontation also involves a subordinate and incidental advantage, namely, the observation by the tribunal of the witness' demeanor on the stand as a minor means of judging of the value of his testimony. But this minor advantage is not regarded as essential, i. e., it may be dispensed with when it is not feasible." Code Supp. 1907, § 245a, providing that the original shorthand notes, or any transcript thereof, duly certified, shall be admissible in evidence on any retrial, does not conflict with Const. art. 1, § 10, according a person the right to be confronted with a witness. State v. Brown, 132 N. W. 862, 864, 152 Iowa, 427 (quoting 2 Wigmore, Ev. § 1365).

Where depositions are taken in the presence of accused, with the right of cross-examination, he is "confronted by the witnesses" within the meaning of constitutional provisions entitling him to be so confronted. State v. Nelson, 75 Pac. 505, 507, 68 Kan. 566, 1 Ann. Cas. 468 (citing Territory v. Evans, 23 Pac. 282, 2 Idaho [Hasb.] 651, 7 L. R. A. 646).

The statute providing for the punishment of persons having short lobsters in their possession, and making possession of any lobster prima facie evidence of guilt, does not violate accused's constitutional right to "confront" the witnesses against him. State v. Sheehan, 66 Atl. 66, 67, 28 R. I. 160.

Where the witness who had given testimony on a former trial had since died, admission of the stenographer's notes of the testimony was not an infringement of the constitutional provisions that the accused "shall be confronted with the witnesses" against him. The court says "that the substance of the constitutional protection is preserved to the prisoner, in the advantage he has once had of seeing the witness face to face, and of subjecting him to the ordeal of a cross-examination." Toledo Traction Co. v. Cameron, 137 Fed. 48, 61, 69 C. C. A. 28.

"Confrontation" within Bills of Rights, § 10, guaranteeing to an accused person the right to be confronted with the witnesses against them, is the act by which a witness is brought in the presence of accused, so that the latter may object to him, and the former may identify accused and maintain the truth in his presence. Kemper v. State, 138 S. W. 1025, 1038, 63 Tex. Cr. R. 1.

Code Cr. Proc. § 7, giving defendant the right to be confronted with the witnesses against him "in the presence of the court," adds nothing to Const. art. 6, § 7, giving him the right to "meet the witnesses against him face to face," or Const. U. S. Amend. art. 6, giving him the right to be "confronted with the witnesses against him," which are satisfied by his having an opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses, so as to allow, under an exception to the hearsay rule, admission against him, at the trial on the indictment, of testimony given on the preliminary examination by a witness who has since left the state; and this, though the complaint before the committing magistrate alleged the offense as committed on a day different from that alleged in the indictment, the precise time being immaterial. State v. Heffernan, 123 N. W. 87, 88, 24 S. D. 1, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 866, 140 Am. St. Rep. 764.

CONFUSION OF GOODS

"The doctrine relating to confusion of goods has no application to cattle and horses and things of a similar nature that may be readily identified." McKnight v. United States, 130 Fed. 659, 663, 65 C. C. A. 37 (citing The Idaho, 93 U. S. 575, 23 L. Ed. 978; Claffin v. Beaver, 55 Fed. 576; Carlton v. Davis, 90 Mass. [8 Allen] 94; Moore v. Bowman, 47 N. H. 494; Capron v. Porter, 43 Conn. 383; Brown v. Bacon, 63 Tex. 595; Drake, Attachm. [7th Ed.] § 199).

CONGLOMERATE

"Conglomerate" is defined as rock composed of particles of pre-existent rocks cemented together, so as to make a uniformly solid substance. City of Chicago v. McKechney, 68 N. E. 955, 975, 205 Ill. 372 (citing Cent. Dict. 1191; Webs. Int. Dict. and Stand. Dict., etc., "Conglomerate").

CONGREGATE

CONGREGATION

See Whole Congregation.

Part of congregation, see Part.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 1655, prohibiting the disturbance of a "congregation" assembled for religious worship, the disturbance of a single member of a congregation so assembled is a disturbance of the congregation. Walker v. State (Ark.) 146 S. W. 862, 864.

CONGRESS

Member of Congress, see Member.

There is no such office as "Congress" known to the law. In ordinary parlance, where a candidate is elected as representative of the people of a district of a state to Congress, he is known and designated as "congressman," or a candidate for Congress while running; but in law there is no such office as Congress, nor can an election be held to elect a candidate for the office of Congress. Allison v. State, 78 S. W. 1065, 45 Tex. Cr. R. 596.

The term "Congress," as used in an act appointing a commission to negotiate a treaty with Indians "subject to the action of the Senate," and to select a district or districts of country, "said district or districts when so selected and the selection approved by Congress" to be and remain a permanent home for the Indians to be located therein, means the lawmaking branch of the government, and the approval of both Houses was necessary to create a valid reservation of the district so selected. United States v. Crook, 179 Fed. 391, 395.

CONGRESSIONAL POSITION

Rem. & Bal. Code, § 4905, provides that candidates for "elective" offices, state, county, municipal, precinct, or "congressional" shall be nominated at a direct primary election. Section 4813 gives the order of arranging positions on the ballot, first congressional, next state, next preferences for United States senators; and gives a form of ballot directing a vote for first choice, and a vote for second choice for representative in Congress, and a vote for one choice only for United States senator. Section 4822 provides that, where there are four or more candidates of any political party for a state or congressional position, every voter at the primary election shall designate a first choice and a second choice for each such position. Held, that a United States senator who is elected by the Legislature does not hold an "elective" office or a "congressional position" within the meaning of the primary election law, so as to make the provision for second choice voting applicable to him. State ex rel. Duryee v. Howell, 110 Pac. 543, 544, 59 Wash. 634.

CONJOINT

As used in a bill against two defendants charging them with conjointly contriving to infringe a patent, "conjointly" means acting together, one with the knowledge and consent and aid of the other and pursuant to an agreement or understanding. Bradley v. Eccles, 133 Fed. 308, 309.

Civ. Code La. art. 1707, provides that accretion shall take place for the benefit of legatees in case a legacy is to several conjointly, and that the legacy shall be reputed to be made conjointly when it is made by one and the same disposition, without the testator having assigned the part of each co-legatee in the thing bequeathed, and article 1709 declares that except in the cases provided by such article, and by article 1708 (inapplicable), every portion of the succession remaining undisposed of shall devolve on the testator's legitimate heirs. Testator bequeathed pecuniary legacies to a number of legatees, and then bequeathed different amounts to six charitable institutions, among which was a bequest to the "Home for Insane," and then provided that the residue should be divided between the beneficiaries of the charitable bequests pro rata in proportion to the amount of the special legacies made to them. Held, that the residuary bequest was conjoint within article 1707, so that, on the failure of the legacy to the Home for Insane because of uncertainty, such legacy, together with the legatee's interest in the residue, passed to the other charitable legatees, and not to testatrix's heirs at law. Waterman v. Canal-Louisiana Bank & Trust Co., 186 Fed. 71, 73, 108 C. C. A. 183.

CONNECT—CONNECTED

Where insured warranted that he was not in any way connected with the manufacture or sale of liquors, the word "connected" must be presumed to have been used in its popular sense, so that proof that insured occasionally waited on the customers of a saloon keeper for his accommodation merely, and without consideration—insured having no financial or other interest in the saloon—did not establish a breach of warranty of a life policy. Collins v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 80 Pac. 609, 610, 32 Mont. 329, 108 Am. St. Rep. 578.

Counts charging a defendant with the forgery of Chinese duplicate certificates, with the uttering of such forged certificates and with violating Rev. St. § 8169, as an officer in the revenue service by negligently and designedly permitting the commission of such offenses, may properly be joined in the same indictment under Rev. St. § 1024, since they cover "acts or transactions connected together" within the meaning of the statute. Dillard v. United States, 141 Fed. 303, 304, 72 C. C. A. 451.

With business of agency

Defendants had an office and agency in C. for lending money, conducted by an agent, and plaintiff borrowed from the agency, giving his note with an assignment of his wages, and thereafter more than paid the loan through the agency, but defendants willfully and with intent to extort money presented the assignment of wages to plaintiff's employer, causing him to be discharged. Held, that a cause of action for such wrong was "connected with the business" of defendants' agency at C., within Code, § 3500, so that the action was properly brought in the county in which the office was located. Donisthorpe v. Lutz (Iowa) 136 N. W. 233, 234.

With church

The words "connected with," in Rev. Laws, c. 86, § 54, authorizing any religious society connected with an incorporated church to convey its property to the church, subject to the same uses and trusts, mean belonging to the same denomination and professing the same creed, and having such relations with the church occupying the edifice belonging to it as existed in similar cases, according to the usages and customs of the denomination, and a conveyance by a religious society belonging to one denomination to another society of the same denomination is valid; the latter society maintaining regular worship in accordance with the doctrines of such denomination. Massachusetts Baptist Missionary Soc. v. Bowdoin Square Baptist Soc., 98 N. E. 1045, 1047, 212 Mass. 198, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 472.

With railroad

A railroad "connection," where no supplementary terms are used, means either such a union of tracks as to permit passage of cars from one road to another, or such intersection of roads as to permit the convenient interchange of freight and passengers at the point of intersection. Therefore the proviso in Act April 23, 1861, conferring power on railroad companies to contract for the use and lease of each other's roads, that the roads of the companies so contracting or leasing shall be directly or by means of intervening railroads connected with each other, did not limit the right of connection to roads of similar gauge. Philadelphia & E. R. Co. v. Catawissa R. Co., 53 Pa. 20, 60.

Where an employé in railroad shops on going from his work passed along a track 150 feet from a crossing used by employés for many years with the consent of the company, and then attempted to go around a train on the track, and fell and was killed by the train, he was not "connected with or employed on" the railroad within Railroad Law, § 83, prohibiting any person not connected with or employed on a railroad from walking on tracks except at crossings, and the company owed him only the duty to refrain from wantonly injuring him. McIntyre v. Long Island R. Co., 135 N. Y. Supp. 309, 310, 150 App. Div. 783.

With subject-matter of action

The phrase, "connected with the subject of the action," as used in Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 501, providing that a counterclaim must arise out of the transaction on which the complaint is based or be connected with the subject of the action, means connected with the facts constituting the cause of action. Van v. Madden, 116 N. Y. Supp. 1115, 1117, 132 App. Div. 535.

In an action against an agent to recover moneys alleged to have been collected by him from a customer named, a counterclaim for commissions earned on sales made to such customer and alleged to have been withheld, under a custom between the parties by which the agent was authorized to pay his own commissions, is a proper subject of counterclaim, under Code Civ. Proc. § 501, subd. 1, as "connected with the subject of the action." Benton v. Moore, 87 N. Y. Supp. 717, 718, 42 Misc. Rep. 660.

In an action for the amount of a judgment against plaintiff and defendant for negligent injury to a third person, paid by plaintiff, a counterclaim for an amount paid by defendant in settlement of actions by others growing out of the same accident does not "arise out of the transaction set forth in the complaint" as a foundation of plaintiff's claim, and is not "connected with the subject of the action," within Code Civ. Proc. § 501, authorizing a counterclaim in either of such cases. Fulton County Gas & Electric Co. v. Hudson River Telephone Co., 93 N. E. 1052, 1054, 200 N. Y. 287.

In an action to restrain defendants from interfering with plaintiff's right to occupy a logging road over defendants' land and for damages for obstructing it, damages for injuries to the land by the construction of the road is "connected with the subject-matter of the action," and may be properly interposed as a counterclaim, under Rev. Laws 1905, § 4131, providing that a counterclaim must be an existing cause of action in favor of defendant and against plaintiff and, with immaterial exceptions, must arise out of the transaction made the basis of the complaint or be connected with the subject of the action; but damages suffered by the negligent operation of plaintiff's locomotive is not connected with the subject of the action, and is not the proper subject of a counterclaim. Wild Rice Lumber Co. v. Benson, 130 N. W. 1, 2, 114 Minn. 92.

With work

Civ. Code, § 1559, provides that a contract made expressly for the benefit of a third person may be enforced by him. A contractor with a city for the construction of a tunnel agreed to protect it from "all claims and liens of any kind whatsoever, connected with said work," and authorized the city to withhold money due by him to his laborers or other workmen. Held, that a cook for the laborers engaged in the construction of the tunnel was not "connected with said work" and could not enforce the provisions of the contract as against the contractor. Clark v. Beyrle, 116 Pac. 739, 742, 160 Cal. 306.

CONNECTING BRANCH

Railroad Law, Laws 1892, p. 1405, c. 876, § 101, provides that no corporation constructing and operating a railroad under the provisions of the article shall charge any passenger more than five cents for one continuous ride from any point on its road, or on any road, line, or branch operated by it or under its control, to any other point thereof, or any connecting branch thereof within the limits of any incorporated city, and that not more than one fare shall be charged within the limits of any such city for passage over the main line of road and any branch or extension thereof, etc. Held that the terms "connecting branch thereof" and "main line of road and any branch or extension thereof" contemplate an original or main line which by an off-shoot and tributary line has been extended, the two constituting a single continuous and connected line of road, and not two originally separate lines not constructed with reference to one another, which have become related simply because they have been taken into a general railroad system; and hence, where a street car line did not of itself directly connect with another line upon which a passenger took passage and paid his original fare, but had to be reached by passage over a third line, the latter was not a "connecting branch" of the first line, and he was not entitled to ride on it without payment of additional fare. Bull v. New York City Ry. Co., 85 N. E. 385, 388, 192 N. Y. 361, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 778.

CONNECTING CARRIER

A terminal railroad company, which receives cars of live stock from other railroad companies for transportation and delivery to another company or to stockyards, is a "connecting carrier" whose road forms a part of the line of road over which the shipment is made, within the meaning of the 28-hour law (Act June 29, 1906, c. 3594, 34 Stat. 607), and is subject to its provisions as to interstate shipments. United States v. Northern Pac. Terminal Co., 181 Fed. 879, 880.

"Connect," as used in a railroad company's agreement to transport perishable goods by a special daily train to a certain point "there to connect with" another railroad at a certain hour, imports a complete delivery the moment such first carrier's cars reach the point of connection between the two companies, and the engine is detached from the car. Truax v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. (Del.) 3 Houst. 233, 240, 251.

CONNECTING LINES

Railroads, one of which crosses the other by an overhead crossing, are "connecting lines" within Rev. St. 1895, art. 4536, defining "connecting lines" to be lines which shall connect with each other by crossing each other's tracks or otherwise so as to form a continuous or connected line, and the crossing is not required to be a grade crossing. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Texas (Tex.) 86 S. W. 16, 17.

"Connected," as used in Act N. J. March 17, 1870, authorizing the United Railroads and Canal Companies of New Jersey to consolidate their respective capital stocks, or to consolidate with any other railroad or canal company whose works shall form, with their own, "connected" lines, means lines which are connected either directly or by intervening roads. Black v. Delaware & R. Canal Co., 22 N. J. Eq. 130, 402.

CONNECTING RAILROAD

A "connecting railroad," as used in the act of 1852, granting a railroad the right to lease connecting railroads, is one from which the cars of the other may pass uninterruptedly without the transshipment of freight or passengers. Central R. & Banking Co. v. Mayor, etc., of City of Macon, 43 Ga. 605, 646 (quoting and adopting the definition given by Act 1850, General Assembly).

CONNECTION

See Guiltly Connection.

CONNECTION WITH INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Held, that a car used in such commerce only, not so equipped, though moved in a train containing a car bearing interstate traffic, was not used in "connection" therewith where they were in different parts of the train and not in position to be coupled or uncoupled. United States v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 166 Fed. 997, 998.

Safety Appliance Act March 2, 1893, c. 196, as amended by Act Cong. April 1, 1896, c. 87, Act March 2, 1903, c. 976, declares that it shall apply to all trains, locomotives, tenders, cars, and similar vehicles used on any railroad engaged in interstate commerce, and to all other locomotives, tenders, cars, and similar vehicles used in "connection therewith." Held that, where a car not properly equipped is moved in a train containing cars carrying interstate commerce, there is a violation of the act, notwithstanding the defective car is not immediately connected with that carrying the interstate shipment. United States v. Western & A. R. Co., 184 Fed. 336, 337.

"Connivance" means "winking at," failing to prevent, helping by not hindering, taking no active hand, but standing by and knowingly promoting, aiding, and abetting, by not opposing or using means to prevent or protesting against; a condition where all power, authority, influence, and action to prevent the execution of a thought or purpose are intentionally withheld. Richardson v. Richardson, 114 N. Y. Supp. 912, 916.

It is not necessary that a divorce petitioner shall have made statements indicating "connivance" or consent, if his conduct indicates an intent or even a willingness that the act of adultery may take place or even culpable negligence in not preventing it; the maxim volenti non fit injuria applying. Delaney v. Delaney, 65 Atl. 217, 219, 71 N. J. Eq. 246.

A libellant, suing for divorce on the ground of adultery, who arranged with a third person that an opportunity should be afforded libelee to commit adultery, by permitting her and the co-respondent to pass an evening alone in the third person's house, is guilty of "connivance," requiring a dismissal of the suit. Noyes v. Noyes, 79 N. E. 814, 815, 194 Mass. 20, 120 Am. St. Rep. 517, 10 Ann. Cas. 818 (citing Wilson v. Wilson, 28 N. E. 167, 154 Mass. 194, 12 L. R. A. 524, 26 Am. St. Rep. 287; 2 Blah. Mar. & Div. [5th Ed.]; Morrison v. Morrison, 136 Mass. 310; Robbins v. Robbins, 5 N. E. 837, 140 Mass. 528, 54 Am. Rep. 488).

Plaintiff, suspecting her husband's fidelity, arranged with a detective to follow him on the nights when he was absent from home. On one occasion plaintiff, her sister, and certain detectives followed him in an automobile to a roadhouse, where he was found and surprised in a compromising position with another woman. Held, that plaintiff's acts were not connivance sufficient to deprive her of the right to a divorce under the rule that mere acts of watching the movements of a suspected spouse is insufficient to establish connivance, which means consent. Lehman v. Lehman, 79 Atl. 1060, 1061, 78 N. J. Eq. 316.

An agreement between a husband and wife, made pending a suit by her for divorce, which provides for alimony, but which is unaccompanied by any understanding that she shall have a divorce, or be unresisted at the trial, is not collusive, barring a divorce; a "collusion" to bar a divorce being a conspiracy of husband and wife to obtain a divorce by false testimony, as distinguished from "connivance," which is a corrupt consenting. Rapp v. Rapp, 145 S. W. 114, 115, 162 Mo. App. 673.

"Connivance" as a defense to divorce is not proven as an independent fact, but is usually established from a line of conduct pursued by the husband in respect to his wife's relations to the alleged paramour, and if the husband's conduct, as established by the undisputed evidence, or admitted by him, shows conclusively that he consented actively or passively to his wife's conduct, the question of connivance would be for the court. Kohlhoss v. Mobley, 62 Atl. 236, 237, 102 Md. 199, 5 Ann. Cas. 865.

An instruction, in an action for debauching plaintiff's wife defined "connivance" as the secret or indirect consent or permission of one person to the commission of an unlawful or criminal act by another. It consists of a winking at or an intentional forbearance to see a fault or other act. Woldson v. Larson, 164 Fed. 548, 552, 90 C. C. A. 422.

CONQUEST

CONSANGUINITY

See Lineal Consanguinity.

"Consanguinity" or kindred is the connection or relation of persons descended from the same stock or common ancestor, and is either lineal or collateral; and "lineal consanguinity" is that which subsists between persons of whom one is descended in a direct line from the other. Suman v. Harvey, 79 Atl. 197, 204, 114 Md. 241; Hettinger v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. of Baltimore (Md.) 79 Atl. 205.

CONSCIENCE

See Courts of Conscience.

The constitutional provision that no one shall be hurt, molested, or restrained in his person, liberty, or estate for worshipping God in the manner and season most agreeable to the dictates of his own "conscience" nor for his religious professions or sentiments, provided he does not disturb the public peace nor obstruct others in their religious worship, is intended to protect all of every diversity of religious opinion in the liberty of worship and religious profession, and to prevent pains, imprisonment, or the deprivation of political rights from being imposed as a penalty for religious professions and opinions. Donahoe v. Richards, 38 Me. 379, 403, 61 Am. Dec. 256.

An injunction is a matter of grace, and not of right, and equity will never grant relief against public convenience or against "conscience" which is not the mere caprice of the individual chancellor, but is founded on the law. Johnson v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis, 127 S. W. 63, 71, 227 Mo. 423.

"Precedents are to govern 'conscience' in chancery as well as at common law. It is not conscience naturalis et interna, but civilis et politica. It is not making the law; but declaring what it has been established to be. * * * It is not making new principles, but applying old ones to new facts or cases." Pierpont v. Fowle, 2 Woodb. & M. 23, 19 Fed. Cas. 652, 658, No. 11,152.

CONSCIENTIOUS BELIEF

"Belief in a charge implies 'conscientious belief,'" On a prosecution for murder, there was no error in refusing an instruction that the jury might "conscientiously believe" defendant guilty, yet might not believe it beyond a reasonable doubt, and that in such case they should acquit. Regan v. State, 39 South. 1002, 1004, 87 Miss. 422.

CONSCIOUS SUFFERING

Where an employé, after catching his foot on attempting to descend from a car, was dragged 180 feet in a few seconds before being instantly killed, there was "conscious suffering" within the meaning of an Employers' Liability Act allowing recovery where an employé is instantly killed or dies without "conscious suffering" as the result of the employer's negligence. Martin v. Boston & M. R. R. Co., 56 N. E. 719, 720, 175 Mass. 502, 504.

If an injured person remains conscious after the injury, even for a short time only, it is a reasonable conclusion that he lived in a state of "conscious suffering" within St. 1887, c. 270, as amended by St. 1892, c. 260, allowing recovery by a widow or next of kin, where death is not instantaneous or is preceded by conscious suffering. Knight v. Overman Wheel Co., 54 N. E. 890, 893, 174 Mass. 455, 463.

CONSECUTIVE

Four consecutive weeks, see Four.

The fact that the county court ordered the notice of a special election under the local option law to be published for four "successive" weeks, instead of for four "consecutive" weeks, as required by Rev. St. 1899, § 3029, did not invalidate the election; the words "successive" and "consecutive" being synonymous. State v. Hitchcock, 101 S. W. 117, 124 Mo. App. 101, 118.

CONSENT

"Consent" is a thinking together, an agreement of one with another to the doing of something, leaving something undone, waiving something, or permitting some act or deed or course of conduct. It need not be written, but may be spoken or acted, or may be implied. Richardson v. Richardson, 114 N. Y. Supp. 912, 916.

The word "consent" in the law of contracts means concurrence of wills. Wilkinson v. Misner, 138 S. W. 931, 935, 158 Mo. App. 551.

The word "consent" is defined to be the "voluntary allowance or acceptance of what is done or proposed to be done by another. In law intelligent concurrence in a contract or an agreement of such a nature as to bind the party consenting; agreement upon the same thing in the same sense." Clark v. North, 111 N. W. 681, 682, 683, 131 Wis. 599, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 764, 11 Ann. Cas. 1090 (citing Century Dict.; 2 Words and Phrases, pp. 1437, 1438).

Constitutional authority to the Legislature to provide for waiver of jury, where the "consent" of the parties is given, recognizes two kinds of consent, express and implied. Express consent where written stipulation is entered into, or oral stipulation entered of record; implied consent where a party after appearance fails to appear at the trial, or does not deny the plaintiff's claim. It was not intended by the Constitution that there should be any radical change in an established practice, but the word "consent" was used in its broadest sense. State ex rel. Clark v. Neterer, 74 Pac. 668, 670, 33 Wash. 535.

A carrier's rule that it assumed no risk for cotton placed upon its platform unless tendered for immediate shipment may be waived, and where it accepts cotton intended for shipment at some future time, the cotton will be upon its platform with the carrier's "consent," under Civ. Code 1902, § 2135, making a carrier responsible for loss by fire originating on its right of way, except for property which has been placed upon its right of way illegally or without its consent. Griffin v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 72 S. E. 463, 464, 89 S. C. 547.

A paper was circulated by a railroad company among property owners to obtain their "consent" for construction of an elevated railroad in a street. An abutting owner signed it, after the words written in by him, "I am in favor of an elevated road over the middle of the street, but not on the walk." Held that, if this was a consent, it was a qualified and conditional one, which was not accepted; the company having built their structure onto the sidewalks. Shaw v. New York Elevated R. Co., 79 N. E. 984, 986, 187 N. Y. 186.

Under a valid ordinance conferring on a subway company the right to the use of streets for the construction and operation of electrical conduits, at a semiannual rent, it is immaterial whether such grant be called a mere "consent" of the city to the exercise of a franchise already conferred by the state, or whether it is called a "franchise." National Subway Co. v. St. Louis, 69 S. W. 290, 293, 169 Mo. 319.

In an action for breach of a liquor bond in permitting plaintiffs' minor son to enter and gamble in the principal's saloon, the want of "consent" of plaintiffs could be inferred from the fact that they were at the time in a distant state, and their son had been in the city where the saloon was located only a few days. Krick v. Dow (Tex.) 84 S. W. 245.

If a husband sees that his wife is about to become subject to the blandishments of a man of bad character and evil intentions, and does nothing to warn her or withhold her from such person, but permits her to be led to her ruin, his conduct in law amounts to "consent" so as to bar a divorce for adultery. Delaney v. Delaney, 65 Atl. 217, 220, 71 N. J. Eq. 246 (quoting and adopting definition in Cane v. Cane, 39 N. J. Eq. 148).

Acquiescence

"Consent" implies something more than mere acquiescence in a state of things already in existence. It implies an agreement to that which but for the consent could not exist and which the party consenting has the right to forbid." Builders' Supply Co. v. North Augusta Elec. & Imp. Co., 51 S. E. 231, 236, 239, 71 S. C. 361 (quoting and adopting definition in Gray v. Walker, 16 S. C. 147; Geddes v. Bowden, 19 S. C. 1).

The silence of a defendant on trial for crime, or his failure to object or protest against an illegal discharge of the jury before verdict, does not constitute a "consent" to such discharge, or a "waiver" of the constitutional inhibition against a second jeopardy for the same offense. Allen v. State, 41 South. 598, 52 Fla. 1, 120 Am. St. Rep. 188,

The word "consent" is sometimes treated as synonymous with "assent," "acquiescence," and "concurrence." Exemption laws should be liberally construed, and under Laws 1901, p. 365, § 269, extending the homestead exemption to a tenant in common having a homestead on the land with the consent "express or implied" of his cotenant, the cotenant's acquiescence, under such circumstances as raise a presumption of consent, is sufficient; proof of consent directly given in vivo or in writing being unnecessary. Bartle v. Bartle, 112 N. W. 471, 473, 132 Wis. 392 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1349).

Under a corporate charter providing that no loans should be made to any officer of the corporation and that the parties "consenting" to such a loan should be liable for the amount, etc., mere absence of a director from a special meeting of the board at which certain forbidden loans were made, and his absence from the next regular meeting at which the loans were ratified, cannot be construed as a "consent" to the loans. Murphy v. Penniman, 66 Atl. 282, 287, 105 Md. 452, 121 Am. St. Rep. 583.

A defendant with knowledge of relationship between examining magistrate and complaining witness who submits to a preliminary examination without objection will be held to have "consented" thereto within Cobbe's Ann. St. 1903, § 4747. Ingraham v. State, 118 N. W. 320, 321, 82 Neb. 553.

The failure of accused or his attorney to object to the discharge of the jury cannot be interpreted as a "consent to their discharge" within the meaning of the statute. People ex rel. Stabile v. Warden of City Prison of City of New York, 124 N. Y. Supp. 841, 845, 139 App. Div. 488.

Approval or confirmation

"Consent" supposes a physical power to act, a moral power of acting, and a serious determination and a free use of powers. It is an act of reason accompanied with deliberation (Bouv. Law Dict.). Though work on a highway done by the commissioner of highways is necessary, a town cannot be made liable therefor by confirmation or approval after the work is done, as that does not amount to consent, within Laws 1899, p. 108, c. 84, § 10, providing, if a highway shall be damaged or become unsafe, the commissioner of highways of the town may cause it to be immediately repaired, if consented to by the town board. People ex rel. Graham v. Studwell, 86 N. Y. Supp. 967, 969, 91 App. Div. 469.

The record of a meeting of the A. county fiscal court recited that the county judge and all the justices of the peace were present, and "came the county judge and appointed C. county road engineer for A. county, two of the magistrates, M. and S. voting to ratify said appointment and the remaining four justices of the peace not voting on said notice to ratify said appointment." Laws 1912, c. 110, § 48, required the county judge to appoint the county road engineer "by and with the consent of the fiscal court." Held, that the record did not affirmatively show that the four nonvoting justices had an opportunity to vote, so that the rule that a public official who was present and has an opportunity to vote will be taken as having consented to an affirmative vote is not applicable, the word "consent" according to Crabb's English Synonyms meaning an express sanction to the conduct of others. Morgan v. Champion, 150 S. W. 517, 518, 150 Ky. 396.

Assent distinguished

"Consent" in law means a voluntary agreement by a person in the possession and exercise of sufficient mentality to make an intelligent choice proposed by another. "Consent" differs from "assent," and implies some positive action and involves submission; while "assent" means mere passivity, or submission which does not include consent. People v. Dong Pok Yip, 127 Pac. 1031, 1032, 164 Cal. 143.

The synonymic discrimination between the words "assent" and "consent" is not based on the distinction between single and joint volition. "Consent" connotes individual volition, and "assent" individual judgment. In a justice's court, a suit upon an unconditional contract in writing may be tried at the first term at which time defendant is required by Civ. Code 1895, § 4124, to make his defense. If the plaintiff is present and willing to proceed to trial, the case is within the proviso of section 4135, providing that the cause may be tried at the term when the plea is filed, if the plaintiff or his attorney is present "consenting" thereto, and defendant cannot continue the case as a matter of right. Williams v. Fain & Stamps, 58 S. E. 307, 308, 309, 2 Ga. App. 136 (citing Stand. Dict., Webst. Dict., and Crabb's Eng. Synonyms).

In a prosecution against a nonresident for herding, grazing, and permitting his cattle to run at large in this state, an instruction that if the defendant's cattle were being herded or grazed or permitted to run at large in this state, and he, while in this state, participated in or assented to the same, the jury should convict him, was proper; the word "assented" being an equivalent to "consented." Beatty v. State, 95 S. W. 163, 164, 77 Ark. 247.

Consent to risk

"Consent to the risk" implies knowledge of the danger of the act to be performed and the performance of the act understandingly and without constraint. The essence of the matter is that the employé must thoroughly comprehend the risk, if it exceeds that ordinarily connected with such a task and freely accepted, instead of facing it reluctantly and under protest. He may be aware of the risk he encounters without assenting to it, because some coercive influence, such as fear of losing employment, controls him, and if he remains after complaining of the danger the risk is not assumed. Dean v. St. Louis Woodenware Works, 80 S. W. 292, 296, 106 Mo. App. 167.

Under Bankruptcy Act

Under Bankruptcy Act, § 28b (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 8) which provides that suits by the trustee shall only be brought or prosecuted in the courts where the bankrupt might have brought or prosecuted them if bankruptcy proceedings had not been instituted "unless by consent of the proposed defendant," the defendants' consent need not have been given before the suit was instituted, nor need it expressly appear of record, but may be sufficiently shown by conduct necessarily implying such consent. Where in a suit by the trustee the defendants appeared and filed pleas to the merits, including not merely defensive pleas but a plea of set-off in which they affirmatively invoked the jurisdiction of the court in their own behalf and prayed for judgment against the plaintiff and proceeded to a trial upon the merits without objection to the jurisdiction of the court, they must be deemed to have consented to the prosecution of the suit in the federal court within the meaning of such section. McEldowney v. Card, 193 Fed. 475, 478.

"Consent," within said Bankruptcy Act means consent to the tribunal in which the controversy is to be carried on, and not to the mode of procedure, which is regulated by general principles of law, unless other provision is made. Where proceedings brought in a federal District Court by a trustee in bankruptcy were plenary in substance, though summary in form, defendants by answering and going to hearing, without objecting to the court's jurisdiction, consented within the Bankruptcy Act. In re Rapheal, 192 Fed. 874, 876, 118 C. C. A. 198.

Where a creditor of a bankrupt, who was also a debtor, on filing his claim, sought to set off his own indebtedness as a credit thereon, and went to trial on such issue, he thereby gave his "consent," within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, that the court of bankruptcy should determine the amount due from him and enter judgment therefor on the disallowance of the set-off claimed. In re White, 177 Fed. 194, 196, 101 C. C. A. 864.

CONSENT DECREE

A decree not made upon default or noli dicere, but after answer filed, issue joined, and evidence taken, is not a "consent decree."

Parsons v. Stevens, 78 Atl. 347, 351, 107 Me. 65.

"A 'decree by consent' is the decree of the parties put on file with the sanction and permission of the court, and in such decrees the parties, acting for themselves, may provide as to them seems best concerning the subject-matter of the litigation." Bunn v. Braswell, 51 S. E. 927, 928, 139 N. C. 135 (quoting and adopting definition in Edney v. Edney, 81 N. C. 1).

CONSENT JUDGMENT

After the lower court, on defendant's motion, struck out several items sued on, to which plaintiff excepted, and, the amount remaining being less than $300, plaintiff and defendant both entertained a view that the court had no jurisdiction of the action. A judgment of dismissal followed in the following language: "Both plaintiff and defendant having admitted in open court that the court has no jurisdiction in this action, it is therefore ordered * * * that the same be and is hereby dismissed." Held, that plaintiff did not consent to the judgment in such sense that it was deprived of the right to appeal. Placer County v. Freeman, 87 Pac. 628, 629, 149 Cal. 738.

CONSENT OF OWNER

The "consent" of an owner of a building to the making of repairs thereon necessary under the statute to create a lien in favor of those furnishing labor and materials may be inferred from his leaving the building in the possession of agents knowing that repairs are necessary and making no provision for them, but leaving them to be made by the agents without giving any notice of consent. "Consent" may be inferred for ordinary preservative repairs when it would not be inferred for alterations, remodelings, additions, or even more extensive repairs. Shaw v. Young, 32 Atl. 897, 898, 87 Me. 271.

The term "consent," as used in the Connecticut mechanics' lien statute: "When the statute uses the words by the consent of the owner of the land, it means that the person rendering the service or furnishing the materials and the owner of the land on which the building stands must be of one mind in respect to it. The words 'consent of the owner' are used in the statute as something different from an agreement with the owner; and, while it may be urged that they do not require such a meeting of the minds of the parties as would be essential to the making of a contract, there must be enough of a meeting of their minds to make it fairly apparent that they intended the same thing in the same sense." York v. Mathis, 68 Atl. 746, 749, 108 Me. 67 (quoting and adopting definition in Huntley v. Holt, 20 Atl. 469, 58 Conn. 445, 9 L. R. A. 111).

Under Pub. St. c. 191, § 1, giving a lien for labor performed or material furnished for a building by virtue of an agreement with or consent of the owner, or of any person having authority from or rightfully acting for such owner, a contract to build with one holding an agreement from the owner to sell him the land on which the building was to stand on condition that he should complete it, the money being advanced for that purpose by the owner to be repaid before the land is conveyed, imports the "consent" of the owner. Borden v. Mercer, 89 N. E. 413, 163 Mass. 7, 8.

Where a tenant was required by a lease to make repairs at his own expense, a mere general consent by the owner that the tenant should make certain temporary small repairs did not constitute "consent" within the mechanic's lien law (Laws 1897, p. 514, c. 418). Garber v. Spivak, 114 N. Y. Supp. 762, 763.

A mere general consent or requirement on the part of the owner of premises that the lessee may or shall at his own expense make alterations and repairs to the premises does not constitute "consent" within the meaning of the mechanic's lien law. Aetna Elevator Co. v. Deeves, 110 N. Y. Supp. 124, 125, 125 App. Div. 842.

The "consent" by an owner to improvements on his premises within the lien law involves a power of choice and the exercise of will respecting the subject thereof, and an owner who has power to choose whether or not his property shall be improved, and who executes a lease requiring the tenant to make substantial improvements, consents to the improvements within the law. McNulty Bros. v. Offerman, 126 N. Y. Supp. 755, 763, 141 App. Div. 730.

As used in Laws 1897, p. 516, ch. 418, § 3, providing that a contractor who furnishes labor or material for the improvement of real estate with the "consent of the owner" shall have a lien, the phrase "with the consent of the owner" means that the owner's expressed consent to the particular alteration made or with his knowledge of the particular object for which they are employed, together with acquiescence in the means adopted for that purpose. Tinsley v. Smith, 101 N. Y. Supp. 382, 383, 115 App. Div. 708 (citing Hankinson v. Vantine, 46 N. E. 292, 294, 152 N. Y. 20, 29; Rice v. Culver, 64 N. E. 761, 762, 172 N. Y. 60, 65; Burkitt v. Harper, 79 N. Y. 273; Otis v. Dodd, 90 N. Y. 336; Jones v. Menke, 60 N. E. 1053, 168 N. Y. 61; Hilton & Dodge Lumber Co. v. Murray, 62 N. Y. Supp. 35, 47 App. Div. 259).

Under Rev. St. Me. c. 93, § 29, which gives a lien for labor or materials furnished in erecting, altering, or repairing a house, building, or appurtenances by virtue of a contract with or "by consent of the owner," as construed by the Supreme Judicial Court of the state, in order that the interests in real estate of any person shall be affected by reason of his statutory consent, he must be held to have set in motion a train of circumstances which necessarily, or reasonably, or ordinarily, resulted in the furnishing of labor and materials for which the lien is claimed. A mortgagee out of possession is not an "owner" within the meaning of the statute, nor can he be held to have consented to the displacement of his own lien merely because he may have knowledge of the making of the improvements. Central Trust Co. of New York v. Bodwell Water Power Co., 181 Fed. 735, 738.

Improvements on leased premises, consisting mainly in removing partitions, and in painting and plastering the larger rooms thereby made, were such as were necessary for the use of the premises which the parties contemplated when the lease was executed. Held, that though lessors must have known lessee intended to make these improvements, and in a sense consented thereto, it was not the "consent" mentioned in the mechanic's lien law (Laws 1897, p. 514, c. 418); the tenant in such case being permitted, but not required, except for his own purpose, to make the changes, and lessors not having by their lease specifically contracted for the particular improvement. Garber v. Spivak, 119 N. Y. Supp. 269, 270, 65 Misc. Rep. 37.

Where a new section of floor was laid with the intention of making it a permanent improvement to the building, as well as a convenience to the tenant, who held under a lease providing that the premises were to be used as a skating rink, and it would have been of no avail for removal by the tenant during his tenancy, and was not in fact removed by him, and the building, with the floor so repaired, continued to be used as a skating rink after he surrendered possession, and the president of the owner was present in the building the day after the repairs were commenced, and had knowledge of the proposed repairs before the old boards had all been taken up and any part of the new floor laid or the materials therefor furnished, but expressed no dissent and gave no notice that the owner would not be responsible, and, in a suit by the owner against the tenant for rent, he was given credit for a specified sum as "an allowance on floor," such facts constituted a "consent by the owner" to the laying of the new section of floor, within Rev. St. c. 93, § 29, giving a lien for labor performed or materials furnished in repairing a building "by virtue of a contract with or by consent of the owner." York v. Mathis, 68 Atl. 746, 749, 103 Me. 67.

Civ. Code 1902, § 3008, provides that any person to whom a debt is due for materials furnished and used in the erection of any building, by virtue of an agreement with "or by consent of the owner of such building," shall have a lien. Section 3011 provides that the owner of any such building, in process of erection, other than the party by whom or in whose behalf a contract for materials has been made, may prevent the attachment of of any lien for materials not then furnished by giving notice, in writing, to the person furnishing such material that he will not be responsible therefor. A contractor purchased lumber of plaintiff to be used in defendant's house, but the only evidence that the owner knew from whom the lumber was obtained was his direction to one of plaintiff's teamsters to tell plaintiff to send him good lumber. Held, that the word "consent," as used in the statute, implies "choice," and implies an agreement which, but for the consent, could not exist, and which the party consenting has a right to forbid, and that section 3011 does not necessitate a notice that the owner of a building will not be responsible for the material used therein, unless he had given his consent, as provided by section 8008, and that a lien did not exist on defendant's property for the lumber furnished by plaintiff, as he gave no consent to have plaintiff furnish the lumber. Metz v. Critcher, 68 S. E. 627, 628, 86 S. C. 348.

"Consent," as used in statutes giving a lien for improvements made with the consent of the owner, means the unity of opinion; the accord of minds; to think alike; to be of one mind; and involves the presence of two or more persons, for without at least two persons there cannot be a unity of opinion or an accord of minds, or any thinking alike. Mere acquiescence in the erection or alteration, with knowledge, is not sufficient evidence of the consent which the statute requires. There must be something more. Consent is not a vacant or neutral attitude in respect of a question of such material interest to the property owner, but is affirmative in its nature, and should not be implied contrary to the obvious truth, unless upon equitable principles the owner should be estopped from asserting it. Christianson v. Hughes, 122 N. W. 384, 386, 18 N. D. 282, 138 Am. St. Rep. 762 (citing Coorsen v. Ziehl, 79 N. W. 562, 103 Wis. 381; Huntly v. Holt, 20 Atl. 469, 58 Conn. 445, 9 W. R. A. 111; De Klyn v. Gould, 59 N. E. 95, 165 N. Y. 287, 80 Am. St. Rep. 719).

A hardware dealer furnished at the request of a husband material for his wife's house, and installed a furnace therein. The husband and wife when the materials were furnished and the work done resided close to the dwelling. The wife was frequently at the house when the work was in progress, and lived in it when the furnace was installed. The hardware and furnace were charged to the husband, and were necessary for the completion of the house. Held, that the property was subject to a mechanic's lien for the materials and work, under Lien Law, § 3 (Laws 1897, p. 516, c. 418). Schummer v. Clark, 95 N. Y. Supp. 836, 107 App. Div. 631.

CONSENT RULE

In order to simplify the ancient action of ejectment, the court imposed terms upon the tenant in possession upon admitting him as a defendant by requiring him to enter into a rule of court known as a "consent rule," to confess three of the four requisites for the maintenance of the action, namely, lease, entry, and ouster, which were wholly fictitious, leaving the trial to stand upon the merits of the title only. Mt. Pleasant Cemetery Co. v. Erie R. Co. (N. J.) 65 Atl. 193.

CONSEQUENCE

See Immediate Consequences; Natural Consequences; Probable Consequence.

Cause synonymous

"Cause" and "consequence" are correlative terms. One implies the other. When an event is followed in natural sequence by a result it is adapted to produce or aid in producing, that result is a consequence of the event, and the event is the cause of the result. Monroe v. Hartford St. Ry. Co., 58 Atl. 498, 501, 76 Conn. 201.

CONSEQUENTIAL CONTEMPT

"Consequential contempts" are such as arise from matters not transpiring in court, but relate to a failure to comply with the orders and decrees issued by the court, and to be performed elsewhere. Appearing in court and refusing to produce the body of a child pursuant to the requirements of a writ of habeas corpus, without reasonable excuse, or willfully making an evasive or insufficient answer thereto, is a direct contempt. Smythe v. Smythe, 114 Pac. 257, 258, 28 Okl. 266 (citing Ex parte Sternes, 19 Pac. 275, 77 Cal. 156, 11 Am. St. Rep. 251).

CONSEQUENTIAL DAMAGES

Damages are either "direct" or "consequential"; the former being such as result from an act without the intervention of any intermediate controlling or self-efficient cause; the latter, such as are not produced without the concurrence of some other event attributable to the same origin or cause. Lols-eau v. Arp, 114 N. W. 701, 703, 21 S. D. 566, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 855, 130 Am. St. Rep. 741.

"Consequential damages" are those which are not the direct and necessary consequences of the wrongful conduct of the defendant, but merely the natural results thereof. Swain v. Tennessee Copper Co., 78 S. W. 93, 95, 111 Tenn. 430.

The condemnation law in case of a taking of part of a parcel requires compensation, not only for the land actually taken, but for consequential damages to the remainder, which damages include diminution of value by the taking alone and diminution of value because of the use of land taken. In re New York, Westchester & B. Ry. Co., 130 N. Y. S. 1005, 1008, 73 Misc. Rep. 219.

"When soil is removed from its natural position by one owner and the soil of an adjoining owner is thereby permitted to fall, such result is not a consequential damage, but a direct injury. * * * It is true that the word 'damaged' has been held to mean such damages as were recoverable at common law between individuals, but in view of the rule of the carrying away of land by its own weight is not consequential damage, but is an actual infringement and 'taking of property,' we think the same rule should apply where the land is carried away by means of water which is released in a public street by any means which would amount to an actual 'taking' and a resulting damage." And hence where land is carried away by means of water which is released, in a public street through the operations of certain railroads in constructing a tunnel under the street, the damage so occasioned is an actual infringement and "taking of property" within the Constitution, declaring that private property shall not be "damaged" for public use without just compensation. Farnandis v. Great Northern R. Co., 84 Pac. 18, 20, 21, 41 Wash. 486, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1086, 111 Am. St. Rep. 1027.

"Consequential damages" are defined to be those which the cause in question naturally but indirectly produces, and those which, though directly, are not immediately, consequential upon the act or default complained of. The term "consequential damages," when applied to the ascertainment of damages for the taking of private property for a public use, is strictly applicable to the damages which are caused to the property not taken by the use of the property taken, but the term is frequently used to refer to the damages inflicted upon the residue by the mere taking itself. The statement in the minutes of the commissioners of estimate appointed to ascertain the damages for lands taken by a city to bear a bridge pier, that they considered the whole estate and, having reached the conclusion as to the loss and damage sustained by determining the value of the whole and the value of the remainders after the taking, the difference between them being the loss and damages sustained, in other words, the result arrived at by us comprehended not only our deliberate judgment of the value of the premises taken, but also the consequential damages caused by the taking, is uncertain, and the proceeding will be remitted to them to state the grounds of their decision. In re Board of Public Improvements of City of New York, 91 N. Y. Supp. 161, 163, 99 App. Div. 576 (quoting the definitions in And. Law Dict., and Bouv. Law Dict.).

CONSEQUENTIAL INJURIES

The common law allowed no damages for what we call "consequential injuries," and therefore, as no statute is necessary to exempt from such damages, a statute is not to be construed as enacted for that purpose or to serve such purpose. Leffmann v. Long Island Ry. Co., 93 N. Y. Supp. 647, 648, 47 Misc. Rep. 169.

CONSERVATOR

CONSERVATOR OF THE PEACE

"Conservators" of the peace are defined as common-law officers whose duties, as such, were to prevent and arrest for breaches of the peace in their presence. The provisions of the Constitution of Utah that certain officers "shall be servators of the peace and may hold preliminary examinations," imposes a positive duty in respect to breaches of the public peace, committed in their presence, but does not impose a positive duty in respect to holding preliminary examinations, and a statute conferring jurisdiction on other officers to act as committing magistrates, is not in conflict with the Constitution. State v. Shockley, 80 Pac. 865, 868, 29 Utah, 25, 110 Am. St. Rep. 639 (quoting and adopting 8 Cyc. p. 586).

CONSERVE THE BEST INTERESTS OF THE AGENCY

In an agreement by the proprietors of a department store to act as agents for plaintiff in the sale of patterns, fashion sheets, etc., to keep the patterns on the ground floor, to give proper attention to the sale, etc., and to endeavor at all times to "conserve the best interests of the agency," the words "conserve the best interests of the agency" must necessarily be regarded as delegating to the proprietors a discretion in determining from time to time what would constitute the best interests of the agency, and preliminary injunction would not be granted to restrain the proprietors from dealing in other patterns; it being doubtful that the contract required a construction forbidding the proprietors to sell other patterns. New Idea Pattern Co. v. Whitner, 64 Atl. 518, 519, 215 Pa. 193.

CONSIDER

"To 'consider' is to fix the mind upon with a view to careful examination; to ponder; study; meditate upon; think or reflect with care." It is in this sense that the word is used in a statute requiring that an ordinance shall be printed before it is considered. Hallock v. City of Lebanon, 64 Atl. 362, 363, 215 Pa. 1.

As adjudge

The "consideration" mentioned in rule 18 of the Department of the Interior providing for the forwarding of all applications for change of entry or settlement, to the Commissioner of the General Land Office for his consideration, is not of the character of a review of a decision already made by local land officers, but is in the nature of an original consideration of the subject by the General Land Office to which office the final decision belongs, and not only does the equitable title pass to the applicant upon approval by the General Land Office, but it does not pass until such approval. Clearwater Timber Co. v. Shoshone County, 155 Fed. 612, 323.

CONSIDERABLE TIME

Statement of one trading property that the mortgage thereon had a "considerable time" to run was not false; it not being due for six months. Strait v. Wilkins, 116 Pac. 685, 686, 16 Cal. App. 188.

An instruction in a personal injury case that if a city permitted a defect in a street to continue for a "considerable length of time," which rendered it unsafe and dangerous, it was liable for injuries caused thereby, was so indefinite as to offer no proper test for the guidance of the jury. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Dorr, 85 Pac. 533, 535, 73 Kan. 486 (quoting City of Lincoln v. Calvert, 58 N. W. 115, 39 Neb. 305).

A "consideration" for a contract may in general terms be defined to be something of value received by one party or parted with by the other by reason of the contract. Grant v. Isett, 105 Pac. 1021, 1022, 81 Kan. 246.

The "consideration" of a contract is the reason which moves the contracting parties to enter into it. This implies mutuality, and that the parties have mutually contemplated the matter of consideration; the one agreeing to pay the price or exchange the article, or forego the right, while the other for an equivalent accepts the same upon the precise terms proffered. Burgher v. Wabash R. Co., 120 S. W. 673, 674, 139 Mo. App. 62.

The "consideration" of a deed may be either a good or valuable one. Groves v. Groves, 62 N. E. 1044, 1045, 65 Ohio St. 442.

A special contract limiting the liability of a common carrier is without "consideration" if the charges and services rendered, as a rule, are the same in all respects without as with the special contract. Schaller v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 71 N. W. 1042, 1043, 97 Wis. 36.

"Consideration" of a contract for the sale of land which by force of Rev. Laws, c. 74, § 2, may be proved by parol evidence, does not mean the "price" for which the land was sold, but means the "consideration" of the promise sued on, and therefore a vendor of land cannot recover the price notwithstanding the statute of frauds, but that statute applies as much when the vendor is sued "upon a contract for the sale of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or for any interest in or concerning them," as when the vendor is sued on such a contract. Bogigian v. Booklovers' Library, 79 N. E. 769, 770, 193 Mass. 444.

Defendant, codefendant, and two others agreed to purchase a controlling interest in a corporation and to contribute a specified sum as their part of the price. After each contributed the part allotted to him, there remained a balance which would have to be borrowed. It was mutually agreed that defendant should act for the codefendant and the two others, authorized to borrow money, which was used for the joint benefit of the parties. Defendant executed, as maker, a note for the money, and codefendant signed it as indorser. Held, that the indorsement, whether made before or after the delivery of the note to the agent of the payee, was supported by sufficient consideration, within Rev. Laws, c. 73, §§ 41, 42, defining value as a consideration. Young v. Hayes, 99 N. E. 327, 212 Mass. 525.

"Insurance" is a contract by which one party, in consideration of a price paid adequate to the risk, becomes security to the other that he may not suffer loss, prejudice, or damage by the happening of the perils specified to certain things which may be exposed to them. The ingredients of the contract are the consideration, the risk, and the indemnity. The "consideration" is the premium for the insurer's undertaking. Physicians' Defense Co. v. Cooper, 199 Fed. 576, 578, 118 C. C. A. 50.

Under Insurance Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 28) § 58, providing that insurance policies shall contain the entire contract, and that nothing shall be incorporated therein by reference without indorsement or attachment to the policy, a life policy, reciting that the consideration thereof is the application therefor, which is made a part of the contract, and of the payment in the manner specified of the premium stated, may not be defeated by false statements in the application and medical examination, not indorsed on or attached to the policy, to which was annexed a paper entitled "Copy of the application upon which this Policy is Issued," and in the form of questions and answers, some of which related to decedent's present and previous occupation and to his then and previous condition, health, and habits; the word "consideration" in the policy not being limited to its technical definition of some right, interest, profit, or benefit accruing to the one party or some detriment or loss given or undertaken by the other, but being used in the sense of inducing cause. Becker v. Colonial Life Ins. Co., 138 N. Y. Supp. 491, 493, 153 App. Div. 382.

Benefit to promisor, or loss to promisee

"Consideration" is a benefit to the party promising, or a loss or detriment to the party to whom the promise is made. Roller v. McGraw, 60 S. E. 410, 413, 63 W. Va. 462; Frye v. Hubbell, 68 Atl. 325, 332, 74 N. H. 358, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1197 (quoting and adopting definition in Kidder v. Blake, 45 N. H. 530, 532); Phoenix Cement Sidewalk Co. v. Russellville Water & Light Co., 140 S. W. 996, 999, 101 Ark. 22 (citing Ex parte Hodges, 24 Ark. 197; Bell v. Greenwood, 21 Ark. 249; Johnson v. Walker, 25 Ark. 196; Brinkley Car Works Mfg. Co. v. Farrell, 80 S. W. 749, 72 Ark. 354); Southern Realty Co. v. Hannon, 132 N. W. 533, 534, 89 Neb. 802.

Any prejudice suffered or agreed to be suffered by a person, other than such as he is at the time of consent bound to suffer as an inducement to the promisor, is a good consideration for a promise. Any benefit conferred or agreed to be conferred on the promisor, by any other person, to which the promisor is not entitled, is a good consideration for a promise. Snyder's Comp. Laws 1909, § 1075. Eastman Land & Investment Co. v. Long-Bell Lumber Co., 120 Pac. 276, 278, 30 Okl. 555.

A "consideration" essential to a contract is satisfied by a disadvantage to the promisee as well as by a benefit to him. Pabst Brewing Co. v. City of Milwaukee, 105 N. W. 563, 566, 126 Wis. 110 (citing 1 Para. Cont. [9th Ed.] § 431).

The general rule as to consideration is that it must flow from both parties and both parties must receive a benefit from the contract, and the law only considers that as a benefit, in cases of purely executory contracts, which it can assure to the other party. Corbett v. Cronkhite, 87 N. E. 874, 877, 239 Ill. 9.

A "consideration" no more means that one party has profited than it does that the other party has put himself to some trouble or inconvenience or abandoned some right or assumed some burden on the faith of the promise of the other party, and it is wholly immaterial whether the party against whom the promise is sought to be enforced has received anything of value or an actual benefit to him for his promise. Underwood Type- writer Co. v. Century Realty Co., 94 S. W. 787, 788, 118 Mo. App. 197.

"Consideration" means not so much that one party is profited as that the other abandons some legal right in the present, or limits his legal freedom of action in the future, as an inducement for the promise of the first. It does not matter whether the party accepting the consideration has any apparent benefit thereby or not; it is enough that he accepts it and that the party giving it does hereby undertake some burden or lose something which in contemplation of law may be of value. Where a mortgagee of property sought to be taken by a city satisfied the mortgage, and surrendered to the mortgagor the bond thereby secured, in consideration of the mortgagor giving to the mortgagee a check for a specified sum, the check was supported by a sufficient consideration whether or not the mortgagor was indebted to the mortgagee, and though at the time of the agreement the title to the premises had vested in the city. Scanlon v. Wallach, 102 N. Y. Supp. 1090, 1091, 53 Misc. Rep. 104 (quoting Poll. Cont. p. 167); Scriba v. Neely, 109 S. W. 845, 846, 180 Mo. App. 258.

"Consideration" is a benefit to the party making a promise, or to a third person at his request, or an inconvenience, loss, or injury to the promisor. The amount of the consideration, so it be appreciable, is immaterial. Strode v. St. Louis Transit Co., 95 S. W. 851, 853, 197 Mo. 616, 7 Ann. Cas. 1084 (citing Green v. Higham, 61 S. W. 798, 161 Mo. loc. cit. 337; 1 Parsons, Contracts [2d Ed.] p. 357).

A "consideration" is any benefit to the promisor, or any loss, trouble, or inconvenience to or charge upon the person to whom the promise is made. Either benefit to the promisor, or detriment to the promisee, is sufficient. A consideration emanating from some injury or inconvenience to one party, or from some benefit to the other, is a valuable consideration. Any collateral benefit received by the creditor, which is entitled to be regarded as a technical legal consideration will be held to be sufficient to support the contract. Where an insolvent judgment debtor sold exempt property and paid the proceeds to the judgment creditor in satisfaction of the judgment, there was a sufficient consideration for the release of the balance due on the judgment. Ward, Murray & Co. v. Young, 89 S. W. 456, 457, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 294 (quoting and adopting the definitions in Emerson v. Slater, 22 How. [U. S.] 43, 16 L. Ed. 365; Brantly, Contracts, 57; Conover v. Stillwell, 84 N. J. Law, 54; Brooks v. White, 2 Metc. [43 Mass.] 233, 37 Am. Dec. 95).

"The word 'consideration' is variously defined, but generally it may be said that any damage or suspension of a right or possibility of a loss occasioned to the plaintiff by the promise of another is a sufficient consideration for such promise and will make it binding, although no actual benefit accrues to the party promising. A surety on a note was released under Ky. St. 1903, § 2551, for a failure to sue thereon within seven years after the accrual of the cause of action. Thereafter the payee accepted a renewal note for the same sum from the same makers with the same surety as surety. Held, that the extension of time given by the payee to the makers was a sufficient consideration to support the promise of the surety to pay the new note. Steger v. Jackson (Ky.) 102 S. W. 329 (citing Hendrick v. Lindsay, 93 U. S. 143, 23 L. Ed. 855; Page on Contracts, § 274; Bouv. Law Dict., title "Consideration").

A county leased its rock-crushing machine for four months and not to exceed five months, unless by additional contract. No additional contract was made, and after the expiration of the period the county leased the machine to a third person while the machine was in the possession of the original lessee. Thereafter all three parties agreed that the original lessee might retain the machine until it completed specified work, and in consideration thereof it promised to furnish to the third person a similar machine. Held, that by the subsequent agreement the original lessee became obligated to the third person to furnish a similar machine and was liable for failure so to do; the agreement being supported by a valid "consideration," defined to be a benefit accruing to him making a promise, or a loss undergone by him to whom the promise is made. Phoenix Cement Sidewalk Co. v. Russellville Water & Light Co., 140 S. W. 996, 999, 101 Ark. 22.

Benefit to third person

There is sufficient consideration for a promise whenever the act of the promisee results in a benefit to the promisor, or at his request, to a third person, or imposes a loss or inconvenience, or obligation on the promisee at the instance of the promisor, though no advantage result to him. Utah Nat. Bank of Salt Lake City v. Nelson, 111 Pac. 907, 913, 88 Utah, 169 (quoting 2 Words and Phrases, pp. 1444-1448).

A "consideration" may consist either in some right, interest, profit, or benefit accruing to one party or some forbearance, detriment, loss, or responsibility given, suffered, or undertaken by the other. "It is not essential that the person to whom the consideration moves should be benefited, provided the person from whom it moves is in a legal sense injured. The injury may consist of a compromise of a disputed claim or forbearance to exercise a legal right, the alteration in position being regarded as a detriment that forms a consideration independent of the actual value of the right forborne." The abandonment by the sole heir at law of a testator of opposition to the probate of the will at the request of the executor is a sufficient consideration for the promise of the executor to pay a named sum to a third person, though such payee had no interest in the estate under the will or otherwise. Rector, etc., St. Mark's Church v. Teed, 24 N. E. 1014, 1015, 120 N. Y. 596.

Doing what one is bound to do

Civ. Code, § 1605, providing that "any benefit conferred, or agreed to be conferred, upon the promisor by any other person to which the promisor is not lawfully entitled, or any prejudice suffered, or agreed to be suffered, by such person, other than such as he is at the time of consent lawfully bound to suffer, as an inducement to the promisor, is a good consideration for a promise." The converse of the above rule is equally true, that a benefit conferred to which the promisor is already lawfully entitled is not a good consideration for a promise. Hence where a wife had possession of and paid the premiums on an insurance policy on the life of her husband payable to his representatives, and delivered the policy to the husband to enable him to have it changed to a paid-up policy, there was no "consideration" for a promise of the husband, on receiving the policy, to dispose of the proceeds thereof by will in a certain manner, in the absence of anything to show that the wife had the right to the possession of the policy or was in any way bound to pay the premiums thereon, or that she paid them on the faith of any such promise. Schaadt v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 84 Pac. 249, 251, 2 Cal. App. 715.

Under a statute defining "consideration" as any benefit conferred or agreed to be conferred upon the promisor by any other person to which the promisor is not legally entitled, or any prejudice suffered or agreed to be suffered by such (other) person, other than such as he at the time is lawfully bound to suffer, as an inducement to the promise, a promise of part payment of wages due employees is not a good "consideration" for their agreement to extend the time for payment of the remainder. Skinner v. Garnett Gold Min. Co., 96 Fed. 735, 737.

There is a sufficient "consideration" for a contract, if the promisee in return for the promise does anything legal which he is not bound to do, or refrains from doing anything which he has a right to do. Street v. Galt, 121 N. Y. Supp. 514, 516, 136 App. Div. 724.

"Consideration" means, not so much that one party is profiting, as that the other abandons some legal right in the present or limits his legal freedom of action in the future as an inducement for the promise of the first." Under this rule, refraining from the use of liquor and tobacco for a certain time at the request of another is a sufficient consideration for a promise by the latter to pay a certain sum of money. Hamer v. Sidway, 27 N. E. 256, 257, 124 N. Y. 545, 12 L. R. A. 463, 21 Am. St. Rep. 693 (quoting definition in Pollock, Contracts, 166).

Marriage

Formal marriage articles, by which a father agrees to devise property to his son, the prospective bridegroom, equally with the other children, and under which the son subsequently marries, are supported by a sufficient "consideration" to enable the son to maintain an action for specific performance thereof. Phalen v. United States Trust Co. of New York, 78 N. E. 943, 951, 186 N. Y. 178, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 734, 9 Ann. Cas. 595.

Kirby's Dig. § 2684, declaring that, in every final judgment for divorce granted a husband, an order shall be made that all property be restored to either party, which either party obtained through or from the other during the marriage and in "consideration" and by reason thereof, means by the use of the word "consideration" the act of marriage, or some agreement or contract relating to the act of marriage, and by the phrase "by reason thereof" means such property as either party may have obtained from or through the other by the operation of laws regulating the property rights of husband and wife. Spurlock v. Spurlock, 96 S. W. 753, 754, 80 Ark. 37.

Held, that on divorce granted a husband he was not entitled to have restored to him property conveyed by him to the wife under a separation agreement and that conveyed to her by him in consideration of her again living with him. The Supreme Court of Kentucky in construing the word "consideration" in this act (Kirby's Dig. § 2684) held it to mean "the act of marriage, or some agreement or contract touching or relating to the act of marriage," and the expression "by reason thereof," as relating to such property as either party may have obtained from or through the other, by operation of the laws regulating the property rights of husband and wife. McNutt v. McNutt, 95 S. W. 778, 780, 78 Ark. 346 (quoting Phillips v. Phillips, 9 Bush [72 Ky.] 183; Flood v. Flood, 5 Bush [68 Ky.] 167).

"Consideration" may mean either "price" or "motive." State v. Pirkey, 118 N. W. 1042, 1045, 22 S. D. 550, 18 Ann. Cas. 192.

There is an essential difference between the "motive" which induces a party to enter into a contract and the "consideration" yielded for its support. "Motive" is not the same thing with "consideration"; it is, however, not to be doubted that there is a clear distinction between the motive that may induce to entering into a contract, and the "consideration" of the contract. Nothing is consideration that is not regarded as such by both parties. Standley v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 95 Ind. 254, 259.

Mutual promises

Where several persons promised to contribute to a common object of advantage to themselves, the promise of each is a good "consideration" for promise of themselves, and, after some of the promisors have performed their agreement, an action will lie on their behalf against others who have made default. People's Bank & Trust Co. v. Weidinger, 64 Atl. 180, 181, 13 N. J. Law, 433 (citing and adopting definition in Lathrop v. Knapp, 27 Wis. 214).

"A promise is a good 'consideration' for a promise, provided always that it imposes some legal liability on the person making it." A contract purporting to make one party sole selling agent for the other party, was without "consideration," where it contained no promise by the agent to do anything. Commercial Wood & Cement Co. v. Northampton Portland Cement Co., 100 N. Y. Supp. 960, 964, 115 App. Div. 888 (quoting and adopting the definition in 9 Cyc. p. 325. Citing Chicago & G. E. R. R. Co. v. Dane, 43 N. Y. 240; Rafolovitz v. American Tobacco Co., 25 N. Y. Supp. 1036, 73 Hun, 87).

Release or settlement

A "consideration" may be something beneficial to the promisor or disadvantageous to the promisee. A release of a legal right by the promisee is a sufficient consideration to support a contract. Wm. Deering & Co. v. Veal (Ky.) 78 S. W. 886, 887 (quoting Bish. Cont. §§ 61-63).

The giving of the individual note of a partner for part of a copartnership debt is a good "consideration" for an agreement on the part of the creditor to release and discharge him from liability for the other part of the debt. Ludington v. Bell, 77 N. Y. 138, 140, 33 Am. Rep. 601.

Though the amount of a check tendered a discharged employé was admittedly due him, if the employer was unwilling to pay it unless the employé accepted it in satisfaction of his claim for damages for discharge, and it was tendered and accepted on that condition, there was a settlement of the claim for damages on a valid consideration within the meaning of Rev. St. c. 84, § 59. Fuller v. Smith, 77 Atl. 706, 708, 107 Me. 161.

When defendant, the cashier of plaintiff bank, executed a note to the bank in order to make up in part a defalcation by some unknown person, he believed that he was legally liable for at least a part of the defalcation, as did the president and vice president; but there was a controversy as to the amount defendant should pay, which was left to the vice president, who decided that defendant should pay the amount of the note, whereupon defendant, without protest, executed the note to the bank for that amount without any promise of reimbursement unless the stolen money should be recovered or the stockholders voluntarily assess themselves to replace it. Defendant, as cashier, was custodian of the money stolen. Held, that the arrangement between defendant and the other officers was a compromise of any claim the bank had against the defendant, the subsequent ratification of which by the directors released defendant from any claim by the bank, and such compromise was a sufficient "consideration" for the execution of the note, even if defendant were not actually liable for the defalcation; any suspension or forbearance in good faith of a legal right being sufficient to sustain a promise. Utah Nat. Bank of Salt Lake City v. Nelson, 111 Pac. 907, 913 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1447).

As inducement to act

As used in the treaty of February 19, April 22, 1867 (15 Stat. 505), reading "and in further consideration of the destitution of said bands of Sisseton and Wahpeton Sioux," etc., the words "in consideration of" do not import a technical consideration such as is needed in a private bargain not under seal, but imports only the inducement that led Congress to make the promise. United States v. Sisseton and Wahpeton Bands of Sioux Indians, 28 Sup. Ct. 352, 355, 208 U. S. 561, 52 L. Ed. 621.

CONSIGN

The words "consign" and "consigned," employed in a commercial sense, mean "that the property was committed or intrusted to the consignee for care or sale, and do not by any express or fair implication mean the sale by one or purchase by another." B. F. Sturtevant Co. v. Cumberland Dugan & Co., 68 Atl. 351, 356, 106 Md. 587, 14 Ann. Cas. 419 (quoting and adopting definition in Sturm v. Boker, 14 Sup. Ct. 99, 150 U. S. 812, 37 L. Ed. 1093).

"To consign" means to deliver into the care and control of another; to intrust or commit. A man cannot consign a thing to another by merely saying that he consigns it, any more than he can deliver it by mere words. Ryttenberg v. Schefer, 181 Fed. 313, 321.

A delivery by a manufacturer of written consignments of goods to a selling agent who advanced to the manufacturer a part of the market value of the goods on the consignments, is a constructive delivery of the goods, and the manufacturer is estopped from asserting that he had not consigned the goods to the agent; the word "consigned," denoting delivery. James Freeman Brown Co. v. Harris, 70 S. E. 802, 808, 88 S. O. 553.

"To consign" means to transfer to a factor for sale. Wasey v. Whitcomb, 132 N. W. 572, 578, 167 Mich. 58.

CONSIGNEE

A "consignee" is one to whom a consignment of goods is made; the person to whom goods are shipped for sale. A buyer, who bought goods shipped to a third person after the goods had arrived at their place of destination, is not a consignee of the goods within a stipulation in the contract of sale that the consignee shall pay freight charges; the buyer being required to take the goods at the place of destination. American Soda Fountain Co. v. Gerrer's Bakery, 78 Pac. 115, 117, 14 Okl. 258, 2 Ann. Cas. 318.

Cr. Code, § 240, provides that whoever shall knowingly ship from one state into another any package containing intoxicating liquor, unless the package be so labeled on the outside cover as to plainly show the name of the consignee, the nature of the contents, and the quantity contained therein, shall be fined and the liquor forfeited. Held, that the term "consignee" was so used in its primary legal sense to describe the person to whom the liquor was to be delivered at destination in accordance with the contract of carriage, and hence where wholesale merchants in California, after collecting enough orders from purchasers in New England to make car load shipments, labeled each package with its own name, the character and quantity of the liquor, and the name of the purchaser, and consigned the entire car to itself or to its own order with directions to the carrier to notify designated persons, the shipper was also the consignee within the statute; the names of the purchasers being regarded as surplusage, so that there was no violation of the act. United States v. Eighty-Seven Barrels, Etc., of Wine, 180 Fed. 215, 220.

CONSIGNMENT

A contract which recites that plaintiff has become defendant's agent for the sale of powder at Denver, Colo., and throughout Colorado, is a "consignment contract." King Powder Co. v. Dillon, 96 Pac. 439, 441, 42 Colo. 316.

A contract between a retail piano dealer and defendant provided that defendant, paying for pianos purchased by the dealer for himself, should consign them to the dealer for sale, and that the dealer should accept, on consignment, such pianos at prices and on conditions agreed on; that the dealer should report all sales and settle for cash sales immediately; that lien notes should be indorsed to defendant until the amount due for the instruments represented was settled, with interest; that the dealer's commission should be the amount for which instruments were sold in excess of the cost thereof, as represented by consignment receipts, reciting that the instruments should remain the property of defendant; and that the dealer should make all collections, and carry insurance to cover cost of instruments in stock, and to surrender to defendant, on 30 days' notice, unsold instruments held on consignment. Held, that the contract vested in defendant the title to pianos purchased from manufacturers and paid for, and was not a chattel mortgage to secure defendant; the term "consignment" indicating title in the consignor. Wasey v. Whitcomb, 182 N. W. 572, 578, 167 Mich. 58.

CONSISTENT

See Inconsistent—Inconsistency.

Under the rule of law that cities organized under section 16 of article 9 of the Constitution and the provision that they shall be "consistent with and subject to the Constitution and laws of the state," "consistent with" does not import exact conformity, but means substantial harmony with the principles of the Constitution. City of St. Louis v. De Lassus, 104 S. W. 12, 14, 205 Mo. 578 (quoting and adopting definition in Kansas City v. Bacon, 48 S. W. 860, 147 Mo. 259).

A complaint set up two causes of action: First, for a breach of contract, whereby plaintiff was entitled to an interest in certain mining options owned by defendant, and a demand and refusal that his share of the stock received on the sale of the options to a corporation be turned over to him; and second, for conversion, claiming that certain shares of said stock were set apart for him pursuant to the agreement, and subsequently converted. Held inconsistent, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 484, providing two causes of action may be joined, if growing out of the same transaction, and if "consistent." Hill v. McKane, 128 N. Y. Supp. 819, 821, 71 Misc. Rep. 581.

Spokane Commission Charter, § 125, provides that it may be amended by a majority vote on the amendments, that the provision with respect to submission of legislation to popular vote by initiative or by the council of its own motion shall apply to and include the proposal, submission, and adoption of amendments, and that the council may make further regulations to carry out the provisions of the article, not "inconsistent with" such provisions. Section 82, par. "c," provided for the filing of initiative petitions, requiring that the ordinance petitioned for be either adopted or submitted to a referendum vote within 30 days after the election is ordered unless a municipal election is to be held within 60 days. Held, that the words "consistent with," used in Const. art. 11, § 10, authorizing the amendment of the charters of first class cities so long as the amendment is consistent with the Constitution and statutes meant "not hostile to," therefore conferring power on such cities to legislate on every subject not "inconsistent with" or hostile to the statutes and Constitution, so that the provision for the submission of amendments at a special election was not in violation of Const. art. 11, § 10, providing that such amendments may be submitted at any general election. State v. Superior Court for Spokane County, 126 Pac. 920, 921, 70 Wash. 352.

Of actions

The independent and separate existence of an action may be terminated by "consolidation." Allen v. McRae, 100 N. W. 12, 13, 122 Wis. 246.

"The natural meaning and inherent force of the word 'consolidation' are perfectly plain, although it is known that in some of the authorities the word is used loosely. It has its place in proceedings in equity or in admiralty, where several libels or petitions are by authority of the court combined in one so that at the close only one decree is rendered." An order of the court directing that nine indictments against a defendant, charging the fraudulent use of the mails, shall be tried together and at the same time, is not a consolidation in the proper sense of the word. Betts v. United States, 132 Fed. 223, 234, 65 C. C. A. 452.

Actions consolidated under Code Civ. Proc. § 1894, merged into one suit, and only a single judgment should be rendered settling the entire controversy. The consolidation of actions under this statute must be distinguished from what has been known for many years as the "consolidation rule," which was first devised and established by Lord Mansfield. Under that rule, where many cases were pending between the same parties in which the same issues were involved, one case was tried, and all proceedings in the other cases were stayed until after such trial. It must also be distinguished from the old practice in equity of consolidating equity cases. Under such practice, each case was decided upon its own pleadings and evidence. The consolidation in equity cases under this practice was practically consolidating them for the purpose of trial alone. Handley v. Sprinkle, 77 Pac. 296, 298, 31 Mont. 57, 3 Ann. Cas. 531.

Of corporations

The "consolidation" of two or more railroad corporations pursuant to the laws of different states results in the formation of one corporation, which is regarded as a domestic corporation in each of the states whose laws are followed in effecting the consolidation. Smith v. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 81 N. E. 501, 506, 170 Ind. 382.

Where a street railroad company transfers all its property and business to another company, in consideration of stock and bonds of the latter issued to the stockholders and bondholders of the former to replace its stock and bonds which were surrendered and canceled, no money being paid, such transaction, as to the creditors of the former company, should be considered a consolidation of the companies, by which the latter becomes liable for the debts of the former. Shadford v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. R., 89 N. W. 960, 963, 130 Mich. 300.

Same—Merger distinguished

While there is a distinction recognized by most authorities between a "merger" and a "consolidation" of corporations, these terms are not always used with strict accuracy. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Doyle, 100 N. E. 278, 281, 256 Ill. 514.

In the construction of statutes providing that any two or more corporations, organized under the laws of the state, may consolidate and form a single corporation, some courts have noticed a distinction between "consolidation" and "merger"; the former term being used to describe the result of two corporations being combined into a new one, and the latter to describe the result where one corporation absorbs another. As corporate franchises are generally deemed unassignable without permission of the state, a merger is, after all, under our statute at least, a consolidation; for, although the old name of one may be retained and the other dropped, still the course to be pursued under the statute for one corporation to acquire the property of another is precisely the same as if an entirely new name were adopted. The result is a merging of corporate property and constituents, as where two streams flow together. At the junction they may be said to constitute a new stream, but essentially the latter takes in and is made up of all that formerly flowed in and now flows out of the two from which it gets its being. To use another figure, it is a marriage of two, in which neither is lost, but in which the two are blended into one in contemplation of law. The original corporate existence is merely a legal status. It is not a thing at all. The power that gave it its so-called existence is competent to change it into a new being, with all the rights and attributes of the old. No physical phenomenon is involved. The legislative purpose, and the practical application of it, will not stagger in execution of an imaginary difficulty in harmonizing a thing dead with a thing which is alive. We are of opinion, and hold, that the effect of the consolidation is to continue in the new corporation all the franchises, and vest in it all the property rights, subject to the terms on which it was acquired, of the two constituent corporations. Central University of Kentucky v. Walters' Ex'rs, 90 S. W. 1066, 1069, 122 Ky. 65.

There is a distinct difference between a "consolidation" and a "merger" of two companies. In a "consolidation" both go out of existence as separate corporations and a new corporation is created which takes their place and property; while in case of a "merger" one loses its identity by absorption in the other, which remains in existence and succeeds to its property and issues its own stock to the stockholders of the merged company. Lee v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 150 Fed. 775, 787; Kent v. Common Council of City of Binghamton, 81 N. Y. Supp. 198, 200, 40 Misc. Rep. 1 (citing Bouv. Law Dict. 175; Webst. Inter. Dict. 914); Irvine v. New York Edison Co., 128 N. Y. Supp. 297, 299, 143 App. Div. 344.

Generally speaking, the effect of a "consolidation" of corporations, as distinguished from a union by "merger" of one company into another, is to work a dissolution of the companies consolidating and to create a new corporation out of the old ones. A railroad, which was a corporation of both Illinois and Iowa having been formed by the consolidation of two companies, one of each state, and owning a line of road therein extending to the boundary line, united with five Iowa companies to form a new company, into which they consolidated and merged "their capital stocks, corporate and other franchise rights, privileges and property, of every nature and description," as permitted by the laws of both states. It was provided that the consolidated corporation should commence as soon as the required certificate should be filed in each state, and they were so filed and the corporation took over and held and operated the properties of the several constituent companies. Held, that it became a corporation of both states, and in either, for the purposes of federal jurisdiction was a corporation of that state, and could not remove a cause brought against it in a state court therein on the ground of diversity of citizenship. Wasley v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 147 Fed. 608, 614 (citing Atlantic & G. R. Co. v. Georgia, 98 U. S. 359, 25 L. Ed. 185; McMahon v. Morrison, 16 Ind. 172, 79 Am. Dec. 418; Muller v. Dows, 94 U. S. 444, 24 L. Ed. 207; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Wheeler, 1 Black, 286, 17 L. Ed. 130; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Meeh, 69 Fed. 753, 16 C. C. A. 510, 30 L. R. A. 250; Winn v. Wabash Railroad Co., 118 Fed. 55).

A "consolidation" takes place when two companies are extinguished and a new one created, taking over the holdings of those companies passing out of existence. It differs from "merger," which occurs when a thing of lesser importance is absorbed by one of greater importance. Both merger and consolidation are equally productive of union. Ramsey v. Hicks, 87 N. E. 1091, 1099, 44 Ind. App. 490 (citing Adams v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., 24 South. 200, 317, 28 South. 956, 77 Miss. 194, 60 L. R. A. 33; McMahon v. Morrison, 16 Ind. 172, 79 Am. Dec. 418; Ferguson v. Meredith, 1 Wall. [68 U. S.] 25, 17 L. Ed. 604; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Berry, 5 Sup. Ct. 529, 113 U. S. 465, 28 L. Ed. 1055; Clark & Marsh. Corp. 1042).

The Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company incorporated in Virginia and having its principal offices in Richmond, with power given by its charter to "consolidate with itself" other corporations, entered into an agreement of "consolidation and merger" with a company owning connecting lines, incorporated in other states, which agreement provided that the stock of the second company should be retired and canceled, and stock of the Coast Line Company issued in its place; that all the stock, property, and franchises of both should be merged, united, and consolidated, "so as to form a merged, united and consolidated company"; that "said merger, union, and consolidation shall be into the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company, which is to continue the name of the consolidated company"; and that its office should remain in Richmond. Under such agreement the stock of the second company was canceled, but stock previously issued by the Coast Line Company remained outstanding, and such company took charge of and operated all lines previously owned and operated by either company, without any change in its management or control. Held, that such agreement effected a merger, and not a consolidation, and that the Coast Line Company continued to exist as a Virginia corporation. Lee v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 150 Fed. 775, 782.

CONSOLS

See English Consols.

CONSONANT STATEMENT

A consonant statement may be defined as a prior declaration of a witness whose testimony has been attacked, and whose credibility stands impeached, which the court will allow to be proved by the person to whom the declaration was made to support the witness' credibility, and which, but for such impeachment, would ordinarily be excluded as hearsay. Lyke v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 84 Atl. 595, 598, 236 Pa. 38.

CONSORTIUM

See Loss of Consortium.

The term "consortium" means the society, companionship, conjugal affection, fellowship, and assistance of the wife. Boland v. Stanley, 115 S. W. 163, 165, 88 Ark. 562, 129 Am. St. Rep. 114.

The right of "consortium" is a right growing out of the marital relation, which the husband and wife have, respectively, to enjoy the society and companionship and affection of each other in their life together. Feneff v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 89 N. E. 436, 203 Mass. 278, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1024, 183 Am. St. Rep. 291.

In an action for alienation, the issue is whether the defendant by wrongful acts or conduct caused the separation of plaintiff and his or her spouse, since the gist of the action is not the loss of assistance, but is the loss of consortium, under which term is usually included the person, affection, assistance, and aid of the spouse. McGregor v. McGregor (Ky.) 115 S. W. 802, 808.

In its original application the term "consortium" was used to designate a right which the law recognized in a husband, growing out of the marital union, to have performance by the wife of all duties and obligations in respect to him which she took on herself when she entered into it, and as thus employed it includes the right to society, companionship, conjugal affection, and service. Marri v. Stamford St. R. Co., 78 Atl. 582, 588, 84 Conn. 9, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1042, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1120.

A husband, suing for injuries to his wife, is entitled, in addition to any outlays actually incurred, to be paid for his loss of conjugal fellowship, the society and affection, expressed in the civil law by the word "consortium." New York Transp. Co. v. Gar-side, 157 Fed. 521, 527, 85 C. C. A. 285.

CONSPICUOUS

Within Code 1904, § 2871, requiring that the names of the members of a limited partnership appeared "conspicuously" on the front of the place of business, means plain to the eye, and easily seen. R. S. Oglesby Co. v. Lindsey, 72 S. E. 672, 676, 112 Va. 767, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 918.

"Conspicuous" means "open to the view; catching the eye; easy to be seen; manifest; obvious to the sight; seen at a distance; exposed to the view; clearly visible; prominent and distinct." The word "conspicuous," as used in 2 Gen. St. N. J. p. 2672, § 188, authorizing railroad companies, by giving notice, to limit their responsibilities as carriers of baggage to $100 for every 100 pounds of baggage, and declaring that a general notice of the limitation of such responsibility, placed in a conspicuous place at or in the receiving office of such companies, where baggage is usually received by them for transportation, required a railroad company to post the notice in the baggage room, so that naturally under the general surrounding circumstances, it would be open to the view, obvious to the sight, and catch the eye of the passenger of ordinary care and observation, and be seen by him in the course of checking his luggage. Williams v. Central R. Co. of New Jersey, 88 N. Y. Supp. 434, 436, 93 App. Div. 582 (quoting Cent. Dict.; Wor. Dict.).

CONSPICUOUS PLACES

The act of the town clerk of a town in leaving on the counters of tradesmen notices of election on the question of the incorporation of a village and in hanging up one notice in a shop is not a compliance with Village Law, § 10, as amended by Laws 1910, c. 416, providing that the notice shall be posted in conspicuous places. In re Village of Lynbrook, 127 N. Y. Supp. 82, 84, 142 App. Div. 487.

"Conspiracy," which is a combination between two or more persons to do a criminal or unlawful act or a lawful act by criminal or unlawful means, gives no right to a civil action. Pullen v. Headberg, 127 Pac. 954, 53 Colo. 502, 955.

A combination of two or more to do the same thing by the same means is a "conspiracy." Erdman v. Mitchell, 56 Atl. 327, 331, 207 Pa. 79, 63 L. R. A. 534, 99 Am. St. Rep. 783.

A "conspiracy" at common law is the confederation and combination of two or more to do that which is unlawful or criminal to the injury of the public or portions or classes of the community, or even to the rights of an individual. A "conspiracy" is a combination to effect an illegal object as an end or means, and a "civil conspiracy" is a combination of two or more persons to accomplish by concerted action an unlawful or oppressive object, or a lawful object by unlawful or oppressive means. National Fireproofing Co. v. Mason Builders' Ass'n, 169 Fed. 259, 264, 94 C. C. A. 535, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 148.

A consummated "conspiracy," actionable for the recovery of damages at the suit of the injured person, need not satisfy every essential of St. 1898, § 4466a; the essentials of a conspiracy at common law being sufficient. White v. White, 111 N. W. 1116, 1118, 132 Wis. 121.

A "conspiracy" includes as an element a corrupt motive. United States v. Moore, 173 Fed. 122, 132.

A common design or purpose by two or more persons is the essence of the charge of "conspiracy," and this common design must be proved, either by direct evidence or by proof of such circumstances as naturally can prove it, and sufficient in themselves to show existence of such common design. Brown v. Evans, 112 N. W. 1079, 149 Mich. 429.

Where two persons pursue by their acts the same object by the same means, one performing one part of the act and the other another part thereof, so as to complete it with a view to the attaining of the object which they are pursuing, there is a "conspiracy." State v. Racine Sattley Co. (Tex.) 134 S. W. 400, 403.

An instruction on trial for conspiracy that "conspiracy" is an agreement by two persons to do an unlawful act or to do a lawful act by unlawful means, and it is the agreement to do the unlawful acts that is the gist of the whole matter, and that if the defendants went to the place named and agreed to do the acts alleged they would be guilty of conspiracy, or if two or more of them went there and committed the acts alleged by virtue of an agreement so to do, then they would be guilty of conspiracy, properly described the offense. State v. Ameker, 53 S. E. 484, 487, 73 S. C. 330.

A "conspiracy" is a criminal act, and it is unnecessary to aver the means by which the conspiracy was to be carried out. Imboden v. People, 90 Pac. 608, 615, 40 Colo. 142 (citing State v. Noyes, 25 Vt. 415; State v. Stewart, 9 Atl. 559, 59 Vt. 273, 59 Am. Rep. 710).

A "conspiracy," cannot be sustained by evidence which would merely establish separate causes of action against several defendants. Thomas Russell & Sons v. Stampers' & Gold Leaf Local Union No. 22, 107 N. Y. Supp. 303, 307, 57 Misc. Rep. 96.

Collusion synonymous

"Conspiracy" is synonymous with "collusion." Levine v. Klein, 120 N. Y. Supp. 196, 198, 65 Misc. Rep. 498; Miller v. Bayer, 68 N. W. 869, 870, 94 Wis. 125.

Agreement and proof thereof

A "conspiracy" is constituted by an agreement but is the result of the agreement rather than the agreement itself, being a partnership in criminal purposes. United States v. Kissel, 31 Sup. Ct. 124, 126, 218 U. S. 601, 54 L. Ed. 1168.

The existence of a "conspiracy" may be established by proof of acts and conduct, as well as by proof of an express agreement. Stevens v. State, 68 S. E. 874, 875, 8 Ga. App. 217.

To constitute a "conspiracy" the minds of the parties must meet in a definite line of action and a particular result. State v. Crawford, 104 N. W. 295, 296, 95 Minn. 467.

The gist of "conspiracy" is planning and agreeing to commit the offense prohibited. To make out a case of conspiracy it is necessary to prove that defendants agreed, either expressly or impliedly, to commit some one or more of the things prohibited, and in consummation thereof did some overt act. Wilcox v. United States, 108 S. W. 774, 776, 7 Ind. T. 86.

Assent of minds is involved in a "conspiracy." Such assent may be, and from the secrecy of the crime usually must be, inferred by the jury from proof of facts and circumstances which taken together apparently indicate that they are merely part of some complete whole. Butt v. State, 98 S. W. 723, 725, 81 Ark. 173, 118 Am. St. Rep. 42 (citing Underhill, Cr. Ev. § 491; Chapline v. State, 95 S. W. 477, 77 Ark. 444).

While in determining whether there was a criminal "conspiracy" the question is whether there was participation in a design, it is not necessary that defendants came together and actually agreed in terms to have the design and to pursue it by common means, but a conspiracy may, and in nearly all cases must, be proved by circumstantial evidence showing a common object and acts done in pursuance of a common object. Lawrence v. State, 63 Atl. 96, 98, 103 Md. 17 (quoting and adopting definition in Wright, Cr. Cons. with Am. Cases by Carson, 212).

To establish a "conspiracy" it is not necessary to prove an unlawful agreement by direct and positive evidence; but proof that two or more persons pursued by their acts the same unlawful object is sufficient, though no actual meeting among them to concert means is proved. Buddy v. State, 130 S. W. 522, 523, 95 Ark. 460.

"It is not necessary to constitute a 'conspiracy' that two or more persons should meet together and enter into an explicit or formal agreement for an unlawful scheme. It is sufficient if two or more persons in any manner or through any contrivance positively or tacitly come to a mutual understanding to accomplish a common and unlawful design." The preconceived plan to do the unlawful act must, from the nature of the case, be usually established by inferences drawn from the relation of the parties, from the acts done, and from the results achieved. Thomas v. U. S., 156 Fed. 897, 910, 84 C. C. A. 477, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 720 (quoting and adopting the definitions in U. S. v. Babcock, 3 Dill. 581, 585, Fed. Cas. No. 14,487).

"A 'conspiracy' may be proved by circumstantial evidence, and this is the usual mode of proving it, since it is not often that direct evidence can be had. The acts of different persons, who are shown to have known each other or to have been in communication with each other, directed toward the accomplishment of the same object, especially if by the same means, may be satisfactory proof of a conspiracy." State v. Darling (Mo.) 97 S. W. 592, 601 (quoting Scott v. State, 30 Ala. 503).

A "conspiracy" may be proved as other facts are proved by circumstantial evidence, and parties performing disconnected overt acts or contributing to the same result in the consummation of the same offense may, by the circumstances and their general connection or otherwise, be satisfactorily shown to be conspirators and confederates in the commission of the offense. One party may allure the victim into the den, leaving it to others to effect the robbery, and all will be held equally guilty as confederates. People v. Simmons, 109 N. Y. Supp. 190, 197, 125 App. Div. 234, 241 (quoting and adopting definition in Kelley v. People, 55 N. Y. 576, 14 Am. Rep. 342).

A "conspiracy" in criminal law is a combination of two or more persons by some concerted action to accomplish some criminal or unlawful purpose. To constitute a "conspiracy," it is not necessary that two or more persons should meet together and enter into an explicit or formal agreement for an unlawful scheme, or that they should directly in words or in writing state what the unlawful scheme is to be and details of the plan or means by which the unlawful combination is to be made effective. It is sufficient if two or more persons in any manner or through any contrivance passively or tacitly come to a mutual understanding to accomplish the combination and unlawful design. To violate Rev. St. U. S. § 5208, making it unlawful for any officer of any national banking association to certify any check drawn on the association unless the person drawing the check has on deposit with the association an amount equal to the amount specified in the check, a plurality of guilty agents is not necessary, and the drawer of a check and an officer of the association may enter into a conspiracy to violate the section by causing a check of the drawer to be certified by the officer when the drawer did not have a sufficient amount on deposit to pay the same. Chadwick v. United States, 141 Fed. 225, 230, 236, 72 C. C. A. 343.

The mere meeting together of a few citizens previous to the arrest of a certain person is insufficient to show a "conspiracy" by them to effect the arrest of the person arrested, in the absence of evidence showing that there was a plot on the part of the persons meeting together to have any one imprisoned or that they in any way combined with the inspector of police to procure the arrest. O'Malley v. Whitaker, 43 South. 545, 118 La. 906.

The court charged that common design is the essence of a conspiracy, and, while it is necessary to establish a conspiracy to prove a combination of two or more persons by concerted action to accomplish the criminal or unlawful purpose, "it is not necessary to constitute a conspiracy that two or more persons should meet together and enter into an explicit or formal agreement for an unlawful scheme, or that they should directly, by words or in writing, state what the unlawful scheme was to be and the detail of the plans and means by which the unlawful combination was to be effective"; but it is sufficient if two or more persons, in any manner, or through any contrivance, positively or tacitly come to a mutual understanding to accomplish a common and unlawful design. Held, that the meaning of the words quoted, in connection with the remainder of the instruction, was that no explicit or formal agreement need be proved, if it be satisfactorily proved that two or more persons came to a mutual understanding to accomplish a common and unlawful design, and was, therefore, not objectionable. People v. Sacramento Butchers' Protective Ass'n, 107 Pac. 712, 723, 12 Cal. App. 471.

It is a misuse of terms to say that the vote of a majority of the members of a representative body is the result of a conspiracy; nor can the term "conspiracy" be predicated of the deliberate vote of a governing body. Lawson v. Hewel, 50 Pac. 763, 765, 118 Cal. 613, 49 L. R. A. 400.

In a prosecution of several defendants for unlawfully making threats to arrest in order to extort money, the court instructed that, where a conspiracy is once established, every act and declaration of one conspirator pursuant to the original plan and with reference to the common object is the act of all the conspirators, and that testimony was admitted as to the declarations of persons claimed to be conspirators, and the jury should reject any declarations of others not made in accused's presence, unless they found that accused conspired with the others named "or either of them," and that the statements and acts not made or done in the presence of defendant were in fact made by a person so conspiring with him, and that a "conspiracy" was a combination between two or more by concert of action to accomplish some criminal or unlawful purpose or some lawful purpose by a criminal or unlawful means, and that if accused and K. and R., or either of them, so conspired together, the jury should consider the declarations of said K. and R., or either of them, made during the existence of the conspiracy in accused's absence, as bearing on accused's guilt. Held, that the instruction was not objectionable as making defendant liable for acts, etc., of K. and R. pursuant to a conspiracy between them alone, but required that a conspiracy be found to exist between accused and K. and R., or between accused and either of them, in order to make their declarations in his absence admissible against accused. State v. Brown, 183 N. W. 330, 335, 153 Iowa, 37.

Three persons cannot be guilty of a "conspiracy" to conceal a bankrupt's property from his trustee, where the trustee himself is one of the three alleged conspirators, since, if there was no concealment from him, there was no offense committed. Johnson v. United States, 158 Fed. 69, 73, 85 C. C. A. 399, 14 Ann. Cas. 153.

Same—Time of entering into

To constitute a "conspiracy" to do an unlawful act it is not indispensable that the evidence show the existence of the conspiracy for any definite period of time prior to the commission of the act, but the combination to do the act may have arisen on the spur of the moment. Morris v. State, 41 South. 274, 281, 146 Ala. 66 (citing Tanner v. State, 9 South. 613, 92 Ala. 1; Williams v. State, 1 South. 179, 81 Ala. 4, 60 Am. Rep. 133; Martin v. State, 8 South. 23, 89 Ala. 115, 18 Am. St. Rep. 91; Gibson v. State, 8 South. 98, 89 Ala. 121, 18 Am. St. Rep. 96; Elmore v. State, 20 South. 323, 110 Ala. 63; Evans v. State, 19 South. 535, 109 Ala. 13; Johnson v. State, 29 Ala. 62, 65 Am. Dec. 383; Scott v. State, 30 Ala. 508; Buford v. State, 31 South. 714, 132 Ala. 6).

Overt act or execution of purpose

"At common law the crime of 'conspiracy' was complete when a corrupt agreement was made, although not followed by any overt act, and no step had been taken in furtherance of the object of the conspiracy. The statute in this state has modified the common law in this respect by requiring that to constitute the crime of 'conspiracy' there must be both a corrupt agreement and an overt act to effect the object of the agreement, except where the 'conspiracy' is to commit certain felonies specified in section 171, Pen. Code." People v. Murray, 95 N. Y. Supp. 107, 109; People v. Summerfield, 96 N. Y. Supp. 502, 505, 48 Misc. Rep. 242 (citing People v. McKane, 88 N. E. 950, 148 N. Y. 455; People v. Flack, 26 N. E. 269, 125 N. Y. 332, 11 L. R. A. 807).

To constitute a "conspiracy" there must be a corrupt agreement between two or more individuals entered into with a criminal intent to do an unlawful act, which agreement, except one to commit a felony, must be followed by the doing of such unlawful acts. People ex rel. Burnham v. Flynn, 100 N. Y. Supp. 31, 33, 114 App. Div. 578.

The gravamen of the offense of "conspiracy" is the combination, complete at common law by the combination itself without any overt act in pursuance of it. Knight & Jilison Co. v. Miller, 87 N. E. 823, 827, 172 Ind. 27, 18 Ann. Cas. 1146 (citing People v. Sheldon, 34 N. E. 785, 139 N. Y. 251, 23 L. R. A. 221, 36 Am. St. Rep. 690).

An overt act is not necessary to the completion of the offense. Where the object of a "conspiracy" is to commit a crime or do an unlawful act, the means by which it is to be accomplished are immaterial, and the indictment need not allege the means, but need only show that the purpose of the conspiracy is unlawful in stating its object. Garland v. State, 75 Atl. 681, 682, 112 Md. 88, 21 Ann. Cas. 28.

The essence of the offense consists in the unlawful agreement and combination of the parties, and therefore it is completed whenever such combination is formed, although no act be done toward carrying the main design into effect. Lanasa v. State, 71 Atl. 1058, 1060, 109 Md. 602.

No overt act is necessary to constitute a conspiracy and render the offense complete, and it is not necessary that any act shall be done or that any one shall be aggrieved or defrauded in pursuance or in consequence of the conspiracy. Act April 29, 1874, providing that any person who shall by offer or promise of money or other thing of value, or by threats or intimidation, endeavor to influence a public officer in the discharge or nonperformance of any duty pertaining to his office, shall be guilty of corrupt solicitation, applies only to an attempt to bribe, and not to a conspiracy to bribe. Commonwealth v. Richardson, 79 Atl. 222, 223, 229 Pa. 609.

A conspiracy is formed when two or more persons in any manner, or through any contrivance, positively or tacitly come to a mutual understanding to accomplish a crime or unlawful purpose. United States v. Cole, 153 Fed. 801, 808.

Every "conspiracy" to do an unlawful act, or to do a lawful act for an illegal, fraudulent, malicious, or corrupt purpose, or for a purpose which has a tendency to prejudice the public in general, is at common law an indictable offense, though nothing be done in execution of it, and no matter by what means the "conspiracy" was intended to be effected, which may be perfectly indifferent, and makes no ingredient of the crime, the offense does not consist in doing the acts by which the mischief is effected, but in conspiring with a view to effect the intended mischief. State v. Bacon, 61 Atl. 653, 655, 27 R. I. 252 (citing State v. Buchanan [Md.] 5 Har. & J. 317, 9 Am. Dec. 534).

"The essence of a 'conspiracy,' so far as it justifies a civil action for damages, is the concert or combination to defraud or to cause either injury to person or property, which actually results in damage to the person injured or defrauded." A conspiracy to do unlawful acts, which are not done, does not furnish the basis for a cause of action, for the reason that a party against whom the "conspiracy" is formed can suffer no damages therefrom, but the actionable wrong consists in the doing of the acts pursuant to the "conspiracy," and it is immaterial how such acts are manifested, or how many distinct acts are done, if injury is inflicted and damages sustained by reason thereof. In the criminal law "conspiracy" is a distinct offense; but, unless the "conspiracy" be made to commit a felony upon the person of another or to commit arson or burglary, the offense is not complete unless some act be done to effect the object thereof. Green v. Davies, 91 N. Y. Supp. 470, 472, 100 App. Div. 359 (quoting and adopting definition in Place v. Minister, 65 N. Y. 89).

Where by prearrangement, or on the spur of the moment, two or more persons enter on a common enterprise or adventure, and a criminal offense is contemplated, then each is a conspirator, and if the purpose is carried out each is guilty whether he did any overt act or not, on the theory that one who is present, encouraging, aiding, abetting or assisting the active perpetrator in the commission of the offense is a guilty participant, and, in the eye of the law is equally guilty with the one who does the act. Jones v. State, 57 South. 31, 32, 174 Ala. 53.

The offense being complete without any overt act, and such acts being alleged and proved only as tending to show the intention of the parties or in aggravation of the unlawful combination, a combination by direct or remote concert, to do an act which would be a crime if done by one party, constitutes the offense of "conspiracy." Where the concerted action of two or more results in an increased ability to accomplish an injurious purpose, either the means or the purpose will be rendered criminal so as to amount to a criminal conspiracy, though the means or the end were not criminal if performed by a single individual. If parties are not under contract, their associates may advise them to either quit or continue a particular service or not to return thereto except upon reasonable conditions; such conduct not amounting to a criminal "conspiracy." It is unlawful to induce employes not to return to work for a former employer for the sole purpose of extorting money from the employer in order to secure the return of the employes to prevent injury to his business, and the employer could sue in tort to recover the money so paid. Rev. St. 1899, § 2152 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1384), provides that if two or more persons agree to conspire, etc., or to commit any offense, or to falsely or maliciously indict another or procure another's arrest, to falsely or maliciously move or maintain any suit, to cheat and defraud another by criminal means, to obtain money by false pretenses, commit any act injurious to the public health or morals, or to obstruct justice or the administration of the laws, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor; and section 2153 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1385) provides that no agreement except to commit a felony upon the person or arson or burglary shall be deemed a conspiracy unless some act be done to effect the object. Held, in view of Rev. St. 1899, § 4152 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2251), recognizing the existence of common-law offenses by limiting the punishments therefor and the history of the adoption of the statutes on conspiracy from the New York statutes that such statutes merely affirmed the common law in part, except that section 2153 required an overt act in certain cases, and did not embrace the whole subject-matter of the offense, at common law, or repeal the common law on the subject except in so far as they are repugnant thereto. State v. Dalton, 114 S. W. 1132, 1140, 134 Mo. App. 517.

Purpose of combination

To constitute a "conspiracy" the purpose to be effected by it must be unlawful, in its nature or in the means to be employed for its accomplishment. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Brown, 102 Pac. 459, 460, 80 Kan. 312, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 247, 133 Am. St. Rep. 213, 18 Ann. Cas. 346 (quoting 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1460).

"A 'conspiracy' is a confederation to do something unlawful, either as a means or an end." State v. Bacon, 61 Atl. 653, 654, 27 R. I. 252 (citing Whart. Cr. Law [9th Ed.] § 1337; 8 Cyc. "Conspiracy"; 2 Bish. New Cr. Law, §§ 171, 175; Commonwealth v. Waterman, 122 Mass. 57; 1 Bouv. Law Dict. 408; *Russ. Cr. 674; State v. Buchanan [Md.] 5 Har. & J. 317, 9 Am. Dec. 534).

A "conspiracy" is a combination of two or more persons by concerted action to accomplish some criminal or unlawful purpose. Bauer v. State, 107 Pac. 525, 526, 8 Okl. Cr. 529.

"Conspiracy" is a combination of two or more persons to accomplish by concerted action a criminal or unlawful purpose by criminal or unlawful means. J. F. Parkinson v. Building Trades Council of Santa Olara County, 98 Pac. 1027, 1032, 154 Cal. 581, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 550, 16 Ann. Cas. 1165.

"Conspiracy" has been defined as "a combination or agreement formed by two or more persons to effect an unlawful end, they acting under a common purpose to accomplish that end." United States v. Richards, 149 Fed. 443, 446.

The gravamen of the offense is the combination; and a combination may amount to a "conspiracy," although its object be to do an act which, if done by an individual, would not be unlawful. Franklin Union, No. 4, v. People, 77 N. E. 176, 184, 220 Ill. 355, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1001, 110 Am. St. Rep. 248.

A "conspiracy" is the combining of two or more persons for the purpose of doing something unlawful, oppressive, or immoral, as a means or an end. Woodruff v. Hughes, 58 S. E. 551, 553, 2 Ga. App. 361.

The term "unlawful," used with reference to acts of conspirators, does not include every act which violates the rights of a private individual, and for which the law affords a civil remedy, but is held to include those acts which, by reason of the combination, have a harmful effect upon society and the public; and a combination may amount to a "conspiracy," although its unaccomplished object be to do that which, if actually done by an individual, would not amount to an indictable offense, and in that sense a "conspiracy" may consist of a combination to do what is merely "unlawful." Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co. v. People, 73 N. E. 770, 775, 214 Ill. 421.

A combination to accomplish an object not criminal, by means not criminal, may become an indictable conspiracy, where the public is injuriously involved, or the result would be either injurious or oppressive to individuals. State of New Jersey v. Blenstock, 73 Atl. 580, 585, 78 N. J. Law, 256.

Whether a combination is a conspiracy depends on the quality of the acts alleged to have been committed, and where those acts are not wrongful or illegal, no agreement to commit them is a wrongful conspiracy, unless the means used to accomplish the purpose are unlawful. Green v. Bennett (Tex.) 110 S. W. 108, 115.

An indictment lies for criminal conspiracy to use the automobile of another without his consent; a "conspiracy" being a combination of persons to accomplish a criminal or unlawful object, or an object neither criminal nor unlawful by criminal or unlawful means, amounting to a civil wrong. State v. Davis, 70 S. E. 811, 812, 88 S. C. 229, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 295.

"An actionable 'conspiracy' exists only where there is an unwarrantable combination of two or more persons doing an unlawful thing." Where an attachment was dismissed before judgment for insufficiency of the affidavit, the attachment defendant could sell, and the deputy attachment who levied the attachment and the keeper of the property pending the attachment could buy and sell to others, the attached property, and their act in joining in so doing before the rendition of judgment for plaintiff was not an actionable "conspiracy" for which plaintiff could recover damages resulting from her consequent inability to collect her judgment out of the property. Menner v. Slater, 83 Pac. 35, 148 Cal. 284.

A civil action for "conspiracy" is not maintainable unless either the purpose intended or the means by which it was to be accomplished is shown to be unlawful; and a declaration that plaintiff's partner conspired with others to compel him to withdraw from the firm and dispose of his interests in it to him, by procuring firm creditors to attach its stock in trade and petition for its sale forthwith, states no cause of action, since the creditors had the legal right to attach and petition for sale. O'Callaghan v. Cronan, 121 Mass. 114, 115.

Where theatrical managers combine to exclude a certain individual from their respective establishments, it constitutes an unlawful "conspiracy" authorizing a commitment of one of the parties to such agreement on proof of overt acts. There are many purposes for which persons engaged in the same general line of affairs may lawfully combine; but, when the purpose of the combination is of a character to affect prejudicially the interests of others, then acts which may be within lawful bounds when done by an individual may become criminal if done in pursuance of a common agreement by a number of individuals. It is as much "conspiracy" to agree to do unlawful acts, and, tested by the character of the contemplated act, the agreement becomes even of itself the unlawful means. People ex rel. Burnham v. Flynn, 99 N. Y. Supp. 198, 199, 49 Misc. Rep. 328.

Same—Boycott

A labor organization may legally employ a boycott to further the objects of its existence, though pecuniary loss results to the boycotted, unless the means used are illegal; and hence where trade unions did not violate any legal right of another in withdrawing their patronage from him, or in agreeing to withdraw their patronage from any one patronizing him, they could not be restrained by injunction from continuing the boycott, so long as the means employed to make it effective are not illegal. Lindsay & Co. v. Montana Federation of Labor, 96 Pac. 127, 130, 37 Mont. 284, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 707, 127 Am. St. Rep. 722 (quoting and adopting definition in And. Law Dict. 234, approved in Spies v. People, 12 N. E. 865, 17 N. E. 898, 122 Ill. 1, 8 Am. St. Rep. 320).

A combination of two labor organizations to compel the manufacturer of casks and barrels to discontinue the use of a machine for hooping them, to be effected by notifying its customers and other persons not to purchase machine-hooped barrels, and by inducing the members of all labor organizations throughout the country and persons in sympathy with them not to purchase provisions or commodities which are packed in machine-hooped barrels, is an unlawful "conspiracy" to deprive the manufacturer of its right to manage its business according to its own judgment. Hopkins v. Oxley Stave Co., 83 Fed. 912, 921, 28 C. C. A. 99.

Same—Interference with employment

A conspiracy is a combination of two or more persons by some concerted action to accomplish an unlawful purpose. It is unlawful to deprive a mechanic or workman of work by force, threats, or intimidation of any kind. Erdman v. Mitchell, 56 Atl. 327, 331, 207 Pa. 79, 63 L. R. A. 534, 99 Am. St. Rep. 783.

Neither at common law nor under statutes modifying the common-law doctrine is it lawful for workmen to combine to injure another's business by causing his employes to leave his services by intimidation, threats, molestation, or coercion, and such a combination constitutes an indictable conspiracy. Branson v. Industrial Workers of the World, 95 Pac. 354, 360, 30 Nev. 270.

A combination or agreement to picket a manufacturing plant to interfere with the free flow of labor to an employer, to whom labor is a necessity for the carrying on of business, which, if successful, will prevent him from obtaining the means of pursuing a lawful occupation, and the sole purpose of which is to compel him to comply with the demands of an antagonistic power, is a "conspiracy" against the property rights of the employer. George Jonas Glass Co. v. Glass Bottle Blowers' Ass'n of United States and Canada, 66 Atl. 953, 957, 72 N. J. Eq. 653.

An indictment against five carpenters, alleging that they conspired to injure the business of a lumber dealer by going to his place of business and notifying him that he could not be considered in sympathy with organized labor unless he employed union men, or while he employed nonunion men, and by publishing in a local newspaper that the dealer had been declared unfair and so listed, that no union carpenter would work any material from his shop after a certain date, that such publication was for the purpose of inducing persons who would otherwise have purchased lumber from the dealer to refrain from doing so in fear of the union carpenters' ill will, and that he would be subject to delay and inconvenience by their refusal to work material purchased from him, and that it was their intent to destroy and injure his business, charged no criminal acts or means, and hence did not charge a criminal "conspiracy." State v. Van Pelt, 49 S. E. 177, 181, 189, 136 N. C. 633, 68 L. R. A. 760, 1 Ann. Cas. 495.

Where a trade union voted for a strike, and acted in concert, all the members quitting work agreeing by peaceable means to induce employes not members of the union to become such and strike, but it being expressly voted that under no circumstances should any striker endeavor, by any violence or intimidation, to influence the acts of others, there was no "conspiracy." Karges Furniture Co. v. Amalgamated Woodworkers' Local Union No. 131, 75 N. E. 877, 878, 165 Ind. 421, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 788, 6 Ann. Cas. 829.

The constant maintenance of pickets by strikers after repeated acts of violence, the use of abusive epithets, and the creation of an unfriendly atmosphere surrounding workmen by such pickets, constitutes a conspiracy for the purpose of willfully or maliciously injuring the business of the employer, within the meaning of Rev. St. Wis. 1898, § 4406a, which makes such a conspiracy a criminal offense, and is a violation of an injunction against such conspiracy. Allis-Chalmers Co. v. Iron Molders' Union No. 125, 150 Fed. 155, 181, 182.

Same—Obstruction of justice

The statute of Iowa declaring that "if any two or more persons conspire or confederate together with the fraudulent or malicious intent wrongfully to injure the person, character, business, property or rights in property of another, or to do any illegal act injurious to the public trade, health, morals or police, or to the administration of public justice, or to commit any felony, they are guilty of a conspiracy," covers practically all the subjects of conspiracy at common law; and a conspiracy to obstruct the administration of justice, or to prevent witnesses from attending a trial by escorting them outside the state and maintaining them there, while a "criminal conspiracy" at common law is also a violation of the statute. State v. Hardin, 120 N. W. 470, 471, 144 Iowa, 264, 138 Am. St. Rep. 292.

Same—Restraint of trade

"Conspiracy" is a combination of two or more persons to do (a) something that is unlawful, oppressive or immoral; or (b) something that is not unlawful, oppressive or immoral by unlawful, oppressive or immoral means; (c) something that is unlawful, oppressive or immoral by unlawful, oppressive, or immoral means." A combination of mercantile dealers to compel another dealing in similar goods to sell at prices fixed by it, or upon his refusal so to do to prevent those of whom its members are purchasing customers from selling goods to him, is upon general legal principles contrary to public policy and void. Brown v. Jacobs Pharmacy Co., 41 S. E. 553, 554, 115 Ga. 429, 57 L. R. A. 547, 90 Am. St. Rep. 126 (quoting and adopting definitions in 1 Eddy, Combinations, §§ 171, 340).

A combination to destroy competition between dealers in a commodity is a "conspiracy" in law whenever the act to be done has a necessary tendency to prejudice the public or oppress individuals by unjustly subjecting them to the power of the confederates and giving effect to the purpose of the latter, whether of extortion or mischief. Total suppression of trade in the commodity is not necessary in order to render the combination one in restraint of trade. Where an association of retail druggists in a certain city and wholesale druggists formed a combination to maintain a maximum schedule of prices, and in pursuance of the plan refused to sell to plaintiff, a retailer who had refused to join the combination, and coerced and intimidated vendors of like commodities by means of threats to blacklist and boycott such vendors if they sold to plaintiff, whereby such vendors were deterred from selling to plaintiff, the parties to the combination were liable to plaintiff for resulting damages to his business. Klingel's Pharmacy v. Sharp & Dohme, 64 Atl. 1029, 1030, 104 Md. 218, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 976, 118 Am. St. Rep. 399, 9 Ann. Cas. 1184.

A combination to injure or destroy the trade, business, or occupation of another by threatening or producing injury to the trade, business, or occupation of those who have business relations with him is an unlawful "conspiracy," regardless of the name by which it is known, and may be restrained by injunction. Lohse Patent Door Co. v. Fuelle, 114 S. W. 997, 215 Mo. 421, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 607, 128 Am. St. Rep. 492; Charles A. Olcott Planing Mill Co. v. Same (Mo.) 114 S. W. 1013.

Under anti-trust law of 1903 (Laws 1903, c. 94), defining a "trust" as a combination of capital by two or more persons to create restrictions in trade or the free pursuit of any business, and defining a "conspiracy" in restraint of trade as an agreement between two or more persons to refuse to buy from or sell to any other person any article of merchandise, a petition, which alleges that a manufacturer of farm implements and vehicles entered into a contract with a dealer therein whereby the manufacturer agreed to give the dealer the exclusive sale of its product, and whereby the dealer agreed not to buy or sell any other makes of like goods, and that the manufacturer and dealer carried the contract into execution to the injury of the people, charges a violation. State v. Racine Sattley Co. (Tex.) 134 S. W. 400, 402.

A "conspiracy," within the anti-trust act of 1903 (Laws 1903, c. 94), prohibiting conspiracies in restraint of trade, is a combination between two or more persons to do an unlawful act or to do a lawful thing in an unlawful manner. State v. Racine Sattley Co. (Tex.) 134 S. W. 400, 402.

A contract for the manufacture and sale of souvenir albums according to a schedule and order of arrangement of views of a city, which stipulates that the buyer shall have the exclusive control and resale of the albums in the city, is a "conspiracy," within the anti-trust law of 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 119, c. 94), and neither party can invoke the aid of the courts in enforcing it. Gust Feist Co. v. Albertype Co. (Tex.) 109 S. W. 1139, 1140.

Under the Anti-Trust Laws (Acts 28th Leg. c. 94), where plaintiff and defendant grain dealers made an agreement whereby plaintiff agreed not to buy grain from the growers thereof or from curbstone brokers or other persons not regularly engaged in the grain business, held, that the contract was void as contravening the statute against a "conspiracy in restraint of trade." Star Mill & Elevator Co. v. Ft. Worth Grain & Elevator Co. (Tex.) 146 S. W. 604.

Concurrence or combination of two or more persons or corporations must appear in order to constitute a "conspiracy" at common law, and under Anti-Trust Law (Acts 1903, p. 268, c. 140) §§ 1, 3, a salesman of an oil company, who, upon being directed to procure the countermand of orders given by a former customer to a competitor, agreed to and did give to the customer 100 gallons of oil to countermand the order to the competitor, thereby violated the anti-trust law, making it an offense for any person, as agent, etc., to knowingly carry out any of the purposes of a conspiracy against trade. Standard Oil Co. v. State, 100 S. W. 705, 716, 117 Tenn. 618, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1015.

Cr. Code (Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 38) § 46, declaring that if two or more persons conspire together to do any illegal act injurious to the public trade, they shall be guilty of "conspiracy," is not repealed by Anti-Trust Act 1891, § 1 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 38, § 269a), declaring that, if any corporation shall become a member of a pool, trust, or combination to fix the price of any commodity, it shall be deemed guilty of conspiracy. Neither does such act abrogate the common law on the subject of conspiracies to regulate and fix prices. Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co. v. People, 73 N. E. 770, 777, 214 Ill. 421.

When the ingredients constituting the "criminal conspiracy" at common law and the ingredients constituting the "conspiracy to defraud" under anti-trust acts are examined, it is apparent that the offenses are not identical. The latter is doing business while a member of an illegal combination, while the former is a conspiracy to do an unlawful act, or a conspiracy to do a lawful act in an unlawful manner. The remedies against the common-law conspiracy were indictment for the criminal conspiracy and an action on the case for damages by an aggrieved party, or quo warranto by the state against an offending corporation. Hammond Packing Co. v. State, 100 S. W. 407, 410, 81 Ark. 519, 126 Am. St. Rep. 1047 (citing Eddy, Combinations, §§ 835, 863, 871; Beach, Monopolies, §§ 77-87).

Same—Sherman anti-trust law

The word "conspiracy," as used in the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, §§ 1, 2) has substantially the same meaning as the word "contract." United States v. Kissel, 173 Fed. 823, 827.

To warrant a conviction on an indictment charging a number of defendants with a "conspiracy" among themselves and with others in violation of a federal anti-trust act, it must be found that at least two of them were parties to such a conspiracy. United States v. American Naval Stores Co., 172 Fed. 455, 460.

"Unlike combination, 'conspiracy' is a term of art. In the anti-trust law, it is to be interpreted independently of the preceding words. United States v. Debs, 64 Fed. 747. The elements of a 'conspiracy' are that it must depend on the concerted action of two or more persons to accomplish an unlawful purpose by any means or a lawful result by unlawful means." United States v. MacAndrews & Forbes Co., 149 Fed. 823, 831 (citing Pettibone v. United States, 13 Sup. Ct. 542, 148 U. S. 197, 37 L. Ed. 419).

Sherman Anti-Trust Law (Act July 2, 1890, c. 647) § 3, declares that every contract, combination, and form of trust or otherwise, and conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce, in any territory of the United States, or in restraint of trade or commerce between any such territory and another, etc., are declared illegal, and that every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such "combination or conspiracy" shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. Held, that the words "combination or conspiracy," as so used, were synonymous, and hence an indictment alleging that defendants entered into a "combination or conspiracy" in restraint of trade was not duplicitous, as alleging two distinct offenses. Tribolet v. United States, 95 Pac. 85, 87, 11 Ariz. 436, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 223.

Congress, by Anti-Trust Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, §§ 1, 2, having employed the words "conspiracy" and "conspire" without words of limitation in creating offenses affecting interstate commerce, did not provide, as in the general conspiracy statute (Rev. St. § 5440), that overt acts shall be necessary to complete the offense; and hence counts in an indictment for conspiracy to monopolize interstate trade and commerce in violation of the anti-trust law were not demurrable for failure to allege overt acts since the unlawful agreement, and not the overt acts, constitutes the crime of conspiracy at common law. United States v. Patten, 187 Fed. 664, 666.

Same—To commit felony

A "conspiracy to commit a felony" is a step toward the consummation, but it is only a misdemeanor. Under Cr. Code Prac. §§ 262-265, providing that, if the proof show the defendant to be guilty of a higher degree of the offense than is charged in the indictment, the jury shall find him guilty of the degree charged in the indictment, a defendant, indicted for conspiracy to defraud, that offense being a misdemeanor, was properly convicted of the offense of conspiracy to defraud, where the facts alleged show that the acts done pursuant to the conspiracy amounted to a felony. Wait v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 69 S. W. 697, 699 (quoting and adopting 1 Bish. New Or. Law, § 812).

A complaint which charges that defendants "entered into collusion with defendant

K. to cause a criminal operation to be performed upon the body of plaintiff, and have the said K. perform an abortion upon her body," clearly charged defendants with entering into an unlawful combination to injure plaintiff by performing upon her an abortion. "Collusion" is synonymous with "conspiracy." Miller v. Bayer, 68 N. W. 869, 870, 94 Wis. 125 (citing Stand. Dict.).

Though, under Code, § 4759, punishing one attempting to produce the miscarriage of any pregnant woman, a female on whom an abortion is attempted cannot be an accessory or accomplice, she may, under section 5059, declaring that where two or more conspire to commit a felony they were guilty of "conspiracy," conspire with others to perform the act. State v. Crofford, 110 N. W. 921, 922, 133 Iowa, 478.

An indictment charging two or more persons with conspiracy to procure the commitment of adultery by a married woman, and that in the execution of such purpose they did attempt to procure, and did procure, certain men to the grand inquest unknown, to commit such crime, and that the men attempted so to do, sufficiently charges the crime of "conspiracy." State v. Reiners, 76 Atl. 330, 80 N. J. Law, 196.

Under Code, § 5059, providing that if two or more persons conspire to do an illegal act injurious to the public morals, or to commit any felony, and section 5093, defining a felony as a public offense which may be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary, there may be a "conspiracy" to commit adultery. State v. Clemenson, 99 N. W. 139, 123 Iowa, 524.

"A 'conspiracy,' as the word indicates, is an unlawful agreement, and the members of the conspiracy are entitled to but scant protection under the law of necessity while they are carrying out their unlawful engagements." Where two or more combine to kill another, and, in pursuance of the conspiracy, seek him out and kill him, or provoke an assault and then take his life, neither of the conspirators can rely upon the plea of self-defense; but if, though a person was killed pursuant to a conspiracy, and while it existed, no one of the conspirators sought him out for the purpose of killing him, or provoked the difficulty resulting in his death, or first attacked him, then any one of them could avail himself of the plea of self-defense. Gambrell v. Commonwealth, 113 S. W. 476, 479, 130 Ky. 518.

Same—To defraud

A "conspiracy to defraud" on the part of two or more persons means a common purpose supported by a concerted action to defraud, that each has the intent to do it, that it is common to each of them, and that each understands that the other has that purpose. Ballantine v. Cummings, 70 Atl. 546, 549, 220 Pa. 621.

At common law it was a crime to conspire to cheat or defraud, even without the use of false tokens, and under Code, § 5059, declaring that if two or more persons conspire to injure the person, business, property, or rights of the property of another, or to commit any felony, they are guilty of "conspiracy," and shall be imprisoned, etc., a conspiracy to injure the property rights of another is punishable, though the overt acts were committed in another state. State v. Loser, 104 N. W. 837, 338, 132 Iowa, 419.

Same—To defraud or commit offense against United States

The federal statute which makes it a misdemeanor to "conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States," must be construed as standing alone, and covers all conspiracies to commit an act which is made a criminal offense by the laws of the United States. United States v. Thomas, 145 Fed. 74, 80.

To constitute a "conspiracy" to defraud the United States, within Rev. St. § 5440, the object of the combination must be to accomplish, by concerted action, a criminal or unlawful purpose, or some purpose not in itself criminal or unlawful by criminal or unlawful means. United States v. Kettel, 157 Fed. 396, 403 (citing Pettibone v. United States, 18 Sup. Ct. 542, 148 U. S. 197, 37 L. Ed. 419).

A conspiracy to defraud the United States by corruptly administering an act of Congress, contrary to the true intent and policy thereof, constitutes an indictable offense under Rev. St. § 5440, prohibiting a "conspiracy to defraud the United States" in any manner or for any purpose. United States v. Moore, 173 Fed. 122, 125, 128.

The term "defraud," as used in Rev. St. § 5440, prohibiting a conspiracy to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose, should not be construed as limited to frauds respecting property rights, but includes the deprivation of any right by deception or artifice; the act being intended to secure the wholesome administration of the laws and affairs of the United States in the interests of the government. Id.

Where a conspiracy is formed to defraud the United States in any manner, in violation of Rev. St. § 5440, the offense is complete when the conspiracy is formed, and the conspirators are subject to prosecution whenever one or more of them has done any act in the furtherance of the unlawful scheme devised and agreed on; it being, therefore, sufficient that the conspiracy, when formed, was attended with corrupt motives and was for a corrupt purpose. Id.

The elements of a "criminal conspiracy" under Rev. St. § 5440 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901,

p. 3676), are: (1) An object to be accomplished which must be either the commission of an offense against the United States or to defraud the United States; (2) a plan or scheme embodying means to accomplish the object; (3) an agreement or understanding between two or more persons whereby they become definitely committed to co-operate for the accomplishment of the object by the means embodied in the scheme, or by any effectual means; and (4) an overt act by one or more of the conspirators to effect the object of the conspiracy. United States v. Munday, 186 Fed. 375, 377.

Under Rev. St. § 5440 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3676), it is sufficient that it be the conspirator's purpose to commit a willful fraud on the law, or some statutory requirement pertinent to be observed, in view of the present controlling conditions; and it is not necessary that there should be a "conspiracy" to do an act that is an offense or crime by some statute of the general government, or to deprive the United States of its property or some property right. United States v. Raley, 173 Fed. 159, 162.

To bring a case within Rev. St. § 5440 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3676), the conspirator must himself do the act or authorize it to be done, and a mere failure on his part to prevent another from doing it is not sufficient. United States v. McClarty, 191 Fed. 518, 520.

An indictment charging the president of a national bank with conspiring with others to commit an offense against the United States by making a false entry in the books of the bank showing its balance in the hands of its reserve bank to be larger than it was in fact, with intent to deceive any agent who might thereafter be appointed by the Comptroller of the Currency to examine the affairs of the bank, does not state an offense under Rev. St. § 5440 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3676), where the overt act charged to have been committed by defendant consisted in his concealing from the bookkeeper, who actually made the alleged false entries, but who is not charged with being a party to the conspiracy, the issuance of certain drafts which should have been credited to the account of said reserve bank. Id.

To constitute the offense of "conspiracy to defraud the United States," it is not essential that the conspiracy should have been to commit an act in violation of a criminal statute. The statute is not limited in its application to conspiracies to deprive the United States of money or property, but should be broadly construed to protect the government in its rights, privileges, operations, and functions against all fraudulent operations. An indictment averring the facts, sufficiently showing that defendants conspired to deceive inspectors of the United States in the exercise of their official functions by fraudulently inducing them to approve life preservers which did not in fact comply with the requirements of the federal law, and that they committed overt acts pursuant to such conspiracy, is good. United States v. Stone, 185 Fed. 392, 397, 398.

A "conspiracy" to violate Rev. St. § 5209, by causing false entries to be made in the books of a national bank by an officer or agent thereof, for the purpose of defrauding the bank or others or deceiving an agent appointed to examine the affairs of the bank, is one to commit an offense against the United States, within the meaning of section 5440. Scott v. United States, 130 Fed. 429, 432, 64 C. C. A. 631.

The fraud contemplated by the statute for the punishment of "conspiracy to defraud" the United States, may be against the rights of the government, as well as against its property. The government is not defrauded by publishing its agricultural statistics to individuals before official publication, there being no law requiring secrecy; but the government is defrauded by a conspiracy to cause the publication of incorrect monthly agricultural reports. Haas v. Henkel, 166 Fed. 622, 626.

Assuming that the common law as it existed in Maryland when the District of Columbia was ceded exists in the District, and that it makes misconduct in office a criminal offense, it is not an offense against the United States as a distinct sovereign in such sense that an indictment will lie under Rev. St. § 5440, for "conspiracy" to commit such offense in the District, especially against a person who is not a resident thereof. United States v. Haas, 167 Fed. 211, 213.

In Rev. St. § 5451, which makes it a criminal offense to give or offer bribes, etc., to induce any officer of, or person acting for or on behalf of, the United States in any official function to do or omit to do any act in violation of his lawful duty, the phrase "lawful duty" is not restricted to a duty imposed by statute, but is broad enough to cover a duty imposed by a lawful superior; and an indictment charging a conspiracy to induce an assistant statistician in the Department of Agriculture to furnish to the accused advance news of crop conditions, and to cause to be published false reports as to such conditions in violation of the rules of the department, to aid defendants in market speculations, by promising such employé a percentage of the profits of such speculations, charges a "conspiracy to commit an offense against the United States" under Rev. St. § 5440. United States v. Haas, 163 Fed. 908, 909.

A "conspiracy" to induce entrymen who have made application under Timber and Stone Act June 3, 1878, c. 151, 20 Stat. 89, as amended by Act Aug. 4, 1892, c. 375, 27 Stat. 348, to agree to convey after patent, is not one to defraud the United States "in any manner or for any purpose," within the meaning of Rev. St. U. S. § 5440. United States v. Biggs, 29 Sup. Ct. 181, 185, 211 U. S. 507, 53 L. Ed. 305; Same v. Freeman, 29 Sup. Ct. 185, 211 U. S. 525, 53 L. Ed. 311; Same v. Sullenberger, 29 Sup. Ct. 183, 211 U. S. 522, 53 L. Ed. 311; United States v. Biggs, 157 Fed. 264.

An indictment which charges that defendants conspired to hire persons to make entry and purchase of public lands of the United States under the coal land act, with money furnished by defendants, such lands to be conveyed by the entrymen to a corporation, for the purpose of enabling the corporation to acquire a larger quantity of such lands than it could lawfully purchase under the act, does not charge a "conspiracy to defraud the United States" within Rev. St. § 5440, where it is not averred that such entrymen were not legally qualified to make the purchases they did, nor that they severally acquired more land than the acreage limited by the act. United States v. Keitel, 157 Fed. 396, 401.

Under the coal land statute (Rev. St. § 2350), which expressly provides that only one entry of coal lands shall be allowed to the same person or association of persons, and that no association of persons, any member of which shall have taken the benefit of the statute, either as an individual or as a member of any other association, shall enter or hold any other lands under its provisions, any agreement, the purpose of which is to evade such provisions and to secure indirectly lands which could not be secured directly thereunder, constitutes a "conspiracy to defraud the United States," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 5440. United States v. Lonabaugh, 158 Fed. 314, 315.

In order to establish a "conspiracy" to commit an offense against the United States in violation of 1 Rev. St. Supp. (2d Ed.) p. 264, c. 8, there must not only be an agreement or combination to commit a crime or unlawful purpose, but also an overt act apart from the conspiracy, done to carry into effect the object of the original combination. United States v. Cole, 153 Fed. 801, 803; United States v. Brace, 149 Fed. 860, 874, 877; United States v. Black, 160 Fed. 431, 484, 87 C. C. A. 383; Hyde v. United States, 32 Sup. Ct. 793, 794, 225 U. S. 347, 56 L. Ed. 1114.

An indictment under section 5440, Rev. St., for "conspiracy to defraud the United States" by means of a false invoice, is sufficient which sets forth such a conspiracy, notwithstanding that it does not set forth the consummation of the fraud nor include an allegation that the fraud could have been accomplished, if not detected. United States v. Stamatoopoulos, 164 Fed. 524, 525.

CONSPIRACY AGAINST TRADE

Where neither party to the contract was engaged in buying or selling automobiles or any other article of merchandise, a contract whereby plaintiff gave defendant the exclusive right to sell certain machines and supplies in a designated locality for a given length of time is not in violation of Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 7798, defining as "conspiracies against trade" agreements or understandings whereby any two or more persons engaged in buying or selling any article of merchandise refuse to buy or sell from any other persons, or threaten to or boycott any other persons. Nickels v. Prewitt Auto Co. (Tex.) 149 S. W. 1094, 1095.

CONSPIRE

One "conspires" where he enters into "a combination or agreement formed by two or more persons to effect an unlawful end, they acting under a common purpose to accomplish that end." United States v. Richards, 149 Fed. 443, 446.

Evidence, in an action to recover money lost in gambling, considered, and held to warrant a finding by the jury that defendants had "conspired" to obtain plaintiff's money under the guise of a game of poker. Bynum v. Brady, 100 S. W. 66, 67, 82 Ark. 603.

CONSTABLE

A "constable," as a police officer, stands on the same footing as a sheriff; and where he has a warrant to make an arrest the law invests him with the power to do all that is necessary to make such arrest. State v. Franklin (S. C.) 60 S. E. 955.

A "constable" is a public officer, who is required by law to give bond conditioned on the faithful performance of his official duties. McCain v. Bonner, 51 S. E. 36, 37, 122 Ga. 842 (citing Jefferson v. Hartley, 9 S. E. 174, 81 Ga. 716).

Under Rev. St. §§ 6694, 6699, making it the duty of a constable to apprehend and bring to justice all felons and disturbers and violators of the criminal law of the state, and to suppress all riots coming to his knowledge, and generally keep the peace and to pursue after and arrest fugitives from justice in any county in the state. A "constable" is by virtue of his office a conservator of the peace, and whenever he has knowledge or specific information that a felony has been committed at a particular locality within his jurisdiction, it is clearly his duty to take prompt measures for the arrest and apprehension of the perpetrators of such crime. Somerset Bank v. Ed- mund, 81 N. E. 641, 643, 76 Ohio St. 893, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1170, 10 Ann. Cas. 726.

CONSTANT FLOW

A right to use water for irrigation being limited in time and volume to the extent of the needs of the person in whose favor the right is established for the purpose named, a decree, allowing a "constant flow" of one inch per acre, only entitled the owner to a constant flow of that amount when required to irrigate the land to which it was to be applied. Wolff v. Pomponia, 120 Pac. 142, 144, 52 Colo. 109.

CONSTANT POTENTIAL

The term "constant potential," in the specification of a patent for a regulated system for electric circuits, indicates that, whatever might be the fluctuations of current or variations in the rate of flow, the voltage or pressure or potential is constant. Electric Storage B. Co. v. Gould Storage B. Co., 158 Fed. 610, 616, 85 C. C. A. 432.

CONSTANT PRESSURE ENGINE

A "constant pressure engine" is one in which the cylinder pressure remains the same during the outward travel of the piston while the volume of flame increases. The pressure is applied continuously. This mode of operation is also called "slow combustion" and "nonexplosion." Columbia Motor Car Co. v. C. A. Duerr & Co., 184 Fed. 893, 904, 107 C. C. A. 215.

CONSTANT VOLUME ENGINE

A "constant volume engine" operates in a different manner from a constant pressure engine. The volume during ignition theoretically remains constant; the pressure increases. The action is spasmodic and is kept in motion by a series of explosions. Columbia Motor Car Co. v. C. A. Duerr & Co., 184 Fed. 893, 904, 107 C. C. A. 215.

CONSTANT WATCH

The words "constant watch," as used in a rider attached to an insurance policy: "Steam pump, with sufficient hose to cover building. Constant watch"—constitute a representation, and not a warranty, under Rev. St. Me. c. 49, § 20, providing that statements of description in a policy of insurance are representations, and that a change in the property insured, or in its use or condition, or a breach of any of the terms of a policy by the insured, does not affect the policy, unless they materially increase the risk, and the temporary absence of a watchman without knowledge of the insured will not prevent a recovery. King Brick Mfg. Co. v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 41 N. E. 277, 279, 164 Mass. 291, 292, 293, 294.

CONSTANTLY CONFINED

It cannot be said that an assured is not "confined constantly" to the house during an illness characterized by recurring periods of severity, though he may occasionally step into his yard, or visit his physician, or make other short trips; he being at all times unable to resume the ordinary duties or pleasures of life. Brell v. Claus Groth Platt-dutschen Vereen, 120 N. W. 905, 84 Neb. 155, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 359, 18 Ann. Cas. 1110.

CONSTANTLY RECURRING

See Continuing Nuisance.

By a "constantly recurring grievance" is not meant a constant or unceasing nuisance or injury, but a nuisance which occurs so often, and is so necessarily an incident of the use of property complained of, that it can be fairly said to be continuous, though not constant or unceasing. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Americus Constr. Co., 65 S. E. 855, 858, 133 Ga. 392 (quoting Wood's L. Nuis. § 772; Farley v. Gate City Gaslight Co., 31 S. E. 193, 105 Ga. 323, 337, 338, 29 Cyc. p. 1222 et seq.).

CONSTITUENTS

Under a claim in a patent reading "as a new article of manufacture, a compound of the crystallizable blood pressure raising constituents of the suprarenal glands substantially free from noncrystallizable constituents thereof, which is soluble in water, and which when in a water solution is practically inert to the oxygen of the air," etc., the word "constituent" includes those elements of a gland from which it is separated. Parke-Davis & Co. v. H. K. Mulford Co., 189 Fed. 95, 110 (quoting and adopting the definition in Enc. Brit. [11th Ed.] sub. tit. Chemistry).

CONSTITUTED BY THE ACT

In Code Cr. Proc. § 444, providing that, on a trial for murder or manslaughter, if the act complained of is not proven to be the cause of death, the defendant may be convicted of assault in any degree constituted by the act and warranted by the evidence, "constituted by the act" means that the assault must form a component part of the act, of the wound indisputably fatal. People v. Schiavi, 89 N. Y. Supp. 564, 568, 96 App. Div. 479.

CONSTITUTION

See Controversy Arising Under Federal Constitution; Controversy Concerning Construction of Constitution; Founded on Constitution; Written Constitution.

The word "constitution" signifies something constituted, and is generally used to designate the written evidence of something which can have only a legal existence. Clark v. Brown (Tex.) 108 S. W. 421, 437.

As law

See Law.

Of association or corporation

A "constitution" adopted by a voluntary association constitutes a contract between its members which the courts will enforce. Kalbitzer v. Goodhue, 44 S. E. 264, 266, 52 W. Va. 435.

"Charters" are not created by the act of the corporation or association, but are granted by the sovereign power of the state. A "constitution" of a voluntary association or a corporation is nothing more than a by-law under an inappropriate name. A provision in the "constitution" of a beneficial association, providing that any member in arrears for four weeks' dues shall not draw any benefit until one month from the date of paying the deficiency, was a mere by-law of the association, and void for unreasonableness. Burns v. Manhattan Brass Mut. Aid Soc., 92 N. Y. Supp. 846, 847, 102 App. Div. 467 (quoting and adopting definition in Supreme Lodge, Knights of Pythias, v. Knight, 20 N. E. 479, 117 Ind. 489, 3 L. R. A. 409).

Of state or United States

"The 'constitution' is the supreme and paramount law." Rice v. Palmer, 96 S. W. 396, 398, 78 Ark. 432 (quoting and adopting definition in Collier v. Frierson, 24 Ala. 108).

"A 'constitution' is a Magna Charta of the people's rights, the fundamental law of the land, intended, not for short periods of time, but for all time." Henry v. State, 39 South. 856, 893, 88 Miss. 843.

The "constitution" of the United States is the supreme law of the land, and the judges in every state are bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of their own state to the contrary notwithstanding. Atkinson v. Woodmansee, 74 Pac. 640, 641, 68 Kan. 71, 64 L. R. A. 325.

A "constitution" is the written instrument by which the fundamental powers of the government are established and limited, and by which those powers are distributed among the several departments for their exercise for the benefit of the body politic. Frantz v. Autry, 91 Pac. 193, 202, 18 Okl. 561; Walck v. Murray, 91 Pac. 238, 239, 18 Okl. 712; McCollister v. Same, 91 Pac. 239; 18 Okl. 710; Board of Com'rs of Greer County v. Constitutional Delegate Convention of Oklahoma Territory, 91 P. 239, 18 Okl. 707; Haines v. Murray, 91 Pac. 240, 18 Okl. 711.

The "constitution" is the paramount law, to which all other laws must yield, and is the measure of the rights and powers of the legislative department. Merwin v. Fussell, 124 S. W. 1021, 1022, 93 Ark. 836.

A "constitution," for the most part, may be construed as a great compact or agreement, entered into by all the people of the state, for and on behalf of themselves and those who shall come after them, until such time as it is abolished, changed, or modified. State v. Harden, 58 S. E. 715-718, 82 W. Va. 313.

In American constitutional law, the word "constitution" is used in a restrictive sense, as implying the instrument agreed on by the people of the Union or any one of the states as the absolute rule of action and decision for all departments and officers of the government in respect to all of the points covered by it, which must control until it shall be changed by the authority which established it, and in opposition to which any act or regulation of any such department or officer, or even the people themselves, will be altogether void. Cline v. State, 36 S. W. 1099, 1107, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 320, 61 Am. St. Rep. 850 (quoting and adopting Cooley Const. Lim. p. 5).

A "constitution" is the paramount law of a state, designed to separate the powers of government, defining their extent and limiting their exercise by the several departments, as well as to secure and protect private rights, and no other instrument is of equal significance. It has been properly defined to be a legislative act of the people themselves in their sovereign capacity. Every positive delegation of power therein to one officer or department implies a negation of its exercise by any other officer, department, or person. Ex parte Corliss, 114 N. W. 962, 969, 16 N. D. 470.

The term "constitution" is difficult to define. "It is easier to tell what it is not than what it is. It is not the beginning of a community, nor the origin of private rights. It is not the fountain of laws, nor the incipient state of government. It is not the cause, but consequence, of personal and political freedom. It grants no rights to the people, but is the creature of their power, the instrument of their convenience, designed for their protection in the enjoyment of the rights and powers which they possessed before the constitution was made. It is but the form and framework of the political government, and necessarily based upon the pre-existing condition of laws, rights, habits, and modes of thought. There is nothing primitive in it. It is all derived from a known source. It presupposes an organized society, laws, order, property, personal freedom, a love of political liberty, and enough of cultivated intelligence to know how to guard it against the encroachment of tyranny." State ex rel. Dillon v. Braxton County Court, 55 S. E. 382, 384, 60 W. Va. 339.

The "constitution" is a written instrument. As such its meaning does not alter. That which it meant when adopted, it means now. Being a grant of powers to a government, its language is general, and as changes come in social and political life, it embraces in its grasp all new conditions which are within the scope of the powers in terms conferred. While the powers granted do not change, they apply from generation to generation to all things to which they are in their nature applicable. That which is implied is as much a part of the "constitution" as that which is expressed. State of South Carolina v. United States, 26 Sup. Ct. 110, 111, 199 U. S. 437, 50 L. Ed. 261, 4 Ann. Cas. 737.

A petition under the initiative amendment to the Constitution adopted in 1908, and the initiative and referendum act (Acts 1909, p. 554), to amend Const. art. 4, § 11 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 180), fixing the senatorial districts until changed as provided by the Constitution, by creating senatorial districts which shall continue until the federal census of 1920, when the districts shall by a law enacted by the people, or by the Legislature, be adjusted on the basis of that census, is a petition for a legislative enactment of a temporary character, and not a petition for a constitutional amendment; a "constitution" being a fundamental law as distinguished from a temporary act, and implying an instrument of a permanent nature. State ex rel. Halliburton v. Roach, 130 S. W. 689, 694, 230 Mo. 408, 139 Am. St. Rep. 639.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION

A "constitutional convention" is created by the direct action of the people, and in the discharge of its duties, powers, and obligations it performs a most important act of popular sovereignty. It is vested with the power and charged with the duty of forming a constitution and state government, and in the performance of such duty it exercises legislative functions. It has plenary power, subject to the limitations and restrictions that the constitution shall be republican in form and that it shall not be repugnant to the constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence, etc. Frantz v. Autry, 91 Pac. 193, 202, 18 Okl. 561.

"A 'constitutional convention' is a legislative body of the highest order. It proceeds by legislative methods. Its acts are legislative acts. Its functions are not to execute or interpret laws, but to make them. 'That the consent of the general body of electors may be necessary to give effect to the ordinances of the convention no more changes their legislative character than the requirement of the Governor's consent does the nature of the action of the senate and assembly' (quoting proceedings of New York Constitutional Convention 1894, pp. 79, 80). A state convention is really nothing but a law made directly by the people voting at the polls on a draft submitted to them. People of a state, when they so vote, act as a primary and constituent assembly, just as if they were all summoned to meet in one place like the folkmoets of our Teutonic forefathers; it is only their numbers that prevent them from so meeting at one place and oblige the vote to be taken in a variety of polling places. Hence the enactment of a constitution is an exercise of direct popular sovereignty, to which we find few parallels in modern Europe, though it was familiar enough to the republic of antiquity, and has lasted until now in some of the cantons of Switzerland." Smith v. State ex rel. Hepburn, 113 Pac. 932, 935, 28 Okl. 235 (quoting 1 Bryce, Am. Com. 436).

CONSTITUTIONAL HOMESTEAD

A "constitutional homestead" can only be obtained in a regular proceeding instituted in the court of ordinary after due notice to creditors, and the order of the ordinary approving the setting apart of the homestead is a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction and cannot be collaterally attacked. While in such a proceeding the court may allow an amendment even after judgment approving the homestead, there is no provision of law for amending a claim of exemption asserted by filing a schedule of property for exemption under Civ. Code 1895, § 2866 et seq., authorizing the setting apart of what is commonly known as a "short or pony homestead." Stinson v. Hirsch Bros. & Co., 53 S. E. 1011, 1012, 125 Ga. 149.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

See Unconstitutional.

CONSTITUTIONAL LIBERTY

"Constitutional liberty" means the right of one to use his faculties in all lawful ways, to live and work where he will, to earn his livelihood in any lawful calling, and to pursue any lawful trade or avocation. The restrictions upon conduct which may be imposed in the exercise of police power include everything that may be necessary in the interest of the public health, the public safety, or the public morals, and they include nothing more." O'Keeffe v. Somerville, 76 N. E. 457, 459, 190 Mass. 110, 112 Am. St. Rep. 316, 5 Ann. Cas. 684.

CONSTITUTIONAL OFFICER

The county judge is a "constitutional officer." Rush v. Denhardt, 127 S. W. 785, 786, 188 Ky. 238, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1199.

CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT

A "constitutional right" differs from a right conferred by the common law or by statute only in the fact that it is guarded from any attack or interference by the Legislature, or any other governmental agent, and is not entitled by its nature to protection by injunction to a greater extent than any other right. Menge v. Morris & E. R. Co., 67 Atl. 1028, 1060, 73 N. J. Eq. 177.

CONSTRUCT—CONSTRUCTION

See Duty to Construct; Further Construction; New Construction; Original Construction; Properly Constructed.

Construction of instruments, see Construe—Construction.

See, also, Reconstruct—Reconstruction.

The term "construction," with reference to a building, means the putting together of the materials used therein. Scharff v. Southern Illinois Const. Co., 92 S. W. 126, 130, 115 Mo. App. 157.

Claims growing out of a delay caused by the federal government, as well as those arising from a change in specifications, were included in a release of all claims "for or by reason of or on account of the 'construction' of a battleship under contract." United States v. Wm. Cramp & Sons, Ship & Engine Bldg. Co., 27 Sup. Ct. 676, 678, 206 U. S. 113, 51 L. Ed. 983.

The word "construction" in an ordinance under San Francisco Charter of 1907, art. 12, § 14, approved by the Legislature November 23, 1907 (St. Ex. Sess. 1907, p. 37), and previous charter provisions, authorizing the acquisition, construction, or completion of public utilities, means the original construction of the utilities proposed to completion. Platt v. City and County of San Francisco, 110 Pac. 304, 309, 158 Cal. 74.

The word "construction," in Rev. Codes, § 2315, subd. 1, authorizing municipalities to issue bonds for the "construction" and maintenance of waterworks, does not limit the power given by section 2238, subd. 36, empowering municipalities to acquire, by purchase or otherwise, waterworks or plants and illuminating plants, and to supply the municipality and the inhabitants thereof with water and light; and the very fact that a municipality is authorized to provide for the "construction" and maintenance of necessary waterworks implies authority to purchase works already constructed and to make the same all, or a part of, a general system of waterworks, and a municipality may issue bonds for the purpose of waterworks already constructed. Ostrander v. City of Salmon, 117 Pac. 692, 695, 20 Idaho, 153.

The phrase "the immediate doing of the work of construction," in a policy indemnifying a telephone company against damages to any person not employed by assured from the operation of the telephone plant, and stipulating that the policy shall not cover losses from liability for injuries suffered otherwise than during the immediate doing of the work of construction, includes an accident resulting in the death of a person not employed by the telephone company while employees are trimming a tree while putting up a line. Camden & Atlantic Tel. Co. v. United States Casualty Co., 75 Atl. 1077, 227 Pa. 242.

As enlargement

Laws 1883, p. 261, § 38, as amended by Laws 1885, p. 324, provides that persons owning or constructing a ditch across any highway shall keep the highway open for safe travel by constructing bridges over such ditch, to be thereafter maintained by the county, and that all bridges which shall be of greater length than 20 feet shall be constructed and maintained by the owners of the ditch. Held, that by the "construction" of a ditch provided for in the statute is meant not only the original construction, but also any enlargement, and where the necessity for the building of a bridge in excess of 20 feet was created by the enlargement of a canal after the passage of the statute, the canal company was liable for its construction and maintenance, even though the ditch was first built before the passage of the statute and the road crossing it was built after the original construction. People v. Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co., 123 Pac. 645, 647, 52 Colo. 626.

As extension

As used in Code 1907, § 1421, authorizing elections to decide the bond issues for constructing sewers, etc., but that no second election should be held within a certain time, the word "construction" would include "extension"; so that, there having been an issue voted for the "construction" of a sewer, there could not be another issue for its "extension" within the time limited. City of Graymount v. Stott, 49 South. 683, 684, 160 Ala. 570.

The term "construction of waterworks," on ballots used at an election for the submission to the qualified electors of a city of the question of incurring indebtedness for the construction of public utilities under Const. art. 10, § 27, is sufficiently comprehensive to include such work as re-equipping and making extensions of an existing waterworks system, and the voters are sufficiently informed to render an election valid. State ex rel. Edwards v. Millar, 96 Pac. 747, 751, 21 Okl. 448, 598.

As maintenance or repair

The authority conferred by Rev. St. 1895, art. 877, as amended by Acts First Called Sess. 28th Leg. 1903, c. 4, and Acts 26th Leg. c. 149, § 4, to "construct" bridges for public purposes, embraces the repair and maintenance of such structure. Bell County v. Lightfoot, 138 S. W. 381, 382, 104 Tex. 346.

Rev. Laws, c. 104, § 1, authorizing certain cities, for the prevention of fire, to regulate the inspection, materials, construction, alteration, and use of buildings, does not authorize an ordinance prohibiting reshingling of a roof, since the action does not comprehend repairs; the word "construction" being used to mean the erection of a new building or an addition to an old one, the word "alteration," to denote a change or substitution in a particular of one part of a building for a building different in that particular, the word "use" indicating the purpose for which the building may be occupied, and the word "materials" being a word of general signification, and necessarily ancillary to the other more definite terms employed in the statute. Commonwealth v. Hayden, 97 N. E. 783, 784, 211 Mass. 296.

Providing a barge with a cover to protect her cargo from the wet and the heat, to fit her for a particular business, is so slight a change as to constitute "repairs," and not "construction." The O. H. Vessels, 177 Fed. 589, 590 (citing The Iris, 100 Fed. 104, 40 C. C. A. 301; The Ella, 84 Fed. 471), affirmed 188 Fed. 561, 562, 106 C. C. A. 107.

A large part of plaintiff's factory having been destroyed, it was engaged in rebuilding the same, and, in connection therewith, was rebuilding an acid chamber, required to be lined with lead. In the course of this work, one of plaintiff's employes, while engaged in unrolling the lead, fell from a scaffold and received injuries for which he recovered damages from plaintiff. Held, that such work was not "ordinary repairs," but "construction, demolition, or extraordinary repairs," within the exception of an employer's liability policy excepting injuries to persons occurring in the construction, demolition, or in making extraordinary repairs to structures, buildings, or plants. Home Mixture Guano Co. v. Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation, Limited, of London, England, 176 Fed. 600, 603.

The phrase "purchasing or constructing," as used in Const. art. 10, § 12a, and Laws 1903, p. 93, authorizing certain cities with the assent of two-thirds of the voters thereof, voting at an election for the purpose, to become indebted in a larger amount than specified in Const. art. 10, § 12, not exceeding an additional 5 per cent. of the value of the taxable property, for the purpose of "purchasing or constructing" waterworks or electric light plants, to be owned exclusively by the city so purchasing or constructing the same, do not give cities the power to issue bonds for the purpose of maintaining and operating waterworks or electric light plants, for the power to maintain and operate waterworks and electric light plants is not necessarily incident to or implied in the power to purchase or construct waterworks or electric light plants, for the word "maintain" does not mean to provide or construct, but to keep up and preserve, and the word "operate" means to put into or continue in operation or activity. State ex rel. City of Chillicothe v. Wilder, 98 S. W. 465, 467, 200 Mo. 97.

Completion synonymous

In an action on a bond for the performance of a contract which provided for the construction of two steamers within a fixed period, according to certain plans, and that on failure to do so the United States might complete the same, the declaration alleged the steamers were not completed, that the contractor abandoned the contract, that a new contract was thereupon made, and they were completed thereunder. Held, that a demurrer to the declaration, for the reason that the new contract was for the construction and completion of said steamers, whereas under the original contract it should have been for their completion only, would not lie, the words "construction" and "completion" having substantially the same meaning. United States v. Perth Amboy Shipbuilding & Engineering Co., 137 Fed. 685, 686.

Establishment synonymous

Although the term "establishment" of a drainage ditch means the action of the board of supervisors in ordering it, and "construction" means the actual work, these terms are so interchangeable that, in the absence of evidence showing greater damage at one point than another, they may be used as synonymous in instructions in a proceeding to assess damages for the taking of land for a drainage ditch. Larson v. Webster County, 130 N. W. 165, 167, 150 Iowa, 844.

Erect synonymous

Where a statute authorized a city to issue bonds to erect an electric light plant, the use of the word "construct," instead of "erect," in city ordinances providing for the issuance of bonds was immaterial; the word "erect" meaning "to construct." State ex rel. City of Chillicothe v. Gordon, 135 S. W. 929, 931, 233 Mo. 383.

The word "construction," referring to building, is synonymous with "erection." Butz v. Murch Bros. Const. Co., 97 S. W. 895, 897, 199 Mo. 279.

Furnishing materials

Act Cong. Aug. 13, 1894, c. 280, 28 Stat. 278, provides that any person entering into a formal contract with the United States to construct any public building, "shall execute a penal bond with good and sufficient sureties, with the additional obligations that such contractor shall promptly make payments to all persons supplying him labor and materials, in the prosecution of the work, provided for in such contract," and that one who has so supplied labor and materials may bring suit on the bond for his own benefit. In a suit brought against the sureties on such a bond, when the contractor had died insolvent while the work was only partially executed and the sureties had completed the contract, held, that a contract to "furnish all necessary labor and materials" required in the construction of a government building, which also provides for work to be done, and prescribes when and how it shall be done, and in which the government agrees to pay for the construction of the building, and not merely for labor and materials, is a contract for the "construction" of a building, within the meaning of the statute. United States v. Murdock, 59 Atl. 60, 62, 99 Me. 258.

Incidental authority under right to construct works

Act Cong. July 24, 1866, 14 Stat. 221, authorizing any telegraph company to construct, maintain, and operate its lines over any portion of the public domain, and over and along any military or post road of the United States, confers an interstate franchise, but does not confer on telegraph companies the right to exercise the power of eminent domain to condemn right of way over private property. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 120 Fed. 362, 372.

"An authority to one party to 'construct' a levee on behalf of a second party could scarcely be held in any case to include authority to the first party to condemn the land on which the levee was to be constructed." Act April 9, 1862 (St. 1862, pp. 152, 153, 158, c. 158) §§ 4, 7, 17, provided in substance, that the levee board of the city of Sacramento might construct that portion of levees required by the plans adopted at a joint meeting of the city board and state board of swamp land commissioners, and that in case the state board was unable, from lack of funds, to let out the constructing of the levee, the city levee commissioners could construct so much of the levee as was necessary for the protection of the city, or could advance the funds necessary therefor to the state board. Authority to condemn lands without the city for levee purposes was given by St. 1861, p. 355, c. 352, to the state board, and a petition to the district court by the state board was required. Held, that the city board of levee commissioners had no authority to condemn land for a levee which lay outside of the city; such authority being in the state board alone. McCarty v. Southern Pac. Co., 82 Pac. 615, 619, 148 Cal. 211.

The title of an ordinance granting the right to "construct, maintain, and operate" an electric light and power plant "gives to the grantee the right to use the streets and public grounds for that purpose, and it would occur to any one that such was the object of the ordinance, for the granting of the right to construct and operate a light and power plant in fact conveys no other right than the right to use the streets and public grounds. Unless the grantee desires the use of the streets and public grounds, a franchise is not necessary; but it will be difficult, if not almost impossible, to construct and operate such a plant without the use of the streets and public grounds, and the right

Of railroad

As used in an ordinance requiring an electric railway company to deposit a certain sum, to be forfeited in case of default of the construction of the road within a prescribed time (section 14), and requiring the company to fully construct the railway and equip the same with cars and to commence the operation of the road within a certain time (section 15), the word "construction" means "the performance of all that is required in section 15, viz., the actual building of the road, putting down rails, ties, planking, grading, paving, etc., including the erection of poles, stringing of wires, and the actual equipment of the road by cars and motors as stipulated in the ordinance." Springwells Tp. v. Detroit, P. & N. Ry. Co., 103 N. W. 700, 701, 140 Mich. 277 (quoting and approving definition in Whiting v. Village of New Baltimore, 86 N. W. 403, 127 Mich. 66).

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 5152, provides that a railroad company, before proceeding with the construction of a part of its road into or through any county named in its articles of association, shall make a map and profile of the route intended to be adopted by such company and file it in the office of the clerk of such county. The word "construction," as used in this statute, has no technical meaning, but it refers to the labor put forth to fit and adapt a certain selected route to the running of cars. "Construction" means building, and does not include buying the ground on which to build and construct the road. Buying the ground may be an essential prerequisite to construction, but it is not a part of it; and therefore, under the statute quoted above, it is not necessary to file the map and profile of the route before proceeding to condemn the lands, such filing being a part of the construction of the road. Southern Indiana Ry. Co. v. Indianapolis & L. Ry. Co., 81 N. E. 65, 69, 168 Ind. 360, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 197 (citing Missouri River, etc., R. Co. v. Shepard, 9 Kan. 647).

The expression "profits used in construction" of a railroad was held to include all money expended in permanent betterments. "If a railroad company should make a second track when they had but a single track before, this would be a betterment or permanent improvement, and, if paid out of the earnings, would be fairly characterized as 'profits used in construction.'" State ex rel. Edwards v. Millar, 96 Pac. 747, 750, 21 Okl. 443 (quoting and adopting definition in Grant v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co., 93 U. S. 225, 23 L. Ed. 878).

Of streets and roads

As used in the statute giving a board of public works exclusive control of the construction, improvement, repair, and cleaning of streets, "construction" is a broad term, authorizing the making of new streets. "Improvement" permits new work on streets already constructed, and "repair" relates to the restoration of an existing condition. The four terms govern the whole subject, from the making of a new street to its final and ordinary maintenance. In re Board of Public Works of City of Watertown, 39 N. E. 387, 388, 144 N. Y. 440.

"Construct" means to build; 'reconstruct' means to rebuild, to build over again; and a street is not reconstructed by being resurfaced either in whole or in part." Where, after a street which had been paved with asphalt at the expense of abutting owners had fallen into disrepair, the city passed an ordinance directing that it be reconstructed with asphalt pavement in accordance with the ordinance, in so far as it related to resurfacing streets with asphalt paving, so that the entire improvement consisted merely of relaying a new three-inch asphalt surface on the original macadam base, without disturbing the same, the work did not constitute a reconstruction of the street, but was a mere repair thereof, for which the city was solely responsible. City of Covington v. Bullock, 103 S. W. 276, 278, 126 Ky. 236.

Code 1906, § 331, authorizing the issuance of bonds by a county for "constructing public roads," gives the power to issue such bonds, regardless of the method adopted for working the roads. Weston v. Hancock County, 54 South. 307, 309, 98 Miss. 800.

CONSTRUCTED

A street is not "constructed," within the law authorizing the original construction of a street at the cost of abutting owners, until its construction is prescribed by the city authorities. Sparks v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co., 112 S. W. 830, 129 Ky. 769.

Rev. St. 1889, § 1592, as amended by Laws 1893, p. 107, authorizing cities of the fourth class to cause streets "to be graded, constructed, reconstructed, paved," etc., authorizes a city of the class to issue special tax bills to pay for the cost of curbing, especially in view of the provision in the section authorizing the issuance of tax bills for special assessments for "paving, macadamizing, and curbing"; for the terms "constructed" and "paved" refer to the entire pavement of the street, and include curbing, which is a necessary part thereof. City of Excelsior Springs v. Ettenson, 96 S. W. 701, 705, 120 Mo. App. 215.

Within Kirby's Dig. § 6681, providing that, when a railroad company has constructed a railroad across a highway, the company shall construct a crossing or build a bridge, for failure to do which within a certain time after notice it is, by sections 6682 and 6684, subject to penalty, the railroad is "constructed," though it is not completed, when its track is laid at the crossing and trains are there running. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. State, to use of Boone County, 114 S. W. 703, 704, 88 Ark. 338.

Wright Act, § 12, authorizes an irrigation district to acquire by purchase canals and works, "including canals and works constructed and being constructed" by private owners, etc. Held, that the words "constructed and being constructed" indicated an intention to authorize irrigation districts to negotiate for water systems in advance of their total completion. Stowell v. Rialto Irr. Dist., 100 Pac. 248, 251, 155 Cal. 215.

Act Cong. Aug. 30, 1890, c. 837, provides that all patents for lands thereafter taken up under any of the land laws of the United States on entries or claims validated by the act, west of the one hundredth meridian, should reserve a right of way for ditches or canals, "constructed" by authority of the United States. Held, that the word "constructed," as so used, did not limit the reservation to a right of way for ditches already constructed, but extended as well to those "to be constructed" by the government in furtherance of its irrigation scheme for the reformation of arid lands. Green v. Willhite, 160 Fed. 755, 757; the word "constructed," as so used, has a general reference and application to ditches or canals constructed by the authority of the United States, without reference to the time of such construction. Green v. Willhite, 98 Pac. 971, 972, 14 Idaho, 238.

CONSTRUCTED, RUN, AND OPERATED

A deed of a railroad right of way conveyed to the grantee, its successors and assigns, all the land contained within 100 feet in width on each side of the track or roadway, measuring from the center of any portion of the lot of land thereafter described through which the railway may be "constructed, run, and operated," to have and to hold for railroad purposes forever, and for no other, in fee simple. Held, that the words "constructed, run, and operated," were limited by what preceded them, so that the deed should be construed to convey only a right of way through the particular part of the land actually touched by the grantee's main line as originally laid out. American Spinning Co. v. Southern Ry. Co., 62 S. E. 787, 788, 81 S. C. 482.

CONSTRUCTED WORKS

Laws 1907, c. 49, § 53, provides that, in case of seepage water from any constructed works, the owner of the works shall have first right to the use thereof on filing an application to the territorial engineer as in the case of an original appropriation, but if the owner shall not file such application within a year after the completion of the works, or the appearance on the surface of such seepage water, any party desiring to use the same shall make an application to the territorial engineer as in the case of unappropriated water, and shall pay the owner of the works a reasonable charge for storage and carriage of the water, provided the appearance of such seepage water can be traced beyond a reasonable doubt to the storage and carriage of water in such works. Held, that the term "constructed works" as so used referred to constructed reservoirs and ditches, not including a dynamited artesian well, and that the section had no application to seepage or spring water arising on the land of a proprietor from an unknown source. Vanderwork v. Hewes, 110 Pac. 567, 569, 15 N. M. 439.

CONSTRUCTION COMPANY

A corporation engaged in the construction under contract of piers and abutments made of concrete for railroad bridges, including the work of clearing the foundations, and in some instances building cofferdams and driving piling for the work, is a "construction company," and not a "manufacturer," which, is one engaged in the manufacture for sale of articles of commerce, within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3423), and is not subject to proceedings in involuntary bankruptcy. In re T. E. Hill Co., 148 Fed. 832, 834, 78 C. C. A. 522.

The word "construction," as used in the title of "An act to incorporate a power and construction company," suggests building, erecting, and manufacturing; and the word "power" is used in connection with it, and the words together do not give any clear indication of a business necessarily requiring a special franchise, so that a special franchise granted in the body of the act to occupy the streets, is unconstitutional. Economic Power & Construction Co. v. City of Buffalo, 88 N. E. 389, 394, 195 N. Y. 286.

CONSTRUCTION WORK

Civ. Code, § 3060, providing that debts of at least $50 contracted for the benefit of ships are liens, construed in connection with Code Civ. Proc. § 813, giving a lien for materials and services furnished for the construction of vessels, contemplates an existing completed vessel, and refers only to such debts as are contracted for the benefit of a completed vessel, and section 813 gives a lien for construction work, regardless of the amount. Jensen v. Dorr, 116 Pac. 553, 555, 159 Cal. 742.

Everything originally done in making a vessel complete and ready for use as an instrument of commerce or navigation is construction work, and a structure becomes a ship within the maritime law only when construction work has been fully completed. Id.

CONSTRUCTIVE

CONSTRUCTIVE ALLOWANCE

The words "constructive allowance" in the Tariff Act, providing that there shall be no constructive or other allowance for breakage, leakage, or damage on wines, liquors, cordials, or distilled spirits, would seem to imply an allowance for leakage which may be presumed or implied, or which would exist in contemplation of law, rather than an allowance for an actual leakage established by affirmative proof, and there can be no allowance made for leakage of wine while in transit to this country. United States v. A. D. Shaw & Co., 144 Fed. 329, 331, 75 C. C. A. 291.

On an importation of wine in casks having a wantage in excess of normal, the collector assessed duty without allowance for the excess, on the ground that it was due to leakage and was within the terms of paragraph 296, Schedule H, § 1, c. 11, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, forbidding "constructive or other allowance for breakage, leakage, or damage on wines." Held, that this was in violation of section 8, art. 1, Const. U. S., prescribing that "all duties * * * shall be uniform throughout the United States." Alexander D. Shaw & Co. v. United States, 141 Fed. 469, 470.

CONSTRUCTIVE CONTEMPT

A "constructive contempt" is one committed beyond the presence of the court. Frowley v. Superior Court of Modoc County, 110 Pac. 817, 818, 158 Cal. 220.

Contempts are divided into two classes "criminal contempts" and "constructive or consequential contempts," the latter of which arises from matters not transpiring in court, but relating to a failure to comply with the orders and decrees issued by the court and to be performed elsewhere. Smythe v. Smythe, 114 Pac. 257, 258, 28 Okl. 266.

A "constructive contempt" is one offered elsewhere than in the presence of the court, and which tends to degrade or weaken its authority, or in some manner to impede the due administration of justice. Ex parte Clark, 106 S. W. 990, 997, 208 Mo. 121, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 389.

"Constructive contempts" are such as are committed outside of the view and presence of the court or judge at chambers. They may consist of a publication in a newspaper of general circulation in the place where the court was being held of such articles in reference to a cause pending as are circulated to interfere with the administration of justice. People ex rel. Attorney General v. News-Times Pub. Co., 84 Pac. 912, 956, 85 Colo. 258.

To constitute "constructive contempt" of court, some act must be done, not in the presence of the court or judge, that tends to obstruct the administration of justice, or bring the court or judge, or the administration of justice, into disrespect. Saal v. South Brooklyn Ry. Co., 106 N. Y. Supp. 996, 1000, 122 App. Div. 364 (quoting and adopting the definition in In re Dill, 5 Pac. 39, 32 Kan. 668, 49 Am. Rep. 505).

CONSTRUCTIVE CONTRACT

See Contracts Implied by Law.

"Constructive contracts," or "contracts implied by law," are obligations imposed or created by law without the assent of the party bound, and sometimes even notwithstanding his actual dissent, on the ground that they are dictated by reason and justice. They are fictions of law adopted to enforce legal duties. Harty Bros. v. Polakow, 86 N. E. 1085, 1086, 237 Ill. 559 (citing Keener, Quasi Cont. p. 5; Bish. Cont. § 205; Hertzog v. Hertzog, 29 Pa. 465; 9 Cyc. p. 242; Lillard v. Wilson, 77 S. W. 74, 178 Mo. 145; Railway Co. v. Gaffney, 61 N. E. 152, 65 Ohio St. 104).

"A 'constructive contract' is where duty defines it, instead of the contract defining the duty to be performed. Constructive contracts are fictions of law adopted to enforce the legal duties by actions of contract where no proper contract exists, express or implied." Plaintiff, defendant, and another were the sole owners of corporate stock. Certain negotiations conducted by defendant, who was acting for the other two owners of the stock, as well as for himself, resulted in a sale of the whole stock of the corporation, to be paid for in the stock of another corporation. In this negotiation defendant simply stipulated for a cash payment of a large sum of money to himself as a part of the consideration for his own stock, and paid no part thereof to his associates. He was liable to his associates severally under the doctrine of constructive contract. Graham v. Cummings, 57 Atl. 943, 949, 208 Pa. 516 (citing Hertzog v. Hertzog, 29 Pa. [5 Casey] 465).

"The term 'implied contract' has also been applied to a class of obligations which are imposed or created by law, without regard to the assent of the party bound, on the ground that they are dictated by reason and justice, and which are allowed to be enforced by an action ex contractu. These obligations, however, are not contract obligations at all, in the true sense, for there is no agreement; but they are clothed with the semblance of contract for the purpose of the remedy. They are described by the term 'quasi' or 'constructive' contracts." Leonard v. State, 120 S. W. 183, 187, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 307 (quoting 9 Cyc. p. 243).

Where there was no agreement between plaintiff and defendant that defendant was to return money advanced on the purchase price of real property if the negotiations failed, or at all, yet where equity and good conscience required him to do so, the law implied a promise on his part, and the obligation created or implied is termed a quasi contract, a contract implied by law, or a "constructive contract." Schaeffer v. Miller, 109 Pac. 970, 972, 41 Mont. 417, 137 Am. St. Rep. 746.

CONSTRUCTIVE CONVERSION

"A 'constructive conversion' takes place, when a person does such acts in reference to the goods of another as amount in law to appropriation of the property to himself." A broker's employé, who became lawfully possessed of certificates of stock to be transferred on the company's books, converted them, if he delivered them to the brokers as his own property. Kilmer v. Hutton, 116 N. Y. Supp. 127, 135, 131 App. Div. 625.

"A 'constructive conversion' takes place where a person does such acts in reference to the goods of another as amount in law to appropriation of the property to himself"; so that, where an agent intrusted with his principal's property parted with it in a way or for a purpose not authorized, he was liable for a conversion, although there was no wrongful intent on his part. Laverty v. Sneath, 68 N. Y. 522, 524, 23 Am. Rep. 184.

CONSTRUCTIVE DELIVERY

"A delivery which will discharge the carrier may be constructive and not actual. To constitute a 'constructive delivery,' the carrier must, if practicable, give notice to the consignee of the arrival, and when this has been done, and the goods are discharged in the usual and proper place, and reasonable opportunity offered to the consignee to remove them, the liability of the common carrier as such terminates." Becker v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 96 N. Y. Supp. 1, 5, 109 App. Div. 230 (quoting Tarbell v. Royal Exchange Shipping Co., 17 N. E. 721, 724, 110 N. Y. 170, 180).

Where goods are ordered, and no specific instruction given for shipment, a delivery to the usual carrier for the purchaser is a "constructive delivery" to the purchaser, and the goods become the property of the purchaser, subject only to the right of stoppage in transitu. Bloom's Son Co. v. Haas, 108 S. W. 1078, 1079, 130 Mo. App. 122.

Where there are no specific instructions as to shipment, a delivery by the seller to the usual carrier for the buyer, with proper directions, is a "constructive delivery" to the buyer and the goods immediately become his property, subject only to the right of stoppage in transitu. Lewis v. Imhof, 122 S. W. 329, 331, 138 Mo. App. 370.

The "constructive delivery" sufficient to constitute a delivery, essential to make a gift causa mortis, must completely terminate the donor's custody and control of the property given and must place it wholly under the power of the donee and enable him, without further act of the donor, to reduce it to manual possession. Scott v. Union & Planters' Bank & Trust Co., 130 S. W. 757, 761, 123 Tenn. 258.

Where goods were given to a railroad company for delivery to a consignee at a place where the company had no facilities for unloading cars or storing goods, and the company provided no facilities to the consignee for unloading cars except the consignee's own siding, the detaching of cars from trains and placing them on a side storage track between stations, where the consignee could not obtain access to them, for purposes of unloading, followed by notice to the consignee of their arrival, was not "constructive delivery," so as to put the consignee in default and entitle the carrier to demurrage. Carrizzo v. New York, S. & W. R. Co., 123 N. Y. Supp. 173, 176, 66 Misc. Rep. 243.

A "constructive delivery" of goods by a carrier to a buyer can be effected only by an agreement between the carrier or middleman and the buyer, whereby the former agrees to hold the goods for the latter for some purpose other than that of carriage to and delivery at their original destination; and, in the absence of an agreement with the buyer to the contrary, the carrier will be presumed to hold in its original capacity, and the carrier cannot constitute itself the buyer's agent for the custody of the goods, nor can the buyer, without the carrier's consent, make it his agent for custody. State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 72 Atl. 331, 333, 104 Me. 463, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 942.

To establish a "constructive delivery" by a ship of goods deposited on the wharf, it is necessary for the carrier to show that he separated the goods from the general bulk of the cargo, designated them, and gave due notice to the consignees of the time and place of their deposit and a reasonable time for their removal. The Titania, 131 Fed. 229, 230, 65 C. C. A. 215.

Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 3567, relating to gifts, declares that any act which indicates a renunciation of dominion by the donor, and transfer of dominion to the donee, is a "constructive delivery." Philpot v. Temple Banking Co., 60 S. E. 480, 483, 3 Ga. App. 742.

Where a broker, empowered to negotiate a sale of real estate, but not to execute a contract of sale, procured a purchaser, prepared a contract in duplicate, which the purchaser signed, and sent the duplicates to the owner, with the request to sign both contracts and return one for the purchaser, and the owner signed both, kept one, retained the money accompanying it, and returned the other contract to the broker, the contract of sale was executed and "delivered" within the principle established as to a grant, by Civ. Code, § 1059, providing that a grant shall be deemed constructively delivered where the instrument is delivered for the benefit of the grantee. Carr v. Howell, 97 Pac. 885, 889, 154 Cal. 372.

CONSTRUCTIVE DESERTION

To entitle a wife to divorce for "constructive desertion," in that she was compelled to leave her husband because of his conduct, his conduct must be the degree of cruelty necessary to support a decree a mensa et thoro. Thomas v. Thomas (N. J.) 74 4tl. 125, 126.

CONSTRUCTIVE EVICTION

Of lessee

A "constructive eviction" is an obstruction to the beneficial enjoyment of leased premises by the landlord, but intent of the landlord to compel the tenant to vacate is not essential; it being sufficient that his acts tend to compel vacation. Berlinger v. Macdonald, 133 N. Y. Supp. 522, 524, 149 App. Div. 5.

A "constructive eviction" exists where the physical expulsion of the tenant is not effected, but the acts of the landlord so interfere with the beneficial enjoyment of the premises as to necessitate an abandonment thereof. Jackson v. Paterno, 108 N. Y. Supp. 1073, 1076, 58 Misc. Rep. 201.

A "constructive eviction" exists where a lessor does some act, or omits to perform some obligation, imposed upon him by the lease, as the result of which the lessee's possession and beneficial enjoyment of the premises are interfered with, and is more than a mere trespass, and not dependent upon an actual entry of the leased premises by the lessor. Dolph v. Barry, 148 S. W. 196, 198, 165 Mo. App. 659.

The relation of landlord and tenant can be terminated by a "constructive eviction," consisting of conduct compelling the tenant to abandon the premises. Phoenix Land & Improvement Co. v. Seidel, 115 S. W. 1070, 135 Mo. App. 185.

Evictions are of two kinds: "Actual eviction," by the landlord or through a title paramount, by which the tenant is actually deprived of the use of a material part of the premises; and "constructive eviction," where the landlord, by acts of omission or commission, deprives the tenant of the beneficial enjoyment of the premises, the character of the enjoyment to which he is entitled depending upon the nature of the building and the purpose for which it was let. Lawrence v. Katcher, 117 N. Y. Supp. 876, 879.

A "constructive eviction" is something done by a landlord or his agents which deprives the tenant of the full benefit and enjoyment of the leased premises; and such acts of the landlord or his agent, accompanied by an abandonment of the premises by the tenant with reasonable promptitude, are a virtual expulsion of the tenant, precluding a recovery for rent thereafter. Fox v. Murdock, 109 N. Y. Supp. 108, 109, 58 Misc. Rep. 207.

A "constructive eviction" is, properly speaking, no eviction at all in the sense originally attached to that word; that is, as signifying an actual ouster from lands and tenements, either by a stranger to the lease gaining possession on title superior to the landlord's or by an expulsion at the hands of the landlord himself. To constitute an eviction by construction of law, the wrongful conduct of the landlord must be sufficient to render the premises untenable for the purpose for which the tenant leased them, or at least seriously interfere with their profitable use. When a constructive eviction is asserted because of breaches of covenants by the lessor, the magnitude of the breach and the extent of the injury done to the lessee in the way of destroying his use of the leasehold are decisive of whether or not an eviction occurred. Delmar Investment Co. v. Blumenfeld, 94 S. W. 823, 826, 118 Mo. App. 308.

Real Property Law, § 227, providing that, where any building which is leased or occupied is destroyed, or so injured by the elements, or any other cause, as to be uninhabitable and unfit for occupancy, the lessee may, if the destruction or injury occurred without his fault, surrender the possession without liability for subsequent rent, gives relief only where the building itself is injured, or, by reason of other conditions, the tenant's enjoyment of the leased premises is interfered with, and so unbearable stench from rats, which have died in the walls of an apartment, does not, under this law, constitute a "constructive eviction." Barnard Realty Co. v. Bonwit, 135 N. Y. Supp. 700, 702, 76 Misc. Rep. 464.

"To constitute a 'constructive eviction' there must be an intentional and injurious interference by the landlord, which deprives the tenant of the beneficial enjoyment of the demised premises. Such eviction cannot be predicated of acts or misconduct, however wrongful or distressing, unless committed, encouraged, or connived at with the landlord. He is not responsible for the conduct of other tenants acting within their rights in their own apartments." A rule subjoined to leases of an apartment house declared: "Practicing on any musical instruments not allowed." The lease also provided: "In case of violation of any of the covenants of the lease or any rule of the building by the lessee, * * * the lease shall at the option of the lessor immediately be annulled, * * * and the lessor may re-enter without notice," etc. The provision is not a covenant on the part of the landlord that such option will be exercised for the benefit of one tenant when the rule of the house is violated by another tenant, and his failure to do so is not an eviction of the tenant complaining. Sefton v. Juilliard, 91 N. Y. Supp. 348, 349, 46 Misc. Rep. 68 (quoting and adopting definition in Seaboard Realty Co. v. Fuller, 67 N. Y. Supp. 146, 33 Misc. Rep. 109).

The refusal of a landlord to repair a bursted waterpipe, as required by the lease, is not a "constructive eviction." Baldwin v. Cohen, 116 N. Y. Supp. 510, 511, 182 App. Div. 87.

In order to constitute "constructive eviction" based on defective plumbing, it must be shown not only that the plumbing was defective, but that its condition rendered the premises untenable, and that the landlord with knowledge of these facts violated an agreement to keep the premises in repair. Huggins v. Jasper, 114 S. W. 545, 546, 134 Mo. App. 1.

CONSTRUCTIVE FORCE

"Constructive force" is a putting in fear. Long v. State, 12 Ga. 293, 315.

As related to the commission of robbery, "actual force" is applied to the body, while "constructive force" is by threatening words or gestures, and operates on the mind. Tones v. State, 88 S. W. 217, 220, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 363, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1024, 122 Am. St. Rep. 759, 18 Ann. Cas. 455.

CONSTRUCTIVE FRAUD

A "constructive fraud" is an act which the law declares to be fraudulent without inquiring into its motive. Frost v. Latham & Co., 181 Fed. 866, 868.

"Constructive fraud," as distinguished from "actual fraud," is inferred from illegal or improper acts that result in loss or injury to others; for example, that kind of fraud which might be inferred from an overvaluation of property purchased for a corporation by dummy directors. Hobgood v. Ehl- en, 53 S. E. 857, 859, 141 N. C. 344.

"By 'constructive frauds' are meant such acts or contracts as, although not originating in any actual evil design or contrivance to perpetrate a positive fraud or injury upon other persons, are yet by their tendency to deceive or mislead other persons, or to violate private or public confidence, or to impair or injure the public interest, deemed equally reprehensible with positive fraud, and therefore are prohibited by law as within the same reason and mischief as acts and contracts done malo animo." Where a clerk in the office of the Commissioner of the Five Civilized Tribes in Muskogee, Ind. T., appointed by the Commissioner, acting for and on behalf of the Secretary of the Interior, who kept the Creek roll in his office, took the roll from the office with the intent to make a copy thereof, the taking was fraudulent within the meaning of Rev. St. U. S. § 5408, providing a punishment for any officer having the custody of any record filed in his office, or deposited with him, or in his custody, who fraudulently takes it away or destroys it. Martin v. United States, 104 S. W. 678, 684, 7 Ind. T. 451.

"Constructive fraud" does not necessarily negative integrity of purpose, and may be an act which the law declares fraudulent without inquiry into its motives, and is such fraud as the law infers from the relationship of the parties or the circumstances surrounding them, regardless of any actual dishonesty of purpose. Curtis v. Armagast (Iowa) 138 N. W. 873, 878.

Where the petition in a suit to set aside certain conveyances in trust charges actual fraud, and the proof not only tends to show actual fraud, but shows a fiduciary relationship, sometimes denominated "constructive fraud," evidence of the fiduciary relationship of the parties is admissible under the general allegation of fraud. Bleyer v. Bleyer, 117 S. W. 709, 715, 219 Mo. 99.

A bill of sale intended as an absolute transfer of title, but made with a secret agreement that the grantee, after selling enough goods to pay the grantor's indebtedness to him, should turn back to the grantor the remainder, or their proceeds, presents a case of "constructive fraud," sometimes called "legal fraud." Walklin v. Horswill, 123 N. W. 668, 672, 24 S. D. 191.

CONSTRUCTIVE HOMICIDE

A stenographer appointed by a board of coroners and entitled to receive an amount per folio for all transcripts made for the use of the district attorney's office, on being directed to make transcripts for all "homicide cases," could recover the statutory compensation for the transcripts furnished in all cases of death, whether from negligence or otherwise; but, on the stenographer including in his claim compensation for transcripts in cases of "constructive homicide," it was wrongfully assumed that he had no right to recover for cases of such description. Strassner v. City of New York, 39 N. Y. Supp. 669, 670, 6 App. Div. 370.

CONSTRUCTIVE KNOWLEDGE

"Constructive knowledge" of the precise injury liable to befall an employé in case of his inattention to a warning means that knowledge that he necessarily would have acquired in the exercise of ordinary care for his own safety. Ft. Worth & R. G. R. Co. v. Robinson, 84 S. W. 410, 412, 87 Tex. Civ. App. 466.

An allegation, in a complaint in an action for injuries to an employé, of knowledge of the employer, embraces not merely actual knowledge, but also "constructive knowledge," which is that knowledge chargeable to the employer from an opportunity, by the exercise of ordinary care, to know. Zeller, McClellan & Co. v. Vinardi, 85 N. E. 378, 380, 42 Ind. App. 232.

CONSTRUCTIVE MALICE

See Implied Malice.

"Constructive malice" is an inference or conclusion of law as to malice from the facts found by the jury. State v. Di Guglielmo (Del.) 55 Atl. 350, 351, 4 Pennewill, 336; State v. Mills (Del.) 69 Atl. 841, 842, 6 Pennewill, 497.

CONSTRUCTIVE MORTGAGE

A deed absolute on its face may be shown by parol to be a mortgage to secure future advances and the performance of a contract, though the mortgagor did not at the time have title to the land, and though title was in the name of a third person under an agreement with him for convenience. Stitt v. Rat Portage Lumber Co., 104 N. W. 561, 564, 96 Minn. 27.

A deed absolute in form, but given merely for purposes of security, is in equity a "constructive mortgage." Wilson v. Rehm, 117 Ill. App. 473, 477.

Since, under Rev. St. c. 84, §§ 17-21, the court has full equity powers, it can treat a conveyance or reservation in a conveyance absolute in terms, as made solely for security for some obligation, if it finds such to be the fact from extrinsic evidence. Plaintiff reserved in terms an absolute life estate out of a farm conveyed by her to defendant. One consideration for the conveyance was a bond of the defendant to support plaintiff on the farm, and that the reservation was made solely as security for the performance of the bond. Held, that defendant was entitled to retain possession of the farm until a breach of his bond, and, no such breach being shown, plaintiff is not yet entitled to possession. Hurd v. Chase, 62 Atl. 660, 661, 100 Me. 561.

In determining whether an instrument in the form of a deed is or is not a mortgage, the principal test to be applied is whether the relation of the parties towards each other of debtor or creditor continued after the execution of the deed. The test is the existence or nonexistence of a debt, and equity looks behind the form to the fact. If the transaction was intended as a loan, if there remains a debt for which the conveyance is only a security, and the collection of which may be enforced independent of the security, equity will hold it a mortgage, no matter whether the transaction is evidenced by one or two instruments. Plummer v. Ilse, 82 Pac. 1009, 1010, 41 Wash. 5, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 627, 11 Am. St. Rep. 997.

CONSTRUCTIVE NEGLIGENCE

The term "constructive negligence" is not properly applicable to the failure of a banker to look to the interests of his depositor, to see that the signature of the payee of a check presented to the bank for payment is genuine. Jordan Marsh Co. v. National Shawmut Bank, 87 N. E. 740, 742, 201 Mass. 397, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 250.

CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE

See, also, Legal Notice.

"Constructive notice" is notice imputed by law. Parker v. Maslin, 116 Pac. 227, 228, 85 Kan. 130.

"Constructive notice" is a legal presumption not to be controverted. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Wood (Tex.) 152 S. W. 487, 491.

"Constructive notice" is defined to be in its nature no more than evidence of notice, the presumption of which is so violent that the court will not even allow of its being controverted. Reed v. Munn, 148 Fed. 787, 756, 80 C. C. A. 215 (quoting and adopting the definition in United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co., 131 Fed. 668, 67 C. C. A. 1).

"Constructive notice" is a knowledge of such facts that the party possessing such knowledge is conclusively presumed to know other things besides the facts which have been proved to have come to his knowledge. Powers v. Perry, 106 Pac. 595, 596, 12 Cal. App. 77.

"Constructive notice," it is said, is the knowledge which the courts impute to a person upon a presumption so strong of the existence of the knowledge that it cannot be allowed to be rebutted, either from a duty to know imposed by the law, or from his knowing something which ought to have put him upon further inquiry, or from his willfully abstaining from inquiry to avoid notice." State v. Omaha Nat. Bank, 93 N. W. 819, 330, 66 Neb. 857.

"Constructive notice" is a legal inference from established facts, and like other legal presumptions does not admit of dispute. "It is in its nature no more than evidence of notice, the presumption of which is so violent that the court will not even allow of its being contradicted." Cooper v. Flesner, 103 Pac. 1016, 1020, 24 Okl. 47, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1180, 20 Ann. Cas. 29 (quoting Story, Eq. Jur. § 399).

A person chargeable with "constructive notice" is as much bound thereby as if the notice were actual. D. P. Haynes & Bro. v. W. O. Gray & Co., 41 South. 615, 148 Ala. 663.

"Constructive notice" is defined by Rev. Codes, § 5117, as notice imputed by law to a person not having actual notice. A mortgagee in a mortgage executed by a grantee in a deed, absolute on its face but intended as a mortgage, cannot be defeated, where he relied on the record title and the grantee's apparent ownership, and had no actual notice or knowledge that the deed was other than what it purported to be, in view of section 4730, providing that, when a grant of real property purports to be an absolute conveyance, but is intended to be defeasible on certain conditions, such grant is not defeated or affected as against any person other than the grantee or his heirs or devisees having actual notice, unless an instrument of defeasance, duly executed and acknowledged, is recorded. Patnode v. Deschenes, 106 N. W. 573, 576, 15 N. D. 100.

Actual notice distinguished

"Constructive notice" is that which is imputed by law, while "actual notice" is that which consists in express information of a fact; and a notice is deemed actual when the party sought to be affected by it knows of the existence of the particular fact in question or is conscious of having means of knowing it. Parker v. Maslin, 116 Pac. 227, 228, 85 Kan. 130.

As notice from circumstances

The existence of a hole in a sidewalk, covered by a board so as to be invisible, for 24 hours, is not "constructive notice" to the borough in which it is located, which has no actual notice of the hole; and hence the borough is not liable for injuries to a person who stepped on the board and was thrown into the hole by the turning of the board. Yeager v. Berwick Borough, 67 Atl. 347, 348, 218 Pa. 265.

"By 'constructive notice' is meant such notice as the law imputes from the circumstances of the case." "After a street has been out of repair, so that the defect has become known and notorious to those traveling the street, and there has been full opportunity for the municipality, through its agents charged with that duty, to learn of its existence and repair it, the law imputes to it notice and charges it with negligence." Todd v. Lacy, 61 N. Y. 506, 509.

Whether a defect in a sidewalk has existed a sufficient length of time and under such circumstances that the city is deemed to have had notice thereof is a question of fact, and not one of law; and the court cannot charge that the existence of the defect for a certain time is of itself to be deemed "constructive notice." Hendershott v. City of Grand Rapids, 105 N. W. 140, 141, 142 Mich. 140.

In an action against a city for injuries sustained on account of a defective sidewalk, the court instructed: "It is not necessary that the defendant city should have had actual notice of the unsafe and dangerous condition of the sidewalk (if you find that the sidewalk was unsafe); if you find that such condition of said sidewalk existed a sufficient length of time before the injury to have enabled the defendant city, or its officers and agents, by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, to have known of the existence thereof and remedy the same, then the law implies a notice to the defendant city of the existence of the condition." The statement in the instruction that the "law implies a notice" is equivalent to a statement that the city had "constructive notice." Robison v. White City, 94 Pac. 141, 142, 77 Kan. 293.

"Constructive notice" is defined to be in its nature no more than evidence of notice, the presumption of which is so violent that the court will not even allow of its being controverted. What makes inquiry a duty is such a visible state of things as is inconsistent with a perfect right in him who proposes to sell. A purchaser of the property of a lumber company is not charged with the knowledge of the wrongful character, as against the federal government, of certain conveyances of standing timber, which might have been gained by a searching investigation of the books and papers turned over by the lumber company as evidence of its titles, where there were no circumstances disclosed which cast suspicion upon those titles. United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co., 26 Sup. Ct. 282, 286, 200 U. S. 321, 50 L. Ed. 499 (quoting and adopting definition in Townsend v. Little, 3 Sup. Ct. 357, 109 U. S. 504, 27 L. Ed. 1012).

To constitute "constructive notice" that a possession begun by consent is adverse, there must be some visible change in the nature of the occupancy calculated to notify the owner that the land is in the possession of a hostile claimant. Lancey v. Parks, 66 Atl. 311, 313, 102 Me. 135.

"Constructive notice" is defined in Civ. Code, § 4666, as notice imputed by law. A certificate of acknowledgment of a mortgage by husband and wife is not rendered insufficient to charge a subsequent purchaser with notice by reason of the fact that in the statement that the parties "severally acknowledged — he — executed the same," the blanks before and after the word "he" were not filled so as to make the word "they." Trerise v. Bottego, 79 Pac. 1057, 1058, 32 Mont. 244, 108 Am. St. Rep. 521.

As notice of facts putting on inquiry

"Constructive notice" is knowledge of such facts and circumstances as would put a reasonably prudent man on such inquiry as, being made, would have led to actual knowledge of the fact in question. Moore v. Dunn, 41 S. W. 530, 531, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 371.

Rev. Code 1899, § 5118, defines "constructive notice" as follows: "Every person who has actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man on inquiry as to a particular fact, and who omits to make such inquiry with reasonable diligence, is deemed to have 'constructive notice' of the fact itself." One purchasing real estate, who had been told by a number that another person had bought the land or claimed some sort of an estate in it, had at least constructive notice of the other person's claim. "Constructive notice," where it exists, is the equivalent of actual notice. Hunter v. Coe, 97 N. W. 869, 871, 12 N. D. 505.

"Constructive notice" is expressly defined by Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, §§ 12, 13, to be notice imputed by law to a person not having actual notice. Every person who has actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry as to a particular fact, and who omits to make such inquiry with reasonable diligence, has in legal effect a notice which imputes knowledge, because he is shown to be conscious of having means of knowledge, though he does not use them, but remains voluntarily ignorant of the fact, or is grossly negligent in following up the inquiry which the known facts suggest; it does not include either positive knowledge or information so direct as to necessarily carry conviction to the mind of the person notified, and does not apply to that class of notice which depends upon legal presumption, but is substantial evidence from which the jury may infer notice. Cooper v. Flesner, 103 Pac. 1016, 1020, 24 Okl. 47, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1190, 20 Ann. Cas. 29 (citing and adopting Wade, Notice, §§ 3, 4, 5, 8).

"The law imputes to a purchaser the knowledge of a fact of which the exercise of common prudence and ordinary diligence would have apprised him. This is called 'constructive notice' and has the same effect as actual notice." The word "trustee," written on the face of a certificate of stock after the name of the person to whom the certificate was issued, is sufficient to put a purchaser of the stock on inquiry as to the nature of the holder's ownership. Johnson v. Amberson (Ala.) 37 South. 273, 274 (quoting and adopting the definition in Cook, Stock, Stockh. & Corp. Law [2d Ed.] § 325, p. 359).

Rev. Codes 1905, § 6702, providing that "constructive notice" is notice imputed by law to a person not having actual notice, and section 6703, providing that every person who has actual notice of sufficient circumstances to put a prudent man upon inquiry, and who omits to make such inquiry with reasonable diligence is deemed to have constructive notice of the fact itself, since the enactment of the negotiable instruments law, have no application to actions upon negotiable instruments in the hands of indorsees before maturity, if they ever had such application, being superseded by section 6358, defining notice in such case as actual knowledge of infirmity or defects or knowledge of such facts as to amount to bad faith. American Nat. Bank v. Lundy, 129 N. W. 99, 102, 21 N. D. 167.

Rev. Civ. Code, § 2035, provides that an inferior lienor may redeem the property, as the owner might, from the superior lien, and be subrogated to all benefits of the superior lien; section 2451 defines "constructive notice" as notice imputed by law to one not having actual notice; and section 2452 provides that every person who has actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry as to a particular fact, and who omits to make such inquiry with reasonable diligence, is deemed to have constructive notice of the fact itself. A second mortgagee paid the first mortgagee the amount due him, but no assignment or indorsement was made on the papers delivered, and no assignment of the mortgage taken, and thereafter the second mortgage was foreclosed by advertisement and plaintiff purchased. Before purchasing he made inquiries of the first mortgagee, who stated that his mortgage had been paid and satisfied; but plaintiff did not inquire who had paid it. Held, that plaintiff had "constructive notice" of the rights of the second mortgagee under his redemption. Malmberg v. Peterson, 108 N. W. 339, 340, 20 S. D. 587.

Where a party seeking to avoid or excuse a delay, on which a plea of laches is predicated, possessed information or knowledge of extraneous facts and circumstances which, though not directly tending to show the existence of a prior conflicting right, were sufficient to put him, as a prudent person on inquiry, he was then charged with "constructive notice" of all that he might have learned on an inquiry prosecuted with reasonable diligence. Miller v. Ash, 105 Pac. 600, 605, 158 Cal. 544.

Record

The recording of a trust deed of personal property, which furnishes a stranger with the means of identifying the property, gives the "constructive notice." Williamson v. Payne, 49 S. E. 660, 662, 103 Va. 551.

"The registration of a deed is 'constructive notice' only to those who subsequently have acquired from the grantor in such deed some interest or right in the property." Runge v. Gilbough (Tex. Civ. App.) 87 S. W. 832, 836.

"Constructive notice" cannot be imputed from a recording of a document which the statute does not recognize as an instrument that should be recorded. Instruments to impart constructive notice must be recorded in their true character. Benedict v. T. L. V. Land & Cattle Co., 92 N. W. 210, 212, 66 Neb. 236.

"In regard to the extent to which a purchaser is bound by 'constructive notice,' and what a purchaser by a subsequent deed is bound to know, the rule is that the law imputes to such purchaser a knowledge of all the facts relating to said land, appearing at the time of his purchase, upon the muniments of title which it was necessary for him to inspect in order to ascertain the sufficiency of such title. * * * What would be 'constructive notice' in such cases may be said to be a knowledge by the purchaser of some facts which would put him upon inquiry, and require him to examine other matters that would generally unfold the true title." A decree in partition, severing the interests of cotenants and establishing in one of them a right of way over the land allotted the other, was "constructive notice" of such easement to a purchaser of the servient estate, though the deeds thereto from the cotenant and his grantees made no mention thereof. Dickinson v. Crowell, 94 N. W. 495, 496, 120 Iowa, 254 (quoting and adopting statement in 3 Washb. Real Prop. [5th Ed.] pp. 347, 348).

To corporation

A corporation should be held to have "constructive" notice of only such facts as have been brought to the actual notice or attention of some one of its officers or agents, or of such facts only as have been constructively brought to the notice or attention of some one of its officers or agents by the actual notice of such other facts as would naturally put the officer or agent upon inquiry. Iowa Nat. Bank of Ottumwa v. Sherman & Bratager, 97 N. W. 12, 15, 17 S. D. 396, 106 Am. St. Rep. 778.

CONSTRUCTIVE OUSTER

Though entry under a deed from a part of tenants in common was not an actual ouster of the others, in the sense that notice was brought home to them of the adverse holding, it was what may be called a "constructive ouster," which the law recognizes as sufficient to put the cotenants on notice and to start the running of the statute of limitations. Armijo v. Neher, 72 Pac. 12, 18, 11 N. M. 645.

CONSTRUCTIVE POSSESSION

"Constructive possession" is that which exists in contemplation of law without actual enjoyment or occupation. Lieberman, Loveman & O'Brien v. Clark, 85 S. W. 258, 263, 114 Tenn. 117, 69 L. R. A. 782 (citing Newcome v. Crews, 32 S. W. 947, 98 Ky. 339; Brown v. Volkening, 64 N. Y. 80; Foust v. Territory, 58 Pac. 728, 8 Okl. 541; Mitchell v. Bridgers, 18 S. E. 91, 113 N. C. 63; Graham v. Houston, 15 N. C. 232; Sullivan v. Sullivan, 66 N. Y. 37; McColman v. Wilkes, 3 Strob. [S. C.] 465, 51 Am. Dec. 637; Jeffrey v. Owen, 41 N. J. Law, 260; Lofstad v. Murasky, 91 Pac. 1008, 1009, 152 Cal. 64).

"'Constructive possession' is that which exists in contemplation of law without actual personal occupation." Brown v. Volkening, 64 N. Y. 76, 80.

"Constructive possession" of land is that possession which the law presumes the owner has, in the absence of evidence of exclusive possession in another. Inhabitants of Millinocket v. Mullen, 78 Atl. 1120, 1121, 108 Me. 29.

In a controversy between adjoining landowners as to an intervening strip of land, an instruction that one cannot be in "constructive possession" and another in "actual possession" of the same piece of land at the same time was proper. Crouch v. Colbert, 84 S. W. 992, 111 Mo. App. 93.

A tenant, who went into possession of a sixth of a league of land under an agreement that, in consideration of his protection of the interest of the landlord for 5 years, the landlord would convey to him 25 acres thereof, remained in possession of the whole tract for 5 years, erected improvements on and inclosed 5 acres of the tract, to which he became entitled to a deed under the contract, and for 5 years or more thereafter lived on the same tract in the same condition, continuing during the whole time to be the lessee of the remainder of the one-sixth league, though he never demanded or received a deed as stipulated. Held insufficient to show "constructive possession" of the landlord for 10 years, so as to give him title by adverse possession of that portion of the one-sixth league not included in the 25 acres agreed to be conveyed to the tenant. William Carlyle & Co. v. Pruett, 84 S. W. 372, 375, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 384.

See Actual Possession.

Partial actual possession

The term "constructive possession" necessarily implies partial actual possession. Where a landowner conveys standing trees and a right of entry, retaining the remaining interest in the land, neither the grantor nor the grantee has actual constructive possession of the trees until the grantee actually engages in the work of felling the trees. King v. Davis, 137 Fed. 222, 246 (citing 3 Va. Law Reg. 765).

As possession

See Possession.

Possession of part under deed

"Constructive possession" of lands arises where a person having paper title to a tract of land is in actual possession of only a part. In such case the law construes the possession to extend to the boundary of the tract. Downing v. Anderson, 55 S. E. 184, 186, 126 Ga. 373; Harris v. Howard, 55 S. E. 59, 60, 126 Ga. 325; Smith v. Donaldson, 73 S. E. 577, 578, 137 Ga. 465.

"Adjacent owners may be in 'constructive possession' of the same land being included in the boundaries of each tract. In such cases no prescription can arise in favor of either, but the rights of the parties will be determined according to the superiority of the one title or the other aside from such prescription." Harriss v. Howard, 55 S. E. 59, 60, 126 Ga. 325 (citing Grimes v. Ragland, 28 Ga. 123, 127).

The doctrine of "constructive possession" of lands, by the cultivation of a part accompanied by a claim of the whole tract under color of title, does not apply to large tracts of land not purchased for actual cultivation, nor where one maintains a few acres of land in an uncultivated township, for the purpose of thereby claiming title to the entire township by the extension of his actual possession under his color of title. Lawrence v. Alabama State Land Co., 41 South. 612, 613, 144 Ala. 524 (citing Jackson ex dem. Gilliland v. Woodruff [N. Y.] 1 Cow. 276, 13 Am. Dec. 525).

Title or right of actual possession

"Constructive possession" is the possession which follows the legal title. Vanderveer Crossings v. Rapalje, 117 N. Y. Supp. 485, 486, 487, 133 App. Div. 203; Same v. Palmer, 117 N. Y. Supp. 488, 133 App. Div. 926.

One who dredges a tidal creek many years after the disappearance of a millpond, and puts the soil on the margin to reclaim it, the land formerly under water being capable of actual possession, acquires neither "actual" nor "constructive" possession. Id.

"In a general way it may be said that 'constructive possession' is that which exists in contemplation of law without actual personal occupancy of the property, such a possession as in contemplation of law proceeds from the vesting of the paramount title or follows in the wake of the legal title, or, as more exactly defined, 'constructive possession,' or 'possession in law' as it is sometimes called, is that possession which the law annexes to the legal title or ownership of property when there is a right to the immediate 'actual possession' of such property, but no actual possession." Lofstad v. Murasky, 91 Pac. 1006, 1009, 152 Cal. 64.

"Constructive possession," or "possession in law," as applied to the remedy for the quieting of title to land, is that possession which the law annexes to the legal title or ownership of property when there is a right to the immediate actual possession. When one has a legal estate in fee in land, he has the constructive possession, unless the actual possession is in some one else. Constructive possession is founded on the existence of title in some form, and it is a legal impossibility for a constructive possession under the statute of uses to vest in one under a deed from another having no legal estate to convey. Southern Ry. Co. v. Hall, 41 South. 135, 136, 145 Ala. 224 (citing Smith v. Gordon, 34 South. 838, 136 Ala. 498).

"Constructive possession" follows the legal title, the rightful owner being deemed in possession until he is ousted and disseised. Possession follows the title, in the absence of actual possession adverse to it. The phrase is also sometimes used to denote that legal fiction which extends actual possession of a part of a tract of land to the whole when the possession is held under color of title describing the whole tract." Birmingham Securities Co. v. Southern University, 55 South. 240, 173 Ala. 116 (citing 2 Words and Phrases).

"Constructive possession" of necessity depends on ownership as its basis, and "constructive possession" can never be in one except the owner. In trover for conversion of a chattel, rendered such by severance from the freehold, a possession which is merely transitory, for the purpose of making the trespass or severing a part of the freehold, does not defeat recovery by the owner of the freehold who has either actual or constructive possession of the land. Aldrich Min. Co. v. Pearce, 52 South. 911, 913, 169 Ala. 161, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 288.

Under Code 1896, § 809, authorizing a suit to quiet title by a person in peaceable possession, whether "actual or constructive," one having a legal estate in fee in the land has the "constructive" possession, unless there is an actual possession in some one else. George E. Wood Lumber Co. v. Williams, 47 South. 202, 203, 157 Ala. 73.

Code 1896, § 809, provides that one in peaceable possession of land, either actual or constructive, claiming ownership, and whose title is disputed, may maintain a suit in equity to settle the same. Held, that the "constructive possession" which exists in the holder of title is sufficient possession. Kyle v. Alabama State Land Co., 41 South. 174, 175, 147 Ala. 698.

A "constructive possession" of a tract follows the title till such possession of the rightful owner has been invaded by an actual occupancy of part of the tract; so actual occupation by another of a contiguous tract owned by him does not oust the constructive possession of the owner of the first tract, though both tracts are described in the deed to the owner of the second tract. Hardie v. Investment Guaranty & Trust Co., 98 S. W. 701, 81 Ark. 141.

"Constructive possession," within Code Civ. Proc. § 2245, providing that petitioner in forcible entry and detainer must prove actual possession at the time of the entry, or be in constructive possession at the time of a forcible holding out, includes a case where petitioner has the absolute fee or absolute right of possession by some grant, so that he would be entitled to the actual possession, but for the forcible holding out. Town of Oyster Bay v. Jacob, 96 N. Y. Supp. 620, 625, 109 App. Div. 613 (citing Lowman v. Sprague, 26 N. Y. Supp. 568, 73 Hun. 408).

Of burglars' tools

"Constructive possession" of burglars' tools, in violation of Rev. Laws, c. 208, § 41, would be proved by evidence that the implements were held by one for himself and as agent for another; "that they were jointly bought and owned, but kept by one only, or procured and held by one by mutual agreement, or at the request of another; or that they were deposited in some place mutually agreed on, to which either could resort at pleasure." Commonwealth v. Conlin, 74 N. E. 351, 188 Mass. 265 (quoting and adopting definition in Com. v. Tivnon, 8 Gray [74 Mass.] 375, 69 Am. Dec. 248, and citing Com. v. Day, 138 Mass. 186).

CONSTRUCTIVE PRESENCE

A "constructive presence" at the commission of an offense, so as to make one an accessory, is such as would enable him to take part in aiding the escape of the perpetrator, or giving him information of approaching danger, if necessary. Able v. Commonwealth, 68 Ky. (5 Bush) 698, 703.

CONSTRUCTIVE SEIZURE

"A 'constructive seizure' is accomplished by the actual reduction by the officer of the property intended to be seized to his own control. He must have brought such property so far under his subjection that he could exercise control over it, and must exercise or assume to exercise dominion by virtue of his writ. He must do some act by which he could be successfully prosecuted as a trespasser, if it were not for the protection offered him by the writ. * * * In general, it may be said that it [the levy] must be such a custody as to enable an officer to maintain and assert his control over property, and so that it cannot probably be withdrawn or taken by another without his knowing it." A sheriff's delivery to judgment debtors of a copy of the execution and notice of sale, and his posting the notice of sale and making a return not showing that he went upon or saw the property, or that he constituted the judgment debtor's or any other person's agent to keep possession, is not "constructive seizure." Cupples v. Level, 103 Pac. 430, 432, 54 Wash. 299, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 519 (quoting and adopting the definition in Jones v. Howard, 27 S. E. 765, 767, 99 Ga. 451, 59 Am. St. Rep. 231, 235).

CONSTRUCTIVE SERVICE

"Constructive service" of process is a substituted service, and is made by leaving a copy of the process at defendant's residence, when he is absent, or by posting or publishing notice of the pendency of the suit, and mailing a copy of the notice posted or published to defendant, if his post office address is known. Nelson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 80 N. E. 109, 111, 225 Ill. 197, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1186, 116 Am. St. Rep. 133.

CONSTRUCTIVE TOTAL LOSS

A "constructive total loss" is one upon the happening of which the insured may abandon the subject-matter of the insurance. Standard Marine Ins. Co. v. Nome Beach Lighterage & Transp. Co., 133 Fed. 642, 643, 67 C. C. A. 602, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1095.

Under the American rule relating to marine insurance, a "constructive total loss" with right of abandonment to the insurers exists where the damage is in excess of one-half of the insured value of the vessel or thing insured; but the right of abandonment, which must be exercised promptly in case of a disaster, does not depend on the certainty, but upon the high probability, of such loss. Royal Exch. Assur. v. Graham & Morton Transp. Co., 166 Fed. 32, 34, 92 C. C. A. 66.

The words "constructive total loss," in a marine policy stipulating that there shall be no abandonment of the barge insured as for a constructive total loss unless the cost of the necessary repairs required by the disaster, exclusive of the cost of rescuing the barge and taking her to the dock, etc., be equivalent to 75 per cent. of the agreed value, mean, when applied to damages by a storm, one of the perils insured against, to be such a loss as that the repairs made necessary thereby, exclusive of rescuing the vessel and taking her to the dock, will be equivalent to 75 per cent. of her value. Searles v. Western Assur. Co., 40 South. 866, 869, 88 Miss. 260, 117 Am. St. Rep. 741.

CONSTRUCTIVE TRESPASS

A mere claim of dominion, an intention intimated to interfere with acts under pretense of right or authority, amounts to a "constructive trespass." Lowe v. Ozmum, 86 Pac. 729, 732, 3 Cal. App. 387 (quoting and adopting definition from Dodge v. Meyer, 61 Cal. 420).

CONSTRUCTIVE TRUST

See, also, Implied Trust; Involuntary Trust.

A "constructive trust" is one created by operation of law, arising independent of contract. Eisenberg v. Goldsmith, 113 Pac. 1127, 1131, 42 Mont. 563.

1 Perry on Trusts, p. 168, defines a "constructive trust" as a trust arising from some equitable principle, independent of the existence of any fraud; as where an estate has been purchased and the consideration money paid, but the deed is not taken, equity will raise a trust by construction for the purchaser. Safford v. Barber, 70 Atl. 371, 375, 74 N. J. Eq. 352.

Trusts are classified into "direct or express trusts" (that is, those springing from agreement of the parties) and into "constructive or implied trusts" (that is, those created by the rules and principles of equity). Under this latter class fall all of those trusts known distinctively as implied or constructive, as well as those called resultant; in short, all those that do not spring from the agreement of the parties. * * * A 'constructive trust' is one not created by any words, either expressly or impliedly evincing a direct intention to create a trust, but only by the construction and operation of equity in order to satisfy the demands of justice." Newman v. Newman, 55 S. E. 377, 379, 60 W. Va. 371, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 370.

Where a purchaser at a judicial sale purchased for another, who was in possession and owned an interest, a trust was created in favor of such other person. Parker v. Catron, 85 S. W. 740, 741, 120 Ky. 145, 117 Am. St. Rep. 575 (quoting and adopting the definition in Pomeroy's Eq. § 1044).

Intention of parties

"Constructive trusts" generally have their roots in actual or legal fraud, and generally arise in cases where there is no intention to create a trust. Alexander v. Spaulding, 66 N. E. 694, 696, 160 Ind. 176.

"Constructive trusts" include all those instances in which a trust is raised by the doctrine of equity for the purpose of working out justice in the most efficient manner, where there is no intention of the parties to create a relation, and in most cases contrary to the intention of the one holding the legal title, and where there is no express or implied, written or verbal, declaration of the trust. Orth v. Orth, 42 N. E. 277, 282, 145 Ind. 184, 32 L. R. A. 298, 57 Am. St. Rep. 185 (citing 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1044; Perry, Trusts, § 166; Pillow v. Brown, 26 Ark. 240; Hollinshead v. Simms, 51 Cal. 158; McLane v. Johnson, 43 Vt. 48; Collins v. Collins, 6 Lans. [N. Y.] 368; Griffith v. Godey, 5 Sup. Ct. 383, 113 U. S. 89, 28 L. Ed. 934; Lewin, Trusts, 180, note 1; Mecall v. Tully, 91 Ind. 96; Wright v. Moody, 18 N. E. 608, 116 Ind. 175; Parker v. Catron, 85 S. W. 740, 741, 120 Ky. 145, 117 Am. St. Rep. 575; Scribner v. Meade, 85 Pac. 477, 479, 10 Ariz. 143).

A "constructive trust" is an implied trust, raised in equity on behalf of one imposed on by another to work out justice, and in spite of the intention of one of the parties, and it always involves the element of fraud or a breach of some moral or legal duty on the part of the one charged with the trust; and hence is not enforceable against a stranger, or one not connected with the fraud, or who was under no legal duty or obligation to the complaining party. Wright v. Yates, 130 S. W. 1111, 1112, 140 Ky. 283.

"Constructive trusts" are raised by equity for the purpose of working out right and justice, where there was no intention of the party to create such relation, and often directly contrary to the intention of the one holding the legal title." Under Horner's Ann. St. 1901, § 2976 (Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 3398), providing that the provisions of section 2974 (3396) that, when a conveyance for a valuable consideration is made to one person and the consideration is paid by another, no trust shall result in favor of the latter, shall not extend to a case where it appears that by agreement, and without fraudulent intent, the person to whom the conveyance was made was to hold the land or an interest in it in trust for the party paying the purchase money or some part of it, a trust is created where plaintiffs and defendant agreed to purchase land, the former to furnish a third of the purchase money and have title to a third interest vested in them, the latter to furnish the balance of the purchase money and have the remaining interest vested in him, and when it was time to take title plaintiffs borrowed their third of the purchase money of defendant, and deed of their interest as well as of his was made to him as security for repayment by them of the money borrowed of him, he to deed their interest to them on his being repaid, either by them directly, or by rentals from the land. Holli-day v. Perry, 78 N. E. 877, 879, 880, 38 Ind. App. 588 (quoting and adopting definition in Pom. Eq. Jur. § 155).

"Constructive trusts" are raised by equity to work out right and justice, where there was no intention of the party to create such a relation, and often directly contrary to the intention of one holding the legal title; and where one obtains the legal title by fraud, or by violation of confidence, or in any other unconscientious manner, so that he cannot equitably retain the property really belonging to another, equity impresses the property with a constructive trust in favor of the one who is in good conscience entitled to it. Teich v. San Jose Safe Deposit Bank of Savings, 97 Pac. 167, 169, 8 Cal. App. 397 (citing 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 155).

Resulting trust distinguished

Implied trusts are of two species; one denominated a "resulting trust," and the other a "constructive trust." In the first class are those trusts which attach to a legal estate acquired by consent of the parties, not in violation of any fiduciary duty or trust relation, for the common benefit of both trustee and cestui que trust. This trust arises out of, and is declared in favor of, the intent of the parties creating it. Its inception is in good faith and in furtherance of fair and honest dealing. The other species of implied trusts, which is called a "constructive trust," is one imposed by a court of equity for the purpose of enforcing an equitable right as against the fraudulent intent of the trustee ex maleficio. This latter class of implied trusts have their origin in the bad faith of the trustee and are imposed by a court of conscience to defeat his wrongful ends. Hanson v. Hanson, 111 N. W. 368, 372, 78 Neb. 584.

"Resulting or presumptive trusts," says Bouvier, are those which are implied or presumed from the supposed intention of the parties and the nature of the transaction; "constructive trusts" are such as are raised independently of any such intention and which are forced on the conscience of the trustee by equitable construction and operation of law. Bunel v. Nester, 101 S. W. 69, 77, 203 Mo. 429.

Where a husband uses the coercive power he possesses over his wife to procure her to convey to him her real estate without consideration, the trust raised thereby in equity for the protection of the wife, is not a "resulting trust," as defined in Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 3396, but a "constructive trust," which will be enforced against him. Huffman v. Huffman, 35 Ind. App. 643, 73 N. E. 1096, 1097.

Wrongful acquisition of property

A "constructive trust" is one that arises where a person clothed with some fiduciary character by fraud or otherwise gains something for himself. Stahl v. Stahl, 73 N. E. 319, 320, 214 Ill. 131, 68 L. R. A. 617, 105 Am. St. Rep. 101, 2 Ann. Cas. 774.

"The element essential to create a 'constructive trust' is that fraud, either actual or constructive, must have intervened. Such trusts are raised by courts of chancery only in cases where it becomes necessary to prevent a failure of justice, and in most cases where there is no intention or agreement of the parties to create such a relation." Yuster v. Keefe, 90 N. E. 920, 922, 46 Ind. App. 460.

When a trustee or person clothed with a fiduciary character takes advantage of the relation and acquires the title or use of trust property, or makes a profit or advantage to himself out of the trust and confidence, a "constructive trust" is impressed on the property, profits, or proceeds in his hands in favor of the original beneficiary. Home Inv. Co. v. Strange (Tex.) 152 S. W. 510, 512.

One who obtains the legal title to property by fraud or by violating a fiduciary relation, or by any other unconscientious means, holds it under a "constructive trust" for the person in good conscience entitled thereto. Norris v. Kendall, 93 N. E. 1087, 1088, 48 Ind. App. 304 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1476).

A "constructive trust" is a creature of equity, and takes form whenever title is obtained by fraud, actual or constructive; in such cases equity acting on the substance, regarding that as done which should have been done. Sanguinetti v. Rossen, 107 Pac. 560, 562, 12 Cal. App. 623.

"Constructive trusts" are such as are raised by equity in respect to property which has been acquired by fraud, or where, although acquired without fraud, it is against equity that it should be retained by him who holds the legal title. Walker v. Bruce, 97 Pac. 250, 252, 44 Colo. 109.

"A well-settled and even common form of trusts ex maleficio occurs whenever a person acquires the legal title to land by means of an intentionally false and fraudulent verbal promise to hold the same for a certain specified purpose—as, for example, a promise to convey the land to a designated individual, or to reconvey it to the grantor, and the like—and, having thus fraudulently obtained the title, he retains, uses, and claims the property as absolutely his own, so that the whole transaction by means of which the ownership is obtained is in fact a scheme of actual deceit. Equity regards such a person as holding the property charged with a 'constructive trust,' and will compel him to fulfill the trust by conveying according to his engagement." Ammonette v. Black, 83 S. W. 910, 73 Ark. 310 (quoting 2 Pom. Eq. 1055).

A "constructive trust" arises where there is no express or implied, written or verbal, declaration of trust, and when one party occupying a fiduciary position, or having placed himself in such a position in relation to another that good faith requires him to act for the other, and not for himself, fraudulently acquires title to the property in himself in place of the cestui que trust. Butts v. Cooper, 44 South. 616, 619, 152 Ala. 375.

If an owner of an undivided one-half of a tract of land conveys the same by quitclaim deed to his co-owner, who thus obtains the legal title by virtue of confidential relations between them, and under such circumstances that he ought not, according to the rules of equity and good conscience, as administered in chancery, to hold the benefits, out of such circumstances or relations a court of equity will raise a "trust by construction," fasten it upon the conscience of the offending party, and convert him into a trustee of the legal title. Koefoed v. Thompson, 102 N. W. 268, 270, 73 Neb. 128.

Whenever one person acquires from another the title to real estate by a fraud, actual or constructive, practiced upon that other, a "constructive trust" is created which a court of equity will fasten upon the title in his hands. Where a husband's separate deed to his wife of property occupied by them as their homestead, in consideration of her promise to hold the same for another after her death, did not increase the wife's estate in the property on her surviving her husband, she did not hold the same under a constructive trust, under Civ. Code, § 2224, creating a constructive trust in property "acquired by fraud." Loomis v. Loomis, 82 Pac. 679, 680, 148 Cal. 149, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 312 (quoting Hayne v. Hermann, 82 Pac. 171, 97 Cal. 259).

"Constructive trusts" have no element of fraud in them, but the court merely uses the machinery of a trust for the purpose of affording redress in cases of fraud and in working out the equity of the complainant. The party guilty of the fraud is said in such cases to be a trustee ex maleficio, and will be decreed to hold the legal title for the use and benefit of the injured party, and to convey the same, when necessary for his protection, as when one has acquired the legal title to his property by unfair means. Avery v. Stewart, 48 S. E. 775, 778, 136 N. S. 426, 68 L. R. A. 776.

"A 'constructive trust' arises whenever one party has obtained money which does not equitably belong to him, and which he cannot in good conscience retain or withhold from another who is beneficially entitled to it, as, for example, when money has been acquired through breach of trust, or violation of a fiduciary duty, and the like." York v. Farmers' Bank of Garden City, 79 S. W. 968, 971, 105 Mo. App. 127 (quoting and adopting definition in Clark v. First Nat. Bank of Harrisonville, 57 Mo. App. loc. cit. 286).

"Constructive trusts" arise as a result of frauds committed by one party on another, and such a trust arises when, along with other things, a person clothed with some fiduciary character, by fraud or other wrongful conduct, gains some advantage himself. Where one was induced by fraud to contribute to the price of real estate, the title to which became vested in another, who was cognizant of the fraud and received the benefit of the payment, such owner and the property are chargeable with a constructive trust in favor of the person defrauded to the extent of the amount paid by him. Cunningham v. Pettigrew, 169 Fed. 335, 340, 94 C. O. A. 457.

Where plaintiff and defendant were partners in the purchase and sale of certain land for their joint benefit, and defendant improperly purchased the lot in controversy, which was within the partnership agreement, in his own name and with his own funds over the protest of plaintiff, who furnished money for a part of the expense and agreed to pay his share of the purchase price, the trust imposed upon defendant is of the class known as "constructive trusts." Koyer v. Willmon, 90 Pac. 135, 136, 150 Cal. 785.

"'Constructive trusts' are often termed trusts in invitum, and this phrase furnishes a criterion generally accurate and sufficient for determining what trusts are truly constructive. * * * All instances of 'constructive trusts' properly so called may refer to what equity denominates fraud, either actual or constructive, as an essential element, and as their final source." Scribner v. Meade, 85 Pac. 477, 479, 10 Ariz. 143 (quoting and adopting the definition in 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1044).

"A 'constructive trust' arises whenever another's property has been wrongfully appropriated and converted into a different form. If the person having money or any kind of property belonging to another in his hands wrongfully uses it for the purchase of lands, taking the title in his own name, or if a trustee or other fiduciary person wrongfully converts the trust fund into a different species of property, taking to himself the title, or if an agent or bailee wrongfully disposes of his principal's securities, and with the proceeds purchases other securities in his own name, in these and all similar cases equity impresses a 'constructive trust' upon the new form or species of property, not only while it is in the hands of the original wrongdoer, but as long as it can be followed and identified in whosoever hands it may come, except in those of a bona fide purchaser for value and without notice." Chaves v. Myer, 85 Pac. 233, 236, 18 N. M. 368, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 793 (quoting and adopting definition from 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1051); Harmon v. Harmon (S. C.) 71 S. E. 815, 816 (quoting and adopting definition 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. [3d Ed.] § 1051).

CONSTRUE—CONSTRUCTION

See Contemporaneous Construction;
Strict Construction.

Placing a "construction" upon an instrument means to ascertain the meaning of the signs or words made upon it, and their relation to the facts of the case. Laclede Const. Co. v. T. J. Moss Tie Co., 84 S. W. 76, 88, 185 Mo. 25 (citing Stephen's Dig. Ev., art. 91, p. 146; Carter v. Foster, 47 S. W. 6, 145 Mo. 392).

The "construction of a will" is the ascertainment of the fact of intention from competent evidence, and not the application of technical rules as legal tests. Frost v. Wingate, 64 Atl. 19, 20, 73 N. H. 535.

"By 'construction' of a will we may understand the ascertainment of the meaning and force of the words thereof and the effect in law of the disposition made therein." This meaning is given to the word "construction" as used in 3 Rev. Stat. N. Y. (5th Ed.) p. 153, pt. 2, c. 6, tit. 1, § 98, providing that "the provisions of this title shall not be construed to affect the construction of any such will." Obecny v. Goetz, 102 N. Y. Supp. 232, 234, 116 App. Div. 807 (citing Cutting v. Cutting, 86 N. Y. 522, 535).

In the absence of anything to indicate a contrary intention, it must be assumed that the framers of the Constitution and members of the Legislature, in speaking of municipal townships, used the word "township" in the ordinary popular sense of the term according to the context and approved usage of the language of Rev. Codes; § 8070, expressly providing for such construction. State ex. rel.

Gillet v. Cronin, 109 Pac. 144, 145, 41 Mont. 298 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7032).

"'Construction' is the drawing of conclusions respecting subjects that lie beyond the direct expression of the text, from elements known from and given in the text—conclusions which are in the spirit, though not within the letter, of the text." United States v. Farenholt, 27 Sup. Ct. 629, 631, 206 U. S. 226, 51 L. Ed. 1036 (adopting quotation from Lieber, 56).

In a suit to set aside a decree of divorce because obtained through fraud, the petition alleged that substituted service was had only because of willfully false affidavits, and that, if the statute prohibiting petition to review judgments of divorce applied to this case, it was unconstitutional because working a deprivation of property without due process of law. Held, that the Supreme Court had jurisdiction of an appeal from an order sustaining a demurrer to the petition because it has exclusive jurisdiction in cases involving the "construction" of the Constitutions of the United States and the state, which term signifies determining the meaning and proper effect of language by a consideration of the subject-matter and attendant circumstances, and, the petition having in good faith alleged that the statute worked a deprivation of property without due process of law, the question of its constitutionality is presented, even though the appeal might be disposed of on other grounds. Dorrance v. Dorrance, 148 S. W. 94, 97, 242 Mo. 625.

As interpretation

"While there seems to be a technical distinction between the terms 'interpretation' and 'construction,' the latter being perhaps the more comprehensive, they are so alike in their practical results and are used so interchangeably as to have become almost synonymous." Russell v. Ayer, 27 S. E. 133, 140, 120 N. C. 180, 37 L. B. A. 246.

Every question of the character referred to in Act March 2, 1907, c. 2564, 34 Stat. 1246, authorizing a writ of error by the government from the federal Supreme Court, to review certain judgments in criminal cases, need not be decided by the Supreme Court when the decision of one question disposes of the case. "Interpretation" is included in the term "construction," as used in such act. The action of the court below as to the mere construction of an indictment is not open to review on the writ of error authorized by such act. United States v. Biggs, 29 Sup. Ct. 181, 185, 211 U. S. 507, 53 L. Ed. 305; Same v. Freeman, 29 Sup. Ct. 185, 211 U. S. 525, 53 L. Ed. 311; Same v. Sullenberger, 29 Sup. Ct. 186, 211 U. S. 522, 53 L. Ed. 311.

In usage the "interpretation" and "construction" of a statute are usually understood as being the same, even though they may have a technical distinction; interpretation as well as construction of a statute consisting of an abstract distinction between the two terms. It is comprehended by Act Cong. March 2, 1907, authorizing a writ of error on behalf of the government from the federal Supreme Court, quashing an indictment, when based upon the "construction" of the statute upon which the indictment is founded. United States v. Keitel, 29 Sup. Ct. 123, 127, 211 U. S. 370, 53 L. Ed. 230.

"Construction" of a city ordinance is an effort, by applying certain rules, to ascertain the intention of the parties, when it is not clearly disclosed by their own forms of expression. City of St. Louis v. Chicago House Wrecking Co., 200 Fed. 239, 241, 118 C. C. A. 425.

As mean

The expressions "shall be construed" and "shall be deemed" have been used time out of mind in statutes to import the same as "shall mean." Dilworth v. Schuykill Imp. Land Co. of Philadelphia, 69 Atl. 47, 48, 219 Pa. 527.

CONSUL

Rev. St. U. S. § 1674, in force in 1890 when a deed executed in London, England, was acknowledged before the United States "vice and deputy consul general," provided for "vice" and "deputy" consuls. Section 1750 (page 1196) conferred on every "consular officer" the "authority and powers of a notary public." Revisal 1905, § 1024, validates acknowledgments before "vice consuls and vice consuls general." Held, in view of the above, Code, § 1245 (4), which authorized such acknowledgments before "any ambassador, minister, consul or commercial agent of the United States," included any "consul," whether consul, consul general, or vice consul or deputy consul. Powers v. Baker, 68 S. E. 203, 152 N. C. 718.

By Texas Act Dec. 18, 1837, the Republic of Texas adopted the United States consular system for the government of the "consular agents" of the Republic, and section 2 required the Secretary of State to furnish "said consuls" with such instructions as might be necessary for the regulation of commercial intercourse, etc. Held, that the words, "consuls" and "consular agents" were used interchangeably, and that a deed to land in Texas, certified to by a consular agent in Louisiana, was not objectionable, when offered in evidence, because the certificate was not by the consul. Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Kimball (Tex.) 114 S. W. 662, 668.

CONSULAR OFFICER

As notary public, see Notary Public.

A "consular officer," as defined by the Consular Regulations, § 409, "is by the law of nations and by statute the provisional conservator of the property within his dis-strict belonging to his countrymen deceased therein. He has no right, as a 'consular officer,' apart from the provisions of treaty, local law, or usage, to administer on the estate or in that character to aid any other person in so administering it, without judicial authorization. His duties are restricted to guarding and collecting the effects, and to transmitting them to the United States, or to aid others in so guarding, collecting, and transmitting them, to be disposed of pursuant to the law of the decedent's state. 7 Op. Atty. Gen. 274. It is, however, generally conceded that a 'consular officer' may intervene by way of observing the proceedings, and that he may be present on the making of the inventory." Rocca v. Thompson, 82 Sup. Ct. 207, 209, 223 U. S. 317, 328, 56 L. Ed. 453.

CONSULT

"To 'consult' is defined as to apply to for direction or information; to ask the advice of—as to consult a lawyer; to discuss something together; to deliberate." Hewey v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 62 Atl. 600, 602, 100 Me. 523.

CONSULT OR CONSULTATION WITH PHYSICIAN

"'Consulting' a physician, and being 'under the care of' a physician, not only in the technical use of the terms, but to the common mind, may mean very different things. A man may consult a physician without being under his care at all." Hewey v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 62 Atl. 600, 602, 100 Me. 523.

A person does not "consult" a physician and is not "treated" for an "ailment," within the meaning of a question in an insurance application, by merely stating to a physician that he has a headache and receiving medicine therefor, without asking or receiving any professional advice. Modern Woodmen of America v. Miles (Ind.) 97 N. E. 1009.

In an application for life insurance, the insured stated that he had not consulted a physician within a certain time. The evidence was that a physician, who was his friend, made at intervals examinations of insured to ascertain the condition of his health, and that this was done, not at the instance of the insured, but on the physician's own initiative, without charge, and for the sole purpose of rendering a friendly service, and the court holds that it would be a misuse of words, as they are ordinarily understood, and especially as they were employed in this application, to say that in so submitting himself to those examinations the insured "consulted a physician" or was attended by him. Mutual Reserve Life Ins. Co. v. Dobler, 137 Fed. 550, 556, 70 C. C. A. 134.

In an action on an insurance policy, the insurer defended on the ground that a warranty in the application that the insured had not consulted a physician for a certain length of time before his application was untrue. An instruction, requested by the defendant, was that if the insured talked with a doctor with regard to his health, and if the doctor gave the insured certain medicine for some ailment, the verdict should be for the defendant. Before giving the instruction the court changed the words "talked with" to "consulted." Held, that this change was not improper, for "consulted," as used in this connection, means the same as "talked with," "consulted" meaning to apply for direction and information, while to "talk with" a physician and get medicine from him amounts to the same thing. Winn v. Modern Woodmen of America, 137 S. W. 292, 295, 157 Mo. App. 1.

Merely calling in the office of a doctor for some medicine to relieve a temporary indisposition, or simply for an examination to ascertain if there is any ailment or complaint about the person, and for nothing more, is not a "consultation by a physician," within the meaning of a question in an application for an insurance policy as to whether the applicant had within a certain time "consulted a physician." Scofield's Adm'x v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 64 Atl. 1107, 1109, 79 Vt. 161, 8 Ann. Cas. 1152.

The attendance of a physician at the time of a normal case of confinement is not a "consultation with a physician," within the meaning of a statement by an applicant for life insurance that within the last seven years she had not consulted any physician in regard to a personal ailment. Basicot v. Royal Neighbors of America, 108 Pac. 1048, 1053, 18 Idaho, 85, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 483, 138 Am. St. Rep. 180.

Where a benefit certificate is issued on applicant's warranty that she had not consulted a physician, a call made by a physician at the instance of applicant's husband is a "consultation" within the meaning of the warranty, if she accepts his services and receives aid from him. Beard v. Royal Neighbors of America, 99 Pac. 83, 86, 53 Or. 102, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 798, 17 Ann. Cas. 1199.

That applicant for reinstatement of life insurance had been treated by a physician for what was regarded as a common temporary inflammation of the throat did not constitute "consultation" of a physician within a statement in the application that he had not consulted a physician since a certain time, though it subsequently appeared that applicant had tubercular laryngitis. Cole v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 56 South. 645, 647, 129 La. 704, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 748.

CONSUME—CONSUMPTION

See Business Consumption; Loan for Consumption.

The power given by law to a devisee to use the principal means the "power to consume," and the power to consume real estate necessarily includes the power to convey. Kennedy v. Pittsburg & L. E. R. Co., 65 Atl. 1102, 1103, 216 Pa. 575.

Act March 3, 1897, c. 389, § 17, 29 Stat. 691, amending Rev. St. U. S. § 2797, provided that sea stores and the legitimate equipment of vessels in the foreign trade, delayed in port for any cause, may be transferred in the port from one vessel to another of the same owner by payment of duties, but duties must be paid on such stores or equipment landed for consumption. Held, that the word "consumed" should not be construed to mean only such articles as are eaten, since candles, kerosene, and coal, used to light the vessel, are as much consumed in the course of a voyage as is the food eaten. United States v. Hawley & Letzerich, 160 Fed. 734, 735.

Table ware and commissary supplies furnished to a subcontractor and materials furnished workmen in railway construction work in part payment for their labor are not "consumed" within a statute giving a lien to a materialman for material delivered to a subcontractor who performs any part of the work in grading any railroad company's roadway, etc. S. B. Luttrell & Co. v. Knoxville L. & J. R. Co., 105 S. W. 565, 572, 119 Tenn. 492.

CONSUMABLE ARTICLES

Under the rule that a limitation over on the death of one to whom chattels are bequeathed, to be held and enjoyed by her during life, is valid, except as to such articles the use of which means their "consumption," corn, wheat, shock fodder, sheaf oats, chickens, and fat hogs are classed as property "consumed in its use"; while a deposit in bank, sheep, horses, cows and calves, a threshing outfit, gristmill, blacksmith tools, and farming implements are not. Davison's Adm'r v. Davison's Adm'r, 149 S. W. 982, 983, 149 Ky. 571.

CONSUMER

See Large Consumer; Separate Consumer.

Water was supplied to three tenement houses, occupied by three families, but owned by one person, through a single pipe. The minimum charge for water was 60 cents per month, and "each consumer" was required by the regulations to be supplied by a separate pipe. Held, that a minimum charge of $1.80 per month was proper; each householder using water and occupying a separate house, either as tenant or owner, being a "consumer." Thompson v. City of Goldsboro, 65 S. E. 901, 902, 151 N. C. 189.

CONSUMMATE

See Courtesy Consummate.

A landowner contracted with a corporation for a lease of land for the purpose of mining and an option to purchase, the first payment of $15,000 to be made September 1, 1907, deed to be made on first payment, and provided that the lessee should pay rent on the buildings and royalties on the iron mined. Before the first payment became due a new contract was entered into, because a prospective purchaser of stock in the corporation objected to the amount of the first payment provided by the lease, and the new contract made the first payment $4,250, deed to be made on this payment, and further provided that the corporation might retain possession of all parts of the premises as it now occupies, and pursue its business of mining for ores "during and until this contract is finally 'consummated' as contemplated on the first day of September, 1907." After the execution of the contract, mining operations were continued as before, but no payment was made and no deed executed, but the owner received royalties thereafter until the mine was closed down for the lack of funds, and a chattel mortgage given on the mining machinery. Held, that the second contract would be construed a lease with option to purchase, though standing alone it was a contract for the sale of land, since by using the word "consummate," which means to complete, and making time of the essence of the contract, it was obvious that that was the intention. Powell v. Plank, 125 S. W. 886, 888, 141 Mo. App. 406.

CONSUMMATED SALE

Where the contract between the purchaser and seller of real estate contained a provision fixing the compensation of the agent who procured the purchaser, and also fixing the period of payment of such compensation as the time of the consummation of the sale, held, in an action by the agent to recover his commissions, that the "consummation of the sale" contemplated by the parties was the passing of the title, and that the agent's compensation under the contract was contingent upon that. Morse v. Conley, (N. J.) 85 Atl. 196, 197.

A "consummated sale," within the requirements of the rule permitting recovery of commission by a broker for a consummated sale, is not necessarily a sale consummated by the delivery of deeds of conveyance, but such a contract as will be enforced by the courts, if enforcement be demanded. Ormsby v. Graham, 98 N. W. 724, 729, 123 Iowa, 202.

CONSUMPTION

"Consumption" is the most common and most fatal of all diseases. It is a disease of the lungs, caused by a germ breathed into the lungs, or which gets into the body with food. The germ comes only from some other person or animal that has the disease. Therefore a refusal to perform a marriage agreement on the ground that the one refusing is afflicted with consumption is justified. Grover v. Zook, 87 Pac. 638, 640, 44 Wash. 489, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 582, 120 Am. St. Rep. 1012, 12 Ann. Cas. 192 (citing Sanders v. Coleman, 34 S. E. 621, 97 Va. 690, 47 L. R. A. 581).

Where, in an action for injuries to a traveler in a collision with a team, the complaint alleged that the team struck plaintiff, and the answer denied it, but admitted that plaintiff came into collision with the team, and the evidence was conflicting, and two witnesses testified that the team was practically at a standstill when plaintiff collided with it, an instruction that it was admitted that defendant was driving along the highway and came in "contact" with plaintiff was misleading. The word "contact" might be considered by the jury as synonymous with collision. Ooors v. Brock, 96 Pac. 963, 964, 44 Colo. 80.

CONTACT WITH POISON

"Contact with poison," or with poisonous substances, in the ordinary sense, means contact with corporeal matter, with that which is substance, as distinguished from that which cannot be seen nor handled. Farner v. Massachusetts Mut. Accident Ass'n, 67 Atl. 927, 928, 219 Pa. 71, 123 Am. St. Rep. 621.

Death from blood poisoning caused by the sting of an insect is not the result of "poison in any form or manner" or of "contact with poisonous substances," within the meaning of an accident policy. Omberg v. United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 40 S. W. 909, 911, 101 Ky. 303, 72 Am. St. Rep. 413.

Where an embalmer accidentally punctured the palm of his hand with the point of an embalming needle while embalming a dead body, and blood poison set in, resulting in death a few weeks later, the death was not from "contact with poisonous substances" within an accident policy exempting insurer from liability for injuries arising from "contact with poisonous substances." Simpkins v. Hawkeye Commercial Men's Ass'n, 126 N. W. 192, 194, 148 Iowa, 543.

CONTAGIOUS DISEASE

While a well-defined difference in the meanings of the words "contagious" and "infectious" is observed by lexicographers and scientists, an instruction, in an action for damage to a shipment of hogs through their wrongful exposure to cholera, where some witnesses say that cholera is "contagious," others "infectious," and others that it is both, but it is admitted that the disease is transmissible, it is immaterial whether the word "infectious" or the word "contagious" was used to describe the form of transmissibility. Council v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 100 S. W. 57, 61, 123 Mo. App. 432.

"There is doubtless a technical distinction between the two [terms 'contagious' and 'infectious'] in the fact that a contagious disease, is communicable by contact, or by bodily exhalation, while an infectious disease presupposes a cause acting by hidden influence, like the miasma of prison ships or marshes, etc., or through the pollution of water or the atmosphere, or from the various ejections from animals. The word 'contagious,' however, is often used in a similar sense of pestilential or poisonous and not strictly confined to influences emanating directly from the body." Grayson v. Lynch, 16 Sup. Ct. 1064, 1068, 163 U. S. 477, 41 L. Ed. 280.

CONTAIN

A book having no lithographic prints, except one on the front cover, held not to be within the provision for "books * * * 'containing' illuminated lithographic prints," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 400, 30 Stat. 188. E. P. Dutton & Co. v. United States, 154 Fed. 214, 215.

CONTAINED IN

The words "contained in," as used in a fire policy insuring against loss of horses contained in a frame barn, cannot be construed to cover a horse which was kept in a pasture one-eighth of a mile from the barn for two months before the loss of the horse by being struck by lightning while in the pasture, whether the words be construed as "kept in" or not. Thorpe v. Aetna Ins. Co., 72 Atl. 690, 75 N. H. 251.

CONTAINING BY ESTIMATE

Where land sold was described by metes and bounds, the words "containing by estimate" a certain number of acres were equivalent to the words "more or less." Mayer & Schmidt v. Wooten, 102 S. W. 423-427, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 327.

CONTAINING CHAMBER

The phrase "containing chamber," as used in the books, is simply a convenient expression for the limits or boundaries of a grant of mineral in or under land, with the right to remove the same. Moore v. Indian Camp Coal Co., 80 N. E. 8, 8, 75 Ohio St. 493.

CONTEMPLATE—CONTEMPLATION

Testator directed: "I confer upon my executors power * * * to make sale * * * of my real estate, not only for the purpose of paying my debts, but to enable them to make the division into those parts as hereinbefore provided, it being contemplated by me that they will sell my real estate, though not with undue haste." Held, that one of the meanings of the word "contemplate" is to "consider deliberately," and appearing at the other end of his will, after the other expressions authorizing the executors to sell his real estate, it may well be taken that it was his deliberate purpose that his real estate should be sold by them. Boyce v. Kelso Home, 68 Atl. 550, 552, 107 Md. 190.

The word "contemplates," as used in a memorandum of agreement reciting that the agreement "contemplates" that the capital for a certain business should be furnished by a certain person, indicated rather an expectation or intention than a promise or undertaking. Read v. Fox, 104 N. Y. Supp. 251, 253, 119 App. Div. 366.

In an action on a promissory note claimed to have been executed by defendant to plaintiff's assignor for margins advanced, and commissions for purchasing cotton on margins without actual delivery, the plea alleged that it was not contemplated or intended by either of the parties to the transaction that the actual cotton would be delivered, but that it was contemplated and intended by all such parties that at the time of delivery differences would be settled by paying or receiving the difference between the price when sold and the price at the time of delivery. Held, that the plea sufficiently alleged that the parties mutually intended that the transaction should be adjusted by the payment of differences only, so as to make the contracts unlawful; the word "contemplation," as used in the plea, signifying "purpose" or "intention." Birmingham Trust & Savings Co. v. Currey (Ala.) 57 South. 962, 964.

Rev. St. § 2979, provides that any owner or importer of merchandise on which the duties have not been paid on giving satisfactory security and obtaining a permit may re-export the same without the payment of duty under inspection of the proper officers. Held, that since such section contemplates, not only that the goods be deposited on ship within the time limited after their removal, but also requires that the shipment shall be under the continued inspection of the customs officers, and Act Cong. June 10, 1890, c. 410, § 9, makes it a crime for any owner or importer to make or attempt to make any entry of goods without payment of duty, and one "contemplates" a crime who means to deposit, conceal, or withdraw goods removed from a warehouse for exportation and to introduce them unconditionally into the country effecting a surreptitious entry by which the duties would become due instantly, an indictment charging a conspiracy to effect such result sufficiently charged a crime. United States v. Ehrigott, 182 Fed. 267, 273.

CONTEMPLATED SUICIDE

The term "contemplate" in Rev. St. Mo. 1889, § 5855, providing that suicide shall be no defense to an action on a life policy unless the insured "contemplated suicide" at the time of his application, is equivalent to "intended" or "had resolved"; and it is not sufficient to show that the insured, at the time of his application, had considered the subject of suicide, without any definite purpose to commit suicide. Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Florida, 69 Fed. 932, 934, 935, 16 C. C. A. 618, 30 L. R. A. 87.

CONTEMPLATION OF DEATH

The statute taxing transfers of property made "in contemplation of death" includes gifts inter vivos, as well as gifts causa mortis. In re Palmer's Estate, 102 N. Y. Supp. 236, 240, 117 App. Div. 360.

The words "in contemplation of death," as used in Laws 1903, p. 66, c. 44, § 1, subd. 3, imposing a tax on transfers by deed or gift "made in contemplation of death of the grantor or donor, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after such death," refer to an expectation of death arising from such a bodily or mental condition as prompts one to dispose of his property to those entitled, and includes gifts inter vivos as well as gifts causa mortis. State v. Pabst, 121 N. W. 351, 359, 139 Wis. 561.

As used in a statute imposing a tax on transfers made "in contemplation of death," the quoted words do not refer to that general expectancy which every mortal entertains, but rather to the apprehension which arises from some existing condition of body or some impending peril. An antenuptial agreement for the payment of a certain sum to the wife in lieu of dower was in contemplation of death, though not intended to take effect until after the husband's death. In re Baker's Estate, 82 N. Y. Supp. 390, 391, 88 App. Div. 530 (citing Matter of Spaulding's Estate, 63 N. Y. Supp. 694, 49 App. Div. 541; Matter of Seaman's Estate, 41 N. E. 401, 147 N. Y. 69, 77; Matter of Mahlstedt's Estate, 73 N. Y. Supp. 818, 67 App. Div. 176, 178).

CONTEMPLATION OF INSOLVENCY

To "contemplate" insolvency, within the meaning of the corporation act of 1896 (P. L. 1896, p. 298, § 64), providing that any sale, conveyance, assignment, or transfer of property by a corporation in contemplation of insolvency shall be void as against creditors, is to have in mind something more than a mere possibility of insolvency on a contingency which does not in fact happen. If a corporation or its officers regard a suspension of its ordinary business for want of funds, as is likely to happen in the event of its not being able to borrow money with which to meet its current expenses, and it is in fact able to borrow it, and secures the money and goes on with its business, it cannot be said to contemplate insolvency. Regina Music Box Co. v. F. G. Otto & Sons, 56 Atl. 715, 717, 65 N. J. Eq. 582.

A creditor attacking a payment by a debtor to another creditor as made in contemplation of insolvency and with a design to prefer the creditor, showed that the debtor was worth about $5,000 less than his liabilities, but he had a large credit by reason of the confidence of the people in his integrity. The payment attacked was a payment of $1,500 on a debt of $3,250 made to preserve his credit and save his business. Shortly thereafter the debtor lost his mind, while if he had been able to manage his business, he would have succeeded in continuing in business. Held not to show that the payment was made "in contemplation of insolvency" and with a "design to prefer a creditor" within Ky. St. § 1910. Cecil v. Citizens' Nat. Bank of Danville, 141 S. W. 418, 418, 145 Ky. 842.

A payment by an insolvent debtor in the usual course of his business to maintain his credit, preserve his estate, and carry on his business, without any intent to prefer one creditor to another, is not a payment "in contemplation of insolvency," and with a design to prefer a creditor, within Ky. St. § 1910. Union Trust & Savings Co. of Maysville v. Taylor, 129 S. W. 828, 830, 139 Ky. 283.

CONTEMPORANEOUS

The term "contemporaneous" does not necessarily always refer to any single or ultimate fact, however important to any precise or definite time. Fraley v. Fraley, 64 S. E. 381, 383, 150 N. C. 501.

The res gestæ rule authorizes the admission of such circumstances and declarations as are contemporaneous with the main fact under consideration, and so closely connected with it as to illustrate its character. The term "contemporaneous," however, in such sense does not mean coincidence, but requires that the circumstance or declaration be substantially at the same time as the main fact, so that it will appear that the evidence offered has not the earmarks of a device or afterthought, or a narrative of a transaction which is really and substantially past. Bessierre v. Alabama City, G. & A. Ry. Co. (Ala.) 60 South. 82, 88.

Declarations springing out of a transaction, though not exactly coincident in point of time, are considered as "contemporaneous," so as to be admissible as part of the res gestæ. Price v. State, 98 Pac. 447, 451, 1 Okl. Cr. 358.

By "contemporaneous" forgeries, evidence of which is admissible to illustrate purpose and intent, it is not meant that they must occur at the same time as that in question; they may have been months before or months after the forgery on trial. If they serve to illustrate, or show system, or make apparent the intent with which the act in question was committed, they are germane and admissible. Taylor v. State, 81 S. W. 933, 985, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 101.

The word "contemporaneous," as used in Revisal 1905, § 3749, providing that if any carrier shall collect from any person a greater compensation for transportation of property than it receives from any other for doing a like and contemporaneous service in the transportation of a like kind of traffic under substantially similar circumstances, it shall be liable to a fine of a specified sum, means a period of time through which shipments of freight are made by one shipper at one rate, and by other shippers at another rate. Hilton Lumber Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 53 S. E. 823, 829, 141 N. C. 171, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 225.

Under Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 2, which prohibits a carrier from charging to one shipper a greater or less compensation for a service than is charged to another for a like and "contemporaneous service," services rendered to a complaining and a favored shipper are "contemporaneous" as long as the discriminating rates remain in force, and for the purpose of comparison they need not be rendered on the same day, nor during the same week or month. Mitchell Coal & Coke Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 181 Fed. 403, 411.

What lapse of time is embraced in the word "contemporaneous," as apply to res gestæ declarations, is often a question of difficulty. Perfect coexistence of time between the declaration and the main act is not, of course, required. It is enough that the two are substantially contemporaneous. They need not be literally so. The declaration must, however, be so approximate in point of time as to grow out of, elucidate, and explain the character and quality of the main act, and must be so closely connected with it as virtually to constitute but one entire transaction, and to receive support and credit from the principal act sought to be thus elucidated and explained. The evidence offered must not have the earmarks of a device or afterthought, nor be merely a narrative of a transaction which is really and substantially past. A motorman's statement that it was due to his carelessness that plaintiff got hurt, made after the injury was complete and the plaintiff had been removed from where he had fallen and was sitting on the car, and with the obvious purpose of showing that he was guilty of no intentional wrong, was no part of the res gestæ and was inadmissible. Little Rock Traction & Electric Co. v. Nelson, 52 S. W. 7, 9, 66 Ark. 501 (quoting and adopting definition in Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Hawk, 72 Ala. 112).

Where a condition contained in a life insurance policy issued by the Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias to one of its members provided that "the contract evidenced hereby shall not begin until 12 o'clock noon of the day of the date hereof, and then the Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias, hereinafter called the society, will not be liable unless the said member has actually paid the membership fee and made the first monthly payment required while said member is in good health," and the policy was dated November 1, 1907, and delivered to the insured on November 2, 1907, and the first monthly premium was due and paid on the 20th day of November, 1907, by the insured, held that, relatively to delivering the policy and paying the premium as above stated, both acts were "contemporaneous," within the meaning of the contract in this case, and the policy of insurance became of binding force on the society on the 20th day of November, 1907, so far, at least, as this clause of the contract is concerned, and not before. Where in such a case the agent of the society knew the insured was not in good health after the time the application for insurance was received, but before the policy was delivered to the insured, and the agent delivered the policy and received the first monthly payments from the insured with the same knowledge, the society will not be heard to set up as a defense to a suit on the policy that the insured was not in good health at the time of taking out the insurance on his life, but will be held to have waived the conditions in the policy to the effect that the insurer "will not be liable unless said member has actually paid the membership fee and made the first monthly payment required while said member is in good health." Supreme Lodge K. P. v. Few, 76 S. E. 91, 92, 138 Ga. 778.

CONTEMPORANEOUS CONSTRUCTION

"Contemporaneous construction" is a rule of interpretation, but is not an absolute one. It does not preclude an inquiry by the court as to the original correctness of such construction. A custom of a department of the government, however long continued by successive officers, must yield to the positive language of the statute. If there be any ambiguity or doubt, then such a practice, begun early and continued long, would be in the highest degree persuasive, if not absolutely controlling, in its effect. Houghton v. Payne, 24 Sup. Ct. 590, 593, 194 U. S. 88, 48 L. Ed. 888 (citing United States v. Graham, 3 Sup. Ct. 582, 110 U. S. 219, 28 L. Ed. 126; Edwards v. Darby, 12 Wheat. [25 U. S.] 206, 6 L. Ed. 603; United States v. Temple, 105 U. S. 97, 26 L. Ed. 967; Swift & C. & B. Co. v. United States, 105 U. S. 691, 26 L. Ed. 1108; Ruggles v. Illinois, 2 Sup. Ct. 832, 108 U. S. 526, 27 L. Ed. 812).

The literal meaning of "contemporaneous" is living or existing at the time. As applied to the question of the effect of legislative construction of the statutes, the principal of construction cannot be held to require perfect or literal coincidence in point of time; the lapse of time weakening the force or influence of the effect of an enactment as a practical and "contemporaneous" construction. Burke v. Snively, 70 N. E. 327, 334, 208 Ill. 328.

CONTEMPT

See Civil Contempt; Consequential Contempt; Constructive Contempt; Continuing Contempt; Criminal Contempt; Direct Contempt; Independent Contempt; Indirect Contempt; Judicial Contempt; Quasi Criminal Contempt.

Expenses caused by contempt, see Expenses.

Power to punish as judicial power, see Judicial Power.

See, also, Misbehavior.

A "contempt" is a willful disregard or disobedience. Saal v. South Brooklyn Ry. Co., 106 N. Y. Supp. 996, 1000, 122 App. Div. 364 (quoting and adopting definition in Bouv. Dict.).

A "contempt of court" is disobedience to the court, by acting in opposition to the authority, justice, and dignity thereof. Rooker v. Bruce, 85 N. E. 351, 353, 171 Ind. 86.

"Contempts" logically arrange and divide themselves into four classes, viz., direct and indirect, civil and criminal." Ex parte Clark, 106 S. W. 990, 996, 208 Mo. 121, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 389.

"Contempts" are either civil or criminal, and "criminal contempt" consists of conduct on the part of one which amounts to an obstruction of justice, tending to bring the court into disrepute. Gordon v. Commonwealth, 133 S. W. 206, 208, 141 Ky. 461.

"Contempt of court" involves two ideas—disregard of the power of the court and disregard of its authority. Disregard of power, in that lawful orders have not been obeyed, and disregard of authority, in that its jurisdiction to declare the law and ascertain and adjudicate the rights of the parties is hindered, prevented, or at set at naught. Such conduct is an offense against the court as an organ of public justice, and may be rightfully punished on summary conviction, whether the act complained of be punishable as a crime on indictment or not." In re Fellerman, 149 Fed. 244, 247.

It is a "contempt" openly to insult or resist the powers of the court or persons of the judges, or to do acts which may lead to the disregard of their authority, and from their nature to require a summary interposition to preserve order in the court and to maintain dignity of the judges. McCarthy v. Hugo, 73 Atl. 778, 779, 82 Conn. 262, 135 Am. St. Rep. 270, 17 Ann. Cas. 219.

Anything done or said in or out of the presence of the court, which impedes or obstructs it in the decision of a pending cause, or in the execution, by authorized means, of its judgments, may be punished as a "contempt." Fellman v. Mercantile Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 41 South. 49, 51, 116 La. 723.

Rem. & Bal. Code, § 2372, subds. 1, 3, defining "contempt" as disorderly, contemptuous, or insolent behavior committed during the sitting of the court in its immediate view, and directly tending to interrupt its proceedings, and as a breach of the peace, noise, or other disturbance directly tending to interrupt the proceedings of a court, are but declaratory of the common law. State v. Buddress, 114 Pac. 879, 880, 63 Wash. 26.

The elements essential to a civil prosecution for "contempt of court" are an offense within Code Civ. Proc. § 14, defining contempts punishable civilly, or, under the common law, the operation of that offense to impair, prejudice, or defeat the rights or remedies of the adversary, the further operation of that offense to cause actual loss or injury to the adversary who is without statutory remedy to recoup his damages. Dollard v. Koronsky, 118 N. Y. Supp. 922, 925, 64 Misc. Rep. 611.

For one, on contempt proceedings for saying out of court that the judge was corrupt, to state, in answer to a question of the court, that he had given publicity to the statement he had heard that the court was corrupt, does not constitute a "contempt" in the presence of the court. Ex parte Davies, 84 S. W. 633, 635, 73 Ark. 358.

Under Judicial Code (Act March 3, 1911, c. 231, 36 Stat. 1169) §§ 299, 300, which provides that offenses committed in the Circuit Courts, which were abolished, may be prosecuted and punished in the District Courts, the District Court has jurisdiction to punish for "contempt" committed in the Circuit Court under proceedings for punishment brought in the Circuit Court before it was abolished. In re Steiner, 195 Fed. 290, 301.

Under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5807 providing that, if any loss or injury to a party in an action prejudicial to his rights therein have been caused by the "contempt," the court may give judgment that the party aggrieved recover of the defendant a sum sufficient to indemnify him, it is not necessary that the contempt be a criminal contempt for which a fine could be adjudged, as provided in other terms of the chapter; there being a distinction between a civil and a quasi criminal contempt, and both may exist at the same time, or only one. State ex rel. Nicomen Boom Co. v. North Shore Boom & Driving Co., 107 Pac. 196, 197, 55 Wash. 1.

Any disorderly conduct calculated to interrupt the proceedings of the court, any disrespect or insolent behavior toward the judge presiding, any breach of order, decency, or decorum, either by parties connected with the tribunal, or by strangers present, or by any assault made in view of the court, is punishable as "contempt of court." "Every writing, letter, or publication which has for its object to divert the course of justice is 'contempt of court.' * * * Every insult offered to a judge in the exercise of his duties is a 'contempt of court.'" People ex rel. Attorney General v. News-Times Pub. Co., 84 Pac. 912, 948, 35 Colo. 253.

"Contempt" of court is a despising of the authority, justice, or dignity of the court. He is guilty of such contempt whose conduct is such as tends to bring the authority and administration of the law into disrespect or disregard, or to interfere with or prejudice parties litigant or their witnesses during the litigations. Any conduct which is calculated to interfere with the proceedings, by assaulting litigants or witnesses within the precincts of the court, or preventing or hindering, or endeavoring to prevent or hinder, them in their access to the court or otherwise, is a contempt. The power of the court in the matter of contempt cannot be defined within any limits, and the primary question in all cases of alleged contempt is whether there has or has not been an interference with the due administration of justice. For one to change the locks on the door of the courtroom, during adjournment of the court, and thereafter refuse to allow the judge of the court and his officers, and the parties to the suit on hearing before him, to enter the courtroom, is a contempt. Dahnke v. People, 48 N. E. 137, 139, 168 Ill. 102, 39 L. R. A. 197 (citing Oswald, Contempt, pp. 3, 4, 27, 70).

Words written or spoken at a place other than where the court is held, and not so near thereto as to interfere with the proceeding of the court, do not render the author liable. Any loud noise or other disturbance in the presence of the court, or in the street or other place so near thereto as to interfere with the orderly proceedings of the court, would undoubtedly tend to obstruct the administration of justice, and under such circumstances the court is empowered to summarily punish for "contempt." Cuyler v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co., 131 Fed. 95, 98.

Neither the taking of a deposition to be used in a federal court in another state, in pursuance of a conspiracy to impose upon the court, nor the filing and publication of such deposition, is a misbehavior in the presence of the court, or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice, punishable as a "contempt" under Rev. St. § 725; but to constitute such contempt the deposition must have been used or offered in evidence. Doniphan v. Lehman, 179 Fed. 173, 174.

Abuse of process

Where witnesses were brought by the United States to testify in a criminal proceeding from another state, and duly subpoenaed, and after the termination of the proceeding they were served with civil process by the acquitted defendant in an action for malicious prosecution growing out of their testimony, such act constituted a "contempt" of court, within Rev. St. § 725, limiting the jurisdiction of the federal courts to punish a misdemeanor committed in the presence of the court or so near as to obstruct the administration of justice, though the service was not in the courtroom nor in its immediate vicinity; the court's power being construed to extend as far as necessary to the protection of the witness. United States v. Zavalo, 177 Fed. 536, 538.

By attorney

Where an attorney for defendant in a criminal prosecution used insulting language with reference to the opposing counsel, and persistently resorted to frivolous methods for the purpose of interrupting the trial, and conducted the defense in a contemptuous manner, and when called upon to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt made no excuse, but assumed a defiant attitude as to the judge, he was guilty of "contempt," authorizing punishment therefor. State ex rel. Cary v. District Court of Hennepin County, 125 N. W. 1020, 1021, 110 Minn. 446.

An attorney is guilty of no wrongful act in advising his client of his legal rights and remedies, and hence is not guilty of "contempt" for advising his client to file a petition in bankruptcy or in actually filing the petition, though the client was undergoing examination in supplementary proceedings, and had been enjoined from disposing of or transferring any property. In re Kepecs, 123 N. Y. Supp. 872, 874.

A false statement by the attorney for defendant in supplementary proceedings in the City Court that he would deposit the amount of the judgment in the Municipal Court if granted an adjournment to enable him to apply for a vacation of the judgment, made to defeat and prejudice plaintiff's rights, though reprehensible, is not punishable as "contempt," under Judiciary Law (Consol. Laws, c. 30) § 753, subd. 3, authorizing punishment for disobedience to a lawful mandate, unlawful interference with proceedings, and in other cases where contempt proceedings have been usually practiced, in a court of record to enforce civil remedy or to protect the rights of the parties. Franzone v. Tumminelli, 123 N. Y. Supp. 455, 457, 67 Misc. Rep. 549.

By bankrupt

A bankrupt, who on his examination before the referee willfully swears falsely, or falsely denies knowledge of matters, refuses "to be examined according to law," and is guilty of "contempt," under Bankr. Act, July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 41a (4), 30 Stat. 556; In re Gitkin, 164 Fed. 71, 73.

The subsequent concealment of property of a bankrupt in his possession on his adjudication, by one who had no lien upon it or debatable claim to it, is a violation of the injunction against the interference with the bankrupt's property embodied by the settled law of the land in the adjudication, and is punishable as "contempt of court" under Rev. St. § 725. Clay v. Waters, 178 Fed. 385, 389, 101 C. C. A. 645, 21 Ann. Cas. 897.

By sheriff

An undersheriff, advising or directing a witness upon whom he had served a subpoena duces tecum to disobey it, and hide or destroy the books, and not produce them, is not punishable as for a "contempt" of court, within Code Cr. Proc. § 619, making disobedience to a subpoena punishable as a criminal contempt, especially where the witness, regardless of what the undersheriff said, obeyed the subpoena and produced the books. People ex rel. Drake v. Andrews, 118 N. Y. Supp. 37, 38, 134 App. Div. 82.

By witness

In supplementary proceedings, a subpoena requiring a witness to appear was personally served. The witness disobeyed. An order to show cause why she should not be punished for contempt was personally served on her. On the return of the order she appeared by attorney, and was fined $10 and ordered to obey the subpoena on a new day fixed. The order was served on the attorney only. Held, that the failure of the witness to appear at the time fixed in the order was a "contempt," authorizing the court to punish for contempt, though she knew nothing of the order requiring her to appear as a witness, and was not informed thereof by the attorney, who it was claimed had no authority to appear for her, and who was also insolvent. Ex parte Depue, 95 N. Y. Supp. 1017, 1020, 108 App. Div. 58.

Code Civ. Proc. § 966, providing that, when it shall appear to the satisfaction of a justice of the peace that a person refuses or neglects to attend as a witness, he shall issue a warrant for the arrest of the delinquent for the purpose of compelling his attendance and punishing his disobedience, and section 967, providing that when a person so arrested is brought before the justice, and no valid excuse is shown, the justice may impose a fine not exceeding $5, do not apply to the taking of depositions before a justice of the peace, but sections 356, etc., providing that disobedience of a subpoena, or a refusal to be sworn or to answer as a witness, or to subscribe a deposition, may be punished as a contempt, control, and the power of a justice of the peace to punish for a refusal to be sworn or answer a question is not limited to the imposition of a fine of $5. The refusal to answer such improper questions as would constitute an abuse of process is not a "contempt," and may not be punished, and a witness is entitled to his privileges and immunities as well when a deposition is taken as when examined in open court. False affidavit

Preparing, verifying, and securing the presentation of a false affidavit, intended to influence the action of a court, constitutes an obstruction to the administration of justice, punishable as a "criminal contempt," under Rev. St. § 725, now Judicial Code (Act March 3, 1911, c. 231, 36 Stat. 1163) § 268. In re Steiner, 195 Fed. 299, 302.

Interference with officer

Mills' Ann. Code, § 321, provides that "the following acts or omissions shall be deemed contempt: * * * Third. Disobedience to any lawful writ, order, rule, or process issued by the court, or judge at chambers." A decree adjudging priority of right to use of water for irrigation being a decree in rem, and containing no order to any one to do or refrain from doing any act, and the water commissioner appointed by the Governor, and, to a certain extent, under the control and direction of the irrigation division engineers and the state engineer, not being an officer of the court, though charged as a part of his official duties with distribution of water for irrigation as it may be decreed, interference with him in the discharge of such official duties is not a "contempt of court" under such section. Robertson v. People ex rel. Soule, 90 Pac. 79, 80, 40 Colo. 119.

Interference with process

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2170, making any unlawful interference with the process or proceedings of a court a "contempt," where defendant in replevin refused to receive a copy of papers, and threatened the officer with violence if he took possession of the property, and while the officer was absent seeking assistance secreted the property, he was guilty of a "contempt," though he had not been served with summons, and though the order indorsed by plaintiff on the affidavit was not strictly within the definition of "process." State ex rel. Bruce v. District Court, 83 Pac. 641, 642, 33 Mont. 359.

Misconduct as to jury

All willful attempts, of whatever nature, seeking to improperly influence jurors in the impartial discharge of their duties, whether it be by conversations or discussions, or attempts to bribe, constitute "contempts." To be in contempt of court in such a matter, it is not necessary that the party accomplish his purpose. It is sufficient if he makes the attempt, for he thereby violates the instruction of the court, and the law of the state in relation thereto. Emery v. State, 111 N. W. 374, 375, 78 Neb. 547, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1124.

A jury while deliberating on their verdict is an appendage of the court, and one attempting to influence a juror at such time is guilty of "contempt," under Code Civ. Proc. § 1209, declaring that disorderly behavior toward the judge while holding court, and any other unlawful interference with the proceedings of the court, shall be contempt. In re Creely, 97 Pac. 766, 768, 8 Cal. App. 713.

Pen. Code, §§ 190, 193, declare that a person who offers a bribe to a juror, who may be called to hear and determine any question or controversy, with intent to influence his vote or decision, is guilty of a felony. Held, that such provisions include offers made to members of a jury panel, and are not limited to offers made to jurors sworn in a particular case, so that an attempt to corrupt members of a jury panel constituted a "contempt," without reference to whether they had been drawn to try the case with reference to which it was sought to influence them. State ex rel. Webb v. District Court, 95 Pac. 593, 595, 37 Mont. 191, 15 Ann. Cas. 743.

Misconduct as to grand jury

Though a grand jury is an adjunct of the court, it is not such part thereof as, under the statute authorizing summary punishment for a "contempt in the immediate presence of the court," permits the judge to summarily punish offenders for any act before the grand jury, without proceeding on affidavit and citing the offender to show cause why he should not be punished. Ex parte Hedden, 90 Pac. 737, 743, 744, 29 Nev. 352, 13 Ann. Cas. 1173.

Newspaper criticism of court

Rev. St. § 725, provides that the federal courts shall have power to punish "contempts" by fine and imprisonment, provided that such power shall not extend to any case except misbehavior in the presence of or so near the court as to obstruct the administration of justice, the misbehavior of officers of the court and the disobedience or resistance of any such officer, party, juror, witness, or other person to any lawful writ, process, order, decree, or command of the court. Held, that the jurisdiction prescribed by such act was exclusive, and deprived the court of power to punish a newspaper publisher for contempt, consisting of an editorial in his paper criticising the official conduct and integrity of the court. Cuyler v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co., 131 Fed. 95, 97.

Perjury

The fact that perjury is a substantive crime, and punishable as such, does not prevent it from also constituting a "contempt," punishable under Rev. St. § 725, now Judicial Code (Act March 3, 1911, c. 231, 36 Stat. 1163) § 268. In re Steiner, 195 Fed. 299, 302.

Pleading

Failure to file an answer in a case at law within the time allowed by order of court is not a "contempt of court." Rooker v. Bruce, 85 N. E. 351, 353, 171 Ind. 86 (citing 9 Cyc. p. 6).

Violation of order

A "contempt" for refusal to pay pursuant to an order is not committed in the immediate view of the court within Code Civ. Proc. § 1211, authorizing summary punishment for such contempt. In re Northern, 121 Pac. 1010, 1011, 18 Cal. App. 52.

One against whom supplementary proceedings were instituted was ordered not to dispose of his property, except exempted property, until further orders. When the order was served, he had been employed by a company for two months, and after the service of the order received from it his share in the profits from certain transactions occurring prior to the granting of the order, and transferred money to his wife under a prior assignment to her of everything which he received until her indebtedness was paid. Held, that the transfer of the money was a violation of the injunction order, constituting a "contempt." In re Black, 123 N. Y. Supp. 371, 373, 138 App. Div. 562.

Mandamus was issued directing a trial judge forthwith to secure the services of another judge to hear all proceedings in a certain action or show cause before the Supreme Court why he should not do so. On the return day he appeared and made return of his reasons for not obeying the writ, and the opinion denying the petitioner's application for mandamus was filed. Before remittitur had been filed in the superior court, the judge made an order that certain motions pending in the cause be set for hearing before him, and announced that he would hear and determine the same. Held, to constitute a technical "contempt." Noel v. Smith, 83 Pac. 167, 168, 2 Cal. App. 158.

"Contempts" are divided into two classes: "Criminal contempts," which are committed in the immediate view and presence of the court; and "constructive or consequential contempts," which arise from matters not transpiring in court, but relate to a failure to comply with the orders and decrees issued by the court, and to be performed elsewhere. Appearing in court and refusing to produce the body of a child pursuant to the requirements of a writ of habeas corpus, without reasonable excuse, or willfully making an evasive or insufficient answer thereto, is a contempt committed in the presence of the court. Smythe v. Smythe, 114 Pac. 257, 258, 28 Okl. 266.

Under Rev. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 7309, 7318, 7319, declaring that willful disobedience of any lawful order of court shall be contempt, and providing that, when the contempt consists in the omission to perform an act which is in the power of the person to perform, he may be imprisoned, etc., inability to obey an order is a good defense to a charge of contempt for its violation, unless the person charged voluntarily and contumaciously brought the disability on himself, and one paying out in good faith money received from the court under the belief that she had a perfect right to do so is not guilty of "contempt" for violating a subsequent order requiring her to repay the money into court on her being unable to comply therewith by poverty and inability to borrow money. State ex rel. McLean v. District Court, 97 Pac. 841, 842, 37 Mont. 485, 15 Ann. Cas. 941.

Violation of injunction

The willful violation of an injunction by a party to the cause is a "contempt of court," constituting a specific criminal offense. Bullock Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co., 129 Fed. 105, 106, 63 C. C. A. 607.

A labor union, which ordered a strike, and which, through its officers and members, engaged in picketing and intimidating and threatening nonunion employes, assaulting some and frightening others, was properly adjudged guilty of "contempt" in violating an injunction restraining it from interfering with the business of their employers and from intimidating other employes from doing their work or accepting employment, etc. Franklin Union, No. 4, v. People, 77 N. E. 176, 181, 220 Ill. 355, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1001, 110 Am. St. Rep. 248.

Of legislative committee

Where a special committee of the state senate, appointed to investigate the administration of the departments of a city and county, and to report thereon with recommendations, learned through its investigations of transactions between the city and county and a newspaper corporation, and learned that the president of the newspaper corporation was a minority stockholder of another corporation which had profitably dealt with the city and county, and that such a person was the leader of the party politically dominant, an order requiring him to produce the books of the newspaper corporation, and questions as to what he had paid for the stock in the other corporation or whether he had received the same as a gift, were improper, and the refusal to produce the books and to answer the questions did not amount to "contempt," within Code Civ. Proc. § 856, requiring that the questions to be answered shall be pertinent. In re Barnes, 97 N. E. 508, 512, 204 N. Y. 108.

CONTEMPT PROCEEDING

"Contempt proceedings" are quasi criminal in their nature, and an intent to commit a forbidden act is as essential to guilt as in the case of a charge of a criminal offense." Hutton v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, 81 Pac. 409, 410, 147 Cal. 156.

A "contempt proceeding" is sui generis. It is distinctly criminal in its nature. In a proceeding for criminal contempt in violating a strike injunction respondent is entitled to the benefit of the presumption of innocence. Garrigan v. United States, 163 Fed. 16, 21, 89 C. C. A. 494, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1295.

A "contempt proceeding" is sui generis. It is criminal in its nature, in that the party is charged with doing something forbidden, and, if found guilty, is punished. Yet it may be resorted to in civil, as well as criminal, actions, and also independently of any civil or criminal action. Bessette v. W. B. Conkey Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 665, 666, 194 U. S. 324, 48 L. Ed. 997. A contempt proceeding, unless used as a coercive remedy to compel the performance of an act to which a suitor is entitled, is a special criminal proceeding, distinct from the cause in which it may arise, and the reversal of an order in such cause does not affect proceedings for contempt in disobeying it while in force. State v. Nathans, 27 S. E. 52, 55, 49 S. C. 199 (quoting and adopting Rap. Contempt).

The proceeding to punish for a contempt is in its nature a criminal proceeding, whether the result be partially remediable or not, and the same rules prevail which govern in the trial of indictments, the defendant being entitled to the benefit of any reasonable doubt. Bullock Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co., 129 Fed. 106, 108, 63 C. C. A. 607.

"Proceedings for contempt are of two classes, those prosecuted to preserve the power and vindicate the dignity of the courts and to punish for disobedience of their orders, and those instituted to preserve and enforce the rights of private parties to a suit and to compel obedience to orders and decrees made to enforce the rights, and administer the remedies to which the court has found them to be entitled." The former are criminal and punitive in their nature, and the government, the courts, and the people are interested in their prosecution. The latter are civil, remedial, and coercive in their nature, and the parties chiefly in interest in their conduct and prosecution are the individuals whose private rights and remedies they were instituted to protect and enforce. The defendant in a suit in equity was adjudged to pay a fine, and to be committed until he paid it, for "contempt of court" in violating a preliminary injunction. He sued out a writ of error, and died before a hearing in the appellate court. Held, that the contempt proceedings were civil and not criminal and did not abate by his death. Wasserman v. United States, 161 Fed. 722, 723, 88 C. C. A. 582 (quoting and adopting statement in Re Nevitt, 117 Fed. 448, 458, 54 C. C. A. 632).

A proceeding against members of labor unions to punish them for "contempt" for prosecuting a criminal conspiracy to violate an injunction granted by the court in a civil suit, restraining them from interfering with the business or employes of the complainant therein, is a "criminal proceeding" within the meaning of a statute providing that no discovery or evidence obtained from a party or witness by means of a judicial proceeding shall be given in evidence or in any manner used against him in any court of the United States in any "criminal proceeding." Hammond Lumber Co. v. Sailors' Union of the Pacific, 167 Fed. 809, 821.

A prosecution for "contempt" is not a "criminal proceeding," so as to relieve one discharged in such a proceeding from liability to be again tried or punished for the same act, under Const. art. 1, § 12, providing that no person once acquitted shall be again tried for the same offense. Gibson v. Hutchinson, 126 N. W. 790, 148 Iowa, 139, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1007.

In a proceeding for "contempt of court," the state need not be made a party; the contempt not being a crime, except when made so by statute, in which case the procedure must be that ordinarily followed for the punishment of crime. McDougall v. Sheridan, 128 Pac. 954, 963, 23 Idaho, 191.

Defenses

It is no defense to proceedings for "contempt" in making and presenting false affidavits and in disobeying an order requiring delivery of property that respondents ultimately succeeded in the suits in which the contempt was committed. In re Steiner, 195 Fed. 299, 301.

Process

Code Civ. Proc. § 856, providing that, where a person duly subpoenaed refuses without reasonable cause to be examined or answer questions or to produce books, the judge of any court may, by warrant, commit the offender to jail, when considered alone or in connection with Judiciary Law, §§ 750, 751, providing that one charged with contempt not committed in the presence of the court must have notice, requires notice to one charged with contempt not committed in the presence of the court, and one charged with contempt for failing to answer questions put to him by an investigating committee of the Legislature is entitled to notice of proceedings to punish him for contempt, and hence the statute does not violate the due process clause of the Constitution. In re Barnes, 97 N. E. 508, 512, 204 N. Y. 108.

Proceedings for "contempt of court" may be begun by warrant of attachment as well as by rule to show cause. In re Steiner, 195 Fed. 299, 302.

Judgment

"Contempt of court" is 'a specific criminal offense,' and the fine imposed is a judgment in a criminal case. The adjudication is a conviction, and the commitment in consequence thereof is execution." In re Clark, 103 S. W. 1105, 1107, 126 Mo. App. 391 (quoting and adopting the definition in Church, Habeas Corpus, § 308).

"Contempt of court" is a specific criminal offense, and the charge and the findings and judgment of the court thereon are to be strictly construed in favor of the accused. Reymert v. Smith, 90 Pac. 470, 471, 5 Cal. App. 380.

Punishment

Power to punish as judicial power, see Judicial Power.

Under 2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5799, authorizing the punishment for contempt by fine or imprisonment, or both, and declaring that the fine shall not exceed $300, nor the imprisonment 6 months, and, when the contempt does not consist of disorderly behavior toward the court or conduct interrupting the course of a trial, it must appear that a party's rights are prejudiced before the contempt can be punished otherwise than by a fine not exceeding $100, a person adjudged guilty of "contempt" in violating an order restraining him from obstructing a public highway cannot be punished by a fine of $100 and 30 days' imprisonment, in the absence of a showing that the rights of a party were prejudiced by the act constituting the contempt. State ex rel. v. Rielly, 82 Pac. 287, 288, 40 Wash. 217.

CONTEMPTUOUS

Kirby's Dig. § 1655, provides that if any person shall maliciously or contemptuously disturb or disquiet any congregation assembled in any church for religious worship, etc., he shall, on conviction, be fined, etc. Held, that the words "malicious and contemptuous" refer to the manner of disturbance, and not to the intent with which the disturbance was effected. Walker v. State (Ark.) 146 S. W. 862, 864.

CONTENTION

As used in a restriction limiting the recovery of plaintiff, if the jury believed the contention of defendant, it was held that the meaning of the word "contention" was not clear, but probably meant the testimony on behalf of the defendant. Peterson v. Christianson, 56 Atl. 288, 290, 68 N. J. Law, 392.

"There is a difference between the 'contention,' using the word in its legal sense, of a party and the argument by which such 'contention' is supported. It may be difficult sometimes to draw the line of distinction between the two, but we think it can be clearly drawn here. The court could not so mix and mingle the contentions of the party with the inferences and deductions of such party drawn from the evidence as to present such contentions to the jury in the form of an argument, for this is but to repeat to the jury the argument of the party, instead of what the party contends the facts of his case are." Smith v. Hazlehurst, 50 S. E. 917, 919, 122 Ga. 786.

A policy on "dwelling and addition" and "contents of dwelling" does not cover contents of the addition. Tate v. Jasper County Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co., 113 S. W. 659, 660, 133 Mo. App. 584.

Where a fire policy insured certain barns and "contents of barn buildings," and tools and machinery kept in barns insured by the policy were removed to a barn subsequently erected and not covered by the policy, the policy did not cover a loss of the tools by fire while in the new barn, unless the insurer was estopped to insist on the provisions of the policy. Wilson v. Proc. § 3146, providing that in conformity with previous provisions evidence may be given of the contents of a writing, includes all the substantial parts of the instrument sought to be proven by secondary evidence. Capell v. Fagan, 77 Pac. 55, 56, 30 Mont. 507, 2 Ann. Cas. 37.

A suit by an assignee of a mortgage to quiet title, brought after receiving a certificate of purchase on foreclosure sale, is not one to recover the "contents of a chose in action" within the meaning of the federal judiciary act (Act March 3, 1875, § 1, c. 137, 18 Stat. 470), and the fact that the assignor of the mortgage could not have sued thereon in the federal court does not deprive it of jurisdiction therein. Hobe-Peters Land Co. v. Farr, 170 Fed. 644, 646.

The "contents" of a contract, as used in section 629, Rev. St., providing for jurisdiction in suits "to recover the contents of a chose in action," are the rights created by it which a party may enforce in a suit on the contract. Utah-Nevada Co. v. De Lamar, 133 Fed. 113, 120, 66 C. C. A. 179 (quoting and adopting definition in Corbin v. Black Hawk County, 105 U. S. 659, 665, 26 L. Ed. 1136).

A suit to recover the "contents" of a promissory note or other chose in action within Act Cong. Aug. 13, 1888, providing that no federal court shall have cognizance of any suit to recover the "contents" of any promissory note or other chose in action in favor of any assignee or of any subsequent holder, unless such suit might have been prosecuted in such court to recover the said "contents," if no assignments had been made, is a suit to recover the amount due on such note, or the amount claimed to be due upon an account, personal contract, or other chose in action. A suit to foreclose a mortgage is within the inhibition of the act, and can only be maintained where the assignor was competent to file the bill. Kolze v. Hoadley, 28 Sup. Ct. 220, 222, 200 U. S. 76, 50 L. Ed. 377 (citing Sere v. Pitot, 6 Oranch, 332, 3 L. Ed. 240; Deshler v. Dodge, 16 How. 622, 14 L. Ed. 1084, 1088; Bushnell v. Kennedy, 9 Wall. 387, 19 L. Ed. 736; Shoecraft v. Bloxham, 8 Sup. Ct. 686, 124 U. S. 730, 31 L. Ed. 574).

CONTEST

Of action or other proceeding

Where an appeal was taken from a probate order directing payment of the residue of an estate to relator, and an order was in turn reversed on a further appeal to the Supreme Court, after which the appeal was voluntarily dismissed, the proceeding was "contested," within Comp. Laws 1897, § 681, providing, in all contested cases in the probate or circuit court, such court may award costs to either party in its discretion, etc. Universalist General Convention v. Van Buren Circuit Judge, 104 N. W. 384, 141 Mich. 64.

Const. art. 14, § 1, provides that all county officers shall be paid salaries to be fixed by the Legislature. Section 2 provides for fees to be collected by the sheriff and an accounting therefor, and that, in addition to the salary of the sheriff, he shall be entitled to receive from the party for whom the services are rendered in "civil cases" such fees as may be prescribed by law. By section 3, the salaries of county officers are to be fixed by law within stated maximum limits. Rev. St. 1899, § 1112, fixed the salaries of sheriffs, and by section 1113 declared that the sheriff in addition to his salary might receive from the party for whom the service is rendered in civil cases certain stated fees. By section 1232, county officers receiving money for any county were required to pay the same into the county treasury. Laws 1901, c. 79, § 1, provided for an inspection of horses about to be transported or driven out of the state. Section 3 made the sheriff of each county an inspector and required that he keep a record of inspections and file certain reports. Section 8 provided for a fee of 15 cents per head on all horses inspected, in full compensation for all inspection. Held, in an action by a sheriff to recover inspection fees paid into the county treasury pending a judicial determination, that the word "case" was to be construed as synonymous with a "contested question" before a court of justice; that the term "civil cases," as used in the Constitution, was in contradistinction to criminal cases, and was to be broadly construed as inclusive of all cases not criminal, and that it was used as meaning a legal proceeding of some nature for the protection of a private right or the redress of a private wrong; and that the services of the sheriff as inspector were not rendered in civil cases, and hence that he was not entitled to the fees collected. Messenger v. Board of Com'rs of Converse County, 117 Pac. 126, 130, 19 Wyo. 309.

Of claim to public land

Under Pol. Code, § 3414, providing that when a contest arises concerning the approval of a survey or location of public lands, and when either party demands a trial in the courts, the surveyor general must make an order referring the contest, a "contest" arises when two persons make separate applications to purchase the same state land, which is still open to location, and it is not necessary that the contestant file a statement of the specific grounds of contest with the surveyor general. Miller v. Engle, 85 Pac. 159, 160, 3 Cal. App. 325.

Of election

As civil case, see Civil Action—Case—Suit—Etc.

As suit, see Suit; Suit in Equity.

Condemnation suit distinguished, see Condemnation Proceeding.

An "election contest" is a special statutory proceeding designed to contest the right of a person, declared elected, to enter upon and hold office. Maddux v. Walthall, 74 Pac. 1026, 1027, 141 Cal. 412.

An "election contest" is a controversy between two contending candidates for the same office; the unsuccessful candidate contesting against the candidate to whom the election board have issued a certificate. It is an adversary proceeding. Toncray v. Budge (Idaho) 95 Pac. 26, 32.

"The proceeding for 'contesting an election' is, strictly speaking, neither an action at law nor a suit in equity. It is a summary proceeding of a political character, and it is not only the privilege, but the duty, of the court on its own motion to look into the record and determine whether it is authorized by the statute." Griffith v. Bonawitz, 103 N. W. 327, 328, 73 Neb. 622 (quoting and adopting definition in Thomas v. Franklin, 60 N. W. 568, 42 Neb. 810).

A "contest" is not in any sense a criminal proceeding, but a controversy between two private individuals as to the right to exercise the functions and enjoy the emoluments of an office. Maloney v. Collier (Tenn.) 83 S. W. 667, 672 (citing Boring v. Griffith, 1 Helsk. [48 Tenn.] 456; Moore v. Sharp, 38 S. W. 411, 98 Tenn. 65).

A "contest" of a local option election is a suit in which the validity of the election, or the correct ascertainment of the result thereof, is the subject-matter of litigation in a court having jurisdiction to hear and determine such issues. Clary v. Hurst (Tex.) 138 S. W. 566, 571, answering question certified from Clarey v. Same (Tex.) 136 S. W. 840.

Where the qualified electors of a town had an opportunity to vote at an election, and the majority voted at the polling place fixed by the council of the town, while a minority cast their ballots at an unauthorized place fixed by the mayor, and the inspectors of election were eligible, the election was subject to "contest" within Code 1907, § 1168, authorizing election contests. Mizell v. State ex rel. Gresham, 55 South. 884, 885, 173 Ala. 434.

Of will

A "contest" of a will implies a trial and final judgment; such a hearing as will amount to an adjudication of the validity of a will. Institution of a suit and its voluntary dismissal without a trial is not a contest. Wait v. Westfall, 68 N. E. 271, 272, 161 Ind. 648.

In determining whether proceedings by a legatee amounted to a contest within a provision forfeiting bequests to any legatee who should "contest" the will, the meaning of the word as used by testator, in view of his purposes, is the controlling consideration. In re Hite's Estate, 101 Pac. 443, 445, 155 Cal. 436, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 953, 17 Ann. Cas. 993.

The mere filing of a caveat did not constitute a "contest" of a will within a provision directing that any of the legatees contesting or attempting to contest the will should lose their legacies. In re McCahan's Estate, 70 Atl. 711, 714, 221 Pa. 188.

Where testator provided for forfeiture of legacies if any legatee should contest the will, the word "contest" was not used in its technical sense, but meant "to make a subject of dispute, to call in question, to dispute, to litigate, oppose, challenge, resist," and hence it included proceedings by certain legatees who were heirs of testator's first wife to withdraw certain real estate willed to testator's widow on the theory that it belonged to them as heirs of their mother, and that testator had acquired title thereto by forgery of a deed. Moran v. Moran, 123 N. W. 202, 206, 144 Iowa, 451, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 898.

Under section 20 of the wills act, providing for formal and regular proceedings, a "contest of a will" has always been considered as a formal proceeding by a civil action, in which the issues are defined by formal pleadings, and the rules of evidence, for and against the issues, established by repeated rulings. Wright v. Young (Kan.) 89 Pac. 695, 696.

CONTESTED ELECTION

See Contest; Election Contest.

As cause, see Cause (In Practice).

CONTIGUOUS

The word "contiguous," in Pierce's Code, § 7122, is not to be given the restricted meaning of "next to" or "touching," but includes lands, not bordering upon the river nor forming its banks, but subject to damage by its overflow, which are as much entitled to protection from damage caused by overflow as is the land next to, and forming the bank of, the river. State ex rel. Grays Harbor Boom Co. v. Superior Court for Chehalis County, 106 Pac. 481, 483, 57 Wash. 71.

The word "contiguous," in an ordinance providing that where an excavation goes below ten feet, if the other party permits entrance, the excavator must preserve any adjoining or contiguous structure, contemplates nearness of a structure, but with intervening space, and any wall or structure is contiguous which is near enough to be disturbed by the excavation. Baxter v. York Realty Co., 112 N. Y. Supp. 455, 456, 128 App. Div. 79.

A tract of land wholly surrounded by the waters of the ocean may properly be said to be "contiguous" to the beach or ocean front; the words "beach or ocean front" not excluding land always covered by the sea. P. L. 1909, c. 13, providing for the erection of piers below the low-water mark, is applicable to such a tract. A city holding a qualified fee in lands is the owner thereof within P. L. 1909, p. 27, authorizing cities bordering on the Atlantic Ocean owning lands "contiguous" to the beach or ocean front to improve the same for public use and recreation, and to issue bonds therefor. A tract of land is "contiguous" to the beach or ocean front within P. L. 1909, p. 27, authorizing cities bordering on the Atlantic Ocean owning lands contiguous to the beach or ocean front to improve the same for public use and recreation, and issue bonds therefor, although the land intended to be used lies wholly below low-water mark. Bew v. Ventnor City, 80 Atl. 28, 29, 81 N. J. Law, 207.

One who furnishes under a running account with the common owner of a group of exposition buildings materials for use in the illuminating equipment thereof is entitled to a lien on such buildings, where they are maintained for a common purpose, though they are not all situated on "contiguous" lots, and though the claimant is not able to show what portions were used in a particular building. Lehmer v. Horton, 98 N. W. 964, 67 Neb. 574, 2 Ann. Cas. 683.

"Contiguous property," within the meaning of the term as used in a statute authorizing cities to make "local improvements by special assessment, or by special taxation, or both, of contiguous property," includes a railway in the street which is being improved. Kuehner v. City of Freeport, 32 N. E. 372, 376, 143 Ill. 92, 17 L. R. A. 774.

Const. art. 4, § 31, authorized the levy of special assessments for drains on property benefited, and Const. art. 9, § 9, authorized the General Assembly to vest municipal authorities with power to make local improvements by special assessment, such tax to be uniform as to persons and property within the jurisdiction of the body imposing the same. Levee Act, § 55, as amended in 1885, authorized the assessment of the property of any public or corporate road or railroad for local improvements whenever the proposed improvement benefited any of such roads, so that the property of such road would be improved by the construction of the ditch, drain, or levy, and provided that the commissioners should apportion to the corporation for a corporate road or railroad such portion of the cost as to private individuals, etc. In 1909, section 55 was amended, so as to include streets and alleys of municipal corporations, and a new section was added providing that the act should be liberally construed. Held that, where the construction of certain drains operated to improve parts of certain streets on which a street railway was operated, the railroad was "contiguous property" within Const. art. 9, § 9, and was subject to assessment. Spring Creek Drainage Dist. v. Elgin, J. & E. R. Co., 94 N. E. 529, 539, 249 Ill. 260.

Abutting, adjacent, or adjoining

"Contiguous" means near to, but not touching, not being synonymous with "adjoining." Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. Douglas County, 130 N. W. 246, 248, 145 Wis. 288.

"Contiguous" is defined to be adjacent; in actual close contact; touching; near. The word "contiguous" is a relative term, and, when employed in reference to a building, evidently means in close proximity to the same. Arkell v. Commerce Ins. Co., 69 N. Y. 191, 193, 25 Am. Rep. 168.

"What is 'contiguous' must be fitted to touch entirely on one side. * * * Lands are adjacent to a house or town; fields are adjoined to each other; houses contiguous to each other." Baxter v. Realty Co., 112 N. Y. Supp. 455, 456, 128 App. Div. 79 (quoting from Crabb's Eng. Synonyms).

The word "contiguous," as used in the statute and an ordinance authorizing the assessment of contiguous property for the payment of a street improvement, means "in actual or close contact," "touching," "adjacent," or "near," and only such lots as abut on the street can be assessed. Langlois v. Cameron, 96 N. E. 332, 334, 201 Ill. 301.

That which is "adjacent" may be separated by some intervening object, that which is "adjoining" must touch in some part, while that which is "contiguous" must touch entirely on one side. "Contiguous," in an ordinance providing that where an excavation goes below ten feet, if the other party permits entrance, the excavator must preserve any adjoining or contiguous structure, contemplates the nearness of a structure, but with intervening space, and any wall or structure is contiguous which is near enough to be disturbed by the excavation. Baxter v. York Realty Co., 112 N. Y. Supp. 455, 456, 128 App. Div. 79 (quoting and adopting definition in Crabb, Eng. Synonyms).

Land cornering

Neither two tracts which merely corner on each other, nor two tracts with a strip 50 feet wide included merely for the purpose of connecting them, constitute "contiguous" territory, within Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 24, § 182, authorizing the incorporation into a village of contiguous territory. Wild v. People ex rel. Stephens, 81 N. E. 707, 708, 227 Ill. 556.

"Contiguous" is defined by Webster to mean "in actual contact; touching; also adjacent; near; neighboring; adjoining." He defines "contiguous angles" as such angles as have one leg common to both angles. The word "contiguous," in the statute defining "tract," as applied to land, when used in the revenue law, as any contiguous quantity of land in possession of, owned by, or recorded as the property of the same claimant, means land which touches on the sides; and two quarters of the same section, which only touch at the corner, do not constitute, for the purpose of taxation, one tract or parcel of land. Griffin v. Denison Land Co., 119 N. W. 1041, 1043, 18 N. D. 246.

Where several claims are held in common, the annual assessment work for all may be done on one of the claims or on adjacent patented land or even on public land, provided the claims are "contiguous" and the work is for the benefit of all of them, and tends to develop them all, and facilitate the extraction of ore therefrom. Mining claims which touch each other only at a common corner are not "contiguous" within the rule authorizing the performance of assessment work for several contiguous claims on any one of them. Anvil Hydraulic & Drainage Co. v. Code, 182 Fed. 206, 206, 105 C. C. A. 45.

Separation as affecting

"Contiguous property," as used in decisions holding that only such damages as result to the land described in a petition can be recovered in the absence of a cross-petition, necessarily means property in some way distinguishable from the lot or tract, a part of which is sought to be taken, and includes land separated from that sought to be taken merely by dividing lines designated on plats. Metropolitan West Side El. R. Co. v. Johnson, 42 N. E. 871, 872, 159 Ill. 484.

Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 80, relating to the registration of land titles provides (section 55) that any number of contiguous pieces of land in the same county and owned by the same person and in the same right, or any number of pieces of property in the same county having the same chain of title and belonging to the same person, may be included in one application. Held, that the ordinary meaning of "contiguous" being "in actual contact" or "touching" a number of lots separated from each other, two lots being the largest number in actual contact, and some of them being separated by two blocks, are not contiguous within the act. Culver v. Waters, 93 N. E. 747, 748, 248 Ill. 168.

CONTIGUOUS TERRITORY

"Contiguous" means "in actual contact; touching; also adjacent; near; neighboring; adjoining." Queens County was the most contiguous territory to Richmond to which it could be joined to form a senate district under a constitutional provision that every senate district shall at all times consist of contiguous territory. Payne v. O'Brien, 101 N. Y. Supp. 367, 370, 51 Misc. Rep. 397 (quoting and adopting definition in Webst. Dict.; citing Board of Sup'rs of Houghton County v. Blacker, 52 N. W. 951, 92 Mich. 638, 16 L. R. A. 432).

The ordinary and plain meaning of the words "contiguous territory" is not territory near by, in the neighborhood or locality of, but territory touching, adjoining, and connected, as distinguished from territory separated by other territory. Const. 1894, art. 3, § 4, declaring that senate districts shall consist of contiguous territory, does not apply to the county of Richmond, which is an island and not contiguous to any other county. In re Sherill, 81 N. E. 124, 131, 188 N. Y. 185, 117 Am. St. Rep. 841.

"Contiguous territory" is not territory near by, in the neighborhood or locality of, but territory touching, adjoining, and connected, as distinguished from territory separated by other territory." The constitutional provision that senate districts shall consist of contiguous territory does not apply to the county of Richmond, which is an island, and not "contiguous" to any other county. Such county, not containing a population sufficient to entitle it to a senator, should be joined to a county bounded by the Atlantic Ocean or Hudson river, so as to comply with the constitutional provision that the senate districts shall be in as compact a form as possible. In re Sherill, 81 N. E. 124, 131, 188 N. Y. 185, 117 Am. St. Rep. 841.

CONTINGENCY

See Unavoidable Contingency.

A "contingency" is some future event which may or may not occur, and the termination of a trust estate depending on the death of the beneficiary depends on a certainty and not a contingency. Devin v. McCoy, 93 N. E. 1013, 1014, 48 Ind. App. 379.

In Rev. St. 1899, § 4875, requiring that the petition in partition set forth the names and titles of every person who, upon any contingency, may be entitled to any beneficial interest in the premises, the legislature used the word "contingency" to cover every kind of estate that was known to the law, but not in the sense that all persons who, by any future possibility might have an interest in the land, should be made parties defendant. Where a minor heir had no interest in a devise of premises sought to be partitioned, the fact that he was entitled, within a specified time, unexpired, to contest the will, did not make him a necessary party to the suit. Robertson v. Brown, 86 S. W. 187, 190, 187 Mo. 452, 106 Am. St. Rep. 485.

Act Cong. June 29, 1906, c. 3594, § 4 Stat. 607, forbids railroads from confining cattle longer than 28 hours without unloading, unless prevented by storm or other accidental or other unavoidable unanticipated causes, provided that on the written request of the owner the time may be extended to 36 hours; it being the intent of the act to prohibit continuous confinement for more than 28 hours except "upon the contingencies hereinbefore stated." Held, that the "contingencies hereinbefore stated" included both the case where the carrier was prevented from unloading by storm or other accidental or unavoidable causes and the contingency of the owner having filed a written request extending the time of confinement to 36 hours. United States v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 171 Fed. 586, 588.

Under Rev. St. c. 86, § 55, cl. 4, providing that no trustee shall be charged by reason of any money or other thing due from him to the principal defendant unless, at the time of service of the writ upon him, it is due absolutely and not on any contingency, where labor was performed under a contract, and there remained only to fix its amount and value, the fact that payment was to be made on an estimate and certificate of an engineer does not constitute a "contingency." Ware v. Gowen, 65 Me. 534, 535.

Negotiable Instruments Act (Code Supp. 1907, §3060-a1) declares that an instrument to be negotiable must be payable on demand or at a fixed or determinable future time, and section 3060-a4 declares an instrument to be payable at a determinable future time when expressed to be payable on or before a fixed or determinable future time specified therein, or on or before a fixed period after the occurrence of a specified event which is certain to happen, but that an instrument payable upon a "contingency" is not negotiable, and that the happening of the event does not cure the defect. Notes dated April 23, 1904, due December 1, 1905, and December 1, 1907, provided that "it is agreed that if crop on Secs. 25 and 26, Twp. 145-48, is below 8 bushels per acre (for 1905 as to one and 1907 as to the other) this note shall be extended one year." Held, that a "determinable future time" as used in clause 2 of section 3060-a4 meant a time that could be certainly determined after the execution of the note, and that the "contingency" which would render a note nonnegotiable meant an event which might or might not happen, a contingency in law meaning an uncertain future event, and that under such language and in view of the other provisions of the section the notes were negotiable. State Bank of Halstad v. Bilstad (Iowa) 136 N. W. 204, 207.

Authorizing additional highway tax

A "contingency" has the element of uncertainty and doubt, and is defined as an event which is possible, but which may or may not occur. It is in the nature of a casualty, accident, or chance, and results from an agency the operation of which is uncertain. It is dependent on a possibility and on causes which are undetermined or unknown. Under the road and bridge act, providing for a greater levy in view of some contingency, a certificate of the commissioners that a contingency existed, in that many bridges in the township were becoming unsafe and would have to be repaired and rebuilt, did not show the existence of a "contingency" within the meaning of the statute. People ex rel. Bahde v. Toledo, St. L. & W. R. Co., 83 N. E. 118, 119, 231 Ill. 125 (citing Webst. Dict; Stand. Dict; 9 Cyc. p. 72).

A "contingency," within Hurd's Rev. St. 1906, c. 121, § 14, authorizing additional taxes for highways, is some unusual or extraordinary event, not happening in the ordinary course of events; and a certificate of commissioners of highways, levying an additional tax, must state that the tax is to meet a "contingency," and what the contingency is; and a certificate that the additional tax is needed, in view of the contingency that impassable roads need to be improved, and bridges repaired, and culverts constructed, does not show a contingency, and the additional tax is void. People ex rel. O'Connell v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 96 N. E. 877, 252 Ill. 407.

No levy may be made to complete payment for the erection of a new bridge across a new drainage channel of a river, for building of such a bridge is not a "contingency." People ex rel. Vaughn v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 96 N. E. 866, 252 Ill. 377.

A certificate that an additional levy is needed for the purpose of "building and repairing bridges" or for "building new bridges" or "for opening new roads" does not state a "contingency." People ex rel. George v. Wabash R. Co., 94 N. E. 137, 138, 248 Ill. 540.

The certificate must state what the contingency is, which must be in the nature of a casualty; and a certificate for an additional tax to build a bridge swept away by a freshet shows such a "contingency." People ex rel. Cline v. Wabash R. Co., 96 N. E. 861, 252 Ill. 816; Same v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 96 N. E. 862, 252 Ill. 376.

A contingency must be shown to exist, and the certificate of the commissioners of highways must state that the tax is required to meet the contingency, and must state what the "contingency" is, which must be some unusual or extraordinary event in the nature of a casualty. People ex rel. Williamson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 97 N. E. 245, 246, 253 Ill. 100.

A certificate that in view of the contingency that recent and unusual storms and rains in the town have so washed away the roads and bridges thereof that a specific tax on each $100 will be an insufficient sum to repair the roads and bridges, does not show a "contingency," within the meaning of the section, and an additional tax is illegal. People ex rel. Mooneyham v. Cairo, V. & C. Ry. Co., 93 N. E. 405, 406, 247 Ill. 360.

A certificate which recites that in the opinion of the commissioners an additional tax levy is necessary "in view of the contingency that it is necessary, on account of their destruction, to rebuild immediately nine bridges," does not show the existence of a contingency, since the "contingency" contemplated is something that does not occur regularly in the ordinary course of events. People ex rel. Lee v. Kankakee & S. W. R. Co., 86 N. E. 742, 744, 237 Ill. 362.

CONTINGENT

"Contingent" implies the idea of futurity and refers to something that may or may not happen. A bet by parties not aware of the fact, involving the question whether or not a third person had a lease on designated real estate, is a betting on a "contingency," within Betting and Gaming Law (1 Rev. St. [1st Ed.] p. 662, pt. 1, c. 20, tit. 8, §§ 8, 9), declaring that bets depending on any chance or unknown or contingent event shall be unlawful. Thomson v. Hayes, 111 N. Y. Supp. 495, 497, 59 Misc. Rep. 425 (quoting and adopting definition in Webst. Dict.).

CONTINGENT CLAIM

"A 'contingent claim' is where the liability depends upon some future event which may or may not happen, and therefore makes it now wholly uncertain whether there will ever be a liability." Grand Lodge I. O. O. F. v. Troutman, 103 Pac. 94, 98, 80 Kan. 441; Converse v. Elward, 103 Pac. 140, 142, 80 Kan. 558 (quoting Sargent's Adm'r v. Kimball's Adm'r, 37 Vt. 320; Stevens v. Stevens, 72 S. W. 542, 172 Mo. 36; Jorgenson v. Larson, 88 N. W. 439, 85 Minn. 534; Davis v. Davis, 119 N. W. 334, 137 Wis. 640).

It is a claim which may never accrue, but the mere fact that an accounting is necessary to determine the amount due does not make the claim "contingent." Davis v. Davis, 119 N. W. 334, 337, 137 Wis. 640.

Future installments of rent, which may hereafter become due and remain unpaid, do not constitute a "contingent claim" against the estate under section 922 of Court and Practice Act 1905. Bowler v. Emery, 70 Atl. 7, 9, 29 R. I. 310.

The result of claims against national banks to collect a first assessment was a "contingency" upon which depended the right to order a second assessment, because if, under the first assessment, sufficient money was obtained to discharge the obligations of the corporation in receivership, there was no reason for making the second assessment; otherwise, it was the duty of the court to make a second assessment. Converse v. Elward, 103 Pac. 140, 142, 80 Kan. 558 (quoting and adopting Sargent's Adm'r v. Kimball's Adm'r, 37 Vt. 320).

Where plaintiff and another entered into a contract to establish and maintain a private charity, and the other party agreed to and did execute a deed purporting to convey a large tract of land to trustees for that purpose, and plaintiff agreed to and did pay off an equitable lien upon the land, and agreed to and did pay for the erection of buildings thereon, and after the death of the other party his heirs brought action to set aside the deed, alleging that it was void, making plaintiff a party defendant, who filed a cross-petition for the money paid for the betterment of the estate, and prayed that it be adjudged a lien upon the land, his cause of action to have his contribution adjudged a lien on the land was "contingent" on the validity of the other party's deed, and upon the bringing of the action to avoid the deed became absolute. Grand Lodge, I. O. O. F. v. Troutman, 103 Pac. 94, 98, 99, 80 Kan. 441.

Under a covenant of warranty in a conveyance that defendant would warrant and defend the premises against lawful claims and demands of all persons, the vendee, in the undisputed enjoyment of his purchase and without any breach of the covenants of his vendor, does not have a "contingent claim" provable in bankruptcy against the vendor, because of the possibility that some unknown claimant may at some time interpose a superior title by means of which he may be deprived of the property purchased. Reed v. Pierce, 36 Me. 455, 463, 58 Am. Dec. 761.

CONTINGENT ESTATE

Real Property Law (Laws 1896, p. 564, c. 547) § 27, declares that a "contingent estate" arises where the person to whom or the event on which it is limited to take effect remains uncertain. Schell v. Carpenter, 100 N. Y. Supp. 554, 555, 50 Misc. Rep. 400.

A future estate is "contingent," when the person to whom, or the event upon which, it is limited to take effect remains uncertain. Ward v. Ward, 181 Fed. 946, 950; In re Ryder, 89 N. Y. Supp. 460, 462, 43 Misc. Rep. 476; In re Perry, 96 N. Y. Supp. 879, 884, 48 Misc. Rep. 285.

Strictly speaking the word "contingent," as "applied to a use, remainder, devise, bequest, or other legal right or interest, implies that no present right exists, and that whether a right ever will exist depends on a future uncertain event." Taylor v. Stephens (Ind.) 74 N. E. 12 (citing Anderson's Law Dict. 245.)

The rule for determining whether an estate bestowed by a will is vested or contingent is that, where the time of division or payment is of the substance of the gift, the legacy is "contingent"; when time is mentioned only as a qualifying clause of the payment or division, then the legacy is vested; or, in other words, legacies payable after the death of the testator are either vested or contingent, and when the testator annexes time to the payment only the legacy will be vested, but if of the gift itself it will be contingent. Johnson v. Terry, 36 South. 775, 776, 139 Ala. 614.

A "contingent estate" depends for its effect upon an event which may or may not happen; as an estate limited to a person not in esse or not yet born. A testator devised and bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees, to hold and manage the same during the lives of the two surviving children of the testator who should be the youngest at the time of his death, and for so much longer as permissible under the laws of the state. The trustees were directed to set apart a sufficient sum to produce a certain amount of income to be paid to the widow during her life, and to pay the income from the remainder in equal parts to the four children of the testator named, or to their issue or devisees in case of their death, subject as to a part thereof to certain charges to pay off liens on the property. At the termination of the trust the corpus of the estate was to be divided equally between the four children, or the devisees, legatees, assignees, or legal heirs of any deceased. Held, that each of the four children took at once a vested estate in one-fourth part of the testator's residuary estate, having immediate right to dispose of the same by deed or will, and to enjoy a part of the income subject to no contingency; possession of the corpus alone being deferred. Title Guaranty & Trust Co. v. Ward, 164 Fed. 459, 468 (citing 1 Bouv. Law Dict.; Crabb, Real Prop.).

A future estate may be either "vested" or "contingent"; "vested" when there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the possession of the property on the determination of the intermediate or precedent estate, and "contingent" when the person to whom or the event on which it is limited to take effect remains uncertain. The fact that there may be a defeasance of the estate in remainder, so far as the person in whom it is vested is concerned, does not make the estate on that account a "contingent" one. Testator gave to his widow the use of the residue of his estate for life or until her remarriage, on the happening of either of which events he gave such residue to his children equally, the children of any child, who at that time might be deceased, to take the share the parent would have taken. Held, that the will created a vested, and not a contingent, remainder in testator's children. Genunge v. Murphy, 112 N. Y. Supp. 810, 811, 59 Misc. Rep. 881 (quoting and adopting the definition in 2 Washburn on Real Property, p. 553, and Real Property Law [Laws 1896, p. 564, c. 547] § 80).

Where testatrix devised rents to her father during his life, and after his death to four persons and the survivor of them, at the death of whom the property was to be sold and the proceeds divided equally among the children of the four devisees and testatrix's half brothers and sisters surviving at that time, it was held that there was no trust, but the estate attempted to be devised to the children of the four devisees, and the half-brothers and half-sisters was a "future estate," within St. 1898, § 2060, providing that disposition of rents and profits of land to accrue and be received subsequent to the execution of the instrument creating the disposition shall be governed by the rules established in the chapter (95) relating to future estates in land, and, as the persons to whom the estate was limited remained uncertain, it was a "contingent future estate" under the express provisions of section 2037. In re Adelman's Will, 119 N. W. 929, 930, 138 Wis. 120.

Where the intention of the testatrix appears to have been to vest in interest a share in each child, and merely to postpone the possession of the principal, though the share is described as "contingent, expectant, or presumptive," such words will be considered as referring merely to the physical possession, and not to the vesting of the legal title in interest. Hayden v. Sugden, 96 N. Y. Supp. 681, 690, 48 Misc. Rep. 108.

A lease giving the lessee an option to purchase during the term is dependent as to its duration on the contingency of the lessee's exercising his option to purchase, and if he does so during a rent period he is liable for rent for the expired portion of that period, under Rev. Laws, c. 129, § 8, providing that, when land is held by lease of a person having an estate determinable "on a contingency," and such estate determines during a rent period, the landlord may recover a part of the rent proportional to the expired part of the last rent period. Withington v. Nichols, 73 N. E. 855, 856, 187 Mass. 575.

CONTINGENT EVENT

A bet by parties, not aware of the fact, involving the question whether a third person has a lease on designated real estate, refers to an event unknown to the bettors, and constitutes "gambling" within Const. art. 1, § 9, forbidding pool selling, book making, or any other kind of gambling, and within Betting and Gaming Law, §§ 8, 9, declaring that bets depending on any chance, "or unknown or contingent event," shall be unlawful, etc.; the word "unknown" referring to that which was unknown to the parties to a wager, the word "contingent" showing that the event referred to applies equally to existing or non-existing events, the word "event" meaning that in which an action, operation, or series of operations terminates and having reference to something that has taken place, the words "unknown event" meaning a past circumstance unknown to the parties, and the words "contingent event" referring to one that hereafter may or may not occur. Thomson v. Hayes, 111 N. Y. Supp. 495, 497, 59 Misc. Rep. 425.

CONTINGENT EXPENSE

"Contingent expenses" are such as are possible or liable, but not certain, to occur." An item of $10,000 to apply on a contract for a garbage crematory was not a "contingent expense." Mander v. Coleman, 95 N. Y. Supp. 696, 700, 109 App. Div. 454 (citing Webst. Dict.).

CONTINGENT FUND

Under statutes authorizing school districts to create and maintain a schoolhouse fund and a teachers' fund, a warrant drawn against the "contingent fund" in payment of a debt for the construction and equipment of a schoolhouse must be regarded as drawn against the schoolhouse fund. School Dist. No. 3, Carbon County, v. Western Tube Co., 80 Pac. 155, 165, 13 Wyo. 304.

CONTINGENT INTEREST

See Remainder and Contingent Interest.

A "contingent interest" is one in which there is no present fixed right of either present or future enjoyment but in which a fixed right will arise in the future under certain specified contingencies. Nelson v. Nelson, 72 N. E. 482, 483.

CONTINGENT LEGACY

Where the event is uncertain, a legacy is "contingent," though the time is fixed. Moore v. Matthews, 61 Atl. 743, 745, 70 N. J. Eq. 373 (citing Beatty's Adm'r v. Montgomery's Ex'x, 21 N. J. Eq. 324).

A "contingent legacy" is a legacy made dependent upon some uncertain event, or it is a legacy which has not vested. A testator devised and bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees, to hold and manage the same during the lives of the two surviving children of the testator who should be the youngest at the time of his death, and for so much longer as permissible under the laws of the state. The trustees were directed to set apart a sufficient sum to produce a certain amount of income to be paid to the widow during her life, and to pay the income from the remainder in equal parts to the four children of the testator named, or to their issue or devisees in case of their death, subject as to a part thereof to certain charges to pay off liens on the property. At the termination of the trust the corpus of the estate was to be divided equally between the four children or the devisees, legatees, assignees, or legal heirs of any deceased. Held, that each of the four children took at once a vested estate in one-fourth part of the testator's residuary estate, having immediate right to dispose of the same by deed or will, and to enjoy a part of the income, subject to no contingency; possession of the corpus alone being deferred. Title Guarantee & Trust Co. v. Ward, 164 Fed. 469, 468 (citing 1 Bouv. Law Dict.; 1 Rop. Leg. 506; Williams, Ex'rs).

CONTINGENT LIABILITY

See, also, Contingency.

The liability incurred by a corporation transferring a note to it and guaranteeing payment thereof at maturity or at any time thereafter, waiving demand, notice of non-payment, and protest, is not a "contingent liability," but is an absolute liability created at the date of the making of the guaranty, for a "contingent liability" is dependent on the happening of the event which creates the liability, while the right to enforce an absolute liability may be contingent on the happening of an event. First Nat. Bank of Redlands v. Consolidated Lumber Co., 116 Pac. 680, 681, 16 Cal. App. 267.

Under Business Corporation Law, § 6, providing that stockholders of a full liability corporation shall be severally and individually liable for the corporate debts, and Stock Corporation Law, § 55, providing that no stockholder shall be personally liable for any corporate debt not payable within two years from the time it is contracted, the liability of a corporation as an assignee of a lease stipulating for the rent payable quarterly in advance is a "contingent liability," which only ripens into a debt as the rent falls due, and therefore is not a debt within the meaning of the statutes. Sanford v. Rhoads, 99 N. Y. Supp. 407, 408, 113 App. Div. 782 (citing Garrison v. Howe, 17 N. Y. 458; Gold v. Clyne, 31 N. E. 980, 134 N. Y. 262, 17 L. R. A. 767; Whitney Arms Co. v. Barlow, 68 N. Y. 34).

CONTINGENT REMAINDER

"A 'contingent remainder' is one limited to take effect * * * upon a dubious and uncertain event." Brownback v. Keister, 77 N. E. 75, 77, 220 Ill. 544 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Bl. Comm. 168, and citing Thompson v. Adams, 69 N. E. 1, 205 Ill. 552).

"A 'contingent remainder' is one limited to take effect either to a dubious or uncertain person or upon a dubious and uncertain event." Thompson v. Adams, 69 N. E. 1, 3, 205 Ill. 552 (quoting definition in 2 Bl. Comm. 168, and citing Haward v. Peavey, 21 N. E. 503, 128 Ill. 430, 15 Am. St. Rep. 120); Northwestern Trust Co. v. Wheaton, 94 N. E. 980, 983, 249 Ill. 606, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1150 (citing Haward v. Peavey, 21 N. E. 503, 128 Ill. 430, 15 Am. St. Rep. 120; City of Peoria v. Darst, 101 Ill. 609; Smith v. West, 103 Ill. 332; Brechtbeller v. Wilson, 81 N. E. 1094, 228 Ill. 502); Golladay v. Knock, 85 N. E. 649-651, 235 Ill. 412, 126 Am. St. Rep. 224; Walker v. Alverson, 68 S. E. 966, 87 S. C. 55, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 115.

A "contingent remainder" is one limited to take effect either to an uncertain person or on an uncertain event. Carter v. Carter, 85 N. E. 292-294, 234 Ill. 507; Pingray v. Rulon, 92 N. E. 592, 246 Ill. 109.

A "contingent remainder" is one limited to take effect on an event or condition which may never happen or be performed, or which may not happen or be performed until after the determination of the preceding particular estate, in which case the remainder can never take effect. Richardson v. Richardson, 68 S. E. 217, 152 N. C. 705.

A remainder is "contingent" if the event on which it is to take effect is contingent, or if at the time of creating the estate the person who is to take is not ascertained. Sullivan v. Garesche, 129 S. W. 949, 951, 229 Mo. 496.

It does not follow that every remainder which is subject to a contingency or a condition is therefore a "contingent remainder"; if the condition be precedent the remainder is contingent. Walker v. Alverson, 68 S. E. 966, 968, 87 S. C. 55, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 115.

A "contingent remainder" is not an estate, and is merely a chance of having one; but it is a right in property which the remainderman could release to the life tenant. Ortmayer v. Elcock, 80 N. E. 339, 340, 225 Ill. 342 (citing Williams v. Esten, 53 N. E. 562, 179 Ill. 267).

The estate is "contingent" if the contingency or condition is precedent and vested, subject to be divested by the happening of the condition subsequent, if the contingency or condition is subsequent. Golladay v. Knock, 85 N. E. 649, 650, 651, 235 Ill. 412, 126 Am. St. Rep. 224.

At common law "contingent remainders" were interests or possibilities rather than estates, but finally were assigned in equity and could be released at law to an owner in possession, or transferred to strangers under the doctrine of estoppel. Shindler v. Robinson, 135 N. Y. Supp. 1056, 1060, 150 App. Div. 875.

"The remainder is said to be 'contingent' where the right of the remainderman to succeed to the possession and enjoyment of the estate depends upon some contingency which may never arise, or where the person who shall be entitled to succeed to such possession and enjoyment at the termination of the life tenancy is not and may never be ascertained, or is not in being." Archer v. Jacobs, 101 N. W. 195, 197, 125 Iowa, 467.

A "contingent remainder" must vest during the continuance of a particular estate, and if that estate comes to an end before the event upon the happening of which the contingent remainder is to take effect occurs, the remainder is defeated; and this is so whether the preceding estate reaches its natural termination, or is brought to a premature end by merger, forfeiture, or otherwise. When the estate for life and the next vested estate in remainder or reversion meet in the same person, notwithstanding intervening contingent remainders, the particular estate will merge in the reversion or remainder, and the contingent remainders will be destroyed. A qualification of this rule exists where the creation of the particular estate and the remainder and reversion occur at the same time and by the same instrument. Bond v. Moore, 86 N. E. 386, 392, 236 Ill. 576, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 540 (citing 2 Bl. Comm. 168, 171; Gray, Perpetuities, § 10; Madison v. Larmon, 48 N. E. 556, 170 Ill. 65, 62 Am. St. Rep. 356; Fearne, Rem. §§ 316-324; 3 Prest. Conv. [3d Ed.] 899; 2 Washb. Real Prop. [6th Ed.] 553, para. 1597, 1598; Williams, Real Prop. 233).

Washburn on Real Property defines a "contingent remainder" in the following language: "A 'contingent remainder' is one whose vesting or taking effect in interest is by the terms of its creation made to depend upon some contingency which may never happen at all, or may not happen within a requisite prescribed time, by reason whereof its capacity of vesting or taking effect in interest may be forever defeated; or, in the language of another, it is one 'which is limited to a person who is not ascertained at the time of the limitation, or which is referred for its vesting or taking effect in interest to an event which may not happen till after the determination of the particular estate,' or upon the happening of some uncertain and doubtful event, or where the person to whom it is limited is not ascertained or yet in being. Until the contingency has happened the remainder is rather a possibility in its character than an estate, although it has become a familiar quality of an estate, to understand and apply which involves much nice learning. It is always an executory interest from its very nature." 2 Washb. Real Prop. (6th Ed.) § 1555. The same author in the succeeding section (1556) gives many illustrations of the rule above announced, and among them are the following: "Suppose an estate be limited to A. for life, remainder to the oldest son of B., who then has no son. The contingency in that case is that of a son being born to B. If he has a son, the moment he is born the remainder becomes vested in him and ceases to be contingent. If the uncertain event fails to happen at all, the remainder falls for want of a person to take it when the particular estate determines, and the estate reverts at once to the grantor. So, where there was a devise to a wife for life, and at her death to be divided to and among such of testator's children as should then be living, share and share alike, it was held a contingent remainder. If one of these died in her lifetime, his share was lost, although he left a child. The latter took nothing. Another instance would be that of an estate to A. for life, and, if B. outlived him, then to B. in fee. There is here no contingency about the person who is to take, but the contingency is in the event of his outliving A.; for, if he die before A., though all along ready to take the remainder if it falls in, the remainder as such goes to no one. If A. die first, the remainder not only becomes vested in interest, but at once in possession. Another and familiar illustration would be where this estate was limited to A. for life, remainder to B. after the death of A. and H. Here B. is a known person in esse, ready at all times to take the remainder. It is certain that A. will die, and that H. will also. The contingency is in the doubt whether H. will die before A. If he does, the grant is thereupon converted into a simple limitation of an estate to A. for life, with a remainder to B., and is a vested one. But, if A. dies first, B.'s remainder is wholly gone, because he can only take it when A. and H. are both dead; and by the death of A. before H. the particular estate in A. determines before B. can take, and consequently his remainder falls, and the estate reverts to the grantor. And to these may be added for further illustration a conveyance in trust for the grantor for life, and after his death to A. when and provided he attains the age of 21 years. The interest of A. was held to be a contingent remainder until he arrived at that age." Other equally eminent authors define a "contingent remainder" as follows: "Where the estate in remainder is limited to take effect either to a dubious and uncertain person, or upon a dubious and uncertain event." 2 Black Com. 169. Mr. Bingham, in his able work on Descents, at page 125, thus defines it: "A 'single contingent remainder' is that part of an estate in fee bestowed conditionally upon one of two or more persons which one is not certain, the rest of which is bestowed definitely upon some other person or persons named. The part not thus definitely disposed of to some particular person or persons is provided to go to some other person or persons of two or more named, which of the two or more is left uncertain, and is to be fixed and made certain by succeeding events. The remainder itself is certain but the person who is to have it is uncertain until it is determined by the events named." Dickerson v. Dickerson, 110 S. W. 700, 702, 703, 211 Mo. 483.

Uncertainty of time of enjoyment

An estate in remainder is not rendered "contingent" by uncertainty of time of enjoyment. The right and capacity of the remaindermen to take possession of the estate if the possession were to become vacant, and the certainty that the event on which the vacancy depends must happen at some time, and not the certainty that it will happen in the lifetime of the remaindermen, determine whether or not the estate is vested or contingent. Nelson v. Nelson (Ind.) 72 N. E. 482, 483 (citing Hoover v. Hoover, 19 N. E. 468, 116 Ind. 498; Bruce v. Bissell, 22 N. E. 4, 119 Ind. 525, 12 Am. St. Rep. 436; Corey v. Springer, 37 N. E. 322, 138 Ind. 506).

An "estate in remainder" is not rendered contingent by the uncertainty of the time of enjoyment. The right and capacity of the remainderman to take possession of the estate if the possession were to become vacant, and the certainty that the event on which

Conditional limitations distinguished

The distinction between "conditional limitations," "contingent remainders," and "estates upon condition subsequent" is stated to be as follows: "If an estate is limited to A. until B. return from Rome, and after B. return to C., the limitation is a 'contingent remainder,' and good as such. But if the estate had been limited to A., which would be for life if no words of inheritance were annexed, provided that, if B. return from Rome, the estate should go to C., the limitation, though expressly the same in effect as the first, would be, not a remainder, but a 'conditional limitation.' In the one case, if C.'s estate comes into effect at all, it is after the prior estate had terminated by the natural expiration of the time for which it was limited, whereas in the other C.'s estate, if it took effect, came in and displaced the prior estate before its natural termination, and took its place as a substitute therefor. Then, again, though the estate of A. is a conditional one, liable to be defeated by the happening of a contingent event, it is not a case of condition at the common law, where to determine an estate for a breach of it required an entry by the grantor or his heirs, who thereby regained the estate originally parted with; but it is a case where the estate is wholly parted with by the grantor, no interest being left in him, and passes at once, upon the happening of the event, to him to whom it is limited. That 'contingent event, when it happens, is the limitation of the first estate granted; and the estate, instead of going back to the original grantor, goes over, eo instante, and without any act but that of the law, to the party named in the very gift itself of the estate as the one to take it in that event." In view of Civ. Code, § 778, declaring that a remainder may be limited on a contingency, the happening of which will abridge or determine the precedent estate, and such remainder shall be deemed a conditional limitation, and section 773, providing that a fee may be limited on a contingency which must happen, if at all, within the period described in the title, where testator bequeathed land to A. for life, and on her death to her heirs, but that, if A. should not reside on the land for her natural life, the land should become the absolute property of T., A.'s estate was not based on a condition subsequent, but was subject to a conditional limitation, so that on her removal from the land in her lifetime the property vested in T. at once, without entry or suit to establish title. Taylor v. McCowen (Cal.) 99 Pac. 353, 354

(quoting and adopting the distinction in 2 Washburn, Real Property [6th Ed.] § 1640).

Particular grants and devises construed

A devise to one for life, remainder to his heirs, creates a valid contingent remainder; the enjoyment depending on a contingency which must necessarily happen by lapse of time. Westcott v. Meeker, 122 N. W. 964, 968, 144 Iowa, 311, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 947.

A devise of the residue remaining in the hands of the trustees among such of testator's children as may survive his wife creates a "contingent remainder." Northern Trust Co. v. Wheaton, 94 N. E. 980, 983, 249 Ill. 606, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1150 (citing Haward v. Peavey, 21 N. E. 503, 128 Ill. 430, 15 Am. St. Rep. 120; City of Peoria v. Darst, 101 Ill. 609; Smith v. West, 103 Ill. 332; Brechbeller v. Wilson, 81 N. E. 1094, 228 Ill. 502).

Testator devised certain land, with the timber in controversy, to his daughter for life, and provided that after the daughter's death the land should go to the daughter's children and the children of such as were dead. Held, that the children of a deceased daughter of the life tenant had only a "contingent remainder" in such land. Latham v. Roanoke R. & Lumber Co., 51 S. E. 780, 189 N. C. 9, 111 Am. St. Rep. 764.

Where testator executed his will in 1867 and died in 1870, and gave a portion of the residue of his estate to his niece for life, and on her death to her children living at her decease, it created a remainder in the children of the niece "contingent" on their surviving her. In re Long's Estate, 73 Atl. 981, 982, 225 Pa. 39; Appeal of Murphy, Id.

A "contingent remainder" is one which is limited to a person not in being, or not ascertained; or, if limited to an ascertained person, it is so limited that his right to the estate depends upon some contingency in the future. Where testator devised property to his wife to hold until his two children became of age, then to be divided "in equal shares between my wife and my two children, share and share alike," the children took vested remainders, and, on their deaths before attaining majority, their interests passed to their heirs at law. Roberts v. Herron, 58 S. E. 968, 78 S. C. 115 (quoting and adopting Faber v. Police, 10 Rich. [10 S. C.] 376, 387).

Where land is conveyed for life, with the remainder to the grantee's children, in consideration of his supporting grantors for life, the interests of the remaindermen are dependent on the grantee fulfilling the contract, and, where he fails to do so, the interests of the remaindermen are defeated by the grantors electing to declare a forfeiture, followed by re-entry and possession and a conveyance to a purchaser in good faith and for value. Lowe v. Stepp, 116 S. W. 293, 294, 132 Ky. 75.

Not only at common law, but under the laws of Tennessee and Texas, under a will giving property to F., the wife of G., for her use as long as she remained the wife of G., and the children she might have by G., said property to go to the children of G. on the death of F. or her ceasing to be his wife, there was a "contingent remainder" as regards the children of F. by G. till a child was born to them, whereupon it immediately became a vested remainder in that child and all other children that might afterwards be born to them; said remainder opening and letting in each successive child as it was born, and the interest of any child dying before F. descending to the child's heirs. Greenlaw v. Dillon (Tex.) 108 S. W. 705, 708.

Testator's will provided that the widow should have the sole use of all the property during her life, save in case of her remarriage, when the estate was to be divided between her and her children, or the survivors of them, their heirs, and legal representatives, and on her death unmarried it was to be divided between the children, or the survivors of them, etc. The remainders were "contingent." Thompson v. Adams, 69 N. E. 1, 3, 205 Ill. 552 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Bl. Comm. 168, and citing Haward v. Peavey, 21 N. E. 503, 128 Ill. 430, 15 Am. St. Rep. 120).

A will provided that the trustees should pay out sums necessary for the widow's support and minor children's nurture, etc., that at her death the trust estate should cease, and that the residue should be equally divided among such of testator's four children as might survive his wife, the issue of children dying before such issue taking the parent's share. Testator's son, plaintiff's husband, and his issue died before the widow. Held, that testator's children's estate was a "contingent remainder," not vesting until the widow's life estate expired, and that then the property passed to the children then living or deceased children's issue; and hence plaintiff could not claim the share that would have passed to her husband or his issue, had one of them survived the widow. Brechbeller v. Wilson, 81 N. E. 1094, 1095, 228 Ill. 502.

Testator devised real estate in trust for the benefit of his son and wife and their children then living. He required the income to be used to pay an annuity to testator's wife for life, to pay the expenses of the trust, and bequeathed the residue in equal shares to his son and certain other named grandchildren, declaring that, if the son's wife be divorced or remarry, she should not receive any portion of the rentals, which should then be divided among the grandchildren named, and if any such grandchildren should die leaving children the share of such deceased child should be paid to his or her descendants, and in default of descendants be distributed among the grandchildren after the death of testator's wife and son; that after the death of testator's wife, his son, and the death or marriage of the son's wife, and when the named grandchildren arrived at age, the trust should terminate, and the lands described should vest in fee in such grandchildren and their descendants. Held, that the remainder to the grandchildren was a "contingent" one, being limited to dubious and uncertain persons. Brownback v. Keister, 77 N. E. 75-77, 220 Ill. 544.

Vested remainder distinguished

"The distinction between a 'vested' and 'contingent' remainder in a case like the present one is well defined. The former is one that is so limited to a person in being and ascertained that it is capable of taking effect in possession or enjoyment on a certain determination of the particular estate, without requiring the concurrence of any collateral contingency. The uncertainty as to the remainderman ever enjoying the estate which is limited to him by way of remainder will not render such remainder a contingent one, providing he has by such limitation a present absolute right to have the estate the instant the prior estate shall determine; but the absence of such present absolute right renders the estate a contingent remainder." A will left a life estate in certain property to R., the remainder to her son A., or A.'s surviving lawful issue, if any, but, if A. died without lawful issue, then the remainder was to go to testator's three sons, C., B., and W., in equal shares, or to their lawful issue, respectively. R. survived B., who had survived A.; but both A. and B. died without lawful issue. Held, that the remainder to A. did not vest because of the gift over, neither did the remainder to B. vest because of the gift over to his issue, in case R. survived him, and also because of its liability to be defeated by A. surviving R. Hence, B.'s interest being a "contingent remainder," his will conveyed no interest in the property in question. Voorhees v. Singer, 68 Atl. 217, 218, 73 N. J. Eq. 582.

A "contingent remainder" is one limited to take effect either to an uncertain person, or on an uncertain event, while a "vested remainder" is a present interest which passes to a party to be enjoyed in the future, so that the estate is immediately fixed in a determinate person after a particular estate terminates. Pingrey v. Rulon, 92 N. E. 592, 595, 246 Ill. 109.

A remainder is "vested" where there is a right of present enjoyment or a fixed right to a future enjoyment in a determinate person after the particular estate terminates. If there is uncertainty either as to the person who is to receive or in the gift itself to the remainderman, the remainder is "contingent." Northern Trust Co. v. Wheaton, 94 N. E. 980, 983, 249 Ill. 606, 84 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1150.

That an estate is to take effect after the termination of an intervening estate will not prevent both estates from being vested at the same moment; it being the present capacity of taking effect, if the possession were to become vacant, and not the certainty that the possession will become vacant before the estate limited determines, that distinguishes a "vested" from a "contingent" remainder. Hackney v. Tucker (Ky.) 121 S. W. 417.

"If the gift is immediate, though its enjoyment be postponed, it is 'vested'; but if it is future, and is dependent on some dubious circumstances through which it may be defeated, then it is 'contingent.'" And the rule is recognized that "the law leans towards the vesting of remainders." The uncertainty which characterizes a "contingent" as distinguished from a "vested" remainder is uncertainty as to the person or the event, and not as to the time of enjoyment. If futurity is annexed to the substance of the gift, the vesting is suspended; but if it appears to relate to time of payment only, the legacy vests instantaneously, and words directing division or distributing between two or more objects at a future time are equivalent to a direction to pay. Plaintiff took a vested remainder where by the terms of a will the wife received the entire property during her natural lifetime, after first disposing of sufficient to pay all of the testator's debts. The second item provided that, at the death of the wife, "all the property devised or bequeathed to her as aforesaid, or so much thereof as may then remain unexpended, I give and bequeath to my four sons (of whom plaintiff was one), to be divided equally among them and to their heirs and assigns forever." Jonas v. Welles, 111 N. W. 454, 134 Iowa, 47.

To constitute a "vested remainder," there must be some known person in being who, by the instrument, is to take and enjoy the estate upon the expiration of the particular estate, and whose right to do so cannot be defeated by any contingency, while a "contingent remainder" is contingent if it depends upon the happening of a contingent event, which may not happen until the particular estate has terminated; the existence of a contingency, irrespective of the duration of the remainder, being the criterion. In re Washburn's Estate, 106 Pac. 415, 417, 11 Cal. App. 735.

The terms "vested estates" and "contingent estates," used in section 2037, St. Wis. 1898, have far different significations than the common-law terms "vested remainders" and "contingent remainders." A "vested remainder" at the common law is one where there is "some person in esse, known and ascertained, who by the will or deed creating the estate is to take and enjoy the same upon expiration of the existing particular estate, and whose right to such remainder no contingency can defeat." A "vested" estate or remainder in the statutory sense is one where there is a person in esse, "who, should the particular estate now cease, would eo instante et ipso facto have an immediate right to the possession," though whether he would ever take in fact might depend upon an uncertain event rendering the interest a "contingent remainder," strictly so called, by the common-law rule. While a vested remainder by the rules of the common law is not subject to be divested at all, not so a "vested estate" in the statutory sense. That may be divested upon condition subsequent, in whatever way or manner the creator thereof, in creating the same, may provide or authorize. While at common law an estate in remainder cannot be at the same time both vested and contingent, there is that seeming contradiction as to remainders under section 2087, St. 1898. A person may be so conditioned that he would immediately take in remainder, should the precedent estate presently cease, yet may not be so entitled at any future time. The element of certainty, by force of the statute, gives to the remainder the character of a vested estate for the purpose of the subject covered by the statutes. The element of uncertainty gives to the remainder, by the same means, the character of a "contingent estate" for the same purpose. Whether an estate in remainder created by will is or is not vested in the common-law sense is controlled by the character of the estate actually created, as evidenced by the testamentary intention, not by any law, common or statute. When there is a devise to one, remainder over direct to others, nothing appearing in the will to the contrary, the legal presumption is that the testator intended to create "vested estates in remainder" in a common-law sense; that is, estates indefeasible, descendible, and alienable. When an estate is by will carved out of a fee, and the remainder is directed to be divided between the members of a class of persons after the expiration of such particular estate, the presumption of a testamentary intention that the estates in remainder shall vest upon the death of the testator is displaced by a presumption, nothing appearing in the will to the contrary, that the testator purposed to create "contingent remainders" in a common-law sense. In re Moran's Will, 96 N. W. 367, 369, 370, 118 Wis. 177.

"It is the uncertainty of the right of enjoyment, and not the uncertainty of its actual enjoyment, which renders a remainder 'contingent.' The present capacity of taking effect in possession, if the possession were to become vacant distinguishes a vested from a 'contingent remainder,' and not the certainty that the possession will ever become vacant while the remainder continues." In re Kountz's Estate, 62 Atl. 1103, 1105, 213 Pa. 390, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 639, 5 Ann. Cas. 427 (citing and quoting definition from 4 Kent's Comm. § 203, note a, in Doe ex dem. Poor v. Considine, 6 Wall. [73 U. S.] 458, 476, 18 L. Ed. 869).

The chief difference between a "vested remainder" and one that is "contingent" is that the latter may be destroyed by determination of the particular estate or the happening of the contingency (and even this cannot be where, as here, the life estate is held by trustees), while a vested remainder would simply be accelerated; and, unless the contingency is one which affects the capacity to take, a "contingent remainder" or other contingent interest is transmissible, even though not, in the technical sense, vested, and hence it will pass, in case of death before the happening of the event upon which it is dependent, to the heirs or devisees of the remainderman so dying. In re Brooke's Estate, 63 Atl. 411, 412, 214 Pa. 46 (citing Gray, Perpetuities, § 118; Bassett v. Hawk, 11 Atl. 802, 118 Pa. 94; Appeal of Chess, 87 Pa. 362, 30 Am. Rep. 361).

A remainder is "vested" when there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the possession of the property on the determination of the intermediate or precedent estate; "contingent" when the person to whom, or the event on which, it is limited to take effect, remains uncertain. That there may be a defeasance so far as the person in whom it is vested is concerned does not make the estate on that account a contingent one. A "vested remainder" may be aliened by any form known to the law which does not require a formal livery of seisin or passing of actual possession, with the same restrictions as are applicable to other estates. Real Property Law (Laws N. Y. 1896, p. 584, c. 547) § 30, declares a future estate to be vested when there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the possession of the property on the determination of the intermediate or precedent estate, and contingent while the person to whom or the event on which it is limited to take effect remains uncertain. Testator gave to his widow the use of the residue of his estate for life or until her marriage, on the happening of either of which events he gave such residue to his children equally, the children of any child, who at that time might be deceased, to take the share the parent would have taken. Held, that the will created a vested, and not a contingent, remainder in testator's children. Genunge v. Murphy, 112 N. Y. Supp. 310, 311, 59 Misc. Rep. 881 (quoting and adopting definitions in 2 Washb. Real Prop. p. 553, and Real Property Law [Laws 1896, p. 584, c. 547] § 30, and citing Reeves, Real Prop. 730, 731, Lawrence v. Bayard [N. Y.] 7 Paige, 70, and Grout v. Townsend [N. Y.] 2 Denio, 336).

Vested and contingent remainders are distinguishable, in that in the first there is some person in esse, known and ascertained, who, by the will or deed creating the estate, is to take and enjoy the estate on expiration of the particular estate, and whose right to such remainder no contingency can defeat; while a "contingent remainder" depends upon the happening of a contingent event, whether the estate limited as a remainder shall ever take effect at all. A will, after providing for testator's widow during her life, directed that his property be placed in the hands of trustees, and that on the death of the widow the residue of the estate should be disposed of according to several clauses, specifying persons and institutions to whom payment should be made, and the respective amounts thereof. Held, that such clauses created "contingent" and not "vested" remainders. Giddings v. Gillingham, 81 Atl. 951, 953, 108 Me. 512.

A remainder is "vested" where there is a present capacity to convey an absolute title to the remainder, and, where the remainder is limited to a person not ascertained by the terms of the instrument, the remainder is "contingent." Under a clause of a conveyance in trust providing that, ten years after the youngest of the children had reached majority, the trustee should make a final settlement with each of said children, paying over to each of them living, and to the heirs at law of such as may have died, their respective shares, whereupon the trust should cease, and the title to the real estate not disposed of should vest in fee simple in the children living and in the heirs of children who had died, the estate taken by the children living and the heirs of those deceased was a "contingent remainder," and the legal title was in the trustee until the time for the termination of the trust. Buxton v. Kroeger, 117 S. W. 1147, 1151, 219 Mo. 224.

A "contingent remainder" is limited by the instrument creating it either to a person not yet ascertained or not in being, or so as to depend on an event which may never happen. It is an estate which is not ready to come into possession at any moment when the prior estate may end, but, if the estate is at any time ready to come into possession provided the prior estate ends, then the estate is vested, so that whenever the person who is to succeed to the estate in remainder is in being and is ascertained, and the event which by express limitation will terminate the precedent estate is certain to happen, the remainder is vested; the uncertainty which distinguishes the contingent from the vested remainder being not the uncertainty whether the remainderman will live to enjoy the estate, but whether he will ever have the right to such enjoyment. Carter v. Carter, 85 N. E. 292, 294, 234 Ill. 507.

Where the preceding estate created by deed is limited, so as to determine on an event which must happen, and the remainder is so limited to a person in being, and ascertained, that the preceding estate may, by any means, determine before the expiration of the estate limited in remainder, the remainder is "vested"; but, where the preceding estate is limited, so as to determine only on an event which is uncertain and may never happen, or where the remainder is limited to a person not in being, or not ascertained, or when it is limited, so as to require the concurrence of some uncertain event, independent of the determination of the preceding estate and the duration of the estate limited in remainder, to give it a capacity of taking effect, the remainder is "contingent." Hall v. Wright, 120 Pac. 429, 431, 17 Cal. App. 502.

The second clause of a will provided: "I give, devise, and bequeath all the property of which I may die seised and possessed * * * to my beloved wife for her natural life, the remainder thereof to my sons hereinafter named in proportions, for the time and upon the conditions hereinafter expressed." The fourth clause provided that, upon the termination of the wife's life estate, "I give and devise unto my son M. all those certain lots. * * * If my son M. should precede in death his wife and leave him no lawful issue surviving, and should such death of my son M. occur before the property herein devised and bequeathed to him vests in him, then, all the interests herein devised and bequeathed to said M. shall pass to and vest in" his wife absolutely. Other provisions showed that testator clearly understood the legal significance of words of present devise unqualified by other language. Civ. Code, § 694, provides that a future interest is vested when there is a person in being who would have a right to immediate possession upon the ceasing of the precedent interest. Section 695 provided that a future interest is contingent while the person in whom or the event upon which it is limited to take effect remains uncertain; and section 1341 provides that devises and bequests are presumed to vest at testator's death. Held, that son M. took a "vested remainder" in the estate devised to him immediately upon testator's death. In re De Vries' Estate, 119 Pac. 109, 111, 17 Cal. App. 184.

The use of the word "vested" in a finding that a party was the owner of an estate in remainder in a lot that was vested in children of a life tenant by virtue of a certain deed which was to one for life, remainder to the heirs of her body, and "will upon the death of said E. M. (the life tenant) take the interest and estate in fee in said lot 4 that would, under said deed, * * * go to those of the above-named children of Mrs. E.

M. who shall survive her," was not a holding that the interest in remainder of such children was a "vested" one, so as to be inconsistent with the view that the remainder is "contingent," implied from the language of another finding; the context making it apparent that the words "vested in" are not used in the comparative sense as distinguishing a vested from a contingent estate, but rather as the equivalent of "acquired by." Los Angeles County v. Winans, 109 Pac. 650, 653, 13 Cal. App. 287.

The test whether a remainder is "vested" or "contingent," by inquiring whether the owner, being sui juris, could, by uniting with the owner of the particular estate, convey a fee-simple title, is inapplicable to a "vested remainder," which is subject to a divesting contingency, or which is given to a class some of whom are not in esse. Walker v. Alverston, 68 S. E. 966, 968, 87 S. C. 55, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 115.

The uncertainty of the right to the enjoyment of a remainder, as distinguished from the uncertainty of the enjoyment of the estate in the future, distinguishes a "vested" from a "contingent" remainder, so that the fact that the estate is to take effect after the termination of an intervening estate will not prevent both estates from vesting at the same moment. The present capacity of taking effect in possession, if the possession were to become vacant, and not the certainty that the possession will become vacant before the estate limited in remainder determines, universally distinguishes a "vested remainder" from a "contingent remainder." Where testator bequeathed to his wife for life the house in which he resided, and at her death to be divided between testator's heirs per stirpes, the heirs took a vested estate in the remainder at testator's death, and their interest was therefore descendible in case of the death of any of them during the continuance of the life estate. Weil v. King (Ky.) 104 S. W. 380, 382.

The distinction between vested and contingent remainders is clearly stated in the case of Faber v. Police, 10 S. C. (10 Rich.) 376, as follows: "According to the elementary writers, a 'vested remainder' is one which is limited to an ascertained person in being, whose right to the estate is fixed and certain, and does not depend on the happening of any future event, but whose enjoyment and possession is postponed to some future time. A 'contingent remainder,' on the other hand, is one which is limited to a person not in being or not ascertained, or, if limited to an ascertained person, it is so limited that his right to the estate depends upon some contingency in the future. So that the most marked distinction between the two kinds of remainders is that in one case the right to the estate is fixed and certain, though the right to the possession is deferred to some future period, but is dependent upon the happening of some future contingency. As it has been well expressed, 'it is not the uncertainty of the estate in the future, but the uncertainty of the right to such enjoyment, which marks the difference between a contingent and a vested remainder.'" A trust deed granted a fee to the trustee for the benefit of the grantor for life, and provided that after her death the trustee should convey the property to certain named children and grandchildren, or, if any of them died before conveyance, leaving children, such children should take the share of their parents. The parties named took a vested, and not a contingent, remainder. Woodley v. Calhoun, 48 S. E. 272, 273, 69 S. C. 285.

"The true criterion of a 'vested remainder' is the existence in an ascertained person of a present, fixed right of future enjoyment of the estate, limited in remainder, which right will take effect in possession immediately on the determination of the precedent estate, irrespective of any collateral event, provided the estate in remainder does not determine before the precedent estate." 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d Ed.) 389. Mr. Washburn, in his work on Real Property, says: "The broad distinction between vested and contingent remainders is this: In the first, there is some person in esse, known and ascertained, who, by the will or deed creating the estate, is to take and enjoy the estate upon the expiration of the existing particular estate, and whose right to such remainder no contingency can defeat. In the second, it depends upon the happening of a contingent event whether the estate limited as a remainder shall ever take effect at all. The event may either happen, or it may not happen until after the particular estate upon which it depended shall have determined, so that the estate in remainder will never take effect." A 'vested remainder' is one 'when there is an immediate right of present enjoyment, or a fixed right of future enjoyment.' 4 Kent, Comm. 194. "That a remainder cannot be vested unless there be some certain person or persons in being in whom it can be regarded as vested is a proposition as to which, upon principle, it would seem that there could be little doubt, and that such is the law is recognized by the most authoritative writers and by numerous decisions." 1 Tiffany's Modern Law of Real Prop. 120." Testator devised real estate to his wife for life, with remainder to J., adding that, on the latter dying before distribution of the property, his issue, if he left any, otherwise his heirs, should receive his share. Held, that J. took a "vested remainder," so that he and the life tenant could give a perfect title. Callison v. Morris, 98 N. W. 780, 781, 123 Iowa, 297.

An estate is "vested" when there is an immediate right of present enjoyment or a present fixed right of future enjoyment. It

Vested and contingent remainders are distinguishable, in that in the first there is some person in esse, known and ascertained, who, by the will or deed creating the estate, is to take and enjoy the estate on expiration of the particular estate, and whose right to such remainder no contingency can defeat; while a "contingent remainder" depends upon the happening of a contingent event, whether the estate limited as a remainder shall ever take effect at all. A will, after providing for testator's widow during her life, directed that his property be placed in the hands of trustees, and that on the death of the widow the residue of the estate should be disposed of according to several clauses, specifying persons and institutions to whom payment should be made, and the respective amounts thereof. Held, that such clauses created "contingent" and not "vested" remainders. Giddings v. Gillingham, 81 Atl. 951, 953, 108 Me. 512.

A remainder is "vested" where there is a present capacity to convey an absolute title to the remainder, and, where the remainder is limited to a person not ascertained by the terms of the instrument, the remainder is "contingent." Under a clause of a conveyance in trust providing that, ten years after the youngest of the children had reached majority, the trustee should make a final settlement with each of said children, paying over to each of them living, and to the heirs at law of such as may have died, their respective shares, whereupon the trust should cease, and the title to the real estate not disposed of should vest in fee simple in the children living and in the heirs of children who had died, the estate taken by the children living and the heirs of those deceased was a "contingent remainder," and the legal title was in the trustee until the time for the termination of the trust. Buxton v. Kroeger, 117 S. W. 1147, 1151, 219 Mo. 224.

A "contingent remainder" is limited by the instrument creating it either to a person not yet ascertained or not in being, or so as to depend on an event which may never happen. It is an estate which is not ready to come into possession at any moment when the prior estate may end, but, if the estate is at any time ready to come into possession provided the prior estate ends, then the estate is vested, so that whenever the person who is to succeed to the estate in remainder is in being and is ascertained, and the event which by express limitation will terminate the precedent estate is certain to happen, the remainder is vested; the uncertainty which distinguishes the contingent from the vested remainder being not the uncertainty whether the remainderman will live to enjoy the estate, but whether he will ever have the right to such enjoyment. Carter v. Carter, 85 N. E. 292, 294, 284 Ill. 507.

Where the preceding estate created by deed is limited, so as to determine on an event which must happen, and the remainder is so limited to a person in being, and ascertained, that the preceding estate may, by any means, determine before the expiration of the estate limited in remainder, the remainder is "vested"; but, where the preceding estate is limited, so as to determine only on an event which is uncertain and may never happen, or where the remainder is limited to a person not in being, or not ascertained, or when it is limited, so as to require the concurrence of some uncertain event, independent of the determination of the preceding estate and the duration of the estate limited in remainder, to give it a capacity of taking effect, the remainder is "contingent." Hall v. Wright, 120 Pac. 429, 431, 17 Cal. App. 502.

The second clause of a will provided: "I give, devise, and bequeath all the property of which I may die seised and possessed * * * to my beloved wife for her natural life, the remainder thereof to my sons hereinafter named in proportions, for the time and upon the conditions hereinafter expressed." The fourth clause provided that, upon the termination of the wife's life estate, "I give and devise unto my son M. all those certain lots. * * * If my son M. should precede in death his wife and leave him no lawful issue surviving, and should such death of my son M. occur before the property herein devised and bequeathed to him vests in him, then, all the interests herein devised and bequeathed to said M. shall pass to and vest in" his wife absolutely. Other provisions showed that testator clearly understood the legal significance of words of present devise unqualified by other language. Civ. Code, § 694, provides that a future interest is vested when there is a person in being who would have a right to immediate possession upon the ceasing of the precedent interest. Section 695 provided that a future interest is contingent while the person in whom or the event upon which it is limited to take effect remains uncertain; and section 1341 provides that devises and bequests are presumed to vest at testator's death. Held, that son M. took a "vested remainder" in the estate devised to him immediately upon testator's death. In re De Vries' Estate, 119 Pac. 109, 111, 17 Cal. App. 184.

The use of the word "vested" in a finding that a party was the owner of an estate in remainder in a lot that was vested in children of a life tenant by virtue of a certain deed which was to one for life, remainder to the heirs of her body, and "will upon the death of said E. M. (the life tenant) take the interest and estate in fee in said lot 4 that would, under said deed, * * * go to those of the above-named children of Mrs. E.

M. who shall survive her," was not a holding that the interest in remainder of such children was a "vested" one, so as to be inconsistent with the view that the remainder is "contingent," implied from the language of another finding; the context making it apparent that the words "vested in" are not used in the comparative sense as distinguishing a vested from a contingent estate, but rather as the equivalent of "acquired by." Los Angeles County v. Winans, 109 Pac. 650, 653, 13 Cal. App. 257.

The test whether a remainder is "vested" or "contingent," by inquiring whether the owner, being sui juris, could, by uniting with the owner of the particular estate, convey a fee-simple title, is inapplicable to a "vested remainder," which is subject to a divesting contingency, or which is given to a class some of whom are not in esse. Walker v. Alverton, 68 S. E. 966, 968, 87 S. C. 55, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 115.

The uncertainty of the right to the enjoyment of a remainder, as distinguished from the uncertainty of the enjoyment of the estate in the future, distinguishes a "vested" from a "contingent" remainder, so that the fact that the estate is to take effect after the termination of an intervening estate will not prevent both estates from vesting at the same moment. The present capacity of taking effect in possession, if the possession were to become vacant, and not the certainty that the possession will become vacant before the estate limited in remainder determines, universally distinguishes a "vested remainder" from a "contingent remainder." Where testator bequeathed to his wife for life the house in which he resided, and at her death to be divided between testator's heirs per stirpes, the heirs took a vested estate in the remainder at testator's death, and their interest was therefore descendible in case of the death of any of them during the continuance of the life estate. Well v. King (Ky.) 104 S. W. 380, 382.

The distinction between vested and contingent remainders is clearly stated in the case of Faber v. Police, 10 S. C. (10 Rich.) 376, as follows: "According to the elementary writers, a 'vested remainder' is one which is limited to an ascertained person in being, whose right to the estate is fixed and certain, and does not depend on the happening of any future event, but whose enjoyment and possession is postponed to some future time. A 'contingent remainder,' on the other hand, is one which is limited to a person not in being or not ascertained, or, if limited to an ascertained person, it is so limited that his right to the estate depends upon some contingency in the future. So that the most marked distinction between the two kinds of remainders is that in one case the right to the estate is fixed and certain, though the right to the possession is deferred to some

"The true criterion of a 'vested remainder' is the existence in an ascertained person of a present, fixed right of future enjoyment of the estate, limited in remainder, which right will take effect in possession immediately on the determination of the precedent estate, irrespective of any collateral event, provided the estate in remainder does not determine before the precedent estate." 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d Ed.) 389. Mr. Washburn, in his work on Real Property, says: "The broad distinction between vested and contingent remainders is this: In the first, there is some person in esse, known and ascertained, who, by the will or deed creating the estate, is to take and enjoy the estate upon the expiration of the existing particular estate, and whose right to such remainder no contingency can defeat. In the second, it depends upon the happening of a contingent event whether the estate limited as a remainder shall ever take effect at all. The event may either happen, or it may not happen until after the particular estate upon which it depended shall have determined, so that the estate in remainder will never take effect." A 'vested remainder' is one 'when there is an immediate right of present enjoyment, or a fixed right of future enjoyment.' 4 Kent, Comm. 194. "That a remainder cannot be vested unless there be some certain person or persons in being in whom it can be regarded as vested is a proposition as to which, upon principle, it would seem that there could be little doubt, and that such is the law is recognized by the most authoritative writers and by numerous decisions." 1 Tiffany's Modern Law of Real Prop. 120." Testator devised real estate to his wife for life, with remainder to J., adding that, on the latter dying before distribution of the property, his issue, if he left any, otherwise his heirs, should receive his share. Held, that J. took a "vested remainder," so that he and the life tenant could give a perfect title. Callison v. Morris, 98 N. W. 780, 781, 123 Iowa, 297.

An estate is "vested" when there is an immediate right of present enjoyment or a present fixed right of future enjoyment. It is not the uncertainty of ever taking effect in possession that makes a remainder "contingent," for to this extent every remainder is and must be liable. The present capacity of taking effect in possession, if the possession were to become vacant before the estate limited in remainder determines, distinguishes a vested from a contingent remainder. Where a testator devised land to his wife during her lifetime, and upon her death to his children in equal shares, but with a provision that if any of the children should die before the wife, leaving no children, the share devised to them was thereby devised to the survivors of the children the children took vested and not contingent remainders, which might be defeated by their death before the death of the wife, or what is generally called a "defeasible fee." Roach v. Dance (Ky.) 80 S. W. 1097, 1098 (citing Kent's Comm. § 202; 2 Minor's Institutes, p. 388).

"A 'vested remainder' is an estate to take effect after another estate for years, for life, or in tail, which is so limited that, if that particular estate were to expire or end in any way at the present time, some certain person who is in esse and answered the description of the remainderman during the continuance of the particular estate would thereupon become entitled to the immediate possession, irrespective of the concurrence of any collateral contingency." A testator devised real estate to his daughter for life, remainder to her children, if any, surviving her, otherwise to testator's brothers and sisters, and, in case any one or more or all of them should be dead at the time of his death, the share of such deceased brother or sister should go to and be equally divided among his or her children, share and share alike. At the time of the suit for the partition, testator's daughter, though married, was 50 years of age, and had never had any children. It was held that the remainder to testator's brothers and sisters was not a vested remainder, but a contingent one, and hence no partition could be had during the daughter's life. Ruddell v. Wren, 70 N. E. 751, 753, 208 Ill. 508.

A testator, who died in March, 1901, by his will bequeathed his residuary estate in trust, the income to be paid to his wife during her life, with remainder to his children living at the time of her death, and the lawful issue of any deceased child or children; such issue taking the share only their parent would have taken if living. Held, that the remainder so created was not "vested," not being limited to "persons in esse and ascertained," but was "contingent," being limited to persons who could not be ascertained until the death of the wife, and that such bequests were not subject to the legacy tax imposed by War Revenue Act June 13, 1898, c. 448, § 29, 30 Stat. 464; the wife being still living at the time of the taking effect of the amendment by Act June 27, 1902, c. 1160, § 3, 32 Stat. 406, exempting from the tax "any contingent beneficial interest not absolutely vested in possession or enjoyment" prior to July 1, 1902. Land Title & Trust Co. v. McCoach, 129 Fed. 901, 904, 64 O. C. A. 383.

"A 'vested remainder' is an estate to take effect after another estate for years, for life, or in tail, which is so limited that, if that particular estate were to expire or end in any way at the present time, some certain person who was in esse and answered the description of the remainderman during the continuance of the particular estate would thereupon become entitled to the immediate possession, irrespective of the concurrence of any collateral contingency." A remainder limited upon an estate tail is held to be vested, though it must be uncertain whether it will ever take place. Where a testator limits the interest of one son in the latter proportionate part of the realty to an estate for life, remainder to any surviving child of the life tenant, and in default thereof to such tenant's brothers and sisters, and all of them are living at testator's death, but the life tenant is childless, the brothers and sisters take a "vested," and not a "contingent," remainder, notwithstanding the liability to a defeat of their interests by subsequent issue born to the life tenant. Boatman v. Boatman (Ill.) 65 N. E. 81, 83 (quoting and adopting 4 Kent, Comm. [13th Ed.] 228).

Not only at common law, but under the laws of Tennessee and Texas, under a will giving property to F., the wife of G., for her use as long as she remained the wife of G., and the children she might have by G., said property to go to the children of G. on the death of F. or her ceasing to be his wife, there was a "contingent remainder" as regards the children of F. by G. till a child was born to them, whereupon it immediately became a "vested remainder" in that child and all other children that might afterwards be born to them; said remainder opening and letting in each successive child as it was born, and the interest of any child dying before F. descending to the child's heirs. Greenlaw v. Dillon (Tex.) 108 S. W. 705, 708.

CONTINGENTLY

The word "contingently," in Code Civ. Proc. § 2662, providing that a person entitled absolutely or contingently to administration may present a petition praying for letters to himself or to such other persons having a prior right, when considered in connection with sections 2660, 2661, prescribing the persons entitled to letters of administration, and fixing their priorities, etc., means a person to whom at the time the petition is filed letters would issue, if persons entitled thereto in priority did not take, and a nonresident alien is not entitled to file a petition and secure the appointment of his resident attorney; he not being contingently entitled to letters himself.

In re Ferrigan's Estate, 87 N. Y. Supp. 16, 17, 92 App. Div. 376.

CONTINUANCE

Of action

Under Revisal 1905, § 2773, prescribing among the fees to be charged by clerks of the superior court for official services rendered in the course of pending actions, "Continuance, 30 cents," the continuance must be such as is made by the judge on motion, and as must be recorded in the minutes by the clerk, and not such continuance of the trial of an action as is brought about by the inability to reach the cause for trial owing to a crowded docket and lack of time. Luther v. Southern R. Co., 69 S. E. 762, 763, 154 N. C. 103.

Of injury

An instruction that, "if the jury find for the plaintiff in determining the damages, they may consider the bodily suffering and mental anguish endured by plaintiff since said injury in consequence thereof, the character and extent of said injury, and its 'continuance,' together with loss of time, if any," does not authorize damages for permanent injury. Moore v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 116 S. W. 440, 441, 136 Mo. App. 210.

Of partnership

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 5, subd. "a," 30 Stat. 543, authorizes adjudication of a partnership during the continuance of the partnership business, or after its dissolution and before final settlement. Held, that the "continuance of a partnership" within such section meant its actual status as a firm, as distinguished from a status created by estoppel against a partner, and that it was therefore essential that the partnership should exist as such, or that its affairs should be still unsettled at the time of the filing of a petition, in order to subject it to adjudication. In re Pinson & Co., 180 Fed. 787, 789.

CONTINUANCE IN OFFICE

Const. art. 6, § 25, declaring that the compensation of judges of the superior and circuit courts in Cook county shall not be changed during their "continuance in office," refers to the term of office, and not to the individual, so that Laws 1901, p. 207, providing that judges of the circuit and superior courts of Cook county hereafter to be elected shall receive $10,000 per year, instead of $7,000, does not entitle a judge, elected after the passage of the act to complete the unexpired term of a judge elected before the passage of the act, to receive a salary of $10,000. Foreman v. People ex rel. McEwen, 71 N. E. 35, 37, 209 Ill. 567.

CONTINUANDO

"Continuando" is an averment of the continuance of a nuisance until the finding of the indictment, and to authorize the abatement of a nuisance upon judgment, in case of a conviction therefor, it was essential that the information contain a "continuando," though it is otherwise where punishment only is sought. State v. Murray, 140 S. W. 899-902, 237 Mo. 158.

CONTINUATION

A suit in equity, dependent upon a former suit of which the federal court had jurisdiction, may be maintained in that court, without diversity of citizenship or a federal question, (1) to aid, enjoin, or regulate the original suit; (2) to restrain, avoid, explain, or enforce the judgment or decree therein; or (3) to enforce or adjudicate liens upon or claims to property in the custody of the court in the original suit. Such suit is but the "continuation of the original suit," to the end that more complete justice may be accomplished thereby. Campbell v. Golden Cycle Min. Co., 141 Fed. 610, 612, 78 C. C. A. 260.

A proceeding under Rev. St. 1895, c. 17, tit. 30, art. 1375, authorizing a new trial for good cause shown, upon defendant's application, where judgment was rendered against him on service by publication without appearance, is not an "original suit," but a "continuation of the former suit." Hence the order vacating the original judgment is an interlocutory order, from which no appeal lies. Wolf v. Sahm, 120 S. W. 1114, 1117, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 564.

CONTINUE

See May Continue in Session.

See, also, Continuance.

An order of a city council that the sewer on B. street be "continued" to W. street is sufficiently definite as to the termini of the sewer; one end being the point where the sewer then existing on B. street ended and the other being W. street. Googin v. City of Lewiston, 68 Atl. 694, 697, 103 Me. 119.

As to actions or proceedings

Webster defines the word "continue" to mean to keep up or maintain a particular condition, course, or series of actions; to unite; to connect; to protract or extend in duration; to carry onward; to extend; to prolong; to draw out at length. The word "continue," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 26, providing that a special proceeding may be continued from time to time, before one or more judges of the court, means to keep up, extend in duration, or prolong. Bridges v. Koppelman, 117 N. Y. Supp. 306, 312, 63 Misc. Rep. 27.

The term "continued," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 26, means the taking of the next step in the proceeding toward an ultimate determination thereof, and did not authorize a judge who had not granted an order for the examination of the debtor in supplementary proceedings in the First department to alter the order before service, so as to require the debtor's appearance at a date later than that designated in the order. Ward v. Stoddard, 128 N. Y. Supp. 846, 849, 144 App. Div. 143.

As to residence

Code Civ. Proc. § 1763, subd. 3, provides that an action for separation may be brought where the parties, having been married without the state, have become residents of the state and have continued to be residents thereof at least one year, and plaintiff is such a resident when the action is commenced. Held, that the words "and have continued to be residents thereof at least one year" contemplate a residence continuing to the time of the separation, the word "continue" meaning "to protract or extend in duration; to persevere or persist in; to cease not." And where a husband and wife, married in a foreign country, became residents of New York, living there for many years, and then went to another state, where a cause of action for separation arose in the wife's favor, and she, upon her husband's excluding her from their home, returned to New York, acquiring an independent and separate domicile there, she could not sue her husband for a separation in New York, though she obtained personal service of process upon him there. Elwell v. Elwell, 128 N. Y. Supp. 495, 498, 70 Misc. Rep. 61.

CONTINUE IN SERVICE

Where a supernumerary surgeon's mate of the Virginia line accepted an appointment as surgeon's mate of the regiment of guards January 9, 1790, as authorized by resolution of the Continental Congress of that date, and such regiment was discharged before the end of the war because its term of enlistment had expired, he did not "continue in service until the end of the war," within the meaning of Resolutions Cong. Oct. 21, 1780, and March 22, 1783. Williams v. United States, 14 Sup. Ct. 1188, 1189, 154 U. S. 648, 25 L. Ed. 309.

CONTINUE TO CARRY ON BUSINESS

Where, on the dissolution of a law and collection firm, defendant formed a new partnership, circulars sent out to the customers of the old firm, stating that the new firm would "continue to carry on the business" of the old firm, did not amount to a statement that defendants were the successors of the old firm. Holbrook v. Nesbitt, 39 N. E. 794, 795, 163 Mass. 120.

It is not the design of the statute requiring sales to be followed by an actual and continued change of possession "to give such extension of meaning to this phrase, 'continued change of possession,' as to require, upon penalty of a forfeiture of the goods, that the vendor should never have any control over or use of them. * * * The 'continued change of possession,' then, does not mean a continuance for all time of this possession, or a perpetual exclusion of all use or control of the property by the original vendor. A reasonable construction must be given to this language, in analogy to the doctrines of the court holding the general principles transcribed into the statute. The delivery must be made of the property. The vendee must take the actual possession. That possession must be open and unequivocal, carrying with it the usual marks and indications of ownership by the vendee. It must be such as to give evidence to the world of the claims of the new owner. He must, in other words, be in the usual relation to the property which owners of goods occupy to their property. This possession must be continuous; not taken to be surrendered back; not formal, but substantial. But it need not necessarily continue indefinitely, when it is bona fide and openly taken, and is kept for such a length of time to give general advertisement of the status of the property and the claim to it by the vendee." Reynolds v. Beck, 83 S. W. 292, 295, 108 Mo. App. 188 (quoting and adopting definition in Stevens v. Irwin, 15 Cal. 503, 76 Am. Dec. 500; citing Gould v. Huntley, 15 Pac. 25, 73 Cal. 401; Carpenter v. Clark, 2 Nev. 243).

See, also, Desertion.

A "continued desertion" for the space of three years, within the divorce law, is a desertion for three years consecutively. Distinct and separate intervals cannot be combined together to make out the period. Gaillard v. Gaillard, 23 Miss. 152, 153.

"The declaration that the process, etc., shall be 'continued of course' means simply continued without any special order, and was obviously designed to prevent that failure of right which in many cases might otherwise result from the absence of a judge." McDowell v. United States, 16 Sup. Ct. 111, 112, 159 U. S. 596, 600, 40 L. Ed. 271.

A motion of the city council that the matter of a reassessment be "continued on the table" until the next regular meeting, while expressed in inappropriate language, should be construed in accordance with the intention of the council to effect a continuance of the business, and should not be construed as operating to lay the matter on the table, and deprive the council of jurisdiction thereof. Dunlway v. Portland, 81 Pac. 945, 950, 47 Or. 103.

CONTINUED POSSESSION

The words "continued possession," as used in Laws 1850-51, p. 403, providing for the organization of gravel road companies, were not intended to confer on such companies perpetual corporate rights and franchises, but conferred corporate rights and the capacity of succession on the incorporators only for the period limited in the charter or fixed by the general statutes then in force at a term of 20 years. State v. Louisiana, B. G. & A. Gravel Road Co., 92 S. W. 153, 163, 116 Mo. App. 175.

CONTINUED SUCCESSION

The term "continued succession" means only a capacity of succession for a period limited in the charter of the corporation or a period fixed by general statutes. State ex rel. Jump v. Louisiana, B. G. & A. Gravel Road Co., 86 S. W. 170, 174, 187 Mo. 439.

"Continued succession," as employed in Laws 1850-51, p. 403, and Laws 1870-71, p. 227, providing for the incorporation of gravel road companies, did not confer on such companies perpetual succession, but only the right of "continued succession" for the charter or statutory period. State ex rel. Jump v. Louisiana, B. G. & A. Gravel Road Co. (Mo.) 92 S. W. 152, 163, 164.

CONTINUING BODY

The board of fire commissioners of the city of Elmira, being composed of the mayor of the city and two others, and on the expiration of the term of office the mayor, under Laws 1894, p. 1457, c. 615, appointing the successors, and the terms of office expiring at different times, it is a "continuing body"; and a writ of mandamus, running against the board, to reinstate relator, is effective to accomplish that result, whether the board is composed of the same persons who passed the resolution resulting in his dismissal or not. People ex rel. Lazarus v. Coleman, 91 N. Y. Supp. 432, 433, 99 App. Div. 88.

CONTINUING CONTEMPT

A failure or refusal to comply with an order of court requiring the payment of alimony and attorney's fees is a "continuing contempt," and the court may enter a judgment that the party so refusing be imprisoned until he shall comply. In such case the time of imprisonment is not within the limitation of the statute relative to a single act of contempt, that the duration of imprisonment must not exceed 20 days. Gray v. Gray, 56 S. E. 438, 127 Ga. 345 (citing Tindall v. Nisbet, 39 S. E. 450, 113 Ga. 1114 (4), 1135, 55 L. R. A. 225).

CONTINUING CONTRACT

The term "continuing contract" in a finding by the trial court in proceedings in bankruptcy, that a contract between a wife and her husband for the return of money brought by her into the community at the time of the marriage was a continuing contract, was not objectionable for indefiniteness. In re Myer, 89 Pac. 246, 247, 14 N. M. 45.

CONTINUING COVENANT

Where, prior to the organization of a water company to furnish water to a town, its promoters made a contract to furnish the town with water for a specified period at specified rates, all of the covenants in a contract which were of a continuing nature ran with the waterworks, and were binding on a new corporation subsequently formed, to which the works were transferred, though some of them did not expressly purport to bind the original corporation's assigns. Mayor, etc., of Town of Boonton v. Boonton Water Co., 61 Atl. 390, 69 N. J. Eq. 23.

A covenant to build within a given time is not a "continuing covenant." A covenant to pay rent by installments, to keep the premises in repair, to keep them insured, to pay the taxes, to properly cultivate the land, and many others that indicate or necessarily imply the doing of the stipulated acts successively, or as often as occasion may require, are continuing covenants; but the covenant to repair or insure on or before a time certain, or forthwith to pay a gross sum as rent for the term, or not to assign the lease, and others of a like character, are not continuing covenants. McGlynn v. Moore, 25 Cal. 384, 395.

When a thing is spoken of as "continuing from year to year," the primary meaning is not that it continues forever; and so a lease providing for a monthly rental for a term terminating in 1901, with the privilege of renewal at the same rate and terms each year thereafter from year to year, does not give the lessee right to a perpetual renewal. Tischner v. Rutledge, 77 Pac. 388, 389, 35 Wash. 285.

A covenant of seisin, implied from the use of the statutory words "grant, bargain and sell," in a deed, as provided by Rev. St. 1899, § 907, is a "continuing covenant of indemnity" running with the land, so that an action for breach thereof only accrues from the dates of eviction because of a paramount title. Leet v. Gratz, 101 S. W. 696, 699, 124 Mo. App. 394.

A "continuing crime" is a continuous unlawful act or series of acts set on foot by a single impulse and operated by an uninterrupted force, however long it may occupy. Armour Packing Co. v. United States, 153 Fed. 1, 5, 82 C. C. A. 135, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 400 (citing Whart. Cr. Pl. & Prac. [9th Ed.] §§ 473, 474; People v. Sullivan, 33 Pac. 701, 702, 704, 9 Utah, 185).

A railroad company, delivering a freight car containing fireworks, and having knowledge of its contents, and its liability to explode from concussion, negligently placed the car at a place in its yards where it would be subjected to impact from other cars. As a result of concussion a fire broke out in the car after an explosion of part of its contents, and, a fire alarm being turned in, plaintiff's intestate, the chief engineer of the fire department, approached the burning car to extinguish the fire, and received a serious injury from a further explosion. Held, that the danger was not a "continuing one" within the rule that an owner of premises is not liable to one coming thereon without invitation for injury resulting from the usual condition of the premises, and the fact that there was a succession of explosions while the fire was burning did not create a condition of continuous danger, so as to bring intestate within such rule. Houston Belt & Terminal Ry. Co. v. O'Leary (Tex.) 186 S. W. 601, 603.

CONTINUING GUARANTY

A "continuing guaranty" is one that is not limited in time or to a particular transaction or to specific transactions, but is operative until revoked. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Cole, 98 N. E. 465, 466, 83 Ohio St. 50, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 773.

A "continuing guaranty" is defined to be a guaranty relating to a future liability of the principal, under successive transactions, which either continue his liability or from time to time renew it after it has been satisfied. White Sewing Mach. Co. v. Courtney, 75 Pac. 296, 297, 141 Cal. 674.

An instrument reciting that the assignor agreed to pay a company "for any amount of flour delivered to B. * * * to any amount to $500" was a "continuing guaranty," and did not contemplate merely a single transaction. Grob & Co. v. Gross, 84 Atl. 1064, 1065, 83 N. J. Law, 430.

Plaintiff wrote defendant, stating that a third person wished to buy some goods from plaintiff, and asking defendant to guaranty payment for "any goods he might purchase." Defendant refused, and plaintiff in reply stated that the intending purchaser had told it that defendant would guaranty payment, and to hold the goods until it received the guaranty. Later defendant wrote, stating that he had decided to help the purchaser, and would guaranty the payment of goods he might buy, not exceeding $300. Held not a "continuing guaranty." Callender, McAuslan & Troup Co. v. Flint, 72 N. E. 845, 187 Mass. 104.

An agreement by a bank to honor checks of a firm drawn on it and accompanying drafts on an individual so long as another bank will protect the drafts, entered into to extend credit to the firm, is a "continuing guaranty," unlimited as to time or amount, so long as the latter bank acts on it, and it is binding on the former bank when acted on by the latter, and the former may terminate the guaranty at any time before it has been acted on. First Nat. Bank of Ft. Wayne, Ind., v. Union Stockyards Bank of Buffalo, 123 N. Y. Supp. 655, 656, 138 App. Div. 918.

The following guaranty: "We, the undersigned, do guarantee you to trust Bodner, Berkman & Co., three hundred (300) dollars worth of material to be credited to them at the rate of ten or fifteen days terms for a term of five months from date" — is a "continuing guaranty," and extends to all moneys due for materials purchased within five months; the amount of the credit only being limited to $300. Paskusz v. Bodner, 67 Atl. 1040, 75 N. J. Law, 447 (citing Rindge v. Judson, 24 N. Y. 64; Columbia Electrical Supply Co. v. Kemmet, 50 Atl. 663, 67 N. J. Law, 18; Hatch v. Hobbs, 12 Gray [78 Mass.] 447; Gates v. McKee, 13 N. Y. 232, 64 Am. Dec. 545; Taussig v. Reid, 32 N. E. 918, 145 Ill. 488, 36 Am. St. Rep. 504; Clark v. Burdett, 2 N. Y. Super. CONTINUING INJUNCTION

An order denying a motion to dissolve a preliminary injunction is not one "continuing" the injunction, within the meaning of Act March 3, 1891, c. 517, § 7, 26 Stat. 828, and is not appealable thereunder. Pioneer Lace Mfg. Co. v. Dodd, 181 Fed. 688, 690, 104 C. C. A. 566.

CONTINUING INJURY

Permanent injury distinguished, see Permanent Injury.

CONTINUING NUISANCE

A band stand in the street is a "continuing nuisance," where, so long as it remains and is used for the purpose of its construction, it will interfere with merchants in their business, and hence injunction will lie against it after its completion. Atterbury v. West, 122 S. W. 1106, 139 Mo. App. 180.

By "continuing nuisance" or "constantly recurring grievance" or "permanent injury" is meant a nuisance which occurs so often, and is so necessarily an incident of the use of property complained of, that it can be fairly said to be continuous, although not constant or unceasing. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Americus Const. Co., 65 S. E. 855, 858, 133 Ga. 392.

If leaving timber and brush on plaintiff's land, which had been cut, constituted a nuisance, because of the danger of forest fires, it was not a "continuing nuisance," the continuance of which could be restrained by injunction. Litchfield v. Bond, 93 N. Y. Supp. 1016, 1021, 105 App. Div. 229.

Every continuance of a "continuing nuisance," as distinguished from a permanent nuisance, is a new nuisance, for which a new action lies, though an action for the original nuisance is barred by limitations, and an action lies for every continuance for the damages accruing within the period of limitations. A nuisance which may be abated by law is a continuing nuisance, for which successive actions for damages occasioned by it may be maintained from time to time as they are inflicted. Uvalde Electric Light Co. v. Parsons (Tex.) 138 S. W. 163, 164.

CONTINUING OFFENSE

A continuing crime is a continuous unlawful act or series of acts set on foot by a single impulse and operated by an uninterrupted force, however long it may occupy. Armour Packing Co. v. United States, 153 Fed. 1, 5, 82 C. C. A. 135, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 400 (citing Whart. Cr. Pl. & Prac. [9th Ed.] §§ 473, 474; People v. Sullivan, 33 Pac. 701, 702, 704, 9 Utah, 195).

Under Ky. St. 1903, § 4224, requiring an annual license tax for selling oil by retail of $5 for each wagon used therefor, and section 4201, providing that any person, engaging in business from which a license is required before procuring the license and paying the tax, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, the offense of operating a wagon without a license is a "continuing offense," and a conviction for retaining oil from a wagon is a bar to another prosecution for retailing from the same wagon during the same license year. Commonwealth v. Standard Oil Co. (Ky.) 87 S. W. 1090, 1091.

CONTINUING THE BUSINESS

"Continuing the business" as used in bankruptcy with reference to a continuation of the business of the bankrupt by his trustee, means something different from closing out the business, necessitating supervision by the trustee, replenishment of stock, the exercise of intelligent business judgment in continuing a going concern. In re George W. Shiebler & Co., 174 Fed. 336, 337, 98 C. C. A. 208.

CONTINUING TRESPASS

"Continuing trespass," within the statute of limitations, refers to trespass by structures of a permanent nature, and not to separate and distinct acts of wrongfully cutting timber. Sample v. John L. Roper Lumber Co., 63 S. E. 731, 732, 150 N. C. 161, 134 Am. St. Rep. 902.

CONTINUITY OF POSSESSION

"Continuity of possession" is one of the essential requisites to constitute such adverse possession as will be of efficacy under the statute of limitations. Whenever a party quits the possession, the seisin of the true owner is restored, and a subsequent wrongful entry by another constitutes a new disseisin; and it is equally well settled that, if the continuity of possession is broken before the expiration of the period of time prescribed by the statute of limitations, an entry within that time destroys the efficacy of all prior possession, so that to gain a title under the statute a new adverse possession for the time limited must be taken for that purpose.

Merryman v. Hoover, 59 S. E. 483, 488, 107 Va. 485.

CONTINUOUS

The word "uninterrupted," as used in an instruction making uninterrupted adverse enjoyment an element of prescription, means unbroken, and is synonymous with the word "continuous." Evans v. Scott, 83 S. W. 874, 876, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 373.

"Continuous," according to the Standard Dictionary, means 'connected, extended, or prolonged without separation or interruption of sequence; unbroken; uninterrupted.' It is also defined as 'having but one direction.' Hence the word "continuous," as used in section 104 of the Railroad Law, requiring every surface street railroad corporation entering into a contract for the use of another road to give each passenger paying a single fare a transfer entitling him without extra charge to one "continuous" trip to any point or portion of such other railroad, etc., must be construed to mean direct, whenever it can be so applied. Charbonneau v. Nassau Electric R. Co., 108 N. Y. Supp. 105, 107, 123 App. Div. 531.

Within the rule that, to constitute adverse possession, it is necessary that the possession be "continuous"; "continuous" means without interruption. Bradbury Marble Co. v. Laclede Gaslight Co., 106 S. W. 594, 599, 128 Mo. App. 96.

In determining whether title to an easement claimed over land for a railway switching right of way is acquired by prescription, a user is not "continuous" merely because the easement is used at the pleasure of the person claiming it without interruption; and hence, where there were periods of considerable time during which the mill in connection with which the easement was claimed was idle, the user was not "continuous." Dummer v. United States Gypsum Co., 117 N. W. 317, 322, 153 Mich. 622.

In order to claim minerals under the statute of limitations, after a severance from the surface ownership, the surface owner must show actual, notorious, exclusive, "continuous," peaceable, and hostile possession of the mine, independently of his possession of the surface, in the same manner as a stranger; actual possession being shown by opening and operating the mine, and the possession is continuous if the operation is carried on at such seasons as the nature of the work permits or the custom of the neighborhood requires, if there is some evidence of possession in the interval to connect the operations, when resumed, with the prior operations. Gordon v. Park, 117 S. W. 1163, 1167, 219 Mo. 600.

CONTINUOUS ACCOUNT

Where items of service rendered, as disclosed in a cross-petition antedated April 28, 1895, and of the 10 items 7 were for services rendered prior to 1895, and the dates of two were not given, and the other was for services in an action rendered between December 21, 1892, and February 28, 1896, and cross-petitioner alleged his inability to more specifically state the exact date at which the service was rendered, his claims could not be regarded as a "continuous account" as a matter of law, so as to suspend limitations until the date of the last item. Novak v. Novak, 115 N. W. 1, 2, 137 Iowa, 519.

CONTINUOUS ADVERSE USE

An adverse use of an irrigation ditch during the cropping season only constitutes a "continuous adverse user," as its nonuser when the water is not needed does not interfere with the continuity of use. Silva v. Hawn, 102 Pac. 952, 953, 10 Cal. App. 544.

CONTINUOUS DEALING

Memoranda on sheets of wall calendars, made at the times of transactions evidenced thereby, and memoranda on the blank pages of a patent medicine book, made on the dates of the transactions evidenced thereby, all relating to payments on a note, do not show a "continuous dealing" with persons generally, or several items of charge at different times, in the same book or set of books, within Code, § 4623, and they are not admissible as independent evidence, but may be properly resorted to by the party making them as a means of refreshing his recollection when testifying as a witness, and, where they have been properly identified by him as memoranda made at the time of the transactions evidenced thereby, they are admissible in evidence. Porter v. Madrid State Bank (Iowa) 136 N. W. 666, 669.

CONTINUOUS EASEMENT

See Noncontinuous Easement.

In a practical sense a road is "continuous" as long as it is maintained and used, although the use is unautomatic, and from necessity intermittent; but it is not continuous within the meaning of the technical law of easements. A "continuous easement" is one which operates without the interference of man, such as a water course or a drainpipe. A way is said not to be continuous, because, in the use of it, there is involved the personal action of the owner in setting his foot upon it, or driving his team or cattle upon it. Hoffman v. Shoemaker (W. Va.) 71 S. E. 198, 200, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 632 (citing Jones, Easements, §§ 143-153).

The distinction between easements "continuous and discontinuous" is found in the Civil Code of France, where easements or servitudes are divided into continuous and discontinuous, and are defined: "Continuous are those of which the enjoyment is or may be continued, without the necessity of any actual interference by man, as a waterspout or a right of light or air." "Discontinuous are those enjoyment of which can be had only by the interference of man, as rights of way, or a right to draw water." Fayter v. North, 83 Pac. 742, 746, 30 Utah, 156, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 410 (quoting and adopting definition in Washburn, Easements and Servitudes [4th Ed.] 21).

"A drain is classed as a 'continuous easement' because it may be used continuously without the interference of man." Dee v. King, 59 Atl. 839, 840, 77 Vt. 230, 68 L. R. A. 860.

As easement

See Easement.

CONTINUOUS FORCE

The phrase "in continuous force," as used in a provision making a policy of insurance incontestable if it shall have been in continuous force for three years from its date, contemplates that a policy may have been in continuous force, even though the insurance company then had good grounds for avoiding it for nonperformance of a condition precedent. The words are used to distinguish between policies which mature by death or otherwise terminate within the three years and policies which do not so mature or terminate. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n v. Austin, 142 Fed. 398, 400, 73 C. C. A. 498, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1064.

A policy of insurance containing a clause entitling the insured to a cash benefit of $120 on legal surrender of the policy after it had been in "continuous force without delinquency" for 10 years from date. The policy required payments of $1 within 10 days after the 1st day of each month, and provided that, if such payment was not made when due, the policy should be void. Insured made all payments promptly, except one, which was made after the time limited, but was received by the company without objection. Held, that the policy had been in "continuous force without delinquency," within the meaning of the clause. Davis v. National Casualty Co., 131 N. W. 1013, 1014, 115 Minn. 125.

CONTINUOUS GUARANTY

A written statement that the maker's sons needed some help through the summer, and "I ask you to show them all the favors you can, and I will see that you get pay for everything you sell them," is a "continuous guaranty," and bound the maker for all the goods sold within a reasonable time on the faith of the guaranty. A. B. Small Co. v. Claxton, 57 S. E. 977, 979, 1 Ga. App. 83; Consolidated Portrait & Frame Co. v. Same, 57 S. E. 980, 1 Ga. App. 809.

CONTINUOUS LINE

under lease or contract, it shall be run as a "continuous line." This means as a line with branches originally all of one company; that is, a line as specified and included in section 101, providing that no street surface railroad should charge any passenger more than five cents for one continuous ride from any point on its road, or any other road, line, or branch operated by it or under its control, to any other point thereof, or any connecting branch thereof within the limits of a city. Schwartzman v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 98 N. Y. Supp. 941, 943, 50 Misc. Rep. 116.

The west half of a railroad bridge over the Missouri river owned by the company which operates through passenger and freight trains continuously through different counties of Nebraska to and over said bridge, and thence through adjoining states, is "a part of the 'continuous line of road,'" within the meaning of sections 39 and 40 of the Nebraska revenue act in force in 1901, and is assessable for taxation by the state board. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Cass County, 101 N. W. 11, 12, 14, 72 Neb. 489, 117 Am. St. Rep. 806.

CONTINUOUS MILEAGE RATE

Where the railroad commissioners declared that a "continuous mileage rate" should apply to two connecting railroad companies, the stock and bonds of one of which were owned by the other, though each had its separate directors and was operated separately, applying the rate previously fixed for the owing company, such rate was a joint rate within the meaning of Act Oct. 14, 1879 (Acts 1878, p. 125) § 5, as amended by Acts 1889, p. 131, and Civ. Code 1895, § 2189, declaring that the railroad commissioners shall have the power to make just and reasonable joint rates for all connecting railroads, and the action of the commissioners was not ipso facto illegal on the ground that it was not a joint rate and not authorized by the statute, if the rate so fixed was reasonable and just. Hill v. Wadley Southern R. Co., 57 S. E. 795, 799, 128 Ga. 705.

CONTINUOUS MIXERS

Among the concrete mixing machines "batch mixers" are to be distinguished from "continuous mixers." The latter are long cylindrical devices, which receive materials and discharge them when mixed as a continuous operation." They were said to be less effective than batch mixers in mixing the material and to be subject to other objections. Ransome Concrete Machinery Co. v. United Concrete Machinery Co., 177 Fed. 413, 101 C. C. A. 217.

CONTINUOUS PASSAGE

See, also, Continuous Ride.

Where an agent of a carrier assured the purchaser of a ticket that his wife could take a certain designated train and be conveyed to her home without inconvenience, other than in merely changing cars with a wait of only a few minutes, the words on the ticket, "continuous passage," do not import an agreement that the passenger shall be carried without any stop or change of cars, but indicate that the agent might have had the authority to issue a ticket for such a passage as he assured the purchaser could be had. Southern R. Co. v. Daughdrill, 75 S. E. 925, 927, 11 Ga. App. 603.

CONTINUOUS PERIOD

Where navy officers transferred from one branch of the service to another are required to resign as a preliminary to the new appointment, with no intention of leaving the service, the actual service of each claimant from the time he first entered the navy is for a single and "continuous period" within the longevity pay act. United States v. Alger, 14 Sup. Ct. 348, 347, 151 U. S. 362, 366, 38 L. Ed. 192; Id., 14 Sup. Ct. 635, 152 U. S. 384, 38 L. Ed. 488.

CONTINUOUS QUOTATIONS

The phrase, "continuous quotations," as used in a contract between a board of trade, and a telegraph company, with reference to the decimation of the "continuous quotations" of such board of trade, mean quotations wherein the price of any commodity shall be quoted oftener than at regular intervals of 10 minutes. Board of Trade v. McDermott Commission Co., 143 Fed. 188, 191.

CONTINUOUS RAILROAD

Act Cong. July 2, 1864, c. 217, 13 Stat. 365, incorporated the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and empowered it to construct and maintain a continuous railroad, etc., between a point on Lake Superior and some point on Puget Sound. Held, that the Northern Pacific Railway Company, as successor of the original grantee, operated a "continuous railroad" within the meaning of the charter, where it operated at least one train each way daily from terminus to terminus directly through without change of cars or deviation from the main line, which train, with the accommodation afforded by others, furnished adequate service over the line, and it was not required to run all its through trains to the terminus of the road. State ex rel. Whitehouse v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 102 Pac. 24, 25, 53 Wash. 370.

CONTINUOUS RIDE

See Continuous Passage.

In an ordinance providing that the rate of fare charged by a traction company within the limits of a city for each passenger should be three cents, and outside the city limits within a radius of five miles five cents, and payment of such fares shall entitle the passengers to one continuous ride in the same general direction, the words "continuous ride in the same general direction" mean a journey over the traction company's own tracks. Reed v. Inhabitants of City of Trenton, 85 Atl. 270, 272, 80 N. J. Eq. 503.

Railroad Law (Laws 1890, p. 1113, c. 565) § 101, cl. 1, provides that no corporation constructing and operating a street surface railroad under such act or under Laws 1884, p. 309, c. 352, shall charge any passenger more than five cents for "one continuous ride" from any point on its road or on any road, line, or branch operated by it or under its control to any other point thereof or any connecting branch thereof, within the limits of any incorporated city or village. Held, that such section did not provide for a change of cars, but only entitled the passenger to a "continuous ride," as distinguished from "continuous trip," for five cents from any point on the road of the carrying company, or a road operated or controlled by it under a lease or other contract, to the extent of the distance that the car which received the passenger ran or could run over the connecting roads. O'Connor v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 108 N. Y. Supp. 471, 474, 123 App. Div. 784.

CONTINUOUS SERVITUDE

"Continuous servitudes" are those of which the enjoyment is or may be continual without the necessity of actual interference by man, as a waterspout or a right of light or air." German Savings & Loan Soc. v. Gordon, 102 Pac. 736, 738, 54 Or. 147, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 331 (quoting and adopting definition in Washburn, Easem. [2d Ed.] 13); Fayther v. North, 83 Pac. 742, 747, 30 Utah, 156, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 410 (quoting and adopting Washburn, Easements and Servitudes [4th Ed.] pp. 107, 110).

Under Civ. Code, arts. 727, 766, defining "continuous servitudes" as those whose use is or may be continual without the act of man, and "discontinuous servitudes" as such as need the act of man to be exercised, and providing that discontinuous servitudes can be established only by title, a railroad for the transportation of sugar cane is a discontinuous servitude, and not prescriptible. Ogborn v. Lower Terrebonne Refining & Mfg. Co., 56 South. 323, 129 La. 379.

CONTINUOUS TOTAL INABILITY

Insured was injured January 31, 1903. He stopped work because of the injury for 15 minutes, and then continued to work until March 25, 1903, and died April 6th following from the injury. An accident policy provided for a specified payment if insured should receive personal injury "at once resulting in continuous" total inability to engage in any business, etc., necessarily resulting independently of all other causes in certain results including illness, loss of members and loss of life. Held, that while the disability occurred "at once," to wit, at the time the accident happened, there was no "continuous total inability" to engage in business from the time of the injury to insured's death, and that the insurer was therefore not liable. Continental Casualty Co. v. Wade, 105 S. W. 35, 36, 101 Tex. 102.

CONTINUOUS TRIP

A statute providing that railroad companies within cities shall forfeit $50 for each failure to give a transfer entitling a passenger to a "continuous trip" to any portion of the railroad is restricted to lines of railroads substantially intersecting; the words "continuous trip" not being satisfied by the mere physical proximity of two lines of railroad, with the attendant ease with which a passenger might walk from one line to the other, where the railroads are physically distinct and are not operated as intersecting lines of one system. Ketcham v. New York City R. Co., 95 N. Y. Supp. 553, 554, 48 Misc. Rep. 367.

Railroad Law (Laws 1890, p. 1114, c. 565) § 104, as amended by Laws 1892, p. 1382, c. 676, requiring every street railway company contracting with another company for the use of their respective roads to carry passengers for one fare between points on the railroads embraced in the contract where the passenger desires to make one "continuous trip," relates to companies that have entered into contracts with other companies to insure a continuous passage from a point on one road to a point on the other road embraced in the contract, and does not apply to a company running short-service and long-service cars over its own line. Baron v. New York City R. Co., 105 N. Y. Supp. 258, 263, 120 App. Div. 134.

Railroad Law (Laws 1890, p. 1114) c. 565, § 104, provides that any street surface railroad corporation which acquires the use and operation of the roads of other companies by contract shall carry between any two points on the railroads or portions thereof embraced in such contract any passenger desiring to make one "continuous trip" between any such points for a single fare, and, on demand and without extra fare, shall give to each passenger paying one single fare a transfer entitling the passenger to one "continuous trip" to any point or portion of any railroad embraced in such contract, and for refusal imposes a penalty of $50. Held, that such section does not cover different lines constructed by the same company, but relates only to "a continuous trip" made by changes from the line of one of such companies to that of another; both lines being operated by one company under a lease or other contract. O'Connor v. Brooklyn Heights

Railroad Law (Laws 1890, p. 114, c. 565, as amended by Laws 1892, p. 1406, c. 676) § 104, requiring every street railroad company to carry between any two points on the roads over which it has the right to run cars any passenger desiring to make "one continuous trip" between such points for a single fare, and to give the passenger a transfer entitling him to "a continuous trip" to any point on the road, for the promotion of public convenience by the operation of railroads "as a single railroad with a single rate of fare," does not prevent a street railway company authorized by section 4, subd. 8 (page 1084) to regulate the time and manner in which passengers shall be transported, and the compensation to be paid, from adopting regulations requiring passengers making use of transfers to use the same only in the same general direction of their initial trip; a trip conveying the idea of transportation in one direction, and a continuous trip, like a continuous line, extending in the same general direction. Kelly v. New York City R. Co., 84 N. E. 569, 570, 192 N. Y. 97.

General Railroad Law (Laws 1890, c. 565, as amended by Laws 1892, c. 676) § 104, provides for a single fare in case of a continuous trip by any passenger between any two points on railroads or portions thereof, and for a transfer entitling each passenger to a continuous trip to any point or portion of any railroad embraced in the contract with him, substantially as a single railroad with a single rate of fare, and for a penalty for noncompliance. Held, that where a temporary break occurred in the street car line during the construction of a subway under railroad tracks, requiring passengers to walk some 1,200 feet to get a connecting car, their route over such line was not "continuous" within such section, and a passenger who could be carried by connecting lines in two ways, and the one across the break being slightly shorter and more direct, was entitled to a "continuous" trip by car from his starting point to his destination, and the street railroad company could not insist that he take the shorter route, and any rule refusing the right to travel by means of transfers over the longer but continuous route, and compelling him to take the shorter route to avoid a double fare, was unreasonable under the existing conditions, though it would become reasonable when he is again given a continuous passage by the shorter route through the subway. Mannion v. International R. Co., 121 N. Y. Supp. 263, 265, 66 Misc. Rep. 420.

In the absence of provisions indicating contrary intention, a covenant in a mining lease that the lessee shall work and mine the property "continuously" means continuously to the end of the term. Zelleken v. Lynch, 104 Pac. 563, 564, 80 Kan. 746.

Under Naturalization Act June 29, 1900, c. 3592, § 4, subd. 4, 34 Stat. 596 (U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1907, p. 422), which requires the court, before admitting a minor to citizenship, to be satisfied that he has resided "continuously" within the United States five years at least, and within the state or territory where the court is held one year at least, before his application, the word "continuously" is not used literally as requiring the applicant to remain at all times physically within such jurisdiction, but applies to changes of domicile only; and a sailor, by going to sea, does not abandon his residence. In re Schneider, 164 Fed. 335, 336.

Under a contract with an exposition company that a party would install a German village, with the privilege of selling beer, etc., and that he would operate it continuously from the day the exposition opened until the close thereof, the word "continuously" does not make the contract void as authorizing a sale of liquor on Sunday, as the word "continuously" may reasonably be held to apply only to such days as the exposition would be open to the public, which, in the absence of any allegation to the contrary, will be presumed to be week days only. Horton v. Rohlf, 95 N. W. 36, 38, 69 Neb. 95.

In a provision of a bill of lading which entitles the ship to discharge "continuously," the word must be construed to mean continuously during working days, and "working days" exclude Sundays and holidays usually observed, and include only the usual working hours of days on which usual work is only prevented by weather. Tweedie Trading Co. v. Pitch Pine Lumber Co., 156 Fed. 88, 89.

The word "continuously," in a bill of lading providing that the cargo shall be "received by the consignee immediately the vessel is ready to discharge and 'continuously' at all such hours," etc., is not synonymous with "incessantly" or "uninterruptedly"; but the clause means no more than that the discharge should be reasonably continued, considering the time, place, and circumstances, the nature and character of the cargo, the situation of the vessel, and prevailing conditions generally. United States Shipping Co. v. United States, 146 Fed. 914, 920.

CONTINUOUSLY OPERATED

Under the hours of service act (Act March 4, 1907, c. 2939, § 2), which, in a proviso, provides that no telegraph operator who transmits, receives, or delivers orders pertaining to or affecting train movements shall be required or permitted to remain on duty for a longer period than 9 hours in any 24-hour period in all towers, offices, or stations "continuously operated" night and day, an office which is closed, each day of 24 hours, four times for a period of one hour each, only, is to be classified as one "continuously operated" night and day. United States v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas, 189 Fed. 954, 963.

CONTRABAND

The right of property in market quotations is not "contraband," because it is susceptible of bad uses, as well as good; hence the right of property in market quotations, based on the transactions of an exchange, and the right to be protected in such property, are not affected by the fact that such quotations may be used for unlawful, as well as lawful, purposes. Board of Trade of City of Chicago v. L. A. Kinsey Co., 130 Fed. 507, 513, 64 C. C. A. 669, 69 L. R. A. 59.

CONTRABAND OF WAR

"Contraband of war" is insusceptible of exact definition as applied to every species of merchandise. While flour is not a general contraband of war, it may be so if intended for military use by a belligerent or destined for a port of military or naval equipment, and being thus on the border line, a proclamation of one of the governments at war declaring it contraband is sufficient to impress it with that character. Balfour, Guthrie & Co. v. Portland & A. S. S. Co., 167 Fed. 1010, 1014.

A "contract" is an agreement between two or more persons, upon sufficient consideration, to do or not to do a particular thing. Moline Jewelry Co. v. Otwell, Lowe & Tull (Del.) 78 Atl. 300, 302; Merritt & Co. v. Layton (Del.) 75 Atl. 795, 796, 1 Boyce, 212; Modern Machinery Co. v. Perkins (Del.) 80 Atl. 1060, 1061; E. S. Adkins & Co. v. Campbell (Del.) 64 Atl. 628, 629, 6 Pennewell, 96; Blakemore v. Cooper, 106 N. W. 566, 569, 15 N. D. 5, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1074 (quoting and adopting definition in Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 595, 24 L. Ed. 793); Weinsberg v. St. Louis Cordage Co., 116 S. W. 461, 465, 135 Mo. App. 553.

A "contract" is but a rule of action, binding upon the parties thereto; that is, a "contract" is a law unto the parties thereto. Kirkpatrick v. Pease, 101 S. W. 651, 657, 202 Mo. 471.

A "contract" is a transaction between two or more persons in which each party comes under an obligation to the other, and each reciprocally acquires a right to whatever is promised by the other. United Transp. & Lighterage Co. v. New York & Baltimore Transp. Line, 180 Fed. 902, 904.

A "contract" is an obligation attached by the mere force of law to certain acts of the parties, usually words, which ordinarily accompany and represent a known intent. The intention of the parties is to be determined by the meaning usually imposed by law on the words used, in the absence of mutual mistake, etc. Hotchkiss v. National City Bank of New York, 200 Fed. 287.

A "contract" is an agreement between two or more persons for a sufficient consideration to do or not to do a certain thing. It is not necessary that it be in writing, and it may be express or implied. It is express when the terms of the agreement are stated in so many words, and implied where one party receives benefits from the other under such circumstances that the law presumes a promise on the part of the person benefited to pay a reasonable price for the same. Jones v. Tucker (Del.) 84 Atl. 1012.

"Contracts" are distinguishable into two classes, simple contracts and contracts by specialty; in other words, contracts by parol and contracts under seal." Contracts reduced to writing, but without seal, are comprehended under the first class, or simple contracts. There is no distinct class of contracts merely in writing. Perrine v. Cheeseman, 11 N. J. Law, 174, 177, 19 Am. Dec. 388 (citing Ballard v. Walker, 3 Johns. Cas. 65, per Kent, J.).

The term "contract" in Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10, relating to the impairment of the obligation of a contract, is used in the ordinary sense as signifying the agreement of two or more minds for consideration from one to the other to do or not to do certain acts, and it is held that there is the same necessity for a consideration to make a contract of exemption as there would be if the contract was between private parties. Columbia Water Power Co. v. Campbell, 54 S. E. 838, 837, 75 S. C. 34.

Ky. St. 1903, § 2768, provides that councilmen shall not be interested in any contract with the city, or hold any office or employment in a corporation having a contract with the city. Section 2822 provides that an expenditure by a contract, written or oral, of an amount less than $2,000, must be made with the mayor's approval unless otherwise provided by ordinance that an expenditure to exceed that amount must have the mayor's approval, and that supplies and other forms of personal property shall be purchased by the city buyer subject to the provisions of that act. Held, that the term "contract" in section 2768 extends to the case of where goods are not ordered or bought under a formal pre-existing contract, and the city simply goes out into the market and buys its daily supplies as it needs them. Bradley & Gilbert Co. v. Jacques (Ky.) 110 S. W. 836, 837.

In Civ. Code, § 11, permitting an act appointed by law or contract to be performed on a particular day falling on a holiday to be performed the next business day, the word "law" means some statutory provision or rule of law, and the word "contract" means a contract such as is defined by Civ. Code, §§ 1549, 1550—actual contracts entered into between all the parties. Cheney v. Canfield, 111 Pac. 92, 93, 158 Cal. 342, 82 L. R. A. (N. S.) 16.

The word "contract," as used in Ky. St. 1903, § 4332, declaring it unlawful for a justice of the peace who by virtue of such office is a member of the fiscal court, to become directly or indirectly "interested in any contract for working roads," means an agreement entered into between the county on one part, and some person or persons on the other, for a consideration to do a certain thing. It may be either verbal or written. The law is violated, where the justice and his teams do work on the road by the day under employment by the road supervisor; it is not necessary that the work be let by the job, and that he be interested in such contract. Commonwealth v. Lane, 102 S. W. 313, 314, 125 Ky. 725.

The word "contracts," as used in the law of Illinois relating to the Chicago City Railways, and providing that all deeds of transfer of rights, privileges, or franchises between railway corporations, or any two of them, and all contracts, stipulations, licenses, and undertakings made, entered into, or given, and as made or amended by and between the common council of the city and any one or more of the railway corporations respecting the location, use, or exclusion of railways in or upon the streets, or any of them, of the city, etc., refers to the stipulated arrangements between the railway companies and the city as to the manner of occupancy of the streets. Govin v. City of Chicago, 132 Fed. 848, 857.

There is no absolute requirement as to what an instrument shall contain, to be susceptible of reformation, and it need not be certain and complete in any respect if there is an honest attempt to reduce the contract to writing; and a writing reciting an agreement by which plaintiff agreed to sell defendant the property described, and defendant agreed to sell and convey to plaintiff certain other property, defendant agreeing to assign a certain mortgage, though imperfectly expressed, contained all the elements of a "contract," within Civ. Code, § 1550, making parties capable of contracting, their consent, a lawful object, and a sufficient consideration essential to every contract and hence was susceptible of reformation for mistake. House v. McMullen, 100 Pac. 344, 346, 9 Cal. App. 664.

The words "contract" and "contracted," in Rev. St. 1895, art 4367, requiring a railroad to maintain its general offices at the place it has contracted or may contract to locate the same, for a valuable consideration, etc., are used according to the common acceptance of the terms, and include all methods of contracting, whether express or implied, and whether written or oral. Kansas City, M. & O. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Sweetwater (Tex.) 131 S. W. 251, 255.

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 251, provides that every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, except as provided in section 252, which provides that a trustee of an express trust may sue without joining with him the person for whose benefit the action is prosecuted, and that a trustee of an express trust within the meaning of the section shall include a person with whom or in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another. Held, that the word "contract" is not used in a restricted sense, but applies to any kind of contract, and where one as agent was carrying on a jewelry business for his wife and sold jewelry to a third person, taking a note therefor secured by a chattel mortgage as his wife's agent, he was a trustee of an express trust as to his wife, and could sue for collection of the note and foreclosure of the mortgage without joining his wife as a party plaintiff. Owen v. Harriott, 94 N. E. 591, 593, 47 Ind. App. 359.

Rev. St. 1909, § 1889, provides that actions on contracts, obligations, or liabilities, express or implied, shall be barred in five years, and section 1909 declares that, in actions founded on any contract, no acknowledgment or promise thereafter made shall be evidence of a new or continuing contract, unless it be in writing. Held, that the word "contract," as used in section 1909, included any obligation to which section 1889 had fixed the bar of five years, and hence a new promise to reimburse testator for paying the secured debt of an insane person was insufficient to revive the obligation, unless in writing. Petty v. Tucker, 148 S. W. 142, 144, 166 Mo. App. 98.

Under Rev. Codes Mont. § 4965, defining a "contract" as an agreement to do or not to do a certain thing, section 4966, providing that to a contract there must be parties capable of contracting, their consent, a lawful object, and a sufficient cause or consideration, section 4992, defining an "obligation" as a legal duty by which a person is bound to do or not to do a certain thing, section 4993, providing that an obligation arises either from the contract of the parties or by operation of law, section 6446, providing that an action upon a contract, not founded on a writing, must be commenced within five years, and section 6447, providing that an action upon an obligation, not founded on a writing, other than a contract, must be commenced within three years, the terms "contract" and "obligation," as used in sections 6446 and 6447, were used as defined by sections 4965, 4966, 4992, and 4993, so that an action by plaintiff to recover a balance from defendant, who as agent to sell property to plaintiff had received $5,000 on the purchase but $4,000 of which was returned to plaintiff, was not an action on a "contract," but on an "obligation," and, not having been brought within three years, was barred. Schaeffer v. Miller, 109 Pac. 970, 973, 41 Mont. 417, 137 Am. St. Rep. 746.

In an action to recover on an employment contract, an instruction that, if the parties entered into a subsequent contract for a permanent reduction of plaintiff's salary, the verdict should be for defendant, was not improper for failing to insert the word "parol" before contract, where all the evidence was directed to proof of a parol contract, and since the word "contract" includes both written and parol contracts. Frankfort Modes Glass Works v. Arbogast, 145 S. W. 1122, 1124, 148 Ky. 4.

Accrue

The verb "contract" is not synonymous with "accrue." Leman v. Chipman, 117 N. W. 885, 887, 82 Neb. 392.

By association

Where defendant became a member of an exchange which provided by its constitution and by-laws a scheme for the adjustment of differences between members and outsiders, and defined his relation to the exchange, such membership constituted a "contract" by which he was bound. National League of Commission Merchants of United States v. Hornung, 132 N. Y. Supp. 871, 875, 149 App. Div. 355.

By correspondence

To constitute a "contract by correspondence," one letter must contain a distinct proposition, and its answer must be an unqualified acceptance. Harris Bros. v. Reynolds, 114 N. W. 369, 370, 17 N. D. 16 (citing Baxter v. Bishop, 22 N. W. 685, 65 Iowa, 582; Batie v. Allison, 42 N. W. 306, 77 Iowa, 313).

"The rule of law is that a proposition of sale, accepted within a reasonable time, considering the nature of the case, becomes a 'contract' between the parties to the transaction, and where the proof shows that a letter containing a proposition for the sale of yarn arrived in the city after business hours Saturday, and on Monday morning a telegram and letter accepting the proposition were sent, the acceptance was within a reasonable time and made a binding 'contract.'" James E. Mitchell & Co. v. Wallace (Ky.) 87 S. W. 303, 304.

Bonds

"While it is true that a bond is a 'contract,' it is likewise true that, in common parlance, bonds are not included in the term 'contracts,' nor are they so treated by law writers, or in the decisions of the courts; but they constitute a separate and distinct class, usually designated by the term 'bonds.'" City of Tyler v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co., 91 S. W. 1-5, 99 Tex. 491.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 1204, permitting sureties on any contract to be sued without joining the principal, when he is actually or notoriously insolvent, the principal in a supersedeas bond need not be joined as defendant, where it is alleged and proved that he is actually and notoriously insolvent; such bonds being "contracts" within the statute. Wilson v. Dickey (Tex.) 133 S. W. 437, 438.

In replevin, where the property is taken and delivered to plaintiff under the writ, no implied "contract" arises on the express undertaking in the bond to return the property or its value, should a return thereof be adjudged, within the provisions of the federal Constitution, providing that no state shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts. Love v. Cavett, 109 Pac. 553, 555, 26 Okl. 179.

Charter of municipality

The charter of a municipal corporation is not a "contract" within the constitutional provision which prohibits the obligation of contracts being violated. Chalstran v. Board of Education, etc., of Knox County, 91 N. E. 712, 714, 244 Ill. 470; People ex rel. City of Oswego v. Board of Assessors of Town of Oswego, 134 N. Y. Supp. 177, 181. While a municipal charter can be modified or abolished, yet, if the municipality has become indebted under its charter, the rights of the creditor based upon the obligation of a contract cannot be impaired by any subsequent legislative enactment. Chalstran v. Board of Education, etc., of Knox County, 91 N. E. 712, 244 Ill. 470. The Legislature retains authority to amend or repeal municipal charters independent of special statutes or constitutional reservations, and may enlarge or curtail the powers, privileges, or exemptions granted by the charter. People ex rel. City of Oswego v. Board of Assessors of Town of Oswego, 134 N. Y. Supp. 177, 181.

A "contract" is "an agreement in which the party undertakes to do or not to do a particular thing." The creation of a certain territory into a body corporate for school purposes does not give rise to a contract between the state and the municipality created, and it is not violative of a contract for the Legislature subsequently to take a portion of the territory away from such municipality and add it to another. Board of Education of Union Free School Dist. No. 6 v. Board of Education of Union Free School Dist. No. 7, 78 N. Y. Supp. 522, 525, 76 App. Div. 355 (quoting and adopting definition in Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. [17 U. S.] 197, 4 L. Ed. 529).

"Contracts" result from agreements, express or implied, and not from proceedings in invitum, whether legislative or judicial, and the fact that the state organized a metropolitan police and created a board for its government with authority to demand and receive from defendant city certain taxes, to be levied and collected by the latter for the maintenance of such police, imposed no contract and no obligation upon the city which the board can enforce by any right of its own, or for any purpose beyond that for which it was created. State ex rel. Hubert v. City of New Orleans, 44 South. 321, 322, 119 La. 624.

Charter or articles of incorporation

A corporate charter is a "contract" between the state and corporators, and protected by the federal Constitution from impairment by legislation. Lawrence v. Rutland R. Co., 67 Atl. 1091, 1092, 80 Vt. 370, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 350, 13 Ann. Cas. 475.

The charter of a private corporation is a "contract" between it and the state, which the state, unless it reserves the right to do so, cannot alter to the prejudice of the corporation without its consent. City of Louisville v. Vreeland, 181 S. W. 195, 196, 140 Ky. 400.

Where a corporation is organized under the general laws of the state, its articles of incorporation or charter constitute a "contract" between the state and the corporation, protected by the federal Constitution from legislation of the state impairing its obligation. Arkansas Stave Co. v. State, 125 S. W. 1001, 1003, 94 Ark. 27, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 255, 140 Am. St. Rep. 103.

The charter of a private corporation is a "contract" within Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10, prohibiting laws impairing the obligation of contracts, so far as it is a contract between the state and the corporation and between the stockholders and the state, but not as between the corporation and the stockholders. Avondale Land Co. v. Shook, 54 South. 268, 269, 170 Ala. 379.

A corporation's charter is a "contract" between the state and the corporation, between the corporation and the stockholders, and between the stockholders and the state. Garey v. St. Joe Min. Co., 91 Pac. 369-371, 32 Utah, 497, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 554.

The charter of a private corporation having capital stock, organized under a general law of the state, constitutes a "contract" between the state and the corporation, between the state and the shareholders in the corporation, and between the corporation and its shareholders, which cannot be violated by the state. Larabee v. Dolley, 175 Fed. 365, 390.

It is universally conceded that the charter of a public corporation is not a "contract," and does not come within the clause of the Constitution under consideration, prohibiting the passage of state laws impairing the obligation of contracts. It follows, therefore, that where a college is a public institution, or, if a corporation, a public corporation its charter may be amended, altered or repealed at the pleasure of the Legislature. The fact that, after the founding and establishment of a public state institution by legislative enactment, property may have been given, devised, or bequeathed to it, or in trust for its benefit, has never been deemed sufficient to change the character of the institution, nor to deprive the Legislature of its plenary power of alteration, amendment, or even repeal of the act. In such cases there is no contract relation between the state and the donor. Such donations must be presumed to have been made with knowledge of the public character of the institution and the power of the Legislature to control it. State ex rel. Wyoming Agricultural College v. Irvine, 84 Pac. 90, 105, 14 Wyo. 318.

Though a charter granted to a corporation by the Legislature is a "contract" within the protection of the federal Constitution prohibiting the impairment of obligations of contracts, yet the state possesses reserved rights to pass reasonable laws for the promotion of the general welfare, and a subsequent Legislature may render the corporation subject to general laws enacted under the police power. Venner v. Chicago City R. Co., 92 N. E. 643, 646, 246 Ill. 170, 138 Am. St. Rep. 229, 20 Ann. Cas. 607.

Covenant

"A 'covenant' is a 'contract,' and damages are recoverable for its breach." Pinckard v. American Freehold Land Mtg. Co., 39 South. 350, 351, 143 Ala. 568.

A warranty by a seller is a "contract," and an action for breach thereof raises only the questions of the existence of a warranty, and not fraud. Millsap v. Woolf, 56 South. 22, 24, 1 Ala. App. 599.

A bank's covenant of warranty in a deed is a "contract" and an "engagement," within Rev. St. U. S. § 515, which makes the stockholders of a national bank liable for the bank's contracts, debts, engagements, etc. McLean v. Moore (Tex.) 145 S. W. 1074, 1075.

As creation of debt

The words "shall be contracted," in the charter of Sacramento, providing that no debt shall be contracted or created against the city, do not have any greater prohibitive force than the words "create, audit, allow, or permit to accrue," as used in the Fresno city charter, or the words "incur indebtedness," as used in the Constitution. Doland v. Clark, 76 Pac. 958, 961, 143 Cal. 176.

Deal distinguished

Where an owner of real estate asks a real estate broker "to get a deal," it is not necessary for the real estate broker to assent in words. If he procures a purchaser he makes a "contract" by performance. Lamb v. Prettyman, 33 Pa. Super. Ct. 190, 193.

Revisal 1905, § 2112, establishes the method by which a married woman may become a registered free trader, and section 2113 declares that a married woman, having complied therewith, shall be a free trader and authorized to "contract" and "deal" as a feme sole. Held, that the words "contract" and "deal," in their primary acceptation, refer to the ordinary bargains and trades incident to some business enterprise, the word "deal" being defined to mean to traffic, to transact business, to trade, and that neither of such words included a conveyance of real estate; and if there is a difference between the words, the term "contract" should be construed as referring to executory obligations, while "deal" would uphold her trades and bargains executed, but both, as a general rule, are terms which apply to the ordinary incidents of business, and hence a married woman, though a free trader within the statute, could not convey her separate land without joinder by her husband and acknowledgment as prescribed by Revisal 1905, § 952. Council v. Pridgen, 89 S. E. 404, 406, 153 N.

C. 443 (citing Black, Law Dict. 21 Cyc. p. 1338).

Deed

Deeds are "contracts." Negaunee Iron Co. v. Iron Cliffs Co., 96 N. W. 468, 473, 134 Mich. 264.

"A deed is a 'contract' between the grantor and grantee, although the grantee does not sign it." In re Millers' & Manufacturers' Ins. Co. (Parsons, Rich & Co. v. Lane) 106 N. W. 485, 493, 97 Minn. 98, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 231, 7 Ann. Cas. 1144.

Exemption

A statute of exemption from execution is not a "contract" between the state and the judgment debtor, which the state is prohibited from impairing by subsequent legislation. Myers v. Moran, 99 N. Y. Supp. 269, 113 App. Div. 427.

Where a town offers a tax exemption for a period of years for the location of business interests therein, as authorized by V. S. 365, such exemption, if based on a sufficient consideration, is a binding "contract" between the town and the corporation to which the exemption is accorded. Caverly-Gould Co. v. Village of Springfield, 76 Atl. 39, 40, 83 Vt. 396.

Franchise

See Franchise.

Implied contract included

Rev. Codes, § 6541, subd. 2, providing that in an action on a contract any other cause of action on contract existing at the commencement of the action may be counterclaimed, applies to "implied contracts." First Nat. Bank v. Silver, 122 Pac. 584, 586, 45 Mont. 231.

Judgment

A final judgment is a "contract" representative of property, and beyond the reach of legislative action. Humphrey v. Gerard, 77 Atl. 85, 87, 83 Conn. 346.

A judgment is not a "contract" in the sense that it can be regarded as in the nature of an agreement. Henley v. Myers, 93 Pac. 168, 170, 76 Kan. 723, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 779 (citing 23 Cyc. pp. 673, 674).

A judgment, whether the result of agreement or contest, is called a "contract of record"—a quasi contract—in the sense that it is a binding obligation, and no more. Davidson v. Richardson, 89 Pac. 742, 744, 50 Or. 323, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 319, 126 Am. St. Rep. 738.

A judgment is a "contract," which is subject to interference by the courts so long as the right of appeal therefrom exists; but when the time within which an appeal may be brought has expired, it ripens into an unchangeable contract, and becomes property, which can be disposed of or affected only by the act of the owner or through the power of eminent domain. Lohrstorfer v. Lohrstorfer, 104 N. W. 142, 147, 140 Mich. 551, 70 L. R. A. 621 (quoting and adopting definition in Germania Sav. Bank of Kings County v. Village of Suspension Bridge, 54 N. E. 83, 159 N. Y. 362).

"A judgment is a 'contract,' in the highest sense of the term, and, as an obligation, it possesses a force superior to that of a specialty or simple contract." Weaver v. San Francisco, 81 Pac. 119, 120, 146 Cal. 728 (quoting and adopting definition in Wallace v. Eldredge, 27 Cal. 498).

A "judgment" in a civil case is a judicial determination of rights existing between the parties, or by one party against the other. It does not create any new rights, but only defines and determines what rights already exist. The right to have a judgment enforced is not inherent in the judgment itself. This right and authority comes from other provisions of law. The judgment is itself a creation of law. It is in the nature of a contract, but it is not a "contract" within Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10, and Const. Mont. art. 3, § 11. It lacks the element of consent necessary to a contract, so that a law changing the rate of interest a judgment shall bear after entry is not unconstitutional. Stanford v. Coram, 72 Pac. 655, 28 Mont. 288, 98 Am. St. Rep. 566.

Lease

See Lease.

License

A license to keep an inn and tavern is not a "contract," but is a mere privilege to do business. Balling v. Board of Excise of City of Elizabeth, 74 Atl. 277, 79 N. J. Law, 197; Schwartz v. People, 104 Pac. 92, 103, 46 Colo. 239 (quoting and adopting definition in People v. Ralms, 39 Pac. 341, 20 Colo. 489); Meehan v. Board of Excise Com'rs of Jersey City, 64 Atl. 689, 690, 73 N. J. Law, 382.

A license has none of the elements of a "contract," and does not confer an absolute right, but only a personal privilege, to be exercised under existing restrictions, and such as may be subsequently reasonably imposed. Stone v. Fritts, 82 N. E. 792, 794, 169 Ind. 361, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1147, 14 Ann. Cas. 295.

A license to sell intoxicating liquor is not a "contract" between the state and the licensee, which gives him a vested right, but is a mere permit, subject to revocation for cause. State v. Seebold, 91 S. W. 491, 493, 192 Mo. 720 (citing Higgins v. Talty, 57 S. W. 724, 157 Mo. 280; Black, Intoxicating Liquors, § 189; Cherry v. Commonwealth, 78 Va. 375; People v. Wright [N. Y.] 3 Hun, 306; Arie v. State, 100 Pac. 23, 25, 26, 1 Okl. Cr. 250; Barnett v. Pemiscot County Court, 86 S. W. 575, 577, 111 Mo. App. 693.

A license to manufacture or sell intoxicating liquor does not involve a "contract," and the privilege embraced in the license may be annulled before the expiration of the term for which it was given without thereby impairing the obligation of a contract. Portland v. Cook, 87 Pac. 772, 774, 49 Or. 550, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 733 (citing Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25, 24 L. Ed. 989; State ex rel. Kelley v. Bonnell, 21 N. E. 1101, 49 Ind. 494; Fell v. State, 42 Md. 71, 20 Am. Rep. 83; State v. Cooke, 24 Minn. 247, 31 Am. Rep. 344; Wallace v. City of Reno, 73 Pac. 528, 27 Nev. 71, 63 L. R. A. 337, 103 Am. St. Rep. 747).

"It is well settled by the adjudicated law of this state and country that such licenses [licenses to sell intoxicating liquors], when issued or granted, are merely permits, and that in no case are such licenses 'contracts' between the state and the licensee, in which the dramshop keeper or licensee has a vested right; but, on the contrary, they are at all times subject, by reason of the tendency of the business to deprave public morals, to the police powers of the state, and may be revoked at any time by the state government for a violation of the statutes of the state provided for the regulation of the sale of liquors under such license, whether such stipulation be contained in the license or not. The statutes of the state governing the sale of liquors and the conduct of dramshops thereunder become a part and parcel of the license. The licensee necessarily accepts the license thereunder and subject thereto, and the statutes are as effectively a part of the license as if incorporated therein." Under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 1674, 1788, defining the appellate jurisdiction of the circuit courts, an appeal lies from the county court to the circuit court only in judicial cases involving life, liberty, and property, but not in a case wherein the county court acts in an administrative and ministerial capacity, as in revoking a liquor license for the causes and in the manner prescribed by Rev. St. 1899, § 3012, in which no right of property is involved. Barnett v. Pemiscot County Court, 86 S. W. 575, 577, 111 Mo. App. 693.

A license to conduct games of faro and roulette is a mere permit, and is not a "contract," and does not convey any vested right, but, being issued, in the exercise of the police power of the state, may be modified, revoked, or continued at its pleasure. Littleton v. Burgess, 82 Pac. 864, 866, 14 Wyo. 173, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 631.

A license to sell intoxicating liquors is in no sense a "contract" made by the state with the party holding the license. It is a mere permit, subject to be modified or annulled at the pleasure of the Legislature, who have the power to change or repeal the law under which the license was granted. Clark

v. Tower, 65 Atl. 3, 5, 104 Md. 175 (quoting Fell v. State, 42 Md. 89, 20 Am. Rep. 83).

"A license, whether revocable in terms or not revocable, is neither a 'contract' nor property in any constitutional sense, but is subject at all times to the police power of the state." Borck v. State (Ala.) 39 South. 580 (quoting and adopting definition in Powell v. State, 69 Ala. 10).

"Licenses to sell liquors are not 'contracts' between the state and the person licensed, giving the latter vested rights, and partaking of the nature of contracts, but are merely temporary permits to do what otherwise would be an offense, issued in the exercise of police powers, and subject to the direction of government, which may revoke them as it deems fit." Wallace v. City of Reno, 73 Pac. 528, 532, 533, 27 Nev. 71, 63 L. R. A. 337, 103 Am. St. Rep. 747 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Dillon's Mun. Corp. [4th Ed.] § 363, note 2).

"A license is not a 'contract.' It is a mere permission, which may not only be changed or annulled by statute, but can only be enjoyed upon the terms prescribed by the law making power. When so understood there is no incongruity in the holding that a license to sell intoxicating liquors at a particular place cannot be exercised, except as the location of the place complies with the requirement of law." State v. Harrison, 70 N. E. 877, 879, 162 Ind. 542.

"A license to sell liquor is neither a 'contract' nor a right of property within the legal and constitutional meaning of those terms. It is no more than a temporary permit to do that which would otherwise be unlawful, and forms a part of the internal police system of the state." The granting and revoking of licenses is purely statutory, and a license cannot be revoked, except as provided by statute. State v. Lichta, 109 S. W. 825, 828, 130 Mo. App. 284 (quoting and adopting definition in Black, Intoxicating Liquors, § 189).

Meeting of minds

A "contract" is the meeting of minds upon and agreement to do a definite thing. Loma Prieta Lumber Co. v. Hinton, 108 Pac. 528, 530, 12 Cal. App. 766.

To constitute a binding "contract" there must be a meeting of the minds of the parties; they must assent to the same thing in the same sense. Luckey v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 113 S. W. 703, 704, 133 Mo. App. 589.

A "contract" cannot exist between parties whose minds have not agreed upon one and the same thing. Miller v. Sharp (Ind.) 100 N. E. 103, 110.

A "contract" is a voluntary agreement between two parties; the coming together of two minds by a common intent. McNeill v. Durham & C. R. Co., 47 S. E. 765, 767, 135 N. C. 682, 67 L. R. A. 227.

To constitute a "contract" for the sale of a lot there must be a common understanding between the parties, their minds must meet as to all its terms, and if any portion of the proposed terms is unsettled, there is no contract. Phelps v. Good, 96 Pac. 216, 218, 15 Idaho, 76.

To constitute a "contract" there must, in general, be a meeting of the minds of the parties, and both must agree to the same thing, in the same sense; but, in so far as their intention is an element, it is only such intention as the words or the acts of the parties predicate, and not one secretly cherished, which is inconsistent therewith. Embry v. Hargadine, McKittrick Dry Goods Co., 105 S. W. 777, 778, 127 Mo. App. 383.

The word "contract" is used in the federal Constitution providing that no state shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts in its ordinary sense as signifying the agreement of two or more minds for considerations proceeding from one to the other to do or not to do certain acts; mutual assent to its terms being of its essence. Love v. Cavett, 109 Pac. 553, 555, 26 Okl. 179.

"A writing is not a 'contract,' when it fails to express that on which the minds of the parties met, and courts freely exercise the power to correct mistakes when the proof leaves no doubt that the real contract was something else." Wolfgram v. Town of Schoepke, 100 N. W. 1054, 1056, 123 Wis. 19, 3 Ann. Cas. 398.

While a "contract" may be either express or implied, or written or oral, it must result from a meeting of the minds of the parties in mutual assent to the terms, must be based upon a sufficient consideration, mutual, free from fraud or undue influence, not against public policy, and sufficiently definite to be enforced. American Lead Pencil Co. v. Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry., 134 S. W. 613, 615, 124 Tenn. 57, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 323.

A "contract" is an agreement between competent parties, supported by a legal consideration, and there can be no contract in its true sense without a meeting of minds. The parties must have a distinct intention, common to both, in order to constitute a contract or agreement. It is evident, therefore, that the minds of the contracting parties must meet, and if one of them is so weak, unsound, or diseased that the party is incapable of understanding the nature and quality of the act to be performed, or its consequences, he is incompetent to assent to the terms and conditions of the agreement, whether that state of his mind was produced by mental or physical disease, or whether it results from intoxication. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Meyers, 111 N. W. 602, 603, 73 Neb. 685, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 970.

Memorandum of sale

A broker's memorandum of sale, containing the names of the seller and buyer and the terms of sale, and signed by him and delivered to both parties, is a binding "contract," within the statute of frauds; the broker being the agent of both parties. Pope Metals Co. v. Sadek, 135 N. W. 851, 852, 149 Wis. 394.

Mutuality

Mutuality is an essential element of every valid "contract." W. J. Oliver Const. Co. v. Reeder, 66 S. E. 955, 7 Ga. App. 276.

A "contract" implies a legal obligation, and, except in the case of mere options, is not enforceable unless both parties thereto are bound, so that an action can be maintained by each against the other for a breach. Fowler Utilities Co. v. Gray, 79 N. E. 897, 898, 168 Ind. 1, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 726, 120 Am. St. Rep. 344 (citing Bish. Cont. [Enlarged Ed.] § 78; Lawson, Cont. § 97; Henry School Tp. v. Meredith, 70 N. E. 393, 32 Ind. App. 607, 612).

A "contract" is an agreement to do or not to do a particular thing, and it must be by consent which is free, mutual, and communicated by each to the other, and the consent is not mutual unless the parties agree on the same thing in the same sense. American Can Co. v. Agricultural Ins. Co. of Wauertown, N. Y., 106 Pac. 720, 722, 12 Cal. App. 133.

In legal contemplation, a "contract" is an agreement between two or more persons on a sufficient consideration to do or not to do a particular thing. To make a contract there must be an offer by one person for a sufficient consideration to do or not to do a particular thing, and there must be an acceptance by the other party of that offer, which offer and acceptance must be equally binding on both parties to the agreement, and must be to do or not to do a particular thing. Speakman v. Price (Del.) 80 Atl. 627, 630.

One of the essential elements of a "contract" is the aggregatio mentium, or mutual assent of the parties. This assent must comprehend the whole proposition; it must be exactly equal to its extent and provisions, and must not qualify them by any new matter. If one party intends to make a contract on one set of terms, and the other intends to make a contract on another set of terms, there is no contract, unless the circumstances are such as preclude one of the parties from denying that he agreed to the terms of the other. Hubbard City Cotton Oil & Gin Co. v. Nichols (Tex.) 89 S. W. 795, 796 (citing Summers v. Mills, 21 Tex. 78; San Antonio Gas & Electric Co. v. Marx [Tex.] 87 S. W. 1166; Beach on Contracts, § 1).

Notes

Acts 1901, p. 386, regulating the business of foreign corporations, provides (section 1) that before such corporation shall establish a business in the state it shall file a copy of its articles of incorporation with the Secretary of State, etc. Section 2 provides that no foreign corporation may make any contract in the state until it has complied with the provision of the preceding section. Held, that the word "contract" as used in section 2 refers to a contract pertaining to the continuing business, and the act does not preclude a foreign corporation, not having complied with the act, from taking in the state notes and a deed of trust for goods sold by it, and delivered in another state to the persons giving the notes and deed, nor from suing thereon in the state. Simmons, Burks Clothing Co. v. Linton, 117 S. W. 775, 777, 90 Ark. 73.

Offer and acceptance

An offer or proposal made by one person and the acceptance thereof by the other constitutes a "contract." Haskell & Barker Car Co. v. Allegheny Forging Co., 91 N. E. 975, 47 Ind. App. 392.

To constitute a "contract" on the theory of an offer and acceptance, the offer itself must be complete and reasonably definite as to terms; such contracts arising only upon an agreement of minds, so that particular terms other than those which the law implies are not included, unless set forth with reasonable certainty in the offer or its acceptance. The doctrine that where a proposition sufficiently clear is submitted to another to act upon, and the person to whom it is submitted makes such statement or does such act with respect thereto as would lead an ordinarily prudent person, acting in good faith, to believe that the proposition has been accepted, and the proposer proceeds to the fulfillment of the conditions and terms imposed, a "contract" may be found from such conduct, notwithstanding the secret intentions of the party claimed to have accepted the proposition, proceeds in accordance with the principles of natural justice, and is akin to an estoppel in pais. Northrup v. Colter, 131 S. W. 364, 366, 150 Mo. 639 (quoting Page, Contracts, §§ 22, 27).

To constitute a "contract" there must be a proposition by one party, accepted by the other, without any modification whatever. If the acceptance modifies the proposition in any particular, however trifling, it amounts to no more than a counter proposition; it is not in law an acceptance which will complete the contract. The mere proposal of a bargain by one person to another imposes no obligation upon the former until it is accepted by the latter according to the terms in which the offer is made. Any qualification of or departure from those terms invalidates the offer, unless the same be agreed to by the person who made it. Baird Bros. v. Walter Pratt & Co., 89 S. W. 648, 652, 6 Ind. T. 38.

"The statement of a need is not the offer of a position, unless the terms are definite and the offer is so worded as to indicate intent to make a contract by acceptance." Plaintiff, who on receipt of defendant's letter stating, "I have work immediately for 200 colored longshoremen, and can guarantee the above number continuous work providing they are good men," etc., went to work for defendant with 96 other colored men, who had assigned their claims to him, and who, after employment and pay for a certain time, was discharged, had no cause of action for "breach of contract"; the letter being no more than an advertisement or invitation, leaving the terms of any contracts to be settled between the parties when the hirings were made. Clarke v. Atlantic Stevedoring Co., 163 Fed. 423, 424.

An invitation to prospective buyers to negotiate for a license, and to trade, even when confined to a definite class, does not bind the sender to accept any offer thereafter received. The order of the prospective buyer does not ripen into a "contract," which is an agreement which creates an obligation, until the defendant's acceptance, and then only as to goods specifically ordered. Montgomery Ward & Co. v. Johnson, 95 N. E. 290, 209 Mass. 89.

"A 'contract' is an agreement which creates an obligation." A circular, issued by a manufacturer of revolvers to secure uniformity in their retail sale price, setting forth the terms upon which revolvers would be furnished to the jobbing trade, and that no order would be filled except upon the terms set forth, and reciting that the manufacturers would not be liable for failing to fill orders, etc., was not a general offer to sell, but an invitation of proposals for sales on the terms stated, which might be accepted or rejected; and hence plaintiff's transmission of an order which the manufacturer refused to fill did not form a "contract" subject to specific performance. Montgomery Ward & Co. v. Johnson, 95 N. E. 290, 209 Mass. 89 (quoting Ashcroft v. Butterworth, 136 Mass. 511, 514).

Ordinance

An ordinance changing the provisions of a prior ordinance embracing a contract between the city and a water company of which one of the councilmen was president, embracing conditions constituting an agreement between the city and the water company and the compensation which the water company was to receive, was a "contract" within the meaning of the city charter, forbidding any member of the common council to be interested in any contract with the city. Antigo Water Co. v. City of Antigo, 128 N. W. 888, 890, 144 Wis. 158.

Where a street railway company incorporated under P. L. 1886, p. 185, providing for the incorporation of street railway companies and the regulation of the same, made application to a township to lay its tracks along a certain route, pursuant to P. L. 1889, p. 100, and an ordinance was passed granting such location, subject to certain conditions, on acceptance of such ordinance by the company, it constituted a valid "contract," and its provisions could not be impaired by either party without the consent of the other; and hence it was not competent for the township to revoke such ordinance without consent of the company and remove its tracks. Asbury Park & S. G. Ry. Co. v. Township Committee of Neptune Tp. (N. J.) 67 Atl. 792, 793.

Where the power to fix rates for public service corporations is reserved by the people of a state, and there has been no express grant or waiver of the constitutional right, an ordinance of a city granting a franchise to a telephone company and fixing rates is not binding on the state as a "contract" within the contract clause of the federal Constitution, but the contract is in the nature of a license and permissive only, subject to the exercise of the sovereign power of the state. State ex rel. Webster v. Superior Court of King County, 120 Pac. 861, 866, 67 Wash. 37, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 78.

Patent

A patent is a "contract" made by the acceptance by the government of the proposition made by the inventor in his application. O. H. Jewell Filter Co. v. Jackson, 140 Fed. 340, 343, 72 C. C. A. 304.

A patent is a "contract," and it must be interpreted by the same rules of construction as other contracts. Century Electric Co. v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co., 191 Fed. 350, 354, 112 C. C. A. 8.

A patent is a "contract" between the government and the patentee, whereby the latter is granted the exclusive right to make, use, and vend his invention for a specified time, after which such right is to inure to the benefit of the public. American Steel & Wire Co. of New Jersey v. Denning Wire & Fence Co., 160 Fed. 108, 115.

Proposals and bids

A "contract," as defined by Pothier, "includes a concurrence of intention in two parties, one of whom promises something to the other, who on his part accepts such promise." The proceedings of the board of public service in the advertising for bids and the adoption of a resolution defining who is the lowest and best bidder is not the making of a contract, but is merely preliminary thereto. State v. Board of Public Service of Columbus (Ohio) 90 N. E. 389, 391.

Railway ticket

See, also, Railroad Ticket.

An ordinary passenger ticket is not necessarily a "contract," within the scope of the rule excluding oral evidence of the contents of a written instrument. Cofne v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 99 N. W. 184, 185, 123 Iowa, 458.

Receipt

A freight receipt is not a "contract," but a mere admission, and can always be explained by parol evidence. C. H. Rugg Co. v. Ormrod, 91 N. E. 366, 367, 198 N. Y. 119.

A receipt by an administrator of money in settlement of liability for the death of the intestate and for the release of all claims is a "contract" within the rule excluding parol evidence to contradict or vary the terms of a written contract. Dronenburg v. Harris, 71 Atl. 81, 85, 108 Md. 597.

Parol evidence is admissible to show the purpose of a written receipt; it not being a "contract," within the parol evidence rule. Farmers' Savings Bank v. Aldrich, 183 N. W. 888, 886, 153 Iowa, 144.

Recognizance

A recognizance is not a "contract" between individuals, to which the statute of frauds will apply. Gay v. State, 7 Kan. 394, 402.

Reward distinguished

See Reward.

Separate contracts distinguished

A contract for the construction of a shed, and subsequent contracts for remodeling an adjacent stable and the removal of the partition wall between the shed and stable, so as to make both structures one building, cannot be joined together and treated as one individual "contract"; but they must be treated as separate and distinct contracts, within Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, requiring the recording of a building contract when the amount to be paid thereunder exceeds $1,000. Acme Lumber Co. v. Wessling, 126 Pac. 167, 169, 19 Cal. App. 406.

Special tax bill

St. Louis City Charter, art. 6, § 25, declares that a special tax bill, after the prescribed notice has been given and after maturity, bears interest at 8 per cent., and Rev. St. 1899, § 3707, provides that a judgment on a contract which bears more than 6 per cent. interest, shall bear interest at the same rate as that expressed in the contract, but that all other judgments shall bear interest at 6 per cent. Held, that a special tax bill is not a "contract," and that a judgment thereon bears interest at 6 per cent. Gilsonite Roofing & Paving Co. v. St. Louis Fair Ass'n, 182 S. W. 667, 661, 231 Mo. 589.

Statute

A statute of exemption from execution is not a "contract" between the state and the judgment debtor, which the state is prohibited from impairing by subsequent legislation. Myers v. Moran, 99 N. Y. Supp. 269, 113 App. Div. 427 (citing Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 383; Bull v. Conroe, 13 Wis. 233; Harris v. Glenn, 56 Ga. 94; Bramble v. State, to Use of Twilley, 41 Md. 435; Morse v. Goold, 11 N. Y. 282, 62 Am. Dec. 103).

Will

A will, absolute in terms and unconditional, is not a "contract," within the constitutional inhibition against the impairment of contractual obligations. Brearley School v. Ward, 94 N. E. 1001, 1005, 201 N. Y. 858, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1215, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 251.

A "contract" is an agreement between the parties, while a "will" is no contract at all, but a unilateral disposition of property. Isler v. Griffin, 67 S. E. 854, 855, 134 Ga. 192.

As written contract

The term "contract," for purposes of pleading, prima facie imports that the agreement was reduced to writing. Brooks v. State (Ga.) 76 S. E. 765.

CONTRACT CONCERNING REAL RIGHTS

A transfer of a lease of real property which, among other obligations imposed on the lessee, stipulates for the immobilization of machinery to be installed by the tenant, is a "contract concerning real rights to immovable property," within the meaning of P. R. Civ. Code, § 618, relating to the registration of property. Valdes v. Central Altigracia, 32 Sup. Ct. 664, 672, 225 U. S. 58, 56 L. Ed. 980.

CONTRACT DEBTS

See Simple Contract Debt.

For a town to expend its current revenues and accrued funds is not to "contract debts" within the constitutional inhibition. Camden Clay Co. v. Town of New Martinsville, 68 S. E. 118, 120, 67 W. Va. 525.

CONTRACT FOR PAYMENT OF MONEY

The contract of an indorser of a promissory note or guarantor of a bill of exchange is a "contract for the direct payment of money," and an attachment may issue against the property of such indorser or guarantor when action is brought to enforce payment of the debt, the same as against the acceptor or maker, under the provisions of section 4302, Rev. St. 1887. Armstrong v. Slick, 93 Pac. 775, 14 Idaho, 208.

Where the president of a bank authorized to lend plaintiff's money on real estate security only loaned it to a partnership consisting of himself and his cashier, for which he took notes, two of which were signed by himself and one by himself and the cashier, which he kept with his private papers in the bank, plaintiff having no knowledge that the money had been so loaned until after the failure of the bank, the notes did not constitute "contracts for the payment of money" for want of delivery. Morris v. Butler, 122 S. W. 377, 378, 138 Mo. App. 378.

CONTRACT FOR THROUGH SHIPMENT

A bill of lading dated in one state, showing a destination in another, and containing stipulations governing the entire transportation, specifying not only rights, duties, or limitations relating to the parties, but also to subsequent carriers, was a "contract for a through shipment" within Act Cong. June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 7, 35 Stat. 593, making an initial carrier of an interstate shipment liable for loss on connecting lines. Southern Pac. Co. v. W. T. Meadors & Co. (Tex.) 129 S. W. 170, 172.

CONTRACT HOLDERS

Laws 1891, p. 126, c. 116, § 1, provides that every contract whereby a benefit may accrue to a party named therein on the death of a person insured thereunder, or for the payment of any sum dependent on the collection of assessments from persons holding similar contracts, shall be deemed a contract of mutual insurance on the assessment plan, and that such contracts must show that the liability of the insured thereunder are not limited to fixed premiums. Section 2 provides corporations may be formed to carry on the business of mutual insurance on the assessment plan, that no such corporation shall issue contracts of insurance till 200 persons have paid in $5,000, which sum shall be paid to the State Treasurer, and held in trust for the "contract holders" of such corporation. Held, the "contract holders" included only the holders of insurance contracts issued by the company within the scope of its authority under such law, and that a debenture issued by the company, in substance merely a promise of the company to pay at its office a certain sum, two years after date, with interest, and making reference to insurance only by a concluding provision giving the owner the option at its maturity to take a policy in lieu of the money, was not such an insurance contract. Engwicht v. Pacific States Life Assur. Co., 96 Pac. 7, 8, 153 Cal. 183.

CONTRACT IMPLIED BY LAW

"Constructive contracts," or "contracts implied by law," are obligations imposed or created by law without the assent of the party bound, and sometimes even notwithstanding his actual dissent, on the ground that they are dictated by reason and justice. They are fictions of law adopted to enforce legal duties. Harty Bros. & Harty Co. v. Polakow (Ill.) 86 N. E. 1085, 1086 (citing Keener, Quasi Contracts, p. 5; Bishop, Contracts, § 205; Hertzog v. Hertzog, 29 Pa. 465; 9 Cyc. p. 242; Lillard v. Wilson, 77 S. W. 74, 178 Mo. 145; Columbus, H. V. & T. Ry. Co. v. Gaffney, 61 N. E. 152, 65 Ohio St. 104).

A "contract implied by law" results from a legal fiction, used for the sake of the remedy it affords, and may obtain contrary to the intention of the parties, or in the absence of any intention, while a "contract inferred from facts" is an actual contract, resulting from an actual meeting of the minds of the parties as shown by the facts. Weinsberg v. St. Louis Cordage Co., 116 S. W. 461, 465, 135 Mo. App. 553.

Where there was no agreement between plaintiff and defendant that defendant was to return money advanced on the purchase price of real property if the negotiations failed, or at all, yet where equity and good conscience required him to do so, the law implied a promise on his part, and the obligation created or implied is termed a "quasi contract," a "contract implied by law," or a "constructive contract." Schaeffer v. Miller, 109 Pac. 970, 972, 41 Mont. 417, 137 Am. St. Rep. 746.

CONTRACT IMPLIED IN FACT

The terms "express contracts" and "contract implied in fact" are used to indicate, not a distinction in the principles of contract, but a difference in the character of the evidence by which a simple contract is proved, and the same elements essential to constitute a contract of the one character are necessary to the existence of the other. Fordtran v. Stowers, 118 S. W. 631, 634, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 226.

CONTRACT IMPORTING A CONSIDERATION

A fire policy reduced to writing is a written "contract importing a consideration" within Rev. St. 1895, art. 1265, subd. 10, requiring a verified answer setting up failure of consideration of the contract sued on; and, in the absence of a verified answer alleging failure of consideration because of nonpayment of the premium, the defense is not available. Ginners' Mut. Underwriters of San Angelo, Tex. v. Wiley & House (Tex.) 147 S. W. 629, 631.

CONTRACT IN AID OF MONOPOLY

The "contract" of one having a monopoly in shoe machinery with one employed by it to design and improve such machinery, the same that it makes with all others employed by it for such purpose, constituting 90 per cent. of those skilled in the manufacture of such machinery that he shall assign to it all inventions made by him within 10 years after termination of his contract of employment, is "in direct aid of the monopoly" of interstate trade and commerce, within the federal anti-trust act (Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, § 1, 26 Stat. 209), prohibiting such a contract. United Shoe Machinery Co. v. La Chapelle, 99 N. E. 289, 293, 212 Mass. 467, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 715.

CONTRACT IN ISSUE

Under P. S. § 1590, providing that when an executor, etc., is a party, the other party cannot testify in his own favor, unless the "contract in issue" was originally made with a person living and competent to testify, the words "contract in issue" relate to the issues made by the evidence, as well as to those made by the pleadings; and, in an action for malpractice upon decedent, wherein plaintiff alleged that decedent employed defendant to treat her, but showed that he himself made the contract, defendant could testify to the contract, but he was not a competent witness generally. Wilkins' Adm'r v. Brock, 70 Atl. 572, 575, 81 Vt. 332.

Where, in a suit to set aside a deed, executed by one since deceased, as a cloud on title, there was no issue raised as to the executed contract pursuant to which the deed was made, defendants were not disqualified to testify in proof of the contract as to their acts in compliance therewith by Rev. St. 1899, § 4652 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2520), providing that in actions where one of the original parties to the "contract or cause of action in issue" is dead, the other party shall not be admitted to testify since a contract is "in issue" within such act only when it is in dispute, or where it is the subject of the action on trial, and there must be a finding and judgment concerning it in whole or in part. Griffin v. Nicholas, 123 S. W. 1063, 1066, 224 Mo. 275.

CONTRACT INFERRED FROM FACTS

A "contract implied by law" results from a legal fiction, used for the sake of the remedy it affords, and may obtain contrary to the intention of the parties, or in the absence of any intention, while a "contract inferred from facts" is an actual contract, resulting from an actual meeting of the minds of the parties as shown by the facts. Weinsberg v. St. Louis Cordage Co., 116 S. W. 461, 466, 135 Mo. App. 553.

edy it affords, and may obtain contrary to the intention of the parties, or in the absence of any intention, while a "contract inferred from facts" is an actual contract, resulting from an actual meeting of the minds of the parties as shown by the facts. Weinsberg v. St. Louis Cordage Co., 116 S. W. 461, 466, 135 Mo. App. 553.

CONTRACT LABORER

Petitioner, who was a Greek boy then 16 years old, wrote to a distant relative in Chicago to know if the latter would give him employment if he came to the United States, and, receiving an affirmative answer, he came; his father paying his passage. On his arrival the relative gave him work at $15 per month and board, where he remained for 14 months, and then bought a horse and wagon and started in business for himself as a fruit peddler. He had no contract for employment before he came, and no wages were mentioned, and he would have come merely on the relative's promise to give him a home until he found employment. Held, that he did not come as a "contract laborer," within the meaning of Act Feb. 26, 1885, c. 164, 23 Stat. 332, which makes it a criminal offense to solicit or encourage the immigration of any alien under contract to perform labor, and makes such contracts void. Botis v. Davies, 173 Fed. 996, 998.

An alien upon promise to employ him on arrival at this country at stipulated wages in a definite occupation, made by one who advanced him money for his passage, secured by mortgage on his property, and who accompanied him on his journey, came to this country, went to work for such person at the stipulated wages, and designated occupation, repaid the advance out of his wages, and continued in the employment of the person who made the promise and advance for a year. Held, that he was a "contract laborer," expressly included by Immigration Act Feb. 20, 1907, c. 1134, § 2, 34 Stat. 898. Ex parte George, 180 Fed. 785, 786.

CONTRACT LIABILITY

The personal liability of shareholders in a national bank, under Rev. St. U. S. § 5151, for the contracts, debts, and engagements of the bank, cannot be regarded as a "contract liability," for the purpose of making applicable the limitation prescribed by Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. Wash. § 4800, subd. 3, for an "action upon a contract or liability, express or implied, which is not in writing, and does not arise out of any written instrument." McClaine v. Rankin, 25 Sup. Ct. 410-413, 197 U. S. 154, 49 L. Ed. 702, 3 Ann. Cas. 500.

CONTRACT MADE TOUCHING THE LAND

A lease of an Indian allotment is a "contract made touching the land," within Act

Cong. Feb. 8, 1887, c. 119, § 5 (24 Stat. 390), providing that if any conveyance shall be made of the lands set apart and allotted, or "any contract made touching the same," the conveyance or contract shall be void. Williams v. Steinmetz, 82 Pac. 986, 987, 16 Okl. 104.

CONTRACTS MADE WITH THE CITY

Act June 1, 1885 (P. L. 47) art. 8, § 1, cl. 2, requiring the city solicitor to prepare all "contracts to be made with the city" and to indorse his approval on them before they shall take effect, applies only to contracts made between various executive officers of the municipality and other persons, and not to contracts executed by the city council in pursuance of powers conferred upon them by statute. Brode v. City of Philadelphia, 79 Atl. 659, 667, 230 Pa. 434.

CONTRACTS MALA IN SE

"Contracts mala in se" include all those of an immoral nature, iniquitous in themselves, and those opposed to sound public policy, and where both parties are in pari delicto, neither as a general rule will be accorded relief by a court of justice. A contract between a layman and a lawyer, by which the former undertakes and agrees, in consideration of a division of the fees received by the latter, to hunt up and bring to the attorney persons having causes of action against railroad companies for personal injuries, is contrary to public policy and void. Holland v. Sheehan, 122 N. W. 1, 2, 108 Minn. 362, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 510, 17 Ann. Cas. 687 (citing 9 Cyc. p. 551).

CONTRACT OF AGENCY

See Agency.

CONTRACT OF CARRIAGE

A "contract of carriage" is, in effect, that the carrier, in consideration of the payment of the rate demanded, will use all possible care and diligence in delivering the passenger safely and promptly at the place of destination. The utmost care is contracted for, and, while the carrier is not an insurer of the safety of the passenger, he does guaranty that the passenger shall receive the utmost care, and any failure to provide the same is a breach of his statutory duty, and of the duty imposed by the contract of carriage, and negligence, for which he is liable. Tailon v. Mears, 74 Pac. 421, 423, 29 Mont. 161, 1 Ann. Cas. 613.

The "contract of carriage" is one of insurance against every loss or damage except such as may be occasioned by the act of God or the public enemy, or the fault of the owner of the goods or his agent. Where a carrier is intrusted with goods for transportation, and they are lost, the law holds him responsible for the loss, unless exempted by showing that the loss was caused by the act of God or the public enemy. To avail himself of such exemption, he must show that he was free from fault at the time. Where a carrier retained in its possession cotton received for transportation for a period of eleven days, without forwarding the same, and on the eleventh day the cotton was destroyed by a cyclone which practically destroyed the town from which the cotton was to be shipped, the carrier was guilty of negligence in failing to transport the cotton within a reasonable time, and was therefore precluded from claiming that the cotton was destroyed by an act of God, in defense of an action for loss thereof. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Quarles & Couturie, 40 South. 120, 121, 145 Ala. 436, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 867, 117 Am. St. Rep. 54, 8 Ann. Cas. 308.

CONTRACT OF DEPOSIT

A "contract of deposit" is a loan, but not a loan pure and simple. It implies an agreement on the part of the bank and its officers to safeguard the depositor by using the money in a legal manner.—Boyd v. Schneider, 131 Fed. 223, 226, 65 C. C. A. 209.

CONTRACT OF GUARANTY

See Guaranty.

CONTRACT OF HIRING

"A 'contract of hiring' is not indefinite, nor terminable at will, because the precise number of days, months, or years that the service is to continue are not specified. If there is a period of time, be the same fixed or indefinite, during which neither party is at liberty to terminate the contract, then the contract is not so indefinite or uncertain as to its duration as to be incapable of enforcement." Prescott v. Puget Sound Bridge & Dredging Co., 82 Pac. 606, 607, 40 Wash. 354 (quoting and adopting from a former decision on appeal, 71 Pac. 772, 81 Wash. 177).

"To constitute a contract one of hiring, the test is whether those doing the work 'hold such a relation to the employer that he can direct and control them in and about the work which they are doing for him.'" A contract whereby the board of control of a penitentiary agreed to work a plantation with convicts and receive the crops, the convicts to remain under the supervision and control of the board, was a lease of the land, and not a hiring of the convicts to the owner. Henry v. State, 39 South. 856, 870, 87 Miss. 1, per Truly, J. (quoting and adopting definition in Heard v. Crum, 18 South. 935, 73 Miss. 159, 55 Am. St. Rep. 520).

CONTRACT OF MARRIAGE

See, also, Marriage.

"The use of the expression 'contract of marriage' is equivocal, and may mean the actual formation of the relation of husband and wife; but it may mean only an irrevocable engagement to be afterwards carried into effect, the parties not meaning then to become husband and wife, and their engagement therefore, though words in the present tense are used, not amounting to nuptiae." Where a present agreement of marriage is entered into in good faith by persons capable of entering into the contract, the relation of husband and wife is thereby fixed, though such agreement is not followed by cohabitation. Davis v. Stouffer, 112 S. W. 282, 287, 132 Mo. App. 555.

CONTRACT OF RECORD

A judgment for damages estimated in money is sometimes called "a contract of record," because it establishes a legal obligation to pay the amount recovered, and by a fiction of law a promise to pay is implied. Brun v. Mann, 151 Fed. 145, 156, 80 C. C. A. 513, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 154.

A judgment, whether the result of agreement or contest, is called a "contract of record," a quasi contract, in the sense that it is a binding obligation, and no more. Davidson v. Richardson, 89 Pac. 742, 744, 50 Or. 323, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 319, 126 Am. St. Rep. 738.

CONTRACT OF SALE

"Contract of sale" is defined by Civ. Code, art. 2439, as an agreement by which one gives a thing for a price in money, and the other gives the price in order to have the thing, and a sale and return is a sale with the right of the buyer to return the goods at his option within a reasonable time. Wm. Frantz & Co. v. Fink, 52 South. 131, 134, 125 La. 1013.

By statute, to the completion of a "contract of sale" four things are essential: (1) Parties legally capable of contracting; (2) their consent legally given; (3) a thing; and (4) a price. Werner Sawmill Co. v. O'Shee, 35 South. 919, 920, 111 La. 817.

A "contract of sale" is an agreement by which one gives a thing for a price in current money, and the other gives a price in order to have the thing itself. Three things concur to the perfection of the contract, to wit: The thing sold, the price, and the consent. Civil Code, art. 2439. Smith v. Hussey, 43 South. 902, 904, 119 La. 32; Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. St. Louis Cypress Co., 46 South. 193, 194, 121 La. 152.

A "contract of sale" is perfect as between the parties by mere consent, and the parties may by their contract make a law for themselves in everything not contrary to public policy or good morals. Girault v. Feucht, 41 South. 572, 575, 117 La. 276 (citing McDonald v. Aubert, 17 La. 448; Thomson v. Myline [La.] 11 Rob. 349; Barrett v. His Creditors [La.] 12 Rob. 474; Stephens v. Chamberlin, 5 La. Ann. 656; Peck v. Overton, 7 La. Ann. 70; Thompson v. Myline, 6 La. Ann. 80; Peck v. Bemiss, 10 La. Ann. 160; Knox v. Payne, 13 La. Ann. 361; Garrett v. Crooks, 15 La. Ann. 483; Foreman v. Saxon, 30 La. Ann. 1117; Broadwell v. Raines, 34 La. Ann. 677; Thompson v. Dubon, 5 South. 58, 40 La. Ann. 712; Collins v. Desmaret, 12 South. 121, 45 La. Ann. 108).

A "contract of sale" occurs when there is an agreed price, a vendor, a vendee, an agreement of the former to sell for the agreed price, and an agreement of the latter to buy and pay the agreed price. In re Allen, 183 Fed. 172, 174; In re Columbus Buggy Co., 143 Fed. 859, 860, 74 C. C. A. 611.

There can be no binding "contract of sale," until the parties have agreed to the same proposition, which is the subject of contract, and there must be an offer to sell on the one hand and an acceptance of the same offer, before the contract of sale has been consummated. A binding "contract of sale" may be entered into by letters and telegrams, and when an offer is made either by letter or telegram, and is accepted, the contract is complete and binding; no particular form of offer or acceptance being necessary, unless the parties have stipulated otherwise. C. C. Emerson & Co. v. Stevens Grocer Co., 130 S. W. 541, 543, 95 Ark. 421.

A "contract of sale" is a relinquishment of all the rights and claims of the seller. A lessee of school lands, who fully released the lands to a third person, provided the latter fully complied with specified conditions, and who gave to the third person the right to hold the premises for the unexpired term of the original lease, relinquished all his rights in the original lease to the third person. Whitaker v. Hughes, 78 Pac. 383, 386, 14 Okl. 510.

A contract whereby defendant agreed to sell plaintiff or his assigns certain land for $150 per acre, plaintiff to plat the land and sell it and to pay all proceeds to defendant until the latter had received $150 per acre, was a "contract for the sale of land," not a mere brokerage contract, which defendant had a right to forfeit by reason of nonperformance. Whipple v. Lee, 89 Pac. 712, 713, 46 Wash. 266, 280.

The term "contract," in Gen. St. 1902, § 4864, providing that all conditional contracts for the sale of personal property shall be in writing, describing the property, was not used as meaning the particular form of instrument by which a conditional sale might be made. An order given for the purchase of a cash register, signed and acknowledged by the buyer, stating the names of the parties to the transaction, the price, etc., and that the title was to remain in the seller until paid for, when acknowledged and recorded, constituted a sufficient contract within such section. National Cash Register Co. v. Lesko, 58 Atl. 967, 968, 77 Conn. 276.

Bond for deed

A bond for a deed is a "contract for the sale of real estate," and is assignable. Royce v. Carpenter, 66 Atl. 888, 890, 80 Vt. 37.

As contract of sale or contract to manufacture

A contract for the sale of articles, which the vendor, in the ordinary course of his business, will manufacture or procure for the general market, whether he handled them at the time or not, is a "contract for the sale of goods." Lombard Water Wheel Governor Co. v. Great Northern Paper Co., 63 Atl. 555, 557, 101 Me. 114, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 180.

An order for sashes and doors for a special purpose to be manufactured by the seller at a stated price to be paid on completion of the work, is a "contract for the sale of goods," and not for labor, within the statute of frauds. Tower Grove Planing Mill Co. v. McCormick, 106 S. W. 113, 114, 127 Mo. App. 349.

A contract for the sale of articles then existing, or such as the seller, in the ordinary course of business, manufactures or procures for the general market, whether on hand at the time or not, is a "contract for the sale of goods" to which the statute of frauds applies; but, if the goods are to be manufactured on a special order, and not for the general market, the agreement is not a contract for the sale of goods within the statute. Courtney v. Bridal Veil Box Factory, 105 Pac. 896, 897, 55 Or. 210.

As conveyance

See Conveyance.

Land

A contract by citizens of a town with a railroad company to pay it a certain amount for extending its railroad was not a "contract for the sale of land," within the statute of frauds. Texas & G. Ry. Co. v. Whiteside, 119 S. W. 126, 127, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 598.

An agreement that a deed conveying land shall operate as a mortgage to secure a debt is not within the statute of frauds as a "contract for the sale of lands" or any interest therein. De Bartlett v. De Wilson, 42 South. 189, 191, 52 Fla. 497, 11 Ann. Cas. 811 (citing 1 Jones, Mort. [6th Ed.] § 322; Gillespie v. Stone, 70 Mo. 505; Walls v. Endel, 20 Fla. 86).

An agreement between two persons that one shall purchase land on joint account is not a "contract for sale of lands," within the statute of frauds. Evans v. Green, 23 Miss. 294, 295.

A parol agreement by an owner employing a broker to procure a purchaser, made with the purchaser procured by the broker, to give the purchaser a specified time to decide whether he will accept the terms specified, is a "contract for the sale of real estate" within the statute of frauds (Rev. St. 1895, art. 2543, § 4). Granger Real Estate Exch. v. Anderson (Tex.) 145 S. W. 262, 263.

An instrument recited that the first party would give the second party full control of the former's farm, that whatever improvements the latter made should be his, and that he might also trade or sell the land, but in such event the former should have $4,000 in land or money. It further stipulated that, if either party should become dissatisfied, the first party would turn over all the property, except $4,000 or its equivalent, to the second party, who should be responsible for taxes and debts made by him. Held, that the instrument did not constitute a "contract for the sale of the land," but gave the second party an equitable right in the land, leaving in the first party merely the naked legal title and a claim thereon for $4,000. Squires v. O'Malley (Ky.) 84 S. W. 1172, 1175.

Intestate died seised of 957 acres of land, subject to a mortgage for $15,000. The land was purchased by the mortgagee on foreclosure for $16,005.39, after which he agreed to assign the purchase certificate to the widow on payment of such amount, with interest, which agreement was extended until September 1, 1889, when a redemption was effected by a payment of the amount due, made up of two partial payments previously made by the widow, $6,326.67, the price of 100 acres of land sold by J., one of the heirs, for their benefit to another, $9,000 raised by a deed of trust on the remaining 857 acres, and $153.53, furnished by J. A quitclaim deed to the land was made by the purchaser under the mortgage sale to J. in his own right. At this time the land was worth $38,000. Held, that such transaction operated as a redemption of the land for the benefit of the widow and heirs of intestate and not a purchase by J. for his sole use. Donason v. Barbero, 82 N. E. 620, 625, 230 Ill. 138.

An agreement or award, whereby an uncertain and unknown division line between adjoining tracts of land, owned by different persons, is identified and made certain as to its location, is not a "contract for the sale or conveyance of land," and as the legal remedy for nonperformance is full, complete, and adequate, there is no jurisdiction in equity to decree specific performance of such agreement or enforcement of such award. Orr v. Cox, 56 S. E. 522, 524, 61 W. Va.

361 (citing Pasley v. English [Va.] 5 Grat. 141).

An instrument, executed by one as a part of the consideration for a conveyance to him of land, binding him to offer a specified sum for the land of another at a time specified, does not bind him to pay the specified sum, but only binds him to make an offer to buy, and a breach of the obligation does not render him liable to pay absolutely the specified sum, but renders him liable only for such damages as result from the breach. Richards v. Gee (Tex.) 107 S. W. 61, 62.

Plaintiff, the owner of property insured, made an agreement to sell to H. for a specified price, possession to be given March 1, 1902. The contract, however, was conditioned on the ability of H. to raise $5,500 on the property; it being agreed that, unless such sum was raised, the deal was off. To enable H. to raise such loan, a contract and deed were executed, and placed in the hands of loan brokers to hold, and not to be delivered without plaintiff's permission. The title being defective, an action was brought in H.'s name to cure the same, and thereafter a portion of the property was destroyed by fire before H. obtained the money or any sale was consummated. Held, that such transaction did not constitute a "sale or contract to sell" the property, within a policy providing that it should be void in case of a "sale or contract to sell" the property, or if any change or diminution other than death take place in the interest, title, or possession of insured. Swank v. Farmers' Ins. Co. of Cedar Rapids, 102 N. W. 429, 430, 126 Iowa, 547.

Lease distinguished

A contract binding the party of the first part to rent certain land to the party of the second part, providing for the payment of three installments of rent, and agreeing that if these are paid the party of the first part will convey the land to the party of the second part, was a lease, and not a "contract of sale." Thomas v. Johnston, 95 S. W. 468, 469, 78 Ark. 574 (citing Quertermous v. Hatfield, 14 S. W. 1096, 54 Ark. 16; Ish v. Morgan, 3 S. W. 440, 48 Ark. 413; Watson v. Pugh, 10 S. W. 493, 51 Ark. 218; Cheney v. Libby, 10 Sup. Ct. 498, 134 U. S. 68, 33 L. Ed. 818; Blanchard v. Raines, Ex'x, 20 Fla. 467; Houston v. Smythe, 5 South. 520, 66 Miss. 118).

Option distinguished

The test in determining whether a contract is a "contract of sale or purchase" or a mere "option" is: Could the agreement be specifically enforced? Brickell v. Atlas Assur. Co., 101 Pac. 16, 17, 10 Cal. App. 17.

An "option" to purchase land is not a "contract for a sale," but merely an offer by one to sell within a limited time, and a right acquired by the other to accept or reject such offer within that time. Swift v. Erwin (Ark.) 148 S. W. 267, 269.

A contract binding one party to sell certain land upon certain terms, and binding the other party to purchase same upon such terms, was a "contract of sale," and not an "option." Heimberger v. Rudd (S. D.) 138 N. W. 374, 376.

An "option" does not become a "contract" to convey on the one side and to purchase on the other until it is exercised by the optionee. Barnes v. Rea, 68 Atl. 836, 838, 219 Pa. 279.

An agreement to sell realty, "cash on delivery of deed, or one-half on time, if terms can be agreed on," is a mere "option," and not a "contract for a sale." Wallace & Eves v. Figone, 81 S. W. 492, 493, 107 Mo. App. 362.

An "option" to purchase land is not an actual or existing "contract," but merely a right reserved in a subsisting agreement, being at best but a right to exercise a privilege, and only when that privilege has been exercised by acceptance does it become a contract. Rampton v. Dobson (Iowa) 136 N. W. 682, 684.

The use of the word "option" in a contract relating to water rights excludes the idea of an absolute agreement to purchase, as an option is simply a "contract" by which the owner agrees that another shall have the right to buy the property at the price fixed within a certain time, and is nothing more than a continuing offer to sell. Gard v. Thompson, 123 Pac. 497, 500, 21 Idaho, 485.

"Generally an 'option' may be defined as a contract by which the owner agrees with another person that he shall have the privilege of buying his property at a fixed price within a limited time. It is neither a 'sale' of land nor an 'agreement to sell,' but merely the disposal of a privilege in electing to buy at a fixed price within the time limited. The other party acquires no lands, or interest in land, not even a chose in action prior to his election, but he does obtain what is often of large value, the privilege at his election to demand and receive a conveyance of land." Cameron v. Shumway, 113 N. W. 287, 290, 149 Mich. 634 (quoting and adopting definition in Myers v. J. J. Stone & Son, 102 N. W. 507, 128 Iowa, 10, 111 Am. St. Rep. 180, 5 Ann. Cas. 912).

"An 'option' is an unaccepted offer. It states the terms and conditions on which the owner is willing to sell his land, if the holder elects to accept them within the time limited. If the holder does so elect, he must give notice to the other party, and the accepted offer thereupon becomes a valid and binding contract. If an acceptance is not made within the time fixed, the owner is no longer bound by his offer, and the option is at an end. A 'contract of sale' fixes definately the relative rights and obligations of both parties at the time of its execution. The offer and acceptance are concurrent, since the minds of the contracting parties meet in the terms of the agreement." Indiana & A. Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Pharr, 102 S. W. 686, 689, 82 Ark. 573 (quoting and adopting the definition in Re McMillan v. Philadelphia Co., 28 Atl. 220, 159 Pa. 142.

A "contract of sale" involves an offer to buy or to sell, and an acceptance of that offer. An offer may be withdrawn before acceptance, and a bare offer is ordinarily held to be withdrawn, unless accepted immediately. The offer may be accompanied by a promise not to withdraw it within a specified time. In that case it may be accepted within the time specified before an actual withdrawal. The promise not to withdraw is without consideration and cannot be enforced. The power to withdraw an offer or retract a promise to keep such offer open is a valuable advantage, which may itself be the subject of sale, and an option contract is the sale and purchase of this advantage or right belonging to the owner of the property. Patterson v. Farmington St. Ry. Co., 57 Atl. 853, 858, 76 Conn. 628.

While an "option" to purchase, if based upon a sufficient consideration, binds the party granting it, it is not a "contract of purchase," but simply a contract granting to the holder of the option the privilege of purchasing, and binds the party by whom it is given to sell and convey the property involved, upon the acceptance of the option, in accordance with the terms, and the compliance on the part of the acceptor with its requirements. Tilton v. Sterling Coal & Coke Co., 77 Pac. 758, 760, 28 Utah, 173, 107 Am. St. Rep. 689.

An agreement to sell conditioned on the payment of a certain sum at a specified date, the prospective purchaser promising, in case of his failure to pay, to return the property delivered to him is an "option to purchase" and not a "contract" to pay the price or to return the property purchased. Smith & Standifer v. Ivey Bros., 44 South. 126, 127, 119 La. 357.

An "option" to purchase land is a "contract" by which the owner agrees with another that the latter shall have the right to buy the property within a specified time, but the owner does not thereby sell the property, nor agree to do so, but merely sells the right or privilege to buy at the election of the opposite party. Hamburger & Dreyling v. Thomas (Tex.) 118 S. W. 770, 773.

An option is an unaccepted offer to sell and convey within the time fixed and on the conditions set forth in the written agreement. An agreement whereby the owner of coal contracted to sell the same for a certain sum per acre, with the understanding that, if the first payment agreed on was not made on a day named, "or within 10 days thereafter, this agreement shall be considered as rescinded and neither party shall be bound thereby," was an option, and not a "contract to sell" the coal. Barnes v. Rea, 68 Atl. 836, 888, 219 Pa. 279.

A contract binding plaintiffs to convey to defendant an interest in mines in consideration of $500 paid on the signing and $14,500 within a year, and binding defendant to pay all taxes on the mines during the "life of this option," was properly treated as a "contract" on defendant's part to purchase, and not a mere "option." Chenoweth v. Butterfield, 94 Pac. 1131, 1132, 11 Ariz. 315.

An agreement embodied in a letter, reciting that the writer will give $250 for a tract of land, $100 payable on or about a specified date, and the balance on or before another date, and offering to give notes for the price, and a reply by the owner reciting his willingness to sell on the terms proposed, and enclosing notes for the price, is an agreement on the part of the owner to sell, and is not a mere option to sell. Roberts v. Braffett, 92 Pac. 789, 790, 33 Utah, 51.

An "option" is not a sale. An option to purchase does not become a "contract to purchase" until the privilege given by the option has been exercised by an acceptance. Owners of land agreed to sell and convey the same to another, and it was provided that a deed thereof should be placed in escrow to be delivered on payment of the balance of the price, and that, if the balance was not paid on or before a specified date, the deed should be returned to the owners. Held not a "contract of sale" of the land, but only an "option" to purchase. Kessler v. Pruitt, 93 Pac. 965, 971, 14 Idaho, 175 (citing Hopwood v. McCausland, 94 N. W. 469, 120 Iowa, 218).

A contract between the owner of land and another, reciting the receipt of a certain sum of money by the owner as earnest money and part payment for the land, providing that a warranty deed should be furnished as soon as the title should be examined, the title being guaranteed perfect, and providing that the entire deal should be closed within a certain number of days, and setting forth the terms of payment, amounted to an "option," and not to a "contract of sale." Indiana & A. Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Pharr, 102 S. W. 686, 689, 82 Ark. 573.

Even if a contract by which plaintiff agreed to sell mines to C. for $7,500, of which $3,500 was to be paid at a certain time and $4,000 later, was an "option," yet the transaction became one of sale on $1,000 being paid, and plaintiff executing an agreement reciting that, whereas, there was then "due and owing" $2,500 on the claim, he agreed to accept in lieu thereof the note of C. and another of even date for that amount payable

A contract for the sale of timber on land owned by a husband and wife, providing that if the owners failed to deliver the timber the purchaser might enter the land and cut it, was a "contract of purchase" and not an "option" on the land, and hence proceeds from said sale accruing after the death of the wife descended to the husband and a minor daughter. McIntosh Bros. v. Rutland, 41 South. 372, 88 Miss. 718.

Plaintiff, a mortgagor, conveyed the mortgaged land to S., the holder of the mortgage, whereupon S. surrendered the secured notes, took possession of the land, and dismissed the foreclosure proceedings. As a part of the same transaction S. agreed to reconvey to plaintiff, at any time within two years, any of the tracts, upon certain considerations. Held, that the agreement to reconvey was an "option," and not a "conditional sale contract," and plaintiff had no rights thereunder as a purchaser which would continue beyond the two years, unless he had within that time complied with its provisions, though the agreement did not expressly provide that time was of its essence. Neeson v. Smith, 92 Pac. 181, 182, 47 Wash. 386.

A written agreement, providing that an owner of land bound himself to sell it to another, for a specified sum to be paid as therein provided, and that if the vendor's title was not good the down payment should be refunded, but if he should furnish a good and sufficient warranty deed and abstract of title, and the other party should fail or refuse to carry out the contract, the down payment should be forfeited to the vendor, was an enforceable "contract of sale," and not an "option"; an agreement by the purchaser to take the land being implied, and the provision for the forfeiture of the down payment not rendering the contract an option in the absence of an agreement by the vendor to accept such sum as his liquidated damages. Heath v. Huffhines (Tex.) 152 S. W. 176, 177.

M. agreed in writing to sell certain land to plaintiff at a specified price per acre and convey it to any one to whom plaintiff might sell it on payment of such sum. The agreement recited a consideration of a dollar paid by plaintiff, and required payment of the balance within 12 months. Held that, plaintiff not being bound to purchase, the agreement was a mere "option," terminable at M.'s election before acceptance. Noble v. Mann (Ky.) 105 S. W. 152.

An agreement provided that in consideration of $1 and of a certain sum per acre for every acre used by the second parties for a railroad over the premises, to be paid on delivery of the deed after notice of acceptance, it was agreed that, if a railroad was not commenced across the land described within 12 months, the contract should be void, but, if the road is commenced or constructed, the second party should hold said land in fee simple, and pay reasonable damages for the buildings thereon, and, if they fail to complete the road within 24 months, shall pay penalty of $200 for every year they fail to complete the road. No notice of acceptance was ever given, and no railroad was commenced within the time mentioned. Held, that the agreement was an "option," and not an "executory contract." John v. Elkins, 59 S. E. 961, 963, 63 W. Va. 158.

Where the grantor placed the deed with a bank, to be delivered on the payment of a note given him by the grantee, the transaction did not amount to an "option to purchase," but constituted a "contract for the sale of land." As stated in McMillan v. Philadelphia Co., 28 Atl. 220, 159 Pa. 142: "The distinction between a 'contract of sale or lease' and an 'option' is broad and plain. An 'option' is an unaccepted offer. It states the terms and conditions on which the owner is willing to sell or lease his land, if the holder elects to accept them within the time limited. If the holder does so elect, he must give notice to the other party, and the accepted offer thereupon becomes a binding contract. If the acceptance is not made within the time fixed, the owner is no longer bound by his offer, and the option is at an end. A 'contract of sale or lease' fixes definitely all the relative rights and obligations of both parties at the time of its execution. The offer and acceptance are concurrent, since the minds of the contracting parties meet in the terms of the agreement." And as stated in Litz v. Goosling, 19 S. W. 527, 93 Ky. 185, 21 L. R. A. 128: "An 'option' is simply a contract by which the owner of property agrees with another that he shall have a right to buy the property at a fixed price within a certain time." Bonanza Mining & Smelter Co. v. Ware, 95 S. W. 765, 768, 78 Ark. 306 (citing Hopwood v. McCausland, 94 N. W. 469, 120 Iowa, 218; Hanly v. Watterson, 19 S. E. 536, 39 W. Va. 214; Johnston v. Trippe, 33 Fed. 530).

Order

A traveling salesman of a manufacturer, authorized to take orders subject to approval, sold a bill of goods to a buyer as indicated by an order specifying the goods and the price to be paid therefor, and signed by the salesman. Held, that the order did not constitute a "contract," in the absence of acceptance by the manufacturer. Gould v. Cates Chair Co., 41 South. 675, 676, 147 Ala. 629.

Taking an order is in substance the making of an executory contract of sale, and the making of a contract for the sale of intoxicating liquors is established by proof that an order therefor was taken. The words "contract for a sale" do not refer to a completed sale but to a sale agreed upon only; and in this sense there is no substantial difference between that transaction and taking an order. State v. Sherman, 107 Pac. 33, 35, 81 Kan. 374, 135 Am. St. Rep. 403.

CONTRACT PRICE

The term "contract price," in Ky. St. § 2463, as amended by laws 1896, c. 29, providing that mechanics' liens shall not be for more in the aggregate than the "contract price" of the original contractor, means the sum which the original contractor is actually entitled to receive for the whole work done by him; and where the original contractor is not entitled to any compensation because the building, when nearly completed, was wrecked, either through his own act or through the act of God, subcontractors may not enforce liens. Doll v. Young, 149 S. W. 854, 855, 149 Ky. 347.

CONTRACT RATE

When a statute fixes a rate of interest at 6 per cent., and provides that 8 per cent. may be contracted for, the former rate is generally termed the "legal rate," and the latter the "contract rate." McDonnell v. De Soto Sav. & Bldg. Ass'n, 75 S. W. 438, 443, 175 Mo. 250, 97 Am. St. Rep. 592.

CONTRACT TO ANSWER FOR DEFAULT OF ANOTHER

Where relators furnished supplies, labor, and materials to a subcontractor for the construction of a highway, and treated the latter as their debtor until after he absconded, the undertaking of the contractors, if any, to liquidate such indebtedness, was not an original undertaking, but a "contract to answer for default of another," within the statute of frauds. Miller v. State ex rel. Prather, 74 N. E. 260, 261, 35 Ind. App. 379.

CONTRACT TO CONVEY

An instrument, signed by both the parties thereto and acknowledged, which recited that one of the parties, in consideration of a sum paid and to be paid, had granted and conveyed, "with deed in fee," to the other party certain lands "to have and hold" on the condition that the other party should make a certain payment within a specified time, and recited that a lien was retained to secure payment, and that, on full payment, the wife of the granting party should join in a conveyance, did not amount to a deed, but to a "contract to convey." Powell v. Hunter, 102 S. W. 1020, 1023, 204 Mo. 393.

CONTRACT TO PURCHASE

Plaintiff having authorized an agent to sell land, defendants thereafter wrote to such agent to purchase the same land for them at a certain price. Plaintiff agreed with the agent to sell to defendants, and made a notation at the bottom of their letter, "I accept the above," which he signed. Held, that the letter was not a "contract to purchase," within the statute of frauds (Code 1904, § 2840), but a mere authority to the agent. Jordan & Davis v. Mahoney, 63 S. E. 467, 109 Va. 133.

A "contract to purchase or sell" creates a mutual obligation on the one party to sell and the other to purchase. A contract whereby a vendor agrees to convey premises to the purchaser, and whereby the latter agrees to buy the same, and which acknowledges a receipt of a part of the price, and which calls for partial payments monthly, the whole price to be paid by a fixed date, and which requires the purchaser to pay taxes and keep the improvements insured for the benefit of the vendor, and which provides for re-entry by the vendor on the purchaser's default with an option to retain payments made as for use and occupation, creates a "contract to purchase or sell." Brickell v. Atlas Assur. Co., 101 Pac. 16, 17, 10 Cal. App. 17 (quoting and adopting definition in Menzel v. Primm, 91 Pac. 756, 6 Cal. App. 204).

CONTRACTED

The inhibition in Act Cong. March 3, 1901 (51 Stat. 1093, c. 846) providing that no indebtedness shall be "contracted or incurred" by counties prior to the time of collecting county taxes in the calendar year next succeeding the opening of the territory of Oklahoma, excepting where authorized by the Secretary of the Interior, does not relate only to contractual obligations. The word "contracted" includes all of one class, and the word "incurred" includes another class. The word "incurred" is defined as to become liable or subject to; to render liable or subject to. Men contract debts. They incur liabilities. In the one case, they act affirmatively; in the other, the liability is incurred or cast upon them by operation of law. "Incurred" means something beyond contracts, something not embraced in the word "debt." It has been held to mean "became liable for," "brought on himself," "brought on, occasioned, or caused." Hence the word "incurred" means more, and embraces a different class of liabilities or obligations from those "contracted." It means the indebtedness imposed by salaries of county officers and other required and necessary expenses. Bank of Indian Territory v. Eckles, 91 Pac. 695, 697, 19 Okl. 159 (citing Webster's Dict.; Black's Law Dict.; Scott v. Tyler [N. Y.] 14 Barb. 202; Flanagan v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 50 N. W. 60, 83 Iowa, 639; Beekman v. Van Dolsen, 24 N. Y. Supp. 414, 70 Hun, 288; Deyo v. Stewart [N. Y.] 4 Denio, 101; Ashe v. Young, 3 S. W. 454, 68 Tex. 123).

Under Membership Corporations Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 35) § 11, which provides that the directors of membership corporations shall be liable for debts of the corporation contracted during their term of office and payable within one year or less from the date it was contracted, if an action on an unsatisfied judgment against the corporation is brought against the directors within one year of its return, a contingent liability, or a liability for breach of an executory contract, is not a "debt," and a debt is "contracted" only when the contingency upon which it is to arise occurs, and, where a lease for one year is executed by the directors of a membership corporation at a yearly rental payable monthly in advance, no debt is "contracted" for monthly installments of rent maturing after their term of office has expired. Dunn v. Neustadt, 129 N. Y. Supp. 161, 163, 72 Misc. Rep. 1.

The word "contracted," in Rev. St. 1895, art. 4367, requiring a railroad to maintain its general offices at the place it has contracted or may contract to locate the same, for a valuable consideration, etc., is used according to the common acceptance of the terms, and includes all methods of contracting, whether express or implied, and whether written or oral. Kansas City, M. & O. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Sweetwater (Tex.) 131 S. W. 251, 255.

A judgment against a patentee is not a lien on land acquired under the homestead laws, if the debt was "contracted prior to the issuing of the patent," under Rev. St. § 2296. The time when a debt was "contracted," within Rev. St. § 2296 relating to exemptions of homestead, is the time when the consideration was received and the obligation to pay was assumed by the patentee, though thereafter renewal notes were given, and by assignments the creditor changed. Ash v. Eriksson, 132 N. W. 997, 115 Minn. 478.

CONTRACTED APERTURE

"Contracted" means lessened, narrowed, diminished, abridged, or reduced, as well as drawn together. The Standard Dictionary gives the word the meaning "not extensive." The words "contracted aperture," as used in specifications of an article sought to be patented, should not be construed to mean an aperture once larger and made smaller by some means, natural or mechanical. Universal Brush Co. v. Sonn, 146 Fed. 517, 520.

The Morrison patent, No. 717,014, for a method of making brushes, which consists in depositing a mass of heated plastic composition, which becomes hard when cooled, within a chambered brush frame having a "contracted aperture," and forcing one end of the groups of bristles into the composition when in the plastic state, is not a pioneer, but covers merely an improvement on known methods, and must be limited strictly to the particular advance made. It is not infringed by a construction in which the aperture of the chamber is not contracted, but the sides are perpendicular to the bottom, but in which the chamber has a raised portion in the center, which assists in holding the composition in place by adhesion and also lightens the brush. The court said: "The words 'contracted aperture' mean smaller opening, an opening smaller than the chamber, an opening caused by drawing in, abridging, bringing within narrower compass, the walls of the chamber at that point." Universal Brush Co. v. Sonn, 154 Fed. 665, 668, 83 C. C. A. 422.

CONTRACTED OR INCURRED

The phrase "contracted or incurred," in Act Cong. March 3, 1901, c. 846, § 1 (31 Stat. 1094), providing that no indebtedness of any character shall be "contracted or incurred" by designated counties prior to the time for collecting county taxes for the calendar year, except where the same shall have been authorized by the Secretary of the Interior, includes two classes of county obligations, contractual and imposed. The word "contracted" includes all of one class, and the word "incurred" includes the other class. The word "incurred" embraces a different class of liability from those "contracted," and means the indebtedness imposed on the county by salaries of county officers and other required and necessary expenses, all of which, to be a valid charge, must be authorized or approved by the Secretary of the Interior. Bank of Indian Territory v. Eckles, 91 Pac. 695, 696, 19 Okl. 159.

CONTRACTING A DEBT

The issuance by the state of bonds in settlement and payment of an obligation acknowledged to be justly owing for past considerations is not "contracting a debt," within Const. art. 10, § 5, prohibiting any law authorizing the contracting of any debt on behalf of the state, except in enumerated cases. Hanly v. Sims, 93 N. E. 228, 229, 175 Ind. 345.

CONTRACTOR

See Independent Contractor; Joint Contract and Contractor; Original Contractor; Subcontractor.

A "contractor" is one who, in pursuit of an independent business, undertakes to do specific jobs of work for other persons without submitting himself to their control with respect to all petty details of the work. Halstead v. Stahl, 94 N. E. 1056, 47 Ind. App. 600 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, pp. 1534, 1535; Shearm. & R. Neg. §§ 76, 77; Carey-Lombard Lumber Co. v. Jones, 58 N. E. 347, 187 Ill. 203).

"The term 'contractor' is applicable to all persons following a regular, independent employment, in the course of which they offer their services to the public to accept orders and execute commissions for all who may employ them in a certain line of duty, using their own means for the purpose and being accountable only for final performance." Mullich v. Brocker, 97 S. W. 549, 551, 119 Mo. App. 332 (quoting Cooley, Torts [2d Ed.] p. 647).

"Although, in a general sense, every person who enters into a contract may be called a 'contractor,' yet the word, for want of a better one, has come to be used with special reference to a person who, in the pursuit of an independent business, undertakes to do a specific piece of work for other persons, using his own means and methods, without submitting himself to their control in respect to all its details; the true test of a 'contractor,' appearing to be that he renders the service in the course of an independent occupation, representing the will of his employer only as to the result of his work, and not as to the means by which it is accomplished." Caldwell v. Atlantic B. & A. R. Co., 49 South. 674, 161 Ala. 395 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, pp. 1534, 1535).

The term "contractor," as used in Acts 1898, No. 171, p. 415, § 14, imposing a license tax "upon master builders, stevedores, bill posters or tacking contractors and mechanics who employ assistance," is of uncertain significance. Every person engaged in business may be called a contractor, whether he be a retailer, a wholesaler, an insurer, a pawnbroker, a manufacturer, or a mechanic. State v. C. C. Hartwell Co., 41 South. 444, 445, 117 La. 144 (citing Theobalds v. Conner, 7 South. 690, 42 La. Ann. 789; State v. McNally, 12 South. 117, 45 La. Ann. 45; City of New Orleans v. O'Neil, 10 South. 245, 43 La. Ann. 1182).

As a county need not keep a highway open to the public or adjacent owners while ordinary or reasonable repairs are in progress, the only liability, if any, is under Laws 1898, p. 218, c. 115, § 11a, as added by Laws 1904, p. 653, c. 298, § 1, whereby the keeping a highway open till the engineer in charge certifies it is necessary to close it is placed on the "contractors," meaning the person having the contract and actually doing the work. Herbert v. Rockland County, 118 N. Y. Supp. 358, 363, 64 Misc. Rep. 352.

Although in a general sense every person who enters into a contract may be called a "contractor," yet that word, for want of a better one, has come to be used with special reference to a person who, in the pursuit of an independent business, undertakes to do a specific piece of work for other persons, using his own means and methods, without submitting himself to their control in respect to all its details. The true test of a contractor would seem to be that he renders service in the course of an independent occupation, representing the will of his employer only as to the result of his work, and not as the means by which it is accomplished. Jann's Adm'r v. Wm. H. McKnight & Co., 78 S. W. 862, 863, 117 Ky. 655 (quoting Shear. & R. Neg. § 164; Poor v. Madison River Power Co., 99 Pac. 947, 953, 38 Mont. 341; citing Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, §§ 164, 165; Jensen v. Barbour, 39 Pac. 906, 15 Mont. 582).

Laws 1897, p. 515, c. 418, § 2, defines the term "contractor" as a person who enters into a contract with the owner of real property for the improvement thereof. The question involved was as to whether the assignee of a "contractor" stood in the latter's place, so as to procure a discharge of a lien against the amount due a contractor from a municipal corporation. The court held in the affirmative, but said: "Under the strictest interpretation of the statute, an assignee of the contractor might procure a discharge of the lien if only the contractor himself be upon the bond. * * * We are of opinion, therefore, that this provision should not receive the strict construction contended for by the respondent, but that within the permission of the statute an assignee of the contract and of the moneys due thereupon may procure a discharge of the lien by filing an undertaking in which the assignee shall appear as principal and with such surety as is provided by the act of which the justice may approve." In re Hudson Waterworks, 98 N. Y. Supp. 33, 35, 111 App. Div. 860.

Rev. Code 1852, as amended to 1893, p. 818, c. 110 (16 Del. Laws, c. 145); provides that any person who has furnished work or materials or both for a building under any contract with the owner thereof, or his agent, or with any contractor, may obtain a lien, subject to the restriction that no contractor who shall have contracted for the erection of the structure in whole or in part shall file his claim until after 90 days from the completion of the building, but he shall file the same within 30 days after the expiration of the 90 days, and all others shall file their claims within the 90 days from the completion of the work and labor performed, etc. Held, that the "contractor" entitled to file his claim after 90 days is one who has furnished both labor and materials under contract with the owner, all other persons being required to file their claims within 90 days; and hence, where petitioner performed labor and furnished materials for a building under contracts, but with the contractor, his claim, not filed within 90 days after the completion of the labor or the last delivery of materials, was too late. Cantera v. Trustees of Eighth St. Baptist Church of Wilmington (Del.) 84 Atl. 1035, 1036.

Where defendant railroad company contracted with an individual for the construction of an extension of the railroad, and the contractor in turn made a contract with plaintiff, a foreign corporation, for the same work, which contract was guaranteed by the railroad company, and after completion of the work an arbitration followed and an award was made, a judgment for plaintiff on the award against the railroad company was conclusive in an action on a scire facias sur judgment, that the plaintiff in its relation to the railroad company was a "contractor" within the resolutions of January 21, 1843 (P. L. 367), and April 4, 1862 (P. L. 235), giving contractors building railroads prior liens. Pittsburg Const. Co. v. West Side Belt R. Co., 81 Atl. 884, 886, 232 Pa. 578.

Acts 1899, p. 83 (Van Epps' Code, § 6176), provides that "when work done or material furnished for the improvement of real estate is done or may be furnished upon the employment of a contractor, or some other person than the owner, and in that case, the lien given by this section shall attach upon the real estate improved, as against such true owner, for the amount of the work done or material furnished, and unless such true owner shows that such lien has been waived in writing, or produces the sworn statement of the contractor, or other person, at whose instance the work was done or material was furnished, that the agreed price or reasonable value thereof has been paid; provided that in no event shall the aggregate amount of liens set up hereby exceed the contract price of the improvements made." Held, that the word "contractor" is not to be construed in its technical sense, which would embrace any person who had any contract of any character, but is to be given its limited, colloquial sense, meaning a person engaged in the business of making contracts for the improvement of real estate, and the other persons referred to in the statute embrace that class who may furnish material for the improvement of real estate, but may not be engaged in a business commonly known as the business of a contractor. Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. v. Peters Land Co., 51 S. E. 725, 727, 123 Ga. 723.

A contractor rented from a third person a hoist elevator with appliances, which were installed in a building under construction. The contractor ran the elevator with his own employees, with the exception of the engineer, who ran the engine, who moved the elevator on signals by the employees of the contractor. The compensation of the engineer was included in the rental for the machinery. Held, that the third person was not a "contractor and owner," within Laws 1899, p. 351, c. 192, § 20, requiring contractors and owners constructing buildings to inclose shafts or openings in each floor. Anderson v. Pelham Hoist Elevating Co., 113 N. Y. Supp. 989, 990, 129 App. Div. 639.

St. 1878, p. 152, c. 209, provides that, when public buildings are to be built upon which liens might attach for lumber and materials if they belonged to private persons, it shall be the duty of the officers or agents contracting in behalf of the commonwealth, to provide sufficient security, by bond or otherwise, for payment by the "contractor and all subcontractors" for all labor performed or furnished and all materials used in the construction of the building. It is not the meaning of this statute that the debt to be secured shall be due from the contractor and subcontractor jointly, but the words are used distributively and require only that the debt shall be due from either the contractor or some one of the subcontractors. "It is enough if it be due from any one of them. The primary purpose of the use of the phrase 'contractor and all subcontractors' is not to exclude them from the right to a lien, but to describe the individual debtors whose creditors on account of labor and materials are to be secured." Fosburgh Co. v. Hampden County, 90 N. E. 851, 856, 204 Mass. 494.

The term "contractor," within Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. Okl. 1903, § 386, granting cities of the first class power to levy and collect an occupation tax on contractors, is one who contracts or covenants, either with a public body or private parties, to construct works and erect buildings on a large scale at a certain price or rate. The power is not sufficiently generic to cover "persons doing contract work"; and that part of an ordinance seeking to levy such tax on persons doing contract work is illegal and void. In re Unger, 98 Pac. 999, 1001, 1 Okl. Cr. 222 (quoting and adopting the definitions in Century Dictionary and Webster's International Dictionary).

"In its primary meaning, the word 'contractor' means one who agrees to do anything for another. * * * The courts of this state in lien cases have recognized the broader meaning of the term, and have recognized a contractor as one who agrees to do a specific work for another upon his own responsibility and credit." One who agrees to sell machinery to be delivered f. o. b. cars at his factory and set up by the buyer is not a contractor for the furnishing thereof, so as to entitle the person from whom he subsequently buys the machinery, and who delivers it to him, to a mechanic's lien as a subcontractor under Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 7255, but is a materialman. Caulfield v. Polk, 46 N. E. 932, 933, 17 Ind. App. 429.

A superintendent of public schools is not a "contractor," within Const. art. 4, § 21, prohibiting the Legislature from authorizing extra compensation to any contractor, etc., after the contract has been entered into or the services rendered. Attorney General ex rel. Zacharias v. Board of Education of City of Detroit, 118 N. W. 606, 609, 154 Mich. 584.

Lessee

A "contractor" is one who, as an independent business, undertakes to do specific jobs of work without submitting himself to control as to the petty details. Lessees who agreed to erect a permanent building upon the leased lot were not "contractors" within the meaning of the mechanic's lien statute. Carey-Lombard Lumber Co. v. Jones, 58 N. E. 347, 349, 187 Ill. 203.

Though in a general sense every party to a contract is a 'contractor,' the term as used in statutes relating to mechanics' liens has a restricted meaning. It refers to one who, under contract with the owner, undertakes for a consideration to furnish the material, labor, and superintendence required in the improvement of the owner's premises, either in the erection of a structure thereon, or in the alteration or repair of one in existence. A lessee, who, for the purpose of enhancing the value of his leasehold, agrees to make improvements at his cost, is not a "contractor" who is to be paid a specific consideration, for which, in case of nonpayment, he is entitled to a lien. Dougherty-Moss Lumber Co. v. Churchill, 90 S. W. 405, 407, 114 Mo. App. 578.

The word "contractor," as used in a statute giving a lien for work done and material furnished for the improvement of real estate on the employment of a contractor, is not to be construed in its technical sense, which would embrace any person who had any contract of any character, but is to be given its limited colloquial sense, meaning a person engaged in the business of making contracts for the improvement of real estate. A tenant does not come within the meaning of the phrase "contractor, or some other person," even though the instrument under which he became a tenant specifically provided for the erection of the building into which the materials of the claimant went. Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Shivers, 53 S. E. 610, 611, 125 Ga. 218 (citing Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. v. Peters Land Co., 51 S. E. 725, 123 Ga. 726).

Materialman

A materialman is one whose charge is for materials alone. If his charge is for work and labor in putting the materials in the building, then he is a "contractor," and not a materialman, within the meaning of P. L. N. J. 1898, p. 538, c. 226, § 3, providing that, when a contractor shall refuse to pay any person who has furnished materials for the erection of a building for which a contract has been filed, it shall be the duty of such materialman to give written notice, etc., in order to procure a lien. Beckhard v. Rudolph, 59 Atl. 253, 256, 68 N. J. Eq. 315.

Under Laws 1897, p. 516, c. 418, § 3, giving a lien to a "contractor, subcontractor, laborer, or materialman, who performs labor or furnishes material for the improvement of real property," the terms "contractor," "subcontractor," "laborer," and "materialman," while they refer primarily to the man who has a formal contract with the owner, or a subcontractor, with the contractor, or who performs manual labor or furnished material, also embrace the man who buys the labor and material which enter into the improvement. Kerwin v. Post, 104 N. Y. Supp. 1005, 1007, 120 App. Div. 179.

Under Lien Law (Consol. Laws, c. 33) § 2, defining a "contractor" as one entering into a contract with the owner of real property for the improvement thereof, and defining a materialman as any person other than the contractor furnishing materials for such improvement, and defining the term "improvement" as including the erection, alteration, or repair of any structure on real estate, and any work done on the property or materials furnished for its improvement, a contract requiring one to furnish all the window frames, sash, glass, and trim in and to buildings in course of construction for a lump sum, payable in installments as the work progressed, and requiring him to make a large part of the materials according to plans, is a contract for the permanent improvement of real estate within the lien law, and he is entitled to a lien for the materials furnished and work done. Western Sash, Door & Lumber Co. v. Gaul Const. Co., 126 N. Y. Supp. 1110, 1111.

Code Civ. Proc. § 3414, makes a laborer's or materialman's lien prior to a contractor's. Lien Law (Consol. Laws, c. 33) § 2, defines a "contractor" as one who contracts with an owner of land to improve it, a "materialman" as one, other than a contractor, who furnishes material for such improvement, and an "improvement" as including work done on property or "materials furnished for its permanent improvement." Held, that the lien of one who installed plumbing of one who furnished trim for the building under contract with the owner, and of one who sold brick and mason's building materials to the owner for use in the building, are all on equality, being entitled to preference in the order of time. Jackson v. Egan, 94 N. E. 211, 200 N. Y. 496.

Subcontractors

Under a statute making railroad companies liable for debts for labor contracted by any contractor for the construction of any part of the railroad, the word "contractor" includes "subcontractors." Redmond v. Galena & S. W. Ry. Co., 39 Wis. 426, 430.

The phrase "persons supplying the contractor with labor and material," used in Act. Cong. Aug. 13, 1894, and Act Cong. Feb. 24, 1905, providing that "persons supplying the contractor with labor and material" shall have a certified copy of the contract and bond for the purposes of an action thereon, etc., includes not only a subcontractor, but one furnishing labor and materials to the subcontractor for carrying out the work contracted for. Mankin v. United States, to Use of Ludowici-Celadon Co., 80 Sup. Ct. 174, 176, 215 U. S. 533, 54 L. Ed. 315.

"Contractor" is defined by the Standard Dictionary as one who executes plans under a contract; by the Century Dictionary, as one who contracts to furnish supplies, or to construct work, or erect buildings, or perform any work or service at a certain price or rate. One who contracts with a subcontractor to have the sole hauling, at a certain amount per hundredweight, of all the cement needed for the structure, not being bound to personal service, and the amount of work requiring assistants, is not an employé, but a subcontractor of the subcontractor, and therefore not within Rev. St. 1898, §§ 3314, 3315, giving a lien to a principal contractor, subcontractor, or employé of either, who performs any work or labor for, in, or about the erection or construction. Farmer v. St. Croix Power Co., 98 N. W. 880, 884, 117 Wis. 76, 98 Am. St. Rep. 914.

Act March 30, 1892, expressly provides that the lien given on moneys due on a contract for a municipal improvement shall exist in favor of subcontractors and their assigns or legal representatives. Subsequent sections, relating to the time of attachment of the lien or the procedure for recovery, referred to the liability of the "contractor" for the claim preferred, and section 14 (P. L. p. 373) defines "contractor" as meaning the person with whom the contract of the municipality is made. Held, that such subsequent sections did not so modify section 1 as to deprive a subcontractor of his right to a lien thereunder. Herman & Grace v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Essex County, 64 Atl. 742, 745, 71 N. J. Eq. 541.

Lien Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. '83) § 19, subd. 4, provides that a lien may be discharged by an owner or contractor executing an undertaking to the clerk of the county where the premises are situated in such sums as the court or judge may direct, not less than the amount claimed in the notice of the lien, conditioned for the payment of any judgment which may be rendered against the property for the enforcement of the lien. Held, that the right to discharge a lien by filing an undertaking is not limited to the contractor named in the notice of the lien, but accrues to any one within the meaning of the term "contractor," as defined by section 2, viz., a person who enters into a contract with the owner of real property for the improvement thereof; and hence an original contractor, having agreed to keep the premises free from liens, could not be deprived of the right to an order fixing an amount of the undertaking necessary to discharge a lien; because the lienors, who were subcontractors, did not name the original contractor in their notice of lien as a contractor. In re Hedden Const. Co., 129 N. Y. Supp. 827, 828, 72 Misc. Rep. 153.

CONTRARY

See Cause to the Contrary.

CONTRARY TO GOOD MORALS

A contract entered into by an outgoing board of county commissioners for county printing is not "contrary to good morals," within Civ. Code, § 2240, providing that "that is not lawful which is * * * contrary to good morals," though entered into shortly before the expiration of the term of office of members of such board, and after the election of a new board. Picket Pub. Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Carbon County, 92 Pac. 524, 526, 36 Mont. 188, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1115, 122 Am. St. Rep. 352, 12 Ann. Cas. 986.

CONTRARY TO HIS TRUST

An information charging embezzlement, and alleging that defendant did "feloniously convert, embezzle, and appropriate to his own use, contrary to his said trust as such officer as aforesaid," was held sufficient on the ground that "contrary to his trust" was the equivalent of "not in the due and lawful execution of his trust." People v. McMahill, 87 Pac. 404, 405, 4 Cal. App. 225 (citing People v. Ward, 66 Pac. 372, 134 Cal. 301).

CONTRARY TO LAW

A verdict is "contrary to law," within Civ. Code Proc. § 304, subd. 6, authorizing a new trial where the verdict is "contrary to law," when it is contrary to the instructions, whether they are right or wrong; the term "law," referring to the law as declared or given by the court, and not as it should have been given. Lynch v. Snead Architectural Iron Works, 116 S. W. 693, 695, 132 Ky. 241, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 852 (citing Gausman v. Paff, 10 Ky. Law Rep. 240; Palmer v. Johnson's Adm'r, 13 Ky. Law Rep. 590; Burns v. McGibben, 9 Ky. Law Rep. 441; Bertman v. Ebert's Adm'r, 9 Ky. Law Rep. 198).

The term "contrary to law," as used in Rev. St. § 3082, providing for the forfeiture of merchandise fraudulently or knowingly imported or brought into the United States "contrary to law," etc., and the fining of the offender, relates to specific statutory provisions not found in the section itself, as the importation of merchandise is not per se contrary to law, and a count charging the violation of the section in question must show what particular provisions of the statute are violated. One Pearl Chain v. United States, 123 Fed. 371-373, 59 C. C. A. 499 (quoting and adopting Keck v. United States, 19 Sup. Ct. 254, 172 U. S. 434, 43 L. Ed. 505).

Rev. St. § 3082, provides that if any person shall fraudulently or knowingly import or bring into the United States, or assist in so doing, any merchandise "contrary to law," or shall receive, conceal, buy, sell, or in any manner facilitate the transportation, concealment, or sale of such merchandise after importation, knowing the same to have been imported contrary to law, such merchandise shall be forfeited and the offender fined or imprisoned. Held, that the words "contrary to law," as used in such section, relate to legal provisions other than those found in such section. Rogers v. United States, 180 Fed. 54, 56, 103 C. C. A. 408, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 264.

The words "contrary to law" in an information do not enlarge or extend the force and effect of the words used to describe the act imputed to defendant, so as to make it unlawful, when it is not so by the description itself. An information for misprision having shown knowledge of the felon's abode, an allegation that defendant "did conceal and keep secret, contrary to the law of the land," was insufficient, as not showing a neglect to discover the felon and his place to the officers of justice. State v. Wilson, 67 Atl. 533, 534, 80 Vt. 249.

On proceedings under section 3082, Rev. St., for the forfeiture of merchandise imported "contrary to law," which would have been admissible free of duty on compliance with regulations which the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized by law to prescribe, it may not be maintained in defense that the regulations have not been promulgated, and that therefore the importer was justified in importing the merchandise according to his own convenience, independently of the requirements of law. Such an importation would be "contrary to law," under said section. United States v. Fifty Waltham Watch Movements, 139 Fed. 291, 296.

That Rev. St. § 2802, provides for a forfeiture and penalty of treble the value of an article subject to duty found in the baggage of a person arriving within the United States, which was not mentioned to the collector, does not indicate that the offense is not within section 3082, imposing a penalty of fine or imprisonment for fraudulently or knowingly importing any merchandise "contrary to law," the latter section making the act a crime and imposing a severer penalty for the act done fraudulently and knowingly. United States v. Chesbrough, 176 Fed. 778, 783.

A complaint by a city by its attorney which alleges that accused did the prohibited act "contrary to law" fails to charge a violation of a municipal ordinance; the phrase

"contrary to law" having been appropriated by Code 1907, § 7353, to the definition in indictments of violations of statutes, and the word "law," unless otherwise qualified in a penal proceeding, presumptively referring to the common law, in the absence of a statute giving it another meaning. Rosenberg v. City of Selma, 52 South. 742, 743, 168 Ala. 195.

CONTRARY TO LAW AND EVIDENCE

Under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 817, declaring that new trials in felonies shall be awarded where the verdict is "contrary to law and evidence," where accused is found guilty of an offense of inferior grade, but of the same nature to that proved, a conviction of manslaughter, while the evidence shows guilt of a higher grade of homicide, is not prejudicial to accused. High v. State, 112 S. W. 939, 940, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 333.

The words "contrary to law or evidence," as used in Pen. Code, § 1181, subd. 6, providing for the granting of a new trial where the verdict is contrary to the law or evidence, do not mean that a new trial may be granted for misconduct of the district attorney. People v. Amer, 90 Pac. 698, 699, 151 Cal. 303.

CONTRARY TO THE FORM OF THE STATUTE

An indictment, concluding "contrary to the form of the statute," clearly indicates that the prosecution is under a statute, and not the common law. Stell v. Territory, 71 Pac. 653, 654, 12 Okl. 377.

CONTRARY TO THE GENERAL LAWS OF THE LAND

The phrase "contrary to the general laws of the land," when used in reference to the acts to restrain which a writ of prohibition will lie, means nothing more than an excessive jurisdiction, and does not authorize the issuance of such writ to regulate mere erroneous rulings. People ex rel. Hummel v. Davy, 94 N. Y. Supp. 1037, 1039, 105 App. Div. 598.

CONTRIBUTE—CONTRIBUTION

See Substantial Contribution.

The meaning of the word "contribute" is to furnish as a share or constituent part of anything. Sharpton v. Augusta & A. Ry. Co., 51 S. E. 553, 556, 72 S. C. 162 (quoting and adopting definition in 9 Cyc. p. 791).

"One thing is understood to 'contribute' to a given result when such thing has some share or agency in producing such result, and is not understood to convey the idea that such thing was the efficient cause of such result, in the sense that without it such result would not have occurred, for it is possible such result may have occurred, even in the absence of the thing which is supposed to have had some share or agency in producing such result." Wragge v. South Carolina & G. R. Co., 25 S. E. 76, 83, 47 S. C. 105, 33 L. R. A. 191, 58 Am. St. Rep. 870.

The word "contributed," in the petition in an action against a street railroad for injuries to a boy at a crossing struck by a car, which alleged several pretermitted duties, and averred several acts of negligence, and followed these allegations with the averment, "all of which directly contributed to cause the injuries hereinafter complained of," did not plead plaintiff's own contributory negligence, and plaintiff was entitled to use the word "contributed," without thereby implying his own negligence, and the allegation meant that the pleaded acts of negligence "contributed" with one another to form an aggregation which caused the injuries complained of. Deschner v. St. Louis & M. R. R. Co., 98 S. W. 737, 744, 200 Mo. 310.

The word "contributed," when used with reference to plaintiff's negligence, means having a share or agency, in the sense of being the proximate cause of the injury. Burns v. Southern R. Co., 43 S. E. 679, 681, 65 S. C. 229.

Within Civ. Code 1902, § 1347, providing that no person can recover for injury or damage through a defect or negligent repair of a highway, if he in any way brought about the injury or negligently "contributed thereto," the injured party does not "contribute" to the injury, unless his act of negligence was a direct and proximate cause thereof. Duncan v. Greenville County, 53 S. E. 387, 368, 73 S. C. 254.

The words "caused" and "contributed," in an instruction in an action for personal injury to an employé, stating that the jury should find for defendant if plaintiff's negligence "caused or contributed" to the injury, were synonymous. Fourche River Valley & I. T. Ry. Co. v. Tippet, 142 S. W. 520, 524, 101 Ark. 376.

The jury being instructed that plaintiff to recover must prove he did not contribute to his injuries by his own negligence, they will be held to have understood that the word "contributed" was used in the sense of "caused," in the further instructions as to determining whether defendant's negligence, if they find any, was the proximate cause of or contributed to plaintiff's injuries. Collier v. McClintic-Marshall Const. Co. (Iowa) 138 N. W. 522, 523.

The use of the word "contributed" in an instruction in personal injury cases, in speaking of the relation of defendant's negligence to the injury, has been frequently condemned by the courts, where there is for consideration only the negligence of defendant and plaintiff, for in such cases the negligence of defendant must be the sole cause of the injury, in order to entitle plaintiff to recover. In other words, in such cases the mere contributing to an injury by the negligence of defendant is not sufficient to authorize a recovery, for it may be plaintiff's negligence contributed thereto as well, in which event, of course, no recovery could be allowed. But where plaintiff was without fault, and the injury occurred through negligence of defendant, which concurred with other causes in producing it, the use of the word "contributed," in speaking of the relation of defendant's negligence to the injury, is not improper. Troll v. St. Louis Portland Cement Co., 140 S. W. 963, 966, 160 Mo. App. 501.

CONTRIBUTION (In Practice)

Strictly speaking, the right of "contribution" does not arise out of a contract, but rests upon the principle that, where all are equally liable for the payment of a debt, all are bound equally to contribute to that purpose. Sledge v. Dobbs, 98 N. E. 243, 245, 254 Ill. 130.

The doctrine of "contribution" is not founded on contract, but on the principle that equality of burden as to a common right is equity; that, wherever there is a common right, the burden is also common. "The doctrine rests on the principle that, where the parties stand in equali jure, the law requires equality, which is equity; and one of them shall not be obliged to bear the burden for the ease of the rest." Vandiver v. Pollak, 19 South. 180, 181, 107 Ala. 547, 54 Am. St. Rep. 118 (quoting and approving Campbell v. Mesler [N. Y.] 4 Johns. Ch. 338, 8 Am. Dec. 570).

The doctrine of "contribution" is founded, not on contract, but on the principle that equality of burden as to a common right is equity, and the obligation to contribute arises from the nature of the relation between the parties. Lee v. Larkin, 109 N. Y. Supp. 480, 482, 125 App. Div. 302.

The right of "contribution" is one which belongs to one of two or more joint obligors, arising out of the relation of the parties, and is given to protect one of the joint obligors, where he has been compelled to discharge more than his share of the whole debt. The right of "contribution" is individual and personal growing out of what the individual himself does; and each is entitled to recover from the others what he has paid beyond his proper share. Yore v. Yore, 144 S. W. 847, 850, 240 Mo. 451.

CONTRIBUTORY INFRINGEMENT

"Contributory infringement" of a patent is the making and selling of one element of a combination covered by a patent, with the intention and for the purpose of bringing about its use in such a combination, and of aiding or abetting another to infringe, and it renders the maker and seller equally liable to the patentee with him who organizes the complete combination. Bullock Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co., 129 Fed. 105, 111, 63 C. C. A. 607.

"It would seem clear that 'contributory infringement' ought to include and does include more than the intentional aiding of one person by another in the unlawful making or selling, or using of the patented invention," and "the essence of 'contributory infringement' lies in concerting or planning with others in an unlawful invasion of patentee's rights." Cortelyou v. Charles Eneu Johnson & Co., 138 Fed. 110, 119 (quoting and adopting Goodyear Shoe Machinery Co. v. Jackson, 112 Fed. 146, 148, 50 C. C. A. 159, 55 L. R. A. 692).

"Contributory infringement" exists when one knowingly concert or acts with another in an unlawful invasion of a patentee's rights. If such assistance is given by furnishing an essential part of an infringing combination and the part furnished is adapted to no other use than an infringing use, such contribution makes him a contributory infringer; but, if the part furnished is adapted to other and lawful uses, in addition to infringing uses, then an intent to furnish for infringing use must be established before the furnisher can be held a contributory infringer. General Electric Co. v. Sutter, 186 Fed. 637, 638.

To sustain the jurisdiction of the court of a suit for infringement of a patent in a district wherein neither party resides or is a citizen under Act March 3, 1897, c. 395, 29 Stat. 695, there must have been a completed act of infringement by defendant in such district, and, where a contributory act is relied on as in the making and selling of an element in a patented combination, it must be shown to have resulted in a completed infringement. Consolidated Rubber Tire Co. v. Republic Rubber Co., 195 Fed. 768, 770.

A repairer who supplies an essential part of the patented combination for an infringing machine thereby becomes a "contributory infringer." Union Special Mach. Co. v. Maimin, 161 Fed. 748, 750.

The sale of ink to a purchaser of a rotary mimeograph sold with a license restriction that it could be used only with the ink supplied by the patentee, with the expectation that the ink sold would be used in connection with such mimeograph, constitutes "contributory infringement" of the patent. Henry v. A. B. Dick Co., 32 Sup. Ct. 364, 379, 224 U. S. 1, 56 L. Ed. 645.

"Contributory infringement" is intentional aid or co-operation in transactions which collectively constitute complete infringement. For example: Where a person furnishes one part of a patented combination, intending that it shall be assembled with the other parts thereof, and that the complete combination shall be used or sold, that person is liable to an action as infringer of the patent on the complete combination; and where a person furnishes a machine which is useful only for the purpose of making a patented article, intending that it shall be thus used, that person is himself liable for any infringement which is afterward committed in the manufacture of that article with that machine. So, also, a person is chargeable with contributory infringement of a patent on a machine, where he furnishes articles for that machine to operate upon, intending that the machine shall be used by operating on those articles. Furthermore, where a person furnishes a machine, composition of matter, or other article, which is particularly adapted to be used in performing a patented process, and which the person furnishing the same intends shall be thus used, that person is liable as a contributory infringer for any infringement which afterward occurs in accordance with his intention. But where the machine or other property thus furnished is useful for some other purpose than to be a part of a patented combination, or to make a patented article, or to be operated upon by a patented machine, or to be used in performing a patented process, and where he who furnishes the property does not intend or know, when furnishing the same, that it is to be thus used, he incurs no liability to an action for infringement; but if he knew or intended that the property furnished by him was to be used in either of the infringing ways, he cannot defeat an action for infringement by showing that the furnished property could have been used in some noninfringing way." A. B. Dick Co. v. Henry, 149 Fed. 424, 428.

CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE

See Free from Contributory Negligence;
Proximate Contributory Negligence.

"Contributory negligence" is nothing more nor less than negligence on the part of the person injured; and the rules of law applicable to the negligence of a defendant are applicable thereto. Ladow v. Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co., 119 Pac. 250, 259, 28 Okl. 15.

"Contributory negligence" is the want of that care which the law requires of a plaintiff under the circumstances, and which causes or contributes to the injury sued for. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Dillard, 94 S. W. 617, 619, 78 Ark. 520.

There are two essential elements in "contributory negligence"—a want of ordinary care, and a causal connection between the act and the injury complained of. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Prunty, 133 Fed. 13, 20, 66 C. C. A. 163 (citing Beach, Contrib. Neg. [2d Ed.] §§ 7, 19).

The term "contributory negligence" is usually employed to indicate some fault on the part of one who is seeking to recover for injuries resulting, at least in part, from the proven negligence of another, and the question is whether the injured party has also been at fault in such way as to contribute, with the negligence of the other party, to the resulting injury. Brown v. Rockwell City Canning Co., 110 N. W. 12, 13, 132 Iowa, 631.

Negligence as "contributory" only implies a supplemental cause; something else that also contributed to the effect. Lewis v. Barton Salt Co., 107 Pac. 783, 82 Kan. 163.

"Contributory negligence" is negligence of the plaintiff contributing to the injuries complained of. It is a defense, and if it is shown by the evidence to exist plaintiff cannot recover. Town of Sellersburg v. Ford, 79 N. E. 220, 222, 39 Ind. App. 94.

The forgetfulness or inattention to one's surroundings may and usually does constitute the very gist of "contributory negligence." Ft. Worth & R. G. Ry. Co. v. Robinson, 84 S. W. 410, 412, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 465 (citing Truntle v. North Star Woolen Mills Co., 58 N. W. 832, 57 Minn. 52).

"Contributory negligence" by a servant is a matter of conduct, and is not based upon an expressed or implied contract, like the doctrine of assumed risk. Miller v. White Bronze Monument Co., 118 N. W. 518, 522, 141 Iowa, 701, 18 Ann. Cas. 957.

A plaintiff who fails to do what the law requires, or what one of prudence would ordinarily do under the same or similar circumstances, is negligent, barring recovery. Oswald v. Utah Light & Ry. Co., 117 Pac. 46, 47, 39 Utah, 245.

"Contributory negligence" is a failure to act in a given case as a man of ordinary prudence would have acted in the same or other circumstances. Gulf Pipe Line Co. v. Clayton (Tex.) 150 S. W. 268, 271.

A servant is bound to use reasonable care for his own safety with reference to the tools and appliances furnished, whether the master has furnished tools and appliances reasonably safe or not. O'Toole v. New England Gas & Coke Co., 87 N. E. 608, 609, 201 Mass. 126.

"Negligence" and "contributory negligence" are relative terms, to be determined upon the facts of each case. Quinn v. West Jersey & S. R. Co., 74 Atl. 456, 78 N. J. Law, 511, 539.

Heedlessness is not the equivalent of "contributory negligence." Decatur Light, Power & Fuel Co. v. Newsom (Ala.) 59 South. 615, 617.

In determining whether one injured was guilty of "contributory negligence," it is necessary to consider his conduct prior to the accident as well as at the time of the injury, and if, with the knowledge of which he was possessed and with which he was chargeable, he was not justified in doing as he did, he was negligent. Snow v. Coe Brass Mfg. Co., 66 Atl. 881, 882, 80 Conn. 63.

"Contributory negligence" in its judicial sense is usually the personal default of the plaintiff himself. The general rule is that, when the plaintiff's own want of ordinary care is a proximate cause of the injury, he cannot recover damages from another therefor. Smith v. Centennial Eureka Min. Co., 75 Pac. 749, 756, 27 Utah, 307 (citing Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 100).

In actions arising out of noncontractual relations, the term "incurring risk" is synonymous with "contributory negligence." Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Lynn (Ind.) 95 N. E. 577, 582.

"Acquiescence with knowledge" is not synonymous with "contributory negligence." An averment in a petition that the injury occurred without fault of the plaintiff is insufficient. Hesse v. Columbus, S. & H. R. Co., 50 N. E. 354, 355, 58 Ohio St. 167.

Application of doctrine

"Contributory negligence" of a servant is a matter relating solely to torts, and is governed by the principles peculiarly applicable to that branch of jurisprudence. Brown v. Rome Machine & Foundry Co., 62 S. E. 720, 724, 5 Ga. App. 142.

The term "contributory negligence" is properly applied to acts of negligence on plaintiff's part that may have contributed to the injury, and not to negligence subsequent to the injury aggravating the same. Indiana Union Traction Co. v. Ohne, 89 N. E. 507, 508, 45 Ind. App. 632.

The doctrine of contributory negligence does not apply unless there is negligence on both sides; "contributory negligence" being such an act or omission of plaintiff amounting to want of ordinary care as, concurring or co-operating with defendant's negligence, proximately caused the injury complained of. Fourche River Valley & I. T. Ry. Co. v. Tipsett, 142 S. W. 520, 524, 101 Ark. 376.

"Contributory negligence" rests in the law of tort as applied to negligence, and, when such defense is established, the plaintiff's action is defeated, not because of any agreement, expressed or implied, to assume the risks of employment, but because his own misconduct or want of ordinary care was a proximate cause of the injury. To be guilty of contributory negligence, the employé must by his acts or omissions contribute proximately and concurrently with the negligence of the master to produce the injury. Such negligence by an employé involves a breach of some duty owed by the employé to the employer growing out of such relation, which in this case involved the duty of the plaintiff to exercise ordinary care in the management of the machinery under his control and in protecting himself against personal injury from contact therewith, an injury the probable consequence of which would interfere with or interrupt the performance of his duties under the contract with his employer. James v. Fountain Inn

Mfg. Co., 61 S. E. 391, 393, 80 S. C. 232 (citing Bodie v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 39 S. E. 715, 61 S. C. 479).

Same—As implying defendant's negligence

The term "contributory negligence" implies the existence of negligence on the part of defendant. Hummer's Ex'x v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 108 S. W. 885, 887, 128 Ky. 486.

"Contributory negligence" necessarily presupposes primary negligence, which would of itself sustain an action, but for the concurrence of the contributory negligence. Booth v. McLean Contracting Co., 70 Atl. 104, 105, 108 Md. 456 (quoting and adopting the definition in Vonderhorst Brewing Co. v. Amrhine, 56 Atl. 833, 836, 98 Md. 414).

Same—Willful or wanton injury

"Contributory negligence" is not a defense to an action for inflicting a willful or wanton injury. Murphy v. Wabash R. Co., 128 S. W. 481, 486, 228 Mo. 56.

The doctrine of "contributory negligence" has no application in cases of aggressive acts resulting in wanton or willful injury. "The doctrine that 'contributory negligence' will defeat recovery has no application where the injury is the result of the willful, wanton, reckless conduct of defendant." Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Svensden, 108 Pac. 262, 264, 13 Ariz. 111.

In a personal injury action against a railroad, where the evidence tended to show a conscious and reckless failure of defendant's train crew to use due care, the refusal to direct a verdict on the ground of plaintiff's contributory negligence was proper, "contributory negligence" not being a defense where defendant willfully or recklessly disregards its duty; and the fact that the verdict was for compensatory damages only, thus excluding the idea that the injury was willfully inflicted, did not render the ruling erroneous. Mills v. Atlantic Coast Line Ry. Co., 67 S. E. 565, 566, 85 S. C. 463.

To constitute "contributory negligence," barring a recovery, plaintiff's negligence must have been a portion of the efficient proximate cause of the injury complained of, and defendant's negligence must not have been willful, wanton, or malicious. Where a person's failure to exercise reasonable care for his own protection concurs with the mere negligence of another and proximately causes injury, there can be no recovery at common law; but the common-law rule may be modified by statute by allowing a recovery, but requiring the damages to be apportioned where plaintiff and defendant are both negligent, provided such statutes observe the constitutional limitations. Florida Ry. Co. v. Dorsey, 52 South. 963, 966, 59 Fla. 260.

Assumption of risk distinguished

"Assumption of risk" and "contributory negligence" are not synonymous. Parks

v. St. Louis & S. R. Co., 77 S. W. 70, 73, 178 Mo. 108, 101 Am. St. Rep. 425.

"Assumption of risk" is a form of "contributory negligence." Tosty v. Morgan Co., 139 N. W. 402, 404, 151 Wis. 601.

The defenses of "assumed risk" and "contributory negligence" are separate and independent; the former arising out of contract relations, and the latter not. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Brogan (Ark.) 151 S. W. 699, 704.

"Assumption of the risk of unusual danger is a form of 'contributory negligence.'" But it is not the equivalent of contributory negligence where other forms, phrases, or species of contributory negligence are shown. Campshure v. Standard Mfg. Co., 118 N. W. 633, 634, 137 Wis. 155 (quoting Hennessey v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 74 N. W. 554, 99 Wis. 109).

"'Assumption of risk' and 'contributory negligence' are separate and distinct defenses; the one is based on contract, the other on tort; the former is not conditioned or limited by the existence of the latter, and is alike available whether the risk assumed is great or small, and whether the danger from it is imminent and certain, or remote and improbable." Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. O'Neaky, 90 S. W. 300, 302, 6 Ind. T. 180 (quoting and adopting St. Louis Cordage Co. v. Miller, 126 Fed. 495, 508, 61 C. C. A. 477, 63 L. R. A. 551).

The distinction between "assumed risk" and "contributory negligence," as defenses, is that, if assumption of risk is the issue, knowledge of defective conditions and acquiescence therein are fatal to the plaintiff's case, while, if contributory negligence is the issue, knowledge of defective conditions and acquiescence therein may be fatal, or may not be, dependent upon whether a person of ordinary prudence under the circumstances would have done what the injured person did. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Hanson (Tex.) 125 S. W. 63, 68 (citing St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Mathis, 107 S. W. 530, 101 Tex. 342; Southern Pac. Co. v. Allen, 106 S. W. 441, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 66; St. Louis Cordage Co. v. Miller, 61 C. C. A. 477, 126 Fed. 495, 63 L. R. A. 551; Davis Coal Co. v. Pollard, 62 N. E. 492, 158 Ind. 607, 92 Am. St. Rep. 319; Rase v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 120 N. W. 360, 107 Minn. 260, 21 L. R. A. [N. S.] 133).

"Assumed risk" and "contributory negligence" are distinct doctrines of law. The distinction, briefly and generally stated, is: Where negligence or want of proper care on the part of a person brings about injury which he suffers, then "contributory negligence" could be applied to his act; where a servant is injured from one of the more known dangers ordinarily incident to his service, without negligence on his part, then his injury is ascribed to one of the ordinary risks of employment which he assumed in entering upon the service. Louisiana & Texas Lumber Co. v. Brown, 109 S. W. 950, 954, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 482.

"The two defenses of 'assumption of risk' and 'contributory negligence' are unlike because of the different states of mind in which they are rooted. Negligence is the result of inattention or oversight, whereas consent to a risk implies knowledge of the danger of the act to be performed, and the performance of the act understandingly and without constraint." A section hand was not guilty of contributory negligence in failing to use a brake and stop the hand car, when such act would merely have added to the sudden stoppage of the car which caused his injury. Lee v. St. Louis, M. & S. E. R. Co., 87 S. W. 12, 15, 112 Mo. App. 372 (quoting and adopting language of Dean v. St. Louis Woodenware Co., 80 S. W. 292, 106 Mo. App. 167, citing Adolff v. Columbia Pretzel & Baking Co., 73 S. W. 323, 100 Mo. App. 206).

"Assumption of risk" and "contributory negligence" are entirely distinct. One has to do with contract, and the other rests in tort. "Assumption of risk" is the voluntary contract of an ordinarily prudent servant to take the chances of the known or obvious dangers of his employment and to relieve his master of liability therefor; while "contributory negligence" is the casual action or omission of the servant without ordinary care of the consequences, or the omission to use those precautions which ordinary prudence requires. Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Ponn, 191 Fed. 682, 687, 688, 112 C. C. A. 228.

While the doctrine of "assumption of risk" sometimes shades into that of "contributory negligence," there is a clear distinction between the doctrines; an employé being held to assume the risk of ordinary dangers of his occupation, and also those risks which are known to him or are so clearly observable that he may be presumed to know of them, while contributory negligence constitutes omission of an employé to use those precautions for his own safety which ordinary prudence requires. Wright v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., 197 Fed. 94, 96.

"Contributory negligence," as distinguished from 'assumption of risk,' rests in the law of torts as applied to negligence, and when such defense is established the plaintiff's action is defeated, not because of any agreement, expressed or implied, but because his own misconduct was a proximate cause of the injury. Nearly every case of contributory negligence on the part of an employé involves in a general sense some assumption of risk, because, in order to be guilty of contributory negligence, there must be the risk of apparent danger. When a servant risks this danger in the discharge of duty imposed on him in the course of usual duty, this would be, in an exact sense, a case of assumption of risk. But if he improperly risks the danger, which becomes the proximate cause of the injury, in doing that which is not imposed on him in the course of his usual duty, it would be contributory negligence. It should be said, however, that the two defenses are so similar that they may fade into each other." Montgomery v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 53 S. E. 987, 988, 73 S. C. 503 (quoting and approving definition in Bodie v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 39 S. E. 715, 718, 61 S. C. 468, 478).

Many cases seem to confuse an agreement to assume the risk of an employment, as it is known to be to the servant, and his "contributory negligence." That under certain circumstances the one sometimes comes very near the other, and cannot easily be distinguished from the other, may be conceded; but in most cases there is a broad line of distinction, and it is so in this case. For years employés worked in railroad yards in which blocks were not used, and yet no one would charge them with negligence in so doing. The switches and rails were mere perils of the employment. "Assumption of risk" is in such cases the acquiescence of any ordinarily prudent man in a known danger, the risk of which he assumes by contract. "Contributory negligence" in such cases is that action or nonaction in disregard of personal safety by one who, treating the known danger as a condition, acts with respect to it without due care of its consequences. The distinction has been recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States. Swick v. Aetna Portland Cement Co., 111 N. W. 115, 116, 147 Mich. 454.

The defenses of "assumption of risk" and "contributory negligence" must be regarded as distinct, and an injured servant, who has not been guilty of contributory negligence, may be precluded as a matter of law from recovery of damages from his master because he had assumed the risk. "Voluntary assumption negatives the idea of even prima facie liability. Contributory negligence displaces liability prima facie established. The former is mere passive subjection by the servant to risk of injury in known defective conditions. The latter is an act or omission on complainant's own part tending to add new danger to the situation, not necessarily incident to conditions, and bringing upon himself a harm caused not solely by them, but created in part, at least, by his own misconduct. 'Contributory negligence' is a breach of legal duty to take due care, imposed by law upon the servant, however unwilling or protesting he may be. Assumption of risk is not a duty, but is purely voluntary upon the part of the servant. The doctrine of assumption of risk rests on intelligent acquiescence with knowledge of danger and appreciation of the risks. The distinction varies from

"Contributory negligence" is not a defense to an action for inflicting a willful or wanton injury. Murphy v. Wabash R. Co., 128 S. W. 481, 486, 228 Mo. 56.

The doctrine of "contributory negligence" has no application in cases of aggressive acts resulting in wanton or willful injury. "The doctrine that 'contributory negligence' will defeat recovery has no application where the injury is the result of the willful, wanton, reckless conduct of defendant." Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Svensden, 108 Pac. 262, 264, 18 Ariz. 111.

In a personal injury action against a railroad, where the evidence tended to show a conscious and reckless failure of defendant's train crew to use due care, the refusal to direct a verdict on the ground of plaintiff's contributory negligence was proper, "contributory negligence" not being a defense where defendant willfully or recklessly disregards its duty; and the fact that the verdict was for compensatory damages only, thus excluding the idea that the injury was willfully inflicted, did not render the ruling erroneous. *Mills v. To constitute "contributory negligence," barring a recovery, plaintiff's negligence must have been a portion of the efficient proximate cause of the injury complained of, and defendant's negligence must not have been willful, wanton, or malicious. Where a person's failure to exercise reasonable care for his own protection concurs with the mere negligence of another and proximately causes injury, there can be no recovery at common law; but the common-law rule may be modified by statute by allowing a recovery, but requiring the damages to be apportioned where plaintiff and defendant are both negligent, provided such statutes observe the constitutional limitations. *Florida Ry. The result to the person injured is the same in both cases, but the underlying principles are different and should be carefully borne in mind in every case. The maxim, 'volenti non fit injuria' cuts off a recovery where the injury is caused by one of the risks incident to the business which the servant assumes when he enters the employment. The right of recovery is cut off in the second case under the rule of law which prohibits a recovery where the negligence of the person injured contributes thereto." *Obermeyer v. Logeman Chair Mfg. "The doctrine of assumption of risks by the employé is distinct from the doctrine of contributory negligence, although there may arise a certain condition of facts capable of supporting either inference. This has given rise to a great deal of confusion of statement when dealing with these defenses. 'Assumption of risk' rests in the law of contract, and involves an implied agreement by the employé to assume the risk ordinarily incident to his employment, or a waiver, after full knowledge of an extraordinary risk, of his right to hold the employer for breach of duty in this regard. Hooper v. Railroad, 21 S. C. 547, 53 Am. Rep. 691. The law as to waiver applies, because the relation between the employer and employé is contractual, and waiver is the voluntary relinquishment of a known right. By the contract, the employé and employer each assume certain risks; but, as in all contracts, either party may waive his right to insist upon strict performance of the other's contractual duty. When, therefore, a case arises in which it is shown (upon proper pleading) that the employé has assumed the risks from which the injury arose, or, what is the same thing in effect, has waived his right to hold the employer responsible for the risk, the employé's action is defeated because of his agreement, and not because of negligence. 'Contributory negligence,' on the other hand, rests in the law of torts as applied to negligence, and when such defense is established the plaintiff's action is defeated, not because of any agreement, express or implied, but because his own misconduct was a proximate cause of the injury." Wood v. Victor Mfg. Co., 45 S. E. 81, 82, 66 S. C. 482 (quoting and adopting Bodie v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 39 S. E. 715, 61 S. C. 478). See, also, Chase v. Spartanburg Railway, Gas & Electric Co., 41 S. E. 899, 64 S. C. 212.

The rules of "assumed risk" and "contributory negligence" are dependent on widely separated tests and principles. Entering the employment of one who is known to furnish defective appliances might be assuming the risks arising therefrom, but it is not contributory negligence. The latter is the doing of some act or omission amounting to a want of ordinary care as, concurring with some negligent act of the defendant, is the proximate cause of the injury for which redress is sought. There must be some positive act of commission or omission that caused the injury or contributed thereto. To illustrate: If the explosion had been caused by allowing the water to get too low in the boiler, and it had been the duty of appellee to keep the water up to the safety mark, he might have been guilty of contributory negligence in failing to perform his duty; or if he had been working with the water glass at the time and thereby caused the explosion, such act might have been contributory negligence. "Assumed risk" refers to a general course of action in connection with the master's way of doing business and the appliances furnished. "Contributory negligence" refers to the question as to whether the servant acted prudently in connection with a certain matter that arose for his consideration at a certain time and place. The first is an intelligent choice; the latter is carelessness. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Foth (Tex.) 100 S. W. 171, 173.

The conscious negligence of a servant in doing or omitting an act is not "assumed risk," as used in the rule of law exempting a master in such a case from liability for injury to a servant, as such words relate to the risk of injuries resulting from dangers necessarily incident to the work, or due to conditions within the servant's knowledge, or of which he must have known, had he exercised ordinary care. Houston, E. & W. T. Ry. Co. v. McHale, 105 S. W. 1149, 1151, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 360.

"Assumption of risk" and absence of "contributory negligence" may coexist; the former relating to assumption by an employé of a risk already in existence when assumed, and the latter to conduct on his part increasing an existing risk or creating or contributing proximately to a new one. Van Dinter v. Worden-Allen Co., 138 N. W. 1016, 1018, 153 Wis. 533.

"Assumption of risk" is an element distinct from "contributory negligence," and is not affected by Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 362, providing that want of contributory negligence need not be alleged but shall be a matter of defense. "Assumption of risk" is a matter of contract, while "contributory negligence" is a matter of conduct. Cleveland, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Bossert (Ind.) 87 N. E. 158, 169 (citing Cleveland, C. & St. R. Co. v. Scott, 64 N. E. 898, 29 Ind. App. 519-531; Bowles v. Indiana R. Co., 62 N. E. 94, 27 Ind. App. 672, 87 Am. St. Rep. 279; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Hunsucker, 70 N. E. 556, 38 Ind. App. 27; Indianapolis & G. Rapid Transit Co. v. Foreman, 69 N. E. 669, 162 Ind. 85, 94, 102 Am. St. Rep. 185).

"Assumption of risk" and "contributory negligence" are regarded and treated as distinct defenses in this state. The servant may be guilty of "contributory negligence" in using a machine which he knows to be defective and dangerous, notwithstanding he has protested against such use, and received the master's promise to repair. Such protest and promise relieves him in continuing in the service with such knowledge of the imputation by law of such negligence. But, if the danger to the servant arising from the use of the defective appliance is so great than an ordinarily prudent person, under the circumstances, would not have incurred it, or the servant by his own negligence in performing his work increased the risk, and thereby contributes to his injury, a recovery will be denied. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Kern (Tex.) 100 S. W. 971, 973.

"Contributory negligence" rests in the law of torts, as applied to negligence, and when such defense is established the plaintiff's action is defeated not because of any agreement, express or implied, but because his own misconduct was a proximate cause of the injury, and is distinguished from "assumption of risk," as it rests in the law of contract, and involves an implied agreement by the employé to assume the risks ordinarily incident to his employment, or a waiver, after full knowledge of an extraordinary risk, of his right to hold the employer for a breach of duty in this regard. Hall v. Northwestern R. Co., 62 S. E. 848, 850, 81 S. C. 522 (citing and quoting Bodle v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 39 S. E. 715, 61 S. C. 468).

"Contributory negligence" is founded upon an absence of ordinary care, which causes or contributes to the injury, being distinct from the doctrine of "assumed risk," which is founded upon the maxim, "volenti non fit injuria." St. Louis Cordage Co. v. Miller, 126 Fed. 495, 505, 61 C. C. A. 477, 63 L. R. A. 551.

Children and persons under disability

An ordinarily bright and intelligent boy, 12 years old, living in a city in which electric light and power wires are in constant use on nearly all of the principal streets and highways, who, having knowledge of the danger, but not of its extent, purposely takes hold of such a wire in order to obtain a shock, and is injured thereby, is as a matter of law guilty of "contributory negligence." Johnston v. New Omaha Thomson-Houston Electric Light Co., 113 N. W. 526, 527, 78 Neb. 27, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 435.

A child playing on a stack of building materials must exercise for his own protection the degree of care usually exercised by persons of his age, experience, and intelligence under similar circumstances; and where he fails to do so, and by reason thereof he is injured, he is guilty of "contributory negligence," precluding recovery. Louisville R. Co. v. Esselman (Ky.) 93 S. W. 50, 52.

The concurrence of the fault of two wrongdoers by which one of them is injured is called "contributory negligence" on the part of the injured party. When the plaintiff is an infant of tender years, that fact is one circumstance to be weighed by the jury in determining the fact of culpable negligence in the defendant, and also in determining the fact of contributory negligence in the plaintiff. If the jury is satisfied that in fact the plaintiff by reason of his extreme youth was incapable of committing a culpable fault or negligence in his acts or omissions as proved, the plaintiff has sustained his allegation that his own fault did not concur with that of the defendant in causing the injury. The fact that the fault of a third party may have concurred with that of the defendant in producing the injury does not prevent the plaintiff from pursuing his remedy separately against the defendant for his tort, and it is immaterial that this concurring fault of a third party is that of an infant plaintiff's parents in negligently permitting their child to be unattended in a place of danger. Wilmot v. McPadden, 61 Atl. 1069, 1072, 78 Conn. 276.

A person whose hearing has been so far impaired that he is compelled to use an ear trumpet in ordinary conversation, who walks along a railroad track without a continual exercise of vigilance for approaching trains, and who is a trespasser while on the track, is guilty of "contributory negligence," precluding a recovery for his death by being struck by a train, in the absence of willful negligence on the company's part. Hamlin v. Columbia & P. S. R. Co., 79 Pac. 991, 992, 87 Wash. 448.

Comparative negligence

"Contributory negligence" in most jurisdictions is used as referring to such negligence on the part of plaintiff, contributing to or causing the injury to himself, as will prevent a recovery by him. In Georgia there is a doctrine, sometimes called that of "comparative negligence," under which, if plaintiff is not without fault, but his negligence does not amount to such failure to use ordinary care as will prevent a recovery, he may recover damages of defendant in a proper cause, but the amount of his recovery will be reduced in proportion to the amount of default attributable to him. In this term "contributory negligence" will generally be found to have been used in Georgia, rather than in the sense of negligence which will prevent a recovery. Savannah Electric Co. v. Crawford, 60 S. E. 1056-1058, 130 Ga. 421.

"One is guilty of 'contributory negligence' who negligently does or omits to do something which helps to bring about an accident whereby he is injured, and contributory negligence is a complete bar to an action for damages by the injured party, even if the other party was also guilty of negligence which contributed to cause the accident, and it is immaterial which party was the most negligent, or which contributed most to cause the accident." St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Arnold, 87 S. W. 173, 176, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 161.

One whose negligence contributes to his injury cannot recover from another, though the carelessness of the latter was the more proximate cause of the injury. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Bennett, 181 Fed. 799, 801, 104 C. C. A. 309.

As confession and avoidance

The defense or plea of "contributory negligence" is in the nature of a confession and avoidance. It, standing alone, necessarily admits that the plaintiff was injured by the negligence of defendant. Buechner v. City of New Orleans, 36 South. 603, 605, 112 La. 599, 66 L. R. A. 334, 104 Am. St. Rep. 455.

Contributing or proximate cause

"'Contributory negligence' is a want of ordinary care on the part of the person injured by the actionable negligence of another, combining and concurring with that negligence, and contributing to the injury as a proximate cause thereof, without which the injury could not have occurred." Birsch v. Citizens' Electric Co., 93 Pac. 940, 942, 36 Mont. 574; Burns v. Southern R. Co., 43 S. E. 679, 681, 65 S. C. 229 (quoting and adopting definition in Bowen v. Southern Ry. Co., 36 S. E. 590, 58 S. C. 222); Chapping v. Toxaway Mills, 50 S. E. 186, 188, 70 S. C. 470 (quoting and adopting definition in Cooper v. Georgia, C. & N. Ry. Co., 34 S. E. 16, 56 S. C. 91, 95); Duncan v. Greensville County (S. C.), 53 S. E. 367, 368 (quoting and adopting definition in Bowen v. Southern Ry. Co., 36 S. E. 590, 58 S. C. 222); Hone v. Mammoth Min. Co., 75 Pac. 381, 383, 27 Utah, 168; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Reed, 116 S. W. 69, 74, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 26; Webster v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 61 S. E. 1080, 1085, 81 S. C. 46; Winters v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 177 Fed. 44, 49, 100 C. C. A. 462 (citing Alaska United Gold Min. Co. v. Keating, 116 Fed. 561, 566, 53 C. C. A. 655; Montgomery Gaslight Co. v. Montgomery & E. Ry. Co., 5 South. 735, 86 Ala. 372; Moakler v. Williamette Val. Ry. Co., 22 Pac. 948, 18 Or. 189, 6

L. R. A. 656, 17 Am. St. Rep. 717; Woodell v. West Virginia Imp. Co., 17 S. E. 886, 88 W. Va. 23, 40. See, also, 1 Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 7; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Moseley, 57 Fed. 921, 925, 6 C. C. A. 641; Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Watts, 66 Fed. 460, 466, 13 C. C. A. 579; Motey v. Pickle Marble & Granite Co., 74 Fed. 155, 157, 20 C. C. A. 366; Plant Inv. Co. v. Cook, 74 Fed. 503, 20 C. C. A. 625; Central Texas & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Gibson (Tex.), 83 S. W. 862, 863. Also such an act or omission on the part of a plaintiff, amounting to a want of ordinary care, as, concurring or co-operating with the negligent act of the defendant, is a proximate cause or occasion of the injury complained of. St. Louis Nat. Stock Yards v. Godfrey, 65 N. E. 90, 93, 198 Ill. 288 (citing Beach, Contrib. Neg.). "To constitute 'contributory negligence' there must be a want of ordinary care on the part of the plaintiff and a proximate connection between that and the injury." Where the contributory negligence of a passenger, injured by the derailment of a car of the train on which he was riding, contributed to the injury, he was not entitled to recover, though his negligence did not contribute to the derailment." Winters v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 163 Fed. 106, 110 (quoting and adopting definition in Plant Inv. Co. v. Cook, 74 Fed. 503, 20 C. C. A. 625, which adopted definition as given in 1 Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 7). "It is thus seen that contributory negligence by a plaintiff can never exist, except when the injury has resulted from the negligence of defendant as a concurring proximate cause." Scott v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 45 S. E. 129, 132, 67 S. C. 136 (quoting and adopting Cooper v. Georgia, C. & N. Ry. Co., 34 S. E. 16, 56 S. C. 95). "To constitute 'contributory negligence,' there must be a want of ordinary care on the part of the plaintiff, and a proximate connection between that and the injury. To make such a want of care a proximate cause of an injury, it must, according to this well-considered definition, contribute directly and materially to the infliction of the injury." Indianapolis & M. Rapid Transit Co. v. Edwards, 74 N. E. 533, 534, 36 Ind. App. 202 (quoting and adopting from Beach, Contrib. Neg. p. 7).

"Contributory negligence" is such negligence on the part of plaintiff as helped to produce the injury complained of. Akin v. Bradley Engineering & Machinery Co., 99 Pac. 1038, 1039, 51 Wash. 653.

"Contributory negligence" is such an act of omission of one suing as amounts to a want of ordinary care concurring or co-operating with a negligent act of another as a proximate cause of the injury complained of. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Schubert (Tex.), 120 S. W. 708, 710; Philbin v. Denver City Tramway Co. (Colo.), 85 Pac. 630, 631 (quoting and adopting the definition in Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 7); Thompson & Ford Lumber Co. v. Thomas (Tex.), 147 S. W. 296, 303;

Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Pickleselmer, 10 S. E. 44, 45, 85 Va. 798; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co., v. Pendleton, 70 S. W. 996, 998, 80 Tex. Civ. App. 431 (citing Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Henning, 39 S. W. 302). To constitute contributory negligence there must be a want of care on the part of the plaintiff, and a proximate connection between that and the injury. Lincoln Traction Co. v. Brookover, 109 N. W. 168, 77 Neb. 217.

"Contributory negligence" which will defeat a recovery for a personal injury must be such as directly contributes to the injury at the time of its infliction, and the negligence must be the proximate cause of the injury. Neary v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 110 Pac. 226, 235, 41 Mont. 480; Acton v. Fargo & M. St. Ry. Co., 129 N. W. 225, 227, 20 N. D. 434; Basler v. Sacramento Gas & Electric Co., 111 Pac. 530, 532, 158 Cal. 514, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 642.

"Contributory negligence" is the want of reasonable care upon a part of the person injured, which concurred with the negligence of the servants or employees of defendant inflicting the injury." International & G. N. R. Co. v. Trump, 94 S. W. 903, 906, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 536 (quoting and adopting the definition in Texas & P. Ry. v. Curlin, 36 S. W. 1004, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 505; citing Rost v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 12 S. W. 1131, 76 Tex. 172; Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Gorman, 21 S. W. 158, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 144; Grand Trunk Ry. v. Ives, 12 Sup. Ct. 679, 144 U. S. 408, 36 L. Ed. 485; Baltimore & P. Ry. Co. v. Jones, 95 U. S. 441, 24 L. Ed. 506; Texas & N. O. Ry. Co. v. Black [Tex.] 44 S. W. 674).

"Contributory negligence" is such negligence on the part of one injured as that, but for the same, his injury would not have been received. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ueitschi's Ex'r's (Ky.) 97 S. W. 14, 16; Kent Mfg. Co. v. Zimmerman, 110 Pac. 187, 191, 48 Colo. 388.

"Contributory negligence" is negligence on the part of the party injured which directly and proximately contributed to and caused the injury. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Tullis, 91 S. W. 817, 319, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 219 (quoting and adopting the definition in Citizens' Ry. Co. v. Creasy [Tex.] 27 S. W. 945); Brister & Co. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 36 South. 142, 144, 84 Miss. 33.

"Contributory negligence" is such negligence on the part of plaintiff as helped to produce the injury complained of. Akin v. Bradley Engineering & Machinery Co., 99 Pac. 1038, 1040, 51 Wash. 658.

"Contributory negligence" is such negligence on the part of the injured party as materially contributes to his injury. Cleveland, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Henry (Ind.) 80 N. E. 636, 640.

"Contributory negligence" involves the doing by the injured party, or an omission to do, some act or duty which a reasonably prudent person would have done or omitted to do, which doing or omission proximately contributed to the injury complained of. Columbia Creasoting Co. v. Beard, 89 N. E. 321, 323, 44 Ind. App. 310.

"Contributory negligence" is a negligent act committed by the person injured, which was the proximate cause of his being injured, and such negligence is a proximate cause of his injury, if the injury would not have occurred had the negligent act not been committed. Atoka Coal & Mining Co. v. Miller, 104 S. W. 555, 561, 7 Ind. T. 104.

Pleas of "contributory negligence" must impute to the plaintiff an omission of duty or commission of some negligent or dangerous act which proximately contributes to the injury, and such conduct or acts must be shown to be negligent or culpable otherwise than by the mere statement that they are so. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Barganier, 53 South. 138, 141, 168 Ala. 567.

"Contributory negligence" is such negligence on the part of plaintiff as, concurring with the negligence of defendant, proximately contributes to cause the injury complained of. Contributory negligence, to preclude a recovery, must concur with a negligent act or omission of defendant and proximately contribute to cause the injury. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Parks, 90 S. W. 343, 347, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 480.

The defense of "contributory negligence" rests on some fault or omission of duty on the part of the plaintiff, and is maintainable when, though the defendant has been guilty of negligence, yet the direct or proximate cause of the injury is the negligence of the plaintiff, but for which the injury would not have happened. It applies when the plaintiff is asking for damages for an injury which would not have happened but for his own carelessness. Choctaw, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 92 S. W. 244, 246, 77 Ark. 367, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 837, 7 Ann. Cas. 430.

"Contributory negligence" means any failure on the part of plaintiff to exercise that degree of care for his own safety usually exercised by persons of his age, experience, intelligence, and discretion, and when by such failure he caused or helped to bring about the injuries of which he complains, and when he would not have been injured but for such failure. D. H. Ewing & Sons v. Callahan (Ky.) 105 S. W. 387, 388.

"Contributory negligence" must be such as contributed directly to the injury complained of. The court below erred in instructing that plaintiff was required to prove his case by preponderance of the evidence "without disclosing any negligence on his part," without adding the words "which contributed to the injury complained of." Vertrees v. Gage County, 115 N. W. 863, 864, 81 Neb. 213.

It was proper to define "contributory negligence" as "where plaintiff does some negligent act, or omits to perform some act which, co-operating with some negligent act or omission on the part of defendant, contributes to and is the proximate cause of the injury." Texas Cent. R. Co. v. Johnson, 111 S. W. 1098, 1099, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 128.

"When a plaintiff, through the negligence of defendant, is placed in a situation where he must adopt a perilous alternative, or where, in the terror of an emergency for which he is not responsible and for which defendant is responsible, he acts wildly or negligently and suffers in consequence, such negligent conduct under these circumstances is not 'contributory negligence'; for the reason that persons in great peril are not required to exercise all that presence of mind and carefulness which are justly required of a careful and prudent man under ordinary circumstances. In such case the negligence of the defendant is the 'proximate cause' of the injury, and plaintiff may have his action, * * * even though the injury would not have happened if the acts had not been done." Texas Midland R. Co. v. Byrd, 90 S. W. 185, 187, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 164 (quoting and adopting definition in Beech, Contrib. Neg. § 14; International & G. N. Ry. Co. v. Neff, 28 S. W. 283, 87 Tex. 303).

"Contributory negligence" consists in the performance of some negligent act or negligently omitting to do some act, which, co-operating with some act or omission of the defendant, contributes to the injury; hence the omission of the modifier "negligently" in in an instruction on that subject, in a personal injury action by a passenger, is error. Selman v. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. (Tex.) 101 S. W. 1030, 1031.

"Contributory negligence" is the casual action or omission of the person injured, without ordinary care of consequences. It rests in tort. Contributory negligence is no element or attribute of assumption of risk. To constitute contributory negligence there must be a want of ordinary care on the part of the servant and a proximate connection between that and the injury. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wilhoit, 98 S. W. 341, 343, 6 Ind. T. 534.

An instruction that "contributory negligence" in its legal signification is such an act or omission on plaintiff's part, amounting to want of ordinary care and prudence, as, concurring or co-operating with some negligent act of the defendant, is a proximate cause or occasion of the injury complained of, was proper. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Turner (Tex.) 138 S. W. 1126, 1127.

"Contributory negligence" in its legal signification is such an act or omission on the part of plaintiff, amounting to want of ordinary care, as, concurring or co-operating with the negligent act of the defendant, is a proximate cause for the occasion of the injury complained of. An instruction defining "contributory negligence" as such negligence on plaintiff's part that, but for the same, he would not have been injured, is erroneous. Leary v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 92 Pac. 477, 478, 36 Mont. 157 (quoting and adopting 1 Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 7).

There can be no "contributory negligence" by plaintiff, except there is a failure on his part, or on the part of some person with whose negligence he is chargeable, to exercise ordinary care to avoid the injury, and such lack of ordinary care is the proximate cause of the injury. Jackson v. Sumpster Val. Ry. Co., 93 Pac. 356, 360, 50 Or. 455.

"By the phrase 'contributory negligence' * * * is meant a want of ordinary care on the part of said plaintiff * * * which concurred with the negligence of the defendant or its agents or employes, if any negligence there was on the part of defendant, its agents and employes, causing the injury, if any." International & G. N. Ry. Co. v. Tisbury (Tex.) 100 S. W. 1030, 1031.

The plea of "contributory negligence" as a bar to recovery of damages in an action against a party primarily liable for an injury resulting from his negligence is available on proof that the accident could not have occurred if plaintiff had not failed to exercise care to avoid danger commensurate with his mental and physical capacities. Hovden v. Seattle Electric Co., 180 Fed. 487, 488.

An instruction that a man is guilty of "contributory negligence" either when he does something which an ordinarily prudent, careful man would not do under the circumstances, or when he fails to take such precautions for his safety as an ordinarily prudent man would take under the same circumstances and conditions, and that if such negligence contributes to any injury, which he receives, and is the proximate cause thereof, he cannot recover, whether defendant was guilty of negligence or not, was not error. Duteau v. Seattle Electric Co., 88 Pac. 755, 756, 45 Wash. 418.

Though defendant may be guilty of negligence and of violation of law, plaintiff cannot recover if his own negligence contributed proximately to the happening of the accident causing the injury. Curtis v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 131 S. W. 947, 948, 96 Ark. 394, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 466, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 685.

"Contributory negligence" implies some negligence on the part of the defendant; and the general rule is that a plaintiff, complaining of personal injuries caused by a train or car, who was himself guilty of negligence, which contributed proximately and directly to the injuries, cannot recover, although the defendant was also guilty of negligence. Bennichsen v. Market St. Ry. Co., 84 Pac. 420, 421, 149 Cal. 18.

"Contributory negligence" is negligence, not only of the one committing the injury, but also of the person injured, and both must proximately contribute to the injury to defeat recovery therefor; and hence an instruction that "any" omission by plaintiff co-operating with defendant's negligence causing the injury defeats recovery is erroneous. Adams v. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. (Tex.) 105 S. W. 526, 527.

There are two essential elements of "contributory negligence"; want of ordinary care and causal connection between the act and the injury complained of and where the injury does not, according to the ordinary course of events, follow from the act, then the act and the injury are not sufficiently connected to make the act the proximate cause of the injury. Fitzgerald v. International Flax Twine Co., 116 N. W. 475, 479, 104 Minn. 138.

The term "contributory negligence" assumes that it is contributory only to some other act or omission constituting negligence in the opposite party. The fact that a cow, struck at a public crossing by a railroad train, was at large, did not contribute to the injury any more than the construction or operation of the railroad contributed thereto; and where proof that it was at large was the only proof of contributory negligence, the court properly refused to submit the question of contributory negligence to the jury. France v. Salt Lake & O. R. Co., 88 Pac. 1, 2, 31 Utah, 302.

Plaintiff, in an action for personal injuries, who was at the time and place of the accident guilty of negligence but for which it would not have happened, was guilty of "contributory neglect"; but it was not error to refuse to so instruct, where the court in its instruction pointed out in a general way the acts in which the negligence, if any, consisted. South Covington & C. St. Ry. Co. v. Cleveland (Ky.) 100 S. W. 283, 285.

"Contributory negligence" is a want of ordinary care on the part of a person injured by actual negligence of another, combining and concurring with that negligence and contributing to the injury, and can never exist except where the injury has resulted from the negligence of the defendant as a concurrent proximate cause. Wilson v. Southern Ry., 53 S. E. 968, 975, 73 S. C. 481.

Same—One of causes or sole cause

Negligence, to be contributory, must be one of the proximate causes of the accident. Bourrett v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. (Iowa) 121 N. W. 380, 382.

Same—Remote cause

An instruction which, while purporting to give a legal definition of "contributory negligence," demands that such negligence shall be found the sole and direct cause of the accident, is incorrect. Hanheide v. St. Louis Transit Co., 78 S. W. 820, 822, 104 Mo. App. 323.

An act or omission, to constitute "contributory negligence," must be something more than a remote cause in the chain of circumstances, but must be such as operates as the proximate cause, or one of the proximate causes, and not merely as a condition. Union Pacific Ry. Co. v. Connolly, 109 N. W. 368, 377, 77 Neb. 254 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1544).

Degree of care

"Contributory negligence" is simply want of ordinary care in the situation." Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Humphrey, 36 South. 154, 156, 83 Miss. 721.

"Contributory negligence" is any negligence upon the part of the plaintiff directly contributing to her injury." Hensler v. Stix, 88 S. W. 108, 114, 113 Mo. App. 162.

"Contributory negligence" is shown by evidence that plaintiff himself was guilty of some negligence which entered into and contributed to the injury at the time of the accident. Wagner v. People's Ry. Co. (Del.) 75 Atl. 610, 611, 7 Pennewill, 398.

"Contributory negligence" is the want of such care and prudence as an ordinarily careful and prudent person would have used under the same circumstances. Buckner v. Stockyards Horse & Mule Co., 120 S. W. 766, 769, 221 Mo. 700; St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. v. Burd, 124 S. W. 239, 240, 93 Ark. 88; Williams v. Ballard Lumber Co., 83 Pac. 323, 326, 41 Wash. 338; Marshall & E. T. Ry. Co. v. Petty (Tex.) 145 S. W. 1195, 1197; Hull v. Seattle, R. & S. Ry. Co., 110 Pac. 804, 805, 60 Wash. 162.

"Contributory negligence" means the failure to observe that degree of care which ordinarily careful and prudent persons usually observe under the same or similar circumstances to protect themselves from harm, which failure helped or caused the injury. Schultz v. Michigan United Rys. Co., 123 N. W. 594, 599, 158 Mich. 865, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 503 (dissenting opinion).

In a personal injury action, where the plaintiff is guilty of "contributory negligence," the negligence which is to preclude him from recovering is such that he could by ordinary care have avoided the consequence of defendant's negligence. Vizacchero v. Rhode Island Co., 59 Atl. 105, 107, 26 R. I. 392, 69 L. R. A. 188.

A person who receives an injury is guilty of "contributory negligence" where he does that thing which no reasonable man would do, and is thereby made the subject of the injury complained of. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Thomson, 128 Ill. App. 594, 599, 600.

"Contributory negligence" is a question of conduct. If a servant is defeated by the rule of contributory negligence, it must be because his conduct at the time of the accident and under all of the existing circumstances fell short of ordinary care. Diamond Block Coal Co. v. Cuthbertson, 76 N. E. 1060, 1067, 166 Ind. 290.

An instruction that "negligence means the failure to use or exercise that degree of care which the law requires; that is, ordinary care, or the doing of that which ordinary care and caution would dictate should not be done," followed by an instruction that "contributory negligence would be negligence as above defined, on the part of plaintiff, uniting with the negligence of the defendant, and contributing to the result and injury and damage complained of," does not give an incorrect definition of "contributory negligence," in that it excludes from consideration acts of omission, since the error, if any, in the first instruction consists only in the punctuation thereof, and by the transposition of the semicolon, after the word "requires," with the comma, after the words "ordinary care," the error would be cured. Struble v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 103 N. W. 142, 144, 128 Iowa, 158.

"Contributory negligence," when predicated on the omission to do some act to avoid the injury complained of, is the failure to do that which a person of ordinary prudence would have done under the same or similar circumstances, where such failure contributed to cause the injury; and an instruction that if a man of ordinary care, situated as a shipper of live stock was situated, and while his cattle were in cattle pens preparatory to loading, could and would have taken the cattle to water, he was guilty of negligence in not watering the cattle, was properly refused, because submitting an improper test. San Antonio & A. P. Ry. Co. v. Broad-Davis Cattle Co. (Tex.) 140 S. W. 514, 515.

The test as to whether a party injured by his horse becoming frightened by a hand car was guilty of "contributory negligence" was whether he acted as an ordinarily prudent person, and not whether it was necessary for him to drive over the railroad tracks. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Everett, 89 S. W. 457, 458, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 285.

"Contributory negligence" is the absence of that care for safety which the law exacts from him who seeks redress for an injury done him by the negligence of another. In this respect the law exacts such judgment respecting dangers and risks incident to the circumstances as a reasonable man would form, and such vigilance in observing the approach of danger, and such care in avoiding it, as a prudent man, reasonably careful of his safety, would exercise. Miller v. At- lanta & C. Air Line R. Co., 57 S. E. 345, 348, 144 N. C. 545 (quoting with approval from New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Ball, 21 Atl. 1052, 53 N. J. Law, 283).

Where defendant, by his wrongful acts or omissions, constituting a breach of legal duty, throws the plaintiff off his guard, or when the plaintiff acts on a reasonable supposition of safety induced by the defendant, when there is in reality danger, to which the plaintiff is exposing himself in a way and to an extent which, but for defendant's inducement, might be imputed to plaintiff as negligence sufficient to prevent a recovery, such conduct on plaintiff's part, so induced, is not "contributory negligence." Millsap v. Beggs, 97 S. W. 956, 959, 122 Mo. App. 1.

The standard for determining whether plaintiff has exercised due care is the conduct of an ordinarily prudent person under similar circumstances; and, if plaintiff did not exercise the care which an ordinarily prudent person would have exercised for her own protection under similar circumstances, she was guilty of "contributory negligence," irrespective of her actual intelligence or prudence in general. Dobson v. Duncan, 73 S. E. 875, 878, 90 S. C. 414.

Error of judgment

A person placed by another's negligence in such circumstances as to him appear to threaten his life or serious personal injury, who in an effort to save his life makes a choice of means from which injury results, is not guilty of "contributory negligence," although his act is not such as might have been expected from an ordinarily prudent person under like circumstances. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Knott, 36 S. W. 491, 493, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 158.

Failure to avoid danger

"By 'contributory negligence' is meant such negligence or want of reasonable care on the part of the plaintiff as was a co-operating cause, and was directly instrumental in causing or bringing the injuries in question upon him, and may consist in his voluntarily and unnecessarily exposing himself to the danger, or in failing to avoid danger when the danger is known to him, or when by the exercise of reasonable care and prudence on his part he would have discovered the danger in time to have avoided it." Huggard v. Glucose Sugar Refining Co., 109 N. W. 475, 479, 132 Iowa, 724.

Same—By employé

A servant, though knowing of defects in appliances operated by him, may recover for injuries resulting therefrom, where he did not know of the danger in the use of the appliances. Muse v. Abeel (Tex.) 124 S. W. 430.

A servant's knowledge of defective condition and of the dangers arising therefrom shows "contributory negligence," or not, ac-ording to whether a person of ordinary prudence under all the circumstances would have done as the servant did. Muren Coal & Ice Co. v. Copeland, 90 N. E. 489, 491, 46 Ind. App. 230.

Where a servant continues to work with knowledge, actual or constructive, of danger to which an ordinarily prudent person refuses to subject himself, the servant is guilty of "contributory negligence." Novelty Theater Co. v. Whitcomb, 106 Pac. 1012, 1013, 47 Colo. 110, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 514.

Where defendant telephone company gave plaintiff, a lineman, a tape measure which contained metal wires concealed inside, and directed him to measure the distances between the wires, plaintiff, not knowing that the tape contained metal which might come into contact with the telephone wires, was not guilty of "contributory negligence," where the tape came into contact with the wires and injured him. Murphy v. Hudson River Telephone Co., 89 N. E. 1106, 196 N. Y. 505.

An employé is guilty of "contributory negligence," which will defeat his right to recover for injuries sustained in the course of his employment, where such injuries substantially resulted from dangers so obvious and threatening that a reasonably prudent man under similar circumstances would have avoided them, if in his power to do so. Neeley v. Southwestern Cotton Seed Oil Co., 75 Pac. 537, 541, 18 Okl. 356, 64 L. R. A. 145 (citing Kane v. Northern C. Ry. Co., 9 Sup. Ct. 16, 17, 128 U. S. 91, 95, 32 L. Ed. 339).

If the servant is skilled in the work required, and equally or better qualified than the master to know the danger and the danger is so obvious that he must have known it, but nevertheless undertakes it, he cannot complain if injured. Nicholas v. E. H. Abadie Co. (Ky.) 124 S. W. 325, 327.

"If a workman, by some overt act of his, comes in contact with the machinery which he is operating, and which is under his immediate control, he will ordinarily be held guilty of 'contributory negligence'; but where, in the course of his employment, he comes in contact with unguarded machinery which he is not operating, and which is not under his immediate control, a different rule applies. * * * The rule is well established that a person is not necessarily guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law simply because he had previous knowledge of the defect which caused the injury." Rector v. Bryant Lumber & Shingle Mill Co., 84 Pac. 7, 8, 41 Wash. 556.

Where a section hand knew that all the trains on a track on which he stepped, on being warned by his foreman of the approach of a train on the track where he was working, approached from the same direction and that about 25 trains a day passed that point on double tracks, and he failed to look in the direction from which a train was approaching on the track on which he was injured, he was guilty of "contributory negligence." St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. McMinn, 84 Pac. 134, 135, 72 Kan. 681.

A brakeman, thrown from a freight car and injured by the pulling out of a defective handhold, was not charged with notice of its condition, unless he either had actual knowledge thereof, or must have necessarily obtained such knowledge in the ordinary discharge of his duties. The rule that a servant is negligent in voluntarily choosing a dangerous way when a safe way is open to him, precluding a recovery for injuries sustained, applies only when the way chosen is obviously unsafe, or the danger known to the servant. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Hawley (Tex.) 123 S. W. 726, 731.

A servant on a railroad engine, who carelessly failed to discover that there was plenty of sand in the sand bucket, and got off the engine, in the dark and without a lantern, to get sand, in consequence of which he fell and was injured by having his hand run over by the engine, was guilty of "contributory negligence." Walker v. Louis-Werner Sawmill Co., 88 S. W. 988, 990, 76 Ark. 436.

A servant who has been induced to continue work by his master's promise to remedy dangerous conditions is not guilty of "contributory negligence" so long as he may reasonably expect the master's promise to be kept, unless the danger is so obvious that a reasonably prudent person would not continue the work. Benak v. Paxton & Vierling Iron Works, 124 N. W. 461, 462, 85 Neb. 836.

A carpenter, who sat on a beam and used a timber as a lever to pry out the overlap in other timbers, and fell when the lever timber broke under his pressure, was guilty of "contributory negligence," barring recovery, when no such danger would arise from the method in which he was directed to perform the work. Quick v. Millfort Mill Co., 59 S. E. 365, 78 S. C. 472.

Where in a mine it was customary to push giant powder into holes in the rock by means of pieces of gas pipe with wooden plugs driven in the end, and a miner, finding that the pieces of gas pipe were in use by others temporarily, placed a stick of powder by means of a shank of a steel drill belonging to himself, and was injured by an explosion from a spark resulting from the contact between the steel drill and the flinty rock, he could not recover, because of his "contributory negligence." Whaley v. Coleman, 88 S. W. 119, 120, 113 Mo. App. 594.

Where an employé of a railroad company in charge of a hand car is running the car out of the yards on the main track, and is charged with the duty of looking out for switches in the yard limits, if he knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have seen, that a switch was open in time to avert the derailment of his car, and he failed to use such care, he would be guilty of "contributory negligence," precluding a recovery for injuries received by such derailment. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Anderson (Tex.) 124 S. W. 1002, 1003.

An employé of a railroad company, whose duty it is to work on the track over which trains are being run to assist in the work of repairing, is not guilty of "contributory negligence" as a matter of law because he fails to constantly look and listen for the approach of trains. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Jackson, 93 S. W. 746, 748, 78 Ark. 100, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 646, 8 Ann. Cas. 328.

"Contributory negligence" implies fault and want of care, and a person to be guilty of it must be invested with the right and power to act for himself or by his agent, and be in such a position of independence that he can voluntarily do or not do the thing that charges him with negligence. Although the rules of a railroad company direct that the enginemen must show their orders to the firemen, who are required to read them, and that after reading them they must keep such orders in mind, and, should there be occasion to do so, must remind the enginemen of them, the fireman could not be held guilty of "contributory negligence," precluding recovery for death caused by collision by reason of the disobedience by the conductor and engineer of a train dispatcher's order, in the absence of a showing that such order was shown to the fireman. Sinclair's Adm'r v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. (Ky.) 100 S. W. 236, 238.

Deceased was injured by falling into a lye vat maintained on defendant's premises, where deceased was employed to clean machinery. Deceased had been working on the premises for six years, and knew that the lye was heated by the injection of steam, and when so heated in cold weather gave off steam in such volume that when the doors of the vat were open it concealed the top from view. Held, that deceased was guilty of "contributory negligence," whether he could have seen that the vat was open, and thoughtlessly walked into it, or whether it was so clouded with steam that he could not see it, and walked into it without knowing whether it was open or not. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Barnes, 85 S. W. 1006, 1008, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 645.

Where the complaint, in an action by a servant for personal injuries, showed that plaintiff continued for a month in the use of appliances so simple in construction and use as to be easily understood by the inexperienced, the complaint was bad, since, if it was negligence per se for defendant to use them, it was "contributory negligence" for plaintiff to continue in the employment. Goure v. Storey, 105 Pac. 794, 795, 17 Idaho, 352.

Though a servant incurs the risks of place or machinery, which, though dangerous, is not so much so as to threaten immediate injury, or where it is reasonable to suppose that they may be safely used with great skill and care, the mere knowledge of the defects on the servant's part will not defeat a recovery for injuries. George v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 125 S. W. 196, 209, 225 Mo. 364.

In an action for injuries to an employé operating a sausage machine, in consequence of his fingers being caught by the revolving worm, the evidence showed that he had been advised as to how to operate such a machine, and had been cautioned to be careful of his fingers, and not to put them into the machine. He knew that, if he got his fingers into the machine, they would be cut off. Held, that he was guilty of "contributory negligence" as a matter of law. Fortune v. Hall, 89 N. E. 1100, 195 N. Y. 578.

Where a timberman, in the employ of a lumber company at a log chute, had a right to expect that nothing would come through the mill except freshly sawed light-colored timber and an old dark-colored boomstick came over the chute at night, which he could not see, though he had kept an outlook, without a light, which the company had omitted to furnish at the chute, and could not be apprised of its approach any other way before it was so close to him that he could not escape, he was not negligent in failing to get out of the way. Forseth v. Iron River Lumber Co., 124 N. W. 1036, 1038, 142 Wis. 87.

Where it was an employé's duty to put his hand under the die of a leather stamping machine and remove the leather after the ram plate had descended, and it would not have been hurt except for a secret danger, he was not guilty of "contributory negligence" where he neither knew, nor ought in the exercise of ordinary care to have known, of the danger. Berger v. Abel & Bach Co., 124 N. W. 410, 413, 141 Wis. 321.

A servant is not entitled to recover for injuries sustained while in the service of his master unless he has established that he did not know of the defects which caused his injury, and did not have equal opportunities with his master of knowing thereof at the time he was so injured. Bettis v. Chicago Coated Board Co., 145 Ill. App. 390, 393.

Same—Crossing or going upon railroad tracks

"Contributory negligence" is a failure to exercise ordinary care for one's own safety. The failure of a volunteer on a railroad right of way to stop, look, and listen, which failure directly contributed to his death, precludes a recovery. Springer v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co., 161 Fed. 801, 811, 88 C. C. A. 619.

A person who drives rapidly over a railroad crossing without looking at all for an approaching train, or taking any precautions as to his own safety, is "negligent," though the gates at the crossing are open. Koch v. Southern California R. Co., 84 Pac. 176, 177, 148 Cal. 677, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 521, 113 Am. St. Rep. 832, 7 Ann. Cas. 795.

A person who, for his own convenience, walks on the main track of a railroad, and does not look or listen, or take any precaution for his own safety, and while so walking is injured, is guilty of "contributory negligence," which will bar a recovery of damages for such injury. Limb v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co., 84 Pac. 136, 73 Kan. 220.

Failure of one about to drive across a railroad crossing to stop, look, or listen was not of itself proof of "contributory negligence" sufficient to prevent a recovery, especially where no train was due at the time and such fact was known to him. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lucas' Adm'r (Ky.) 98 S. W. 308, 311.

By the term "contributory negligence" is meant a failure of the part of plaintiff to use ordinary care for his own protection and safety, under the facts and circumstances in evidence preceding and attending his injury. The failure to look and listen for a train at a street crossing is not per se negligent, where the railroad company keeps a watchman and gates at the crossing and the gates are up. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wilson, 100 S. W. 302, 303, 124 Ky. 836.

Where plaintiff, a miner 34 years of age and in full possession of his faculties, walked on defendant's railroad track, a distance of more than half a mile, without once looking back or stopping to listen for an approaching train, by which he was struck and injured, he was guilty of "contributory negligence" as a matter of law, precluding a recovery. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Jones, 144 Fed. 47, 49, 75 C. C. A. 205.

"Contributory negligence" is such want of care on the part of the person injured as materially helps in producing his injury." A person who attempts to cross a railroad when he knows a train is due, and that he cannot make the passage in safety if the slightest delay or mishap occurs to him, is guilty of negligence. Palys v. Receiver of Erie Ry. Co., 30 N. J. Eq. 604, 605.

In an action for injuries to an automobile in a railroad crossing accident, instructions defining "contributory negligence" as the want of the exercise of ordinary care which proximately causes the injury complained of, and defining proximate cause as such a cause as operates to produce particular consequences without the interference of any independent, unforeseen cause, without which the injury would not have occurred, were not objectionable as in effect charging that, in order to bar plaintiff's recovery, the "contributory negligence" must have been the immediate and sole cause of the accident, where the court also charged that the act or omission, in order to be "contributory negligence," must contribute to the happening of the act or event causing the injury, and that, if plaintiff or his daughter were actually guilty of negligence which contributed to the accident, plaintiff could not recover, and that plaintiff and his daughter, in order not to have been negligent, must have operated the automobile as a reasonable and ordinarily prudent person would have done, and requiring that they should have taken the same precautions in crossing the track that an ordinarily prudent and reasonable man would have taken. Pendroy v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 117 N. W. 531, 533, 17 N. D. 433.

Where decedent, not employed by defendant railroad, got upon a locomotive in order to ride thereon, and jumped off without looking and listening, and immediately stepped onto another track in front of a moving car, which ran over him, he was guilty of "contributory negligence." St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Hunt (Tex.) 100 S. W. 968, 969.

Where a woman of mature age, in full possession of her faculties, approached a railroad track on foot by daylight at a point from which it was plainly visible for a distance of 800 feet to the eastward, beyond which it made a curve, and when 30 feet beyond the track she looked toward the east and advanced along a path which crossed the track at an angle of 30 degrees, but she did not again look up, and when in the act of stepping on the track was struck by a locomotive approaching from the east, and which she had probably not seen before, as it had not, at the time she looked, rounded the curve, she was guilty of "contributory negligence" as a matter of law. Green v. Los Angeles Terminal Ry. Co., 76 Pac. 719, 720, 725, 143 Cal. 81, 101 Am. St. Rep. 68.

Plaintiff, while attempting to get a fishing pole from under a platform alongside of a railroad track, knelt beside the platform, his feet extending over one rail of the track about 50 feet from a switch, and, while so engaged, a car was switched on the track and approached him at the rate of 3 or 4 miles an hour. He was not aware of the approaching car until an instant before it reached him and in endeavoring to escape was struck by the brakeman's ladder. Held to constitute "contributory negligence." Burde v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co., 100 S. W. 509, 123 Mo. App. 629.

Same—Entering or leaving car

Where plaintiff boarded a crowded street car, and was permitted to take a seat in a box on the front platform, being unaware that an electrical explosion might occur in close proximity to her, she was not guilty of

"contributory negligence," barring recovery, for injury received in leaping from the car when an explosion occurred. Williamson v. St. Louis Transit Co., 100 S. W. 1072, 1073, 202 Mo. 345.

"Contributory negligence" is defined to be the omission by a passenger to exercise such a degree of care as the circumstances of the case demand from a person of ordinary prudence having a proper and reasonable regard for his or her own personal safety. The care one must take in entering a railroad train must be proportionate to the ordinary risks incurred in such entering; that is, it is the duty of the passenger to use the means provided with reasonable circumspection and care." Weaver v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 61 Atl. 1117, 1118, 212 Pa. 632.

Where plaintiff boarded a train to assist a passenger, her jumping off after the train started was "contributory negligence," precluding recovery for injury. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wilson, 100 S. W. 290, 292, 124 Ky. 846, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1020.

As defendant's open trolley car was approaching a customary stopping place, and slowing down to make the stop, plaintiff, a passenger, stepped on the running board and then to the ground, and was injured. Defendant's conductor, who had frequently seen plaintiff alight at the same place, saw his movements at the time, and gave him no warning. Held, that plaintiff was guilty of "contributory negligence." Cosgrove v. Consolidated Ry. Co., 68 Atl. 249, 250, 80 Conn. 717.

"Contributory negligence" on the part of a passenger, which will avoid a recovery, must be an act committed under such circumstances as to render it obviously and necessarily perilous, and to show a willful disregard of the danger incurred thereby. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Winfrey, 93 N. W. 526, 529, 67 Neb. 13.

Same—Traveling on highway

A half of a street was safe for travel, while the other half was being excavated for the construction of a street car track. Plaintiff, who knew the facts, entered on the part of the street that was safe, riding a bicycle. She met a team, and while endeavoring, to pass, and save herself from being struck by the overhanging part of the load, she went so near the excavation that she fell into it and was injured. There was ample room for her to have passed on the other side of the team, or she could have stopped and got off her wheel. Held, that she was guilty of "contributory negligence" as a matter of law, precluding a recovery. Harvey v. City of Malden, 74 N. E. 327, 188 Mass. 133.

"Contributory negligence" is the failure to exercise ordinary care which a reasonably prudent person would have exercised under like circumstances; but, if "contributory negligence" could be attributed to one injured by a defective sidewalk, then if such injury should happen after night, and the injured person did not know of the existence of the defect, and could not have discovered it by the exercise of ordinary care such as reasonably prudent persons should have exercised, then there can be no doubt but that the city would be liable for the injury. Parrish v. City of Huntington, 50 S. E. 416, 418, 57 W. Va. 286.

It is the duty of a person before going on a public highway to provide himself with a reasonably safe conveyance and safe horse, and in driving along the highway and over bridges to exercise reasonable care and prudence; and a person failing or neglecting to observe any of these precautions is in law guilty of what is known as "contributory negligence," and cannot recover. "Contributory negligence" means in this connection that by her own carelessness or negligence she has contributed to her own injury. The mere fact that such person may have seen a hole in the bridge when she traveled over it in the forenoon of the day would not make her guilty of contributory negligence in endeavoring to pass over the bridge on her return; but if a reasonably careful and prudent person would not, with the knowledge she had, have offered to pass over the bridge, she was guilty of "contributory negligence." Bratfish v. Township of Mason, 79 N. W. 576, 577, 120 Mich. 323.

Defendant, a subcontractor, had made an excavation in a park just off a street, and extending from the excavation to the street was an approach used by trucks backing on it in order to cart away the earth, and a pedestrian, when he reached the bridge, dropped a coin which rolled down the bridge, and in his effort to recover it he lost his balance and fell into the excavation. Some of the planks of the bridge were shorter than others, which was the cause of his losing his balance. Held, that plaintiff was not free from "contributory negligence." Bell v. City of New York, 99 N. Y. Supp. 684, 685, 114 App. Div. 22.

Incurring risk synonymous

In actions arising out of noncontractual relations, the term "incurring risk" is synonymous with "contributory negligence." Cleveland, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Lynn, 95 N. E. 577, 582, 177 Ind. 311.

CONTRIVANCE

See Mechanical Contrivance.

An "idler," consisting of a pulley on a frame, which could be thrown against a belt communicating power to a shaft to increase the effectiveness of the power, was not a "contrivance," within the factory act (Acts 29th Gen. Assem. p. 107, c. 149), as affecting machinery situated in an adjoining room, to which power was communicated from such shaft. McCreery v. Union Roofing & Mfg. Co., 119 N. W. 738, 739, 143 Iowa, 303.

CONTROL

See Beyond the Control; Exclusive Control; Limit and Control; Loss of Control; Possession or Control; Reasonable Control; Under Control; Under Full Control; Under the Control, Management, or Operation.

Operate or control, see Operate.

The word "control" has no legal or technical meaning distinct from that given in its popular acceptation, as used in a mining lease providing for the suspension of royalties during the disability of the lessee because of strikes, accidents, or any cause of stoppage of transportation, "over which the lessee has no control," and it will be construed to mean the immediate control of the party, and not to refer to some remote control or uncertain remedy of control. It is simply another way of saying "for which another party is not to blame," or "without the fault of the party of the second part." Robinson v. Kistler, 59 S. E. 505, 508, 62 W. Va. 489.

To "control" means to direct, regulate, or govern. It does not express the idea of repealing, extinguishing, or doing away with. The provision of Pen. Code, §§ 758-769, for removal from office of any municipal officer for misconduct in office, by presentment by the grand jury and proceedings before a court with trial by a jury, in case of a denial of the charges, are, so far as concerns a member of the police department of the city and county of San Francisco, superseded by the charter thereof, providing for such a removal only after a trial before the police commissioners; Const. art. 11, § 8, providing that the charter, on the adoption thereof by the Legislature, shall supersede all laws inconsistent with it, and article 20, § 16, as amended, providing that in case of an officer or employé of a municipality governed under a charter the provisions of the charter with reference to dismissal from office of any such officer or employé shall control. Dinan v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, 91 Pac. 806, 808, 6 Cal. App. 217 (citing Standard Dict.; Byrne v. Drain, 60 Pac. 433, 127 Cal. 663).

"The phrase 'full control,' when unqualified, of necessity implies complete dominion, and there can be no complete dominion where there is only a life estate. It includes, in the absence of any qualifications or restrictions, every incident of absolute ownership." Where a will contained but five clauses, the first directing payment of debts and funeral expenses, the second giving testator's dwelling house to his wife, "she to dispose of same at her pleasure," the third giving his wife moneys arising from collections which might be made, "she to dispose of same at her pleasure," the fourth providing, "All the rest of my estate I give her full control," and the fifth appointing executors, it was held that the wife took an absolute estate in the residue, and not merely a life estate. Welsh v. Gist, 61 Atl. 665, 666, 101 Md. 606.

An agreement by a member of a beneficial association that he should "be governed" by all rules, laws, and regulations of the association then in force or that might be thereafter enacted bore reference to such laws as were then in force or future laws as might be provided tending to regulate his conduct as a member and the internal affairs of the association; and a further agreement that his contract should "be controlled" by all laws, rules, and regulations then in force or that might be thereafter enacted bore reference only to such present and future laws as were in aid and in furtherance of the essential elements of indemnity, vouchsafed in his contract, and did not authorize a subsequent by-law reducing the amount of recovery in case of suicide. Lewine v. Supreme Lodge, Knights of Pythias of the World, 99 S. W. 821, 825, 122 Mo. App. 547.

To be "subject to" is "to become subservient to," or "subordinate to," and to "control" is defined as "to exercise a directing, restraining, or governing influence over; to direct; to counteract; to regulate" (quoting and adopting the definitions in Cent. Dict.). Under these definitions, Pen. Code, §§ 758, 772, which confer on the superior court jurisdiction to remove municipal officers for official misconduct and neglect, do not subordinate and control a provision of a freeholders' charter, providing for the removal of such officers by the municipal board of trustees, but leave them in full operation, prescribing merely a concurrent remedy, and are not, as so construed, displaced as to the municipality by Const. art. 11, § 6, declaring that municipal charters shall be "controlled" by general laws, except in municipal affairs. Coffey v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, 82 Pac. 75, 79, 147 Cal. 525.

The charter of a city, authorizing the council to "direct and control" the location of railroad tracks, does not include the power to authorize the construction of railroads and the exercise of the right of eminent domain. It merely vests in the council as part of the police power, to be exercised in providing for the public safety and convenience in the use of streets and alleys, a supervision over the location of railroad tracks, where the authority to construct the railroad already exists. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. v. Porter, 46 N. W. 75, 43 Minn. 527, 529.

A watchman employed to give signals of the approach of trains to workmen on the railroad track is a person in the employ of a railroad company who has the "control or direction of a movement of a signal" within the meaning of Laws 1906, p. 1682, c. 657, amending section 42a of the Railroad Law, Laws 1890, p. 1082, c. 535, providing that such persons shall be classed as vice principals, and not as fellow servants, in actions for injuries to employees. Schradin v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 109 N. Y. S. 428, 432, 124 App. Div. 705.

As giving power of disposition

"The ordinary meaning of the word 'control,' when asserted by a person in charge of an estate, is that he has its management. It might imply a power to invest and reinvest, but does not imply a power to dispose of the estate itself, so as to defeat the rights of those entitled to its future use. It implies such powers as are usually conferred upon trustees of express trusts. A proper control might necessitate a sale or a purchase of specific property; but either, if made, would inure to the benefit of the estate." Testator, after providing for the payment of his debts, declared that "the remainder that is left" should go to his wife (whom he made executrix) "during her natural lifetime, she to have the entire control of the same," and then, after describing the kinds of property devised (viz., real estate, moneys, notes, and all personal property, "and effects of all kinds") added, "To go to her, for her to have full control of the same as long as she lives, and that, after her death, what is left to go to A. and L.," etc. Held, that the widow took a life estate, without any power of disposition. Nor was the widow entitled absolutely to the accumulated income and profits of the life estate; the intention being that the entire estate remaining in her hands at her decease, whether diminished by losses or increased by profits, and whether it consisted of personal property or had been invested in real estate, should go to the remaindermen. Bramell v. Cole, 87 S. W. 924, 927, 136 Mo. 201, 58 Am. St. Rep. 619.

As power to license

"The words 'to control' and 'to regulate,' ex vi termini, imply to restrain, to check, to rule and direct. And, in my judgment, the power to do either of these implies the right to license, as a convenient and proper means to that end. By this means the persons or occupations to be regulated are located and identified and brought within the observation of the municipal authorities, so that whatever regulations are made concerning them may be the more easily and certainly enforced." A charter provision authorizing a city to "control," prescribe, and regulate the use of its streets, etc., confers power to require automobiles to be registered and numbered. People v. Schneider, 103 N. W. 172, 173, 139 Mich. 673, 69 L. R. A. 345, 5 Ann. Cas. 790 (quoting and approving definition in the Laundry License Case, 22 Fed. 703).

As regulate

See Regulate.

Of ballot

A third person permitted by the officers of election to inspect a ballot, or who by force took a ballot within his control, is a "person having custody or control" of a ballot, within the meaning of Ky. St. § 1476 making it a felony for any person intrusted with the custody or control of a ballot to mutilate or place distinguishing marks thereon. Commonwealth v. Goulet, 125 S. W. 1083, 1085, 137 Ky. 464.

Of bank

Laws 1909, c. 222, entitled "An act to revise the laws authorizing the business of banking, providing for the organization and control of banks, and to establish a banking department for the supervision of such business," which, by sections 29 and 30, makes it an offense for officers and directors of a bank to permit shareholders to become indebted to it at one time in excess of 50 per cent. of its paid-up capital, does not conflict with Const. art. 3, § 21, which provides that no law shall embrace more than one subject which shall be expressed in its title; since to "control" has the same sense as to "regulate," and since the term "control of banks" means the control of the banking business, indicates new legislation and means to check or restrain, and hence appropriately covers the provisions declaring the offense and the penalty therefor. State v. McPherson (S. D.) 139 N. W. 368, 369 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1549; 7 Word and Phrases, p. 6041).

Of bridge or highway

The words "control and direction," in Laws 1859, p. 359, c. 143, as amended by Laws 1889, p. 7, c. 7, providing that the free bridge over the Mohawk river between certain towns shall be under the control and direction of the commissioners of highways of the towns, were of no broader significance, with reference to the duties and powers of the commissioners of highways of the two towns in question, than the words "care and superintendence" in the highway law, with reference to the duties and powers of commissioners of highways in the towns of the state. Town of Palatine v. Canajoharie Water Supply Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 412, 414, 90 App. Div. 548.

Laws 1859, p. 359, c. 143, as amended by Laws 1889, p. 7, c. 7, provided that thereafter the free bridge over the Mohawk river between the towns of C. & P. should be "under the control and direction" of the commissioners of highways of said towns. Held, that the words "control and direction," as so used, did not give the commissioners of highways any greater powers than those generally conferred on highway commissioners by highway law (Laws 1890, p. 1177, c. 568), declaring that such commissioners shall have the care and superintendence of the highways and bridges in their respective towns, etc. Town of Palatine v. Canajoharie Water Supply Co., 77 N. E. 1197, 184 N. Y. 582.

Under Pol. Code, § 4041, subd. 4, requiring county boards of supervisors when the cost of construction of any bridge, etc., exceeds $500 to advertise for bids, but providing that, on being advised by the county surveyor that the work can be done for less than the lowest bid, the board may reject all bids and order the work done or structure built by day's work under the "supervision and control" of such surveyor, the latter to be held personally responsible under his official bond to construct such structure at a cost not exceeding the lowest bid, the board did not exceed its power in directing the surveyor on his being instructed to construct a bridge to purchase material therefor; "supervision" implying oversight, and the word "control" being used to authorize additional power, such as is contained in one of its definitions, "to exercise a restraining or governing influence over, to regulate." McCarthy v. Board of Sup'rs of Merced County, 115 Pac. 458, 459, 15 Cal. App. 576.

Under the law of Kentucky (Acts 1881-82, p. 817, c. 461), which holds that the use of a street by a telephone company is for a public and not a private purpose, general power expressly given to a city by a special charter to "regulate" the streets, alleys, etc., imports power to control their use, the word "regulate" being a word of wider import than "control," and authorizes the city to grant the right to a telephone company to erect and maintain its poles in the streets. City of Owensboro v. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co., 174 Fed. 739, 750, 99 C. C. A. 1.

In an action against an abutting owner for injuries from defects in the cover of a coal hole, where the complaint predicates negligence of the defendant in the management, operation, and control of the sidewalk, and in keeping the coal hole in defective order, and in failing to provide proper warning as to the defective state of the coal hole cover, there is no legal differentiation between the terms "management," "operation," and "control," and any one of them would be sufficient to justify the admission of testimony to sustain a delinquency intended to be charged. Maldosky v. Germania Bank, 127 N. Y. Supp. 292, 293.

Of building

There is no rule of law which makes the civil law of property rights inapplicable to criminal cases, and it was not improper to instruct in the trial of one for permitting gambling upon his premises that one who rents the whole of a building and uses a part of it and sublets other parts is in "control" of the whole building within the meaning of the gaming laws. De Los Santos v. State (Tex.) 146 S. W. 919, 923.

Of business of corporation

"Control" of the business of a corporation, within the meaning of anti-trust legislation, means power to dictate the corporate action of the corporation, not the mere management of some special limited department of its operations. The phrase "control to any extent" is synonymous with the expression "control of any part of its business." Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Searles, 37 South. 939, 953, 85 Miss. 520, 68 L. R. A. 715.

Of probate matters

Const. art. 5, § 8, provides that the district court shall have appellate jurisdiction and control in probate matters over the county court, and Rev. St. 1895, arts. 1099, 1841, provide that it shall have appellate jurisdiction and "general control" of probate matters over the county court. Held, that the words "control" and "general control," as so used, did not enlarge the district court's jurisdiction, which was limited to appellate jurisdiction over courts sitting in probate, to be exercised only by appeal or certiorari, and hence the district court cannot issue mandamus requiring the county court to perform a duty not merely ministerial but involving judicial discretion. Shook v. Journeay (Tex.) 149 S. W. 406, 409.

Of railroad

If a railroad owns a majority of the stock of another company, so that it elects its directors and dictates its policy, it "controls" such other company within the meaning of Ky. St. § 4079, requiring a railroad company to report to the Auditor of Public Accounts for purposes of taxation its lines "operated, owned, leased or controlled." Commonwealth v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 150 S. W. 37, 40, 149 Ky. 829.

Under Railroad Law (Laws 1890, p. 1118, c. 565) § 101, as amended by Laws 1897, p. 776, c. 688, relating to street surface railroads and providing that no corporation constructing and operating a railroad under the provisions of this article, etc., shall charge any passenger more than five cents for one etc., the operation or "control" of a road, "or on any point thereof," etc., and Railroad Law (Laws 1890, p. 1096, c. 565) § 39, imposing a penalty on any railroad corporation receiving more than the lawful rate of fare, etc., the operation or "control" of a road, within the meaning of such section, means a control of the operation of the road, and not merely a control of the corporation or individuals operating it, by reason of the ownership of a majority of the road's capital stock. Senior v. New York City R. Co., 97 N. Y. Supp. 645, 650, 111 App. Div. 39.

"Controlled," as used in the Kentucky revenue act (Acts 1892, p. 302, c. 103, art. 3, § 5, as amended by Acts 1893, p. 991, c. 217, § 4), which provides that the proportion of the value of the capital stock of a railroad which the length of the lines operated, owned, leased, or controlled in the state bears to the lines owned, leased, or controlled in the state and elsewhere shall be considered in fixing the value of the corporate franchise liable for taxation in the state, does not mean roads operated, but rather the ownership of a majority of the stock of another railroad corporation. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Coulter, 131 Fed. 282, 307.

Of separate property

The words "management and control," as used in Rev. St. 1887, § 2498, relating to the management and control by a husband of his wife's separate property, have a well-defined meaning, and under the provisions of section 15 must be construed according to the context and approved usage of the language. The power to manage implies the power to control. To manage money is to employ or invest it. The word "control" means to have authority over a particular matter or thing, and the phrase "management and control" implies the possession of the thing managed or controlled, or the right to the possession thereof. Sencerbox v. First Nat. Bank of Omaha, 93 Pac. 369, 371, 14 Idaho, 95 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1549, and 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4317).

The syntax of the term "control" is to restrain, rule, govern, manage, guide, regulate, hinder, direct, curb, counteract, subdue (Webster). Where, by an antenuptial agreement, a husband agreed not to control or claim any of his wife's property during her life or after her death, he agreed not only to never claim any of his wife's property, but to forever keep his hands off it, and thereby waived his right to appointment as her administrator, since a person who has the administration of an estate necessarily has the management and control of the personal assets thereof. In re Evans' Estate, 93 S. W. 922, 923, 117 Mo. App. 629.

Of waterworks

A city, entitled to take water from a reservoir through a pipe line, under a contract providing that no water shall be sold or furnished by the contractor to any other person or city from any point on the main pipe line, the pipe line being intended for the exclusive use of the city, "controls" the waterworks, within Act April 16, 1897 (P. L. 232), authorizing a city controlling a waterworks to contract with an adjoining city, or any private corporation therein, to furnish water. Town of Kearny v. Jersey City, 73 Atl. 110, 78 N. J. Law, 77.

CONTROLLER

The control of electric motors is effected by controlling the electric current which flows through them. The apparatus by which it is controlled is termed the "controller" or "switch." The Brown patent for a method of electrical control, designed to secure an acceleration of speed of motors and at the same time protect them from injury, is void for anticipation by the Potter patent. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Toledo, P. C. & L. R. Co., 172 Fed. 371, 373, 97 C. C. A. 69.

CONTROVERSY

See Amount in Controversy; Matter in Controversy; Property in Controversy; Separable Controversy; Severable Controversy; Substantial Controversy; Thing in Controversy; Value in Controversy or Dispute.

The term "controversies" in article 3 of the Constitution of the United States refers to cases in which such controversies are brought to the attention of the court, and not to quarrels, disputes, or controversies at large. So there could be no controversy of which the court could take or retain jurisdiction without a cause pending. Hence a case which has been dismissed by order of the court is not a "controversy," but merely a dispute at large. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Larwill, 93 N. E. 619, 621, 83 Ohio St. 108, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1195.

"The 'controversy' in a suit is the one actually presented by the pleadings, and not what it might have been. The cause of action is the subject-matter of the 'controversy.'" Vulcan Detinning Co. v. American Can Co., 130 Fed. 635, 637.

Under Act March 3, 1891, § 6, declaring the judgments of Circuit Courts of Appeals final in all cases in which the jurisdiction of federal courts is dependent entirely on the diverse citizenship of the opposite parties to the suit or controversy, and providing that in all cases not hereinbefore made final there shall be right of appeal to the Supreme Court where the amount in controversy exceeds $1,000, where jurisdiction in a foreclosure suit in which receivers were appointed depended entirely on diverse citizenship, jurisdiction of a petition of intervention asking for damages by reason of the negligence of the receivers and their agents is also wholly dependent on diverse citizenship, and the use of the words "suit or controversy" does not affect the conclusion. If the word "controversy" added anything to the comprehensiveness of the section, the power of disposition over intervention, whether styled "suit or controversy," was the exercise of power invoked at the institution of the main suit. Rouse v. Letcher, 15 Sup. Ct. 266, 268, 156 U. S. 47, 39 L. Ed. 341.

Under Gen. St. Conn. 1902, § 618, providing that any person may be made a defendant who has or claims an interest in the "controversy" or any part thereof adverse to the plaintiff, a complaint in an action by a town against several banks, alleging that its selectmen without authority borrowed money from defendant S., giving negotiable notes, which were paid in full, and that defendant S. agreed to cancel the notes and deliver them to plaintiff, but failed to do so, and that the other defendants claimed to be bona fide holders of some of such notes, and praying for a decree determining what rights, if any, the several banks had in the notes claimed by them, and that the notes be canceled and delivered to the plaintiff, and that plaintiff recover of defendant S. the amount paid on such unauthorized notes, shows such a joint or mutual interest between defendants in the controversy as warranted the joinder of defendants in a single action; the word "controversy" having a broad and comprehensive meaning, not easily susceptible to any precise general definition, and, as applied to the case, meaning the adverse claims of the parties with respect to the ownership of, liability on, and possession of the notes set forth in the complaint. Town of Fairfield v. Southport Nat. Bank, 59 Atl. 513, 514, 77 Conn. 423.

A person sued for broker's commissions cannot have another broker claiming commissions on the same sale under a separate contract brought in and the rights of both brokers determined in one action under St. 1898, § 2610, providing that the court may determine any controversy between the parties when it can be done without prejudice to the rights of others, but, when a complete determination of the controversy cannot be had without the presence of other parties, it shall order them to be brought in, since "controversy" means dispute, and the dispute, whether defendant employed plaintiff, whether plaintiff procured a purchaser, and the amount of his compensation, may be determined without prejudice to the rights of the other broker, and a complete determination of the controversy may be had without his presence, defendant having the right to show without making him a party that the purchaser was procured by the other broker. Schenck v. Sterling Engineering & Construction Co., 138 N. W. 637, 638, 151 Wis. 266 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1553).

"The controversy" as the term is used in Code Civ. Proc. § 389, providing that the court may determine any controversy between parties before it when it can be done without prejudice to the rights of others, but that, when a complete determination of "the controversy" cannot be had without the presence of other parties, the court must order them brought in, etc., means any controversy between the parties before it, named in the first clause, and includes a controversy presented by a cross-complaint, as well as that presented by the original complaint. Alpers v. Bliss (Cal.) 79 Pac. 171, 173.

Case distinguished

By "cases" and "controversies," as used in the Constitution, limiting the judicial power, was intended the claims of litigants brought before the courts for determination by such regular proceedings as are established by law or custom for the protection or enforcement of rights, or the prevention, repression, or punishment of wrongs. Whenever the claim of a party under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States takes such form that the judicial power is capable of acting upon it, then it has become a "case." The term implies the existence of present or possible adverse parties whose contentions are submitted to the court for adjudication. "Controversies," if distinguishable at all from "cases," is so in that it is less comprehensive, and includes only suits of a civil nature. Muskraat v. United States, 31 Sup. Ct. 250, 254, 219 U. S. 346, 356, 55 L. Ed. 246 (quoting and adopting definition by Chief Justice Marshall in Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137, 2 L. Ed. 60).

As cause of action

A "controversy" is involved, within a statute requiring the amount in "controversy" to exceed a certain sum to give federal courts jurisdiction, whenever any claim of the parties capable of pecuniary estimation is the subject of litigation, and is presented by the pleadings for judicial determination. Where the amount of claims for alimony reduced to judgment reach the statutory limit, it is a controversy over which the federal courts will exercise jurisdiction. Israel v. Israel, 130 Fed. 237, 240 (quoting and adopting definition in Schunk v. Moline, M. & S. Co., 13 Sup. Ct. 416, 147 U. S. 500, 37 L. Ed. 255).

Within the meaning of Act March 3, 1875, c. 137, § 2, 18 Stat. 470, as amended by Act March 3, 1887, c. 373, 24 Stat. 552, and corrected by Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, 25 Stat. 433, providing when a controversy may be removed into the circuit court of the United States, the "controversy" is the plaintiff's cause of action, and that cause of action is whatever the plaintiff, in good faith, has declared it to be in his petition. Painter v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 177 Fed. 517, 518 (citing Powers v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 18 Sup. Ct. 264, 169 U. S. 92-97, 42 L. Ed. 673; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Thompson, 26 Sup. Ct. 161, 200 U. S. 206-216, 50 L. Ed. 441, 4 Ann. Cas. 1147; Wecker v. National Enameling & Stamping Co., 27 Sup. Ct. 184, 204 U. S. 176-182, 51 L. Ed. 430, 9 Ann. Cas. 757).

CONTROVERSY ARISING IN BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS

By "controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings" as used in the Bankruptcy Act, investing the Supreme Court of the United States, the Circuit Court of Appeals and the Supreme Courts of the territories with appellate jurisdiction of controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings, is meant those independent or plenary suits which concern the bankrupt's estate and arise by intervention or otherwise between the trustee representing the bankrupt's estate and claimants asserting some right of interest adverse to the bankrupt or his general creditors. Judgments or orders of a District or Circuit Court, entered in controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings, as distinguished from those entered in bankruptcy proceedings proper, are reviewable by the Circuit Courts of Appeals only by appeal or writ of error under their general appellate jurisdiction, as provided in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 25a, 30 Stat. 553. In re Mueller, 185 Fed. 711, 713, 68 C. C. A. 349.

"Controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, § 24a, which invests the Circuit Court of Appeals with appellate jurisdiction of controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings in courts of bankruptcy, is not the same as "proceedings of the several inferior courts of bankruptcy." Thus, the summary order by a bankruptcy court for a sale may be a "proceeding in bankruptcy," while the controversy as to the title of the property may be a "controversy arising in bankruptcy proceedings." Mason v. Wolkowich, 150 Fed. 699, 702, 80 C. C. A. 435, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 765 (quoting and adopting definition in Burleigh v. Foreman, 125 Fed. 217, 60 C. C. A. 109, 112).

Nothing can be regarded as a "controversy arising in bankruptcy proceedings," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 24a, 30 Stat. 553, where the subject-matter and object of the proceedings are within the power of the trial court to make a summary order, especially where a plenary action is not sought; a complaint in regard to a summary order to turn over assets not being specially made appealable under such subdivision. In re Farrell, 178 Fed. 505, 509, 100 C. C. A. 68.

Where the decision of a trial court in a bankruptcy proceeding is brought under review in an appellate court, it presents a "controversy arising in a bankruptcy proceeding." Thomas v. Woods, 173 Fed. 585, 587, 97 C. C. A. 535, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1180, 19 Ann. Cas. 1080.

Proceedings by a court of bankruptcy upon a petition filed by a trustee for an order to sell real estate, and also to bring in third persons asserting liens thereon for the purpose of determining their rights as incidental to such sale, are "proceedings in bankruptcy," as distinguished from "controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings" and are reviewable by the Circuit Court of Appeals on petition for revision under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 24b, 30 Stat. 552. In re McMahon, 147 Fed. 684, 689, 77 C. C. A. 668.

A dispute between a receiver in bankruptcy and an outside person as to whether a contract was made between them for the sale and purchase of property of the estate, brought before the bankruptcy court for determination, is a "controversy arising in bankruptcy proceedings," within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 24a, 30 Stat. 553 and an order made therein is reviewable by appeal. In re J. Jungmann, 186 Fed. 302, 304, 108 C. C. A. 380.

"Controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings," appealable under section 24a, embrace questions between the trustee, representing the bankrupt and his creditors, on the one side, and adverse claimants, on the other, not directly affecting the administrative orders and judgments ordinarily known as "proceedings in bankruptcy," which are confined to questions arising between the bankrupt and his creditors, and are the very subject of such administrative orders and judgments, from the petition for adjudication to the discharge, including intermediate administrative steps, and such controversies as arise between the parties to the bankruptcy proceedings as are involved in the allowing of claims and fixing their priorities, sales, allowances, and other matters which are disposed of summarily, and hence the term "controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings" does not include an order dismissing a petition for the revocation of the bankrupt's discharge. Thompson v. Mauzy, 174 Fed. 611, 614, 98 C. C. A. 457.

The petition of a trustee in bankruptcy, filed in the bankruptcy court, to have adverse claims and lien on property of the estate declared void, and for a sale of the property free and clear of the same, has the elements of a suit in equity, and the decision therein is reviewable by the Circuit Court of Appeals on appeal, under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 24a, as involving a "controversy." Thomas v. Woods, 173 Fed. 585, 589, 97 C. C. A. 535, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1109, 19 Ann. Cas. 1080.

The disallowance of certain claims against a bankrupt's estate by the District Court of the United States for Porto Rico, sitting as a court of bankruptcy, is not reviewable in the federal Supreme Court under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 24a, 30 Stat. 553, since the allowance or disallowance of a claim in bankruptcy is not a "controversy arising in bankruptcy proceedings," but is a "proceeding in bankruptcy," the mode of reviewing which is confined, by section 25a, to an appeal to the appropriate Circuit Court of Appeals or Territorial Supreme Court. Tefft, Weller & Co. v. Munsuri, 82 Sup. Ct. 67, 69, 222 U. S. 114, 56 L. Ed. 118.

When an adverse claimant voluntarily comes into a court of bankruptcy and claims property in the possession of the trustee, wherever situated, or asserts a lien thereon and seeks to have it established, enforced, or protected, the proceeding becomes a "proceeding in bankruptcy" in the course of collecting the estate, reducing the same to money, and distributing the same, and a "controversy" in relation to the estate within the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court, under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 2, subd. 7, 80 Stat. 546. In re MacDougall, 175 Fed. 400, 405.

An appeal lies to the federal Supreme Court, under Act March 3, 1891, c. 517, § 6, 26 Stat. 823, from a judgment of a Circuit Court of Appeals, entered on an appeal from a judgment of a court of bankruptcy, sustaining a title to property in the possession of a trustee in bankruptcy, asserted by intervention, raising a distinct and separable issue, since the controversy may be regarded as one of those "controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings," over which the Circuit Court of Appeals could, under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 24a, 80 Stat. 553, exercise appellate jurisdiction as in other cases. Hewitt v. Berlin Mach. Works, 24 Sup. Ct. 690, 691, 194 U. S. 296, 48 L. Ed. 986.

There is a distinction between steps in bankruptcy proceedings, proper, and "controversies arising out of the settlement of the estates of bankrupts." In re Levitt, 126 Fed. 889, 891.

The distinction between "proceedings in bankruptcy," reviewable by petition for review, as authorized by Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 24b, and "controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings," reviewable by appeal, as authorized by section 24a, is that the former refers to and includes administrative orders and decrees in the ordinary course of the administration of a bankrupt's estate between the filing of the petition and the final settlement thereof, while the latter refers to and includes those independent or plenary suits which concern the bankrupt's estate and arise by intervention or otherwise between the trustees representing the estate and claimants representing some right or interest adverse to the bankrupt or his general creditors; the remedies afforded by the two subsections being mutually exclusive. Where a bankrupt's trustee instituted proceedings to set aside certain conveyances of real estate alleged to have been made to defraud the bankrupt's creditors, and also to vacate the lien of a mortgage thereon as against the mortgage, who was no party to the bankruptcy proceedings and was not a creditor of the estate, but a stranger thereto, asserting rights paramount to and independent of those of the estate, the controversy, so far as it related to such lien, was not a "proceeding in bankruptcy," reviewable by petition for review, as authorized by Bankr. Act July, 1898, c. 541, § 24b, 80 Stat. 553, but was instead a "controversy arising in bankruptcy proceedings," reviewable only as provided by section 24a. Barnes v. Pampel, 192 Fed. 525, 528, 113 C. C. A. 81.

CONTROVERSY ARISING UNDER FEDERAL CONSTITUTION

A "controversy arising under the federal Constitution," of which a federal Circuit Court has original jurisdiction without regard to the citizenship of the parties, is presented by a bill which asserts that the obligation of a contract for the exclusive privilege of supplying water to a city and its inhabitants is impaired by a subsequent municipal ordinance and a legislative enactment under which the municipality is proceeding to issue and market its bonds for the purpose of constructing its own waterworks system. Mercantile Trust & D. Co. v. Columbus, 27 Sup. Ct. 83, 86, 203 U. S. 311, 51 L. Ed. 198.

CONTROVERSY BETWEEN CITIZENS OF DIFFERENT STATES, AND BETWEEN CITIZENS OF STATE AND FOREIGN SUBJECTS

The language of the Judiciary Act, providing that the jurisdiction of the Circuit Courts of the United States shall extend to "controversies between citizens of different states" and also to "controversies between a citizen of a state and foreign citizens or subjects," cannot be construed to include a controversy between aliens, or a controversy between citizens of different territories, or between a citizen of a state and a citizen of a territory. "Territory" is not a state, within the meaning of the act defining the jurisdiction of the federal courts. McClelland v. McKane, 154 Fed. 164, 165 (citing Barney v. Baltimore, 6 Wall. [73 U. S.] 280, 287, 18 L. Ed. 825; Watson v. Bonfils, 116 Fed. 157, 53 C. C. A. 535; Weiler v. Hanauer, 105 Fed. 193; Johnson v. Bunker Hill & S. M. & C. Co., 46 Fed. 417; Seddon v. Virginia, T. & C. S. & I. Co., 36 Fed. 6, 1 L. R. A. 108).

The phrase "controversy between citizens of different states" in the federal Constitution, extending judicial power to controversies between citizens of the different states, and Act Cong. March 3, 1887, as corrected by Act Cong. August 13, 1888, providing that the Circuit Courts of the United States shall have original cognizance concurrent with the courts of the several states of all suits where there shall be a controversy between citizens of the different states, does not mean a controversy between citizens of the same state and citizens of another state, and two citizens of different states may maintain in the federal court an action against a citizen of a third state in the federal Circuit Court for the district of the residence of the latter. Sweeney v. Carter Oil Co., 26 Sup. Ct. 55, 56, 199 U. S. 252, 50 L. Ed. 178.

A suit by Pennsylvania and New Jersey corporations against a New York corporation operating a street railway system in the city of New York, the bill in which avers an unsatisfied indebtedness due each complainant from the defendant, substantially involves a "controversy between citizens of different states," within the meaning of Act Aug. 13, 1888, 25 Stat. 433, c. 866, § 1, defining the jurisdiction of the federal Circuit Courts, although the defendant admits the indebtedness and the other allegations of the bill, and joins with the complainants in a request that receivers be appointed. In re Reisenberg, 28 Sup. Ct. 219, 223, 208 U. S. 90, 52 L. Ed. 403.

CONTROVERSY BETWEEN STATES

A conflict between the authorities of the states of Louisiana and Mississippi, arising out of the enforcement of the oyster legislation of those states, which involves a dispute respecting the true boundary line, creates a "controversy between the states" in their sovereign capacity, which is within the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States. Louisiana v. Mississippi, 26 Sup. Ct. 408, 416, 202 U. S. 1, 50 L. Ed. 913.

CONTROVERSY CONCERNING CONSTRUCTION OF CONSTITUTION

A contention by importers that the treasury regulations respecting the polariscopic test for sugar assumed to add something to the dutiable standard prescribed by Tariff Act July 24, 1897, so that the Secretary of the Treasury thus exercised legislative power confided by the Constitution solely to Congress, does not constitute a real and substantial "controversy concerning the construction or application of the federal Constitution," within the meaning of Act March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. 828, c. 517) § 5, so as to sustain a direct appeal from a federal court to the Supreme Court. American Sugar Refining Co. v. United States, 29 Sup. Ct. 89, 91, 211 U. S. 155, 53 L. Ed. 129.

CONTROVERSY CONCERNING PROPERTY

A claim for damage for the flowage of land by a milldam under the mill acts is not a "controversy concerning property," within the meaning of Const. art. 1, § 20, declaring that in civil suits and in controversies concerning property the party shall have a right to a trial by jury, except in cases where it has heretofore been otherwise practiced. Ingram v. Maine Water Co., 57 Atl. 893, 894, 98 Me. 566.

CONTROVERSY RESPECTING EXISTENCE OF WILL

Under P. L. 1898, p. 715, § 2, which declares that the orphans' court shall have "full power and authority to determine all controversies respecting the existence of wills," and section 174 et seq., which provides for process to compel the appearance of any person before the orphans' court and the making of orders for publication and for the enforcement of decrees, it has the power to inquire whether a writing executed as a will, and that was in existence unrevoked at the time of the testator's death, has been since lost or destroyed, and, if so, to prove the contents thereof. In re Cassidy's Will, 82 Atl. 920, 80 N. J. Eq. 163.

CONVENIENCE—CONVENIENT

See Early as Convenient; Facilities and Conveniences; Inconvenience; Most Convenient; Public Convenience; Public Service Facilities and Conveniences.

A telephone is a "convenience," within Const. art. 9, § 18, authorizing the corporation commission to require carriers to establish and maintain all "public service facilities and conveniences" as may be reasonable and just, and the commission may require a carrier to install and maintain in its station a telephone. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. State, 100 Pac. 11, 14, 23 Okl. 210, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 908.

A requirement that a notice of incorporation be published in some newspaper as "convenient" as practicable to the principal place of business of the corporation means that it shall be published in the nearest or most handy. Any other construction would be strained and unnatural. The requirement was not satisfied by publication in a newspaper published in some small town more distant from such place of business by wagon road, and much more so by railroad, than many other towns, some of them much larger, in all of which newspapers are published. Clinton Novelty Iron Works v. Neiting, 111 N. W. 974, 975, 134 Iowa, 311.

The word "convenient," used by the courts in sustaining equitable jurisdiction, has not always been aptly used and may be misleading. It was never intended as a definition of equity jurisdiction in the sense of saying that an action at law is less "convenient" and a bill in equity more "convenient." It is a convenience of the court, and not of the pleader, to which the term applies. Wagner v. Fehr, 60 Atl. 1043, 1046, 211 Pa. 435, 3 Ann. Cas. 608.

Ky. St. § 772, requiring railroad companies to provide "convenient" water-closets or privies, and maintain them in decent order at their stations, is to be reasonably construed, and, before a company could be held liable for failure to do so, it must be shown that it suffered a privy to remain in an indecent or unclean condition; and it is not enough to show that on one or two occasions it was found out of order or unclean. If a railroad company builds and maintains a closet suitable for the wants of the traveling public, as convenient to a depot as the circumstances permit, and keeps it in decent order and repair, it has substantially complied with the requirements of such section; the word "convenient" being defined as "handy" and as "easy of access." In complying with such section, if the location of public buildings and dwellings near a depot is such that a privy cannot be maintained nearer than where it is located, without being objectionable and offensive, if not injurious to the health of citizens living there, the company would not be required to maintain it nearer to the depot. In determining whether a railroad company has complied with Ky. St. § 772, in providing a "convenient" water-closet at a station, not only its distance from the depot, but the means of approach thereto, must be considered. It was not contemplated by such section that companies should be put to the expense of establishing and maintaining a waterworks system at a depot to maintain a privy immediately adjacent thereto to accommodate the traveling public. Such section was not made or intended to apply to the wants of persons who use a passenger depot as a lodging house, for section 784, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 5383), only requires passenger depots to be kept open for the reception of passengers a limited time prior to the arrival and departure of regularly scheduled trains. Nor does such section require a company to meet a condition when travel on particular days is abnormal or congested, but only that its accommodations shall be such as will meet the requirements of its ordinary and usual travel. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 127 S. W. 152, 153, 137 Ky. 802.

As reasonable time

One who borrows money, to be repaid "when convenient, or when business picks up," is bound to repay within a reasonable time, and is not entitled to hold the money indefinitely at his election. One year is a reasonable time for repayment of the money. Samuels v. Larrimore (Cal.) 104 Pac. 1001, 1002.

CONVENIENT IN POINT OF DISTANCE

The phrase "convenient in point of distance," as used in Code Iowa, § 4420, providing that application for the writ of habeas corpus must be made to the judge most convenient in point of distance to the applicant, and that more remote judges, if applied to, may refuse the same, is of quite indefinite meaning, and often might reasonably be applied to any one of several judges presiding in different localities. The restriction serves to put the judge upon his guard and suggest inquiry into the propriety of his entertaining the proceeding and the good faith of the applicant in coming to him, but it is not a jurisdictional question. When application is made to a Supreme Court judge, the provisions of such section do not apply, since the Supreme Court has original jurisdiction co-extensive with the state. Ware v. Sanders, 124 N. W. 1081, 1084, 146 Iowa, 233.

CONVENIENCE OR COMMODITY

A contract between two telephone companies having connecting exchanges gave each the exclusive right to have transmitted over its lines all messages coming from the lines of the other destined to points on the lines of the connecting company not reached by the lines of the other company, and provided that the connecting carrier should receive for its service a percentage of the charge made, to be determined on the basis of the relative number of miles the message was transmitted on their respective lines. Rev. St. 1899, § 8978 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4157), forbids two or more corporations engaged in buying or selling any commodity or thing to agree to limit competition by refusing to buy from or sell to any other such article or thing for the reason that such other is not a party to such agreement or combination. Held, that telephone service was a "convenience or commodity" within the statute, and the contract was void for prohibiting the parties from buying such service as to messages destined to points on the lines of the other from other companies, and attempting to create a monopoly as to such business. Home Telephone Co. v. Granby & Neosho Telephone Co., 126 S. W. 773, 782, 147 Mo. App. 216.

CONVENTION

See Constitutional Convention; Joint Convention; Political Convention.

Adjournment of convention, see Adjournment.

See, also, Primary Election.

"Convention," as used and employed in the direct primary election law (Laws 1909, p. 196), means an organized body of delegates or representatives assembled for the purpose of making nominations, and does not have reference to a mass meeting or assemblage of persons who represent themselves only, but is intended to be an assemblage or body selected or appointed by some class, body, or party of electors as representatives of the people, party, or district making the selection or appointment. State ex rel. Spofford v. Gifford, 126 Pac. 1060, 22 Idaho, 613; State ex rel. Peters v. Superior Court of Kitsap County, 127 Pac. 310, 312, 70 Wash. 662.

In view of Laws 1911, c. 891, defining a "convention," as used therein, as an assemblage of delegates elected according to the provisions of the chapter and representing a political party duly convened to nominate candidates for public office, etc., or for the transaction of any other business relating to the affairs of the party, section 112 of the chapter, relating to the organization of conventions, would not apply to the meeting of a party congressional committee appointed before the statute was enacted. In re Daniel, 134 N. Y. Supp. 254, 255, 149 App. Div. 777.

"A 'convention,' within the meaning of the statute relating to nominations [for public office], is an organized assembly of delegates or electors representing a political party or principle. Such a convention may name candidates for public offices to be filled by any public election within this state. All nominations made by such conventions are required to be certified in the prescribed manner." A county central committee of a political party called a convention for a certain time and place, and a majority of the committee thereafter selected a building for holding it, of which all had notice. A minority of the committee selected another building. At the first place a convention was had, which was called to order by the chairman of the committee, and, being organized in the usual manner, proceeded to make the nominations provided for in the call. At the second place certain delegates, who did not attend the other convention, met, were called to order by a member of the committee, organized, and made nominations for the same offices. The first convention was the regular convention, and its nominees were entitled to have their names placed on the ballot as the nominees of the party. State ex rel. Howells v. Metcalf, 100 N. W. 923, 925, 18 S. D. 393, 67 L. R. A. 331.

Twelve members of a city council were to be elected, four from each of three wards, and the Democratic committee determined that nominations for the common council should be made at a primary election, and in the call therefor it was provided that, if there were not more than four candidates for either of the three wards of the city, the committee would declare such candidates the nominees of the party, and no primary would be held. Twelve defendants in the action were the only announced candidates, and the committee declared them the nominees, and issued to them certificates of nomination. Ky. St. § 1453 (Russell's St. § 4012) requires the county clerk to print on the respective ballots "the names of the candidates nominated by the convention or primary election" of any party entitled to have its candidates placed upon ballots. Held, in an action for a mandatory injunction, requiring the clerk to put the names of plaintiffs on the ballot as candidates of the Democratic party, that the word "convention" was not used in any technical sense, and that the committee, as the governing authority of the party, had the power to determine how its nominations should be made, and that plaintiffs were not entitled to an injunction. Gilbert v. Smith, 140 S. W. 147, 145 Ky. 165.

CONVENTIONAL DIVISION OF CHARGE

Where goods are received in transit under a "conventional division of the charges," there is an apportionment of the charges by agreement of the participating carriers. Mutual Transit Co. v. United States, 178 Fed. 664, 668, 102 C. C. A. 164.

CONVENTIONAL LIFE ESTATE

"Conventional life estates" are those made by act, contract, or convention of the parties, and may be an estate to one for his own life, or during the life of another, or for an uncertain period, terminating upon the happening of a certain event, which may last a lifetime. Disley v. Disley, 75 Atl. 481, 483, 30 R. I. 366.

CONVENTIONAL SUBROGATION

"Conventional subrogation" may result from a direct agreement between a debtor and a third person who pays the debt that he shall be subrogated to all the rights and securities existing in behalf of the creditor whose debt is paid off, but nothing short of an express agreement to that effect will move a court of equity in behalf of such a creditor. A mere understanding on the part of such a third person, under no obligation to pay the debt, that he by such payment will be subrogated to liens of the creditor, is not enough. J. P. Browder & Co. v. Hill, 136 Fed. 821, 823, 824, 69 C. C. A. 499 (citing Sheld. Subr. §§ 243, 248, 250; Receivers of New Jersey M. R. Co. v. Wortendyke, 27 N. J. Eq. 658, overruling Coe v. New Jersey M. R. Co., 27 N. J. Eq. 111; Unger v. Leiter, 32 Ohio St. 210; Brice v. Watkins, 30 La. Ann. 21; Hutchinson v. Rice, 29 South. 898, 105 La. 474; Cumberland Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Sparks, 111 Fed. 648, 49 C. C. A. 510).

CONVERSION

See Constructive Conversion; Equitable Conversion; Fraudulent Conversion; Reconversion.

See, also, Trover.

Any distinct act of dominion wrongfully exerted over another's property, in denial of his right or inconsistent with it, is a "conversion." Crawford v. Thomason, 117 S. W. 181, 183, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 561; Aylesbury Mercantile Co. v. Fitch, 99 Pac. 1089, 22 Okl. 475, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 573; Baldwin v. G. M. Davidson & Co. (Tex.) 143 S. W. 716, 717; Quitman Naval Stores Co. v. Conway, 58 South. 840, 63 Fla. 253; Continental Gin Co. v. De Bord, 123 Pac. 159, 160, 34 Okl. 66.

The action of trover being founded on a concurrent right of property and possession, any act of the defendant which negatives or is inconsistent with such right amounts in law to a "conversion." Roper Wholesale Grocery Co. v. Favor, 68 S. E. 883, 884, 8 Ga. App. 178; Swauk v. Elwert, 105 Pac. 901, 905, 55 Or. 487.

"Conversion" is any unauthorized act which deprives a person of his property permanently. Phillippos v. Mihran, 80 Pac. 527, 528, 38 Wash. 402.

"Conversion" is the turning or applying of the property of another to one's own use. Crow v. Ball (Tex.) 99 S. W. 583, 584.

"Conversion" is an unauthorized assumption and exercise of the right of ownership over goods or personal chattels belonging to another, to the alteration of their condition or the exclusion of the owner's rights. Reich v. Cochran, 99 N. Y. Supp. 755, 756, 114 App. Div. 141 (citing Industrial & General Trust v. Tod, 63 N. E. 285, 170 N. Y. 233, 245).

A "conversion" is shown when one person unlawfully interferes with the property of another, and assumes and exercises dominion over it in disregard, and to the exclusion, of the owner's rights therein. People's State Savings Bank v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 138 S. W. 915, 158 Mo. App. 519.

"Conversion" is the unlawful turning or applying the personal goods of another to the use of the taker or of some other person than the owner, or the unlawful destroying or altering their nature. National Bank of Commerce of Kansas City v. Southern Ry. Co., 115 S. W. 517, 518, 135 Mo. App. 74.

To constitute a "conversion" of personal property, there must be some repudiation of the owner's rights, or some exercise of dominion over it inconsistent with such right, or some act done which has the effect of destroying or changing its character. Merz v. Croxen, 112 N. W. 890, 891, 102 Minn. 69.

"Conversion" consists either in the appropriation of the property of another or in its destruction, or in exercising dominion over it in defiance of the owner's rights, or in withholding the possession from him under an adverse claim of title, and all who aid or participate in the commission of the unlawful acts are liable. Merchants' Nat. Bank of Baltimore v. Williams, 72 Atl. 1114, 1117, 110 Md. 334.

"Conversion" may be shown by the exercise of control over the property inconsistent with the right of the owner, and by excluding him from the possession, or depriving him of it. McGonigle v. Victor H. J. Belle Isle Co., 71 N. E. 569, 571, 186 Mass. 310.

"Conversion" is the unlawful and wrongful exercise of dominion, ownership, or control by one person over the property of another, to the exclusion of the exercise of the same rights by the owner, either permanently or for an indefinite time, and may be effected by taking actual corporal possession and control over the property of another so as to prevent the owner from the exercise of such rights. France v. Gibson (Tex.) 101 S. W. 536.

In order to constitute an actual conversion of goods, there must be some repudiation of the owner's right, or some exercise of dominion over them inconsistent with such right, or some act done which has the effect of destroying or changing the quality of the chattel. Kitchen v. Schuster, 89 Pac.

261, 264, 14 N. M. 164 (quoting Woodside v. Adams, 40 N. J. Law, 417).

"A 'conversion' of property is an act of malfeasance, and not a mere nonfeasance; a positive wrong, and not the mere omission of what was right. The manner in which possession of the property was acquired by defendant in an action in trover may be material with regard to the evidence of a conversion. To maintain an action for conversion, there must have been on the part of defendant some unlawful assumption of dominion over the personal property involved, in defiance or exclusion of plaintiff's rights, or else a withholding of the possession under a claim of right or title, inconsistent with that of plaintiff. Lee Tung v. Burkhart, 116 Pac. 1066, 1069, 59 Or. 194 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7112).

To constitute "conversion," there must be a positive tortious act, a tortious detention of personal property from the owner or its destruction or an exclusion or defiance of the owner's right, or the withholding of possession under a claim of title inconsistent with that of the owner. Taucher v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 129 N. W. 747, 750, 21 N. D. 111.

One who wrongfully seizes and exercises control over the chattels of another, especially if upon demand he refuses to surrender them to the true owner, is guilty of "conversion," whatever his motive or excuse, and there is a conversion where a sheriff under a writ of attachment seizes the property of another and holds it as against a demand by the true owner. Seivert v. Galvin, 113 N. W. 680, 682, 133 Wis. 391.

The illegal taking or wrongful assuming of a right to personal property, constitutes a "conversion," and no further step is necessary to perfect the right of action therefor. Meyer v. Doherty, 113 N. W. 671, 673, 133 Wis. 398.

"Any wrongful exercise of dominion by one person over the goods and chattels of another, which is inconsistent with and exclusive of the owner's rights therein, amounts to a 'conversion' thereof." Where one was intrusted with certificates of stock for a particular purpose, and transferred them to another, and converted the proceeds to his own use, his dealing constituted a "conversion." Wilkinson v. Misner, 138 S. W. 931, 932, 158 Mo. App. 551.

Defendant's exercise of acts of ownership or dominion over plaintiff's property does not constitute "conversion" if it is not inconsistent with plaintiff's right or title, or if plaintiff consents or acquiesces therein. Sigel-Campion Live Stock Co. v. Holly, 101 Pac. 68, 72, 44 Colo. 582.

"Any distinct act of dominion wrongfully exercised over one's property in denial of his right or inconsistent with it is a 'conversion.' * * * The test is whether the wrongdoer has exercised a dominion over the property in exclusion or in defiance of the plaintiff's rights." In an action against a sheriff and undersheriff for "conversion" of personal property belonging to plaintiff, and located in a houseboat levied on, an instruction that if the man in charge of the boat knew that plaintiff was the owner, or if at that time he was so informed by plaintiff, and he forbade plaintiff to take the property, such denial of plaintiff's right was a denial by defendants, and amounted to a "conversion," entitling plaintiff to recover the full value of the property which was removed by defendants from the boat, was proper. Lucas v. Sheridan, 102 N. W. 1077, 1028, 124 Wis. 567 (quoting and adopting definition in Cernahan v. Chrysler, 107 Wis. 645, 647, 648, 83 N. W. 778).

A contract of sale of soda in bottles stipulated that the bottles should remain the property of the seller, and that the buyer at his own expense should return them. The buyer delivered them to a carrier's agent, consigned to the seller, and they were loaded and waybilled. Held, that the buyer was not guilty of "conversion," which consists either in the appropriation of the property to the party's own use and beneficial enjoyment, or in its destruction, or in exercising dominion over it in defiance of the owner's rights, or in withholding possession from the owner under a claim of title inconsistent with his title. C. H. Eddy & Co. v. Field, 81 Atl. 249, 250, 85 Vt. 188.

"The words 'converted' and 'conversion,' have a well-defined meaning in the law, and when used in connection with the taking and appropriation of personal property of another imply a wrongful or unlawful act." It is not necessary, in an action in trover or conversion, to allege in the complaint that the property was "wrongfully" or "unlawfully" converted. The allegation that it was "converted" implies a wrongful act. Cordill v. Minnesota Elevator Co., 95 N. W. 306, 307, 89 Minn. 442.

As element of larceny

"Any direct act of dominion, wrongfully exercised over one's property, in denial of his right or inconsistent with it, is a 'conversion.'" There is a conversion, within the statute declaring guilty of larceny one who receives money of the state and converts it, where money, being deposited in a bank by the state treasurer for safe-keeping, is paid out to others than such treasurer. "Convert to his own use," within the statute, is equivalent to the term "conversion" in its legal sense; and it is enough to constitute it that one assumes to dispose of the property of another without right, as if it were his own, though he gets no personal benefit from it. State v. Ross, 104 Pac. 596, 602, 55 Or. 450, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 601, 618 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1564).

By officer of national bank

The word "conversion," as used in an indictment of an officer of a national bank, under Rev. St. § 5209, for misapplication of the funds or property of the bank, means the officer's misapplication of the funds or property of the bank by unlawfully and fraudulently converting the same to his own use. United States v. Eastman, 132 Fed. 551, 553.

Delay

Mere delay in the delivery of goods by a carrier does not constitute a "conversion." St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Tyler Coffin Co. (Tex.) 81 S. W. 826, 827.

Delay on the part of a carrier does not constitute a "conversion" of the goods, no matter how long continued, so as to make him liable for their value. Ryland & Rankin v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 46 S. E. 923, 924, 55 W. Va. 181.

An unreasonable delay in the shipment of goods does not amount to a "conversion," and the owner is bound to receive the goods when tendered at the proper place, however long the delay. Higgins v. United States Exp. Co., 85 Atl. 450, 452, 83 N. J. Law, 398.

"Delay on the part of a carrier does not constitute a 'conversion' of the goods, no matter how long continued, so as to make him liable for their value; and so long as the goods remain in specie, however much they may be depreciated in value, the consignee or owner must receive them when tendered, and can recover from the carrier only the damages which he has sustained by the delay." Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Everett & Long, 83 S. W. 257, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 167 (citing Hutch. Carr. §§ 770d, 775; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Jackson [Tex.] 15 S. W. 128; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Booton [Tex.] 15 S. W. 502; Baumbach v. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co., 23 S. W. 693, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 650).

Demand necessary

Plaintiff sold wagons to H., retaining title till they were paid for, which was never done. H. then mortgaged them to defendant, thereafter had the key to the building in which they were kept, and acted as agent for her as respected her right as mortgagee, keeping the wagons for her under a claim of right inconsistent with plaintiff's rights. Held, there was a "conversion" by defendant, authorizing an action therefor without a prior demand. Geneva Wagon Co. v. Smith, 74 N. E. 299, 188 Mass. 202.

Where goods are lawfully taken from a chattel mortgagor by the mortgagee under the mortgage, a detention thereof by the mortgagee is not unlawful, where no demand is shown to have been made on the mortgage for a compliance with the terms of the mortgage, or a demand for the return of the property, accompanied with tender of the amount due thereon, before sale. Shelton v. Holz-wasser, 91 N. Y. Supp. 328, 330, 46 Misc. Rep. 76.

One who contracted to furnish the iron-work for a building, reserving title pending payment, even if not himself in default, should have demanded a part of the ironwork furnished or payment therefor before suing as for "conversion" one who purchased the land at foreclosure sale, at least in absence of proof that the purchaser was a bona fide purchaser. Klein v. Cohen, 127 N. Y. Supp. 171, 172, 142 App. Div. 500.

Intent

A chattel mortgage gave the mortgagors the right to exclusive possession of the property before default, but obligated them not to permit the property to be attached. In violation of this condition, the mortgagors suffered an attachment, which the mortgagees attempted to dissolve, under Pub. St. 1882, c. 161, § 75, but ineffectually, because of failure to make a proper demand on the attaching creditor or sheriff. Subsequently the mortgagors assigned for the benefit of creditors, under Pub. St. 1882, c. 157, section 46 of which declares the assignment to vest in the assignee all the property of the debtor. The mortgagee took no steps to foreclose his mortgage, and failed, after the assignment, to make any demand on the sheriff for the property, and the latter turned it over to the assignee. Held, that the sheriff was not guilty of a "conversion." Cousins v. O'Brien, 74 N. E. 289, 290, 188 Mass. 146.

Wrongful intention is not essential to a "conversion," it being sufficient if the owner has been deprived of his property by an unauthorized assumption of control and dominion, so that defendants who purchased land in the construction of the building on which plaintiff furnished the ironwork, reserving title in himself until payment therefor, were liable for conversion of such iron before it was paid for if they altered the condition of the property without authority from plaintiff, but the conveyance of the property to one not a bona fide purchaser, but who held subject to plaintiff's rights therein, did not constitute a conversion of the ironwork as to plaintiff. Klein v. Cohen, 127 N. Y. Supp. 171, 174, 142 App. Div. 500.

Where defendants, claiming under authority from the owner of land on which plaintiffs were conducting a refreshment stand, forcibly and wrongfully removed plaintiffs' chattels from the land and deposited them a short distance away, and exercised no further acts of dominion, it did not amount to a "conversion." The court said: "From the time that it was set down there by the defendants nothing prevented the plaintiffs from taking immediate possession of it. They were practically assured by the defendants that the only interference which they had to apprehend from them was the prevention of their use of this property in the spot in the highway where the plaintiffs insisted upon using it. In my judgment, such an interference with the property, although it was beyond doubt an asportation of the goods, was not a 'conversion.' Such asportation was not done with any intent to assert any right in the chattels or to deny any title of the owner, nor did it have the effect of destroying the chattels or altering their nature. It was not, therefore, a 'conversion' of them, so that the plaintiffs had the right to abandon them entirely to the defendants, to refuse to take them back, had the defendants offered to return them, and enable the plaintiffs to treat them as having been purchased by the defendants from the plaintiffs." Hammond v. Sullivan, 99 N. Y. Supp. 472, 473, 112 App. Div. 788 (citing People v. Bank of North American, 75 N. Y. 547, 564; O. J. Gude Co. v. Farley, 54 N. Y. Supp. 998, 25 Misc. Rep. 502).

Misdelivery or refusal to deliver

Taking and using a horse without consent of the owner, and refusing to give him up on demand, constitutes a "conversion." Pepper v. Price, 107 N. Y. Supp. 559, 560.

Where a purchaser of drafts, drawn by a shipper, payable to itself, and bills of lading, consigning to itself goods against which the drafts were drawn, and which goods the shipper had agreed to sell to a third person, forwarded the drafts and bills of lading to a banker for collection with instructions to deliver documents only on payment, the purchaser reserved the title and jus disponendi, and the banker delivering the goods to the third person before payment was guilty of "conversion," a wrongful delivery of goods, either negligently or willfully, made by one intrusted with the custody of them, being a conversion. Where the banker delivered the goods to the third person prior to payment, the purchaser could ratify the tortious act and could sue the banker for conversion. First Nat. Bank of Cincinnati v. Felker, 185 Fed. 678, 681.

"Conversion," such as will sustain an action of trover, imports an unlawful act, and a mere nonfeasance is not sufficient. "It is generally laid down that any act that is an interference with the owner's dominion and right of property is a conversion;" but it must be an interference that cannot, as against the owner, be justified or excused by one who comes lawfully into possession. Where defendant took up plaintiff's stray heifer, and failed to post and advertise the same as required by statute, defendant having come lawfully into possession, such failure did not constitute a conversion. Andrews v. Carl, 59 Atl. 167, 77 Vt. 172.

In an action against a sheriff and undersheriff for "conversion" of personal property belonging to plaintiff, and located in a houseboat levied on, an instruction that if the man in charge of the boat knew that plaintiff was the owner, or if at that time he was so informed by plaintiff, and he forbade plaintiff to take the property, such denial of plaintiff's right was a denial by defendants, and amounted to a "conversion," entitling plaintiff to recover the full value of the property which was removed by defendants from the boat, was proper. *Lucas v. Where receivers appointed for an insolvent corporation were dispossessed from rented premises occupied by them, and thereafter demanded possession of trade fixtures left on the premises of the lessor, which he refused, such refusal amounted to a "conversion" of the property. Bergh v. Herring-Hall-Marvin Safe Co., 136 Fed. 368, 871, 69 C. C. A. 212, 70 L. R. A. 756 (citing Lewis v. Ocean Nav. & Pier Co., 26 N. E. 301, 125 N. Y. 341; Moore v. Wood [N. Y.] 12 Abb. Prac. 393).

In order to charge a person with the "conversion" of the goods of another, "he must be shown to have done some act implying the exercise or assumption of title, or of a dominion over the goods, or some act inconsistent with the plaintiff's right of ownership, or in repudiation of such right." Hence a person who, having undertaken to sell certain property as the agent of another, returned some of the property to persons from whom it was purchased, receiving credit therefor, and placed the remainder in his own stock, so that its identity was substantially lost, and thereafter sold the property as his own, without keeping any account of his transactions, although he had agreed to dispose of the property as rapidly as possible and to report the sales as they were made, is liable for the value of the property as of the date he assumed control over it. Allsopp v. Joshua Hendy Mach. Works, 90 Pac. 39, 41, 5 Cal. App. 228 (quoting and adopting definition in Steele v. Marsicano, 36 Pac. 920, 102 Cal. 666).

Same—By carrier

A delivery of goods by a carrier or warehouseman to the wrong person constitutes a "conversion" for which an action of trover will lie. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co. v. Phillips, 70 Atl. 232, 236, 108 Md. 285.

Loss of goods by wrongful delivery negligently made by a carrier is "conversion," for which it is liable to account at the full value of the goods. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Goodwin, 57 S. E. 1070, 1072, 1 Ga. App. 351.

The failure of an express company to deliver goods intrusted to it for carriage, or to return them on demand, because of their loss, does not constitute a "conversion" by it of the goods. Goldbowitz v. Metropolitan Exp. Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 318.

"Conversion," as defined by Bouvier's Law Dictionary, is the unlawful turning or applying the personal goods of another to the use of the taker, or of some other person than the owner, or the unlawful destroying or altering their nature." A shipper of goods has the right to designate the consignee, and the carrier is bound to obey the shipper's direction, or comply with the terms of the shipment as to delivery, and if it disobeys it is liable for a conversion. National Bank of Commerce of Kansas City v. Southern Ry. Co., 115 S. W. 517, 518, 135 Mo. App. 74.

A wrongful delivery by a common carrier is technically a "conversion," and the measure of damages is the value of the goods at the place of delivery, and interest from the date when delivery should be made, but, if the goods are reclaimed by the carrier and delivered to a consignee or the proceeds paid to him, such tender or payment will mitigate the damages. Clarke-Lawrence Co. v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 61 S. E. 364, 365, 63 W. Va. 423.

"Conversion" is the gist of an action of trover, and to support the action there must be a concurrence of the right of property, general or special, and of possession, or the immediate right of possession, in the plaintiff at the time of the 'conversion.'" Where a buyer, to whom goods are consigned, wrongfully refuses to receive them on their arrival within a reasonable time, and the seller is authorized to rescind the sale, the carrier is not guilty of "conversion" in complying with the seller's orders to ship the goods back to him. Stafsky v. Southern Ry. Co., 39 South. 132, 143 Ala. 272 (citing Booker v. Jones' Adm'x, 55 Ala. 266; Boiling v. Kirby, 7 South. 914, 90 Ala. 215, 24 Am. St. Rep. 789).

Ownership and right of possession

The essential elements of "conversion" is that plaintiff has a property or ownership in the thing converted or the right of possession at the time of the conversion. Innovation Trunk Co. v. Platt, 107 N. Y. Supp. 816, 817, 56 Misc. Rep. 645.

"A 'conversion' is any unauthorized act which deprives a man of his property permanently or for an indefinite time. Any distinct act of dominion wrongfully exerted over one's property, in denial of his right or inconsistent with it, is a 'conversion.'" A complaint for conversion of a chattel must show a general or special ownership in the property and a right to immediate possession at the time of the wrongful taking. Glass v. Basin & Bay State Min. Co., 77 Pac. 302, 304, 31 Mont. 21 (citing Union Stockyard & Transit Co. v. Mallory, Son & Zimmerman Co., 41 N. E. 888, 157 Ill. 554, 48 Am. St. Rep. 341).

The word "conversion" means "detaining goods, so as to deprive the person entitled to the possession of them of his dominion over them." Where, in an action for conversion of certain stock, defendant's answer expressly denied plaintiff's title, and alleged defendant's possession of the stock and dividends, and its refusal to surrender them to plaintiff, and the court found that the defendant had converted such stock and dividends to its own use, the finding was a sufficient finding that defendant was in possession of the stock and dividends, and that it denied and acted in defiance of plaintiff's title. Eureka County Bank v. Clarke, 130 Fed. 325, 328, 64 C. C. A. 571.

Property pledged

Where a pledgee's sale of the pledged property, contrary to the terms of the pledge agreement is not ratified by the pledgor, a failure to return the property upon demand and tender of the indebtedness constitutes a "conversion." Manning v. Heidelbach, 188 N. Y. Supp. 750, 753, 153 App. Div. 790.

Where pledged property was sold on foreclosure, and at the sale bought by the pledgee under circumstances rendering the sale voidable, and afterwards without the pledgor's knowledge transferred for other property at a fair price, there was no "conversion" of either the pledged stock or the other property, but the pledgor's rights remained in the new property as in the property pledged. Hebblethwaite v. Flint, 101 N. Y. Supp. 43, 48, 115 App. Div. 597.

Where a check is deposited in aid of a bond and to strengthen the security, the transaction is a "bailment," and the application of a check to any other purpose than that for which it was deposited is a "conversion" on the part of the bailee, entitling the bailor to recover the check or the value thereof with interest. Haines v. Chappell, 58 S. E. 220, 222, 1 Ga. App. 480.

A firm of stockbrokers purchased a block of stock upon a margin for a customer, and were holding it as collateral security for a balance due on the purchase price. Subsequently the firm hypothecated the stock as collateral security for a call loan. The customer tendered the balance due on his stock and demanded its delivery, which was refused. Held, that the legal title to the stock was vested in the customer, and the unauthorized loan of it was a "conversion" thereof. Strickland v. Magoun, 104 N. Y. S. 425, 427, 119 App. Div. 118.

Property sold conditionally

One who contracted with the owner of a building to furnish the ironwork, reserving title pending payment, cannot recover for the "conversion" of a part of the ironwork unless he himself was not in default under the contract, and was entitled to possession of the material. One who purchased land subject to plaintiffs' reservation of title under an agreement to furnish and install ironwork for the building thereon could sell the land, at least before default in the building contract, without being guilty of conversion. Klein v. Cohen, 127 N. Y. Supp. 171, 172, 142 App. Div. 500.

A threshing machine agency contract prohibited delivery of any machine to the purchaser until settled for, either in cash or notes and securities, and declared that a violation of the provision should be deemed a "conversion" by the agents, and render them personally liable for machinery so delivered. Held, that the word "conversion" was used in such contract in the sense of "default" of the agents, and that an action against them for the value of a separator so wrongfully delivered, was for breach of contract, and not for conversion. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Folger, 117 N. W. 944, 945, 136 Wis. 468.

Sale of another's property

A sale of the property alleged to have been converted is not necessary to establish a "conversion." Lewis v. State, 87 S. W. 831, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 309.

A statement by a farm landlord in possession of the tenant's hay that he intended to sell it and appropriate the proceeds, and other acts in asserting a right inconsistent with the tenant's general dominion over the hay, constitute a "conversion." Gaw v. Bingham (Tex.) 107 S. W. 931, 932.

Where a bank which had received as collateral for debts assignments of certain property purchased from plaintiffs, and in selling the property, which was in a warehouse, sold property not covered by the assignments, and which had been bought by the debtor on credit with the intention to defraud the seller, the bank was liable to the seller for the property not covered by the assignments, as for a "conversion." Kirkpatrick's Ex'r v. E. Rehkoph Saddlery Co., 137 S. W. 862, 864, 144 Ky. 129.

"Convert to his own use," within B. & C. Comp. § 1807, providing that if any person shall receive any money for the state, or shall have in his possession money belonging to the state, and shall convert it to his own use, is equivalent to the term "conversion" in its legal sense; and it is enough to constitute it that one assumes to dispose of the property of another without right, as if it was his own, though he gets no personal benefit from it. State v. Ross, 104 P. 596, 602, 55 Or. 450, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 601, 613.

Trespass distinguished

"The distinction between 'trespass' and 'conversion' is this: That trespass is an unlawful taking as, for example, the unlawful removal of the property, while conversion is an unlawful taking or keeping, in the exercise, legally considered, of the right of ownership. A mere seizure or unlawful handling may amount to trespass, while conversion is usually characterized by a usurpation of ownership." Montgomery Water Power Co. v. William A. Chapman & Co., 126 Fed. 68, 72, 61 C. C. A. 124 (citing Bigelow, Torts [7th Ed.] 510).

Use of gas

Natural gas, when extracted from the earth and put into a pipe line, is personal property; and when the pipe line is opened, and the gas extracted and consumed, without the knowledge or consent of the owner, the act constitutes "conversion." Crystal Ice & Cold Storage Co. v. Marion Gas Co., 74 N. E. 15, 16, 35 Ind. App. 295.

CONVERTIBLE CAR

See Self-Containing Convertible Car; Semiconvertible Car; Wholly Convertible Car.

CONVEX

The word "convex," used in a claim of a patent as applied to a surface, is to be given its generally accepted meaning, as indicating a surface of a more or less spherical form, rather than cylindrical. Malleable Iron Range Co. v. Beckwith, 189 Fed. 74, 78, 110 C. C. A. 638.

CONVEY

See Sell and Convey; Sold and Conveyed; These Conveyed Premises. Otherwise convey, see Otherwise.

The word "convey," ordinarily speaking, means to transfer property from one person to another by means of a written instrument. Radebaugh v. Scanlan, 82 N. E. 544, 547, 41 Ind. App. 109.

Where one agrees to "convey" land on a payment of money, the word "convey" is construed as meaning the making and delivery of a deed. Quinton v. Mulvane, 81 Pac. 486, 487, 71 Kan. 687 (quoting and adopting the definition in Fuller v. Hubbard [N. Y.] 6 Cow. 13, 17, 16 Am. Dec. 423).

Land is "conveyed" when the title thereto is deeded. Duff v. Keaton, 124 Pac. 291, 294, 33 Okl. 92, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 472 (citing Perkins v. Morse, 2 Atl. 130, 78 Me. 17, 57 Am. Rep. 780).

To "convey" means to transfer title to realty. The word in its widest sense means transfer of property from one person to another by means of a written instrument or conveyance and other formalities. While as used in Const. art. 10, § 6, which provides that the real and personal property of a married woman shall remain her sole and separate estate and may be devised and bequeathed, and, with the written assent of her husband, conveyed as if she were unmarried its operation is restricted to such property as is by law required to be transferred by written instrument, and, as it is not technically or legally correct to speak of conveying personal property by writing, permits a married woman to dispose of a note by gift and deliver without the assent of her husband. Vann v. Edwards, 47 S. E. 784, 786-788, 135 N. C. 661, 67 L. R. A. 461.

The term "conveyed" in its strict legal sense imports a transfer of legal title to land, but it is also habitually used to define any transfer of title legal or equitable, and the meaning of the term in any particular case must be ascertained from the context. Seal of Gold Mining Co. v. Slater, 120 Pac. 15, 19, 161 Cal. 621.

A bill for specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of land, which alleges that defendant offered to give plaintiff certain land, provided plaintiff would not erect a building in a certain place and manner, and that plaintiff accepted the offer, changed the plan of the building, took possession of the land, and erected the building in accordance with the agreement, states a cause of action as against a demurrer; the allegation of an agreement "to give" being construed as an agreement "to convey."—Shipley v. Fink, 62 Atl. 360, 361, 102 Md. 219, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1002.

In a deed of trust providing that if a husband and wife, the beneficiaries, shall both die leaving issue of their marriage, "then in trust to convey said separate property to the said issue living at the time of the death of the survivor of them share and share alike," the use of the words "to convey" and "share and share alike" indicates an intention that there should be distribution among the children, and also conveyances to them by the trustee. Jones v. Roundtree, 76 S. E. 55, 56, 138 Ga. 757.

As grant

The word "convey" or "transfer" as operative words in a deed is of equivalent signification and effect as "grant." State v. Kelliher, 88 Pac. 867, 868, 49 Or. 77 (quoting and adopting definition in Lambert v. Smith, 9 Or. 193, citing Field v. Columbert, 4 Sawy. 527, 9 Fed. Cas. 12).

In modern law, the terms "grant" and "convey," when used in instruments intended to alienate or transfer real estate, have substantially the same meaning. A deed reciting that the grantor has "granted," bargained, and sold is a substantial compliance with the statute providing that bargain and sale deeds for conveyance of land, reciting that the grantor does bargain, sell, and "convey," shall be adjudged an express covenant that the grantor had the fee. Blood v. Sielert, 80 Pac. 799, 801, 38 Wash. 643.

The word "grant," as used in Code 1899, c. 52, § 1, providing that every corporation, as such, shall contract and be contracted with by simple contract or specialty, purchase, hold, use, and grant estate real and personal, is the equivalent of "convey" and similar terms, and thus gives the corporation power to sell and convey equally broad with its power to purchase and hold. Germer v. Triple State Natural Gas & Oil Co., 54 S. E. 509, 513, 60 W. Va. 143.

A deed, reciting that the grantor does "give, grant, remise, release and forever quitclaim" all the right and title the grantor has or ought to have in and to the property described, is not a quitclaim deed; but under Shannon's Code, § 3672, providing that every grant shall pass all the estate of the grantor, it conveys the grantor's whole estate, and must be taken in connection with the chain of title on which it is based, whereby it must appear what estate was owned by the grantor, the word "grant" being equivalent to the word "convey." Hitt v. Caney Fork Gulf Coal Co., 139 S. W. 693, 696, 124 Tenn. 334.

While it may be that the word "conveyed" usually implies the passing of the legal title, it is not inaptly nor incorrectly used to describe a transfer of title, legal or equitable; and, whether used with a narrow and technical meaning or in a broad and general sense, is to be determined by the context and the circumstances under which the entire instrument or document in which it was found is framed. When a railroad company received full payment for lands granted to it by Act Minn. May 22, 1857, and executed an instrument by which all its equitable and substantial interests in them was transferred, the lands were "conveyed" within the meaning of the provision that the lands so granted should be exempt from taxation until "sold and conveyed." Winona & St. P. Land Co. v. Minnesota, 16 Sup. Ct. 83-85, 159 U. S. 581, 40 L. Ed. 247.

As mortgage

The word "convey," within Code 1907, § 7423, prohibiting conveyance of mortgaged personalty without the mortgagee's consent, includes a subsequent chattel mortgage. Fort v. State, 55 South. 434, 436, 1 Ala. App. 195.

The words "convey," "conveyed," and "conveyances," as used in the amendments of March 3, 1893, and March 4, 1897, import a transfer of title, ordinarily used as to real property, and the amendments do not apply to a married woman's mortgage on land to secure a debt, a mortgage being merely a lien which passes no title in view of Civ. Code, § 2872, defining a lien; section 2877 providing that mortgages shall be subject to all the provisions of the chapter (on liens), and section 2888 declaring that a lien transfers no title in the subject-matter. Booker v. Castillo, 98 Pac. 1067, 1068, 154 Cal. 672.

As transmit

The words "send" and "convey" import different modes of transmission. An indictment under a statute making it an offense to "send and convey" an insulting, lascivious letter or communication to any female, which charges that accused did "send and convey," is technically defective. Larison v. State, 9 Atl. 700, 701, 49 N. J. Law, 256, 60 Am. Rep. 606.

Warranty implied

By the express provisions of Rev. St. 1901, par. 728, a conveyance of a fee simple in which the use of the word "grant" or "convey" is made impliedly covenants that the estate is free from incumbrance. Sherman v. Goodwin, 89 Pac. 517, 519, 11 Ariz. 141.

In modern law, the terms "grant" and "convey," when used in instruments intended to alienate or transfer real estate, have substantially the same meaning. A deed reciting that the grantor has "granted," bargained, and sold is a substantial compliance with the statute providing that bargain and sale deeds for conveyance of land, reciting that the grantor does bargain, sell, and "convey," shall be adjudged an express covenant that the grantor had the fee. Blood v. Siefert, 80 Pac. 799, 801, 38 Wash. 643.

From the use of the words "grant" and "convey" in a deed, the law implies a covenant that at the time of such conveyance the land is free from incumbrances, and taxes are included in the term "incumbrances" as here used. Bullitt v. Coryell, 85 S. W. 482, 483, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 42.

By statute the words "grant or convey" in a deed carry with them an implied warranty that the estate conveyed is at the time of the execution of the deed free from incumbrances, unless restrained by express terms contained therein. Rotan v. Hays, 77 S. W. 654, 655, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 671.

Where defendant C. and wife conveyed certain land in controversy in fee, with covenants of warranty, and thereafter purchased the land on foreclosure of a trust deed which they had previously given to secure a loan on the land, the title so acquired by them inured to the benefit of their grantee by estoppel, under Rev. St. 1895, art. 633, providing that the use of the words "grant" or "convey," in any conveyance by which an estate of inheritance or fee simple is passed, implies a covenant that the estate is at the time of the execution of the conveyance free from incumbrances. Lowry v. Carter (Tex.) 102 S. W. 930, 931.

CONVEY AND WARRANT

In a deed in statutory form, the terms "convey and warrant," when given their legal purport, fully indicate an intention to convey a present estate to the grantee and defend the title thereto, and in no way is it apparent, or to be inferred from these words, that the grantor intended to devise the real estate in question though the deed is not to take effect until the death of the grantor. McLain v. Garrison (Tex.) 88 S. W. 485, 487.

The words of a grant, "convey and warrant," convey the fee, unless they are limited to a lessor estate by words found in the granting clause or in the habendum of the deed, if it contain an habendum. They may be used, however, in conveying a life estate or an estate for years, and words limiting the estate conveyed to an estate of the character of either of the two last mentioned are not inconsistent with such words of grant; and where there is language, either in the granting clause or in the habendum of the deed, limiting the estate conveyed by such granting words to one less in extent than a fee, such words of limitation will be given effect. Walker v. Shepard, 71 N. E. 422, 426, 210 Ill. 100.

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 3958, declares that any conveyance of lands reciting that A. B. "conveys and warrants" to C. D. the premises described for a specified consideration, dated, signed, sealed, and acknowledged by the grantor, shall convey a fee simple to the grantee, his heirs and assigns, and section 3960 provides that it shall not be necessary to use the words "heirs and assigns" of the grantee to create an estate of inheritance, and if it be the intention of the grantor to convey any lessor estate, it shall be so expressed in the deed. Held that, under such sections, the grantor may use the words "convey and warrant" without using the words "heirs and assigns of the grantee," and yet effectually express "in the deed," after the description of the land, his intention to convey a less estate than one of inheritance to the first taker. Adams v. Merrill, 85 N. E. 114, 116, 45 Ind. App. 315.

CONVEY BY WARRANTY DEED

An agreement to convey land by "warranty deed" means that the grantor will convey a merchantable title only, and not a perfect title of record. Bear v. Fletcher, 96 N. E. 997, 1000, 252 Ill. 206.

CONVEYANCE

See As Being a Conveyance; Fraudulent Conveyance; Involuntary Conveyance; Public Conveyance; Voluntary Conveyance.

Such conveyance, see Such.

The terms "conveyed" and "conveyance" are used in several senses. In the strict legal sense, the latter term imports a transfer of legal title to land; but it is also habitually used by lawyers to denote any transfer of title, legal or equitable, and the last is also the popular sense of the term. Adams v. Hopkins, 77 Pac. 712, 719, 144 Cal. 19.

A "conveyance" is the transfer of the title of land from one person or class of persons to another. Frame v. Bivens, 189 Fed. 785, 789 (citing 1 Bouv. Law Dict. p. 434).

Rev. Codes, § 3161, defines "conveyance" as embracing every instrument in writing by which any estate or interest in real property is created, alienated, mortgaged, or incumbered, or by which the title may be affected, except wills. Harris v. Reed, 121 Pac. 780, 781, 21 Idaho, 364.

The word "conveyance," in Civ. Code, § 1214, providing that every conveyance of realty other than a lease for a term not exceeding one year is void as against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee in good faith, whose conveyance is first duly recorded, etc., embraces every instrument in writing by which any estate or interest in real property is created, alienated, mortgaged, or incumbered. Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc. v. Farnham, 96 Pac. 9, 11, 153 Cal. 578, 126 Am. St. Rep. 129.

The term "conveyance" embraces every instrument in writing by which the title to any real estate may be affected. Civ. Code, § 1215. Kent v. Williams, 79 Pac. 527, 529, 146 Cal. 3.

An instrument which does not purport to convey any present interest in an existing patent, or one for which an application is pending, is not a "conveyance" within Rev. St. § 4898. National Cash Register Co. v. New Columbus Watch Co., 129 Fed. 114, 116, 63 C. C. A. 616.

The term "conveyance" in its strict legal sense imports a transfer of legal title to land, but it is also habitually used to define any transfer of title legal or equitable, and the meaning of the term in any particular case must be ascertained from the context. Seal of Gold Min. Co. v. Slater, 120 Pac. 15, 19, 161 Cal. 621.

A "conveyance" is an instrument in writing by which property or the title to property is conveyed or transmitted from one person to another. A conveyance is an instrument in writing under seal (anciently termed an "assurance") by which some estate or interest in lands is transferred from one person to another, such as a deed, mortgage, etc. "Conveyance" is a general word which comprehends the several modes of passing title to real estate and is the transfer of the title of land from one person or class of persons to another. Vann v. Edwards, 47 S. E. 784, 787, 135 N. C. 661, 67 L. R. A. 461 (quoting and adopting Kelly v. Fleming, 18 S. E. 81, 113 N. C. 138; Black, Law Dict. p. 273; Klein v. McNamara, 54 Miss. 105).

In a suit for reformation of a deed, a prayer for a conveyance is sufficient to justify the court, on decreeing the relief sought, to require that the deed should have a seal under Gen. St. 1902, § 4029, defining a "conveyance of land" as a writing sealed by the grantor. Jenner v. Brooks, 59 Atl. 508, 510, 77 Conn. 384.

Agreements concerning land

An agreement which preserves a tract of land for residence purposes, and which prohibits the use thereof for hotel, club, or camping purposes, executed so as to be entitled to record, affects title to real estate, within St. 1898, § 2242, defining a conveyance within the recording act as an instrument by which title may be affected. Boyden v. Roberts, 111 N. W. 701, 705, 181 Wis. 659.

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7852, provides that no lands of any married woman shall be liable for the debts of her husband, but, with the profits therefrom, shall be her separate property as fully as if she were unmarried, provided that she shall have no power to incumber or convey the lands except by deed in which her husband shall join. Section 7853 provides that a married woman may take and hold property by conveyance, gift, devise, or descent, and it shall be her separate property, together with all the rents, issues, income, and profits thereof, and under her control the same as if unmarried. Held, that a written contract whereby a married woman granted the exclusive right to explore land for gas and oil for five years, with the privilege of renewal for five years, and as much longer as gas and oil might be found in paying quantities, was not an incumbrance or conveyance within section 7852, and was valid, though her husband did not join therein. Kokomo Natural Gas & Oil Co. v. Matlock, 97 N. E. 787, 788, 177 Ind. 225, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 675.

An agreement, by a cestui que trust of a life interest, that if the property was sold his interest in the proceeds should be applied by the trustee on certain family notes and obligations of the cestui que trust, was not a "conveyance of an equitable interest in real property," which Rev. Laws, c. 127, § 4, and chapter 117, § 3, requires to be recorded in order to be valid as against attaching creditors, but was only an assignment of the proceeds of the sale when made, and was therefore valid as against creditors, though not recorded. Cashman v. Bangs, 86 N. E. 932, 934, 200 Mass. 498.

Assignment of mortgage

An assignment of a real estate mortgage is a conveyance within the recording acts, and if not recorded is void as to a purchaser in good faith, who, relying upon the record, secures a satisfaction of the mortgage from the mortgagee. Foss v. Dullam, 126 N. W. 820, 821, 111 Minn. 220.

An assignment of a mortgage lien is not a "conveyance" or a "transfer" of "any interest" in land covered by the mortgage within the meaning of section 2480, Gen. St. 1906, relating to recording of conveyances and transfers of lands or interests therein. Garrett v. Fernald, 57 South. 671, 672, 63 Fla. 434.

Under Real Property Law (Laws 1896, p. 607, c. 547) § 240, defining a "conveyance" so as to include every written instrument by which any estate or interest in real property is created, transferred, mortgaged, or assigned, a written assignment of a mortgage is a "conveyance" which may be recorded under section 241 of the law, authorizing properly acknowledged conveyances of real property to be recorded. Weldeman v. Pech, 92 N. Y. Supp. 493, 495, 102 App. Div. 163.

Real Property Law (Laws 1896, c. 547, § 240) defines the term "conveyance" as every written instrument by which any estate or interest in real property is created, transferred, mortgaged, or assigned. Where a bankrupt, having no knowledge that a mortgage given by him had been assigned, scheduled the original mortgagee as his creditor, his discharge in bankruptcy, under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, is a defense to an action on the bond, though the assignment was recorded. Mueller v. Goerlitz, 103 N. Y. Supp. 1037, 53 Misc. Rep. 53.

Chattel mortgage

B. & C. Comp. § 5357, made applicable to chattel mortgages by section 5634, requires the county clerk to certify on every conveyance recorded the time when received and the place of record; and section 5355 makes a conveyance duly acknowledged competent evidence without further proof. Held, that such certificate was no part of the "conveyance duly acknowledged," but was an independent instrument, which must be identified and offered in evidence in order to be evidence of the time and place of record. Ayre v. Hixson, 98 Pac. 515, 517, 53 Or. 19, 133 Am. St. Rep. 819.

Condemnation for public use

The taking of land for public use is not in the nature of a "conveyance," but is the exercise of the superior title of the government, and hence the appropriation of lands of a married woman is completed by the decision by proper authority to take the land and the payment of compensation, however effected; compliance with statutory requirements as to conveyances by married women being unnecessary. City of San Antonio v. Grandjean, 41 S. W. 477, 479, 91 Tex. 430.

Contract to sell

The word "conveyance," as used in the Recording Act Minn. June 1894, § 4185, expressly excepts an executory contract for the sale of real estate. Klatt v. Dummert, 73 N. W. 404, 405, 70 Minn. 467.

That one's wife did not join him in signing a contract to sell their homestead does not prevent plaintiff from recovering damages for defendant's refusal to accept a conveyance, regardless of whether defendant could have specifically enforced the contract. White v. Bates, 84 N. E. 906, 907, 234 Ill. 276.

Delivery

"A delivery is essential to render a deed operative and give it force as a 'conveyance.'" When a father and his wife deeded land belonging to the father to a daughter by a former marriage, and at her death to her minor children, reserving a life estate in himself and wife, and the deed was delivered to the wife and kept under her control, there was a sufficient delivery to constitute a conveyance. Riegel v. Riegel, 90 N. E. 1108, 1109, 243 Ill. 628.

Discharge of mortgage

Laws 1910, c. 227, providing that a recording officer shall not accept for record any "conveyance of real estate" unless the residence of the purchaser shall be stated, does not apply to a certificate of discharge of a mortgage, since such an instrument does not create, transfer, mortgage, or assign any interest in real property, nor assign any mortgage, lease, or other conditional estate, nor is there any "purchaser," properly so called, and the register must accept for record a satisfaction piece, though it does not state the residence of the purchaser. Blume v. Lundy, 130 N. Y. Supp. 836.

Homestead declaration

"A declaration of homestead is not a 'conveyance' as that word is generally used in the Code." Smith v. Bangham, 104 Pac. 689, 694, 156 Cal. 359, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 522 (dissenting opinion by Melvin, J., quoting Ontario State Bank v. Gerry, 27 Pac. 581, 582, 91 Cal. 97).

Lease

As conveyance generally, see Lease.

The word "conveyance," as used in Act Cong. June 6, 1900, c. 786, tit. 3, § 98, 31 Stat. 321, 505, providing that "every 'conveyance' of real property with the district hereafter made which shall not be filed for record as provided in this chapter shall be void against any subsequent innocent purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration of the same real property, or any portion thereof, whose conveyance shall be first duly recorded," is not to be narrowly construed, but includes leases as well as transfers in fee. Waskey v. Chambers, 32 Sup. Ct. 597, 598, 224 U. S. 564, 566, 56 L. Ed. 885 (citing 2 Blackstone's Comm. 317; Sheppard's Touchstone, 267).

A copy of a lease for less than three years, the original of which was recorded in the register's office, certified by the register "to be a correct transcript therefrom and of the whole of said instrument," not being a "conveyance" within the terms of Real Property Law, Laws 1896, p. 607, c. 547, § 240, defining the term "conveyance" as including every written instrument except a lease for a term not exceeding three years, is not admissible in evidence, under the terms of Code, § 935, providing that a "conveyance," or a transcript thereof, duly certified and acknowledged in the manner prescribed by law to entitle it to be recorded, is evidence without further proof. Goodman v. Greenberg, 103 N. Y. Supp. 779, 780, 53 Misc. Rep. 583.

The word "conveyance" in the by-laws of a corporation, declaring that no mortgage or conveyance shall be made without the consent of the holders of at least two-thirds of the stock of the corporation, is used in its more restricted sense as importing an act whereby the legal and equitable title to real property of the corporation is transferred, and a lease of a part of the property of the corporation for a term of five years is not a conveyance, and the board of directors may execute such a lease under their power to manage and control the affairs and property of the corporation. Seal of Gold Min. Co. v. Slater, 120 Pac. 15, 19, 161 Cal. 621.

Under Civ. Code Alaska, § 181, which defines "real property" as including "all lands, tenements and hereditaments and rights thereto, and all interests therein, whether in fee simple or for the life of another," a lease of a mining claim for years conveys a chattel interest only and not an interest in the land, and is not a "conveyance," within the meaning of section 98, the recording of which will protect the lessee against a prior unrecorded deed; nor is such lessee an innocent purchaser in good faith for a valuable consideration within such section, where he is to work the same and pay the lessor a royalty. Eadie v. Chambers, 172 Fed. 73, 78, 96 C. C. A. 561, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 879, 18 Ann. Cas. 1096.

Mortgage

A mortgage is in form a "conveyance." Tucker v. Ottenheimer, 81 Pac. 360, 362, 46 Or. 585.

A mortgage is a "conveyance" within the meaning of Civ. Code, §§ 1640, 1641, 1642, relative to the recording of conveyances. Cornish v. Woolverton, 81 Pac. 4, 10, 32 Mont. 456, 108 Am. St. Rep. 598.

The term "conveyance," as used in Laws 1896, p. 608, c. 547, § 241, declaring that a conveyance not recorded is void as against any subsequent purchaser, etc., includes a mortgage. O'Brien v. Fleckenstein, 73 N. E. 30, 180 N. Y. 850, 105 Am. St. Rep. 763.

The word "conveyance," as used in Recording Act June 1894, § 4185, includes a mortgage. Klatt v. Dummert, 73 N. W. 404, 405, 70 Minn. 467.

A mortgage is a "conveyance" of an estate or property by way of pledge for the security of a debt, to become void on the payment of it. Poarch v. Duncan, 91 S. W. 1110, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 275 (quoting and adopting the definition in 4 Kent, 136).

The term "conveyance," as used in Acts 1899, p. 132, c. 99, § 3, providing that in all cases where, during the life of the second or subsequent childless wife, and after the death of her husband, the children of the latter execute "conveyances" in fee to all or any part of the lands affected by the life estate, they shall be bound thereby, includes mortgages executed by such heirs with covenants of warranty. Griffis v. First Nat. Bank (Ind.), 79 N. E. 230, 232 (citing O'Kane v. Terrell, 43 N. E. 869, 144 Ind. 599).

Though the word "conveyance" is sometimes construed to include a mortgage, yet a mortgage is not a conveyance within Gen. St. Kan. 1901, § 7880, which provides that when a conveyance is made to one person upon a consideration paid by another no use or trust shall result in favor of the latter, but the title should vest in the former. Hanrion v. Hanrion, 84 Pac. 381, 382, 78 Kan. 25, 117 Am. St. Rep. 453.

Civ. Code, § 986, makes a conveyance of real property void as against a subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer, in good faith, for a valuable consideration, whose conveyance is first recorded. Section 987 defines a "conveyance" as any instrument by which an estate in real property is created, etc. Held, that a mortgage, though given to secure an antecedent debt, is supported by a sufficient consideration to constitute mortgagee an incumbrancer for value within the protection of the recording act (sections 986, 987), where a definite extension of the time of payment is granted. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Citizens' Nat. Bank of Sisseton, 125 N. W. 642, 643, 25 S. D. 91.

Civ. Code, § 1215, defining the term "conveyance," as used in the recording act, to be any instrument in writing by which any estate or interest in real property is mortgaged, etc., applies only to the recording act, and does not make a mortgage a conveyance in any other sense. The words "convey," "conveyed," and "conveyances," as used in the amendments of March 3, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 71, c. 62), and March 4, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 63, c. 72), import a transfer of title, ordinarily used as to real property, and the amendments do not apply to a married woman's mortgage on land to secure a debt, a mortgage being merely a lien which passes no title in view of Civ. Code, § 2872, defining a lien; section 2877 providing that mortgages shall be subject to all the provisions of the chapter (on liens), and section 2888 declaring that a lien transfers no title in the subject-matter. Booker v. Castillo, 98 Pac. 1067, 1068, 154 Cal. 672.

In states where there is no statutory definition, the word "conveyance" retains its common-law meaning, which is the transfer of the title to real estate. In states where a real estate mortgage conveys the legal title of the land to the mortgagee, mortgages are held to be conveyances. A real estate mortgage is not a conveyance or assurance within Gen. St. 1901, § 2092, providing that every person executing with intent to defraud a writing for a conveyance or assurance of lands or chattels which he had previously sold or assured to any other person shall on conviction be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor. State v. Rhodes, 93 Pac. 610, 611, 77 Kan. 202.

Rev. Civ. Code, § 986, provides that every conveyance of real property except a lease for less than a year is void as to certain classes of persons whose conveyances are first recorded. Section 987 provides that "conveyance," as used in the last section, embraces instruments in writing by which an interest in real property is incumbered. Held that, in order to protect a mortgagee against certain classes of persons, his mortgage must be recorded; and therefore, if given by an insolvent, will be deemed a preference if not recorded four months before the filing of his petition in bankruptcy, under the express provisions of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60a, 30 Stat. 562, as amended by Act Cong. Feb. 5, 1908, c. 487, § 13, 32 Stat. 799, relating to preferences. Bowler v. First Nat. Bank, 113 N. W. 618, 621, 21 S. D. 449, 180 Am. St. Rep. 725.

Mortgage on leasehold

Laws 1905, p. 2061, c. 729, as amended by Laws 1906, p. 1449, c. 532, § 293, imposes a tax on mortgages recorded after July 1, 1906, and section 290 defines the words "real property" to include everything, a conveyance or mortgage of which can be recorded as a conveyance or mortgage of real property under the laws of the state. Laws 1896, art. 8, p. 607, c. 547, provides for the recording of instruments affecting real property, and declares (section 240) that the term "real property" includes lands, tenements, hereditaments, and chattels real, except a lease for a term not exceeding three years, and the term "conveyance" to include every written instrument by which an estate or interest in real property is created, transferred, mortgaged, or assigned, except a will, a lease for a term not exceeding three years, etc. Section 241 provides that a conveyance of real property within the state, duly acknowledged by the grantor, etc., is entitled to record. Held, that a mortgage on certain leaseholds, each for a term of five years, but having less than three years to run when mortgaged, being duly acknowledged, etc., is a conveyance of real property entitled to record, and is subject to the payment of the mortgage tax. People ex rel. Henry Elias Brewing Co. v. Gass, 104 N. Y. Supp. 885, 886, 120 App. Div. 147.

Power to convey

Rev. St. 1898, § 2237, provides that a letter of attorney containing power to convey lands may be recorded with the register of deeds; and section 2246 provides that no letter of attorney, when recorded, shall be deemed revoked unless the instrument containing such revocation be also recorded in the same office. Section 2242 of the chapter in relation to the conveyance of real estate provides that the term "conveyance" embraces every instrument in writing by which any estate or interest in real estate is created, mortgaged, or assigned, or by which the title may be affected. Held that, a power to convey real estate not being a conveyance, it is not within the statutory provisions declaring the effect of recording conveyances of real estate, and the fact that, after a power was recorded, the revocation thereof was recorded, did not terminate the power in the absence of actual notice to the agent. Best v. Gunther, 104 N. W. 82, 83, 125 Wis. 518, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 577, 110 Am. St. Rep. 851.

Quitclaim

A quitclaim deed is a conveyance within recording act (Civ. Code, §§ 986, 987), making every conveyance void as against any subsequent bond purchaser whose conveyance is first recorded, and defining a "conveyance" as every instrument by which any estate in real property is created or aliened, and a quitclaim deed duly recorded conveys to the grantee therein a good title as against a prior warranty deed subsequently recorded, and of the existence of which the grantee had no notice. Shutz v. Tidrick, 128 N. W. 811, 812, 26 S. D. 505.

Sale

"Sale" may be defined as a contract founded on a money consideration by which the absolute or general property in the subject of the sale is transferred from the seller to the buyer." The words "sale" and "conveyance," when applied to real estate, are in common parlance in judicial decisions, and by law writers often used interchangeably, and a deed of conveyance of real estate therefore answers a reference to a sale of real estate, especially when the reference is used by persons unlearned in the law in the contract of a sale of real estate and the reference is otherwise substantially accurate. Crotty v. Effer, 54 S. E. 345, 347, 60 W. Va. 258, 9 Ann. Cas. 770.

Tax lease

Laws 1891, c. 217, relating to tax sales, amended Laws 1885, c. 448, § 65, applicable to the same subject, so as to make it apply to all counties of the state except Cattaraugus and Chautauqua, and declared that all applications made to the comptroller for the cancellation of any tax sale by any person interested in the event thereof should be heard and determined by him subject to review by certiorari or otherwise, and then declared that its provisions should be applicable to "all conveyances made by county treasurers or county judges, and to all outstanding certificates from county treasurer's sales." Held, that the provision as to the application of the act should be construed to mean all conveyances by which the comptrollers or county treasurers were authorized to convey the fee and vest an absolute title in the purchaser, and did not include tax leases issued by county treasurers under special laws. In re Ritter Place in City of New York, 124 N. Y. Supp. 351, 355, 139 App. Div. 473.

Tax Law (Laws 1896, c. 908) § 132, re-enacted as Laws 1909, c. 62, provides that every conveyance previously executed by the comptroller, county treasurer, or county judge, and all conveyances of the same land by his grantee or grantees named therein which have for two years been recorded in the office of the clerk of the county in which the lands conveyed are located, and all outstanding certificates of tax sale previously made by the comptroller, in force for two years, shall be conclusive evidence that the sale and proceedings prior thereto from and including the assessment of the lands, and all notices required by law to be given previous to the time allowed for redemption, were regular, etc. Held, that the words "county treasurer, or county judge," were inserted to validate sales by the comptroller and county treasurer, or county judge in counties in which were included lands of the forest preserve, sold pursuant to Laws 1893, c. 711, § 12, re-enacted as Laws 1896, c. 908, § 132, and that the conclusiveness of the conveyances, etc., specified in such section, applied only to conveyances of the fee under the various pre-existing tax acts, and did not apply to a tax lease of land in Westchester county, executed by the county treasurer thereof, as authorized by Special Act 1890 (Laws 1890, c. 454), as amended by Laws 1891, c. 81. In re Ritter Place in City of New York, 124 N. Y. Supp. 351, 357, 139 App. Div. 473.

Will

It has been held that Code 1849, c. 77, § 8, providing that every "conveyance" made thereafter of land for the use or benefit of any religious congregation as a place for public worship, or as a burial place or residence for the minister should be valid, did not apply to devises. Jordan v. Universalist General Convention Trustees, 57 S. E. 652, 653, 107 Va. 79.

A "conveyance" is "an instrument in writing by which property or the title to property is conveyed or transmitted from one person to another," and "in the narrower sense of the word 'conveyance' signifies the instrument employed to effectuate an ordinary purchase of freehold land (e. g., the modern deed), as opposed to settlements, wills, leases, partitions." The word "conveyances" in Const. Wash. art. 2, § 33, providing that conveyances to an alien shall be void, does not include a will, and the provision does not render a will void because it contains a devise to an alien. Brigham v. Kenyon, 76 Fed. 30, 33 (quoting and adopting definitions in 1 Rap. & L. Law Dict. p. 290, and Webst. Dict.).

CONVEYOR

A conveyor, consisting of a long, cylindrical, rotating rod, to which flanges are attached, is a shafting or machinery, within the factory act (Acts 1899, p. 284, c. 142, § 9), providing that all shafting and machinery shall be guarded. United States Cement Co. v. Cooper (Ind.) 82 N. E. 981, 982.

CONVICT

See Lease of Convicts.

A person convicted of a felony who has appealed and after affirmance has moved for a rehearing, which motion is still pending, is not an incompetent witness under Code Cr. Proc. 1911, art. 788, subd. 3, providing that all persons who have been, or may be, convicted of felony in this state, or in any other jurisdiction unless such conviction has been legally set aside, or unless the convict has been legally pardoned for the crime, shall be incompetent to testify in criminal cases, especially in view of Pen. Code 1911, art. 27, defining a "convict" as an accused person after final condemnation by the highest court of resort which by law has jurisdiction of his case, and to which he may have thought proper to appeal. Bowles v. State (Tex.) 150 S. W. 626.

A person confined in state's prison under a sentence of death is a "convict" within Laws 1889, p. 511, c. 382, § 40, authorizing the superintendent of state prisons to make regulations for record of photographs and other means of identifying each convict. Molineux v. Collins, 69 N. E. 727, 728, 177 N. Y. 395, 65 L. R. A. 104.

CONVICTED—CONVICTION

See Apprehension and Conviction; Former Conviction; Juridical Conviction; On Conviction; Under Conviction.

The word "conviction" ordinarily signifies the finding of the jury by a verdict that the prisoner is guilty. Judge v. Powers (Iowa) 136 N. W. 315, 316.

In Penal Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 40) § 1692, relating to rescue, the terms "commitment," "conviction," and "sentence" relate to a case where an officer or another holds a prisoner under lawful custody after he has been judicially held under a commitment, conviction, or sentence for misdemeanor. People v. Marks, 135 N. Y. Supp. 523, 525, 75 Misc. Rep. 404.

The word "conviction" means the ascertainment of defendant's guilt by some known legal mode, whether by confession in open court or by the verdict of a jury, or, under the Constitution and statute, by the judgment of a justice of the peace, where a jury trial is waived, provided the justice has final jurisdiction of the offense. Smith v. Thomas, 62 S. E. 772, 773, 149 N. C. 100.

Two convictions of employes of the holder of a liquor tax certificate within the lifetime of one certificate for two violations of the liquor law, one committed during the lifetime of such certificate and the other during the lifetime of a prior certificate, justify a forfeiture of the certificate under Liquor Tax Law (Consol. Laws, c. 34) § 36, subd. 3, providing for forfeiture on two convictions of employes of the holder of a certificate. Teschmacher v. Clement, 120 N. Y. Supp. 537, 538, 135 App. Div. 538.

Accusation and trial included

The word "convicted," as used in Rev. Codes, § 8655, providing that one who in another state steals, or knowingly receives stolen property and brings it into this state, may be "convicted" in the same manner as if such larceny or receiving had been in this state, is broad enough to include the accusation and trial. State v. Willette, 127 Pac. 1013, 1014, 46 Mont. 326.

As after judgment

The term "persons convicted," as used in Const. art. 2, § 2, providing that the Legislature shall enact laws excluding persons "convicted" of any infamous crime from the right of suffrage, and Election Law (Laws 1901, p. 1669, c. 654), § 2, subd. 10, declaring that no person who has been "convicted" of a felony shall register or vote unless he shall have been pardoned and restored to the rights of citizenship, means a person against whom a judgment of conviction has been rendered for an infamous crime, and is not satisfied by the rendition of verdict of guilty and suspended sentence without judgment. People v. Fabian, 85 N. E. 672, 675, 192 N. Y. 443, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 684, 127 Am. St. Rep. 917, 15 Ann. Cas. 100.

By the common law and in Florida, the conviction of the principal is an essential prerequisite, except in certain cases, to the punishment of the accessory; and the "conviction" required includes the judgment of conviction, and not merely the verdict of a jury. An indictment against an accessory which fails to allege the guilt of the principal, but merely that he was duly convicted "by a jury" at a specified term of the court, is fatally defective, in that it fails to show a judgment of conviction, but merely a conviction by the verdict of a jury. Daughtrey v. State, 35 South. 397, 398, 46 Fla. 109, 110 Am. St. Rep. 84.

In Ky. St. § 1180, which disqualifies any one as a witness who has been convicted of perjury or allied offenses, the term "conviction" means the final judgment, and not merely the verdict of guilty, and hence one who was found guilty of perjury, and upon whom judgment was pronounced, is competent as a witness, where the trial court set the judgment aside. Dial v. Commonwealth, 133 S. W. 976, 142 Ky. 32.

The term "conviction," as used in Const. art. 6, § 10, authorizing the Governor to grant pardons after conviction, denotes the final judgment of the trial court, on a plea of or verdict of guilty. Gilmore v. State, 108 Pac. 416, 8 Okl. Cr. 639, 139 Am. St. Rep. 981; Chapman v. Same, 108 Pac. 418, 8 Okl. Cr. 643.

In common parlance, the words "conviction" and "judgment" are used interchangeably, and this is done in Acts 27th Gen. Assm. p. 58, c. 109, authorizing a longer term of imprisonment for burglary and larceny in case of two prior convictions referred to in the indictment. State v. Smith, 106 N. W. 187, 188, 129 Iowa, 709, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 539, 6 Ann. Cas. 1023.

As after verdict of jury

"'Conviction' means after the verdict of the jury." No statute of the United States provides for bail after conviction and sentence pending an appeal or writ of error to the Supreme Court, nor is bail under such circumstances authorized by the common law. United States v. Hudson, 65 Fed. 68, 75.

The word "conviction" means either the determination of the fact of guilt by the verdict of a jury, or, when used with reference to a state of infamy, means the final judgment in a prosecution. Dial v. Commonwealth, 133 S. W. 976, 142 Ky. 32.

Revisal 1908, §§ 5416a-5416q, establishing the Stonewall Jackson Training & Industrial School for Delinquent, etc., children, is not unconstitutional as amounting to a deprivation of liberty within the declaration of rights; the restraint being of parental nature and not as a punishment for crime, though only persons under 16 years of age, who have been "convicted" of a criminal offense, can be admitted, and a "sentence" of such persons is required; the word "convicted" referring to a verdict of guilty, and the word "sentence" being broad enough to include any judgment of a criminal court, though in its ordinary acceptation it refers to a judgment of imprisonment. Ex parte Watson, 72 S. E. 1049, 1054, 157 N. C. 340.

Rev. St. 1903, c. 135, § 26, as amended by Pub. Laws 1905, p. 112, c. 106, provides that sentence shall be imposed on conviction either by verdict or on demurrer, of a crime not punishable by imprisonment for life, though exceptions are alleged. Held, that the verdict of guilty or the decision overruling a demurrer is the conviction meant by the statute. State v. Morrill, 73 Atl. 1091, 1092, 105 Me. 207.

Appeal as affecting

Where a benefit certificate provided for forfeiture if a member was convicted of a felony, the policy was not forfeited where insured died pending a motion for rehearing on appeal from a conviction of manslaughter, under Code Cr. Proc. art. 884, providing that the judgment of conviction if suspended does not become final while an appeal remains undetermined, and Penal Code, art. 27, declaring that an accused person is a convict only after final condemnation by the court of last resort to which it may have been thought proper to appeal. Woodmen of the World v. Dodd (Tex.) 134 S. W. 254, 255.

As used in Rev. St. 1876, § 1007, providing that, where persons "convicted" of crime shall be sentenced to death or imprisonment at hard labor, the sheriff shall immediately take the person into custody, and keep him confined, notwithstanding any appeal or reprieve, until final action of the Supreme Court, "conviction" means that imposed by the court of the first instance. State v. Williams, 35 South. 140, 141, 110 La. 957.

Arrest of judgment as affecting

Where defendant agreed by contract to pay plaintiff for causing the "conviction" before a jury of an incendiary, plaintiff could recover showing a verdict of convicting the alleged criminal, though the court arrested the judgment and discharged the defendant on the ground that error was committed in trying him for three distinct offenses under one information. Buckley v. Schwartz, 53 N. W. 511, 512, 83 Wis. 304.

Attainted distinguished

"The difference between a man 'attainted' and 'convicted' is that a man is said to be 'convict' before he hath judgment, as if a man be a convict by confession, verdict, or recreance. And when he hath his judgment upon the verdict, confession, etc., then he is said to be 'attaint.' It is further said: 'By a conviction of a felon his goods and chattels are forfeited, but by 'attainder,' that is, by judgment given, his lands and tenements are forfeited and his blood corrupted, and not before.' So in Jacob's Law Dictionary ('Attainted') it is said: "'Attainder' of a criminal is larger than conviction; a man is convicted when he is found guilty or confesses the crime before judgment had, but not 'attainted' till judgment is passed upon him.' This shows the technical, common-law definition of the word 'convict' or 'convicted'; a felon was 'convicted' by the verdict of a jury; he was 'attainted' by the judgment rendered on the verdict." Shepherd v. People, 25 N. Y. 406, 419.

As conviction in penal action

Under Laws 1899, c. 218, as amended by Laws 1907, c. 72, providing that every person convicted before the district court may appeal to the municipal court of Milwaukee from the judgment of conviction, one defeated in a civil action in the district court of Milwaukee, brought to collect the fine for a violation of the ordinance inhibiting the letting of premises for prostitution or lewdness, may appeal to the municipal court; the term "conviction" including prosecutions by way of civil actions to recover forfeitures provided for in penal statutes. City of Milwaukee v. Beatty, 185 N. W. 873, 875, 149 Wis. 349.

The term "convicted," as used in Laws 1899, p. 358, c. 218, as amended by Laws 1907, p. 762, c. 72, providing that "every person convicted before said district court may appeal from the sentence or judgment against him to the municipal court of said city," etc., includes persons found guilty of violating an ordinance and adjudged to pay a fine, in view of section 2514, St. 1898, relating to the municipal court, containing the words "all persons convicted in city prosecutions," and in view of general charter law (sections 925—56 and 925—67, St. 1898), which speaks of persons convicted of violating ordinances. State ex rel. Cooper v. Brazee, 121 N. W. 247, 139 Wis. 538 (citing C. Beck Co. v. City of Milwaukee, 120 N. W. 293, 139 Wis. 340, 131 Am. St. Rep. 1061; Cowles v. City of Neillsville, 119 N. W. 91, 137 Wis. 384; City of Oshkosh v. Schwartz, 13 N. W. 552, 55 Wis. 490, 493; State ex rel. Hamilton v. Municipal Court of City and County of Milwaukee, 61 N. W. 1100, 89 Wis. 358; People v. Hanrahan, 42 N. W. 1124, 75 Mich. 611, 613, 4 L. R. A. 751).

As conviction in state court

Pub. Laws 1907, p. 1342, c. 941, § 1, providing that an attorney must be disbarred upon his being "convicted" of a crime, etc., refers only to convictions in the state. In re Ebbs, 63 S. E. 190, 197, 150 N. C. 44, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 892, 17 Ann. Cas. 592.

Criminal proceedings implied

It is not necessary under supplement to P. L. 1906, p. 199, regulating the sale of liquors that the petition for revocation should state that the person complained of had been convicted of the offenses charged; the word "conviction," as used in the act providing that his license shall thereby upon conviction become forfeited, referring to the forfeiture, and not to the complaint. Davis v. Repp, 75 Atl. 169, 170, 79 N. J. Law, 394.

The "conviction" of violation of the liquor law within P. L. 1906, p. 201, § 8, providing that if the holder of a liquor license shall sell liquor contrary to law, his license shall upon conviction become forfeited and void, is not necessarily a conviction before a court of law, but contemplates as well an adjudication of guilt by the board which granted the license, when had upon proper complaint, notice, and hearing. Sawicki v. Keron, 75 Atl. 477, 478, 79 N. J. Law, 382.

The word "convicted" in Laws 1907, c. 90, providing that any railway company or common carrier violating the provisions of the act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined, means a determination of guilt in a criminal prosecution. Western Union Tel. Co. v. State, 124 N. W. 937, 938, 86 Neb. 17.

Pol. Code, § 2811, providing for a civil investigation of a complaint filed against a person for alleged insanity, in so far as it authorizes the conduct of the proceedings in the absence of the person charged, when it appears that his presence would be injurious to him, or attended with no advantage, is not for that reason in violation of the constitutional guaranty of due process of law, because it does not guarantee a hearing before conviction; the term "conviction" implying a finding of guilty of a criminal offense, and therefore inapplicable to insanity proceedings. McMahon v. Mead (S. D.) 139 N. W. 122, 125.

Judgment and sentence distinguished

The principal has not been "convicted," within the meaning of Pen. Code, art. 90, so as to authorize a trial of an accessory, where he has been found guilty and a judgment rendered, but no sentence has been pronounced. Kingsbury v. State (Tex.) 39 S. W. 365, 366.

Where a person is found guilty of violating Act May 29, 1901, prohibiting the coloring of oleomargarine, but is not sentenced, there is no "conviction" within section 7 of the act; so that, if he commits a second offense before he has been sentenced for the first offense, and is tried therefor, he cannot be sentenced to the penalties imposed for a second conviction. Commonwealth v. McDermott, 73 Atl. 427, 224 Pa. 363, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 431.

The word "conviction," in Const. art. 4, § 11, which provides that in all criminal cases, except treason and impeachment, the Governor shall have power after "conviction" to grant reprieves, commutations of punishment, and pardons, etc., means simply the determination of guilt by the jury, and does not embrace the sentence, so that a person becomes subject to pardon whenever that issue is finally determined, and a court has no inherent authority by postponement of sentence to relieve a person legally convicted of crime of the punishment fixed by law, and Acts 32d Leg. c. 44, which confers on the district courts the power to relieve from the effect of conviction in certain crimes, is not constitutional as within that power. Snodgrass v. State (Tex.) 150 S. W. 162, 172, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1144.

The term "conviction" is used in common language, and sometimes in the statutes, in two different senses. In its most common use it signifies a jury finding that the person is guilty; but it is frequently used as implying a judgment and sentence of the court upon a verdict or confession of guilt. St. 1898, § 4658, subd. 4, provides that an information is sufficient if the offense charged is set forth with such degree of certainty that the court may pronounce judgment upon a conviction according to the right of the case. Section 4659, subd. 4, provides that an information shall not be deemed invalid because of defects or imperfections in matters of form which do not tend to prejudice accused. Held, that the fact that an information alleging conviction of a former offense charges that the "conviction remains of record and unreversed," instead of that the "sentence remains of record and unreversed," which is the language of St. 1898, § 4737, providing for additional punishment for former offenses in such cases, is not ground for reversal. Davis v. State, 115 N. W. 150, 153, 134 Wis. 632 (quoting and adopting definition in Commonwealth v. Gorham, 99 Mass. 420, 422).

The term "conviction" ordinarily signifies a finding of a jury by verdict that the prisoner is guilty, and a plea of guilty by defendant constitutes a conviction of him. Const. 1894, art. 2, § 2, providing that the Legislature shall enact laws excluding from the right of suffrage all persons "convicted" of bribery or of any infamous crime, authorizes the Legislature to exclude from the right of suffrage a person convicted of a felony but against whom sentence has not been pronounced, and who has not been actually imprisoned. People v. Fabian, 111 N. Y. Supp. 146, 149, 151 (quoting and adopting the definitions in 4 Black. Comm. 362; Bishop, Statutory Crimes, § 348).

Act Cong. June 21, 1902, c. 1140, § 1, entitles any prisoner to the deduction for which the act provides, who "has been or shall hereafter be convicted"; but section 3 declares that the act shall take effect from and after 30 days from its date, and that it shall apply only to sentences imposed subsequent to the time of its taking effect. Held, that the act did not apply to a prisoner who was "convicted" and sentenced on March 24, 1902. "Sentence" is a distinct thing from the "conviction" whereon it is founded. It may be and often is separated from conviction by a considerable interval of time. If the provisions of section 3 are to be regarded as contradicting those of section 1, they can be so regarded only upon the assumption that by "convicted of" in section 1 is meant "convicted of and sentenced for"—an assumption without sufficient warrant. Woodward v. Bridges, 144 Fed. 156, 158.

Judgment synonymous

"Judgments" is used interchangeably with the word "convictions," and this is done in Acts 27th Gen. Assem. p. 58, c. 109, authorizing a longer term of imprisonment for burglary or larceny in case of two prior convictions referred to in the indictment; so that an indictment referring to former "judgments" against defendant for burglary is sufficient to authorize the admission of their record in evidence. State v. Smith, 106 N. W. 187, 188, 129 Iowa, 709, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 539, 6 Ann. Cas. 1023.

Judgment for contempt

A judgment decreeing persons guilty of contempt for violating a liquor injunction was not a "conviction" within Acts 33d Gen. Assem. c. 142, § 3, providing that no person convicted of violating the law relating to the sale of intoxicants, or who shall be permanently enjoined for such violation, shall be permitted to sell intoxicants within five years from the date of such conviction; the word "convicted" being the past participle of the verb "to convict" which means to prove or find guilty of an offense or crime charged. Judge v. Powers (Iowa) 136 N. W. 315, 316.

An adjudication of contempt of court is a "conviction." Ex parte Shull, 121 S. W. 10, 11, 221 Mo. 623, 133 Am. St. Rep. 496 (quoting and adopting Church, Hab. Corp. [2d Ed.] § 308).

Pardon as affecting

Code Civ. Proc. § 2612, providing that no person can serve as an executor who at the time the will is proved shall have been "convicted of an infamous crime," does not apply to one who has been convicted of an infamous crime and pardoned. In re Raynor's Will, 96 N. Y. Supp. 895, 48 Misc. Rep. 325.

Plea of guilty or nolo contendere

One is "convicted" of a crime when a verdict of guilty has been given and entered against him, or when a plea of guilty has been given and entered. McKannay v. Horton, 91 Pac. 598, 602, 151 Cal. 711, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 661, 121 Am. St. Rep. 146.

A defendant who pleads guilty to a charge is "convicted" of such charge by his own plea. State v. Woodard, 53 Pac. 278, 7 Kan. App. 421.

While in common parlance and for many purposes the word "conviction," when used in a statute, means the judicial ascertainment of guilt by a plea or verdict, when it is made the ground of some disability or penalty, it has been held that a final adjudication by judgment is essential, and it is very questionable whether a plea or verdict of guilty is a conviction within B. & C. Code, § 1067, authorizing the removal or suspension of attorneys convicted of felonies involving moral turpitude. Ex parte Tanner, 88 Pac. 301, 303, 49 Or. 31.

Suspension of sentence as affecting

Within the certificate of insurance and by-laws of a beneficiary society, providing that the certificate shall be void if insured be "convicted" of a felony, there was no conviction though he was tried for a felony, verdict was returned against him, and sentence of imprisonment imposed, appeal having been granted him, supersedeas bond having been approved, and he having been let to bail, with the result, under Rev. St. 1899, § 2698 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1590), of suspending enforcement of sentence and judgment, and he having died pending action on the case by the Supreme Court, the "abatement" by his death not being simply of the appeal, but of the prosecution and the liability to prosecution, leaving the case as though no prosecution had ever been entered against him. Baker v. Modern Woodmen of America, 121 S. W. 794, 798, 140 Mo. App. 619.

A finding of guilty on which no judgment has been entered, sentence having been suspended, is a conviction within Liquor Tax Law, Laws 1896, p. 65, c. 112, as amended by Laws 1900, p. 857, c. 367, § 23, subd. 1, cl. "d," providing that a liquor tax certificate shall not be issued to one who has been convicted of a violation of that law within three years prior to his application, and the person found guilty is not a person "authorized to sell liquors under the provisions of the act" within section 25, providing for the surrender and cancellation of a liquor tax certificate by a person authorized to sell liquors under the provisions of the act and the payment of a rebate on such certificate. H. Koehler & Co. v. Clement, 111 N. Y. Supp. 151, 152, 125 App. Div. 886.

The term "persons convicted," as used in Const. art. 2, § 2, providing that the Legislature shall enact laws excluding persons "convicted" of any infamous crime from the right of suffrage, and Election Law (Laws 1901, p. 1669, c. 654) § 2, subd. 10, declaring that no person who has been "convicted" of a felony shall register or vote unless he shall have been pardoned and restored to the rights of citizenship, means a person against whom a judgment of conviction has been rendered for an infamous crime, and is not satisfied by the rendition of verdict of guilty and suspended sentence without judgment. People v. Fabian, 85 N. E. 672, 673, 675, 192 N. Y. 443, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 684, 127 Am. St. Rep. 917, 15 Ann. Cas. 100.

CONVICTED A SECOND TIME

Act No. 178, p. 239, of 1908, § 6, forbids the sale of intoxicating liquor to a minor. Section 10 forbids the allowance of gambling in a barroom. Section 8 forfeits a license to conduct a barroom on a second conviction of violation of that act. Held, that a conviction of permitting gambling in defendant's barroom at the same time as a conviction of selling liquor to a minor, the prosecutions having been tried together, was a second conviction, warranting a revocation of defendant's license, notwithstanding both prosecutions grew out of the same transaction, and the liquor was sold to the minor while playing cards. State v. Apfel, 50 South. 613, 614, 124 La. 649.

CONVICTED FELON

A "convicted felon" may mean either one guilty of a crime which would have involved a forfeiture of goods and chattels at common law, or, where so understood by the public, one convicted of a misdemeanor in violation of the license law. Perry v. Man, 1 R. I. 263, 265.

CONVINCE

See Reasonably Convincing.

One of the principal definitions of the word "convince" is "to satisfy the mind by evidence." State v. Maioni, 74 Atl. 526, 528, 78 N. J. Law, 339, 20 Ann. Cas. 204.

An instruction defining "reasonable doubt" as a doubt which would exist when the judgment of a jury, after careful review of all the evidence, finds itself unconvinced of the guilt of the prisoner, was correct; the word "convince" being used in the sense of an abiding conviction. State v. Leo, 77 Atl. 523, 525, 80 N. J. Law, 21.

COOLING TIME

To constitute "cooling time," there must have been an outrage on accused a short while before the homicide of sufficient moment to constitute adequate cause and thereby produce that degree of anger, rage, sudden resentment, and terror that renders the mind incapable of cool reflection. Jay v. State, 120 S. W. 449, 450, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 111.

Where the evidence shows that a homicide was committed in the heat of passion and with provocation, the jury, in determining whether there was sufficient "cooling time" for the passion to subside and reason to resume its sway, should be governed, not by the standard of an ideal, reasonable person, but from the standpoint of the defendant in the light of all the facts and circumstances disclosed by the evidence. Whether there was cooling time is a question varying with each particular case and with the temperament of the party. State v. Hazlett, 113 N. W. 374, 380, 16 N. D. 426.

CO-ORDINATE

The word "co-ordinate," whenever used with reference to the three departments of state, implies equality in rank, importance, independence, and dignity. Woods v. Sheldon, 69 N. W. 602, 609, 9 S. D. 392.

COPARCENERS

See, also, Parcener.

A widow, to whom dower has been assigned and set off by metes and bounds, is not a "tenant in common," "joint tenant," or "coparcener" with the owner of the fee, within Gen. Laws 1909, c. 330, § 4, authorizing joint tenants, coparceners, and tenants in common to sue for partition, since her estate is a life estate in severalty in the entire premises within the metes and bounds, and she may not sue for partition. Newell v. Willmarth, 76 Atl. 433, 30 R. I. 529, 19 Ann. Cas. 807.

COPARTNERS

COPARTNERSHIP

See, also, Partnership.

Community of interest in a business enterprise, venture, or undertaking and the profits thereof may constitute a "copartnership" without an express agreement to share in losses. Gates v. Johnson, 77 N. W. 407, 56 Neb. 808 (citing and adopting Waggoner v. First Nat. Bank of Creighton, 61 N. W. 112, 43 Neb. 84).

COPARTY

Appellate tribunals, in vacation appeals, acquire jurisdiction to determine a cause on its merits only when all the parties against whom judgment is rendered are made appellants, and all parties in whose favor judgment is rendered, are made appellees; "coparties," under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 647, meaning parties to the judgment, and not parties plaintiff or defendant. First Nat. Bank of Peoria v. Farmers' & Merchants' Nat. Bank of Wabash (Ind.) 82 N. E. 1013, 1014.

In a vacation appeal from a judgment, all parties to the judgment or interested in or affected by it, or interested in its reversal or affirmance, must be made parties; and if they are "coparties"—that is, parties to the judgment—they must be joined as appellants and notice given them. Souers v. Walters (Ind.) 99 N. E. 1002, 1003.

Where a decree foreclosing a mortgage in rem only was rendered, and a reversal on appeal would continue the obligation without any equities giving rise to subrogation, the mortgagor and purchasers of the mortgaged premises were coparties, who would be prejudicially affected by any change in the decree; and hence were entitled to notice of appeal, as provided by Code, § 4111. Tukey v. Foster (Iowa) 138 N. W. 862, 863.

COPE

A "cope" is a part of the double sand-filled flask within which a foundry pattern has been placed and the casting made. Sandt v. North Wales Foundry Co., 63 Atl. 596, 214 Pa. 215.

COPULATION

"That there may be carnal 'copulation' without consummation of all that intended seems too evident for argument, and we are content with holding, without further elaboration, that proof of res in re, without more, is sufficient to justify conviction." State v. McGruder, 101 N. W. 646, 647, 125 Iowa, 741.

COPY

A copy, see A.

The clerk of the district court is entitled to fees for "copying" the papers provided for in Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 623, on change of venue, as well as for making the "transcript" mentioned in article 622; a "copy" being equivalent to a "transcript." Escavaille v. Stephens, 119 S. W. 842, 843, 102 Tex. 514.

"Copy of the bonds," as used in Laws 30th Leg. Tex. 1907, p. 78, § 24, approved March 23, 1907, providing that any drainage district desiring to issue bonds shall, before such bonds are offered for sale, forward to the Attorney General a "copy of the bonds" to be issued, mean that one of the bonds so prepared shall be forwarded to the Attorney General for his inspection and examination. The word "copy" as here used has the meaning of "one of a set or number of reproductions or limitations containing the same matter having the same form and appearance, or executed in the same style, etc., as, for instance, a copy of the book printed 60 years ago." The word is often used in this sense with reference to such things as are executed in numbers as the publication of a book. We speak of having a copy of a certain book, while, in fact, it is but one of a great number of productions from the same plates containing the same matter. We think it plain that the purpose of the law was that, after the bonds had been prepared and ready for sale, they should be submitted to the Attorney General for examination, and that, as all the bonds would be the same in substance and form, the submission of one would be equivalent to the submission of all, and an examination of one would determine the validity of each and all of them. Hidalgo County Drainage Dist. No. 1 v. Davidson, 120 S. W. 849, 851, 102 Tex. 539 (citing and quoting Cent. Dict. verbo "Copy," subd. 3).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1866, providing that a party to whom costs are awarded in an action is entitled to include in his bill of costs necessary disbursements as follows, the legal fees paid stenographers for per diem or for "copies," the word "copies" refers, not to the copies ordered by the parties from day to day to be used only as an aid in the examination of witnesses, but to such as are furnished for the purpose of making up bills of exceptions, either during or after the close of the trial, or statements on motion for new trial. Montana Ore Purchasing Co. v. Boston & Montana Con. C. & S. M. Co., 84 Pac. 706, 707, 33 Mont. 400.

Where the county clerk, in making complete indexes of all deeds on record in the office between designated years, examined every record of deeds and made slips, which were copied into the new indexes, and the existing indexes were only used for comparison, the new indexes were not "copies" of existing indexes, within County Law, § 28, empowering the board of supervisors to authorize county officers to make copies of records. Wadsworth v. Board of Sup'rs of Livingston County, 115 N. Y. Supp. 8, 12, 13.

Carbon copy

Where a carbon copy of a letter is taken and filed by the sender, the original copy being signed and mailed, the carbon is a "copy" and not an original. McDonald v. Hanks, 113 S. W. 604, 607, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 140.

A carbon copy of any longhand transcript of a stenographer's official notes, made by the stenographer at the time he makes the transcript and as a part of that transaction, is not a "copy," in the sense in which the word "copy" is ordinarily used, any more than several books or newspapers printed on the same press at the same time and from the same type are copies of each other. Harmon v. Territory, 79 Pac. 765, 770, 15 Okl. 147.

Certified copy

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7198, authorizing the clerk of the Supreme Court to collect a fee of 10 cents per 100 words for every "copy of record or other paper," applies only to certified copies. Ex parte Brown, 78 N. E. 553, 557, 166 Ind. 593.

Change of language or appearance as affecting

The term "copied," as used in Court of Civil Appeals Rule 29 (87 S. W. xv), declaring that each assignment of error not copied in the brief of appellant with its appropriate propositions and statements shall be regarded as abandoned, means that the assignment of error contained in the record shall be placed in the briefs, and not that reconstructed or amended assignments shall be printed therein. Martin v. German American Nat. Bank (Tex.) 102 S. W. 131, 132.

Copy of musical composition

A copyright of a musical composition printed with staff notation is not infringed by a perforated record or sheet designed for use with mechanism to play the composition on a musical instrument; not being a "copy" of the copyrighted publication within the meaning of the copyright statute. White-Smith Music Pub. Co. v. Apollo Co., 147 Fed. 226, 227, 77 C. C. A. 368.

As copy of whole

"The word 'copy' means, not a reproduction of only a portion of the thing copied, but the whole of it." Where a copy of a deed is offered in evidence, a copy of the entire deed should be offered, and it is improper to omit therefrom the description of other lands than those embraced in the controversy. East Coast Lumber Co. v. Ellis-Young Co., 45 South. 826, 832, 55 Fla. 256 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1595; Edmiston v. Schwartz, 13 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 135; Undergraff v. Perry, 4 Pa. 291).

Photograph

A correct photographic copy of an application for life insurance, reduced in size, but legible, attached to the policy, constituted a compliance with the Pennsylvania laws requiring insurance companies to attach a "copy" of the application to policies, where such application is referred to and made a part of the policy. Arter v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 130 Fed. 768, 769, 65 C. C. A. 156.

A photograph of a copyrighted piece of sculpture is a "copy" thereof, within the meaning of Rev. St. § 4952, and, if made without authority from the proprietor of the copyright, is an infringement thereof. Bracken v. Rosenthal, 151 Fed. 126, 127.

As true copy

Under Pen. Code, § 1893, defining an arraignment, and requiring a "copy" of the information to be delivered to defendant, a true copy is meant. State v. De Wolfe, 74 Pac. 1084, 1085, 29 Mont. 415.

COPY OF ACCOUNT

A "copy of an account" and a "bill of particulars" do not necessarily mean the same thing. A bill of particulars may be demanded on a claim which has reference to an accounting. Hanson v. Lindstrom, 108 N. W. 798, 799, 15 N. D. 584.

In the statute (Rev. Codes, § 7007) which defines the complaint in justices' courts as a concise statement, in writing, of the facts constituting the plaintiff's cause of action; or a "copy of the account" upon which the action is based, and section 7016, which provides that when the cause of action arises upon an account the court may require either party to furnish to the other the "items of an account" or a "bill of particulars," the term "bill of particulars" is synonymous with "items of an account" as distinguished from the "account" itself. The term "copy of account" is not used interchangeably with the term "items of account." A complaint in the form of copy of an account which is sufficient to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended is not objectionable because the items of account are not set out therein. Moran v. Ebey, 104 Pac. 522, 523, 39 Mont. 517.

COPYING

"Copying" means "to make a copy of [a picture or other work of art]; also to reproduce or represent [an object] in a picture or other work of art." Bracken v. Rosenthal, 151 Fed. 136, 137 (quoting and adopting definition in Murray's New English Dictionary).

The term "copying," when used with reference to infringement of copyrighted legal publications, includes not only paraphrasing, but also appropriation of the literary work and ideas of another, which includes arrangement and selection as well as language. West Pub. Co. v. Edward Thompson Co., 169 Fed. 833, 853.

In Rev. St. p. 4952, giving the author of a musical composition the exclusive liberty of copying and vending the same, the word "copying" does not apply to the making of perforated copies of music to be played by means of a mechanism. The word as applied to the subject has been several times construed, and it has been held that perforated music rolls are not infringements of copyright sheets of music, and that the word cannot be enlarged to include the reproduction by the phonograph of the sounds of a musical instrument. White-Smith Music Pub. Co. v. Apollo Co., 139 Fed. 427, 431 (citing Kennedy v. McTammany, 33 Fed. 584; Stern v. Rosey, 17 App. D. C. 562).

The word "copyright" means the exclusive right of multiplying copies of a work already published, which is preserved by a compliance with the act of Congress, and the right which an author has in his literary work exists only as long as the work is kept private; if it is published without complying with the copyright act the right is abandoned. *State v. CORDIAL

Vermuth is not a "wine," "cordial," or "liqueur," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule H, par. 296, 30 Stat. 174, prohibiting an allowance for the leakage of those three articles. *United States v. CORKED

"Corked" and "sealed," when used in reference to bottles, are not synonymous. Bottles are corked before sealing, and, when corked, are sealed by incasing the mouth in wax, or other material used for the same purpose, sufficiently close to exclude the air. The term "sealed," as used in Act March 29, 1890, providing that any person who raises grapes or berries may make wine thereof and sell in quantities not less than one-fifth of a gallon, or in sealed bottles, without a license, when the same is properly labeled as provided by "such act," should be construed as requiring the incasing of the mouth of the bottle in wax after it has been corked, and hence the sale of wine in bottles which were corked only was a violation of the statute. Koban v. State, 81 S. W. 235, 72 Ark. 408.

CORN

Merchantable corn, see Merchantable.

Though in transmitting an order for "corn" a telegraph company made a mistake in the sender's name, he could not recover for a failure to receive "corn whisky," in the absence of a preponderance of proof that the sendee was deceived by the error in the signature, and for that reason failed to ship the whisky, and that the sendee understood that "corn" meant "corn whisky." Newsome v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 56 S. E. 868, 864, 144 N. C. 178.

CORNCRIB

The word "corncrib," as used in a statute providing that any person who willfully sets fire to or burns any corncrib or corn pen containing corn, or any barn is guilty of arson in the second degree, means a building or structure in its entirety and not a room or apartment in a building or structure. Therefore an indictment charging the burning of a corncrib is not sustained by proof that the building destroyed was a barn in which one room was partitioned off as a corncrib. Jackson v. State, 40 South. 979, 980, 145 Ala. 54 (quoting and adopting definition in Cent. Dict. and Webster's International Dict.).

CORN LIQUOR

In the absence of evidence to the contrary, "corn liquor" will be presumed to be an intoxicating liquor. Wilburn v. State, 68 S. E. 460, 461, 8 Ga. App. 28.

"A 'corner,' when accomplished by a confederation to raise or depress prices and operate on the market, is a conspiracy if the means be unlawful." Klingel's Pharmacy v. Sharp & Dohme, 64 Atl. 1029, 1030, 104 Md. 218, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 976, 118 Am. St. Rep. 399, 9 Ann. Cas. 1184.

A "corner" is the securing of such control of the immediate supply of any product as to enable those operating the corner to arbitrarily advance the price of the product. It is ordinarily created by operations on boards of trade or stock exchanges, and by dealings in options and futures. United States v. Patten, 187 Fed. 664, 668.

CORNER BASEMENT

A subtenant could not sustain his right to hold a "corner basement" under a lease covering the "basement adjoining the corner," where there was ample evidence that there was a basement other than the one occupied by the tenant answering such description in the absence of a reformation of the lease or acts of the landlord after the making of such lease recognizing the identity of the basements; the expressions not being apparently synonymous. Kasower v. Sandler, 96 N. Y. Supp. 734, 736.

CORONER

A "coroner" is a public county officer. People v. Warner, 104 N. Y. Supp. 279, 282.

A "coroner," in certain classes of cases, is a magistrate, with power to hold examinations, issue warrants, and commit or discharge a person suspected of crime. Gibson v. McDonald, 123 N. Y. Supp. 504, 139 App. Div. 51; Same v. Schwannecke, 123 N. Y. Supp. 506, 139 App. Div. 53.

CORONER'S INQUEST

A "coroner's inquest" means a judicial investigation into the cause of death by the coroner with the aid of the jury. Hence the fee for an inquest could not properly be charged unless a jury had been impaneled to determine the cause of death. People v. Coombs, 53 N. E. 527, 528, 158 N. Y. 532.

CORPORAL

CORPORAL IMBECILITY

The term "corporal imbecility" has no precise technical meaning and does not absolutely import a natural permanent and incurable condition but such imbecility may be temporary merely. Under Civ. Code, § 82, subd. 6, authorizing a divorce for continued and apparently incurable physical incapacity, a plaintiff must allege and prove that such incapacity continues and appears to be incurable. Hobbs v. Hobbs, 101 Pac. 22, 23, 10 Cal. App. 97.

CORPORAL OATH

"A 'corporal oath' is so called because the person sworn touches with his hands some part of the Holy Scripture. The form of administering an oath is not in law essential, and even if a statute prescribes the uplifting of the hand it will be good by laying the hand on the Gospels, because the statutory provision is simply directory." Preston v. State, 90 S. W. 856, 115 Tenn. 348, 5 Ann. Cas. 722 (quoting and adopting definition in Bish. New Cr. Law, § 1018).

CORPORAL PUNISHMENT

"Corporal punishment" has been construed to mean punishment upon the body, such as whipping, rather than punishment of the body, such as imprisonment. Ex parte Wisner, 92 Pac. 958, 959, 36 Mont. 298 (citing Ritchey v. People, 43 Pac. 1026, 22 Colo. 251).

CORPORATE

CORPORATE ASSETS

Neither Civ. Code, § 359, prohibiting the issuance of corporate stock or bonds except for money paid, labor done, or property actually received, and making any fictitious increase of indebtedness void, or Const. art. 12, § 11, containing the same provision, nor any rule of public policy, prohibits the sale of corporate bonds at a discount, nor does the "trust fund" doctrine apply to corporate bonds; they not being corporate assets within the meaning of that doctrine. McKee v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 113 Pac. 140, 146, 159 Cal. 206.

CORPORATE AUTHORITIES

The grant by Act Cong. July 23, 1866, c. 211, 14 Stat. 209, of land within the corporate limits of the town of Santa Cruz, to "the 'corporate authorities' of said town," is to the incorporated body, and not to the individuals then holding office as such authorities. City of Santa Cruz v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 126 Pac. 362, 364, 163 Cal. 538.

The framers of the Constitution must be deemed to have understood the rule of law that the exercise of the taxing power is the exercise of legislative authority, so that, when they determined that the power to levy taxes for city purposes should be exercised only by the corporate authorities of the city, they must be deemed to have meant by the term "corporate authorities" those constituting the legislative branch of the city government. State ex rel. Gerry v. Edwards, 111 Pac. 734, 735, 42 Mont. 135, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1078, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1063.

Const. Ill. 1870, art. 11, § 4, prohibits the granting of a right to construct a street railroad in a street without the consent of the "local authorities," and street railway act (2 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, p. 2110, c. 66, § 3) requires the consent of the "corporate authorities." Held, that the terms "local authorities" and "corporate authorities" were synonymous, and used to indicate those representatives either directly elected by the people or appointed in some mode to which the people had given their assent. Potter v. Calumet Electric St. Ry. Co., 158 Fed. 521, 528.

CORPORATE BODY

A body politic and "corporate" created for the sole purpose of performing one or more municipal functions is a quasi municipal corporation and in common interpretation should be deemed a municipal corporation. Augusta v. Augusta Water Dist., 63 Atl. 663, 664, 101 Me. 148.

Education Law (Consol. Laws, c. 16) § 220, makes the board of education of each school district, or city, a "body corporate," and hence any liability created by the wrongful discharge of a teacher employed by the board is a liability of the board as a corporation, and not of the individual members. Reynolds v. Foster, 123 N. Y. Supp. 273, 277, 66 Misc. Rep. 183.

A local council of a benevolent organization established and operated as a branch of the State Council incorporated under the state laws is a "corporate body in the state" within Pen. Code 1895, § 188, providing that any officer employed in a corporate body in the state who shall embezzle money, etc., shall be punished. Cook v. State, 70 S. E. 31, 34, 8 Ga. App. 522.

Act March 21, 1894 (Ohio Laws, p. 543), creating the road commissioners of Van Wert county "a body corporate" with the powers and duties thereafter specified and authorizing them to issue certain bonds, is not a violation of Const. Ohio, art. 3, § 1, prohibiting special acts conferring corporate powers; the test being the nature of the power conferred and not the name employed by the Legislature. Rees v. Olmsted, 135 Fed. 296, 299, 68 C. C. A. 50.

Const. art. 11, §§ 4, 11, requiring the Legislature to establish a system of county government and to provide by general law for township organization, etc., do not take away from the Legislature the control of townships organized under laws relating to township organization in all the affairs thereof by general law, and the local option law (Act March 12, 1909; Laws 1909, c. 81), providing that the part of each county outside of cities or fourth class towns shall be a unit, and may vote on the question of the sale of intoxicating liquors within the boundaries thereof, applies to all counties, and prevails over Act March 3, 1909 (Laws 1909, c. 47) amending Act March 23, 1895 (Laws 1895, c. 175), providing that townships are bodies corporate with power to determine whether licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be granted, and the local option law is applicable to a county which has adopted township organization. Gunther v. Huenke, 108 Pac. 1078, 1079, 58 Wash. 494.

CORPORATE CAPACITY

See Individual and Corporate Capacity.

A judgment of sale of a corporation's property, reciting that it was made by agreement of all the stockholders "both in their individual and corporate capacity," should be construed to mean that the corporation entered its appearance and was bound by the order of sale. McNeill v. Thompson (Ky.) 84 S. W. 1145, 1146.

CORPORATE EXISTENCE

"'Corporate existence' becomes complete under the Missouri statute when the articles of association are filed in the office of the Secretary of State." Acceptance of corporate existence by a corporation formed by filing articles of incorporation under a general law need not be directly shown, but may be inferred from acts done in the corporate name. Boatmen's Bank v. Gillespie, 108 S. W. 74, 85, 209 Mo. 217 (quoting and adopting definition in Queen City Furniture & Carpet Co. v. Crawford, 30 S. W. 163, 127 Mo. 356).

CORPORATE FRANCHISE

See Exercising Corporate Franchise; Sale of Franchise and Property; Secondary Franchise.

Whenever a corporation is legally formed, the right to be and exist as such, and, as a corporation, to do the business specified in its articles, whether it be a banking business, grocery business, or the operation of a railroad, or any other business in which individuals may engage without grant from the state, is a grant by the sovereign power—a valuable right, which is generally known as the "corporate franchise." Bank of California v. City & County of San Francisco, 75 Pac. 832, 834, 142 Cal. 276, 64 L. R. A. 918, 100 Am. St. Rep. 130.

A corporation's franchise may be one thing or another. The word is not always used with reference to the same meaning. It is sometimes regarded as the mere right to be a corporation. Again, it is treated as the right to do the particular and peculiar business for which the corporation was created. It is also spoken of as the right to do its business in a certain locality, as, for example, where the Constitution requires certain franchises to be sold by cities and towns, Const. art. 164. The other two qualities of a "corporate franchise" may have existed before the acquisition of the latter, and are therefore in a sense quite distinct from it. For the purposes of taxation, it may be all of them and more. Henderson Bridge Co. v. Commonwealth, 99 Ky. 623, 31 S. W. 486, 29 L. R. A. 73. While corporate franchises have long been recognized factors of incorporated beings, they have only recently come to be regarded as separate subjects of taxation. In the rapid development of these artificial creatures of the law (corporations) as means of holding and using property in active business, the corporate franchise has come to have a recognized value of enormous magnitude, when viewed in the aggregate. It is not the least—indeed, frequently is the greater—element of the corporation's wealth. That it should be taxed, should be made to bear its share of the public burden together with all other wealth, is fundamentally true in justice and in political economy. So far, no exact definition of it has been given on which the courts have felt willing to finally rest the matter. And perhaps it is well enough for the present that this is so. Still certain qualities of the corporate franchise are so well known and classified as to be beyond dispute as being elements of its taxable value. The mere right to be a corporation is taxed, in the exacting of the organization tax on its creation. This is collected once, and absolutely without reference to its property or whether it ever engages in the business contemplated by its articles. The right of certain corporations to do business in a city, which it must acquire (if acquired since the present Constitution) by purchase of the franchise from the city, includes the compensation for occupying the public thoroughfares of the city. But it also may include more than that. Each of these are qualities of the general corporate franchise. Yet, as used in the taxing statute of this state, the word has a more comprehensive meaning. It is treated as property. It is property. It adds materially to the value of the tangible property of the corporation. The right to exercise the powers allowed to the corporation by law, the peculiar and exceptional privileges it enjoys, partaking partially of the quality of sovereignty, give to its use of its tangible property, as well as to its intangible property comprised within its capital stock, a value which otherwise could not attach to them, so that this privileged use becomes to the visible assets of the corporation what the heaven is to the loaf. While it may not be laid hold of separately, it is quite capable of being conceived and valued as a thing worth so much money. This value will depend largely on its money-earning capacity as it may be employed, and depends at last on its being exercised. Unless used substantially as outlined in the articles under which it is created, it could scarcely be said to have a money value at all. For, unlike tangible, or even choses in action, it cannot be sold and trafficked in, nor consumed, nor otherwise enjoyed than in the corporate use of it. It is true that by statute, when treating of railroad corporations, the franchise is deemed to include so much of the capital of the corporation and of its other intangible assets as is represented by the difference between the total value of its money-earning capacity and the separate value of its tangible property. The franchise of a railroad company may then be accepted for purposes of taxation as the earning value ascribed to its capital by reason of its operation as a common carrier of freight and passengers. Further than that the legislation in this state on that subject has not gone. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Hopkins, 90 S. W. 594, 595, 121 Ky. 850.

"A creative or corporate franchise confers upon the aggregation of individuals composing a corporation no greater measure of inherent right than is enjoyed by each individual citizen. In fact, the rights it may enjoy, in common with natural persons, are limited by express powers conferred upon it. The enumeration of powers in its charter is a limitation on corporate capacity, and not an enlargement of inherent rights, attaching to the legal person thus created. * * * A corporation may have power to acquire realty, and yet never own such property. Its corporate franchise, its charter, may grant the power to acquire and exercise separate, distinct, and varied franchises, but none may ever be acquired or owned. This distinction between the power to own, and ownership, is very important when we come to consider the difference between the creative franchise, vesting the power to acquire, and other franchises which it may subsequently acquire by purchase or acceptance. * * * It points the difference between the general, creative franchise to be, and the special franchises which, when accepted or purchased, vest privileges or franchises resting in special grant from governmental sources. Above all things, it eliminates the heresy that all special franchises, enjoyed and exercised by a corporation, whether acquired by acceptance or purchase, are merged in the general franchise which creates the corporation, and endows it with enumerated powers. The mere fact that a corporation is organized for the specific purpose of acquiring, and is given power to acquire, public uses or franchises, does not carry with it the idea that such franchises, when acquired, be they many or few, are merged in, and must be assessed as part and parcel of, the general corporate franchise." Where a corporation was authorized to acquire property, appropriate and distribute water, construct canals, and establish, collect, and receive rates, water rents, and tolls, and was authorized to exercise the right of eminent domain, the actual exercise of such powers by the construction of canals in a county other than that in which the corporation's principal place of business was located constituted the use of a franchise by the corporation in such county which was there subject to taxation. San Joaquin & K. R. Canal & Irrigation Co. v. Merced County, 84 Pac. 285, 286, 287, 288, 2 Cal. App. 593.

The franchises of a corporation are the rights it has to engage in and carry on the business for which it was chartered. Act March 7, 1907, p. 4188, § 1, requiring a foreign corporation to pay annually a franchise tax for the use of the state, based on the amount of capital employed in the state, does not impose a tax on the franchise of a foreign corporation as property, but adds to the license tax already required an additional privilege tax for the continued exercise of the "corporate franchise." Southern R. Co. v. Greene, 49 South. 404, 406, 160 Ala. 396.

In a statute providing for an assessment on the tangible property of express, telegraph, and telephone companies, and on the yearly gross receipts, such gross receipts to be taken and considered in their total as an item of property, etc., and to represent the franchise valuation, which shall not be otherwise assessed, the franchise valuation cannot be construed to mean "a corporate franchise"—the franchise to be a corporation. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Omaha (Neb.) 103 N. W. 84, 85.

CORPORATE POWERS AND PRIVILEGES

Act May 18, 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 124), is entitled "An act to regulate the admission of foreign corporations for profit, to do business in the state," and section 1 provides that, before such corporations shall be permitted to transact any business or exercise any of their corporate powers in the state, they shall comply with the provisions of the act and be subject to all regulations prescribed for domestic corporations. Sections 2 to 5, inclusive, provide the steps for admission of such corporations to the state, and section 6 imposes a penalty for neglect to comply with the act, and in addition thereto forbids any foreign corporation, failing to comply with the act, to sue upon any claim, legal or equitable. Held, that the terms "doing business" and "transacting business" meant only the transaction of the ordinary business in which the corporation was engaged, and did not include the prosecution of actions; and, in view of the title of the act, the inhibition against the exercise of any "corporate powers" did not change its meaning, "corporate powers" referring to those powers or franchises conferred upon the corporation to enable it to prosecute the business in which it was engaged, together with those implied powers necessary thereto, so that merely bringing a suit in this state by a foreign corporation was not "transacting business" so as to require compliance with the act before bringing such suit. Alpena Portland Cement Co. v. Jenkins & Reynolds Co., 91 N. E. 480, 481, 244 Ill. 354.

Municipal corporations have two aspects. In one their functions are chiefly ministerial, and relate to corporate interests only. These include the making of public improvements, the repair of such improvements, and the holding of property for corporate purposes. The officers of the municipality in exercising this class of powers are to be regarded as agents of the lesser public, and the maxim of respondeat superior applies. In the other aspect the municipality is regarded as holding a quasi delegated sovereignty for the preservation of the public peace and safety and the prevention of crime. This includes the maintenance of a police force, the appointment of officers charged with the public health, the establishment of regulations for the suppression of vice, and other matters of public concern in which all people have a common interest. As to this class of powers, the municipal officers are regarded as agents of the greater public, and the maxim respondeat superior does not apply. Barree v. City of Cape Girardeau, 95 S. W. 330, 332, 197 Mo. 382, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1090, 114 Am. St. Rep. 763 (citing Donahoe v. City of Kansas City, 88 S. W. 571, 136 Mo. 657; Bullmaster v. City of St. Joseph, 70 Mo. App. 60; Maxmillian v. Mayor, etc., of City of New York, 62 N. Y. 160, 20 Am. Rep. 468; Conrad v. Village of Ithaca, 16 N. Y. 158; Jones v. City of New Haven, 34 Conn. 1).

The mere fact that a special legislative act authorizing the appointment by a county board of road commissioners for a district in certain cases declares that such commissioners "shall be a body corporate with the powers and duties hereinafter specified" does not render the act invalid under the Ohio Constitution as a special act conferring "corporate powers," where the powers conferred are only those ordinarily conferred on officers charged with the supervision of public improvements. Rees v. Olmsted, 135 Fed. 296, 301, 68 C. C. A. 50.

The term "corporate powers," as used in Const. art. 2, § 28, prohibiting the Legislature from enacting any special law for granting corporate powers or privileges, includes powers conferred upon municipal corporations, as well as those conferred upon private corporations. Terry v. King County, 86 Pac. 210, 211, 212, 43 Wash. 61, 9 Ann. Cas. 1170.

CORPORATE PURPOSE

The issue of bonds by a city for the purpose of purchasing grounds and erecting school buildings thereon is a "corporate purpose," within Const. 1868, art. 9, § 8, providing that cities, etc., may be vested with power to assess and collect taxes for corporate purposes. Jordan v. City of Greenville, 60 S. E. 973, 974, 79 S. C. 436.

The construction and maintenance of a bridge outside of the territorial boundaries of a city, the purpose of which is not to serve the convenience of its inhabitants, but the convenience of the inhabitants of an outlying district, and to promote the business and commercial interests of the city by increasing the trade of its business men, is not such a "corporate purpose" as will sustain the exercise of the power to taxation. Manning v.

City of Devils Lake, 99 N. W. 51, 53, 18 N. D. 47, 65 L. R. A. 187, 112 Am. St. Rep. 652 (quoting 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. [4th Ed.] § 736).

Laws 1895, c. 39, providing that all metropolitan cities and cities of the first class having a paid fire department shall pension superannuated firemen, the pensions to be paid from the funds of the fire department, is not violative of Const. art. 9, § 7, prohibiting the Legislature from imposing taxes upon municipal corporations, or the inhabitants or property thereof, for corporate purposes. State ex rel. Haberman v. Love, 131 N. W. 196, 198, 89 Neb. 149, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 607, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 542.

Municipal "corporate purposes" are such purposes as are germane to the objects of the welfare of the municipality, or have a legitimate connection with those objects, and a manifest relation thereto, and a tax for corporate purposes was held to be one to be expended in a manner which should promote the general prosperity and welfare of the municipality which levied it. The borrowing of money by the issuance of bonds to pay the judgment indebtedness of a city is a pledge of its credit for corporate purposes, within the meaning of City and Village Act, art. 5, § 1, par. 5 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1901, c. 24, § 62), authorizing bonds for such purposes. Stone v. City of Chicago, 69 N. E. 970, 973, 207 Ill. 492 (citing And. Law Dict. p. 265; Board of Sup'rs of Livingston County v. Welder, 64 Ill. 427; People ex rel. Cairo & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Dupuyt, 71 Ill. 651; Burr v. City of Carbondale, 76 Ill. 455; Taylor v. Thompson, 42 Ill. 9; National Life Ins. Co. of Montpelier, Vt., v. Mead, 82 N. W. 78, 13 S. D. 37, 48 L. R. A. 785, 79 Am. St. Rep. 876).

CORPORATE SEAL

Where a corporation adopts a seal for a special occasion, different from its corporate seal, the seal adopted is the corporate seal for that time and occasion. New York Life Ins. Co. v. Rhodes, 60 S. E. 828, 830, 4 Ga. App. 25.

"A 'corporation' is simply an aggregation of individuals." Wolff Chemical Co. v. City of Philadelphia, 68 Atl. 344, 345, 217 Pa. 215.

A "corporation" is an artificial person created by law for specific purposes, the limit of whose existence, powers, and liabilities is fixed by its charter. Venable Bros. v. Southern Granite Co., 69 S. E. 822, 823, 135 Ga. 508, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 446.

Domestic as well as foreign corporations are embraced by Act Ark. Jan. 23, 1905, § 1, imposing a penalty upon any "corporation" doing business within the state while a mem-

The words "association of persons" are often and not inaptly employed to describe a "corporation," which is an association of individuals acting as a single person and by their corporate name. A private corporation is an "association of persons" within Rev. St. U. Characteristics and kinds

"A 'corporation' is an intangible creature of the law, which cannot be seized and held, or imprisoned, or hung like a human being. Therefore the only method for obtaining the necessary control of it is by notice served on its proper officer and steps to force it to appear by attorney. For without an appearance there can be no sentence; judgment by default being unknown in criminal cases." United States v. Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, 154 Fed. 728, 730 (quoting and adopting the definition in Bishop's New Crim. Proc. § 950a, par. 3).

A "corporation" is "an artificial being, invisible, intangible, and existing only in contemplation of law." Havemeyer v. Dahn (Neb.) 67 N. W. 489, 490, 83 L. R. A. 332, 58 Am. St. Rep. 706 (quoting in dissenting opinion definition of Chief Justice Marshall in Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. Ed. 629).

A "corporation" is a legal person, with power to act as a natural one to the extent that its charter authorizes it to. Henderson v. Ogden Ry. Co., 28 Pac. 286, 287, 7 Utah, 205.

A "corporation" is defined to be a franchise which, "like other franchises, is an incorporeal hereditament issuing out of something real or personal, or concerning or annexed to and exercisable within a thing corporate. To this grant or this franchise the parties are the king and the persons for whose benefit it is created, or trustees for them." First Nat. Bank of Deadwood, S. D., v. Rockefeller, 98 S. W. 761, 767, 195 Mo. 15 (quoting definition in Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. [17 U. S.] 658, 4 L. Ed. 629).

"Corporations" is defined by Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, cl. 6, 30 Stat. 544, as meaning all bodies having any of the powers and privileges of private corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships, including limited or other corporate associations organized under laws making the capital subscribed alone responsible for the debts of the association. Burkhart v. German-American Bank, 137 Fed. 958, 959.

A "corporation" has no personal attributes and must be judged by its corporate acts. Where a corporation applies for a brewer's license under P. L. 1891, 257, relating to the licensing of wholesale dealers, brewers, etc., its unfitness may be established by showing unlawful acts of its officers or authorized agents, such as sale on Sunday, or to minors, or to persons of known intemperate habits, since, though a corporation by its act of incorporation is made fit to engage in the business of brewing liquors, it may become unfit within the license law by illegal corporate acts. In re Indiana Brewing Co.'s License, 75 Atl. 29, 30, 226 Pa. 56.

The word "corporation," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 4194, defining mandamus as a writ issued in the name of the state to any inferior tribunal, a corporation, board, or persons, commanding the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station, is a generic term and includes public, quasi public, and private corporations. Wyoming Coal Min. Co. v. State ex rel. Kennedy, 87 Pac. 984, 985, 15 Wyo. 97, 128 Am. St. Rep. 1014.

"Corporations" are defined by Bankr. Act, § 1, to mean all bodies having any of the powers and privileges of private corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships, but including limited or other partnership associations, organized under laws making the capital subscribed alone responsible for the debts of the association. Dressel v. Northern State Lumber Co., 107 Fed. 255, 256.

A "corporation" is an intellectual body created by law, composed of individuals united under a common name, the members of which succeed each other so that the body continues the same, notwithstanding change of individuals composing it, and which for certain purposes is considered as a natural person. Rhodes v. Love, 69 S. E. 436, 437, 158 N. C. 468.

"A 'corporation' is somewhat like a partnership, if one were possible, conducted wholly by agents where the co-partners have power to appoint the agents, but are not responsible for their acts. The power to manage its affairs resides in the directors, who are its agents, but the power to elect directors resides in the stockholders." Stokes v. Continental Trust Co., 78 N. E. 1090, 1093, 186 N. Y. 285, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 969, 9 Ann. Cas. 738.

"Corporations" are but associations of individuals united for a lawful purpose and permitted to use a common name in their business and to have a change of members. The abstract idea of a corporation, the legal entity, is itself a fiction and has been appropriately described as a figure of speech. It serves very well to designate in our minds the collective action and agency of many individuals as permitted by the law, and the substantial inquiry always is: What in a given case has been that collective action and agency? It has also been defined as an artificial person, created by law as the representative of those persons, natural or artificial, who contribute to and become the holders of shares in the property intrusted to it for a common purpose. A corporation will be looked upon as a legal entity as a general rule, until sufficient reason to the contrary appears; but when the notion of legal entity is used to defeat public convenience, justify wrong, protect fraud, or defend crime, the law will regard the corporation as an association of persons. Where one corporation was organized and is owned by the officers and stockholders of another making their interest identical, they may be treated as identical when the interests of justice require it. United States v. Milwaukee Refrigerator Transit Co., 142 Fed. 247, 254.

Creation

A "corporation" is the creature of the state, and every corporation owes its existence and its right to incorporate to express legislative enactment. Feiner v. Reiss, 90 N. Y. Supp. 568, 571, 98 App. Div. 40.

"A 'corporation' is a creation of the Legislature. Persons are not obliged to incorporate against their will. If, however, they do incorporate, they must accept the burdens imposed upon them by general law." Cook County v. Fairbank, 78 N. E. 895, 898, 222 Ill. 578.

A "corporation" is not a tangible thing, becoming a legal entity only by statutory permission; it is a mere legislative creation; a creature existing only by virtue of law. Fifth Avenue Coach Co. v. City of New York, 111 N. Y. Supp. 759, 768, 58 Misc. Rep. 401.

"Corporations" are recognized as creatures of the law, and they owe obedience thereto, and when they fail to perform duties which they were created to discharge, or where they do unauthorized acts, the state has the right to wrest from the offending corporation its franchise. State ex. inf. Hadley v. Standard Oil Co., 116 S. W. 902, 1008, 218 Mo. 1.

A "corporation" is an artificial being, invisible, intangible, and existing only in contemplation of law. In State v. Topeka Water Co., 61 Kan. 547, 558, 60 Pac. 337, 341, it is said: "A corporation exists by the will of a sovereign power. To this superior authority it owes an allegiance which it cannot abjure." Williams v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. 74 Pac. 600, 602, 68 Kan. 17, 64 L. R. A. 794, 104 Am. St. Rep. 377, 1 Ann. Cas. 6.

The annexation of a town to a city, and the consolidation of the two municipalities, under the provisions of Acts 1903, p. 201, c. 105, which authorizes the annexation of a town to a city having a population of between 6,000 and 7,000, is the creation of a corporation, within Const. art. 11, § 13, providing that "corporations other than banking shall not be created by special act, but may be formed under general laws"; and the act, being special, is unconstitutional. Town of Longview v. Crawfordville, 73 N. E. 78, 80, 164 Ind. 117, 68 L. R. A. 622, 3 Ann. Cas. 496.

A "corporation" is a creature of statute, having no existence except by virtue of local laws. The grant of its corporate existence is a grant of special powers and privileges to its incorporators to pursue the objects of its creation and transact its corporate business the same as an individual transacts his private business. Being such a creature of local laws, it has no legal existence without the limits of the jurisdiction which created it. It exists only in contemplation of law and by virtue of the law, and, where the law ceases to operate and is no longer obligatory, the corporation can have no existence. It must dwell in the place of its creation and cannot migrate to another sovereignty. It is endowed with no natural attributes but has only such powers as are conferred by its charter and the laws of its creation, and one state or country can make no laws or create any corporation for another, although the corporate existence of a corporation may be recognized by another state and its contract made therein enforced by the comity of the state. A. Booth & Co. v. Weigand, 79 Pac. 570, 571, 28 Utah, 372.

"A 'corporation' is but an artificial person created and limited by the statute. Both the individual and the corporation are subject to the laws governing the business conducted by them. The public duty springs not alone from contract, but it is the result of the character of the business and the laws regulating it. The business is subjected to constitutional and legislative control and lawful police regulations. The public duty does not arise from any question of ownership but from the nature and character of the business and the fact that it is conducted by public franchise granted by public authority." Lowther v. Bridgeman, 50 S. E. 410, 411, 57 W. Va. 306.

As distinct from stockholders

A "corporation" is a legal entity distinct from the stockholders, and this rule applies, though all the stock is owned by one person, but in cases of fraud the courts will treat as identical a corporation and its stockholders. Roberts v. W. H. Hughes Co. (Vt.) 83 Atl. 807, 812.

A "corporation" is an entity and exists irrespective of the persons owning its stock. State ex rel. City of Tacoma v. Tacoma Ry. & Power Co., 112 Pac. 506, 508, 61 Wash. 507, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 720.

A "corporation" is in law an entity entirely distinct from its stockholders and officers, and it may have interests distinct from theirs. J. J. McCaskill Co. v. United States, 30 Sup. Ct. 386, 391, 216 U. S. 504, 54 L. Ed. 590.

A "corporation" is an entity distinct and separate from officers and stockholders, and corporate liabilities do not attach to the latter. Old Dominion Copper Mining & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 89 N. E. 193, 207, 203 Mass. 159, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 314.

A "corporation" is an entity wholly separate and distinct from the individuals who compose and control it. The law does not contemplate that partners may incorporate with intent to obtain the advantages and immunities of a corporate form and then become at will a partnership or a corporation as the purposes of their joint enterprises may require. Jackson v. Hooper (N. J.) 75 Atl. 568, 571, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 658.

"A 'corporation' is but an association of individuals under an assumed name and with a distinct legal entity. In organizing itself as a collective body it waives no constitutional immunities appropriate to such body. Its property cannot be taken without compensation. It can only be proceeded against by due process of law and is protected, under Const. Amend. 14, against unlawful discrimination." The privilege against self-incrimination afforded by Const. Amend. 5 is purely personal to the witness, and he cannot claim the privilege of another person or of the "corporation" of which he is an officer or employé. Hale v. Henkel, 26 Sup. Ct. 370, 379, 201 U. S. 43, 50 L. Ed. 652.

"A 'corporation' is a legal entity, distinguished from any or all of its stockholders. That one person may own a majority or all of the stock of the corporation does not establish an identity between him and the corporation, so as to make acts by him in his individual name its acts." Garmany v. Lawton, 53 S. E. 669, 670, 124 Ga. 876, 110 Am. St. Rep. 207.

A corporation is an artificial person, a distinct legal entity, and its officers are its agents. Ex parte Rickey, 100 Pac. 134, 139, 31 Nev. 82, 135 Am. St. Rep. 651.

"A 'corporation' is an association of natural persons united as one body, and endowed by law with the capacity to act in many respects as an individual, as a separate and distinct entity, but a corporation can only act or think or purpose through its officers (directors, or stockholders." Exploration Mercantile Co. v. Pacific Hardware & Steel Co., 177 Fed. 825, 829, 101 C. C. A. 39.

A corporation is an artificial person, like the state, having a distinct existence from that of its stockholders and directors. People's Pleasure Park Co. v. Rohleder, 61 S. E. 794, 796, 63 S. E. 981, 109 Va. 439.

"Corporations," being creatures of the law and deriving their right to exist and their powers from the law, have not all the rights and powers of individuals, and the rule that a corporation is an entity separate and distinct from its stockholders will be disregarded, when invoked in support of an end which is subversive of the policy of the state. Southern Electric Securities Co. v. State, 44 South. 785, 789, 91 Miss. 195, 124 Am. St. Rep. 633.

A corporation is an artificial entity existing in contemplation of law in the state of its creation, and, though it is a citizen within the meaning of certain provisions of the federal Constitution, it has no existence outside of the state of its creation, and is recognized elsewhere only by comity. In re Willmer's Estate, 138 N. Y. Supp. 649, 651, 153 App. Div. 804.

"A corporation is an entity, irrespective of the persons who own all of its stock, and the fact that one person owns all the stock does not make him and the corporation one and the same person." Control of the property of a corporation is not in its stockholders. A majority of the stockholders control the election of its officers and agents, but the control of the company's property is in the corporation itself, and its officers and agents, who are intrusted with such control by virtue of the by-laws. Ulmer v. Lime Rock R. Co., 57 Atl. 1001, 1007, 98 Me. 579, 66 L. R. A. 387 (citing Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 6 Sup. Ct. 194, 115 U. S. 587, 29 L. Ed. 499; Exchange Bank v. Macon Construction Co., 25 S. E. 326, 97 Ga. 1, 83 L. R. A. 800; Button v. Hoffman, 20 N. W. 667, 61 Wis. 20, 50 Am. Rep. 131; Mor. Priv. Corp. § 227).

Extraterritorial rights

A "corporation" is a mere creature of the law; and, inasmuch as laws have no force beyond the limits of the territory over which the lawmaking power has jurisdiction, it necessarily extends its operations into another state than that by force of whose laws it exists, and it can demand recognition only on the principles of comity, and not as a matter of right. Walker v. Bein, 106 N. W. 405, 406, 14 N. D. 608.

"A 'corporation' is an artificial being which exists only in contemplation of law, and its residence, so far as it can be said to have one, is in the state which creates it. It may exercise a permissive right to do business in other states but may not migrate to another sovereignty. Its home, its residence, as has been often held, is in the state of its creation, and the recognition it receives elsewhere is accorded under the rules of interstate courtesy and comity. * * * Since a corporation is a creation of the state, its residence may be said to be a state residence." Ham v. Booth, 83 Pac. 24, 25, 72 Kan. 429.

The artificial being termed a "corporation" is in this country largely if not solely a creature of statute. It "can have no legal existence out of the boundaries of the sovereignty by which it is created. It exists only in contemplation of law and by force of the law, and, where that law ceases to operate and is no longer obligatory, the 'corporation' can have no existence. It must dwell in the place of its creation and cannot migrate to another sovereignty." Groel v. United Electric Co. of New Jersey, 60 Atl. 822, 827, 69 N. J. Eq. 397 (quoting and adopting the definition in Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. [38 U. S.] 519, 10 L. Ed. 274).

Foreign corporations included

State courts have no jurisdiction, apart from statute, over a foreign corporation, except so far as its property is attached or it makes a voluntary appearance; and jurisdiction is not conferred upon the municipal court of Boston in actions at law against foreign corporations by Rev. Laws, c. 167, § 7, cl. 3, providing that a natural person may sue a corporation in any county in which the corporation has a place of business, or the person lives or has a place of business, as that statute only fixes the venue, and "corporations," as there used, does not include a foreign corporation. Potter v. La Pointe Mach. Tool Co., 88 N. E. 418, 201 Mass. 557.

See Individual; Person.

Incorporation distinguished

The phrase "a corporation," after the name of plaintiff in the title of a case, is merely descriptive of plaintiff and is not an allegation of incorporation, and defendant has in the first instance the burden of showing that plaintiff has no legal capacity to sue. Boyce v. Augusta Camp No. 7429, Modern Woodmen of America, 78 Pac. 322, 14 Okl. 642.

Natural person distinguished

A corporation is not a natural person, but is a creature of the state, possessing no powers or franchises except those conferred by the state. Cassatt v. Mitchell Coal & Coke Co., 150 Fed. 32, 44, 81 C. C. A. 80, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 99; Same v. Pennsylvania Coal & Coke Co., 150 Fed. 48, 81 C. C. A. 97.

Powers

A "corporation" is an artificial being, invisible, intangible, existing only in contemplation of law, and, being the mere creation of law, it possesses only those properties which the charter of its creation confers. United States v. MacAndrews & Forbes Co., 149 Fed. 823, 835 (citing Dartmouth College Case, 4 Wheat. 636, 4 L. Ed. 629).

A "corporation" is a creature of the law, having no powers but those conferred upon it. A corporation has no natural rights or capacities, such as an individual or an ordinary partnership, and, if a power is claimed for it, the words giving the power, or from which it is necessarily implied, must be found in the charter or it does not exist. Scott v. Bankers' Union of the World, 85 Pac. 604, 608, 73 Kan. 575 (quoting and adopting the definition in National Home Building & Loan Ass'n v. Home Savings Bank, 54 N. E. 619, 181 Ill. 35, 64 L. R. A. 399, 72 Am. St. Rep. 245).

"A 'corporation' is an artificial being, invisible, intangible, and existing only in contemplation of law. Being a mere creature of the law, it possesses only those properties which the charter of its creation confers upon it, either expressly or as incidental to its very existence." Myatt v. Ponca City Land & Imp. Co., 78 Pac. 185, 196, 14 Okl. 189, 68 L. R. A. 810.

"A 'corporation' is a creature of the state. It is presumed to be incorporated for the benefit of the public. It receives certain special privileges and franchises and holds them subject to the laws of the state and the limitations of the charter. Its powers are limited by law. It can make no contract not authorized by its charter. Its rights to act as a corporation are only preserved to it so long as it obeys the laws of its creation. There is a reserved right in the Legislature to investigate its contracts and find out whether it has exceeded its powers. It would be a strange anomaly to hold that a state, having chartered a corporation to make use of certain franchises, could not in the exercise of its sovereignty inquire how these franchises had been employed, and whether they had been abused, and demand the production of the corporate books and papers for that purpose." International Coal Mining Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 152 Fed. 557, 558 (quoting and adopting definition in Hale v.

"A 'corporation' is but the creature of the statute, and it can exercise no greater powers than those which are expressly conferred upon it by its charter or which must be necessarily implied from its charter." A corporation empowered by its charter only to engage in the business of manufacturing and selling certain articles has no implied authority to participate in the organization of other corporations. Converse v. Emerson, Talcott & Co., 90 N. E. 269, 272, 242 Ill. 619.

"A corporation is a creature of law. It has no powers except those expressly granted or necessarily implied, and none can be implied except such as are necessary to the exercise and enjoyment of those expressly granted. Powers which are not thus granted or implied are defined." Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Evansville, 127 Fed. 187, 191 (quoting Board of Com'rs of Tippecanoe County v. Lafayette, M. & B. Ry. Co., 50 Ind. 85).

Bishop

"A bishop is not a corporation sole." Kain v. Gibboney, 101 U. S. 362, 365, 25 L. Ed. 813.

A Catholic bishop is not an institution within Code 1873, § 1101, which provides that no person leaving a wife, child, or parent shall devise or bequeath to such institution or corporation more than one-fourth of his estate after payment of his debts. The word "institution" manifestly has reference to an association similar to a corporation and not to an individual in trust for charitable uses. While a bishop is for some purposes designated a "corporation," he is none the less an individual and as such may act as a trustee for any legal purpose. Rine v. Wagner, 113 N. W. 471, 473, 135 Iowa, 626.

Board of agriculture

Laws 1899, p. 208, provides that five citizens of the state, to be named by the Governor, shall constitute a board of agriculture which shall be charged with the exclusive management of the State Agricultural Society, have the direction of its entire business affairs, and be authorized to purchase and hold real estate. The board is required to provide for an annual fair, and in no event is the state to be liable for any premium awarded or debt created beyond the amount annually appropriated therefor. The act also provides for an annual appropriation from the state treasury to aid in carrying on the purposes of the board; no part of such allowance to be paid as a premium for trials of speed. Held, that the board is a "corporation," and not a branch of the state government, nor for the administration of state affairs; it not being accountable to the state for money received by it, except the legislative appropriation, and it having the power to make contracts, and, as a necessary incident thereto, the right to appeal to the courts for the enforcement of them, it may be sued for a like purpose. Tongue v. State Board of Agriculture, 105 Pac. 250, 251, 55 Or. 61.

Express company

Act April 5, 1893, containing Ky. St. 1903, § 457, is entitled, "An act providing for the creation and regulation of private corporations." The first section of the act (Ky. St. 1903, § 538) provides for what purposes such corporations may be formed, and the next section (Ky. St. 1903, § 539) provides what the articles of incorporation shall specify, neither of which sections have any application to partnerships or unincorporated companies. Ky. St. 1903, § 571, provides that all corporations except foreign insurance companies doing business within the state shall have an authorized agent to accept service in the state and shall file with the Secretary of State a specified statement; that if any corporation fails to comply with such requirements, it shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and fined. Held, that section 571 had no application to an express company which was a joint-stock association, notwithstanding section 457, providing that the word "corporation" may be construed to include any person, persons, partnership, joint-stock company, or association. Commonwealth v. Adams Exp. Co., 97 S. W. 386, 387, 123 Ky. 720.

Improvement districts

The effect of Kirby's Dig. §§ 5665, 5666, authorizing the organization of improvement districts, which, when organized, are given a particular name and endowed with perpetual succession until their object is accomplished, with power to make contracts, incur debts, issue bonds, collect assessments, to sue, and to compel the city to make assessments, is to make them "corporations," though they are not denominated as such. Whipple v. Tuxworth, 99 S. W. 86, 90, 81 Ark. 391.

Joint-stock company

Const. § 208, providing that the word "corporation," as used "in this Constitution" shall embrace joint-stock companies and associations, does not control the definition of the word "corporation" when used in the statutes of the state. Commonwealth v. Adams Exp. Co., 97 S. W. 386, 387, 123 Ky. 720.

Under Const. § 208, providing that the word "corporation" as used therein shall embrace joint-stock companies and associations, a joint-stock company organized in another state and having a franchise to exist in Kentucky to acquire mining property and conduct the business of mining, was subject to Ky. St. § 2731, regulating mine ventilation.

Stearns Coal Co. v. McPherson, 189 S. W. 971, 972, 144 Ky. 730.

The term "corporation," under the express provisions of Rev. St. 1889, § 2480, relating to corporations, includes all joint-stock companies or associations having any powers or privileges not possessed by any individuals or partnership; hence under section 7755, relating to taxation and providing for the taxation of a bridge owned by any joint-stock company, a bridge owned by a corporation may be taxed. State ex rel. Pearson v. Louisiana & M. R. R. Co., 94 S. W. 279, 282, 196 Mo. 523.

A joint-stock association brought into being wholly by the contract of its individual members is not subject to taxation under the acts of Pennsylvania of May 1, 1868, April 24, 1874, March 20, 1877, and June 7, 1879, imposing taxes on the capital stock of incorporated companies. Gregg v. Sanford, 65 Fed. 151, 153, 12 C. C. A. 525.

Const. art. 11, §§ 2, 16, declaring that no charter of incorporation shall be granted, extended, or amended by special law, except for certain corporations under the control of the state, but that the Legislature shall provide by general law for the organization of corporations, and that the term "corporation" shall be construed to include all associations and joint-stock companies having any of the powers or privileges of corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships, does not prohibit the formation of an unincorporated association or joint-stock company by individuals for the purchase of a single tract of real estate, the title to which may be taken in a trustee, and the articles of agreement of the association may provide that the death of a shareholder shall not result in the dissolution of the association, and may so limit the liability of the association, and may provide that either or any of the officers or shareholders shall not sell or dispose of any of the property of the association without the concurrence of the shareholders. Spotswood v. Morris, 85 Pac. 1094, 1098, 12 Idaho, 360, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 665 (citing People v. Coleman, 5 N. Y. Supp. 394, affirmed in 31 N. E. 96, 16 L. R. A. 183).

A joint-stock company, though a legal entity, and suable in the name of its president under state laws, is not a corporation, and cannot be deemed to have citizenship for the purpose of removing actions against it to the federal courts. Saunders v. Adams Exp. Co., 136 Fed. 494, 495 (citing Chapman v. Barney, 9 Sup. Ct. 426, 129 U. S. 677, 32 L. Ed. 800; Great Southern Fireproof Hotel Company v. Jones, 20 Sup. Ct. 690, 177 U. S. 449, 44 L. Ed. 482; Thomas v. Ohio State University, 25 Sup. Ct. 24, 195 U. S. 207, 49 L. Ed. 60; Boatner v. American Exp. Co., 122 Fed. 714).

Under Const. § 208 and Ky. St. § 457, which provide that the word "corporation" shall embrace joint-stock companies and associations, a corporation is comprehended by Civ. Code Prac. § 51, subsec. 6, which provides for the service of summons against joint-stock companies, associations, etc. International Harvester Co. v. Commonwealth, 145 S. W. 393, 395, 147 Ky. 655.

Under Const. Pa. art. 16, making provisions relating to private corporations, and section 13, which declares that "the term 'corporation' as used in this article shall be considered to include all joint-stock companies or associations having any of the powers or privileges of corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships," which definition should be applied in construing state statutes unless precluded by the context or subject-matter, an association formed under Act Pa. May 9, 1899 (P. L. 261), which, although denominated a "partnership," is given powers and privileges far in excess of those possessed by individuals or ordinary partnerships, including the power to limit the liability of its members and to make their interest transferable, is in law a corporation, and as such its franchise and rights may be levied on and sold under Act Pa. April 7, 1870 (P. L. 58). Keystone Bank v. Donnelly, 196 Fed. 832, 833.

Municipal or quasi public corporations

The courts hold that the general word "corporation" must be restricted to mean private or ordinary business corporations, and not extended to embrace municipal corporations and bodies politic and corporate. Edwards v. Fowler, 89 N. Y. Supp. 685, 688, 43 Misc. Rep. 603 (citing Wallace v. Lawyer, 54 Ind. 501, 23 Am. Rep. 661).

A municipality is not a "person" or "corporation," within Rev. Laws, c. 171, § 2, as amended by St. 1907, c. 375, which makes persons and corporations liable for negligent death. Donahue v. City of Newburyport, 98 N. E. 1081, 1083, 211 Mass. 561, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 742.

Act Oct. 11, 1907 (P. L. 676) § 1, forbidding any person, firm, or corporation to supply water to another, for use within a municipality, without the consent of the board having charge of the water supply, means a private, and not a municipal, corporation. Town of Kearny v. Jersey City, 73 Atl. 110, 78 N. J. Law, 77.

Const. art. 11, § 2, which, as first adopted, provided that corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special laws except for municipal purposes, was amended June 4, 1906, to read: "Corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by the legislative assembly by special laws." Held, that such section, viewed in the light of the reference to "other corporations" in section 9, providing that no county, city, town, or other municipal corporation shall become a stockholder in any corporation, etc., employed the word "corporation" in its broadest sense, including public, municipal, and private corporations; and hence a corporation for municipal purposes may not be created by special laws. Straw v. Harris, 103 Pac. 777, 780, 54 Or. 424.

Under a Code provision giving personal representatives a right to recover for decedent's death caused by the wrongful act, omission, or negligence of any "person, or persons, or corporation," the personal representative of a person injured by a city sewer ditch had a cause of action against the city. City of Anniston v. Iney, 44 South. 48, 49, 151 Ala. 392.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1391, providing that, on the return of an unsatisfied execution on a judgment for necessities, the court shall grant an order for execution against the salary or wages of the judgment debtor, and it shall be the duty of any "person or corporation" to whom the execution shall be presented, and who shall be indebted to the judgment debtor, to pay over to the officer the amount of the debt, does not authorize the institution of the supplementary proceedings therein provided for against a municipal corporation to reach the salary of a police officer. Rosenstock v. City of New York, 91 N. Y. Supp. 737, 739, 101 App. Div. 9; Chapman & Co. v. Same, 91 N. Y. Supp. 1090, 101 App. Div. 607.

Where a city, pursuant to its authority to acquire a waterworks system to supply water to its inhabitants, purchases the property, franchise, and business of a corporation engaged in supplying water to the inhabitants of a municipality, and the city possesses as an incident to its power to supply water to its inhabitants power to furnish water to others, the city is a "corporation duly incorporated" within Const. art. 11, § 19, providing that in any city, where there are no municipal waterworks, any "corporation duly incorporated for such purpose" may lay mains in the streets for supplying water. City of South Pasadena v. Pasadena Land & Water Co., 93 Pac. 490, 496, 152 Cal. 579.

Const. art. 9, § 20, providing that for the taking of private property for the benefit of corporations compensation shall be made irrespective of any benefits from any improvement proposed by such corporation, does not apply to municipal corporations. Bramlett v. City Council of Greenville, 70 S. E. 450, 452, 88 S. C. 110.

The phrase "corporation, association, or individual," in Const. art. 3, § 18, which prescribes that the Legislature shall not pass a private or local bill granting to any "corporation, association, or individual" the right to lay down railroad tracks, does not apply to a municipality, and a county, city, town, or village is not included therein. Laws 1901,

c. 712, authorizing the reconstruction of the Manhattan terminal of the Brooklyn Bridge and conferring power to lay down railroad tracks is not in conflict with the Constitution as such power is conferred on the city. In re City of New York, 91 N. Y. Supp. 987, 989.

"The term 'corporation' includes in its legal, as well as in its popular, sense an incorporated city." Under a statute providing that no member of any "corporation" or public institution or any officer or agent thereof shall be interested in any contract to sell or furnish supplies to any "corporation," municipality, or public institution, of which he shall be a member or officer, etc., the term "corporation" includes any incorporated city. Commonwealth v. Witman, 68 Atl. 986, 987, 217 Pa. 411.

The Manchester & Richmond Free Bridge Company is neither a municipal corporation nor a public institution owned or controlled by the state, which under the express terms of Const. 1902, art. 12, are excluded from the term "corporation," as used in such article; and the general assembly was powerless to pass Act March 5, 1908 (Laws 1908, p. 184, c. 144), being an act amending sections 3, 4, 5, and 9 of Act April 1902, an act incorporating such company and granting certain powers to it and to the Richmond and Manchester city councils for public purposes. Commonwealth v. Manchester & R. Free Bridge Co., 63 S. E. 1083, 109 Va. 499.

The word "corporation," in Rev. Laws, c. 73, § 59, providing that an instrument drawn or indorsed to a person as cashier or other fiscal officer of a corporation is deemed to be payable to the corporation and may be negotiated either by its indorsement or the indorsement of the officer, does not include cities and towns; and hence that section confers no authority on a town treasurer to make the town a party to negotiable paper by indorsement. Franklin Sav. Bank v. Framingham, 98 N. E. 925, 926, 212 Mass. 92.

A county is a "corporation" and subject to be sued as an individual. "Being the mere creature of the law, it possesses only those properties which the character of its charter confers on it expressly or as incidental to its very existence." Covington County v. Kinney, 45 Ala. 176, 187 (quoting Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518, 636, 4 L. Ed. 629).

In Code, § 1026, prohibiting any member of a city council from becoming interested directly or indirectly in any contract for work or service to be performed for the "corporation," the corporation referred to was the city and did not prohibit a member of the council being employed by the city's board of health to attend smallpox patients for whose care the county was liable. Dewitt v. Mills County, 101 N. W. 766, 126 Iowa, 169.

Code Civ. Proc. § 264, provides that no award shall be made on any claim against the state, except upon such legal evidence as would establish liability against an individual or corporation. Canal Law (Consol. Laws, c. 5) § 47 provides that no judgment shall be awarded by the Court of Claims for damages from neglect or conduct of any state officer having charge of canals, or from any accident connected with the canals, unless the facts make out a case which would create a legal liability against the state, were they established in court against an individual or corporation. Held, that the phrase "individual or corporation" includes a town; Town Law (Consol. Laws, c. 62) § 2, defining a "town" as a municipal corporation comprising the inhabitants within its boundaries. O'Bryan v. State, 125 N. Y. Supp. 490, 491, 68 Misc. Rep. 618.

Laws 1909, p. 245, relating to the creation of forest preserve districts, provides, by section 1, that a proposed district must consist of contiguous territory and lie wholly within one county, and that there shall be only one district in any county which must contain within its boundaries one or more cities or villages, and must be petitioned for by 1,000 legal voters within its limits, and empowers the county judge to include part or all the territory described in each petition when two or more petitions are filed, and by section 9 provides for the annexation of territory on petition and vote, but contains no requirement that a forest preserve district shall comprise a forest. Const. art. 4, § 22, prohibits special legislation in enumerated cases, including the grant to any corporation, association, or individual of any special or exclusive privilege, immunity, or franchise, but makes no reference to forest preserves. Held, that the word "corporation," as used in the Constitution, means a private corporation, and not a municipal corporation, and that under such provision the act was invalid. People v. Rinaker, 96 N. E. 897, 899, 252 Ill. 266.

Since a railroad company is a "quasi public corporation," the property of the railroad is private property and cannot be taken for private use, and therefore Act 1905 (24 St. at Large, p. 596), providing that railroad companies shall build side tracks connecting industrial enterprises with their main lines for the delivery and receipt of freight, the cost thereof to be paid by the enterprises and repaid by the companies in annual installments of 20 per cent. of the freight collected, is violative of Const. U. S. Amend. art. 14, and Const. art. 1, §§ 5, 17, as authorizing the taking of private property for private use. Mays v. Seaboard Air Line R., 56 S. E. 30, 34, 75 S. C. 455 (citing Moore v. Columbia & G. R. Co., 16 S. E. 781, 38 S. C. 1).

Partnership

The word "corporations," in Comp. Laws, § 8553, securing to minority stockholders in "corporations" the power of electing a representative in boards of directors and providing for cumulative voting of stock, does not include a partnership association organized under sections 6079-6089, since the Legislature for years has not applied the name "corporation" to such associations but has designated them by the name "partnerships." Attorney General ex rel. Potter v. McVichie, 101 N. W. 552, 553, 138 Mich. 387.

Under the Constitution of Michigan, providing that "the term 'corporations' shall be construed to include all associations and joint-stock companies having any of the powers or privileges of corporations, not possessed by individuals or partnerships," and the Michigan statute, providing for the organization of "limited partnerships," and also for partnership associations in which the capital subscribed is alone responsible for the debt of the association, limited partnership association is not a corporation so as to become a citizen of the state in which it has its domicile for the purposes of federal jurisdiction, independent of the individuals composing it. Fred Macey Co. v. Macey, 135 Fed. 725, 728, 68 C. C. A. 363.

Reclamation district

St. 1905, p. 717, c. 552, creating a reclamation district and fixing its boundaries, creates a governmental agency merely for specific purposes, and does not create a corporation within Const. art. 12, § 1, prohibiting the creating of corporations by special act. Reclamation Dist. No. 70 v. Sherman, 105 Pac. 277, 280, 11 Cal. App. 399.

Road district

A road district is not a corporation. Custer County Bank v. Custer County, 100 N. W. 424, 426, 18 S. D. 274.

The mere fact that a special legislative act authorizing the appointment by a county board of road commissioners for a district in certain cases declares that such commissioners "shall be a body corporate with the powers and duties hereinafter specified" does not render the act invalid under the Ohio Constitution as a special act conferring "corporate powers," where the powers conferred were only those ordinarily conferred on officers charged with the supervision of public improvements. Rees v. Olmsted, 135 Fed. 296, 301, 68 C. C. A. 50.

School corporation

A school corporation or the board of school trustees of a school city is not a "corporation" within Acts 1905, p. 257, c. 129, § 54, authorizing the common council of every city to investigate the affairs of any "corporation" in which the city may be interested or with which it may have entered into a contract or may be about to do so. Agar v. Pagin, 79 N. E. 379, 380, 39 Ind. App. 567.

A parish board of public education is a corporation within Const. 1898, art. 48, prohibiting local or special laws creating corporations, and hence Act No. 260 of 1910, creating a school board for ward 4, including the town of Tallulah, parish of Madison, is violative of such provision. Board of School Directors of Madison Parish v. Coltharp, 54 South. 299, 127 La. 956, 958.

State

Laws 1905, p. 370, c. 175, amending Code Civ. Proc. § 1391, authorizing an execution against wages, and requiring any person or corporation to whom presented to pay over to the officer the amount of the debt, does not authorize execution against the salary of a state officer, since the state is not a person or "corporation." Osterhoudt v. Stade, 117 N. Y. Supp. 809, 810, 133 App. Div. 83.

State board of health

Medical Practice Act, §§ 9, 10, providing for the recovery of a penalty for the use of the state board of health against persons practicing medicine without a license, are not in violation of Const. art. 4, § 22, prohibiting the General Assembly by local or special law from granting to any "corporation," "association," or "individual" any special or exclusive privilege, immunity, or franchise, for, as the state board of health is a branch of the state executive department and its members officers of the state, the board is neither a corporation, association, nor individual within such constitutional provision. People v. Dunn, 99 N. E. 577, 578, 255 Ill. 289.

State hospital

Const. art. 12, § 1, provides that corporations must be formed under general laws, and not by special act when considered in connection with section 4, declaring that the term "corporation," as used in the article, shall include all corporations having any powers or privileges as corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships, etc., and when considered in relation to the entire article, refers to private corporations, and has no relation to corporations like state hospitals for the insane, which are public corporations under the control of the state, and created and acting merely as state agencies for the protection of society and the betterment of the condition of the insane. Napa State Hospital v. Dasso, 96 Pac. 355, 357, 153 Cal. 698, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 643, 15 Ann. Cas. 910.

Town

A town is a "corporation." Street v. Varney Electrical Supply Co., 66 N. E. 895, 896, 160 Ind. 388, 61 L. R. A. 154, 98 Am. St. Rep. 325.

CORPORATION CREDITOR

The holder of preferred stock is a shareholder in the corporation. He is not a "corpuration creditor" and has no rights as such. Grover v. Cavanagh, 82 N. E. 104, 107, 40 Ind. App. 840.

CORPORATION FOR MUNICIPAL PURPOSES

The "Sacramento Drainage District," created by the act of 1905 (St. 1905, p. 443, c. 368), for the reclamation of land in certain counties, is not a "corporation for municipal purposes" within Const. art. 11, § 6, forbidding the creation of such corporations by special laws. People ex rel. Chapman v. Sacramento Drainage Dist., 103 Pac. 207, 212, 155 Cal. 373.

CORPORATORS

A "corporator" is one who is a member of a corporation, one of the stockholders or constituents of the body corporate. Policy holders in a mutual insurance company who were, by its charter, entitled to vote for trustees and to share in its profits were corporators within Rev. St. § 5122, relating to meeting and voting by the corporators in considering bankruptcy proceedings. In re Atlantic Mut. Life Ins. Co., 9 Ben. 272, 2 Fed. Cas. 168, 169.

CORPSE

The dictum of Lord Coke that a "corpse" is "caro data vermicibus" (flesh given to the worms) and is "nullius in bonis" does not authorize the conclusion that those who are entitled to its possession for purposes of decent burial have no rights to and in it which the law recognizes and will protect. *Medical College of Georgia v. CORPUS

Testatrix was a majority stockholder and controlled the corporation for nine years preceding her will and her death. The corporation retained from its earnings a surplus to meet any unusual demand and to provide for improvements and paid a 15 per cent. dividend, shortly after testatrix died, for the preceding six months, leaving a large surplus. Testatrix created five separate, but identical, trusts for the benefit of her grandchildren; the income and profits to be applied to the use of each grandchild in semiannual payments until he should become 30 years old, when the body of the trust was to be transferred to such grandchildren in equal shares. The executors were relieved from liability for depreciation in the value of the stock, and were authorized to sell whenever it seemed necessary. Between testatrix's death and the sale of the business of the corporation, all betterments were paid out of the earnings, and the surplus earnings were paid to the trustees and by them to the beneficiaries as income. Held, that the "corpus" of the trust estate was to be determined by the proportionate value of the plant and materials of the corporation, represented by shares of stock, together with the proportionate amount of working cash capital necessary to carry on its business. The corporation having gone out of business and assets having been sold, the proportional part of the work in cash capital represented by the trust estate should be retained as part of the "corpus" of the estate. In re Stevens, 95 N. Y. Supp. 297, 302, 46 Misc. Rep. 623.

Twenty shares of bank stock, of the par value of $100, had been inventoried by an executor as trustee as of uncertain value. The executor was also a life tenant in part of the estate and disposed of the entire interest in such stock for $3,500; 20 shares at $100 and $1,500 surplus and undivided profits. On an intermediate accounting it appeared that no part of the $1,500 represented a premium on the bank stock nor any increase in its market value, and was not a part of its working capital. Held, that it belonged to the life tenants, and not to the remaindermen, and was properly credited to "income" and not "corpus." In re Stevens, 95 N. Y. Supp. 1084, 1086, 47 Misc. Rep. 560.

CORPUS DELICTI

"Corpus delicti" means the existence of a criminal fact. State v. Nordall, 99 Pac. 960, 964, 38 Mont. 327.

"The 'corpus delicti' is the element of crime." People v. Fallon, 86 Pac. 689, 149 Cal. 287.

"Corpus delicti" means the substance of a crime, and in a murder trial proof of the manner and means by which the crime was committed is not a part of the corpus delicti. State v. Knapp, 71 N. E. 705, 707, 70 Ohio St. 380, 1 Ann. Cas. 819.

The "corpus delicti" means, when applied to any particular offense, the actual commission by some one of the particular offense charged. Green v. State, 122 Pac. 1108, 1110, 7 Okl. Cr. 194.

The "corpus delicti" in a case of arson consists not only in the proof of the burning of the house burned, but of criminal agency in causing the burning. Spears v. State, 46

Proof that a building has been burned is not proof of the "corpus delicti" of arson, but it must be shown that it was burned by the willful act of some person criminally responsible and not as the result of natural or accidental causes. State v. Pienick, 90 Pac. 645, 646, 46 Wash. 523, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 987, 13 Ann. Cas. 800.

In a prosecution for larceny, the "corpus delicti" is that a larceny has been committed. Crockford v. State, 102 N. W. 70, 71, 73 Neb. 1, 119 Am. St. Rep. 876.

"The 'corpus delicti' involves the elements of crime, and, in order to prove it, all the elements of crime must be made to appear before defendant's confessions, admissions, or statements are admissible for any purpose." People v. Grill, 86 Pac. 613, 614, 3 Cal. App. 514.

The "corpus delicti," in the logical sense of the term, signifies the fact of the specific injury or loss, and may also include the element of some one's criminality as the source of the injury or loss. People v. Ranney, 116 N. W. 999, 153 Mich. 293, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 443.

"The 'corpus delicti' is made up, * * *" says Mr. Best, "of two things: First, certain facts forming its basis; and, secondly, the existence of criminal agency as the cause of them." State v. Rogoway, 78 Pac. 987, 989, 45 Or. 601, 2 Ann. Cas. 431 (quoting Best [Ed. 1883] § 442).

In homicide

In felonious homicide, the "corpus delicti" consists of two elements: First, the fact of death as the result; second, facts and circumstances showing the criminal agency of the person charged with the crime, as the means. Edwards v. Territory, 76 Pac. 453, 460, 8 Ariz. 342 (citing Ruloff v. People, 18 N. Y. 192); Hoch v. People, 76 N. E. 356, 363, 219 Ill. 265, 109 Am. St. Rep. 327 (citing Campbell v. People, 42 N. E. 123, 159 Ill. 9, 50 Am. St. Rep. 134); People v. Frank, 83 Pac. 578, 579, 2 Cal. App. 283; State v. Henderson, 85 S. W. 576, 578, 186 Mo. 473; Clay v. State, 86 Pac. 17, 19, 15 Wyo. 42.

When it is shown that a human being has been deprived of life by a criminal agency, proof of the "corpus delicti" has been made. People v. Moran, 77 Pac. 777, 779, 144 Cal. 48.

The "corpus delicti" in homicide consists in the establishment by evidence of the death of a human being by some criminal act or agency of another. Under the statute providing that no person shall be convicted of homicide unless the body of decedent or portions of it are found and sufficiently identified to establish the death of the person charged to have been killed, evidence that decedent disappeared, accused's confession that he killed him, and testimony that witnesses saw accused take from the river a corpse upon which were shoes and trousers similar to those worn by accused failed to prove the "corpus delicti," though it may be proven by the testimony of an accomplice corroborated by the accused's confession and vice versa. Follis v. State, 101 S. W. 242, 244, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 186.

"'Corpus delicti' means exactly what it says. It involves the element of crime. Upon a charge of homicide, producing the dead body does not establish the corpus delicti; it would simply establish the corpus; and proof of the dead body alone, joined with a confession by the defendant of his guilt, would not be sufficient to convict, for there must be some evidence tending to show the commission of a homicide before a defendant's confession would be admissible for any purpose. * * * To be sure the appearance of the dead body, the nature of the wounds, the evidences of a struggle, the physical circumstances surrounding the affair may furnish evidence of the corpus delicti; they may indicate that a crime has been committed; but there must be proof of the fact from some source other than the defendant's admissions." In re Kelly, 83 Pac. 223, 225, 28 Nev. 491 (quoting and adopting People v. Simonsen, 40 Pac. 440, 107 Cal. 346).

To establish the "corpus delicti" in homicide cases, the evidence must show that the life of a human being had been taken, which involves the subordinate inquiry as to the identity of the person alleged to have been killed; and, second, that the death was unlawfully caused by the party accused thereof and by no other person. State v. Barnes, 85 Pac. 998, 1000, 47 Or. 592, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 181.

The "corpus delicti" in murder consists of two elements: First, the death of the person alleged to have been murdered; and second, the criminal agency of some one causing the death. Both elements must be proved. At common law it was necessary to prove the fact of the death by direct or positive evidence, but in this country it is sufficient to prove death, as well as criminal agency, by circumstantial evidence, where that is the best evidence obtainable, and it is sufficient to produce conviction in the minds of the jury beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Barrington, 95 S. W. 235, 264, 198 Mo. 23.

The "corpus delicti" has two components: Death as the result and the criminal agency of another as the means. "The meaning of the phrase 'corpus delicti' has been the subject of much loose judicial comment, and an apparent sanction has often been given to an unjustifiably broad meaning. It is clear that an analysis of every crime, with reference to this element of it, reveals three component parts: First, the occurrence of the specific kind of injury or loss (as, in homicide, a person deceased; in arson, a house burnt; in larceny, property missing); secondly, somebody's criminality as the source of the loss, these two together involving the commission of a crime by somebody; and, thirdly, the accused's identity as the doer of this crime. Now the term 'corpus delicti' seems in its orthodox sense to signify merely the first of these elements, namely, the fact of the specific loss or injury sustained. * * * This, too, is a priori the more natural meaning, for the contrast between the first and the other elements is what is emphasized by the rule." By several judges the term has been said to include the second element also, and it has also sometimes been argued that the corpus delicti includes the third element, the identity of the accused as the criminal. By this view the term "corpus delicti" would be synonymous with the whole of the charge, and the rule would require that the whole be evidenced in all three elements independently of the confession, but, whether considered as containing one or all the elements so specified, the existence of the criminal fact, the corpus delicti, in homicide may be completely established before the question of identity of the slayer or slain is reached. Ausmus v. People, 107 Pac. 204, 209, 47 Colo. 167.

In one law dictionary we find the following: "Corpus Delicti. The body of the offense; the essence of the crime. It is general rule not to convict unless the corpus delicti can be established; that is, unless the fact that the crime has actually been perpetrated has first been proved. Hence, on a charge of homicide, the accused should not be convicted unless the death be first distinctly proved. In case of felonious homicide, the corpus delicti consists of two fundamental and necessary facts: First, the death; and, second, the existence of criminal agency as its cause." In another dictionary we find: "The body of the offense; the substance of the crime; the substantial and fundamental fact of the commission of the crime. The general rule is there can be no conviction for crime unless the fact that the crime has been actually perpetrated has been proved. Thus, one accused of homicide cannot be convicted unless the death be first distinctly proved." In another: "The body of a crime. The body (material substance) upon which a crime has been committed; e. g., the corpse of a murdered man; charred remains of a house burned down. In a derivative sense, the substance or foundation of a crime; the substantial fact that a crime has been committed." Another authority says: "The idea and the rule is that a person shall not be convicted of having killed a person until it is proved that the person is in fact dead. When that is made out, the corpus delicti is made out; that is, the subject-matter of the alleged crime, namely, a person, dead. The meaning of the phrase 'corpus delicti' has been the subject of much loose judicial comment, and an apparent sanction has often been given to an unjustifiably broad meaning. It is clear the analysis of every crime with reference to this element reveals three component parts: First, the occurrence of the specific kind of injury or loss (as, in homicide, a person deceased, in arson, a house burnt; in larceny, property missing); secondly, somebody's criminality as the cause of the loss (these two together involving the commission of a crime by somebody); and, third, the accused's identity as the doer of the crime. (1) Now the term 'corpus delicti' seems, in its orthodox sense to signify merely the first of these elements, namely, the fact of the specific loss or injury sustained. (2) But by several judges the term has been said to include the second element also. This broader form makes the rule (referring to the rule as to the uncorroborated confession) much more difficult for the jury to apply amid a complex mass of evidence and tends to reduce the rule to a juggling formula. (3) A third view indeed too absurd to be argued with, has occasionally been advanced, at least by counsel, namely, that the corpus delicti includes the third element also; i. e., the accused's identity as the criminal." State v. Gebbia, 47 South. 38, 39, 121 La. 1083 (quoting Black's Law Dict.; Abbott's Law Dict.; Bouvier's Law Dict.; 3 Wigmore, Evidence, p. 2782; Pitts v. State, 43 Miss. 472; State v. Potter, 52 Vt. 33-39).

CORRAL

Where a publication entitled "Bucket Shop Sharks" stated that plaintiff was "a tout, sleek enough to have corralled certain bankers," the word "corralled" was synonymous with induced or persuaded and did not imply improper or fraudulent methods. New York Bureau of Information v. Ridgway-Thayer Co., 104 N. Y. Supp. 202, 205, 119 App. Div. 339 (quoting and adopting definition in Cent. Dict.).

CORRECT COPY

See Full, True, and Correct Copy.

Under the Massachusetts Statutes (Acts 1894, c. 522, § 73), requiring every life policy to have attached thereto a "correct" copy of the application, and, unless so attached, that the same shall not be considered as a part of the policy or received in evidence, the copy attached to a policy is not "correct," and the application cannot be admitted in evidence where the copy attached omitted answers to questions which appeared in the original, and which, under certain circumstances, might affect the rights of the parties, though they have no bearing on the questions raised by the pleadings. Albro v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co., 119 Fed. 629, 632.

CORRECT DESCRIPTION

The term "correct description," as used in Mech. Lien Law Ill. § 4, as amended by Act May 31, 1887, requiring a statement for a lien to contain a "correct" description of the property to be charged with the lien, means only such description as identifies the individual object intended to be designated. Where the mechanics' lien statement describes the land as lots 10 and 11 in a certain block, and the true description was lots 10 and 11 and the south 7½ feet of lot 7 in such block, it was a sufficiently correct description as against a subsequent purchaser. Springer v. Kroeschell, 43 N. E. 1084, 1088, 161 Ill. 358.

CORRECTION

See House of Correction.

As used in N. Y. Laws 1888, c. 583, tit. 10, § 9, relative to the duty of assessors to attend examination of assessments and review and make "corrections," the word "corrections," whatever its literal import, did not give the assessors authority to increase an assessment. People ex rel. New York & N. J. Tel. Co. v. Neff, 44 N. Y. Supp. 46, 48, 15 App. Div. 8.

On November 2, 1911, in the Municipal Court, the judge rendered judgment for plaintiff for $75, and plaintiff on November 6th moved to set aside the judgment for insufficiency of the damages, under Municipal Court Act, § 254. On November 24th the court changed the judgment to $150, with a memorandum stating that the original judgment was rendered under the impression that plaintiff had withdrawn the cause of action for breach of contract; but, being convinced that the action was not withdrawn, the judgment would be corrected, and the amount of damages fixed at $150. Held not a "correction" of the judgment, within such section, but an unwarranted rendition of a new judgment. Friedlander v. Lachman, Hirsch & Co., 133 N. Y. Supp. 1097, 1098.

Motion for new trial was overruled in August, and appellant was given until December term to file a bill of exceptions. Bill was tendered at the December term, but the judge failed to dispose of it. No order was made at the December term directing as to the bill of exceptions. At the January term the court entered an order reciting that he had refused to sign the bill of exceptions at the December term for certain reasons named, and that on such refusal he had permitted it to be offered, and extended the time to the January term for defendant to correct the bill or present a bill of exceptions, and on the 10th day of the January term filed a bill of exceptions as a corrected bill, which order the court attempted to make an order of the preceding December term. Held, that it could not be treated as a nunc pro tunc order, as there was no memorandum entered at the December term on which such an order could be based, but that the bill was a mere correction of the original bill within Civ. Code Prac. § 337, subsec. 3, providing that, if a bill of exceptions be not approved, the court should correct it or suggest the correction, and was sufficient under Civ. Code Prac. § 334. Smalling v. Shaw, 139 S. W. 779, 780, 144 Ky. 458.

CORRECTION OF MALPOSITION OF THE JAW

The taking of an impression, the making of false teeth therefrom, and the fitting of such teeth in the mouth constitute a "correction of malposition of the jaws," within the meaning of the statute regulating the practice of dentistry. State v. Newton, 81 Pac. 1002, 1004, 39 Wash. 491.

CORRESPONDING HEIGHT

In a charter authorizing the owners of a dam to raise the water in their pond to a height mentioned and the dam structure to a "corresponding height" does not mean to the same height but to a height of the structure which will raise the water to the prescribed limit. Colwell v. May's Landing Water Power Co., 19 N. J. Eq. 245, 249.

CORRESPONDING THEORETICAL SECTIONS

A contract for the excavation of a bulkhead, the inner line of which was about 9 feet inshore from an established bulkhead line, and the base of which was to be 15 feet below mean low-water mark with allowance to the contractor for whatever he might excavate within an extra foot in each direction, specified that no payment should be made for excavation beyond those limits, "except where known loose rock is shown in the cross-sections above the top grade of the indicated rock, at a line ten feet westerly of and parallel to the bulkhead line, allowance will be made and paid for to a positive line which is forty-five degrees to the horizontal," and specified, as to "typical sections," that they were given as a guide only and to show approximately what the contractor might expect to encounter in the prosecution of the "work," and represented the "typical sections" as information upon (1) "the existing rock bottom which was the top of the loose rock; (2) the corresponding theoretical sections to be obtained, meaning the so-called nine-foot and fifteen-foot lines; and (3) the corresponding limiting lines to which payment will be made when it is impossible to produce the theoretical sections; and that all material was to be measured by comparison of 'accurate cross-sections.' The points at which the 45-degree lines should commence could not be ascertained before the work commenced. Held, that the "corresponding theoretical sections" meant the 10-foot and 16-foot lines; that the "typical" cross-section could not be regarded as the "accurate cross-sections"; that "work" had a double meaning, and, for the purpose of fixing the beginning points of the 45-degree lines, did not begin until the blasting began, when the junctions between the loose rock and the ledge rock became "known," so as to be "indicated" upon the cross-sections made by the city after the work was completed; and that work to such junctions was necessitated and contemplated by the contract. R. G. Packard Co. v. City of New York, 137 N. Y. Supp. 9, 13, 151 App. Div. 941.

CORROBORATE—CORROBORATION

Evidence "corroborative" of the testimony of an accomplice must of itself tend in some degree to connect defendant with the commission of the offense, but it need not be sufficient of itself to establish his guilt. Wright v. State, 84 S. W. 593, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 433.

An accomplice cannot "corroborate" himself by his declarations or statements, and the statement of one accomplice cannot "corroborate" another accomplice. McDaniel v. State, 87 S. W. 1044, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 342.

To "corroborate" means to strengthen and with reference to an accomplice's testimony means to make stronger the probative criminative force thereof. State v. Mungeon, 108 N. W. 552, 554, 20 S. D. 612.

A charge that accused in a murder case could be convicted on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice alone if the jury believed the accomplice's statements to be true and sufficient in proof to establish accused's guilt, but the testimony of an accomplice when not corroborated by some person not implicated in the crime as to matters material to the issue ought to be received with great caution, etc., sufficiently explains the meaning of the word "corroborate." State v. Sassaman, 114 S. W. 590, 601, 214 Mo. 695.

The word "corroborate," in the rule that the confession of accused, establishing the corpus delicti, must be corroborated, refers to facts which concern the corpus delicti, and does not mean merely tending to produce confidence in the truth of the confession. People v. Ranney, 116 N. W. 990, 1000, 153 Mich. 293, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 443.

In the prosecution of a member of a city and county board of supervisors for receiving a bribe for his vote, another supervisor testified that, acting for another, he approached the members of the board as to buying their votes and that he offered accused a certain sum for his vote on a certain proposition, and that accused said it would be all right. Held, that such witness' evidence was not "corroborated," within the rule as to corroborating an accomplice's testimony, by evidence which merely showed how accused voted on such proposition, or that immunity was offered to accused for "any and all crimes" he committed as supervisor without specifying any particular crime, or of the receiving of sufficient money by the alleged briber to enable him to make the bribe without a showing that accused received anything, nor was the fact that after accused was indicted such witness tried to induce the district attorney to abandon the prosecution available to corroborate his evidence. People v. Coffey, 119 Pac. 901, 909, 161 Cal. 433, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 704.

The testimony of a witness that accused admitted the doing of an act similar to that testified to by prosecutrix on a trial for statutory rape is sufficient to corroborate prosecutrix, within Rem. & Bal. Code, § 2443, requiring the testimony of prosecutrix to be supported by other evidence to justify a conviction; and the mere fact that the meaning of the language of the admission is disputed does not render the testimony insufficient; its meaning being for the jury. State v. Workman, 119 Pac. 751, 66 Wash. 292.

The "corroboration" of the testimony of an accomplice sufficient to justify a conviction need not prove the crime independent of the testimony of the accomplice, and the testimony of the accomplice need not be corroborated in every particular, but the "corroboration" must consist of circumstantial evidence or the testimony of some witness other than the accomplice tending to connect accused with the crime charged and to prove some of the material facts testified to by the accomplice. State v. Robinson, 93 N. E. 623, 624, 83 Ohio St. 138, 21 Ann. Cas. 1255.

The word "corroboration" means testimony of some substantial fact or circumstance independent of the statement of the prosecutrix. It may be either direct or circumstantial, but must tend to connect defendant with the crime. State v. Stewart, 100 Pac. 153, 154, 52 Wash. 61, 17 Ann. Cas. 411.

The word "corroboration" is not one of technical meaning but is in ordinary use, and its meaning is generally understood, and the court is not required to instruct the jury what the word means. Austin v. State, 101 S. W. 1162, 1163, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 327.

The corroboration required under Rev. St. 1909, § 5235, of the testimony of the prosecutrix in a seduction case as to the promise of marriage need not be by a witness or witnesses who heard the promise, but may be such conduct of the parties as usually accompanies a contract of marriage, or by statements of the defendant to third parties. State v. Teeter, 144 S. W. 445, 448, 239 Mo. 475.

CORROBORATING EVIDENCE

Under the statute (St. 1893, § 5209 [Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 5497]) providing that "corroborating evidence" is such as tends to connect accused with the commission of the offense charged, the evidence of an accomplice must be corroborated by other evidence tending to connect accused with the commission of the offense. Hill v. Territory, 79 Pac. 757, 759, 15 Okl. 212.

"Corroborating evidence" is such evidence as tends in some degree of its own strength and independently to support some essential allegation or issue raised by the pleadings testified to by the witness whose evidence is sought to be corroborated, which allegations or issue, if unsupported, would be fatal to the case, and such corroborating evidence must of itself, without the aid of any other evidence, exhibit its corroborative character by pointing with reasonable certainty to the allegation or issue it supports. Radcliffe v. Chavez, 110 Pac. 699, 701, 15 N. M. 258.

There must be some substantial evidence corroborating the testimony of an accomplice and tending to connect the accused with the commission of the offense to constitute "corroborating evidence," and where the corroborating evidence is of such a slight, uncertain, and unsatisfactory character as not to warrant a reasonable inference of the guilt of accused, the court should not permit a verdict to stand. Cooper v. Territory, 91 Pac. 1032, 1034, 19 Okl. 496.

"Cumulative evidence," within the rule that courts will grant with great reluctance new trials on the ground of newly discovered evidence which is merely cumulative, is evidence of the same kind as that given to the same point on the trial; but evidence establishing the disputed fact by other circumstances than those shown on the trial is "corroborative evidence," and, when newly discovered, authorizes a new trial. Williams v. State, 54 South. 857, 858, 99 Miss. 274.

A statute, requiring for a conviction for rape that the testimony of the female be "corroborated by such other evidence as tends to convict defendant of the commission of the offense," is satisfied by testimony that defendant advised his wife to induce the prosecuting witness to leave the state, and by his admissions to having often taken liberties with the person of such witness, and to having committed acts which would, though evidently not so understood by him, constitute rape; the admissions, while not expressly referring to the particular act on which the state relied for a conviction, not having in terms excluded that act. State v. Jonas, 92 Pac. 899, 48 Wash. 133.

"Corroborative evidence" is additional evidence, of a different character, to the same point. Under Rev. St. 1887, § 2471, declaring that a divorce cannot be granted on the uncorroborated statement, admission, or testimony of the parties, the statement, admission, or testimony of either of the parties may be admitted in evidence but is not of itself sufficient corroboration of the testimony of the other of the facts introduced, but the statement, admission, or testimony of both of the parties must be corroborated by extrinsic evidence. Bell v. Bell, 96 Pac. 196, 202, 15 Idaho, 7.

Under a statute providing that no divorce can be granted on the uncorroborated testimony of the parties, and defining "corroborative evidence" as additional evidence of a different character on the same point, the plaintiff's testimony as to the contents of certain letters written by him to defendant to induce her to come and live with him is not corroborated by introducing the letters themselves. Kenniston v. Kenniston, 92 Pac. 1037, 1040, 6 Cal. App. 657.

Under St. 1893, § 5209 (Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 5497), providing that a conviction cannot be had on the testimony of an accomplice, unless "he be corroborated by such other evidence as tends to connect the defendant with" the commission of the offense, and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof, the "corroborating evidence" must connect accused with the commission of the offense. Fisher v. Territory, 87 Pac. 301, 302, 17 Okl. 455 (citing Taylor v. Commonwealth [Ky.] 8 S. W. 461; Stone v. State [Ga.] 98 Am. St. Rep. 145).

It is not corroboration within Laws 1907, p. 396, c. 170 § 1, providing that no conviction shall be had for rape on the testimony of the female, unless it is corroborated by such other evidence as tends to convict defendant, to show she was pregnant three or four months after the alleged statutory rape, especially where it is shown she associated with other men before, after, and about the time of the alleged rape. State v. McCool, 102 Pac. 422, 53 Wash. 486, 132 Am. St. Rep. 1089.

CORRUGATED

"Corrugated" is thus defined in the Century Dictionary: "Wrinkled, bent, or drawn into parallel furrows or ridges, as corrugated iron." A patent for a covering constructed of corrugated sheet metal pipe in sections, bolted or otherwise fastened together, is void on its face for lack of patentable invention. Stillwell v. McPherson, 172 Fed. 151, 153.

CORRUGATIONS

"Corrugations" called for in a patent do not necessarily possess the characteristics of regularity or symmetry. Long v. Noye Mfg. Co., 192 Fed. 566, 569.

CORRUPT

A contract of employment as soliciting agent for an insurance company stipulated that the agent should forfeit his rights under the contract in the event he increased the company's liabilities by any "corrupt" or false representation. The failure of the agent to keep within his control notes delivered to him, in payment of premiums, wrongfully increased the liabilities of the company, but the failure resulted from the agent reposing confidence in a third person which confidence had for its basis representations made by an agency manager of the company. Held that, since the word "corrupt" meant a consciously wrongful and fraudulent act, his failure did not operate to forfeit his rights. Armstrong v. National Life Ins. Co. (Tex.) 112 S. W. 327, 331.

CORRUPTION

"Corruption," within Gen. St. 1909, § 2309, providing that if any county commissioner shall corruptly perform any duty, he shall forfeit his office, involves the intention disregard of law from improper motives, and that the payment of excessive or illegal demands against the county may be corrupt, the commissioner must have purposed to violate his official duty, defraud the county by misappropriating its funds, and secure to himself, or to some one else, unlawful gain. State v. Kennedy, 108 Pac. 837, 838, 82 Kan. 373.

Occasional departures by the board of county commissioners from the statute relating to allowance of claims against the county occurring through mere inadvertence, without wrongful intent and under circumstances exposing the county to no imposition or injury, and the payment of claims sufficiently itemized, occurring through a misinterpretation of the statute, does not constitute corruption within Gen. St. 1909, § 2309, providing for the removal of a county commissioner who corruptly performs his duties. Id.

In a proceeding to remove a county commissioner it appeared that, if bridge bills of the county were not properly itemized, it was through mistaken advice of the county attorney, and that because of failure to take note of an amendment of the statute, publication of the allowance of claims at two meetings of the county board in each quarter was delayed; that there was a failure to publish estimates of expenditures upon which tax levies were based, because defendant believed it was the county clerk's duty, and was under the impression that the estimates had been published; that the legal period of advertisement of bids for repairing bridges was shortened because of emergencies, the motive being to protect the property and promote the best interests of the county, though it appeared that all short-time advertisements produced competitive bids, and that the contracts thereunder were for the fair and reasonable value of the work, and that one bridge was rebuilt without advertisement, the work being well done, and the amount paid reasonable and just. Held, that there was no corruption of defendant within Gen. St. 1909, § 2309, making it ground for removal if a county commissioner shall corruptly perform any duty. Id.

CORRUPTION IN OFFICE

A tax collector, though a ministerial or executive officer, and not a judicial or quasi judicial officer, may commit such crimes as amount to "corruption in office," within the meaning of the exception of Rev. St. 1909, § 4945, fixing the limitation for a prosecution "for bribery or for corruption in office" at five years. The expression "corruption in office," as used in such statute, is not merely synonymous with the word "bribery," but includes such offenses as the embezzlement by a public officer of more than $30, in violation of Rev. St. 1909, § 4945. State v. Douglass, 144 S. W. 407, 408, 239 Mo. 674.

CORRUPTLY

The phrase "willfully and corruptly," as used in the statement of the requisites of the offense of perjury that the false testimony must have been given "willfully and corruptly," means knowingly and intentionally. State v. Hunter, 80 S. W. 955, 956, 181 Mo. 316.

Pen. Code, § 7, subd. 6, defines the word "bribe" as anything of value or advantage, etc., given with a corrupt intent to influence "unlawfully" the person to whom it is given in his action, vote, etc., in any public or official capacity. Section 165 punishes one giving a bribe to any member of any board of supervisors with intent to "corruptly" influence such member in his action on any matters, etc. Held, that the use of the word "unlawfully" as qualifying "to influence" in section 7, adds nothing to the meaning of section 165, and hence an indictment for bribery charging an intent to "corruptly" influence, etc., by giving money, etc., was sufficient, though the word "unlawfully" was not used. People v. Glass, 112 Pac. 281, 286, 158 Cal. 650.

According to lexicographers, "corruptly" imports a wrongful design to acquire or cause some pecuniary or other advantage to the person guilty of the act or to some other person. One who addresses a communication to the judges of a court for the purpose of influencing their decision in a case pending therein by disparaging one of the parties or the relator in a suit brought by the state "corruptly" endeavors to influence officers of a court in the discharge of their duties within the meaning of section 6907, Rev. St. State v. Johnson, 83 N. E. 702, 703, 77 Ohio St. 461, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 905.

The word "corruptly," used to designate the nature of acts constituting bribery in an indictment and instructions, is properly defined as meaning "wrongfully"; that is, the doing of an act with intent to obtain an improper advantage inconsistent with official duty and the rights of others. State v. Lehman, 81 S. W. 1118, 1122, 182 Mo. 424, 66 L. R. A. 490, 103 Am. St. Rep. 670.

In an instruction that, if any witness had willfully and corruptly testified falsely to any material thing, the jury might disregard all his testimony, the word "corruptly," if it carried any meaning in addition to "willfully," suggested the idea of the witness having been suborned to testify falsely and should either have been omitted or preceded by "or" instead of "and." State v. Smith, 85 Pac. 1020, 1021, 74 Kan. 383.

The fact that a public officer acts corruptly or is guilty of "corruption" does not import that he has obtained any personal advantage from the act. Burkarth v. Stephens, 94 S. W. 720, 722, 117 Mo. App. 425.

CORUNDUM

"Corundum," as defined by the Century Dictionary, is alumina, or the oxide of the metal aluminum as found native in a crystalline state. "'Corundum' is similar to emery." In fact, it is almost the identical article; "corundum" and emery being used for the same purposes and emery being merely an imperfect grade of "corundum." Ground corundum ore is similar to emery and is dutiable by similitude, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 419, 30 Stat. 191 relating to "emery, emery * * * ground," etc. F. W. Myers & Co. v. United States, 163 Fed. 53, 89 C. C. A. 284.

COST

See Actual Cost; At its own Cost; Original Cost; Shop Cost; Wholesale Cost.

An agreement between two parties, each threatened with suit for infringement of a patent, that they would join in the defense of any suit or suits brought against them for such infringement, "the cost and expense of such defenses to be equally borne by the parties thereto," did not entitle one party, against whom suit was brought and which made an unsuccessful defense, to recover from the other one-half the amount of the costs which were taxed against it in favor of the complainant as a part of the judgment recovered; the word "cost," as used in the agreement, having a different meaning from "costs," and the costs so taxed being no part of the "cost and expense" of the defense. Hygienic Chemical Co. v. Provident Chemical Works, 176 Fed. 525, 528, 100 C. C. A. 121.

In an employers' liability policy providing that the insured will defend against legal proceedings in the name and on behalf of the assured, or settle the same at its own cost, the interest is apparently included on the theory that it is part of the expense of the litigation after rendition of the verdict to the final determination. Even accepting the contention that "cost" applies not only to the word "settle" but also to the word "defend," "cost" does not include taxable costs. "Cost" and "costs" are not synonymous. The defendant did not obligate itself to defend the action and pay the costs. It agreed to defend the action at its cost. Munro v. Maryland Casualty Co., 96 N. Y. Supp. 705, 707, 48 Misc. Rep. 183.

Where there was an agreement to pay the "cost" of doing a job, and it appears from the situation and negotiations of the parties that actual cost was the meaning intended by the word "cost," the person doing the work is limited to the actual cost and is not entitled to any profit. Raisler Heating Co. v. Dowd, 102 N. Y. Supp. 504, 505, 52 Misc. Rep. 656.

Of improvement

A decision that interest to accrue on bonds issued for the cost of an improvement in an improvement district must be included as a part of the cost within Kirby's Dig. § 5683, limiting the cost of a single improvement to 20 per cent. of the assessed value of the real property of the district, is a rule of property and can only be changed by legislation. Bateman v. Board of Com'rs of Imp. Dist. No. 1 of City of Clarendon (Ark.) 143 S. W. 1062, 1063.

Municipal Code 1902, § 53, requiring a corporation to pay the costs of intersections when streets are improved includes all the manholes, catch-basins, and tiling at intersections. Municipal Code 1902, § 53, providing that municipalities shall pay such part of the cost and expenses for which special assessments are levied as the council may deem just, which part shall not be less than one-fiftieth of all such costs and expenses, held, that the item of serving and advertising the improvement is included within the "cost and expenses" of which the corporation is by the provision quoted, to pay not less than one-fiftieth of the whole. Ball v. City of Portsmouth, 92 N. E. 24, 82 Ohio St. 151.

Of inland transportation

Immigration Act March 3, 1903, c. 1012, § 20, 32 Stat. 1218, provides that any alien who shall be found a public charge in the United States from causes existing prior to landing shall be deported at any time within two years after arrival, at the expense, including one-half of the cost of inland transportation to the port of deportation, of the person bringing the alien into the United States. Held, that the term "transportation," as so used, should be given its ordinary meaning, viz., carriage from one place to another, and that the phrase "cost of inland transportation" therefore only included the cost of carrying the alien from the inland place where he was found to the port of deportation, and that the government was therefore not entitled to recover under such section from the steamship company bringing the deported alien into the United States any part of the traveling expenses of an officer sent to bring the alien to the port of deportation. United States v. Hamburg American Line, 159 Fed. 104, 105, 86 C. C. A. 294.

Of paving

The words "cost of paving," as used in a franchise ordinance providing that in case the company or its assigns shall, at any time, lay tracks on any street after it has been paved by special taxation on abutting property, it shall pay to such property owners as have paid such special tax, an amount equal to the cost of paving between the rails of such track, contemplates reimbursement of the property owners and not merely the actual cost of paving the strip in question exclusive of the expense of excavating, grading, and graveling preparatory to laying the pavement. Danville St. Ry. & Light Co. v. Mater, 116 Ill. App. 519, 523.

Of redemption

The expression "cost of redemption," as used in Gen. St. 1901, § 7649, means the amount the land sold for, with interest added, and does not include the fee of the county treasurer for the certificate of assignment nor his fee for a certificate of redemption. Phares v. Cortright, 90 Pac. 784, 76 Kan. 63.

Of road

Section 8 of the supplement to the charter of the Somerville and Easton Railroad Company (Act March 17, 1854), requiring payment of a tax on the "cost of the road," does not require any payment of taxes on the equipment. State Treasurer v. Somerville & E. R. Co., 28 N. J. Law, 21, 22.

Of work

Where a contract for the excavation of a waterway and the elevation of tide lands merely provided that the cost of the work should not exceed 16 cents per cubic yard for each yard of earth placed upon each tract of land, the contractor was entitled, under Rem. & Bal. Code, § 8108, providing for the issuance of certificates by the commissioner of public lands showing the actual cost of the filling of the land, and that the same shall be a lien for the amount specified in such certificate, plus 15 per cent. thereon and with interest, provided that such lien shall not be operative for an amount exceeding the cost of the work as stated in the contract, to the 15 per cent. additional, the word "cost" used in the proviso meaning the entire cost of the work as made up of the cost to the contractor and his fifteen per cent. additional, and not the mere expense of doing the work, which is designated in the contract as cost and as actual cost in the body of the section. Richards v. Bussell, 127 Pac. 198, 205, 70 Wash. 554.

COST PRICE

"Cost price" is a relative term, necessarily depending for its meaning on the situation of the parties and the circumstances under which used. Thus the 'cost price' to the importer is one thing, to the jobber another, to a retailer another, and to the purchaser from the retailer still another. It is said to be what is actually paid or promised to be paid for an article. As applied to a retail stock of goods, it usually has reference to the cost at wholesale." Sylvester v. Ammons, 101 N. W. 782, 785, 128 Iowa, 140.

Costs are the statutory allowance to a party for his expenses in conducting the suit. Forbes v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 129 N. W. 810, 811, 150 Iowa, 177, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 311.

Costs are sums allowed to a successful litigant as compensation for his expenses incurred in the litigation. In re Board of Water Supply of City of New York, 116 N. Y. Supp. 640, 642, 62 Misc. Rep. 324.

"Costs" are those expenses incurred by parties in prosecuting or defending suits or proceedings in law or in equity which are recognized and are allowed by law." Aronson v. Levison, 83 Pac. 154, 155, 148 Cal. 364.

The term "costs," as used in statutes authorizing the prevailing party to recover his costs, means only such costs as have been incurred by such party in substantial conformity to the provisions of pertinent statutes. Lucas v. Brown, 106 S. W. 1089, 1090, 127 Mo. App. 645.

"Costs" are certain sums of money granted by law to the prevailing party by way of indemnity for maintaining an action, or for vindicating a defense. Sommer v. Compton, 100 Pac. 289, 53 Or. 341.

Costs are part of the judgment, as interest is to the principal, and the costs are to be paid by the party cast to the judgment creditor, who has paid them, without reference to any right which the clerk may originally have had, and without being subject to the plea of prescription which may be pleaded against the clerk. State v. New Orleans Debuture Redemption Co., 36 South. 205, 206, 112 La. 1.

Under Gen. St. 1909, § 6071, providing that the defendant owner may redeem any real property sold under execution, special execution, or order of sale at the amount sold for, together with the interest, costs, and taxes, the word "costs" means the costs of redemption, and does not include costs which accrued in an action to foreclose a mortgage. Kueker v. Murphy, 120 Pac. 362, 363, 86 Kan. 332.

Under a city charter relative to tax sales and authorizing the inclusion of "costs to date of sale" and "costs as advertised," and providing for the issuance of a certificate of sale, without referring to any charge for its issuance, a charge for a certificate of sale cannot be regarded as "costs," especially where a notice of tax sale states that the sale will be made to satisfy delinquent taxes, with interest, penalty, and costs, and setting out the gross sum before each description; the sum not including any charge for certificate of sale. Gove v. Tacoma, 76 Pac. 73, 76, 34 Wash. 434.

An absolute pardon will not excuse one convicted of crime from the payment of "costs," for they are neither fines nor forfeitures, and are not imposed by way of punishment, and hence a complete pardon granted one convicted of crime cannot be interposed to defeat a nunc pro tunc order amending the judgment, so as to impose on accused the burden of paying the costs. Villines v. State (Ark.) 151 S. W. 1023, 1025, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 207.

Attorney's fees

Rev. Laws, c. 165, § 44, provides that an attorney may be removed for malpractice, and that the expenses and costs of the proceedings shall be paid as in criminal prosecutions in the superior court. Held, that the words "expenses and costs" of the inquiry included attorney's fees to the attorney conducting the disbarment proceedings. Burrage v. Bristol County, 96 N. E. 719, 720, 210 Mass. 290.

"The expression 'costs, allowances, and compensation' is a familiar term, commonly used to describe the charge of an attorney, both as fixed by statute and also by agreement or by proof upon a quantum meruit." An order of discontinuance, providing it was made without prejudice to any claims of plaintiff's attorney for 'costs, allowance, and compensation' for services in respect to the subject-matter, did not assure nor purport to assure to the plaintiff that he was entitled to costs, or allowance, or compensation. Valentine v. Stevens, 96 N. Y. Supp. 299, 301, 109 App. Div. 284.

In an equitable action under Rev. Codes 1905, § 7179, authorizing allowance of certain items termed "costs" by way of indemnity for expenses, it is error to tax an attorney's fee. Power v. King, 120 N. W. 543, 544, 18 N. D. 600, 138 Am. St. Rep. 784, 21 Ann. Cas. 1108.

Attorneys' fees stipulated for in a promissory note stipulating for 10 per cent. attorneys' fees, if sued on, are not "costs" but are calculable in determining the amount in controversy, and where the principal of the note, with the attorneys' fees, exceeds $200, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action on the note. Parks v. Granger, 51 South. 716, 717, 96 Miss. 503, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 157, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 232.

The "costs" of a suit do not, in the absence of statutory direction, include the counsel fees. Hamilton v. Trundle, 59 Atl. 719, 720, 100 Md. 276 (citing Singer v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 54 Atl. 63, 96 Md. 221).

Attorney's fees cannot be taxed as "costs" under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5604, authorizing taxation of costs in partition suits, including fees of referee and other disbursements. Legg v. Legg, 75 Pac. 130, 132, 34 Wash. 132.

Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 2140, provides that, when an insurance company refuses to pay a loss within 60 days after demand, it shall be liable to the policy holder, in addition to the loss, for not more than 25 per cent. on the company's liability, and also for all reasonable attorney's fees for the prosecution of the case, provided it shall appear that the insurer's refusal to pay the loss was in bad faith. Held, that the amount recoverable for attorney's fees under such section should be regarded as "costs," defined by the state court to include all charges fixed by statute as compensation for services rendered by officers of the court in the progress of the cause; and hence, where a reasonable amount for attorney's fees under such statute was necessary to bring the amount in controversy up to $2,000, the action, though between citizens of different states, was not within the jurisdiction of the federal Circuit Court. Peters v. Queen Ins. Co. of America, 182 Fed. 113, 115.

The word "costs" has a fixed legal significance to wit, sum allowed by statute to be taxed in the action against the losing party. As used in an injunction bond securing costs, it did not bind the bondsman to pay counsel fees of the adversary. Jones v. Rountree, 74 S. E. 1096, 1097, 11 Ga. App. 181.

"The term 'costs' has a well-defined legal meaning and means those expenses incurred by parties in prosecuting or defending a suit, action, or other proceeding at law or in equity, recognized and allowed by law and taxed against the losing party." Counsel fees incurred by a covenantee in defense of the suit for her eviction cannot be recovered in an action for breach of the covenant of warranty. Morgan v. Haley, 58 S. E. 564-566, 107 Va. 331, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 732, 122 Am. St. Rep. 846, 13 Ann. Cas. 204 (citing Click v. Green, 77 Va. 827, 835; Conrad v. Effinger, 12 S. E. 2, 87 Va. 59, 24 Am. St. Rep. 646).

The term "costs," in Comp. Laws, §§ 539, 4806, charging costs in criminal cases against a county, does not include attorneys' fees. Pardee v. Salt Lake County, 118 Pac. 122, 124, 39 Utah, 482, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 877 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 13).

Comp. Laws 1907, § 538, subd. 3, makes the necessary expenses incurred in the support of persons charged with or convicted of crime and committed to the county jail charges against the county. Section 4806 provides that the cost of trial shall be paid by the county wherein the offense was committed, and section 539 provides that costs accruing before removal shall be charged against the county in which the prosecution originated. Held, that the statutes did not raise an implied liability by a county to pay for services of an attorney appointed by the district court to defend an indigent accused, the term "support" used in section 538 not including such charges, and the word "costs" as used in the other sections not including attorney's fees in a criminal case. Pardee v. Salt Lake County, 118 Pac. 122, 124, 39 Utah, 482, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 377 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, pp. 1634-1638).

Costs are awarded by each court in the proceeding before it, and are legal fees allowed by law computable from the record, whereas attorney's fees are extrinsic to the record, not to be found from it, but dependent on facts dehors the record. State ex rel. Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Graham, 69 S. E. 301, 303, 68 W. Va. 1.

A judgment for counsel fees recovered by attorneys for a receiver appointed in a suit by the state to wind up the affairs of a corporation is not an award for "costs," within a Code provision that where the state is a party, and costs are awarded against it, they must be paid out of the state treasury so as to take from the state board of examiners all discretion in the allowance of it as a claim against the state. Sullivan v. Gage, 79 Pac. 537, 540, 145 Cal. 759.

As costs accruing at trial

An order in bastardy proceedings that defendant pay a certain sum for costs and expenses of the confinement is justified by the statute, in which "costs" means, not the costs of the action, but the cost of sustenance during confinement. Sadler v. Jappson, 82 Atl. 316, 317, 82 N. J. Law, 20.

As costs of prosecution

Costs in criminal proceedings are those charges fixed by law which have been necessarily incurred in the prosecution of one charged with a public offense as compensation to the officers for their services. City of Carterville v. Cardwell, 132 S. W. 745, 746, 152 Mo. App. 32.

Costs on appeal and new trial

Where the Appellate Term, in reversing an order of the City Court of the city of New York, in granting a new trial to plaintiff, awarded "costs and disbursements" to defendants, such award had reference to $10 allowed by statute for costs on appeal, and not to the costs allowed by Code Civ. Proc. § 3251, subd. 3, to the prevailing party on a motion for a new trial. Brennan v. Joline, 127 N. Y. Supp. 676, 679, 70 Misc. Rep. 537.

"Costs," within the Code provision authorizing the Supreme Court to allow costs incurred during a will contest, refers only to costs incurred in such court, or by reason of an appeal, and does not authorize the Supreme Court in its discretion to allow costs that the superior court had discretion to disallow. In re Scott's Estate, 83 Pac. 85, 87, 1 Cal. App. 740.

As debt

See Debt.

Disbursements

In analogy to the provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 3256, entitling one to whom costs are awarded to include necessary disbursements, an award of "costs" on appeal from a surrogate's decree included disbursements; a judgment, "with costs," always including disbursements, except on appeals from orders. In re Perry, 115 N. Y. Supp. 744, 745, 131 App. Div. 284.

In general use, the term "costs" embraces both disbursements and specific sums allowed by statute as indemnity to the prevailing party for his expenses. In a narrower sense, the term excludes disbursements. Giving the term its liberal signification, it would embrace only the taxable costs and disbursements. Bond v. United Railroads of San Francisco (Cal.) 128 Pac. 786, 788.

In Rev. St. § 982, which provides that if any attorney in a federal court "appears to have multiplied the proceedings in any cause before such court, so as to increase costs unreasonably and vexatiously, he shall be required by order of the court to satisfy any excess of costs so increased," the word "costs" includes expenses and taxable disbursements. Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Yankee Film Co., 192 Fed. 134, 135.

Expenses

Mills' Ann. St. § 4805, authorizing an allowance to executors or administrators in addition to compensation based on a per cent. on the amount of the estate for "costs and charges" in collecting and defending claims of the estate and disposing of the same, to be allowed and paid as other expenses of administration, covers cases where the administrator or executor makes advances from his own funds for expenses referred to, or where he makes himself individually liable therefor, and does not include claims for services that may be rendered to the estate on employment by the administrator purely in his official capacity, and which he has not personally secured or discharged; the words "costs and charges" in their natural and ordinary purport only embracing witness fees, court costs, and such other expenses as must generally be advanced promptly from time to time as they accrue. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. People, 98 Pac. 828, 832, 44 Colo. 557.

The word "costs," as used in Highway Law, § 92, Laws 1890, p. 1195, c. 568, providing that, in all cases of assessment of damages by commissioners appointed by the court, the costs thereof shall be paid by the town, has a well-defined significance, and is not used as synonymous with "expense," but must be taken to mean costs which are recoverable under the statute requiring the amount to be paid by the unsuccessful party to the successful party. In re Peterson, 87 N. Y. Supp. 1014, 1015, 94 App. Div. 143.

Allowances for necessary expense of a receiver constitute costs incurred in the administration of the trust, chargeable against the property in the hands of the receiver as provided by Rev. St. 1899, § 3101. In re Bank of Newcastle, 89 Pac. 1035, 1036, 15 Wyo. 501.

"Costs" are defined as expenses which are incurred either at law or in equity, consisting of fees of attorneys, solicitors, or other officers of court, and such disbursements are allowed by law. And hence a bond which uses the word "costs" rather than the word "expenses," as used in the statute in pursuance of which the bond is given, is sufficient. Chambers v. Cline, 55 S. E. 999, 1002, 60 W. Va. 588 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1634).

The term "costs" refers to and includes only those fees and charges the amounts of which are fixed and regulated by statute. The term "expenses," as used in a statute providing that, if actual loss to a party in an action is caused by contempt, the court, in addition to fine or imprisonment, may order payment to the party aggrieved of a sum sufficient to indemnify him and to satisfy his "costs and expenses," is intended to include something more than the costs and disbursements allowed by statute to the prevailing party in ordinary civil actions and may include such reasonable attorney's fees as the relator may have paid or obligated himself to pay counsel in order to obtain the benefit of the order which the defendant has violated. Davidson v. Munsey, 80 Pac. 743, 745, 29 Utah, 181.

In Rev. St. § 982, which provides that if any attorney in a federal court "appears to have multiplied the proceedings in any cause before such court, so as to increase costs unreasonably and vexatiously, he shall be required by order of the court to satisfy any excess of costs so increased," the word "costs" includes expenses and taxable disbursements. The continuation of a pending suit for infringement of a patent, and the taking of testimony therein by complainant after it has filed a petition for a reissue on the ground of the invalidity of the patent in suit, constitutes a "multiplication of proceedings," so as to unreasonably and vexatiously increase the costs, within the meaning of Rev. St. § 982, and on a dismissal of the suit after the granting of a reissue defendant is entitled thereunder to a special allowance commensurate with the expense occasioned thereby. Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Yankee Film Co., 192 Fed. 134.

Under a city charter relative to tax sales, and authorizing the inclusion of costs to date of sale and costs as advertised, and providing for the issuance of a certificate of sale without referring to any charge for its issuance, a charge for a certificate of sale cannot be regarded as costs, especially where a notice of tax sale states that the sale will be made to satisfy delinquent taxes, with interest, penalty, and costs, and setting out the gross sum before each description; the sum net including any charge for certificate of sale. Gove v. Tacoma, 76 Pac. 73, 76, 34 Wash. 434.

Fees distinguished

The terms "fees" and "costs" are often used interchangeably as having the same application; but accurately speaking the term "fees" is applicable to the items chargeable between an officer and a person whom he serves, while the term "costs" has reference to the expenses of litigation as between litigants. Bohart v. Anderson, 103 Pac. 742, 744, 24 Okl. 82, 20 Ann. Cas. 142.

Loc. Acts 1901, p. 671, No. 468, § 37, provides that all moneys paid to the justice of the city of Sault Ste. Marie, except jury, officer, and witness fees, and fines and costs recovered for violation of laws, shall be for the use of the city, and shall be paid weekly to the city treasurer; also that expenses of prosecutions for violation of penal laws of the state shall be paid by the county. Held, that the justice was not entitled to retain the fees authorized by the general laws of the state to be collected in criminal cases by justices of the peace; they not being "costs," nor "expenses," within the statute, in view of section 38, providing that the justice shall receive an annual salary of $1,500 in full compensation for all services performed by him. Harrison v. Board of Sup'rs of Chipewa County, 114 N. W. 851, 852, 151 Mich. 91.

"Costs" are the expenses incurred by the parties in the prosecution or defense of a suit, whereas "fees" are compensation to an officer for services rendered in the progress of the cause. In re Terry, 123 N. Y. Supp. 258, 260, 67 Misc. Rep. 514.

As between a party to a suit and the officer or witness, the charges allowed are usually denominated fees, but, as between the parties to the suit, these charges are usually called costs; and the word "cost," when used in relation to the expenses of legal proceedings, means a sum prescribed by law as charges for the services enumerated in the fee bill. City of Carterville v. Cardwell, 182 S. W. 745, 746, 152 Mo. App. 82.

Guardian's fees

The compensation of a guardian ad litem of an infant defendant appointed on the application of plaintiff suing to quiet title is in the nature of "costs" and is an incident to the action and forms no part of the cause of action or defense thereto, and the part of the judgment for plaintiff which requires him to pay $200 to the guardian ad litem requires him to pay "costs" taxable against him. Aronson v. Levison, 83 Pac. 154, 155, 148 Cal. 364.

Jurors' fees and mileage

The provision that the whole "costs" so taxed shall be adjudged against and paid by the corporation, found in Rev. St. § 6451, which directs how costs shall be taxed and paid in appropriation cases, requires that the fees and mileage of jurors shall be so taxed and paid. Detroit Southern R. Co. v. Commissioners of Lawrence County, 73 N. E. 510, 511, 71 Ohio St. 454.

As liability

See Liability.

As included in practice

See Practice (In Law).

Receiver's costs

Where a complainant procures the appointment of a receiver and then dismisses his bill, the court must, under Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, c. 33, § 18, providing that on complainant dismissing his bill the defendant shall recover full costs, tax the compensation of the receiver, including his solicitor's fees, against complainant as costs. Burrows v. Merrifield, 90 N. E. 750, 751, 243 Ill. 362.

As taxable costs

The term "costs and disbursements" has a settled and technical meaning, and signifies the statutory costs and the disbursements taxable in favor of the prevailing party in a civil action. Brown v. Fletcher, 97 N. W. 416, 417, 91 Minn. 41.

The word "costs," within Rev. St. § 974, providing for taxation of costs against a defendant on judgment against him for a fine or forfeiture, means taxable costs of the trial, within section 983 (page 706), which provides how bills of costs shall be taxed, excluding fees of trial jurors, fees and mileage of persons not examined as witnesses, and fees for service of subpoenas upon persons who did not testify, unless in the latter cases the adverse party is in default. United States v. Wilson, 193 Fed. 1007.

The "costs" the court may award under Code Civ. Proc. § 3230, as amended in 1900 (Laws 1900, p. 402, c. 181), authorizing the court in its discretion to award costs not "exceeding the total amount authorized by statute," are the regular taxable costs allowed in ordinary actions and the extra allowance not exceeding $2,000 as authorized by sections 3253, 3254. Senter v. Petheram, 118 N. Y. Supp. 347, 348, 64 Misc. Rep. 294.

The word "costs," as used in Rev. St. 1898, § 3181, authorizing plaintiff to dismiss an action on the payment of costs; in section 3190, providing that, on the dismissal of an action within the jurisdiction of the court, judgment for costs must be rendered; and in section 3605, declaring that in condemnation suits costs may be allowed, etc., in the discretion of the court—includes only the costs that are taxable under the statute in an action or proceedings. McCreedy v. Rio Grande Western Ry. Co., 83 Pac. 331, 332, 30 Utah, 1, 8 Ann. Cas. 732.

Under Code, §§ 3662, 3671, authorizing a continuance at the cost of the party applying therefor, unless otherwise ordered, the costs which may be imposed, are only taxable costs, and attorney's fees and expenses of travel of a party, save on a subpoena, may not be included. Keller v. Harrison, 131 N. W. 53, 54, 151 Iowa, 320, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 300.

Witnesses' and officers' fees

"Costs" are the fees allowed officers of courts for their services in a judicial proceeding. Wellmaker v. Terrell, 60 S. E. 464, 467, 3 Ga. App. 791 (citing Davis v. State, 33 Ga. 531, 533; Markham v. Ross, 73 Ga. 105).

"Costs," in the sense the word is generally used in Ohio, may be defined as being the statutory fees to which officers, witnesses, jurors, and others are entitled for their services in an action or prosecution, and which the statutes authorize to be taxed and included in the judgment or sentence. The word does not have a fixed legal signification. The compensation of expert witnesses for their services in a criminal prosecution is not costs that the statutes authorize to be paid out of the state treasury. State ex rel. Franklin County Com'rs v. Guilbert, 83 N. E. 80, 81, 77 Ohio St. 333.

Clerk's fees and fees for mileage and attendance of expert witnesses, included in the judgment, constituted costs; and where the amount in controversy, exclusive thereof, was less than $100, the judgment was not appealable to the Supreme Court. Jenkins v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 111 Pac. 463, 83 Kan. 807.

COSTS AND EXPENSES

In the title to Act June 23, 1911 (P. L. 1123), establishing in each county a board of viewers, the phrase "costs and expenses" properly includes daily compensation to members of the boards of viewers. In re Reber's Petition, 84 Atl. 587, 590, 235 Pa. 622.

"Costs and expenses," as used in the contract of insurance involved in this case, is the amount paid counsel and witnesses, and court costs, and all costs, including the taxable costs recovered by the plaintiff in such suit. Coast Lumber Co. v. Etna Life Ins. Co., 125 Pac. 185, 187, 22 Idaho, 264.

COSTS AS OF COURSE

Where a defendant who obtained judgment in his favor appeared in the action by the attorney represented by the codefendant, and united in the answer with him, and he was not personally put to any expense in the defense of the action resulting in a judgment for plaintiff against the codefendant, defendant was not entitled to costs as of course within Code Civ. Proc. §§ 3228-3230. Kelly v. St. Michael's Roman Catholic Church in City of Brooklyn, 133 N. Y. Supp. 328, 336, 148 App. Div. 767.

COSTS IN ALL COURTS

A judgment for plaintiff was reversed by the Appellate Division, and defendants then moved at Special Term for judgment on the pleadings. This motion was denied, but was granted on defendants' appeal to the Appellate Division. Judgment of dismissal was thereupon entered and was affirmed by the Appellate Division, but was reversed by the Court of Appeals, and a new trial ordered "with costs to the appellant (plaintiff) in all courts," and defendants' motion to amend the remittitur was denied. Held, that the phrase quoted meant the costs in every court to which he was compelled to resort to uphold his complaint, including the costs of the first trial and the appeal from the judgment rendered thereon, as well as the costs of the subsequent application to the Special Term, and the appeals to the Appellate Division and the Court of Appeals. Jones v. Gould, 128 N. Y. Supp. 280, 282, 143 App. Div. 244.

A decision of the Court of Appeals on appeal from the Appellate Division reversing a judgment dismissing the complaint on the second trial of the action on the ground that the case presented a question for the jury, and ordering a new trial, rendered pursuant to a stipulation for judgment absolute in case of affirmance, which affirms the order of the Appellate Division, and which directs judgment against defendant on the stipulation "with costs in all courts," awards to plaintiff the costs of the first trial, resulting in a directed verdict in his favor, reversed on exceptions by the Appellate Division, granting a new trial, with costs to defendant to abide the event. Merkel v. Lazard, 124 N. Y. Supp. 140, 141, 189 App. Div. 624.

COSTS OF ADMINISTRATION

Whether fees claimed by the attorney for the bankrupt are allowable depends upon whether the services rendered were for "cost of administration"; that is, whether as rendered they conduced to the benefit of the estate and its prompt administration. In re Duran Mercantile Co., 199 Fed. 961, 964.

Allowances for compensation constituted costs incurred in the administration of the trust, chargeable against the property in the hands of the receiver, as provided by Rev. St. 1899, § 3101. In re Bank of Newcastle, 89 Pac. 1035, 1036, 15 Wyo. 501.

Expenditures made by a receiver and trustee of a bankrupt's estate for the sole benefit of general creditors, in carrying out contracts of the bankrupt which were thought to be profitable, are not "costs of administration," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, §§ 62, 64, 30 Stat. 562, 563, requiring such costs to be paid out of the estate in which they are incurred as preferred claims. In re Bourlier Cornice & Roofing Co., 133 Fed. 958, 963.

An involuntary bankrupt is not entitled to an allowance for counsel fees and disbursements expended on a contested application to confirm a composition, such expenditures not being a part of the "costs of administration," nor for services rendered to the bankrupt while performing duties prescribed by the act, within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64(b)3, 30 Stat. 563. In re Fogarty, 187 Fed. 773, 774, 109 C. C. A. 621.

COSTS OF APPEAL

Fees paid to the clerk of the Circuit Court for a citation, writ of error, and for certifying the transcript are none the less "costs of the appeal," and taxable as such, because taxable in the Circuit Court after determination of the appeal. Berthold v. Burton, 169 Fed. 495.

COSTS OF PROCEEDINGS

"Costs of proceedings" include the proceedings in court in the case, and not the fee or salary of the court, unless the law so direct." The plaintiff in an expropriation proceeding is not taxable, in the absence of special statute, with the cost of the per diem and mileage of the jurors serving in the case. Opelousas, Gulf & N. E. Ry. Co. v. St. Landry Cotton Oil Co., 46 South. 810, 813, 121 La. 796.

COSTS OF SUIT

Where a claimant of property in the hands of a bankrupt's trustee filed a reclamation petition which was subsequently dismissed as fraudulent and unsustainable, the trustee was entitled to an allowance against the petitioner as part of the costs, though it is doubtful if such expense falls within the usual meaning of the term "costs of suit." In re Schocket, 177 Fed. 583.

COSTS TO ABIDE EVENT

Where, on appeal from an order dismissing a writ of certiorari to review proceedings before the police commissioner of New York City, resulting in the dismissal of relator from the police force, the order of dismissal was reversed, and a new trial granted relator, "with costs to abide the event," the event referred to was the final event of the writ of certiorari, evidenced by some order of the court; the police commissioner having no power to award costs. People ex rel. Shiels v. Greene, 99 N. Y. Supp. 679, 680, 114 App. Div. 168 (citing Snyder v. Collins [N. Y.] 12 Hun, 388).

Where the Supreme Court reversed a judgment, with "costs to abide the event," default by plaintiffs and dismissal of their complaint was the "event," and entitled defendant to costs. Goldstein v. Godfrey Co., 126 N. Y. Supp. 620, 621, 70 Misc. Rep. 225.

COSURETY

One who signed as surety a note signed by two other persons, without knowledge of the fact that one of the signers was a surety, could not be held a "cosurety" with such signer. Citizens' Nat. Bank of Durham v. Burch, 59 S. E. 71, 72, 145 N. C. 316.

The Dramshop Act, § 5, provides that no person shall be licensed as a dramshop keeper unless he shall give bond conditional that he will pay to all persons all damages that they may sustain, either in person or property or means of support by the licensee selling or giving away intoxicating liquor. Section 9 provides that every husband, wife or child who shall be injured in person or property or means of support in consequence of the intoxication of any person shall have a right of action in his or her own name severally or jointly against any person who, by selling or giving away liquors, shall have caused the intoxication, and that any person owning, renting, leasing, or permitting the occupation of any building, and having knowledge that liquors are to be sold therein, shall be liable severally or jointly with the person selling or giving intoxicating liquors for all damages. Held, that the owner of premises leased to a dramshop keeper, who is sued for injuries, under section 9, jointly with the keeper, and against whom a joint judgment is recovered, is not thereby made a surety of the keeper, and cannot therefore be a "cosurety" with the sureties on the keeper's bond required by section 5, so as to entitle a surety on the keeper's bond, on payment of judgment, to contribution from such owner. Wanack v. Michels, 74 N. E. 84-87, 215 Ill. 87.

COTEMPORANEOUS

The term "cotemporaneous" does not always of necessity refer to any single or ultimate fact, however important to any precise or definite time, for a transaction may, and not infrequently does, include a series of occurrences extending over a great length of time, and a relevant fact in any one of them, and, until the close of the matter, may come within the term "cotemporaneous" and constitute a part of the res gestæ. Fraley v. Fraley, 64 S. E. 381, 383, 150 N. C. 501 (citing Greenl. Ev. § 108; Tayl. Ev. 391 [1]; Brander, Ev. 325; Knox County v. Ninth Nat. Bank, 13 Sup. Ct. 287, 147 U. S. 91, 37 L. Ed. 93; Ahern v. Goodspeed, 72 N. Y. 108).

COTENANT

"Cotenants" are not partners; neither does the relation of principal and agent exist between them, except upon an express agreement or one necessarily implied. Wright v. Kayner, 113 N. W. 779, 782, 150 Mich. 7.

COTTON

See Bale of Cotton; Booking Cotton; Dog Tail Cotton; Grabbot Cotton; Gun Cotton; Lint Cotton; Seed Cotton.

Baling cotton as manufacture, see Manufacture.

Embroidery cotton, see Embroidery.

Manufactures of, see Manufactures—Manufactured Articles.

"Cotton" is susceptible to many meanings. It ranges in grade and quality from long staple, which brings a premium frequently many cents above the average, to dog tail, which is a poor grade and of little value. A person sold two plantations for $100,000, to be paid for in 10 equal payments; but, instead of the consideration being paid in cash, it was agreed that the purchasers should pay it in cotton, to be delivered at certain dates. Held that, there being no ambiguity in the terms or meaning of the contract, parol evidence was inadmissible to show that the parties intended that the cotton in which payment for the land was to be made was cotton grown on the land sold under the contract. Soudan Planting Co. v. Stevenson, 102 S. W. 1114, 1116, 83 Ark. 163.

Acts 1896, p. 172, c. 156, § 16, imposes a tax on all "lint cotton" annually grown in a levee district, etc., and Acts 1904, p. 126, c. 90, § 5, makes it unlawful for any person to remove from the district any "cotton" grown therein without first paying the levee tax thereon and declares that the levee board may recover from the person wrongfully removing such cotton a certain penalty tax on each bale or hundredweight of "seed cotton" so removed. Held, that the words "lint cotton" in the first act and "cotton" and "seed cotton" in the second act were limited to "lint cotton" ginned by ordinary gins, and did not include "linter" or "Grabbot" cotton, obtained by reginning cotton seed and hard locks of cotton and cotton mixed with hulls, bolls, and other substances which could not be removed by ordinary ginning. Mississippi Levee Com'rs v. Refuge Cotton Oil Co., 44 South. 828, 829, 91 Miss. 480.

"Labels of cotton and silk," cotton the chief component, are not to be excluded from the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule I, par. 320, 30 Stat. 179, for labels "composed of cotton," because not composed wholly of cotton. United States v. Herzog, 145 Fed. 622, 76 C. C. A. 373.

COTTON CLOTH

A fabric containing 37 per cent of jute is not within the definition of "cotton cloth," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule I, par. 310, 30 Stat. 178, as including "all woven fabrics of cotton." Lord & Taylor v. United States, 178 Fed. 270, 101 C. C. A. 575; Id., 172 Fed. 282.

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule I, par. 310, 30 Stat. 178, the definition of "cotton cloth" as being "all woven fabrics of cotton" refers to goods composed entirely of cotton, or containing at most but a small percentage of some other fiber; and cloth which, though composed chiefly of cotton, yet contains a large minority of jute, is not within the definition. Lord & Taylor v. United States, 172 Fed. 282.

"Cotton cloth," as used in paragraph 310 of the Tariff Act of 1897 (Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 178, c. 11), which provides that the expression "cotton cloth" shall be held "to include all woven fabrics of cotton in the piece or otherwise," includes cotton portieres and table covers woven with a border and selvedge and cut to the size and form of the article as intended for sale and use but needing to be trimmed and fringed before they can be used. Stern v. United States, 123 Fed. 192.

To come within the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule I, par. 305, for all "cotton cloth" not exceeding 100 threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, it is not necessary that the goods should be uniform or homogeneous throughout, and the provision includes open-work fabrics containing nowhere more than 100 threads to the square inch, and of which substantial portions have no warp and other substantial portions no filling. Quaintance v. United States, 147 Fed. 753, 754.

Held, that the definition of cotton cloth in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule I, par. 310, 30 Stat. 178, as being "all woven fabrics of cotton in the piece or otherwise," includes cotton blankets with whipped or hemmed edges and in a finished condition. United States v. Bernhard, 150 Fed. 375, 376.

COTTON GIN

Where defendant subscribed for the stock of a corporation, to be formed for the purpose of operating "a cotton seed oil mill," and the charter of the corporation authorized it, not only to maintain and operate such mill, but to erect, own, and operate whatever cotton gins might be necessary and proper as feeders for the oil mill, the variance between the charter and the subscription contract was such as to release defendant, from her subscription; the terms "cotton seed oil mill" and "cotton gin" importing different and distinct enterprises. Comanche Cotton Oil Co. v. Browne (Tex.) 90 S. W. 528, 529.

COTTON LACES

The provision for "cotton laces" in Tariff Act March 3, 1883, c. 121, § 1, Schedule I, 22 Stat. 506, would, in its ordinary significance, no contrary trade understanding being proved, include not only laces dealt in by the yard but made-up articles which are produced originally as lace only in the process of making the completed article. Mills v. Robertson, 147 Fed. 634, 635.

COTTON NETTING

Cotton net, cut into narrow strips or small pieces, and known to the trade as "cotton net," "cotton net cut," "hat tips," "hat crowns," or "hat sides," are dutiable as "cotton netting" under Tariff Act 1894, par. 276, fixing an ad valorem duty of 50 per cent. on such netting, and not as manufactures of cotton dutiable, under paragraph 264, at 35 per cent. Tilge v. United States, 115 Fed. 254, 255.

COTTON SEED OIL MILL

See Cotton Gin.

COTTON SILVER

"Ramie silver" is dutiable as "cotton silver" by similitude, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule I, par. 302. Within the meaning of the similitude clause of such statute, "ramie silver" resembles "cotton silver" (1) in material, because it is a vegetable fiber; (2) in quality, because it has reached the same degree of purity, or freedom from objectionable substances; (3) in texture, because the fibers are in the same form; and (4) in use, because, like "cotton silver," it is spun into yarn and thread, so as to be manufactured into fabrics. F. B. Vandegrift & Co. v. United States, 173 Fed. 609, 610, 97 C. C. A. 469.

COTTON TABLE DAMASK

The term "cotton table damask," as used in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule I, par. 321, is the trade-name for cotton damask in the piece, or cotton damask cloth, and does not include completed articles made out of such material and advanced by manufacture beyond the condition of mere cloth. Cotton damask doilies, napkins, and table covers or cloths, in a completed condition, ready for use, are dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule I, par. 322, 30 Stat. 179, as "manufactures of cotton not specially provided for," and not under paragraph 321 of said act (page 1661), as "cotton table damask." Douglass & Berry v. United States, 123 Fed. 993.

The expression "cotton table damask," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule I, par. 321, 30 Stat. 180, was not used by Congress according to any trade meaning it might have, but according to its denominative, or common, popular sense, which includes completed articles as well as goods in the piece from which such articles are made. James H. Dunham & Co. v. United States, 150 Fed. 562, 563, 80 C. C. A. 364.

Articles of cotton table damask, woven in the piece, are included within the expression "cotton table damask" in paragraph 321, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule I, 30 Stat. 179, and are dutiable under that paragraph rather than under the provisions of Schedule I, for "cotton cloth" because it is more specific than such provisions. Wilson v. United States, 146 Fed. 64, 65, 76 C. C. A. 515.

COTTON WASTE

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 537, for "cotton waste," includes a mixture of cotton waste and jute threads in about equal proportions, which is commercially known as "cotton waste." Wood v. United States, 160 Fed. 990, 991.

COTTON YARN

Artificial horsehair, not being a yarn, cannot be classified as "cotton yarn" by similitude, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule I, par. 302, 30 Stat. 175, but is dutiable under section 6, 30 Stat. 205, as an unenumerated manufactured article. Eckstein v. United States, 160 Fed. 287, 288.

COUGHING BLOOD

See Spitting or Coughing Blood.

COULD

A charge requiring a master to know the condition of a defective step on a railroad locomotive, if it "could have known its condition by the exercise of ordinary care," was not objectionable as imposing a higher degree of care than was imposed by law by using the word "could" instead of "would." Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Stevens (Tex.) 94 S. W. 395, 397.

"The word 'might,' as defined by Webster, denotes not alone possibility but also ability and capability. 'Could' denotes ability and capability." Hence instructions, which used "might" and "could" interchangeably, held not erroneous as allowing the jury to enter the realm of conjecture. Nelson v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 88 Pac. 785, 786, 35 Mont. 223.

A warning given by an officer to one in his custody, which was in the usual form, with the exception of the use of the word "might" instead of "would or could," the officer telling the one in custody that any statement he might make "might" be used against him, was sufficient. Garrett v. State, 91 S. W. 577, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 235.

COUNCIL

See City Council; Village Council; Whole Council.

The "council" is the governing body of the municipality. City of Bowling Green v. Gaines, 96 S. W. 852, 853, 123 Ky. 562.

"The 'council' is the legislative body of the city." Commonwealth v. Williams, 94 S. W. 553, 555, 120 Ky. 314.

Rev. St. Ohio, §§ 4364—20a, 4364—20b, providing for an election in any municipal corporation, to determine whether or not the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be prohibited, applied to hamlets, since, by statutes then in force, hamlets were municipal corporations; and, though the statute uses the term "council" as the governing body and the term "mayor" as the executive, yet in hamlets there were trustees who stood to the hamlet as the council stands to the village or city, and the president of the board of trustees stood to the hamlet as the mayor stands to the village or city. The statute being a police regulation enacted in the interests of good order in municipalities, and should receive a reasonable construction, and no reason exists for such a regulation in a village which would not equally apply to a hamlet, and the terms of the statute, except in the particulars named, are broad and clearly include all municipalities. Carey v. State, 70 N. E. 955, 956, 70 Ohio St. 121.

Where the word "council," used in an ordinance, obviously refers to the governing board of the city, it will be construed to mean the board of mayor and aldermen, where the charter provides for such board, and does not mention the word "council." Oooke v. Loper, 44 South. 78, 151 Ala. 546.

In the Austin city charter, providing that the city council shall consist of a mayor and board of aldermen, and that a majority of the members of the "whole council" shall be necessary to pass any ordinance in any wise increasing or diminishing the city revenues, the term "council" is used synonymously with the "board of aldermen," and the "whole council" referred to means the whole board of aldermen, as distinct from a quorum thereof, so that one of the aldermen having died prior to the passage of a tax levy ordinance passed by the vote of seven, such ordinance should be considered as having received a majority of the whole board or council. Nalle v. City of Austin, 93 S. W. 141, 145, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 423.

The word "council," in Rev. St. 1898, § 214, providing that the mayor, by and with the advice and consent of the council, may appoint all such officers or agents as may be provided for by law or ordinance, etc., was used in the same sense as in section 215, providing that an appointive officer may be removed by the mayor, with a concurrence of a majority of the members of the city council, and it was intended that the concurrence of the same number of the councilmen necessary in a removal by the mayor is also necessary to both a removal by the council and an appointment by the mayor. State ex rel. Breedon v. Sheets, 72 Pac. 334, 335, 26 Utah, 105.

COUNCILMEN

As civil officer, see Civil Officer.

As officer, see Officer.

Under section 4, c. 147, p. 356, Acts of Leg. 1901, providing that the municipal authorities shall consist of a mayor, recorder, and six "councilmen," two of which councilmen shall be elected in and for each of the wards of said city, who together shall form the common council, the recorder should not be included in the term "councilmen." Riggs v. Carroll, 66 S. E. 633, 635, 68 W. Va. 499.

COUNSEL

See Chief Counsel; Of Counsel; Right to be Heard by Counsel.

The meaning of "counsel," as used in the oath of a grand juror, is not confined alone to the advice which the prosecuting attorney may give to the grand jury. It has a broader significance in this connection and comprehends the plan, the purpose, of the government, as represented by its officer. In re Atwell, 140 Fed. 368, 373.

As an attorney

While "counsel" authorized to appear for a defendant in a municipal court means a person duly admitted to practice as an attorney, yet, where the real "counsel" for defendant sent a person not so admitted to appear for his client, he could not thereafter avail himself of the imposture and claim that there had been no appearance. Kerr v. Walter, 93 N. Y. Supp. 311, 312, 104 App. Div. 45.

The word "counsel," as used in Const. art. 1, § 10, providing that an accused has the right of being heard by himself or counsel, or both, has a well-established meaning, and as there used it means an advocate, counselor, or pleader, one who assists his client with advice, and pleads for him in open court; and it does not mean one not admitted to practice law. Harkins v. Murphy & Bolanz, 112 S. W. 136, 138, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 568.

COUNSEL FEE

As debt, see Debt.

See, also, Attorney's Fees.

The term "counsel fee" describes the compensation of a lawyer. If a lawyer is called on to perform the duties of an assignee of an insolvent, and the deed under which he acts promises to recompense him by a counsel fee, the employment becomes professional, and he would have a right to claim such a measure of compensation as would be paid a lawyer for like occupation of his time and attention. Nichols v. McEwen, 17 N. Y. 22, 26.

COUNSEL FOR COMMONWEALTH

Under the Constitution, providing for commonwealth's attorneys and for county attorneys, and Ky. St. § 127, making the county attorney the assistant of the commonwealth's attorney in felony prosecutions, and Cr. Code Prac. § 227, authorizing the "counsel for the commonwealth" to conclude the argument to the jury, counsel employed by relatives of decedent to assist the county attorney conducting the trial for murder may make the closing argument for the commonwealth; the quoted words meaning any counsel appearing in the case for the commonwealth. Catron v. Commonwealth, 130 S. W. 951, 952, 140 Ky. 61.

COUNSEL OF RECORD

Affidavits of prejudice to disqualify a judge, certified to have been made in good faith by nonresident counsel who had never been admitted as attorneys of the court and who had never been recognized as counselors at law in any proceeding had in the court, were not certified by "counsel of record," as required by Judicial Code, § 21 (Act March 3, 1911, c. 231, 36 Stat. 1090). Ex parte N. K. Fairbank Co., 194 Fed. 978, 985.

COUNSELOR

Attorney at law distinguished, see Attorney at Law.

Attorney synonymous, see Attorney at Law.

COUNT

See Common Counts; Recount.

That accused as an election officer made marks on a tally sheet as another officer called off the votes warranted a finding that accused "counted" and "canvassed" the votes; it being unnecessary that he handle each ballot. Commonwealth v. Edgarton, 86 N. E. 768, 771, 200 Mass. 318.

A "count" in a civil procedure in common law is sometimes synonymous with the "declaration," its original signification; but it is now generally considered as a part of a declaration wherein the plaintiff sets forth a distinct cause of action. Ryan v. Riddle, 82 S. W. 1117, 1118, 109 Mo. App. 115.

"All of the Codes require that the different causes of action should be separately stated; in other words, each must be set forth in a separate and distinct division of the complaint or petition in such a manner that each of these divisions might, if taken alone, be the substance of an independent action. In fact, the whole proceeding is the combining of several actions into one. At common law these separate divisions of the declaration were termed 'counts,' and that word is still used by text-writers and judges, although, with one or two exceptions, it is not authorized by the Codes; and it tends to produce confusion and misapprehension, since the common-law 'count' was substantially a very different thing from the 'cause of action' of the new procedure." First Nat. Bank v. D. S. B. Johnson Land Mortg. Co., 97 N. W. 748, 749, 17 S. D. 522 (quoting Pom. Rem. & Rem. § 442).

COUNTER

COUNTER WILLS

Wills by two parties each in favor of the other are sometimes called "counter" or "reciprocal" wills. Deseuneur v. Rondel, 74 Atl. 703, 705, 76 N. J. Eq. 394 (citing Duval v. Duval, 35 Atl. 750, 54 N. J. Eq. 581, 588; Id. 39 Atl. 687, 40 Atl. 440, 56 N. J. Eq. 375).

COUNTERCLAIM

See Matter of Counterclaim.

See, also, Recoupment; Set-Off.

A "counterclaim" is "a cause of action in favor of a defendant against a plaintiff, or against him and another, which arises out of the contract or transaction stated in the petition as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, or which is connected with the subject of the action." Where plaintiff sued to have the affairs of certain corporations placed in the hands of a receiver, and part of the assets consisted of claims against plaintiff and other stockholders to enforce a statutory double liability, a pleading filed by such defendant corporations to enforce plaintiff's double liability constituted a counterclaim. Gamewell Fire Alarm Tel. Co. v. Fire & Police Tel. Co., 76 S. W. 862, 867, 116 Ky. 750 (quoting definition in Civ. Code Prac. § 96).

A "counterclaim" is an independent action, and every allegation necessary to constitute such an action is necessary to constitute a good counterclaim. The right to set up a counterclaim is not concluded by the judgment but may be brought against its enforcement. A person sued by the state may interpose a counterclaim, though he could not have set up such matter as an original cause of action, for the reason that a citizen cannot sue the state without its consent. A failure to set up matter in counterclaim before the second trial of a cause does not conclude the right of the party to do so. Commonwealth v. Barker, 103 S. W. 303, 305, 126 Ky. 200 (citing Emmerson's Adm'r v. Herriford, 8 Bush [71 Ky.] 229; Chinn v. Mitchell, 2 Metc. [59 Ky.] 92; Ross v. Ross, 3 Metc. [60 Ky.] 274; Moss v. Rowland's Ex'r, 1 Duv. [62 Ky.] 322).

"A 'counterclaim' is a new and independent cause injected into the action by a defendant, and, under the well-settled rule that the verdict must respond to the issues presented by the pleadings, a verdict which fails to dispose of the counterclaim when properly attacked should be set aside as not responsive to the issues. * * * But the rule is not to be construed as requiring the verdict in all cases to contain mention of the counterclaim." Nowell v. Mode, 111 S. W. 641, 644, 132 Mo. App. 232 (citing and adopting Winkelman v. Maddox, 95 S. W. 308, 119 Mo. App. loc. cit. 661; Marshall v. Armstrong, 79 S. W. 1161, 105 Mo. App. 234; Henderson v. Davis, 74 Mo. App. 1).

"A 'counterclaim' must be a claim either arising out of the contract or transaction sued upon or connected with the subject-matter of the action, or, in actions upon contract, it may be some other contract. It must consist in a set-off, or a claim by way of recoupment, or be in some way connected with the subject of the action stated in the complaint." "The 'counterclaim' is founded upon a cause of action which the defendant may, at his option, prosecute independently. This is the general rule, but in some states that right is qualified." There are three classes of counterclaim, viz.: "First, a demand existing in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiff, which arises out of the contract upon which the plaintiff has based his action; second, a demand so existing which arises out of the transaction (a broader term than 'contract') upon which the plaintiff has based his action; and, third, a demand so existing which need not necessarily arise out of either the contract or transaction involved in the action, but it is sufficient if it is connected with the subject of the action." Where plaintiff, on purchase of a half interest in land, allowed defendant, who owned the other half interest, to continue to collect the rents for benefit of both, in an action for plaintiff's share of the rents collected, a claim by defendant for damages because plaintiff had driven off the tenants, and thereby deprived defendant of rents that would otherwise have accrued, was sufficiently connected with the subject of the action to be a proper counterclaim. Dale v. Hall, 41 S. W. 761, 64 Ark. 223 (citing Bliss, Code Pl. § 307).

A counterclaim must state facts showing a cause of action in favor of the defendant, and against the plaintiff, and, where a number are set up in the same pleading, while it is not necessary to repeat in each all of the facts necessary to make it complete, such facts must be contained in the pleading and be intelligibly referred to. Groton Bridge & Mfg. Co. v. American Bridge Co., 151 Fed. 871, 879.

A counterclaim, when established, must in some way qualify or defeat the judgment to which a plaintiff is otherwise entitled. In a foreclosure suit a defendant who is personally liable for the debt, or whose land is bound by the lien, may probably introduce an offset to reduce or extinguish the claim. But where his personal liability is not in question, and where he disclaims all interest in the mortgaged premises he cannot demand a judgment against the plaintiff on a note, bond, or covenant. Meyer v. Quiggle, 74 Pac. 40, 41, 140 Cal. 495 (citing National Fire Ins. Co. v. McKay, 21 N. Y. 191).

The word "counterclaim" is not synonymous with "discount." "Discount" is any deduction, while "counterclaim" is ordinarily used to signify some claim against the debt. An affidavit to a claim against a decedent, averring that there is "no legal offset or counterclaim" against the demand, does not comply with Ky. St. 1903, § 3870, requiring demands to be verified by an affidavit stating that there is no "offset or discount" against the same. Spradlin v. Stanley's Adm'r, 99 S. W. 965, 966, 124 Ky. 701.

When an action is upon contract, unless the "counterclaim" arises out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim or be connected with the subject of the action, it must be a legal or equitable cause of action against the plaintiff arising upon contract and existing at the commencement of the action. Every cause of action existing in favor of defendant against the plaintiff arising upon contract cannot be the subject of the "counterclaim." It must be a cause of action upon which something is due to the defendant which cannot be applied in diminution of plaintiff's claim. A cause of action arising out of a contract independent of the contract sued on by plaintiff and seeking independent relief is not a proper counterclaim under Mills' Ann. Code, § 57, subd. 2, providing that a "counterclaim" in an action arising upon a contract may be upon any other cause of action arising also upon contract, since it does not diminish or defeat plaintiff's claim and is not antagonistic to it. Bannerot v. McClure, 90 Pac. 70, 73, 89

Colo. 472, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 126 (quoting and adopting definition in Waddell v. Darling, 51 N. Y. 327, 390).

Where, in a suit between heirs for the partition of land, two acres of the tract described in the petition were improperly included, as they had been conveyed by the ancestor in his lifetime, the petition may be amended to omit them, although their owner had filed an answer requesting the court to quiet his title, since the purpose of the amendment was not to withdraw the two acres from the partition, but to show that they were included unintentionally, and therefore defendant's answer was not a counterclaim arising out of the transaction set forth in the petition, within Revisal 1908, § 481, so that he could prevent the amendment and force the settlement of the question of the title to the two acres. Webster v. Williams, 69 S. E. 233, 234, 153 N. C. 309.

In an action by an executrix to compel the execution of a mortgage to secure the deferred payment of the purchase price of land, a minor heir to a part of the estate distinct from the land sold was not interested in the result, and the court had no jurisdiction to quiet title against him on defendant's cross-bill; cross-bills being abolished in equity actions by L. O. L. § 390, and such relief against the minor not being a counterclaim against the plaintiff within the meaning of L. O. L. § 401, authorizing counterclaims. Howe v. Kern, 125 Pac. 834, 837, 63 Or. 487.

Allegations of the answer and purported counterclaim that the note sued on was given for the price of a horse purchased from the original payee, and that the latter made fraudulent representations as to the horse, to defendants' damage, did not constitute a "counterclaim" as against plaintiff, the assignee of the note, whatever it might be as against the original payee, within Civ. Code Prac. § 372, giving defendant a right to a trial on a counterclaim after dismissal by plaintiff. Howard v. Jones, 143 S. W. 1058, 1059, 147 Ky. 303.

Where a "counterclaim" under the Code grows out of or is connected with the transaction on which plaintiff sues, defendant may recover any balance plaintiff owes him over and above plaintiff's claim. State v. Arkansas Brick & Mfg. Co., 135 S. W. 843, 844, 98 Ark. 125, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 376.

An answer, in a suit to confirm a tax title, which alleges that the sale was void because the purchaser at the tax sale was the clerk who made the sale and executed the deed, is not a "counterclaim" or "set-off" within Kirby's Dig. § 6108, and a reply is unnecessary to require defendant to prove the allegations thereof. Senter v. Greer (Ark.) 142 S. W. 178.

A claim existing in favor of a defendant and against a plaintiff, between whom a several judgment might be had in the action and arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the petition as the foundation of plaintiff's claim and connected with the subject of the action, falls directly under the provision of Code, § 101, relating to "counterclaims." Ross P. Curtice Co. v. Kent, 131 N. W. 944, 945, 89 Neb. 496.

Statutory definitions

Civ. Code Prac. Ky. § 96, defines a "counterclaim" to be a cause of action in favor of a defendant against a plaintiff, or against him and another, which arises out of the contract or transaction stated in the petition as the foundation of plaintiff's claim, or which is connected with the subject of the action. Where plaintiff and defendant entered into a written contract by which defendant was to purchase for plaintiff a large amount of tobacco, and later plaintiff engaged defendant to sell a consignment of tobacco for him, and plaintiff brought action to recover the proceeds of the sale, and counterclaimed for his commission on tobacco bargained for by him under the contract, which plaintiff refused to accept from defendant, and afterwards purchased directly from the owner, held that the claim for commission did not arise out of the contract or transaction stated in the petition, nor was it connected with the subject of the action so as to be a counterclaim. Allen v. Hodge (Ky.) 106 S. W. 255, 256.

A contractor for a government work in Ohio canceled the contract of subcontractors for an alleged breach, and took possession of the tools and materials of the subcontractors on the premises under a provision of the contract, and used the same in completing the work. The subcontractors, who were citizens of another state, having brought an action in replevin for such tools and materials in a federal court, the defendant therein filed a "counterclaim" for damages growing out of the breach of contract by the plaintiffs. Held, that such claim for damages was one "arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the petition, as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action," in such sense as to make it a proper counterclaim under Rev. St. Ohio 1906, § 5089, defining "counterclaim" as a cause of action existing in favor of a defendant and against a plaintiff or another defendant, or both, between whom a several judgment might be had in the action, and arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the petition as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action, and therefore that the court had authority under section 5089 to order it docketed as a separate action and had jurisdiction over the subject-matter and the persons of the defendants therein. Baer v. Sleichner, 153 Fed. 129, 131, 82 C. C. A. 281.

"A 'counterclaim' is that which might have arisen out of or could have some connection with the original transaction, in view of the parties, and which, at the time the contract was made, they could have intended might, in some event, give one party a claim against the other for compliance or noncompliance with its provisions." The statutory definition is that "a counterclaim is any matter arising out of or connected with the cause of action," etc. Rev. St. 1894, § 353 (Rev. St. 1881, § 350). Again it is referred to in the statute as "a counterclaim arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the ground of the plaintiff's claims." Rev. St. 1894, § 354 (Rev. St. 1881, § 351). "Under these statutory definitions it is very clear, as it seems to us, that any matter which is pleaded as a counterclaim must either rise out of or be connected with the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the ground of the plaintiff's claims." Where affirmative pleas of set-off and counterclaim do not state a cause of action, they will not be upheld on appeal because the demurrer on which they were held bad was informal. Slander cannot be the subject of counterclaim in an action on a note for money loaned. Blue v. Capitol Nat. Bank, 43 N. E. 655, 658, 145 Ind. App. 518 (quoting and adopting definition in Standley v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 95 Ind. 254; Miller v. Roberts, 5 N. E. 707, 106 Ind. 63).

Kirby's Dig. § 6099, declares that a counterclaim must be a cause of action in favor of defendants, or some of them, against the plaintiffs, or some of them, arising out of the contract sued on, or connected with the subject of the action. Section 6869 provides that in replevin, to recover mortgaged property, the owner may prove payments or set-offs against the debt. Held that, where defendant bought two pool tables under separate contracts, and was in default in his payments for both, damages sustained by a breach of warranty of fitness as to one of the tables only was available as a counterclaim in replevin by the seller only as against the debt secured by mortgage on the defective table. B. A. Stevens Co. v. Whalen, 129 S. W. 1081, 1083, 95 Ark. 488.

"In defining a 'counterclaim' the Code provides that it 'is in any matter arising out of or connected with the cause of action,' and, if a strict construction were adopted, the office of a counterclaim would be very much restricted, for the defendant would be confined to such matters as were connected with or grew out of the statement of the facts pleaded as constituting the grounds of the plaintiff's right to recover. A liberal construction has, however, been given to the Code, and the counterclaim is good, if it alleges matters connected with the subject of the original action. Our cases do, indeed, go further, for they hold that a counterclaim may be maintained where it reaches the object of the action. * * * We do not say that the doctrine is expressed in direct terms, but it is the result and gives fair and beneficial effect to the spirit of the Code and is in accordance with the views of two of the leading authors on Code Pleading." Excelsior Clay Works v. De Camp, 80 N. E. 981, 984, 40 Ind. App. 26 (quoting from the opinion of Stanley v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 95 Ind. 254, 264).

The loss of profits by a seller as a result of the failure of the buyer to take the property as required by the contract of sale is a proper "counterclaim" in an action against the seller for the value of merchandise which constituted the consideration for the sale, under Civ. Code Prac. § 96, defining counterclaims. Bowman v. Jones-Hughes Coal Co., 145 S. W. 373, 375, 147 Ky. 672.

Code Civ. Proc. § 501, defines a counterclaim as a claim tending to diminish or defeat plaintiff's recovery in favor of defendant or defendants between whom and plaintiff a separate judgment may be had in the action and which must be in an action which arises out of the contract or transaction set out in the complaint or connected with it. In an action by plaintiff individually as executor of his deceased father, and as devisee under the will of his deceased mother of one-half the shares of a corporation of which his father had been president, claiming that his mother was the beneficial owner of such shares, and that such ownership carried with it a half interest in bank notes and securities of his deceased father as a part of the assets of the company, and asking for a dissolution of the company, a determination of the ownership of its shares, an accounting and distribution of its assets, and an account by the respective executors of his deceased father and mother. Defendants pleaded as a counterclaim a cause of action for an accounting by the executors of plaintiff's deceased mother, a cause of action for an accounting by the plaintiff as executor of his father for moneys belonging to the plaintiff's sisters and intrusted to the father for investment and a representative action on behalf of the corporation organized, after the death of plaintiff's mother, to compel plaintiff, as president, to account to it for certain alleged wrongful acts. Held, that the first cause of action pleaded as a counterclaim was not a proper counterclaim, since it was for the same relief as that sought by the plaintiff. Fliess v. Hoy, 135 N. Y. Supp. 44, 46, 150 App. Div. 555.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 57, providing that a "counterclaim" may consist of a cause of action arising out of the transaction pleaded in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim or connected with the subject of the action, in an action for conversion of goods, the possession of which was acquired by defendant in an attachment suit against plaintiff, which suit defendant dismissed, defendant may not plead a counterclaim based on the debt on which the attachment suit was brought. Goldberger v. Leibowitz, 93 Pac. 1108, 1109, 42 Colo. 99.

Where the complaint alleged that the grantor of defendant held the premises sued for as security for a debt, that the conveyance to defendant was void, and prayed for judgment declaring the conveyance to defendant void and that plaintiff be adjudged the owner of the premises, an affirmative answer, alleging that defendant had been the owner in fee simple of the premises since the conveyance, and had been in the actual, open, and notorious possession thereof, that the value of the property had been paid by him to his grantor, that he had no knowledge or information of any claim of plaintiff, and that the land was purchased in good faith, sufficiently showed an adverse claim so as to constitute a counterclaim within Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. §§ 4912, 4913, defining a "counterclaim" as a cause of action arising out of the transaction sued on, etc. Gray v. Granger, 93 Pac. 912, 913, 48 Wash. 442.

Rev. Codes, § 6540, permits an answer to state matter constituting counterclaim. Section 6541 defines "counterclaim" as a cause of action arising out of the contract sued on or connected with the subject of the action, and section 6547 provides that omission to set up the counterclaim bars an action thereon. Held, that for the bar to operate it must appear affirmatively from the pleadings that the cause falls within the class mentioned in section 6541. Kaufman v. Cooper, 101 Pac. 969, 972, 39 Mont. 146.

In an action for partition sale, an answer setting up a mortgage lien constituted a "counterclaim," within Civ. Code Prac. § 97, subsec. 2, which provides that no summons is required on a counterclaim. Louisville Title Co. v. Darnell's Committee, 148 S. W. 369, 372, 149 Ky. 312.

Plaintiff and defendant, tenants in common of land occupied by plaintiff under a lease from defendant, providing that plaintiff should keep up the improvements and surrender the premises at the end of the term, partitioned the land; defendant by a collateral contract agreeing to pay plaintiff $280 as the estimated difference in value of their shares, and it being stipulated in the partition that the division should not affect the lease contract. Held, in an action for the $280, that defendant could not "counterclaim" for damages because of plaintiff's leaving the premises out of repair; Kirby's Dig. § 6099, requiring a counterclaim to be a cause of action either arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint or connected with the subject of the action. Mitchell v. Moore, 112 S. W. 216, 217, 87 Ark. 166.

Code Civ. Proc. § 101, defines a counterclaim as one arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the petition as the foundation of plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action. In an action to recover a sum subscribed by defendant to aid plaintiff in holding a street fair in a city, defendant answered, and alleged that he paid to plaintiff a certain sum for the privilege of operating his usual place of business in the city, and for the purpose of feet frontage, which plaintiff unlawfully forced him to pay, under threats of prosecution; that, when defendant paid said amount to plaintiff, plaintiff expressly agreed that no further saloons or other places for the sale of intoxicating liquors, other than those established, would be allowed to do business in such neighborhood; that the midway of said street fair was situated near the place of business of defendant, which fact was held out as an inducement for him to pay said amount to the plaintiff, as plaintiff then told him no intoxicating liquors would be sold therein; that plaintiff breached his agreement, thereby damaging defendant in a specified sum; for which amount he asked judgment. The contract or transaction set forth in the answer was wholly different from that set forth in the petition, and was in no way connected therewith, and hence not a counterclaim. Mullins v. South Omaha Street Fair Ass'n, 99 N. W. 521, 522, 5 Neb. (Unof.) 572.

An equitable lien based on an agreement to give one possession of a horse as security for money advanced is a good "counterclaim" in replevin for the horse, though replevin sounds in tort, and such a counterclaim is connected with the cause of action within the meaning of Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 353, defining a "counterclaim" as "any matter arising out of or connected with the cause of action which might be the subject of an action in favor of the defendant or which would tend to reduce the plaintiff's claim or demand for damages." In discussing the meaning of the statute, the court says: "The cause of action, as it appears from the complaint, when properly pleaded, will be the facts from which the plaintiff's primary right and the court's corresponding primary duty have arisen together with the facts which constitute defendant's delict or act of wrong." Reardon v. Higgins, 79 N. E. 208, 210, 39 Ind. App. 363 (quoting with approval Pom. Rem. & Rem. Rights, § 453).

Revisal 1905, § 481, provides that a "counterclaim" must be one existing in favor of a defendant and against a plaintiff between whom a several judgment might be had in the action arising (1) out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action, or (2) in an action arising on contract, any other cause of action arising also on contract and existing at the commencement of the action. Held that, subject to the limitations in such section, a counterclaim includes nearly every kind of cross-demand existing in favor of defendant and against plaintiff in the same right, whether legal or equitable. R. L. Smith & Co. v. French, 53 S. E. 435, 437, 141 N. C. 1.

An answer by one of three defendants in an action on the case for trespass and a conspiracy to carry out the same and prosecute plaintiff, which alleges title in the answering defendant to the locus in quo, does not constitute a "counterclaim," as the claim pleaded is not within Rev. St. 1898, § 2656, subd. 1, providing that a counterclaim must arise out of the transaction set forth as the foundation of plaintiff's claim or be connected with the subject of the action. Stolze v. Torrison, 95 N. W. 114, 115, 118 Wis. 315.

As cross-action

A "counterclaim" must be a complete cause of action existing in favor of the defendant asserting it, and must be set forth with the same particularity as is required in a complaint for a like cause. Pease Oil Co. v. Monroe County Oil Co., 138 N. Y. Supp. 177, 179, 78 Misc. Rep. 285.

It is held that a "counterclaim or plea in reconvention" is in effect a suit against the plaintiff, and that where the amount of a counterclaim or plea in reconvention exceeds the jurisdiction of the court in which the suit is pending the court is without jurisdiction to hear or determine the same. Dixon v. Watson, 115 S. W. 100, 102, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 412.

A "counterclaim" is in the nature, and has all the characteristics, of a separate and independent action. In a suit in which defendant set up a counterclaim and went to expense in taking depositions, the trial court in its discretion could refuse to permit a discontinuance, where plaintiff's attorneys refused to agree to accept service upon summons and complaint in a new action if defendant decided to bring an action on the cause set up in the counterclaim, and where defendant would be prejudiced by a discontinuance. Inman v. Hodges, 61 S. E. 958, 960, 80 S. C. 455.

Cross-bill in equity included

A "counterclaim," which was unknown at common law, and is defined by Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 355, as any matter arising out of or connected with the cause of action which might be the subject of a cause of action for defendant, embraces both the chancery cross-bill and the common-law recoupment, and must arise out of or be connected with plaintiff's cause of action, but a counterclaim is not an answer in its ordinary meaning as a statement of a defense to plaintiff's cause of action. Duffy v. England, 96 N. E. 704, 707, 176 Ind. 575.

It has been the rule from an early date that the "counterclaim" contemplated by the Code "must be something which reads or modifies the plaintiff's claim. It is in the nature of a cross-bill in equity. * * * To be available to a party it must afford to him protection in some way against plaintiff's demand for judgment." White v. Smith, 114 N. W. 106, 107, 133 Wis. 641.

Defense distinguished

Rev. St. Utah, 1969, defines a "counterclaim" as one existing in favor of a defendant and against a plaintiff between whom a several judgment might be had in the action, and constituting a cause of action arising out of the transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action. In an action on a written contract, the answer, after denying the allegations of the complaint, alleged that a mutual mistake had been made in the contract and prayed to have it corrected, to which no reply was filed. Held, that the answer constituted a "counterclaim," not merely matter alleged in defense, and under Rev. St. § 2981, providing that, if the plaintiff fails to reply to the counterclaim, the same shall be deemed admitted, was to be taken as true. Dunham v. Travis (Utah) 69 Pac. 468, 470.

Failure of the payees of a note, on being sued thereon by their indorsee and on the maker's bankruptcy, to assert misrepresentations by the indorsee as to maker's solvency, which induced the payees to take the note, precludes subsequent suit by the payees to recover, on that ground, the amount they paid on judgment against them; the matter being defensive and not available as a "counterclaim," within Civ. Code Prac. § 17, permitting independent suit on matter which might have been used as a counterclaim. Jefferson, Noyes, & Brown v. Western Nat. Bank, 138 S. W. 308, 310, 144 Ky. 62.

Plaintiffs contracted to cut the timber on defendants' land within two years for a certain price per thousand, part payable on receipt of bill of lading and invoice, and the balance when the cars were unloaded. A year later plaintiffs sued for the amount agreed on for a shipment of two cars. Defendants answered that plaintiffs had wholly failed to perform whereby they were indebted to defendants in a specified sum (liquidated damages stipulated in the contract), less a credit for the two cars shipped. Held, that the answer did not state a defense, a "defense" going to defeat the right of action, plaintiffs not being bound by the contract to complete performance before being entitled to any payments thereunder, and the time for performance having still some time to run, but only stated a "counterclaim," which is a demand in favor of defendant against the plaintiff, and one which he might have prosecuted, though the plaintiff had brought no action. Kilgore Lumber Co. v. Thomas, 128 S. W. 62, 64, 95 Ark. 43.

A "counterclaim" presupposes affirmative relief, and, while it may be a full defense to the action, it is not so necessarily. A "counterclaim" may also contain facts sufficient to constitute a defense to a cause of action and yet not be sufficient to warrant affirmative relief. Therefore the rule is that such substantive facts must be averred as will show a liability on the part of the plaintiff to the defendant disclosing a complete right of action in his favor against the plaintiff growing out of the subject-matter alleged in the complaint. Where, in an action to cancel a note and mortgage on real estate on the ground of an alleged breach of warranty in the deed of the land from defendant to complainant, a paragraph of defendant's pleading sought a reformation of the deed and mortgage and a foreclosure of the latter, it was to be treated as a "counterclaim," notwithstanding that it was designated by defendant as an "answer by way of counterclaim." Johnson v. Sherwood, 73 N. E. 180, 186, 34 Ind. App. 490.

Where plaintiff agreed to sell all its lumber to a foreign corporation and brought suit against the corporation for the price of lumber sold, an answer, alleging that plaintiff had not delivered all the lumber manufactured by it but had wrongfully disposed of a large part of it, was a defense operating to defeat plaintiff's recovery, and therefore not a "counterclaim" or "cross-complaint," within St. § 3656, declaring that the statutory counterclaim embraced both recoupment and set-off, must be applied in the sense in which it is employed in the statute, namely, a cross-demand of the defendant against the award in which the plaintiff is entitled upon the cause of action alleged by him, and the term "counterclaim" must be used, as referring to a cause of action of the defendant constituting a defense for affirmative relief, and not as a defense which goes only to defeat plaintiff's cause of action. Rib Falls Lumber Co. v. Leah & Mathews Lumber Co., 129 N. W. 595, 597, 144 Wis. 362.

The word "defenses," as used in the rule that statutes of limitation effect remedies, not defenses, is limited to matters purely of defense, and does not embrace matters which may be used as the basis of a "counterclaim" or a cross-petition. Louisville Banking Co. v. Buchanan, 80 S. W. 193, 194, 117 Ky. 975, 4 Ann. Cas. 929.

Denial

"Facts pleaded, which controvert the plaintiff's claim and serve to defeat it as a cause of action, are inconsistent with the legal idea of a 'counterclaim,' which is a separate and distinct cause of action, balancing in whole or in part that asserted by the plaintiff. It meets the latter, not by a denial of it, or an attack upon its existence, but by opposing to it an equal or balancing demand on the part of the defendant." In an action on a second fire insurance policy, issued by defendant on the same property, the answer alleged that such policy was intended as a renewal of the first policy which had been paid; and that the risk of a second insurance for $1,000, for which the action was brought was never in fact taken or assumed by defendant. Held, that such answer did not constitute a counterclaim which would be taken as true in the absence of a denial. Walker v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 38 N. E. 106, 107, 143 N. Y. 167 (citing Prouty v. Eaton [N. Y.] 41 Barb. 409).

Recoupment and set-off

The "counterclaim" authorized by L. O. L. § 74, is an enlargement of the scope of set-off and recoupment. Krausse v. Greenfield, 123 Pac. 392, 394, 61 Or. 502.

Subject to the limitation expressed in Revisal 1906, § 481, a "counterclaim" includes well-nigh every kind of cross-demand existing in favor of defendant against plaintiff in the same right, whether said demand be of a legal or equitable nature. It is said to be broader in meaning than "set-off," "recoupment," or "cross-action," and includes them all and secures to defendant the full relief which a separate action at law or a bill in chancery or a cross-bill would have secured to him on the same state of facts. R. L. Smith & Co. v. French, 53 S. E. 435, 437, 141 N. C. 1 (citing Green, Code Plead. & Prac. § 815).

The word "counterclaim," as used in Court Rules, div. 5, § 3 (26 Atl. viii), which provides that the withdrawal of an action after a cross-complaint or counterclaim has been filed therein shall not impair defendant's right to prosecute such counterclaim as fully as if the action had not been withdrawn, includes defenses pleaded by way of set-off, and defendant is entitled to a trial thereof notwithstanding plaintiff's withdrawal of his cause of action. Boothe v. Armstrong, 57 Atl. 173, 174, 76 Conn. 530.

"Counterclaim," employed in section 55, chapter 50, Code 1906, by proper construction includes recoupment when such counterclaim arises out of the same contract sued on by plaintiff; and if defendant having such counterclaim neglects or refuses to produce it with his evidence in support thereof, as provided in said section he will be forever precluded from maintaining any action for the recovery thereof, unless, as provided by section 56, his claim exceeds plaintiff's demand more than three hundred dollars.

Under Gen. St. 1902, § 612, the term "counterclaim" refers to all manner of permissible counter demands, more particularly those so connected with the matter in controversy under the original complaint that its consideration is necessary for the full determination of the rights of the parties, or, if it is of a wholly independent character, is a claim upon the plaintiff by way of set-off, and not a claim against a codefendant; and the term "set-off" embraces equitable set-off. Downing v. Wilcox, 80 Atl. 288, 289, 84 Conn. 437.

"A 'counterclaim' eo nomine was unknown in the former system of pleading; but the subject-matter of such a plea was, in actions ex contractu, often available under a plea which might be styled 'recoupment.' * * * The defense termed 'counterclaim' under the Code is but the plea of recoupment under the old practice, and, in general, is to be governed by the same practice, except that under the provisions of sections 418 and 419 of the Civil Code, if the defendant's demand exceeds that of the plaintiff, he may be entitled to a judgment for the excess. This defense only applies, however, to breaches of stipulations, fraudulent or otherwise, growing out of the contract sued upon, and not upon entirely separate and distinct transactions." In an action by heirs for specific performance of a contract to convey land, defendant could not set up as a counterclaim the execution of a deed of trust of the same land, allege a mistake in the description of the premises, and pray that the deed be reformed and foreclosed. Hays v. McLain, 50 S. W. 1006, 1008, 66 Ark. 400.

COUNTERFEIT

The word "counterfeit" has been defined as a likeness or resemblance, intended to deceive and to be taken for that which is original and genuine; to make in imitation something else with a view to defraud by passing the false copy for genuine or original with intent to defraud; an instrument falsely made in similitude of a genuine instrument. As used in Pen. Code 1895, § 247, punishing any person who shall, by color of any counterfeit letter or writing made in any other person's name or fictitious name, obtain any money or any other valuable things, etc., the word has a broader meaning, and evidently refers not only to an imitation of a genuine instrument, but to any paper which purports to be a genuine original, whether made in a person's real name or in a fictitious name. To constitute the offense charged under this section it is essential to prove that the writing alleged to be false was made in some other person's name or in a fictitious name. Sessions v. State, 59 S. E. 196, 197, 3 Ga. App. 13.

The expressions "shall counterfeit, or procure to be counterfeited, or assist in counterfeiting," mean the making or procuring to be made, or assisting to make, a false and counterfeit bill, in imitation of a true bill. State v. Randall (Vt.) 2 Aikens, 89, 101.

COUNTERFEITING

Larceny synonymous

Under statutes making punishable the "counterfeiting" or "larceny" of bank bills or bank notes, the two terms are held synonymous. State v. Hays, 21 Ind. 176, 177.

COUNTERMAND

While a party may in his contract to purchase make a valid agreement not to countermand the order, a rescission because of a breach by the other party is not a "countermand" within the meaning of such a provision. Robert M. Green & Sons v. Lineville Drug Co., 52 South. 433, 436, 167 Ala. 372.

COUNTERPART

In a statutory provision that prohibition was the counterpart of mandamus, "counterpart" was not used as meaning the "exact reverse" or "opposite," and thus justifying prohibition to prevent every unauthorized act of an officer or person clothed with authority, but in its more general sense as being the opposite, in that it arrests, while mandamus commands acts. Stein v. Morrison, 75 Pac. 246, 256, 9 Idaho, 426 (quoting and adopting definition in Maurer v. Mitchell, 53 Cal. 289).

COUNTERSHAFT

As shafting, see Shaft.

Where plaintiff was injured by a stick thrown from an unguarded pulley on a rip-saw, a reference by the court in its instructions to plaintiff's injury as having been caused by a stick thrown from the countershaft, and as having been caused by failure of defendant to guard the countershaft was not erroneous, though the evidence showed that the stick was thrown from the pulley, since the pulley was a part of the countershaft. Hohenstein-Harmetz Furniture Co. v. Matthews, 92 N. E. 196, 198, 46 Ind. App. 616.

COUNTERSIGN

To "countersign" an instrument is to sign what has already been signed by a superior, to authenticate by an additional signature, and usually has reference to the signature of a subordinate in addition to that of his superior by way of authentication of the execution of the writing, and denotes the complete execution of the paper. Elliot Nat. Bank v. Woonsocket Electric Machine & Power Co., 76 Atl. 782, 787, 31 R. I. 57.

A petition, alleging that a certain person executed and delivered to plaintiff a promissory note for a certain sum payable on demand, and that the defendants countersigned such note as further and additional sureties thereon, is bad on demurrer for failure to allege any promise or anything showing the instrument sued on to be in fact a note, since the word "countersigned" means "to sign in addition to the signature of a principal or superior in order to attest the authenticity of a writing," and is not sufficient to show the assumption of any liability. Bank of Anderson County v. Foster, 142 S. W. 225, 226, 146 Ky. 179.

A land grant sealed with the seal of the state, signed by the Governor, and countersigned on the opposite side of the sheet by the Secretary of State is sufficient, within Const. art. 3, § 16, providing that grants shall be sealed with the seal of the state, signed by the Governor, and countersigned by the Secretary of State; the word "countersign" meaning the signature of an officer to a writing, signed by a superior, to attest its authenticity. Richards v. W. M. Ritter Lumber Co., 73 S. E. 485, 158 N. C. 54, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 313.

COUNTRY

See Another Country; Foreign Country; Indian Country; Laws of the Country; Wild and Uncivilized Country.
Other country, see Other.

In the revenue laws the word "country" has always been construed to embrace all the possessions of a foreign state, however widely separated, which are subject to the same supreme executive and legislative control. The Philippine Islands are not "another country" within the meaning of article 8 of the Cuban Treaty, providing that the rates therein granted shall continue preferential in respect to like imports from "other countries." Faber v. United States, 31 Sup. Ct. 659, 660, 221 U. S. 649, 55 L. Ed. 897.

"Country," as used in Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 2180, providing that, in case any street railroad incorporated under such division shall be partly located in an incorporated town or city and partly located in the country, then the provisions of the preceding division which apply to other railroads located in the country shall apply to it so far as that portion of its road is concerned, includes suburbs, as distinguished from territory within the corporate limits of a town or city. Piedmont Cotton Mills v. Georgia R. & Electric Co., 62 S. E. 52, 61, 131 Ga. 129.

COUNTRY DAMAGE

See Wet and Country Damage.

COUNTRY OR DEPENDENCY

The British North America Act (St. 30-31 Vict. c. 3, §§ 91, 92) gives the Dominion of Canada exclusive power to impose export and import duties, but distributes along the provinces of Canada certain legislative powers, including that of taxation by way of license; and under this authority the province of Quebec imposes what is in point of fact and in effect an export duty. Held, that such duty is imposed by a "country or dependency," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 393, 30 Stat. 187. Myers v. United States, 140 Fed. 648, 649.

COUNTRY ROAD

Under the Colonial Laws, a "country road" was one which belonged to the country and was under the direct charge of the country, as distinguished from the owners of the towns and manors, and it was a necessary line of communication between sparsely settled communities, and it was for the better laying out, repairing, and preserving the public and general highways within the colony that legislation as to such roads was adopted. Townsend v. Trustees of Freeholders & Commonalty of Town of Brookhaven, 89 N. Y. Supp. 982, 988, 97 App. Div. 316.

"Country roads" are roads that have been made by common travel, and accepted and used by a municipality. Where there were two ways about nine feet apart, one of which was 18 inches to 2 feet higher than the other, each formed by common travel and not laid out by the city, though within the city limits, and each safe within its own limits, the city is not liable for injuries caused by attempting to turn from the higher to the lower road. Nelson v. City of Spokane, 87 Pac. 1048, 1049, 45 Wash. 81, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 636, 122 Am. St. Rep. 881, 13 Ann. Cas. 280.

COUNTRY RUN OATS

Evidence considered, and held to sustain a finding that "country run" oats, according to the usage and understanding of the grain trade, means the grain as it comes from country stations in car load lots, with the identity of the contents of the several cars preserved, and that a contract for the sale of such oats was not complied with by furnishing oats which had been in a terminal elevator. Uplike Grain Co. v. P. P. Williams Grain Co., 198 Fed. 828, 829, 117 C. C. A. 470.

COUNTRY WHENCE HE CAME

A Chinese alien entering the United States from Canada surreptitiously in the night, avoiding inspection and examination at a designated place of entry, enters in violation of Immigration Act Feb. 20, 1907, c. 1134, § 36, and, like any other alien so entering, is subject to arrest on a warrant issued by the Commissioner of Commerce and Labor and to be deported to Canada, or to China, the "country whence he came," under the provisions of sections 20 and 21 of the act, without regard to the provisions of the Chinese exclusion acts. Ex parte Li Dick, 174 Fed. 674, 684.

The provisions of Immigration Act Feb. 20, 1907, c. 1134, §§ 20, 21, 34 Stat. 904, 905, authorizing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to deport any alien entering or found in the United States in violation of the act "to the country whence he came," were intended to refer to the place of his nativity or citizenship, and not to the country from which he may have immediately entered the United States. Frick v. Lewis, 195 F. 693, 700, 115 C. C. A. 493.

A "county" is a mere political subdivision of the territory of a state. City of Edwardsville v. Madison County, 96 N. E. 238, 251 Ill. 265, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 101; Penick v. Foster, 58 S. E. 773, 775, 129 Ga. 217, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1159, 12 Ann. Cas. 346; Butts County v. Jackson Banking Co., 60 S. E. 149, 151, 129 Ga. 801, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 567, 121 Am. St. Rep. 244; Caudle v. Commissioners' Court of Talladega County, 39 South. 307, 308, 144 Ala. 502.

A "county" is a corporation as well as a political and governmental subdivision and agency. Street v. Varney Electrical Supply Co., 66 N. E. 895, 896, 160 Ind. 338, 61 L. R. A. 154, 98 Am. St. Rep. 325.

A "county" is a political subdivision of the state created for the purpose of acting for the state in local matters, whose powers are exercised by a board of supervisors. Jefferson Davis County v. Smrall Lumber Co., 49 South. 611, 612, 94 Miss. 530.

"Counties" are involuntary political and civil divisions of the territory of a state created to aid in the administration of governmental affairs. They are, in fact, quasi corporations or subordinate agencies for orderly government within the scope of their authority, having well-known duties to perform through officers provided for that purpose. Dixon v. People, 127 Pac. 930, 932, 53 Colo. 527.

A "county," while a body corporate, is a subdivision of the state, created for administrative and other public purposes, and is subject at all times to legislative control and change. McSurely v. McGrew, 118 N. W. 415, 418, 140 Iowa, 163, 132 Am. St. Rep. 248.

"Counties" are subdivisions of the state, created by the Legislature for political and civil purposes as agencies of the state government, and they are subject to legislative control; so that the Legislature may impose, as a duty, anything it can empower them to do. Burgin v. Smith, 66 S. E. 607, 610, 151 N. C. 561.

A "county" is a mere subdivision of a state with bodies executing functions assigned to them by the sovereign in process of government, but not itself sovereign. Devaney v. Hanson, 53 S. E. 603, 60 W. Va. 3.

"Counties" are territorial subdivisions bounded and organized by the Legislature for political purposes and the administration of government. City of Boston v. City of Chelsea, 98 N. E. 620, 212 Mass. 127.

A "county" is but a political subdivision of the state, and, except as restricted by the state Constitution, is subject to legislative regulation and control. Yellowstone County v. First Trust & Savings Bank of Billings, 128 Pac. 596, 598, 46 Mont. 439; Dillman v. State (Wyo.) 125 Pac. 367, 376.

A "county" is one of the territorial divisions of the state created for public and political purposes connected with the administration of the state government. Frantz v. Autry, 91 Pac. 193, 211, 18 Okl. 561; Walch v. Murray, 91 Pac. 238, 18 Okl. 712; McCollister v. Same, 91 Pac. 239, 18 Okl. 710; Board of Com'rs of Greer County v. Constitutional Delegate Convention of Oklahoma Territory, 91 Pac. 239, 18 Okl. 707; Haines v. Murray, 91 Pac. 240, 18 Okl. 711.

The word "county" signifies the same as "shire"; county being derived from the French, and shire from the Saxon. Both these words signify a circuit or portion of the realm into which the whole land is divided for the better government thereof and the more easy administration of justice. State v. Dickenson, 33 South. 514, 519, 44 Fla. 623, 60 L. R. A. 539, 1 Ann. Cas. 122 (dissenting opinion, citing 1 Bouv. Law Dict. [Rawle's Revision] p. 450).

The term "county," as used in Const. art. 2, § 14, prescribing the method for passing laws authorizing counties, etc., to issue bonds, includes all political or legislative subdivisions of counties, such as townships, etc. Wittkowsky v. Board of Com'rs of Jackson County, 63 S. E. 275, 277, 150 N. C. 90.

The word "counties," as used in Const. art. 4, § 7, par. 11, providing that the Legislature shall not pass private, local, or special laws regulating the external affairs of towns and counties, embraces no other governmental creations except such as are known as "counties," hence there can be no classification of counties for legislative purposes on the basis of population or otherwise, in matters relating to their machinery, structure, or powers, unless it is apparent that the basis used for classification has some reasonable relation to the necessities of the counties so classified, as contradistinguished from the other counties of the state. Dickinson v. Board of Chosen Freeholders, 60 Atl. 220, 221, 71 N. J. Law, 589.

"A 'county' is one of the civil divisions of a country for judicial and political purposes, created by the sovereign power of the state of its own will, without the particular solicitation, consent, or concurrent action of the people who inhabit it; a local organization, which, for the purpose of civil administration, is vested with certain functions of corporate existence." People ex rel. Rodgers v. Coler, 59 N. E. 716, 727, 166 N. Y. 1, 52 L. R. A. 814, 82 Am. St. Rep. 605.

The "counties" of a state are but divisions for governmental purposes. The county governments are but arms of the state, and what the Legislature cannot do directly it cannot do indirectly through the agency of a county. Const. 235, providing that the salary of public officers shall not be changed during the terms for which they are elected, secures to public officers a fixed compensation, and prevents official power and position from being used by the officers to increase the emoluments of the office after he has secured the office, and the provision will be rendered entirely nugatory, if the Legislature, instead of increasing the salaries of public officials after their election, could authorize the municipal court or other municipal authorities to make such increase, and Acts 1906, c. 126, which provides that, when any county in which a city of a certain class may be located may have a specified population, and no court of continuous session is authorized therein by its board of magistrates, fiscal court, or commissioners, and the city by its council may pay to the judge of the circuit court district in which the county is located such additional compensation to that paid by the state, not exceeding a certain amount, is inoperative as to circuit judges elected before its enactment or before the annual additional compensation provided by the county or city authorities, but an allowance may be made to a judge for an annual additional compensation to be operative after the term of the then incumbent. McCracken County v. Reed, 101 S. W. 848, 349, 125 Ky. 420.

The "county," as a unit of government, is older in point of time than either the state or the town. The matter of local self-government has always found its most consistent application through the medium of the county. The habit of treating the county as the unit of local government is one that dates back beyond the colonies. The county necessarily embraces within its territory every town, city, and precinct organized within it. Under Const. § 61, providing that the general assembly shall by general law provide a means whereby the sense of the people of any county, city, town, district, or precinct may be taken as to whether or not intoxicating liquors shall be sold therein, the local units named will control within their own territory the question of prohibition and each should have the privilege of saying conclusively that prohibition shall prevail, but not conclusively that it shall not. Board of Trustees of Town of New Castle v. Scott, 101 S. W. 944, 947, 125 Ky. 545.

"A 'county' is one of the territorial divisions of the state, created for public and political purposes connected with the administration of the state government." The constitutional convention or the people of the state of Oklahoma, either through the Constitution or by legislative enactment, have full authority to provide for the location, relocation, or removal of any of the county seats of the state and to provide the procedure therefor. City of Pond Creek v. Haskell, 97 Pac. 338, 346, 21 Okl. 711 (quoting and adopting definition in Frantz v. Autry, 91 Pac. 193, 18 Okl. 561).

The "county" is a municipal body, and as such is an arm or instrument of the state to carry out purposes of government; but it is not so highly organized as the municipal corporation proper (town or city), which is also an arm of the state government. Grainger County v. State ex rel. Mynatt, 80 S. W. 750, 754, 111 Tenn. 284.

A "county" is one of the civil divisions of a state for judicial and political purposes, created by the sovereign power of the state of its own will, without the particular solicitation, assent, or concurrent action of the people who inhabit it; a local organization, which, for the purpose of civil administration, is invested with certain functions of corporate existence. Hammond v. Clark, 71 S. E. 479, 486, 136 Ga. 313, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 77.

The word "County" in Rev. St. 1899, § 3516, which provides that a summons against a domestic corporation may be served on its chief officer, or, if he be not found in the "county," on subordinate officers, or, if none of these can be found, by a copy left at the office of the corporation, means the "county" in which the corporation has its principal office, and not the county in which it may be sued as a joint defendant; and when so sued, the summons must issue to and be served in the county of its residence, unless service is made as provided by Sess. Laws 1903, p. 62, c. 53, requiring every domestic corporation to appoint an agent on whom service of process may be made. Harrison v. Carbon Timber Co., 88 Pac. 215, 216, 14 Wyo. 246.

City as

The word "counties" in Const. art. 11, § 8, providing that the proceeds of penalties and forfeitures shall belong to the several counties as a public school fund, includes the city of St. Louis, and forfeitures therein by whomsoever guilty are held in trust for the school fund of the city. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Gildersleeve, 147 S. W. 836, 840, 165 Mo. App. 370.

Rev. St. 1899, § 2595, provides for the selection of a special judge when the judge of a criminal court is disqualified, and section 2597 provides that a special judge shall receive a certain sum per day for the time engaged in a trial and a certain sum while coming to and returning from the place of trial, if he resides out of the "county" where the cause is tried. The St. Louis court of criminal correction has by 2 Rev. St. 1899, p. 2544, § 13, exclusive original jurisdiction of misdemeanors. The court was established in the county of St. Louis by Laws 1865-66, p. 78, while the city was within the limits of the county, and Rev. St. 1899, art. 18, § 13, declares such court to be a court of record and makes all provisions concerning costs in criminal cases applicable to such court. The Constitution of 1875 provided that all criminal courts existing in the state should continue to exist unless otherwise provided. Rev. St. 1899, § 2723, makes the provisions of the Code applicable to the circuit court and judges thereof applicable to any court of record exercising criminal jurisdiction. Section 4 of the act establishing the St. Louis court of criminal correction provides that, in the event of sickness or absence of the judge of said court, the circuit court of St. Louis City may appoint a provisional judge. Section 4160 provides that, whenever the word "county" is in any law general in its character to the whole state, it shall be construed to include the city of St. Louis. Held, that sections 2595 and 2597 are applicable to the St. Louis court of criminal correction. State ex rel. Claiborne v. Wilder, 95 S. W. 910, 912, 198 Mo. 166.

Gen. St. 1902, § 2674, provides that no intoxicating liquors shall be sold in any building belonging to or under the control of the state or of any "county or town" in the state. Held, that the words "county or town" did not include a city, and hence the statute did not prohibit the sale of liquor in a building constructed on land belonging to a city, which the city had leased for a term of years. Appeal of Camp, 68 Atl. 444, 80 Conn. 272.

As district

The word "district," as used in the Constitution providing that the accused in all criminal prosecutions shall have the right to a trial by jury of the county or district in which the offense is alleged to have been committed, means "county." City of Chicago v. Knobel, 83 N. E. 459, 460, 232 Ill. 112.

The term "district" as employed in Const. art. 1, § 10, guaranteeing to accused a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the "county" or district in which the offense is alleged to have been committed, is not synonymous with "county"; but it was intended to designate and include a place or jurisdiction other and distinct from that of the county in which the offense was committed. State ex rel. Hornbeck v. Durlinger, 76 N. E. 291, 292; 73 Ohio St. 154.

A "county" is an involuntary, civil, or political division of the state, created in the administration of government, and is not synonymous with the word "district." The word "county," in Const. 1901, § 215, providing that no county shall be authorized to levy a greater rate of taxation in any one year on the value of taxable property therein than one-half of one per cent., except an additional rate of one-quarter of one per cent. may be levied and collected exclusively to the payment of debts, etc., means a unit of political authority, and the area, the unit of taxation, is the county as a political or civil division of the state, created to aid in the administration of government. Adams v. Southern Ry. Co., 52 South. 439, 441, 167 Ala. 383.

The word "district," as used in a constitutional provision, providing that in criminal prosecutions the accused shall have a trial by jury of the county or district in which the offense is alleged to have been committed, is synonymous with the term "county." State v. O'Brien, 90 Pac. 514, 518, 35 Mont. 482, 10 Ann. Cas. 1006.

A "county" is within Const. art. 4, § 1a, reserving the initiative and referendum powers to the voters of every municipality and district, and the people of the several counties are authorized, by article 9, § 1a, to regulate taxation and exemptions within their several counties, as provided by article 4, § 1a, in a manner subservient to any general law which may be enacted, though the word "district," as used in article 4, § 1a, has a broader signification than "county," and may designate a territory comprising more than a county, or containing less area. Schubel v. Olcott, 120 Pac. 375, 379, 60 Or. 503.

"County," as used in Const. art. 1, § 10, guaranteeing to an accused party a "speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the county or district in which the offense is alleged to have been committed," is not synonymous with "district," but the latter term is used to designate and include a place or jurisdiction other and distinct from that of the county wherein the offense was committed, and therefore Rev. St. 1906, § 7263, which permits the court to direct that the person accused be tried in some adjoining county, where it appears that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in the county in which the offense is committed, is not unconstitutional as allowing the trial to be held in a county other than that in which the offense was committed, on motion of the state properly supported by affidavits. State ex rel. Hornbeck v. Durlinger, 76 N. E. 291, 292, 73 Ohio St. 154.

As a municipal corporation

A "county" is a "municipal corporation." Wadsworth v. Board of Sup'rs of Livingston County, 115 N. Y. Supp. 8, 16 (citing County Law [Laws 1892, p. 1744, c. 686] § 2; General Corporation Law [Laws 1890, p. 1061, c. 563] § 3, subd. 1).

A "county," properly speaking, is not a "municipal corporation." Knowles v. Board of Education of City of Topeka, 7 Pac. 561, 564, 33 Kan. 692 (citing Dill. Mun. Corp. § 22).

A "county" is a "municipal corporation" within the rule that a municipal corporation cannot be estopped by the unauthorized or illegal agreements or acts of their agents. People ex rel. Sweet v. Board of Sup'rs of St. Lawrence County, 91 N. Y. Supp. 948, 949, 101 App. Div. 327.

While a "county" is not strictly a municipal corporation, yet, in the sense that it is a body corporate with only such powers as are expressly conferred by statute, it is within the rules applicable to such corporation. Morse v. Granite County, 119 Pac. 286, 289, 44 Mont. 78.

"Municipal corporations" are subordinate parts of the state, and invested with limited powers. In Montana counties are at most only quasi municipal corporations, with no legislative authority vested in the several boards of county commissioners in the sense that they may adopt ordinances and prescribe penalties for a violation thereof, or define nuisances and provide for their abatement. In re O'Brien, 75 Pac. 196, 199, 29 Mont. 530, 1 Ann. Cas. 373 (citing Wilcox v. Deer Lodge County, 2 Mont. 574).

A "municipal corporation" proper is created mainly for the interest, advantage, and convenience of the locality and its people, as distinguished from a county organization which is created almost exclusively with a view to the policy of the state at large. People ex rel. Attorney General v. Johnson, 86 Pac. 233, 235, 34 Colo. 143 (citing 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 23).

A "county" is a governmental agency of the state, and in a sense a municipal corporation. Kumpe v. Bynum, 48 South. 55, 158 Ala. 311, 313.

A "county" is a municipal or quasi municipal corporation invested with legislative powers to be exercised for local purposes, subject to the control of the state, but is not, in a strict sense, a "municipal corporation." Schubel v. Olcott, 120 Pac. 375, 378, 60 Or. 503.

A special school district is not within the constitutional provision declaring that no county, city, town, or municipality shall issue any interest-bearing evidence of indebtedness. All corporations intended as agencies in the administration of civil government are public, as distinguished from private, corporations. Schmutz v. Special School Dist. of Little Rock, 95 S. W. 438, 439, 78 Ark. 118 (citing Memphis Trust Co. v. Board of Directors of St. Francis Levee Dist., 62 S. W. 902, 69 Ark. 284; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 22).

The "county" is a political subdivision of the state, though for many purposes it is deemed a municipality. Its power of contracting indebtedness is limited to the matters expressly conferred by the Legislature, or which are conferred by necessary implication as an incident of powers expressly conferred. Not only is it limited as to the things for which, but it is limited as to the manner in which, it may become bound by contract. McDonald's Adm'r v. Franklin County, 100 S. W. 861, 862, 125 Ky. 205.

A "county" is a local subdivision of the state, created by the state of its own will, and is not a municipal corporation proper, which is called into existence either at the direct solicitation or by the consent of the persons composing it, for the promotion of their private advantage, and a county cannot be sued except on an express contract. Marion County v. Rives & McChord, 118 S. W. 309, 311, 133 Ky. 477.

Act March 30, 1892 (P. L. p. 369; 2 Gen. St. p. 2078), provides that any person who, pursuant to the terms of a contract for any public improvement in any city, town, township, or other "municipality" within the state, authorized by law to contract for such improvement, shall perform labor or furnish materials for the completion of such contract, shall have a lien on the moneys due under the contract. Held that, where a county let a contract for the construction of a county courthouse, the county was a "municipality" within such act. Hermann & Grace v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Essex County, 75 Atl. 1101, 73 N. J. Eq. 415.

Under Const. art. 20, relating to the powers, etc., of the city and county of Denver, that municipality has no power to legislate upon matters solely affecting county affairs; the name "the city and county of Denver" being merely used as synonymous with "the municipality of Denver," and the word "county" therein being merely a part of the name, and having no significance in connection with county affairs. Hilts v. Markey, 122 Pac. 394, 396, 52 Colo. 382.

Powers and liabilities

A "county" is a governmental agency with limited powers prescribed by statute. Rock County v. Weirick, 128 N. W. 94, 96, 143 Wis. 500.

A "county" is organized for the convenient exercise, locally, of such powers of government as may be delegated to it, having no powers except such as are derived from statutes constitutionally enacted. City of Edwardsville v. Madison County, 96 N. E. 288, 251 Ill. 263, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 101.

"A 'county' is mainly a mere agency of the state government, a function through which the state administers the governmental affairs, and it has but little option in the creation of debts and liabilities against it." In re Opinion of the Justices, 60 Atl. 85, 92, 99 Me. 515 (quoting and adopting the definition in Grant County v. Lake County, 21 Pac. 447, 17 Or. 463).

"Counties," in the performance of governmental and political powers and duties, are mere agents of the state and component parts of it; and they may not sue the state or state officers expressly charged with the performance of a sovereign power. Albany County v. Hooker, 97 N. E. 403, 405, 204 N. Y. 1, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 663.

A "county" is merely a political agent of the state created by a law for governmental purposes, charged with the performance of certain duties for and on behalf of the state, among which is the duty to levy and collect state taxes apportioned against it. Yanhill County v. Foster, 99 Pac. 286, 290, 53 Or. 124.

A "county" is an involuntary corporation organized as a political subdivision of the state by the Legislature solely for governmental purposes. Such subdivisions are instrumentalities of government, and exercise the powers delegated by the state, and act for the state. State ex rel. Board of Com'rs of Hendricks County v. Board of Com'rs of Marion County, 85 N. E. 513, 517, 170 Ind. 595; State v. Board of Com'rs of Marion County (Ind.) 82 N. E. 482, 486.

"A 'county' is a civil or political division of the state created by general laws to aid in the administration of government." Hence a county was not liable for the tortious acts of its officers or agents in the absence of a statute creating such liability. Talbott v. Board of Com'rs of St. Joseph County, 85 N. E. 376, 377, 42 Ind. App. 198 (quoting and adopting definition in Smith v. Board of Com'rs of Allen County, 30 N. E. 949, 131 Ind. 116; citing to the holding, Board of Com'rs of Greene County v. Boswell, 30 N. E. 534, 4 Ind. App. 133; Board of Com'rs of Johnson County v. Reiner, 47 N. E. 642, 18 Ind. App. 119; Schnurr v. Board of Com'rs of Huntington County, 53 N. E. 425, 22 Ind. App. 188; Summers v. Board of Com'rs of Daviess County, 2 N. E. 725, 103 Ind. 263, 53 Am. Rep. 512; White v. Board of Com'rs of Sullivan County, 28 N. E. 846, 129 Ind. 396; Morris v. Board of Com'rs of Switzerland County, 31 N. E. 77, 131 Ind. 285; Board of Com'rs of Vigo County v. Dailey, 31 N. E. 531, 132 Ind. 73; Cones v. Board of Com'rs of Benton County, 37 N. E. 272, 137 Ind. 404; Freel v. School City of Crawfordsville, 41 N.

El. 312, 142 Ind. 27, 37 L. R. A. 301; Board of Com'rs of Jasper County v. Allman, 42 N. E. 206, 142 Ind. 573, 39 L. R. A. 58).

A "county" is created almost exclusively with a view to the policy of the state at large for the purpose of political organization and civil administration in matters of finance, of education, of provision for the poor, of military organization, of the means of travel and transport, and especially for the general administration of justice. With scarcely an exception, all the powers and functions of the county organization have a direct and exclusive reference to the general policy of the state and are, in fact, but a branch of the general administration of that policy. People ex rel. Attorney General v. Johnson, 86 Pac. 233, 235, 34 Colo. 143 (citing 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 23); People ex rel. Elder v. Sours, 74 Pac. 167, 172, 31 Colo. 369, 102 Am. St. Rep. 34 (citing 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 23).

"Counties" are provided for by the Constitution but their creation and powers with which they, for the most part, may be vested, are left to the discretion of the Legislature. They have been created corporations, and the justices in the county court assembled are their representatives and authorized to act for them. "Counties do not hold and operate under charters, as do cities and other municipal corporations. They have no franchises. They make, and can make, no by-laws. They have the same powers and duties throughout the state. They do not have to provide waterworks and fire departments and lights and the 101 necessities for cities and towns. Their ordinary expenses are met by issuance of county warrants payable out of a general fund collected for all purposes. The occasions for extraordinary expenditures are few, such as the building of jails, courthouses, bridges, and hospitals, and, if it becomes necessary to incur a debt for these purposes which cannot be at once met out of the usual revenues, they must get their authority to create such debts from an enabling act of the Legislature which at the same time gives them power to provide for its payment by a special act which must be strictly construed and exactly followed." Southern R. Co. v. Hamblen County, 92 S. W. 238, 239, 115 Tenn. 526 (quoting and adopting definition in Burnett v. Maloney, 37 S. W. 693, 97 Tenn. 714, 34 L. R. A. 541).

A "county" is merely a subdivision of the state for the purposes of state government. It is nothing more than an agency of the state in the general administration of the state policy. Its powers are solely governmental, and it does not, like a municipal corporation, possess a complete local government of its own, executive, legislative, and judicial, and, while it is clothed with certain executive powers, such powers are only those which are specially granted to it by the state. Colburn v. Board of Com'rs of El Paso County, 61 Pac. 241, 243, 15 Colo. App. 90 (citing Stermer v. Board of Com'rs of La Plata County, 38 Pac. 839, 5 Colo. App. 388).

"A county is one of the territorial divisions of a state, created for public political purposes connected with the administration of the state government, and, being in its nature and objects a municipal corporation, the Legislature may exercise control over the county agencies, and require such public duties and functions to be performed by them as fall within the general scope and objects of the municipal organizations." A county may be required to contribute towards the repair of a bridge abutting in such county, although it is located mainly within the statutory jurisdiction of the adjoining county. Dodge County v. Saunders County, 100 N. W. 934, 70 Neb. 451.

It has been said that: "A 'county' is one of the civil divisions of the state or territory for judicial and political purposes, and at the same time a district of a quasi corporate character for purposes of local civil administration. By constitution or statute, counties are usually created bodies politic or corporate. This has been said to mean that they have both political and business functions, and the two terms at least mark an important legal distinction in their powers and duties. As corporations their powers are limited, and less than those of a full municipal corporation. They may bring suits, and be sued, and make contracts for authorized purposes, and they may acquire and hold real estate and personal property; but these powers are for the most part incidental and secondary to the governmental functions of counties. The latter are so prominent that it has been said in a judicial opinion that counties exist only for the purposes of the general political government of the state. They are the agents and instrumentalities the state uses to perform its functions. All the powers with which they are intrusted are the powers of the state, and the duties imposed on them are the duties of the state, and the county organization is created almost exclusively with a view to the policy of the state at large." Ex parte Corliss, 114 N. W. 962, 981, 16 N. D. 470.

As quasi corporations

"Counties" are quasi corporations formed to exercise purely governmental powers and, in the absence of an express statute to that effect, are not liable for damages either for the nonexercise of their powers or for their improper exercise by those charged with their execution. Cassidy v. City of St. Joseph, 152 S. W. 306, 309, 247 Mo. 197.

"The 'counties' of this state, like townships, are quasi corporations, created solely for governmental purposes, and hold their property, not as private owners, but for the performance of their duties as public agencies." State ex rel. Skyllingstad v. Gunn, 100 N. W. 97, 99, 92 Minn. 486.

"Counties" may be distinguished from cities and towns by terming the former "quasi municipal corporations," and the latter "municipal corporations." Southern Ry. Co. v. Board of Com'rs, of Mecklenburg, 61 S. E. 690, 696, 148 N. C. 220.

A "county" is a quasi municipal corporation and as such can exercise powers expressly conferred and only such others as are expressly and fairly implied in and incidental to powers expressly granted. Brown v. State, 84 Pac. 549, 550, 73 Kan. 69.

"Counties" are quasi corporations having such powers as have been delegated to them by the General Assembly, which they hold at its pleasure, chief of which is the power of legislating upon certain local matters lodged in a body created by the Legislature, composed of the justices of the county. "Counties" are public corporations created by the government for political purposes. They are political aggregate corporations capable of exercising such powers as they may be vested with by the Legislature. Maxey v. Powers, 101 S. W. 181, 185, 117 Tenn. 381.

A "county" is a mere local subdivision of a state created by it without the request or consent of the people residing therein. They do not receive any special favors, privileges, or benefits, but the law imposes upon them burdens which they are required to carry out in the interests of the state which created them. Counties are not corporations in the fullest sense of that term. They are commonly called quasi corporations. They are created by the state for the purpose of government. Their functions are political and administrative, and the powers conferred on them are rather duties imposed than privileges granted. Cities, on the other hand, are deemed voluntary corporations, and, while they exercise political functions, it is considered that their charters are granted not so much with a view to the interests of the public as for the private advantage of their citizens. James v. Trustees of Wellston Tp., 90 Pac. 100, 101, 105, 18 Okl. 56, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1219, 11 Ann. Cas. 938.

COUNTY AFFAIRS

Congress in enacting Act July 30, 1896, c. 818, 24 Stat. 170, known as the Springer Act, providing that the Legislatures of the territories shall not pass any laws regulating county and township affairs, seems to have intended to use the word "affairs" in the broadest sense, as applied to counties. By Laws 1903, p. 38, c. 27, § 3, in effect April 14th, a new county was created from B. county, and an election ordered to be held on that day for the election of county officers of B.

county; but by an amendment passed March 12, 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 80, c. 49), two persons named were appointed county commissioners of B. county. They were directed to qualify on or before April 5, 1903, and to hold a meeting not later than April 10th, and appoint an assessor and a probate judge. Held, that such provision, which in effect ousted the existing officers of B. county before their terms of office expired and appointed new officers in their place, was a local and a special law regulating county "affairs," within the prohibition of Act Cong. July 30, 1896, c. 818, 24 Stat. 170, prohibiting territorial Legislatures from passing local and special laws regulating county and township "affairs." Territory ex rel. Curran v. Gutierrez, 78 Pac. 139, 142, 12 N. M. 254.

The primary election law provides in general terms for the holding of primary elections in the state at large, outside of Cook county, and contains special provisions for a primary election in Cook county. Held, that the act is in conflict with Const. art. 4, § 22, prohibiting the Legislature from passing special laws regulating "county affairs." People v. Board of Election Com'rs of Chicago, 77 N. E. 321-325, 221 Ill. 9, 5 Ann. Cas. 562.

COUNTY ATTORNEY

The "county attorney" is the legal representative and agent of the county in all matters in litigation wherein the county is a party, in the management and conduct of which he is under no legal obligation to receive orders or directions from the board of county commissioners. Board of Com'rs of Logan County v. State Capital Co., 86 Pac. 518, 520, 16 Okl. 625.

COUNTY BOARD

The words "county board," as used in Hurd's Rev. St. 1899, p. 741, c. 46, § 29, providing that in counties not under township organization the election precincts shall remain as established until changed by the board of county commissioners, but said county board may, from time to time, change the boundaries of election precincts and establish new ones, and section 30, as amended by Act April 24, 1899 (Laws 1899, p. 209), and by Act 1901 (Laws 1901, pp. 166, 167, 170), providing that the county board in each county shall divide a certain election precinct, refer to the governing body of all counties of the state, whether such bodies are composed of supervisors or of county commissioners. Rexroth v. Schein, 69 N. E. 240, 244, 206 Ill. 80 (citing Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, p. 8335, c. 131, cl. 7, par. 1).

COUNTY BRIDGES

When a bridge is erected across a river by a city on a public road of the county, it becomes a "county bridge," and the duty is imposed upon the county authorities to keep it in repair. Town of Montezuma v. Law, 57 S. E. 1025, 1026, 1 Ga. App. 530.

COUNTY BUILDING

Other county buildings, see Other.

COUNTY BUSINESS

The building of a county courthouse is "county business," within the meaning of the Constitution forbidding the passage of local or special laws regulating county business. Kraus v. Lehman, 83 N. E. 714, 716, 170 Ind. 408, 15 Ann. Cas. 849; Macy v. Board of Com'rs of Miami County, 83 N. E. 718, 719, 170 Ind. 707; Board of Com'rs of Newton County v. State ex rel. Bringham, 69 N. E. 442, 443, 161 Ind. 616.

A drainage district organized under Acts 30th Leg. c. 40, amended by Acts 31st Leg. c. 13, enacted under express authority of Const. Amend. art. 3, § 52, belongs to a class different from a city or town and is a part of the county, and hence such statute, by imposing upon the commissioners' court certain powers and duties with reference to drainage districts, is not unconstitutional under Const. art. 5, § 18, providing that the commissioners' court shall exercise such powers and jurisdiction over all "county business" as is or may be conferred by law; the business of the drainage district being county business. Wharton County Drainage Dist. No. 1 v. Higbee (Tex.) 149 S. W. 381, 388.

COUNTY CLERKS

Under Revenue Law, § 186, requiring the certificate of the publication of a delinquent tax list to be filed as part of the record of the county court, a filing thereof by the county clerk is not a sufficient compliance with the law, though the offices of county clerk and clerk of the county court are filled by the same person, and, notwithstanding Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, p. 1946, c. 131, § 1, providing that the words "county clerk" shall be held to include "clerk of the county court," and the words "clerk of the county court" to include "county clerk," unless such construction would be inconsistent with the manifest intent of the Legislature or repugnant to the context of the same statute. McCraney v. Glos, 78 N. E. 921, 922, 222 Ill. 628 (citing McChesney v. People ex rel. Kockersperger, 50 N. E. 1110, 174 Ill. 46).

The offices of county clerk and clerk of the county court are separate and distinct, although by the statute they are filled by the same person. In the different offices he has charge of two different and separate sets of records pertaining to different jurisdictions. Records in the office of the county clerk are not records of the county court, and filing a paper in that office does not make it part of the records of that court. Therefore the filing of the published list of delinquent lands, with the certificate of the publisher, in the "office of the county clerk and ex officio clerk of the county court of said county," is not a compliance with the statute requiring it to be filed as part of the records of the county court. Drennen v. People, 78 N. E. 937, 222 Ill. 592 (citing McChesney v. People ex rel. Kockersperger, 50 N. E. 1110, 174 Ill. 46).

COUNTY COMPLETELY ORGANIZED

"A 'county completely organized' has been held to signify a county having within itself the necessary means of performing its functions independent of any other county, with its lawful officers and machinery for carrying out the powers and performing the duties belonging to that class of corporate bodies. When a new county is created from part of the territory of an old county, and provision is made for its organization at a future time, it remains attached to and under the government and control of the old county until its organization. But upon the organization of the new county the authority of the officers of the old county over the territory of the new ceases, and the administration of the affairs of the new county should be conducted only by its own officers." Bealmear v. Hutchins, 148 Fed. 545, 560, 78 C. C. A. 231.

COUNTY COURT

Const. art. 6, vests the judicial power of the state as to matters of law and equity in a Supreme Court, district court, county court, justices of the peace, and such other courts as may be provided by law. It then provides the jurisdiction of various courts designated, "district court," "county court," and "criminal court," and for the election of judges thereof. Article 14 treats of counties and county officers, not including the judge of the county court, and article 20, creating the city and county of Denver, and providing for the termination of the terms of office of county officers, declares that district and county judges and the district attorneys should serve their full term, respectively, for which they had been elected. Held, that the words "district," "county," and "criminal" in Const. art. 6, as prefixed to the word "court," had no other significance than to give appropriate names to the tribunals of government, and that a judge of the county court in the city and county of Denver was not a county officer within Const. art. 20, and hence, after the adoption of such article and the charter of the city and county of Denver, he continued to hold his office under Const. art. 6, and not under the charter, and this, notwithstanding the charter, provided additional duties for such office and also for two incumbents. Dixon v. People, 127 Pac. 930, 932, 53 Colo. 527.

In Act March 16, 1894, amending charters of towns of the sixth class to provide that the "county court" shall fill a vacancy in the board of trustees, and amendment of March 19, 1894, providing that the "county judge" may fill a vacancy in the board, the terms "county court" and "county judge" are synonymous and mean the county judge when sitting as judge of the county court. Lewis v. Town of Brandenburg (Ky.) 48 S. W. 978, 979.

The "county court" is a court composed of the justices of the county and known as the quarterly court and has no inherent power of taxation. It is the legislative council of the county created by the General Assembly to act for it in such matters as it may be authorized and has only such jurisdiction and powers as are expressly conferred on it by statute. Southern R. Co. v. Hamblen County, 92 S. W. 238, 239, 115 Tenn. 526.

Const. art. 7, § 11, provides that the county court shall be held by the county judge. Section 12 provides that the Legislature may provide for the election of two commissioners to sit with the judge while transacting county business. By B. & C. Comp. § 2533, the Legislature provided for the two commissioners to sit with the judge while county business was being transacted. Held, that the judge and commissioners do not constitute a separate tribunal, but they, as well as the judge alone, constitute the county court charged by the statute with the performance of certain specified duties. It is immaterial whether the duties imposed by the local option law be discharged by the county court when presided over by the county judge alone, or when the county commissioners are sitting with him, since in either case it is the act of the county court. State v. MacElrath, 89 Pac. 803, 49 Or. 294.

The superior courts created by Act March 6, 1909 (Laws 1909, c. 14, art. 7), are not "county courts," even when exercising jurisdiction concurrent with the county courts, within Const. art. 2, § 19, providing that a jury for the trial of civil and criminal cases in courts of record other than county courts shall consist of 12 men, but in county courts and courts not of record shall consist of 6 men, the term as used referring to the county courts created by Const. art. 7, § 11. Hill v. State, 109 Pac. 291, 292, 3 Okl. Cr. 686; Antonelli v. State, 117 Pac. 654, 655, 6 Okl. Cr. 157.

Under a statute providing that a writ of certiorari to a justice of the peace shall not issue unless the applicant file a bond conditioned that he will perform the judgment of the county or district court, the expression "county or district court" merely means that the applicant shall perform the judgment of the particular court applied to to issue the proceedings; the county and district courts having concurrent jurisdiction in the premises. Webb v. Texas Christian University, 107 S. W. 86, 88, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 264.

COUNTY DEPOSITARIES

Rev. St. 1909, § 1226, under the heading "official bonds," providing that no official bond shall be approved until after the sureties swear to a statement, duly attested, stating names, residences, worth, etc., does not require the sureties for county depositaries to file an affidavit of their realty holding; county depositaries not being "public officers," but debtors of the county. Barrett v. Stoddard County, 152 S. W. 43, 46, 246 Mo. 501.

COUNTY FUNDS

The term "public money," as used in Sess. Laws Kan. 1889, c. 189, § 1, relating to county depositaries, and which requires the county treasurer to deposit daily in the designated bank all public money, and that the bond of the depositary should be conditioned that such deposit be promptly paid on the check or draft of said treasurer, and the term "county fund" as employed in a bond of a bank designated as a depository, conditioned for the payment by the bank of county funds only, are convertible terms; the funds of the county being the money and securities in the possession of the county treasurer. Myers v. Board of Com'rs of Kiowa County, 56 Pac. 11, 12, 60 Kan. 189.

COUNTY JAIL

As public work, see Public Work.

A judgment of a justice of the peace sentencing a person convicted in his court to imprisonment in the "county jail" is sufficient, on habeas corpus, to warrant the sheriff in holding such person, notwithstanding it does not specify in the jail of what county he is to be imprisoned, and especially where the uncontroverted facts in the return to the writ show that such person is confined in the county jail, which is the only jail wherein the justice is authorized to imprison persons. Ex parte Bargagliotti, 92 Pac. 96, 97, 6 Cal. App. 333.

COUNTY JUDGE

In Act March 16, 1894, amending charters of towns of the sixth class to provide that the "county court" shall fill a vacancy in the board of trustees, and amendment of March 19, 1894, providing that the "county judge" may fill a vacancy in the board, the terms "county court" and "county judge" are synonymous and mean the county judge when sitting as judge of the county court. Lewis v. Town of Brandenburg (Ky.) 48 S. W. 978, 979.

Cities and Villages Act, art. 11, § 5, provides that any 30 legal voters residing within a proposed village may petition the county judge to submit to the legal voters whether they will organize as a village under the act, and if the territory described shall be situated in more than one county, the petition shall be addressed to the judge of the county court of the county where a greater part of such territory is situated, and such petition shall be addressed to the county judge. Section 6 declares that, on the filing of the petition in the office of the county clerk, it shall be the duty of the judge to perform the same duties as are required to be performed by the president and trustees in towns already incorporated; the returns of the election to be made to the county judge who shall cause the result to be entered on the records of the county court. Section 7 provides that, if a majority of the votes cast at such election are for organization, such proposed village shall be deemed an organized village, and the county judge shall fix a time and place for the election of officers. Held, that the terms "county judge" and "judge of the county court" were used interchangeably and synonymously, and that a petition to organize a village should be addressed to the judge of the county court and be filed with the clerk of that court. People v. Shaw, 97 N. E. 1090, 1091, 253 Ill. 597.

COUNTY MATTERS

The sheriff is entitled to mileage under that part of Kirby's Dig. § 3502, allowing five cents for each mile traveled in serving each writ, process, notice, subpoena, or rule, except county matters, for county matters are confined to orders or rules of the county court. Ouachita County v. Chidester, 137 S. W. 811, 812, 99 Ark. 206.

COUNTY OFFICER

See, also, State's Attorney.

"An officer of the county is one by whom the county performs its usual political functions, its functions of government." State ex rel. Long v. Rexford, 109 N. W. 216, 217, 21 S. D. 86 (citing Sheboygan County v. Parker, 3 Wall. [70 U. S.] 93, 18 L. Ed. 33; State v. Brennan, 29 N. E. 593, 49 Ohio St. 33; In re Carpenter [N. Y.] 7 Barb. 30; In re Whiting [N. Y.] 2 Barb. 513).

The term "county officer," strictly speaking, "is one by whom the county performs its usual political functions; its functions of government." One who "exercises continuously, and as a part of the regular and permanent administration of government, its public powers, trusts, or duties." State ex rel. Williams v. Samuelson, 111 N. W. 712-715, 181 Wis. 499 (quoting and adopting definition in Sheboygan County v. Parker, 3 Wall. [70 U. S.] 93, 18 L. Ed. 33).

The words "county officers" in the most general sense apply to officers whose territorial jurisdiction is coextensive with the county for which they are elected or appointed, and in a more precise and restricted sense mean officers by whom the county performs its usual governmental functions. State ex rel. Buchanan County v. Imel, 146 S. W. 783, 784, 242 Mo. 293.

In general, a "state officer" is one whose duties and powers are coextensive with the state, while a "county officer" is one whose duties and powers are coextensive only with the county, and the fact that the official acts of an officer are so far extraterritorial that they are binding throughout the state does not make the officer who performs such acts necessarily a state officer. People v. Evans, 93 N. E. 388, 391, 247 Ill. 547.

Where a county engaged in litigation in relation to bridges, in order to check up claims pending thereon for the preceding four years, called in one who had been county surveyor, who filed a claim for services, the transaction was not within Cobbey's Ann. St. 1907, § 4469, providing that no county officer shall be pecuniarily interested in or receive the benefit of any contracts executed by the county; he not being a "county officer" within the statute. Pethoud v. Gage County, 120 N. W. 154, 83 Neb. 497.

"County officers," in Acts 1907, p. 523, § 4, declaring it the duty of the county officers, charged with assessment and collection of taxes, to levy and collect from the property within a school district a sum to pay interest on bonds issued by the district, and to create a sinking fund to pay the bonds, has reference to those officers in the county who are authorized to levy and collect the taxes in such cases, and so does not contravene Const. art. 10, § 5, if vesting in the board of trustees of the district the power to levy and collect such taxes. Dove v. Kirkland, 75 S. E. 503, 506, 92 S. C. 313.

Board of education

The office of member of the board of education of the city of Dallas provided for by the city charter (Sp. Laws 1907, c. 71) is a municipal office, and the incumbent is not a county officer within Const. art. 5, § 24, providing that enumerated officers and "other county officers" may be removed by the judges of the district courts for incompetency, and one elected to the office under the charter, containing a recall provision, may not complain of the provision on the ground that it provides for the removal from office in a manner not prescribed by the Constitution. Bonner v. Belsterling, 137 S. W. 1154, 1158.

Board of supervisors

The members of a board of supervisors are "county officers" within Code Supp. §

1873, which authorizes such officers to appeal from a tax assessment made by the board of review. In re Assessment of Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. of Sioux City (Iowa) 136 N. W. 543, 544.

County commissioner

County commissioners are "county officers" in the ordinary and legal sense of the term. State ex rel. Long v. Rexford, 109 N. W. 216, 217, 21 S. D. 86.

A commissioner is a "county officer" within the meaning of Const. art. 11, § 6, providing that the board of county commissioners in each county shall fill all vacancies in county offices, and Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 327, providing that when a vacancy occurs in the board of county commissioners the remaining commissioners and the judge of the superior court of the county shall appoint some qualified elector to fill the vacancy, is therefore unconstitutional and void. State ex rel. Pendergast v. Fulton, 79 Pac. 779, 780, 37 Wash. 271.

County tax commissioner

Under Const. 1901, § 175, which provides that certain officers mentioned, and all other county officers, may be removed from office by impeachment for any cause specified in section 173, provided the rights of trial by jury and of appeal shall be preserved, a county tax commissioner is a "county officer," but the section is not limited to county officers created or even mentioned in the Constitution, nor is it limited to those county officers who are elected by vote of the people or by the Legislature, but extends as well to those who are appointed; the provision is intended to protect county officers from removal except as authorized, during the term for which they were appointed or elected, and was not intended to apply to those officers, though county officers, the terms of whose incumbency is fixed or determined by the appointing power. Touart v. State ex rel. Callaghan, 56 South. 211, 214, 173 Ala. 453 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, pp. 1662-1666).

Director of poor

"The Directors of the Poor and of the House of Employment of the County of Lancaster," created by Act Feb. 27, 1798 (3 Smith's Laws, p. 306), are not county officers, and their compensation, as fixed by Act April 14, 1864 (P. L. 422), is not affected or changed by Act July 2, 1895 (P. L. 424), which fixes the salaries of county directors of the poor in counties containing over 150,000 inhabitants. Nissley v. Lancaster County, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 405, 409.

Jail physician

Priv. Acts 1911, c. 237, § 8, authorizing the county commission thereby created to appoint a jail physician, superintendent of the county morgue, etc., does not violate Const. art. 11, § 17, providing that no county office created by the Legislature shall be filled otherwise than by the people or the county court, since the appointees specified in that section are not county officers but mere employes. Prescott v. Duncan (Tenn.) 148 S. W. 229, 238.

Justice of the peace

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 202, justices of the peace hold their offices by election in their several precincts, except when appointed to fill a vacancy, and are required to be elected at the general election held on the Tuesday next following the first Monday in November of even years. Const. art. 6, subd. "Elections," § 5, provides that all state and county officers elected at a general election shall enter upon their duties on the first Monday in January next following their election, or as soon thereafter as may be possible. Rev. St. 1899, § 4323, provides that the jurisdiction of justices of the peace extends throughout the county. Section 1246 provides that the salaries prescribed for county and precinct officers shall be paid by the county, and under the express provisions of section 4319 the fees collected by justices of the peace receiving salaries are required to be paid into the county treasury. Section 4317 prescribes for justices of the peace the oath required of other county officers. Section 1224 provides that all county officers shall qualify and enter upon the discharge of their duties on the first Monday in January immediately following the general election at which they were elected. Held, that justices of the peace are county officers within section 1224, and their terms of office when elected at a general election commence on the first Monday of the following January. Balantyne v. Bower, 99 Pac. 869, 870, 17 Wyo. 356, 17 Ann. Cas. 82.

A justice of the peace is not a "county officer" within Enabling Act (Act June 20, 1910, c. 310), § 5, providing that the county and territorial officers shall hold over until the admission of the territory, for though Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 3230, 3232, 3243, 3337, recognize the jurisdiction of the justices of the peace to be coextensive with the limits of the county in which they have been elected, section 3224 provides that the justice shall be elected in odd-numbered years, while section 1698 provides for the election of county officers in even-numbered years. Territory v. Witt (N. M.) 117 Pac. 861, 862.

Const. art. 14, §§ 6-12, is entitled "county officers," and includes county commissioners, county clerk, sheriff, coroner, treasurer, superintendent of schools, surveyor, assessor, and county attorney, and justices of the peace. Section 11 provides for the election of two justices of the peace and two constables in each precinct in each county who shall hold office for two years. Held, that justices of the peace were county officers within article 20, relating to the city and county of Denver, section 3 of which provides that certain county officers, including justices of the peace within such city and county, should become respectively officers of such city and county until certain things should thereafter transpire. Thrush v. People, 127 Pac. 937, 938, 53 Colo. 544.

Levee district director

A "county officer" is one whose duties are limited by law to a single county; one by whom the county performs its usual functions. A director of a levee district embracing all the parts of several counties is not a county officer within the statute requiring prosecuting attorneys to institute proceedings against persons usurping a county office. State ex rel. Going v. Higginbotham, 106 S. W. 484, 485, 84 Ark. 537 (citing Massenburg v. Commissioners of Bibb County, 23 S. E. 998, 96 Ga. 614; Sheboygan County v. Parker, 3 Wall. [70 U. S.] 93, 18 L. Ed. 33).

Public administrator

A public administrator is a "county officer," and, in acting under a statute requiring him to take charge of the estates upon which letters of administration have been issued to him by the court, is a public officer acting by virtue of his office and not merely by virtue of the letters issued to him by the court. Los Angeles County v. Kellogg, 80 Pac. 861, 862, 146 Cal. 590.

Road supervisor

A road supervisor appointed by the county commissioners is not a "county officer" within a constitutional provision requiring the Legislature to provide for the election of county officers by general and uniform laws. State ex rel. Griffith v. Newland, 79 Pac. 983, 984, 37 Wash. 428.

State attorney

"The state's attorney is a 'county officer,' and his status as such is fixed by the Constitution which creates his office. He is elected for and within a county to perform his duties therein and is not distinguished in any manner from the clerks of the courts, sheriff, coroner, and other officers connected with the administration of justice within the county." Cook County v. Healy, 78 N. E. 623, 625, 222 Ill. 310.

See State Officer.

Supervisor of assessment

Const. art. 6, § 4, declares that "sheriffs, coroners, registers of deeds, district attorneys, and all other county officers, except judicial officers, shall be chosen by the electors of the respective counties once in every two years." Article 13, § 9, declares that all "county officers" whose election or appointment is not provided for by the Constitution shall be elected by the electors of the respective counties, or appointed by the boards of supervisors or other county authorities, "as the Legislature shall direct." Laws 1901, p. 649, c. 445, creates the office of county supervisor of assessment, in substance making it the duty of the supervisor to see that the various assessors perform their duties, and the supervisor is to be elected by the board of supervisors for a term of three years. Revision 1849, c. 10, was devoted to counties and county officers, including members of the board of supervisors, district attorney, etc., which system was continued in Revision 1858, c. 13, and again in Revision 1878, c. 37; all those dealt with being elected by the people. In 1882 article 6, § 4, was so amended as to add the words "all other county officers." Held, that in view of article 13 and the condition of the statutes at the time of the amendment of article 6, § 4, and in view of a course of legislation, St. 1898, § 1077 (Laws 1899, p. 554, c. 312, § 2), and St. 1898, § 1520 (Laws 1905, p. 157, c. 94), providing for the appointment of officers whose duties pertain to counties, a county supervisor of assessment is not a county officer, within the meaning of article 6, § 4, and hence such section is not violated by Laws 1901, p. 649, c. 445. State ex rel. Williams v. Samuelson, 111 N. W. 712, 713, 181 Wis. 499.

COUNTY PHYSICIAN

Neither the person appointed to care for the hospital and poorhouse of a county nor a graduate in medicine appointed to attend to the indigent sick is a "county physician," and the term has no proper application to the superintendent of a hospital and poorhouse. An indictment charging defendant with embezzlement of money coming into his possession by virtue of his trust as county physician is bad, since there is no such public office. People v. Shearer, 76 Pac. 813, 814, 143 Cal. 66.

COUNTY PRINTING

A newspaper publication of a list of nominations for state and county officers as required by statute is "county printing," for the work must be paid by the county. Board of Com'rs of Montezuma County v. Frederick, 115 Pac. 514, 516, 50 Colo. 464.

COUNTY PROPERTY

The term "county property," as used in Act March 10, 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 204), annexing a portion of Shoshone county to Nez Perce county, includes property acquired by tax deeds and the value of tax certificates owned by the county, but does not include delinquent taxes; and the value of such property, in determining the rights of the counties, must be ascertained as directed by provisions of the act. Shoshone County v. Thompson, 81 Pac. 73, 76, 11 Idaho, 130.

COUNTY PURPOSE

The words "for county purposes" in Const. art. 10, § 11, limiting taxation for county purposes to 40 cents on the $100, mean all subdivisions of the county for the use of which taxes may be imposed. State ex rel. Conrad v. Piper, 114 S. W. 1, 2, 214 Mo. 439.

As used in Const. N. C. art. 5, § 6, providing that the taxes levied by the commissioners of the several counties for "county purposes" shall be levied in like manner with the state taxes, and shall never exceed the total of the state taxes, except for a special purpose, and with the approval of the Legislature should be construed to mean ordinary current expenses of the county government, otherwise no significance is given to the words special purposes, the distinction being between ordinary, usual county purposes, which cannot exceed double the state tax, and special county purposes, which may, with the special approval of the General Assembly do so. Southern R. Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Mecklenburg County, 61 S. E. 690, 697, 148 N. C. 220.

Drainage

Drainage Law (Acts 1909, c. 185) § 39, providing that the preliminary expenses for the organization of a levee or drainage district may be paid out of the general county funds, to be refunded to the county out of assessments on the lands benefited, and, if not repaid, then to be adjudged against and collected out of the bonds of the petitioners for the district, was not a lending of the county's credit, in violation of Const. art. 2, § 29, but, even if construed as a lending of the county's credit, was not for that reason invalid; the organization of such district being a "county purpose," within the rule that a county's credit may be loaned for county purposes by the action of the quarterly court, without an election. State ex rel. Bigham v. Powers, 137 S. W. 1110, 1114, 124 Tenn. 553.

Roads

Under Rem. & Bal. Code, § 5087, which provides that three-fifths of the voters of a county may authorize the issuance of bonds to procure money for "strictly county purposes," counties may issue bonds when authorized by the voters, for the construction and improvement of roads, but not for their general repair; it not being a strictly county purpose, within the meaning of the statute. Shea v. Skagit County, 122 Pac. 1061, 1062, 68 Wash. 233.

Ship canal

Laws 1889-90, p. 37, § 2, provides that counties may contract indebtedness for "strictly county purposes" on a vote of the people, and section 3 provides that on the consent of three-fifths of the voters money may be raised and bonds issued therefor. Held, that such act did not give the county power to issue bonds for the construction of a ship canal for the benefit of the federal government. State ex rel. Potter v. King County, 88 Pac. 935, 937, 45 Wash. 519.

COUNTY ROAD

See Legal County Road.

If a highway has been traveled, used, improved, and worked by the public as a county road for a period of 10 years or more, it is a legal county road. Riddings v. Marion County, 91 Pac. 22, 23, 50 Or. 30.

Code, § 422, subd. 16, empowers the board of supervisors to discontinue any state or territorial highway, and subdivision 17 empowers them to establish or discontinue any county highway through or within the county. Section 751 empowers cities and towns to establish or vacate streets and alleys. Section 48, subd. 5, provides that the words "highway" and "road" include public bridges, and may be held equivalent to the words "county road," "county way," "common road," and "state road." Section 1507 provides that all public streets of villages are a part of the road. Held that, where a plat was made of land dividing it into lots, streets, and alleys prior to the incorporation of a town embracing the land platted, the streets and alleys became county roads subject to the jurisdiction of the board of supervisors, and though after the incorporation of the town the control may have passed to the city council, yet the incorporation of the town having been vacated, the control of the streets and alleys reverted to the board of supervisors. Chrisman v. Brandes, 112 N. W. 833, 835, 137 Iowa, 433.

The terms "street," "avenue," "road," "public road," and "county road" are used loosely and indiscriminately in legislation and judicial decisions relating to public highways, and little reliance can be placed on the particular term used to describe any given way. While the term "street" or "avenue" commonly applies to a public highway in a village, town, or city, and the term "road" to suburban highways, there may be roads in a city or town and street and avenues in the country. The words "country road," as used in the statute providing that any county road remaining unopened for public use for the space of five years after the order granted for opening it shall be vacated and the authority for building it barred, means those roads and highways under the control and supervision of the board of county commissioners of the respective counties, and does not include streets and alleys in incorporated cities and towns. Murphy v. King County, 88 Pac. 1115, 1116, 45 Wash. 587.

"The terms 'state road' and 'county road' seem to have no precise technical meaning, and it might be permissible to suppose that * * * they were used merely to distinguish highways created directly by the Legislature and those created by the county authorities under general laws. * * * But a better supported view is that any public road lying wholly within one county is a 'county road,' while a 'state road' extends through or into several counties. 'What is known in some sections as a state road is a highway laid out by the direct authority of the state, generally between distant places and through different counties, to supply a want felt by a large district of country, which, because of the diversity of interests, the local authorities are not willing to supply.' * * * 'A "state road" is a road running into two or more counties, and is distinguished by this from a "county road," which lies wholly within one county. The first was formerly established by acts of special legislation; the latter by county commissioners, under general laws.' "Where an act of the Legislature declares all section lines in a certain county to be public highways, and provides that they shall be opened by the board of county commissioners, such section lines thereby become county roads within the meaning of that term as used in an act providing that any part of a state or county road not opened for travel within a stated time shall be vacated. Board of Com'rs of Cowley County v. Johnson, 90 Pac. 805, 807, 76 Kan. 65 (quoting and adopting definition in State ex rel. Stebbins v. Treasurer of Wood County, 17 Ohio, 184).

COUNTY SCRIPT

Acts 1901, p. 374, c. 242, authorizing the commissioners of a county to issue coupon bonds, or "county script," not in excess of $5,000, to improve and enlarge the courthouse, limits the cost of the improvement to $5,000, and authorizes the issuance of coupon bonds or county script to that amount, and the commissioners may not issue bonds to the amount of $5,000 and notes for an additional sum to pay for the improvement; the phrase "county script" meaning notes or evidences of debt other than coupon bonds. Burgin v. Smith, 66 S. E. 607, 611, 151 N. C. 561.

COUNTY SEAL

"There is no law authorizing seals for clerks of counties. The county should have a seal for the authentication of its official acts, and the board of county commissioners is at liberty to adopt one bearing any legend or device it may choose. Under section 138 of the tax law the matter of affixing the seal (to tax deeds) is a part of the execution of the deed," and where a tax deed states that it is executed pursuant to statutory authority, and that the official seal of the county is affixed, and the acknowledgment shows that the act of the clerk in executing the instrument was an official act performed by virtue of his office, but the seal bears the words "Seal of county clerk of Decatur county, Kansas," the presence of the words "county clerk of," are not sufficient to overthrow all other indications of due execution, and the deed is valid on its face, for no evidence was introduced to show that the seal was not in fact the seal of the county, and hence the deed was not void for want of a seal. Clarke v. Tilden, 84 Pac. 139, 140, 72 Kan. 574.

COUNTY SEAT

The name "county seat" indicates the seat of government of a county, the town in which the county and other courts are held, and where the county officers discharge their duties. Graham v. Nix, 144 S. W. 214, 216.

Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 811, providing that no county seat situated within five miles of the geographical center of the county shall be removed, except by a two-thirds vote of the electors of the county voting thereon, article 819, providing that the county commissioners' court of each county, as soon as practicable after the establishment of the county seat, or its removal from one place to another, shall provide a courthouse and jail and offices for the county officers at the county seat, and article 1140, providing that clerks of the county courts shall have their offices at the county seat, and, when they do not reside there, shall have a deputy residing there, the "county seat" does not consist merely of the courthouse, jail, and other public buildings, but consists of the town plot of the town designated as the county seat at the time it is so designated. Ralls v. Parish (Tex.) 149 S. W. 810, 811.

The term "county seat," as used in a constitutional provision prohibiting the creation of a new county, so that its boundaries will approach nearer than 12 miles to the county seat of the county from which such new county may be taken, has reference to the legal county seat, and not a mere de facto one, resorted to as such by common consent and usage. Presidio County v. Jeff Davis County (Tex.) 77 S. W. 278, 279.

A "county seat" is the building where a court of record is held, and is designated in the manner provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 31, etc., and is not required to be located in a building or upon a site owned by the county. Smith v. Roberts, 113 N. Y. Supp. 672, 673, 60 Misc. Rep. 427.

The term "county seat," in Const. § 187, providing that no railroad shall pass within three miles of a county seat without passing through it and establishing a depot therein, means the municipality at which the county site is located according to its boundaries when the road is constructed. State v. Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co., 38 South. 732, 735, 86 Miss. 172, 122 Am. St. Rep. 277.

An act providing for the holding of certain terms of the circuit court at a place other than the county seat was not contrary to the provision of the Constitution forbidding removal of a county seat without an election, as the terms "county seat," "county site," and "courthouse," in Const. §§ 41, 104, do not embrace the seat of justice. Merchants' Nat.

Bank of La Fayette v. McNaron, 55 South. 242, 172 Ala. 469.

Under Gen. St. 1906, § 1805, requiring the regular terms of circuit courts to be held at the county seats of the respective counties, a county seat is the chief town of a county, where the county buildings and courts are located and county business transacted, and the particular building in which the court is held is not a factor as to the validity of the court proceedings, so long as the building is located at the county seat. Beville v. State, 55 South. 854, 855, 61 Fla. 8.

The words "county seat," in Act 1906, c. 71, providing for holding sessions of the circuit court in any county having a town not larger than the fourth class, but larger than the county seat, and not less than 12 miles by the most convenient route usually traveled from the county seat, are used to designate the town in which the courthouse is situated, and not the public buildings in the town, though the words are often used to designate the courthouse, jail, and other public buildings belonging to the county, and are used in this sense in the Constitution providing for the removal of the county seat, and are also so used in some statutes. City of Middleborough v. Pineville (Ky.) 98 S. W. 298, 299.

Acts 1908, p. 594, c. 336, approved March 14th, which in its title provides for submitting the question of the removal of the "courthouse" of any county, is not unconstitutional because providing for the removal of the "courthouse," and not the "county seat," as those terms in this state are synonymous. Conek v. Skeen, 63 S. E. 11, 18, 109 Va. 6 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1683).

COUNTY SITE

See County Seat.

A "county site" is the place where the county business is transacted, the courthouse located, and the superior court held. De Kalb County v. City of Atlanta, 65 S. E. 72, 74, 132 Ga. 727.

COUNTY TAX

"County taxes" include all amounts levied by taxation, and which are to be used in the counties where they are collected and where they are paid to the county treasurer, and taxes levied for school purposes under Acts 1903, c. 247, §§ 2, 3, and collected by the sheriffs of each county and paid to the treasurers thereof, are "county taxes" for the collection of which the sheriff is entitled to a commission under Acts 1903, c. 251, § 92. Board of Education of Iredell County v. Board of Com'rs of Iredell County, 49 S. E. 47, 48, 137 N. C. 63.

COUNTY TREASURER

The provision of Laws 1909, p. 17, c. 12, providing that the terms "county treasurer" and "county treasury," as used in all provisions of law relating to school funds, shall be construed to mean the county depository, is not subject to the objection that it is not within the title of the act entitled, "An act putting into effect the constitutional amendment adopted by the people at the last general election, relating to public schools, by amending sections 50, 57, 58, 60, 61, 63, 65, 66, 76, 77, 78, 80, 81, and 154, and adding 154a, of chapter 124 of the Acts of the Regular Session of the Twenty-Ninth Legislature relating to school districts and school funds." Charlton v. Cousins, 124 S. W. 422, 103 Tex. 116.

COUNTY TREASURY

See County Treasurer.

COUNTY WARRANT

A "county warrant," under the statute of Washington, is a promise by the county to pay it when money applicable thereto comes into the treasury, its maturity by analogy to a note being the time when the county treasurer gives notice of his readiness to pay it and stop the running of interest. Pauly Jail Bldg. & Mfg. Co. v. Jefferson County, 160 Fed. 866, 870, 88 C. C. A. 48.

COUNTY WAYS

Code, § 422, subd. 16, empowers the board of supervisors to discontinue any state or territorial highway, and subdivision 17 empowers them to establish or discontinue any county highway through or within the county. Section 751 empowers cities and towns to establish or vacate streets and alleys. Section 48, subd. 5, provides that the words "highway" and "road" include public bridges, and may be held equivalent to the words "county road," "county way," "common road," and "state road." Section 1507 provides that all public streets of villages are a part of the road. Held that, where a plat was made of land dividing it into lots, streets, and alleys prior to the incorporation of a town embracing the land platted, the streets and alleys became county roads subject to the jurisdiction of the board of supervisors, and though after the incorporation of the town the control may have passed to the city council yet the incorporation of the town having been vacated, the control of the streets and alleys reverted to the board of supervisors. Chrisman v. Brandes, 112 N. W. 833, 835, 137 Iowa, 433.

COUNTY WHERE CRIME WAS COMMITTED

"The 'county where a crime is committed,' within the meaning of a constitutional provision fixing the place of trial, means that political subdivision of the state, styled 'county,' which embraces the place where the crime was committed, and a General Assembly can no more deprive a defendant of this right by the creation of a new county than it can by the change of a county line. The fact that the case is pending against him at the time the new county is created does not deprive him of the right to demand that he be tried in the county in which the crime was committed, although the county as such was not in existence at the time the offense was perpetrated. What the Constitution guarantees is a trial in the county where the offense was committed, not the beginning of a prosecution in that county." Pope v. State, 53 S. E. 384, 387, 124 Ga. 801, 110 Am. St. Rep. 197, 4 Ann. Cas. 551.

Act 1880 (17 St. at Large, p. 336; Cr. Code 1902, § 119) provides that if a person is wounded in one county and die in another the person guilty may be indicted and prosecuted in either county. Const. 1895, art. 6, § 2, provides that, unless a change of venue be had under the provisions thereof, the defendant shall be tried in the county where the offense was committed. Held, that the constitutional provision must be construed in the light of the act of 1880, and the provision entitling a defendant to trial in the "county where the offense was committed" would be construed to mean where the offense was deemed committed under existing laws; and hence, where a person was wounded in C. county, but died in S. county, defendant was properly indicted and convicted for the crime in the latter county. State v. McCoomer, 60 S. E. 237, 239, 79 S. C. 63.

COUNTY WORK

Acts 1899, p. 171, c. 110, § 4, provides that no bid for any county work shall be received unless the bids are accompanied by an affidavit of noncollusion, the statute being a substantial re-enactment of Sp. Acts 1877, p. 29, c. 9 (Rev. St. 1881, § 4246). Held that, the Supreme Court having held, prior to the enactment of the act of 1899, that a board of county commissioners in constructing a free gravel road were engaged in a "county work" within the meaning of the act of 1877, such construction applies to the act of 1899. State v. Dorsey, 78 N. E. 843, 844, 167 Ind. 199.

COUPLE OF MINUTES

The expression, a "couple of minutes," used by a plaintiff in an action against a carrier in her testimony that, after getting on the car, she waited a "couple of minutes" before attempting to reach her seat, is not necessarily a statement that she desisted for 120 seconds in the act of seeking a seat, but it should be construed to mean a brief space of time, as a second or a few seconds, and the Century Dictionary is authority for the statement that a minute is loosely speaking but a "short space of time." McGlynn v. Nassau Electric R. Co., 113 N. Y. Supp. 119, 120, 128 App. Div. 866.

COUPLED WITH ABILITY TO COMMIT

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 592, providing that the term "coupled with an ability to commit" a battery means that the person making the assault must be in such a position that, if not prevented, he may inflict a battery, and that he must be within such distance of the person assailed as to make it within his power to commit battery, etc., to constitute an assault by alarming a person, the thing done must first be unlawful, and must be done in an angry or threatening manner, and with intent to alarm; but there may be an intent to alarm which is not unlawful, and one may compel trespassers on his premises to leave them, and the means used to accomplish that purpose, if not intended to bring about injury, cannot become an assault. Trimble v. State, 125 S. W. 40, 42, 57 Tex. Cr. R. 439.

COUPLER

COUPLING

One connecting and disconnecting the air hose between cars is "coupling or uncoupling" cars within safety appliance act (Act March 2, 1893, c. 196, 27 Stat. 531. United States v. Boston & M. R. Co., 168 Fed. 148, 152.

COUPLING AUTOMATICALLY

Automatic couplers which will both couple and can be uncoupled without the necessity of men going between the cars are what are meant by the provision of Act March 2, 1893, c. 196, § 2, 27 Stat. 531, prohibiting common carriers from using any car in moving interstate commerce not equipped with "couplers coupling automatically by impact, and which can be uncoupled without the necessity of men going between the ends of the cars." Johnson v. Southern Pac. Co., 25 Sup. Ct. 158-162, 196 U. S. 1, 49 L. Ed. 363.

"A vessel which voluntarily becomes motionless cannot properly be said to keep her course. The word 'course,' both from its etymology and the primary meaning given to it by lexicographers, signifies a running or moving forward—a continuous progression or advance." The Britannia, 14 Sup. Ct. 795, 801, 153 U. S. 130, 38 L. Ed. 660.

COURSE OF BUSINESS

See Due Course of Business; Ordinary Course of Business; Regular Course of Business; Usual Course of Business.

COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT

The expression, "in the course of his employment," as affecting the liability of a master for the negligence of his servants, means

"while engaged in the service of the master," and is not synonymous with "during the period covered by his employment." Slater v. Advance Thresher Co., 107 N. W. 133, 136, 97 Minn. 305, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 508, 114 Am. St. Rep. 711; Riley v. Roach, 134 N. W. 14, 19, 168 Mich. 294, 87 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834.

A master is responsible for the tort of his servant, done in the scope of his authority with the view to the furtherance of the master's business, and not for a purpose personal to himself, though done willfully or negligently and in excess of his authority, or contrary to express instructions, or where the act of a servant is within the course of his employment. Penas v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 127 N. W. 926, 929, 112 Minn. 203, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 627, 140 Am. St. Rep. 470.

The term "scope of employment," as used with reference to an employer's liability for his employee's wrongful acts, is sometimes called "course of employment." Stewart v. Cary Lumber Co., 59 S. E. 545, 562, 146 N. C. 47.

The terms "course of employment" and "scope of authority," as applied to a servant's acts, are not susceptible of accurate definition, since what acts are within the scope of the servant's employment so as to render the master liable therefor must be gathered from the surrounding circumstances, the master's liability depending upon his consent, express or implied, to the servant's acts. Robards v. P. Bannon Sewer Pipe Co., 113 S. W. 429, 431, 130 Ky. 380, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 923, 132 Am. St. Rep. 394.

Within the rule that the master is liable for the torts of his servant, committed in the course of his servant's employment, the language "in the course of his servant's employment" is not synonymous with "whilst the servant was employed by him," but refers to any act of the servant, however ill judged, done in connection with, or in furtherance of, the purposes of his employment. Gann v. Great Southern Lumber Co., 59 South. 830, 832, 131 La. 400.

COURT

See Inner Court.

In Tenement House Act, Laws 1901, c. 334, § 2, providing that a court is an open, unoccupied space, other than a yard, on the same lot with a tenement house, the word "court" refers to open, unoccupied spaces which are wholly or partially inclosed at the end, rather than to spaces which are open to free access from both the street and yard of the premises, and which, if regarded as courts within the meaning of the law, are to be considered as in reality two or double courts. Gutting v. Brennan, 89 N. Y. Supp. 574, 575, 97 App. Div. 23.

Tenement House Act, Laws 1901, p. 889, c. 334, § 2, provides that "a court is an open, unoccupied space, other than a yard, on the same lot with a tenement house"; that "a court not extending to the street or yard is an inner court. A court extending to the street or yard is an outer court. If it extends to the street it is a street court. If it extends to the yard it is a yard court." No mention, however, is made in the definition either of "yard" or "court" of a court extending from the street to the yard. Section 58, as amended by chapter 179, p. 408, Laws 1903, provides that, when one side of the outer court is situated on the lot line, the width of the court, measured from the lot line to the opposite wall of the building, for tenement houses 60 feet in height, shall not be less than 6 feet in any part, and for every 12 feet of increase, or fraction thereof, in height of the building, such width shall be increased 6 inches throughout the entire height of the court, and that wherever the outer court exceeds 65 feet in length, "and does not extend from the street to the yard," the entire court shall be increased, etc., except that in tenement houses not exceeding four stories and cellar, and not occupied by more than eight families in all, in which each apartment extends through from the street to the yard, the width of an outer court situated on the lot line shall not be less than 4 feet in any part, "provided that the length of such outer court does not exceed thirty-six feet." Relator contemplated erecting four three-story and cellar tenement houses, each to be occupied by three families, one on each floor; the buildings to be each 55 feet in depth, with an open space or passageway 4 feet wide, extending the entire depth of the building. Held, that courts extending from the street to the yard were excepted from such section, and hence such way extending from street to yard, whether regarded as a mere passage, and hence not within the section, or as two courts, each an outer court—one leading to the street, and the other to the yard—was not within the prohibition of the section. Gutting v. Brennan, 89 N. Y. Supp. 574, 97 App. Div. 23.

Under Tenement House Act N. Y. (Laws 1901, p. 889, c. 334) § 2, subd. 3, defining a "court" as an open unoccupied space other than a yard on the same lot with a tenement house, the spaces on either side of each house upon which the windows open are within the designation. People ex rel. Cohen v. Butler, 109 N. Y. Supp. 900, 905, 125 App. Div. 384.

"Courts" in a constitutional sense are the tribunals established to administer justice. Dixon v. People, 127 Pac. 930, 932, 53 Colo. 527.

A "court" is a "tribunal established for the public administration of justice, composed of one or more judges who sit for that purpose at fixed times and places, attended by proper officers." Butts v. Armor, 30 Atl. 357, 360, 164 Pa. 73, 26 L. R. A. 213 (quoting Burr. Law Dict.; Mason v. Woerner, 18 Mo. 570).

"A 'court' is not a person, but an organized body, meeting at fixed times and places for the hearing and decision of cases, having attorneys to present and manage its business, clerks to record and attest its acts, and ministerial officers to execute its commands." In re Lance, 106 N. Y. Supp. 211, 216, 55 Misc. Rep. 13 (citing 11 Cyc. pp. 652-654).

"A 'court' may be defined as the body in the government organized for the public administration of justice, at the time and place prescribed by law." Marsden v. Harlocker, 85 Pac. 328, 329, 48 Or. 90, 120 Am. St. Rep. 786.

A "court" is a judicial assembly. Circuit courts, while they are courts of general jurisdiction, are courts not for an entire circuit, but for each county in which a circuit court sits. The judge, however, is for the circuit. The sitting of the circuit court in one county in the circuit does not interfere with the circuit court sitting in another county. State v. Pope, 85 S. W. 633, 634, 110 Mo. App. 520 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.).

"The word 'court' originally meant only a yard, palace, or garden, and according to Cowell it meant 'the house where the king remained with his retinue; also, the place where justice was administered. Anderson's Law Dictionary. So, in early history, the court meant the place where the king was domiciled, because the king was actually the fountain and dispenser of justice. The earlier courts were merely assemblages in the courtyard of the baron or of the king himself by those whose duty it was to appear at stated times or upon summons. This idea of the place predominating as the designation of a court caused Blackstone to adopt Coke's definition that 'a court is a place where justice is judicially administered.' 3 Blackstone's Commentaries, 24. Indeed, the Supreme Court of Alabama, in Ex parte Branch & Co., 63 Ala. 384, adopted the definition that a court is 'a place where justice is administered.' This definition has been held to be too narrow, and the definition given by a majority of judicial decisions is that: 'A court is a tribunal duly constituted, and present at the time and place fixed by law for judicial investigation and determination of controversies.'" In re Steele, 156 Fed. 853, 856 (citing 2 Cent. Dict. p. 1312).

"A 'court' has been defined to be an incorporeal being, and as that body in the government to which the public administration of justice is delegated." It is in this sense that the word "courts" in the Constitution must be understood, and consistently with the general plan of our government and the judicial history of our country the courts ordained and established by Congress, pursuant to the Constitution, should be organized tribunals, their existence should be perpetual, and they should have the administrative and judicial powers pertaining to courts of judicature, and adequate to the efficient administration of justice within the scope and range of national responsibility. A law which only makes provision for terms of court to be held at specified times and places is inadequate to constitute a court having the attributes of continuity and permanence of existence necessary to be possessed by every court designed to perform the judicial functions of the government within a district. The creation of a judicial district with defined boundaries does not of itself establish any description of tribunal, and a fortiori does not establish a Circuit Court of the United States. Act March 2, 1905, c. 1305, pt. 1, 33 Stat. 824, dividing Washington into two judicial districts, interpreted consistently with the practice of Congress and the judicial history of the country and the general laws in force relating to the federal judiciary and the jurisdiction and powers of the federal courts and judges, lacks none of the essentials of a sufficient organic law, and the Circuit and District Courts of the Western district of Washington as thereby created are the same courts as those previously existing in the district of Washington, having the same judges and officers and the same powers and jurisdiction within that part of the original district remaining after the Eastern district had been carved therefrom, and being still within the boundaries are constituent parts of the Ninth judicial circuit. While the act does not "ordain and establish" courts in said Western district as required by Const. art. 3, § 1, in express words, nor define their jurisdiction and powers further than to fix their terms, nor assign the district to either of the nine judicial circuits, nor provide for the appointment of judges and officers therein, otherwise than by providing that the district judge and officers of the district of Washington then in office shall be the district judge and officers of the Western district, the intention of Congress in respect to all such matters is clear from the act, and the provisions necessary to carry out such intention, which are not expressed, are to be implied. Geiger v. Tacoma Ry. & Power Co., 141 Fed. 169, 170.

The word "court" in Chinese Exclusion Act 1892, § 6, providing that a Chinese laborer without a certificate of residence shall be arrested and taken before a United States judge and deported, unless he shows to the satisfaction of the court that he was a resident at the passage of the act, and that the cost of arrest and trial shall be in the discretion of the court, etc., refers to the tribunal authorized to deal with the subject, whether composed of a justice, a judge, or commissioner. Chin Bak Kan v. United States, 22 Sup. Ct. 891, 894, 186 U. S. 193, 46 L. Ed. 1121.

A "court" is defined to be a place where-in justice is judicially administered, and in every court there must be three constituent parts—the actor, reus, and judex: The actor, or plaintiff, who complains of injury done; the reus, or defendant, who is called on to make satisfaction for it; and the judex, or judicial power, which is to examine the truth of the fact, to determine the law arising upon the fact, and, if an injury appears to have been done, to ascertain and by its officers to apply the remedy. Accoult v. G. A. Stowers Furniture Co. (Tex.) 83 S. W. 1104, 1105 (citing Chase's Blackstone, 626, 627).

Auditor

An "auditor" appointed by a court is not the "court," but an officer of the court. An auditor is improperly appointed in a proceeding under a statute requiring that "all hearings shall be in open court." McArthur Bros. Co. v. Commonwealth, 83 N. E. 334, 335, 197 Mass. 137.

Board of arbitrators

The statutory arbitration provided for and regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure is a "judicial proceeding," and hence, in view of section 6, forbidding a "court" to be open or transact any business on Sunday, to proceed with the hearing of arbitration on Sunday, in the face of objections and protest of parties, is illegal and constituted misconduct violating the award. In re Picker, 114 N. Y. Supp. 289, 292, 130 App. Div. 88.

Board of awards

102 Ohio Laws, p. 524, creating a state insurance fund for the benefit of injured and the dependents of killed employes, and providing for the creation of a state liability board of awards to establish the fund from premiums paid by employers and employes, is not invalid as a delegation of judicial power to the board of awards. State ex rel. Yaple v. Creamer, 97 N. E. 602, 607, 85 Ohio St. 349, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 694.

Board of immigration inspectors

Boards of immigration inspectors are not "courts of justice" within the treaty between Italy and the United States, giving citizens of either party free access to the courts of justice of the other with the right to employ counsel in all trials at law, and, on the examination of an alien Italian immigrant by the board of inspectors relative to his qualifications for admission, he is not entitled to be represented by counsel. United States v. Williams, 190 Fed. 897, 900.

Board of police commissioners

Act Aug. 26, 1879 (Acts 1878-79, p. 311), creating the board of police commissioners of Augusta, gave the board power to elect, discharge, suspend, or fine policemen. Act Sept. 14, 1881 (Acts 1880-81, p. 369), provides that when any person resident of the city shall be required to attend as a witness at the trial of any officer or private of the police force before such board, the secretary of the board upon application must issue a summons directed to such person, and if such person fail to appear he may be attached by the commissioners for contempt. Act Dec. 6, 1902 (Acts 1902, p. 342), gives the president of such board power to administer an oath or affirmation to any witness appearing at the trial of a policeman, and makes violation of such oath perjury. Held, that the board, when sitting for trial of charges preferred against a police officer, is a "court," within Civ. Code 1910, § 4644, giving every court power to preserve order in its immediate presence, and as near thereto as necessary to prevent interruption of its proceedings, and to compel obedience to its judgments, under which any court has power to punish for contempt committed in its immediate presence. Plunkett v. Hamilton, 70 S. E. 781, 782, 136 Ga. 72, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1259.

Clerk of Court

Revisal 1905, § 352, provides that when power is conferred or duties imposed upon the superior court the words "superior court" or "court" mean the clerk of the superior court, unless otherwise stated, or reference is made to a regular term of the court. Section 2842 provides that a surety on paying money, upon producing to the superior court a receipt showing that he has satisfied an execution and expended money as surety, the court shall award execution against the estate of the principal. Held, that the clerk of the superior court has authority to enter a judgment for the recovery of money paid by the surety for the principal. Bank of North Wilkesboro v. Wilkesboro Hotel Co., 61 S. E. 570, 573, 147 N. C. 594.

Under section 25, Act No. 49, p. 77, of 1906, a candidate who feels aggrieved by the decision of the committee as to the result of the primary election has 24 hours within which to apply to a court of competent jurisdiction for relief, and such application, in the form of a petition, may be delivered to the clerk (whose duty it is to receive and file it), and, when so delivered, is an application "to said court" within the meaning of the law, whether the judge be absent or present. Vial v. Elfer, 45 South. 545, 547, 120 Ga. 673.

Under Rev. Laws, c. 128, §§ 13, 15, authorizing appeals from the land court to the superior court, and providing that the appeal shall be entered within 30 days, and on the "entry of appeal" the appellant shall file in the superior court copies of all material papers in the case, certified by the recorder, etc., an entry of an appeal in the superior court is an entry with a proper officer of the court at the place where its records are kept and where the clerk does his work, and the mere receipt of the papers on appeal by the clerk or an assistant clerk at his residence is not an entry in court, since chapter 159, § 18, providing that for entering orders and issuing writs the "court shall always be open," does not mean that there is a court which is open wherever a clerk or assistant is found, without the presence of any justice. Old Colony St. Ry. v. Thomas, 91 N. E. 1006, 1009, 205 Mass. 529, 18 Ann. Cas. 247.

As commission

The commission appointed under Sess. Laws 1907, p. 480, § 47, and page 835, §§ 1, 3, 5, is not a "court," within Rev. St. § 720, prohibiting the granting of injunctions by federal courts to stay proceedings in a state court. Murray v. Wilson Distilling Co., 164 Fed. 1, 23, 24, 92 C. G. A. 1.

The commission provided for by Acts 1893, p. 386, c. 231, § 13, providing that if a municipal corporation, after deciding to establish a municipal lighting plant, refuses to purchase a private plant operated by a corporation incorporated by the General Assembly, it may be compelled to do so; and a commission appointed by the superior court to adjudicate whether the plant should be purchased, and what the price and conditions of sale should be, is not a court, nor its members judges, within the meaning of the constitutional provision prescribing the mode by which judges are to be appointed. The functions of the commission are but quasi-judicial. Norwich Gas & Electric Co. v. City of Norwich, 57 Atl. 746, 749, 76 Conn. 565 (citing State v. New Haven & Northampton Co., 43 Conn. 351; New Milford Water Co. v. Watson, 52 Atl. 947, 53 Atl. 57, 75 Conn. 237).

Committee on appeal

Pub. Acts 1909, p. 687, No. 292, providing for a committee on appeal to pass on the action of the board of supervisors in equalizing the valuation of the property of the county for taxation, with power to summon witnesses, hear evidence, and determine whether the equalization made by the board is just, confers quasi judicial power on the committee on appeal, but it is not a "court" within Const. art. 7, § 1, providing that the judicial power shall be vested in enumerated courts, and such inferior courts as the Legislature, by a two-thirds vote of the members elected to each house, may establish. Zimmer v. Board of Sup'rs of Bay County, 123 N. W. 899, 901, 159 Mich. 213; Robinson v. Westover, 123 N. W. 904, 159 Mich. 225.

County board

A board of county commissioners, duly organized, constitutes a "court," clothed with judicial functions and ministerial duties conferred by statute, and its final decrees, until set aside, are to be given the same effect and degree of conclusiveness which generally attach to judgments of judicial tribunals. Bartlett v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 81 N. E. 204, 205, 195 Mass. 299 (citing Smith v. Mayor, etc., of City of Boston, 1 Gray [67 Mass.] 72; Brewer v. Boston C. & F. R. Co., 113 Mass. 52; Plummer v. Inhabitants of Waterville, 32 Me. 566; Homer v. Fish, 1 Pick. [18 Mass.] 435, 439, 11 Am. Dec. 218; Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. [77 U. S.] 308, 19 L. Ed. 931).

Court-martial

A court-martial is not a "court" within the meaning of sections 85 and 86, Const., nor within the meaning of section 7810, Rev. Codes 1905, but it is a "tribunal" within the meaning of section 7810, Rev. Codes 1905, and its acts may be inquired into by certiorari. State ex rel. Poole v. Peake, 135 N. W. 197, 199, 22 N. D. 457, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 354.

Grand jury as component part

Though a grand jury is an adjunct of the court, it is not such part thereof as, under Comp. Laws, § 3556, authorizing summary punishment for a contempt in the immediate presence of the court, permits the judge to summarily punish offenders for any act before the grand jury, without proceeding on affidavit and citing the offender to show cause why he should not be punished. Ex parte Hedden, 90 Pac. 737, 744, 29 Nev. 352, 13 Ann. Cas. 1173.

A "court" is an organized body, with definite powers, meeting at certain times and places for the hearing of cases and other matters and aided by its proper officers; and, when properly summoned and organized, the grand jury are a constituent part thereof. People v. Rotole, 115 N. Y. Supp. 854, 61 Misc. Rep. 579.

As judge

Court as judge, see Judge.

"The judge does not alone constitute the 'court.' It takes not only the judge but also the subordinate officials and all the machinery to make a court. The courts are county, not district, affairs." State v. Ely, 113 N. W. 711, 716, 16 N. D. 569, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 638.

"The judge is an essential constituent of a 'court,' and there can be no court in the absence of the judge, or judges." State v. Jackson, 113 N. W. 880, 881, 21 S. D. 494, 16 Ann. Cas. 87.

The term "judge," as distinguished from "court," denotes the individual; the latter denoting the judicial tribunal. A judge has no judicial power outside of the court in which he officiates and when discharging the functions of his office he is the court in concrete form, and in this sense is often called the "court," but, strictly and technically speaking, the judge and the court are wholly distinct, and a condemnation proceeding, whether instituted in vacation or term time, is a proceeding in court. Hartshorn v. Illinois Valley Ry. Co., 75 N. E. 122, 126, 216 Ill. 392.

A "court" is a well-recognized immaterial entity which continues though the judge may die. A proceeding before a justice of the Supreme Court on the death of the justice abates unless some provision of law exists for its continuance before some other justice. A city magistrate is not a justice of any court, but is a person merely invested with judicial powers. City magistrates are not district courts within Const. 1894, art. 6, § 17, providing that justices of the peace and district court justices may be elected in the different cities as shall be prescribed by law, and the manner of their election cannot be provided for by law, but they must be elected by the electors of the city or appointed by the municipal authorities thereof. People ex rel. Joyce v. Guden, 75 N. Y. Supp. 347, 348.

Copyright Act March 4, 1909, c. 320, § 25, 35 Stat. 1081, provides that an infringer of the copyright laws shall be liable to pay the proprietor such damages as he suffered by the infringement, as well as all profits which the infringer shall have made from such infringement, and in proving profits plaintiff shall be required to prove sales only, and the defendant every element of cost which he claims, or in lieu of actual damages and profits, such damages as to the court shall appear to be just, and in assessing such damages the court in its discretion may allow the amount thereafter stated, but, in the case of a newspaper reproduction of a copyrighted photograph, such damages shall not exceed the sum of $200, nor be less than $50, and such damages in no other case shall exceed $5,000, nor be less than $250, and shall not be regarded as a penalty. Held, that the statute, by using the word "court," did not require that the judge acting by himself should assess the damages when a case was presented calling for an award under the minimum damage clause, and that the court, under such circumstances, properly directed the jury that, if they found for plaintiff, they must award at least $250 for each infringement. Mail & Express Co. v. Life Pub. Co., 192 Fed. 899, 901, 113 C. C. A. 377.

Under Code, § 4110, requiring a certificate of importance as a condition precedent to an appeal in an action involving less than $100 issued by the trial judge, the statute does not require that the certificate be made by the trial court, though it may be properly so made, since, though a judge is not necessarily a court, a "court" necessarily includes the judge, and, as the statute required the act to be performed by the judge, it could also be lawfully performed by the judge while sitting as a "court." Salinger v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 126 N. W. 362, 365, 147 Iowa, 484.

The word "court," as used in Const. 1885, § 1, art. 5, providing that the judicial power of the state shall be vested in a Supreme Court, circuit court, city court, county judges, and justices of the peace, is of broad meaning, and, as applied to the circuit courts, means that a circuit judge is under certain circumstances a court; for, if he were not a court, he could not exercise judicial power under the Constitution and statutes of the state. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Mallard, 43 South. 755, 764, 53 Fla. 515 (citing 11 Cyc. p. 655; McGee v. Ancrum, 15 South. 231, 33 Fla. 499; State ex rel. Florida Pub. Co. v. Hocker, 16 South. 614, 35 Fla. 19; Simonton v. State ex rel. Turman, 31 South. 821, 44 Fla. 289; State v. Johnson, 13 Fla. 33, text 42; Carper v. Cook, 19 S. E. 379, 39 W. Va. 348-348; Porter v. Flick, 84 N. W. 262, 60 Neb. 773; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Northern Indiana R. Co., 3 Ind. 239, 245).

Rev. St. 1895, art. 1293, provides that the parties may submit the matter in controversy between them to the court upon an agreed statement of facts made out and signed by counsel and filed with the clerk, and in such case the statement so agreed to and assigned and certified by the "court" to be correct, and the judgment rendered thereon, shall constitute the record of the case. Held, construing the section in view of the prior statutes on the subject (Acts 7th Leg. c. 92, § 12, Rev. St. 1879, arts. 1293, 1379, and Rev. St. 1895, art. 1381), and in view of article 3268, requiring the court to look for the legislative intention, keeping in view the old law, the evil and the remedy, that article 1293 did not authorize a statement of facts to be authenticated by the "judge," the term "court" as used therein not being equivalent to "judge," so that a certificate, by the trial judge attached to a purported agreed statement of facts long after the term and after the "court" had ceased by the expiration of the term, was not a compliance with the statute. Chickasha Mill. Co. v. Crutcher (Tex.) 141 S. W. 355, 357.

"A 'court' is not a judge, nor is a judge a 'court.' A judge is a public officer who, by virtue of his office, is clothed with judicial authority. A 'court' is defined to be a place in which justice is judicially administered; it is the exercise of judicial power by the proper officer or officers at a time and place appointed by law. The officers exist independent of the exercise of such appointed jurisdiction, though the 'court' may not, in general, be holden independent of its officers." Under Chinese Exclusion Act Sept. 13, 1888, § 13, 25 Stat. 476, providing that any such Chinese person convicted before a commissioner of a United States court may, within ten days from such conviction, appeal to the judge of the District Court for the district, the right of appeal is to the judge as a special tribunal, and not to the District "Court." Chow Loy v. United States, 112 Fed. 354, 359, 50 C. C. A. 279.

The Legislature often uses the words "court" and "judge," "district court" and "district judge," without discrimination. "Court" will be construed to mean "judge," and "judge" will be construed to mean "court," wherever either construction is necessary to carry into effect the obvious intent of the Legislature. It is held, therefore, that by the words "district court," as used in section 1 of the act in question (Gen. Stat. 1909, § 2282), the Legislature meant to confer upon the judge of the district court, in certain counties, authority to appoint a county auditor. Sartin v. Snell, 125 Pac. 47, 49, 87 Kan. 485.

A "court" is "a tribunal established for the public administration of justice and composed of one or more judges who sit for that purpose at fixed times and places." The term "court" may mean the judge or judges of the court or the judge and the jury, according to the connection and the object of its use. (A. L. D.) Act Pa. April 14, 1903, entitled an act to fix the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court, the judges of the superior court, the judges of the court of common pleas, and the judges of the orphans' court, is an act relating to courts. Commonwealth v. Mathues, 59 Atl. 961, 976, 210 Pa. 372.

The term "court" is not infrequently used as the equivalent of "judge." It has been said to be an organized body with defined powers, meeting at certain times and places for the hearing and decision of causes and of other matters brought before it, and aided in this, its proper business, by its proper officers, viz., attorneys and counsel to present and manage the business, clerks to record and attest its acts and decisions, and ministerial officers to execute its commands and secure order in its proceedings. It is quite certain, however, that the mere absence of any one of the officers mentioned, save the judge, does not suspend the existence or functions of the court. After acquiescing during the trial in the discharge, by another person, not sworn as a deputy, of the function of the clerk, it is too late to raise the objection in a motion for new trial that the court was not properly organized. State v. Baudoin, 40 South. 42, 43, 115 La. 773 (quoting and adopting definition in Burhill).

Congress at times interchanges the words "court" and "judge." The word "courts" in Act March 3, 1899, c. 424, 30 Stat. 1116, providing for pay of bailiffs and criers, and that persons employed under Rev. St. § 715 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 579), shall be deemed to be in actual attendance when they attend on the order of the courts, etc., was intended to cover not only courts in session but absent judges. United States v. McCabe, 129 Fed. 708, 711, 64 C. C. A. 236.

The word "court," as used in a statute authorizing an appellate court, upon reversal, to render such judgment as the court below should have rendered, means the body organized to administer justice, and includes judge and jury. Henne & Meyer v. Moultrie, 77 S. W. 807, 608, 97 Tex. 216.

Though the police judge of a city of the second class exercises judicial functions, he is not a repository of judicial power within Const. art. 3, § 1, vesting the judicial power in certain courts where the Legislature can require him to notify the county attorney of violations of the prohibitory liquor law which come to his knowledge, and to furnish the county attorney the names of the witnesses by whom such violations may be proven under penalty of fine and forfeiture of his office. Gen. St. 1901, § 2462. State v. Keener, 97 Pac. 860, 861, 78 Kan. 649, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 615.

As judge at chambers or presiding

The word "court," in the statute providing that a judgment or final order of the district court may be reversed or modified for errors appearing on the record, means not only the tribunal over which a judge presides, but also the judge himself, when exercising, at chambers, judicial power conferred by statute. Porter v. Flick, 84 N. W. 262, 60 Neb. 773.

Where a minute entry, reciting the drawing of a jury in a capital case, stated that the "court" proceeded to publicly draw from the jury box as provided by law, etc., and it appeared that the court consisted of two judges, the word "court," as there used, must be held to mean the presiding judge. Rogers v. State, 52 South. 33, 166 Ala. 10, 11.

As judge in vacation

The word "court" having a well-defined meaning, it cannot be supposed that the Legislature when using it without defining or qualifying it in granting certain powers to courts meant the judge or chancellor, and so, while certain courts are given authority to decree temporary alimony, the chancellor in vacation is without jurisdiction to order alimony pendente lite, and his order committing a defendant because of failure to give bonds for compliance therewith is a mere nullity. Ex parte Helmert (Ark.) 147 S. W. 1143, 1144.

A motion under Rev. St. 1903, c. 84, § 53, to set aside a verdict for newly discovered evidence, must be made in court, and the term "court," as applied to actions at law, means the court in session, and a justice in vacation is not the court. Mitchell v. Emons, 71 Atl. 321, 323, 104 Me. 76.

As prescribed time and place

A "court" is a place where justice is judicially administered, and to constitute a court, it must meet at the place appointed by law, and its judicial power can only be exercised at such place. Belford v. State, 131 S. W. 953, 954, 96 Ark. 274.

"A 'court' consists of persons officially assembled under authority of law, at the appropriate time and place, for the administration of justice; * * * the place of meeting is an important element in the definition." Board of Com'rs of Day County v. State of Kansas, 91 Pac. 699, 709, 19 Okl. 375 (quoting and adopting the definition in Re Allison, 22 Pac. 820, 13 Colo. 525, 10 L. R. A. 790, 16 Am. St. Rep. 224).

"A 'court' constitutes the persons officially assembled under authority of law at the appropriate time and place for the administering of justice." Where the law prescribes the time and place for the holding of court, then the time and place are as essential limitations of jurisdiction as are subject-matter and parties. Hanley v. City of Medford, 108 Pac. 188, 190, 56 Or. 171 (quoting Marsden v. Harlocker, 85 Pac. 328, 331, 48 Or. 90, 97, 120 Am. St. Rep. 786).

Public service commission

The public service commission of Vermont is not a "court." Central Vermont Ry. Co. v. Redmond, 189 Fed. 683, 684.

The Mississippi railroad commission is not a "court" within the meaning of Rev. St. U. S. § 720, forbidding the federal courts to enjoin proceedings in a state court. Mississippi R. Commission v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 27 Sup. Ct. 90, 93, 203 U. S. 335, 51 L. Ed. 209.

Injunctive relief against railway passenger rates as fixed by the Virginia State Corporation Commission may be granted by a federal court if such rates are confiscatory, although, for some purposes, the commission is a court, since proceedings to establish rates are legislative, and therefore are not comprehended by the provision of Rev. St. § 720, forbidding federal courts from enjoining proceedings in state courts, which provision looks to the character of the proceedings, not the character of the body. Prentiss v. Atlantic Coast Line Co., 29 Sup. Ct. 67, 74, 211 U. S. 210, 53 L. Ed. 150.

Referee

Under the Bankruptcy Act, the word "court" may include the referee, but does not of necessity. When it does must be gathered from the context. In re Cobb, 112 Fed. 655, 656.

The definition of "court" in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, 30 Stat. 544, that "'court' shall mean the court of bankruptcy in which the proceedings are pending and may include the referee," supports the power of a referee, in the first instance, to enter an order to show cause why a person should not be required to pay over to the trustee in bankruptcy money in his hands belonging to the estate, and on the hearing to enter an order directing payment by a certain date. Mueller v. Nugent, 22 Sup. Ct. 269, 273, 184 U. S. 1, 46 L. Ed. 405.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, cl. 7, 30 Stat. 544, provides that the term "court" shall include a referee, and clause 19 declares that the word "persons" includes corporations and officers. By section 2, cl. 7, bankruptcy courts are invested with such jurisdiction in law and in equity as will enable them to exercise original jurisdiction in bankruptcy proceedings to cause the estates of bankrupts to be collected, reduced to money and distributed, and to determine controversies in relation thereto, except as otherwise provided, and section 23, par. "a," confers jurisdiction on the United States Circuit Courts in certain circumstances over controversies between trustees and adverse claimants concerning property claimed by the trustee, except as to proceedings in bankruptcy, jurisdiction over which rests exclusively in bankruptcy courts, and by paragraph "b" suits brought by the trustee, except those to recover property under certain specified sections of the act, can be brought in the bankruptcy court only by consent of the proposed defendant. Held, that a referee in bankruptcy had jurisdiction of a proceeding to compel the officers of a corporation to pay over the proceeds of stock sales alleged to belong to the corporation, and also to pay an amount assessed against them for unpaid shares. In re Kornit Mfg. Co., 192 Fed. 392, 394.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 21a, 30 Stat. 552, authorizes the court of bankruptcy to require any designated person to appear before a referee for examination, etc., and section 1a, cl. 7, 30 Stat. 544, defines "court" to mean a court of bankruptcy in which the proceedings are pending, and may include the referee. Section 38, cls. 2, 4, 30 Stat. 555, authorize referees in bankruptcy to exercise the powers vested in courts of bankruptcy for the examination of persons as witnesses, etc., and to perform such duties, except as to questions arising out of applications of bankrupts for compositions or discharges, as are conferred on courts of bankruptcy, and as shall be prescribed by the rules and orders thereof; and general bankruptcy order No. 12, subd. 1 (89 Fed. vii, 32 C. C. A. xvi), provides that all the proceedings except such as are required by the act or by the general orders to be before the judge, shall be had before the referee. Held, that where a bankruptcy proceeding had been referred generally to the referee, as authorized by Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 22, 30 Stat. 552, the referee had jurisdiction to order a secured creditor to appear before him for examination. In re Abbey Press, 134 Fed. 51, 54, 67 C. C. A. 161.

Under subdivision 7, § 1, Bankr. Act, the word "court," as used in the act, is defined to mean the court of bankruptcy in which the proceedings are pending, and may include the referee. Bouton v. Wheeler, 104 N. Y. Supp. 33, 35, 118 App. Div. 426.

The term "court" is expressly defined by Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1 (7), 30 Stat. 544, to mean "the court of bankruptcy in which the proceedings are pending, and may include the referee." United States v. Liberman, 176 Fed. 161, 163.

As term of court

The term "court," as used in Act March 3, 1887, 24 Stat. 541, which provides that no part of any money appropriated to payment of a per diem compensation to any clerk for attendance in "court," except for days when the court is open by the judge for business, or business is actually transacted in court, means something more than a court that is opened by a judge for business at the beginning of a regular term and continued by adjournment until the close thereof, and thereunder a court may exist without being opened by the judge, or without the transaction of business and under the broader meaning given the word by Rev. St. §§ 574, 638, 4793, providing that courts shall be always open, and Act Feb. 4, 1887, in force when the act was passed, providing that they shall be always in session for certain purposes, is open as a "court" whenever business is transacted by the judge between its regular terms; and thereunder the clerk is entitled to attendance fees for days between regular terms on which he is required to attend and days when opened for the transaction of business by the judge. Butler v. United States, 87 Fed. 655, 658, 659, 664.

A "court" is defined as "the persons officially assembled under authority of law at the appropriate time and place for the administration of justice," while the word "term," when used with reference to a court, signifies the space of time during which the court holds a session. A "session" signifies the time during the term when the court sits for the transaction of business, therefore there is a clear distinction between "the adjournment of court" and the "adjournment of the term." Parrott v. Wolcott, 108 N. W. 607, 608, 75 Neb. 530 (citing Webst. Dict.; Black, Law Dict.).

COURT AND JUDGES THEREOF

The well-settled construction of such a phrase as "said court and the judges thereof," as used in a statute conferring certain powers on the court, is that it means the court when in session, and the judges acting in vacation. Thompson v. State ex rel. Cooksey, 108 Pac. 398, 400, 25 Okl. 741.

The phrase "said court and the judges thereof," as used in Const. Tex. art. 5, § 8, defining the power and jurisdiction of the district court and judges thereof and providing that said court and judges thereof shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus, mandamus, injunction, and certiorari, and all writs necessary to enforce their jurisdiction, means the court when in session, and the judges acting in vacation. The language therefore equally empowers the court when in session, and the judge when the court is not in session, to issue the writs. The power is conferred on the judge in the same language as confers it on the court. Thorne v. Moore, 105 S. W. 985, 986, 101 Tex. 205.

COURT AUTHORIZED BY LAW

See Authorized by Law.

COURT BELOW

An assignment of error naming no particular court, but using the term "the court below," is sufficient to present for consideration errors made by the ruling of any lower court through which the case had passed. Holliday & Wyon Co. v. O'Donnell, 90 N. E. 24, 25, 44 Ind. App. 647.

COURT DOCKET

The court or bench docket is not a record of the court in which its official entries are kept, but is merely a docket for the convenience of the court, and the notes of the judge are not the record entries to be incorporated in a transcript for the appeal of the case, and in determining what the record discloses the entries on such docket may not be considered. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. Ry.

Co. v. Johnson, 93 N. E. 683, 686, 49 Ind. App. 126.

COURT HAVING JURISDICTION

Act Aug. 1, 1888, c. 728, 25 Stat. 357, provides that in every case in which the Secretary of the Treasury or any other officer of the government has been or shall be authorized to procure real estate for the erection of a public building or other public uses he shall be authorized to acquire the same by condemnation by proceedings in the federal Circuit or District Court in the district, in which the practice, pleadings, forms, and modes of proceedings shall conform, "as near as may be," to those existing at the time in like causes in the courts of the state. Act Aug. 18, 1890, c. 797, 26 Stat. 315, 316, provides that "hereafter the Secretary of War may cause proceedings to be instituted in the name of the United States in any court having jurisdiction of such proceedings for the acquirement by condemnation of any land or right pertaining thereto needed for the site * * * for fortifications and coast defenses, such proceedings to be prosecuted in accordance with the laws relating to suits for the condemnation of property of the states wherein the proceedings may be instituted." Held, that by virtue of the earlier statute a Circuit Court of the United States is a "court having jurisdiction" of proceedings under the later act; that the provision of the latter that the proceedings shall be prosecuted in accordance with the laws of the state cannot be construed literally so as to oust the federal court of jurisdiction, where the state statute designates a special tribunal for such proceedings, but only requires a general conformity to the state practice as a whole. United States v. Certain Land in Town of New Castle, Rockingham County, 165 Fed. 783, 784.

A court of common-law jurisdiction authorized by Rev. St. § 2165, to admit aliens as citizens, need not possess a general common-law jurisdiction, but if any part of its jurisdiction answers that designation it is sufficient. Courts with this jurisdiction are those which have the power to punish offenses, enforce rights, or redress wrongs recognized by the common law, or which, in the determination of the causes they decide, are governed by the principles, rules, and usages of that law. The term "having common-law jurisdiction" is used to distinguish these courts from those which have no jurisdiction save in equity, admiralty, or in matters not involving offenses or rights under the common law. Within this meaning and under the decisions of the state of Tennessee the county courts of that state are not "courts of common-law jurisdiction," having authority to admit aliens to citizenship. In re Wolf, 188 Fed. 519, 520.

A "court having common-law jurisdiction" is one whose powers are exercised according to the course of the common law. It is not necessary that the court, to possess common-law jurisdiction, should be unlimited in power and authority. State ex rel. Engelhard v. Webber, 105 N. W. 490, 492, 96 Minn. 422, 113 Am. St. Rep. 630.

COURT HEARING THE EVIDENCE

Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 8623, as amended by Pub. Acts 1907, No. 324, providing that no divorce shall be granted, unless the court hearing the evidence shall deem it for the best interests of the parties to grant a divorce from the bonds of matrimony, on appeal from a decree of separation for life and ordering separate maintenance, the Supreme Court is "the court hearing the evidence," and can exercise its judicial discretion and grant a divorce from the bonds of matrimony, since all chancery causes are heard de novo in the Supreme Court. Horning v. Horning, 127 N. W. 275, 276, 162 Mich. 130.

COURTHOUSE

See At the Court House.

Ky. St. § 3948, as amended in 1908, providing that the jailer of each county of a population of less than 75,000 shall be superintendent of public square, courthouse, clerks' offices, jail, stray pen, and other public buildings at the seat of justice, and that the fiscal court shall annually appropriate a sum sufficient to purchase the labor and material necessary to keep such public property in a clean, comfortable, and presentable condition, and heat and light the same, the term "courthouse" is not confined to the courtrooms used in holding court, and the appropriation should provide for the care of rooms in the courthouse set aside for the use of county officials, and which are used by them, in the discharge of their official duties, including the halls leading thereto. Adair Fiscal Court v. Conover, 133 S. W. 761, 762, 141 Ky. 743.

Where the courthouse of a county is unsafe and cannot longer be used as such because of the deterioration of the building by age, the county has no courthouse within the law, and the fiscal court must provide one. Bonta v. Fiscal Court of Mercer County, 137 S. W. 1084, 1086, 144 Ky. 241.

An act providing for the holding of certain terms of the circuit court at a place other than the county seat was not contrary to the provision of the Constitution forbidding removal of a county seat without an election, as the terms "county seat," "county site," and "courthouse," in Const. §§ 41, 104, do not embrace the seat of justice. Merchants' Nat. Bank of La Fayette v. McNaron, 55 South. 242, 172 Ala. 469.

Code Cr. Proc. § 542, provides that judgment must be given on appeal, without regard to technical errors not affecting substantial rights. A Trial Term of the Supreme Court was appointed to be held in the county courthouse, and during the trial of a criminal case, the accommodations in the criminal court building being inadequate, the trial was continued in one of the courtrooms of the county courthouse, in which it had been the custom to hold the terms of the Supreme Court in which civil cases were tried. Held, that under the statute, and as both the criminal court building and county courthouse constituted the "courthouse" in the county of New York, such change was no ground for the reversal of a conviction. People ex rel. Welck v. Warden of City Prison of City of New York, 80 N. E. 1118, 188 N. Y. 549.

COURT MERCHANT

There existed in the colony of Georgia a court known as the "court merchant," which was recognized as existing by the Constitution of 1777 and continued by that of 1789, subject to such regulations as the General Assembly might direct. It seems to have been for the trial of controversies between merchants, dealers, and others, and shipmasters, supercargoes, and other transient persons. It was held by the chief justice, or, in his absence, one of the justices of the general court of pleas, within seven days after a petition was presented showing a controversy of this character. The jurisdiction was limited as to amount and the cases were tried by a jury of merchants or other fit persons. De Lamar v. Dollar, 57 S. E. 85, 86, 128 Ga. 57.

COURT NOT OF RECORD

"A 'court not of record' is the court of a private man, whom the law will not intrust with any discretionary power over the fortune or liberty of his fellow subjects. Such courts are the courts-baron incident to every manor and other inferior jurisdictions where the proceedings are not enrolled or recorded." Hudson Trust Co. v. Boyd, 84 Atl. 715, 717, 80 N. J. Eq. 267 (quoting 3 Black. Com. 24).

COURT OF ARBITRATION

The appraisers appointed under Rev. St. § 3084, made applicable by section 2915 in proceedings by a city to condemn land for waterworks, providing that compensation to be paid the owner shall be ascertained by three disinterested appraisers appointed by the district court or the judge thereof, are not a court of arbitration or a compulsory board of arbitration within the meaning of either Const. art. 5, § 1, vesting the judicial power in certain courts, including courts of arbitration, or section 28, authorizing appeals to the Supreme Court from decisions of compulsory boards of arbitration; the tribunals referred to in such sections being those contemplated by the constitutional provision authorizing the Legislature to establish courts of arbitration to hear controversies between labor organizations and their employers. Edwards v. City of Cheyenne, 114 Pac. 677, 684, 19 Wyo. 110.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY

The term "courts of bankruptcy" is included in the term "court" as defined in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1(7), 30 Stat. 544, and by section 1(8) is expressly declared to include the District Courts of the United States. United States v. Liberman, 176 Fed. 161, 163.

COURT OF CHANCERY

See Jurisdiction Originally Exercised by Chancery Court.

A "court of chancery" is a court of original jurisdiction and has jurisdiction only in those cases where the courts of law cannot afford an adequate remedy, and the specific enforcement of contracts, reformation of written instruments, the setting aside of deeds and other instruments obtained by fraud, regular upon their face, must find their remedy therein. As the relief can be granted only by such court, the cause must originate there. Bridge Street & Allendale Gravel-Road Co. v. Hogadone, 114 N. W. 917, 921, 150 Mich. 688.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS

A "court of common pleas" is one having general jurisdiction in civil actions. State v. Bacon, 61 Atl. 653, 656, 27 R. I. 252.

COURT OF COMPETENT JURISDICTION

See Competent Jurisdiction.

COURT OF EQUITY

"The most general description of a 'court of equity' is that it is a court having jurisdiction in cases where a plain, adequate and complete remedy cannot be had at law." Minturn v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 3 N. Y. 498, 499.

"A court that makes a just and equitable disposition of the property of parties litigant in an action is a 'court of equity.'" Fall v. Fall, 106 N. W. 412, 413, 75 Neb. 104, 121 Am. St. Rep. 767.

COURT OF INQUIRY

Under Code Cr. Proc. art. 941, providing that when a justice has good cause to believe that an offense has been, or is about to be committed, he may summon and examine witnesses in relation thereto, and if it shall appear from the statement of any witness that an offense has been committed, shall reduce the statement to writing and cause the same to be sworn to and issue a warrant for the arrest of the offender, a justice who was summoning before himself; as justice of the peace, witnesses solely for the purpose of ascertaining if any crime or violation of the law had been committed in the neighboring precinct to which he had gone, and presumably with the further view, if the witnesses summoned before him developed any violations of the law, of having them to make affidavits for the arrest of such violators or offenders, was not sitting as a magistrate in an examining trial, but was carrying on what may be termed a "court of inquiry" in his capacity as justice of the peace. Brown v. State, 118 S. W. 139, 142, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 572.

COURT OF LAW

"Probate courts are courts of record, being declared to be such by the Constitution, but are not 'courts of law' according to the ordinary use of that term. They derive their origin and their jurisdiction from a source altogether distinct from the common law, and they exercise no functions peculiar to that system. Parties cannot litigate questions of fact in them, except in instances of probate of wills, or when the power of appointment is to be exercised." The probate courts have no jurisdiction over a cause of action against an executor for a devastavit. Michigan Trust Co. v. Ferry, 175 Fed. 667, 675, 99 C. C. A. 221 (quoting and adopting definition in Holbrook v. Cook, 5 Mich. 225, 228).

COURT OF RECORD

See Inferior Court of Record.

A seal is not necessary to a "court of record," but the term "court of record" implies that it has a seal because it is so uniformly the case as to raise a presumption to that effect. Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Kimball (Tex.) 122 S. W. 535, 541 (citing Ingoldsby v. Juan, 12 Cal. 580; 11 Cyc. p. 658; Blethen v. Bonner, 53 S. W. 1016, 93 Tex. 141).

"A 'court of record' is one where the acts and judicial proceedings are enrolled on parchment for a perpetual memorial and testimony, which rolls are called the records of the court and are of such high supereminent authority that their truth is not to be called in question." Hudson Trust Co. v. Boyd, 84 Atl. 715, 717, 80 N. J. Eq. 287 (quoting 3 Black. Com. 24).

Probate court

The "probate courts" of Idaho are courts of record only in all matters of probate settlement of estates of deceased persons and appointment of guardians. It is not a court of record in the trial of civil and criminal cases, but its records and judgments in those matters are placed on the same footing with the records and judgments with justices of the peace. Dewey v. Schreiber Implement Co., 85 Pac. 921, 923, 12 Idaho, 280.

Judges of probate presiding in county courts for trial or misdemeanors are not judges of courts of record, within Const. 1901, § 150, providing that judges of courts of record, except probate courts, shall receive a fixed compensation, and no fees; so that Act

March 1, 1901 (Loc. Laws 1900-01, p. 1342) § 11, providing fees for them, is not unconstitutional. Cooke v. Burke (Ala.) 58 South. 984, 986.

COURT OFFICER

Assignee for benefit of creditors

The assignee for the benefit of creditors is an "officer of the court," and may apply thereto for any order which he may desire made in the administration of the trust. Cuddy v. Becker, Mayer & Co., 124 N. W. 1071, 1072, 146 Iowa, 250.

Assistant district attorneys

Assistant district attorneys appointed by a United States district judge, as authorized by Act Cong. May 28, 1896, c. 252, § 8, 29 Stat. 181 are officers of the United States courts for their respective districts. In re Leaken, 137 Fed. 680, 682.

Attorney at law

See Attorney at Law.

Balliffs and criers

Balliffs and criers of the federal courts, appointed to attend the same, as authorized by Rev. St. § 715, though not constitutional officers, are "officers of the court." United States v. McCabe, 129 Fed. 708, 709, 64 C. C. A. 236.

The second clause of section 2, Tucker Act, as amended, which withholds from the jurisdiction conferred on the Circuit and District Courts by said section suits brought against the United States to recover fees, salary, or compensation for official services of "officers of the United States," does not apply to a suit to recover disbursements made by a marshal in paying for the services of court balliffs. Balliffs are never sworn in accordance with the statute, and are not "officers of the United States," but come within the expression "officers of the court." United States v. Swift, 139 Fed. 225, 227, 71 C. C. A. 351 (citing United States v. McCabe, 129 Fed. 708, 64 C. C. A. 236).

Clerk of court

See Clerk of Court.

District attorney

The district attorney is not only an officer of the state, but also, in common with other attorneys, an "officer of the court." Taylor v. State, 38 South. 380, 384, 49 Fla. 69.

United States district commissioner

Under an act of Congress providing that the United States District Courts shall appoint United States commissioners having the same powers and duties as were performed by commissioners of the Circuit courts, a United States district commissioner is an "officer of court," within a statute providing that no officer of any court is qualified to be bail, so that such officer is disqualified to act as surety on appeal bond under a statute providing that qualifications of sureties on appeal shall be the same as in bail. Paxton v. Lively, 85 Pac. 501, 48 Or. 135.

COURT PROCEDURE

A Governor's proclamation convening a special legislative session provided that it was to enact adequate laws simplifying the procedure in both civil and criminal courts of the state, and amending and changing the existing laws governing "court procedure." Held, that the words "court procedure" should be held to apply generally to all laws governing the operation of courts, including those regulating the times within which sessions of courts may be held, and hence Acts 31st Leg. 1st Ex. Sess. c. 13, changing, extending, and rearranging the terms of the criminal district court for Harris and Galveston counties, was within such proclamation. Long v. State, 127 S. W. 208, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 209, 21 Ann. Cas. 405.

COURT RECORD

Where all the records relating to overdue tax proceedings are in existence, and all those covering the time in question are produced, and the clerk in charge of the records testifies that he has examined them to see whether there was any order confirming a certain overdue tax sale, and that he had examined the papers on file in his office, and had failed to find either the complaint, or the commissioner's report of the sale, and that he found no confirmation of sales under the overdue tax proceedings relating to the land in question, and that confirmation of sales containing no numbers of lands, which were found, seemed to refer to reports of commissioners which did not include the particular tract, it was sufficient to show that there had been no confirmation of the overdue tax sale in question, for no other evidence could be adduced, showing that the sale was not confirmed, and the purpose of a "court record" is to preserve a memorial; and be the evidence of the proceedings had by the court. Allen v. Phillips, 112 S. W. 403, 404, 87 Ark. 185 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3866).

COURTS-MARTIAL

As court, see Court (Of Justice).

As inferior court, see Inferior Court.

As tribunal, see Tribunal.

A "court-martial" has no inherent power to hold or punish. It has neither original nor general jurisdiction, and whatever authority it may have when called into being is derived solely from the lawmaking power as expressed in the Military Code. People v. Wendel, 112 N. Y. Supp. 301, 302, 59 Misc. Rep. 354.

COURTS OF CONSCIENCE

"Courts of conscience" are the courts of equity. Harris v. Powers, 58 S. E. 1038, 1039, 129 Ga. 74, 12 Ann. Cas. 475.

COURTS OF THE STATE

Proceeding in state court, see Proceeding.

The South Carolina Dispensary Commission created by Sess. Laws 1907, p. 835, No. 402, for the purpose of winding up the South Carolina State Dispensary, disposing of its property, and paying its debts, is not a "court of a state" within Rev. St. § 720, providing that an injunction shall not be granted by any court of the United States to stay proceedings in any "court of a state" except in cases where such injunction may be authorized by any law relating to proceedings in bankruptcy. Fleischman Co. v. Murray, 161 Fed. 152, 157, 158.

A municipal court of Kansas City is a "court of the state" of Missouri within the purview of Rev. St. U. S. § 720, providing that the writ of injunction shall not be granted by a court of the United States to stay proceedings in a state court except in cases where such injunction may be authorized by a law relating to procedure in bankruptcy. Kansas City Gas Co. v. Kansas City, 198 Fed. 500, 525.

COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES

Under Rev. St. Wis. 1858, c. 133, § 16, subd. 1, providing that an action upon a judgment or decree of any court of record of any state or territory within the United States, or of any "court of the United States," shall be brought "within 10 years," a judgment of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Wisconsin, rendered September 13, 1866, is barred by the lapse of 10 years; judgments and decrees of the federal courts sitting in the state not having been put upon the same footing with those of the domestic courts, which are barred by 20 years, until Revision of 1878, § 4220. This cause of action was on a judgment of the court of the United States and therefore within the very language of the statute. Similar language in the state insolvent laws of Minnesota was held to include the Circuit Court of the United States, but only "in view of the scope and practice of the insolvent law." That the Circuit Courts of the United States are properly called domestic courts of the states wherein they are held could not change the meaning of this language "or any court of the United States" without destroying it. Waterman v. Town of Waterloo, 34 N. W. 137, 139, 69 Wis. 260.

A preliminary hearing before a commission does not take place before a "court of the United States." United States v. Stern, 177 Fed. 479, 480 (following Todd v. United States, 15 Sup. Ct. 889, 158 U. S. 278, 39 L. Ed. 982).

Courts of District of Columbia

The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia must be deemed a "court of the United States" within the meaning of Rev. St. § 1014, authorizing the removal of a person charged with an offense against the United States cognizable by a court of the United States to the federal district where the trial is to be had, in view of Act June 22, 1874, c. 396, 18 Stat. 193, making applicable to the courts of the District the sections of the original judiciary act from which section 1014 was taken, and of the powers given to that court as a court of the United States by Code D. C. § 61 (31 Stat. 1199, c. 854), and of the provision of section 1 of that Code (31 Stat. 1189, c. 854), making applicable to the District all general acts of Congress "not locally inapplicable." Benson v. Henkel, 25 Sup. Ct. 569-572, 198 U. S. 1, 49 L. Ed. 919.

The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia is a "court of the United States," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 714, providing that, when any judge of any court of the United States resigns his office after having held his commission as such at least ten years, and having attained the age of 70 years, he shall, during the residue of his natural life, receive the same salary which was by law payable to him at the time of his resignation. James v. United States, 26 Sup. Ct. 685, 688, 202 U. S. 401, 50 L. Ed. 1079.

COURTS OF THIS COMMONWEALTH

Ky. St. 1903, §§ 126, 127, requiring each county attorney to attend all county and fiscal courts in his county, etc., and providing that he shall conduct actions before "any of the courts of this commonwealth" in which the county is interested, etc., do not require a county attorney to perform services in a federal court or in a court outside of the commonwealth; the words "courts of this commonwealth" meaning only courts organized under the Constitution and laws of the commonwealth. Slayton v. Rogers, 107 S. W. 696, 697, 128 Ky. 106.

COVENANT

A recital in a deed that the land conveyed contains a certain number of acres is not a "covenant" or warranty, but a mere representation. Corrough v. Hamill, 84 S. W. 96, 97, 110 Mo. App. 53 (citing Hobeln v. Frick, 69 Mo. App. 263; Wood v. Murphy, 47 Mo. App. 539; distinguishing McGhee v. Bell, 70 S. W. 493, 170 Mo. 121, 59 L. R. A. 761).

Under a lease which, after a covenant of the lessee to pay rent monthly in advance and the usual "covenants" of a lease, provided that the lessee shall make a deposit, to be held "during the continuance of" the lease, as security for the payment of the rents and the performance of the "covenants" contained in the lease, and then provided that in case of default in any of the "covenants" the landlord may resume possession of the premises and relet, the lessee to make good any deficiency, the lessor having recovered possession by summary proceeding, and thus terminated the lease, is not entitled to retain the deposit as security for any deficiency under the reletting, as the word "covenants" does not include the agreement of reletting, but refers only to the other provisions of the lease. Yannuzzi v. Grape, 92 N. Y. Supp. 819, 820, 46 Misc. Rep. 559.

Kinds

"All 'covenants' are either real or personal. Those so closely connected with the realty that their benefit or burden passes with the realty are construed to be covenants real; all others are personal." Atlanta, K. & N. Ry. Co. v. McKinney, 53 S. E. 701, 702, 124 Ga. 929, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 436, 110 Am. St. Rep. 215 (quoting and adopting 11 Cyc. p. 1052).

COVENANT AGAINST INCUMBRANCES

A "covenant against incumbrances" is one in present, which is broken when made, if there be an outstanding incumbrance diminishing the value, use, or enjoyment of the land conveyed. Brodie v. New England Mortg. Sec. Co., 51 South. 861, 862, 166 Ala. 170; Coleman v. Lucksinger, 123 S. W. 441, 447, 224 Mo. 1, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 934.

Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 633, providing that, from the use of the word "granted" or "conveyed" in any conveyance by which an estate of inheritance or fee simple is to be passed, a covenant against incumbrances shall be implied, a conveyance of land in fee, containing such words, impliedly warranted that the property was free from tax liens. Bullitt v. Coryell, 85 S. W. 482, 483, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 42.

COVENANT FOR QUIET ENJOYMENT

A "covenant for quiet enjoyment" is the same as a covenant of warranty in all its practical effects. It is an assurance to the grantee that his enjoyment of the land conveyed shall not be disturbed by legal means, but does not attempt to protect him against mere disturbances by trespassers. Flahel v. Browning, 58 S. E. 759, 761, 145 N. C. 71 (quoting and adopting Hopkins, Real Prop. 448; Underwood v. Birchard, 47 Vt. 305).

A "covenant for quiet enjoyment" is broken by the commencement of an action against the grantee by the holder of a better title. Where a grantee under a deed with a general warranty and covenant for quiet enjoyment took the land incumbered by a mortgage for part of the price payable after the death of certain persons, who subsequently asserted a life estate in the premises, and recovered damages of the grantee for mining coal thereon, the damages exceeding the amount of the mortgage, the grantee could sue the grantor to cancel the mortgage. New York & Cleveland Gas Co. v. Graham, 75 Atl. 657, 660, 226 Pa. 348.

COVENANT OF GENERAL WARRANTY

See, also, Covenant of Warranty.

A "covenant of general warranty," whatever else it may or may not be, is a covenant against eviction running with the land. Williams v. O'Donnell, 74 Atl. 205, 206, 225 Pa. 321, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1094.

COVENANT OF INDEMNITY

See Covenant to Pay.

COVENANT OF SEISIN

A "covenant of seisin" is a covenant of indemnity which does not run with the land. Eames v. Armstrong, 59 S. E. 165, 168, 146 N. C. 1, 125 Am. St. Rep. 436.

A "covenant of seisin" implies that the covenantor is possessed of the whole legal title, and where the covenantor has no title and the covenantee has not been placed in possession, the covenant is broken as soon as made. Falk v. Organ, 141 S. W. 1, 2, 160 Mo. App. 218.

"Covenants of seisin" and good right to convey are synonymous, and, if broken at all, are broken when made, and an actual eviction is unnecessary to consummate the breach. Faller v. Davis, 118 Pac. 382, 385, 30 Okl. 56, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1181.

"Covenant of seisin" is a covenant of title and is broken upon delivery of the deed if the covenantor did not then have title or lawful right to convey irrespective of the question of eviction. Seyfried v. Knoblauch, 96 Pac. 993, 994, 44 Colo. 86.

COVENANT OF WARRANTY

See, also, Covenant of General Warranty.

A "covenant of warranty" is never implied from a mere recital, but any words in a deed which show an agreement to do a thing constitute a covenant, and where an agreement is contained in a deed an action will lie for its breach, whether it is contained in a recital or elsewhere. O'Sullivan v. Griffith, 95 Pac. 873, 875, 153 Cal. 502.

COVENANT RUNNING WITH THE LAND

A "covenant which runs with the land" is a promise, the effect of which is to bind the promisor and his lawful successors to the burdened land for the benefit of the promisee and his lawful successors to the benefited land. According to this, the covenant binds the person of the owner of the burdened land, provided he comes by his title legally, and benefits the owner of the benefited land, provided he comes by his title legally. A covenant running with an easement in favor of land, whereby the owners of a ditch are obligated to furnish water for the owners of the land, is personal and a burden upon the owners of the ditch. Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. v. New Hampshire Real Estate Co., 92 Pac. 290, 294, 40 Colo. 467 (quoting Sims, Cov. p. 23).

"Whether a covenant runs with the land does not so much depend on whether it is to be performed on the land itself, as on whether it tends directly or necessarily to enhance its value or render it more beneficial and convenient to those by whom it is owned and occupied. To run with the land, however, they must relate to the interest or estate, so that their performance or nonperformance will effect the quality, value, or mode of enjoyment of the estate. The covenant must have relation to the interest or estate granted, and the act to be done must concern the interest created or conveyed." Atlanta, K. & N. Ry. Co. v. McKinney, 53 S. E. 701, 702, 124 Ga. 929, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 436, 110 Am. St. Rep. 215 (citing and approving 11 Cyc. p. 1081; Atlanta Consol. St. Ry. v. Jackson, 34 S. E. 184, 108 Ga. 638).

A deed conveying land to a canal company, in consideration and on condition that it shall construct thereon a basin connected with a canal to be constructed through land, but not signed by the grantee, does not bind it by any covenant, nor is there any "covenant running with the land" binding it and its assigns in favor of the grantor and his assigns. Dawson v. Western M. R. Co., 68 Atl. 301, 303, 107 Md. 70, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 809, 126 Am. St. Rep. 337, 15 Ann. Cas. 678.

Where owners of adjacent lots entered into a written agreement whereby one of them was to build a party wall on the boundary line between their respective lots and the other was to pay the party building the same one-half of the cost thereof when used, the agreement constituted a "covenant running with the land," and the right to recover and the liability to pay followed the ownership of the respective lots. Ferguson v. Worrall, 101 S. W. 966, 968, 125 Ky. 618, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1261.

Covenants for quiet enjoyment, for further assurance, for renewal of warranty, to repair, and to convey, are "covenants that run with the land." Knowles v. Knowles, 59 Atl. 854, 855, 26 R. I. 534.

A condition in a deed of a homestead by parents to their son, the consideration being that the father should have support and a home as long as he lived, is a "covenant running with the land," and upon breach of the condition a court of equity will rescind the conveyance. Martin v. Martin, 24 Pac. 418, 419, 44 Kan. 295.

A covenant, to run with the land, must be in respect to the thing granted, and the act covenanted must concern the land or estate conveyed; a "covenant running with the land" being annexed to the freehold and enhancing its value or benefiting it in some way. Munro v. Syracuse, L. S. & N. R. Co., 112 N. Y. Supp. 938, 940, 128 App. Div. 388.

To constitute a "covenant running with the land," the covenant must have relation to the interest or estate granted, and the act to be done must concern the interest created or conveyed. A covenant running with the land relates directly to the land and follows it into the hands of assignees, while a personal covenant does not do so. Muscogee Mfg. Co. v. Eagle & Phenix Mills, 54 S. E. 1028, 1030, 126 Ga. 210, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1139.

Where an adjoining landowner erected a party wall on the line on an understanding with the other owner that whenever he should use the wall he should pay the one constructing it one-half the price thereof, the agreement was a "covenant running with the land," and the right to recover the agreed sum passed to the grantee of the builder, and not to his assignee or personal representative. Rugg v. Lemly, 93 S. W. 570, 572, 78 Ark. 65, 115 Am. St. Rep. 17, 8 Ann. Cas. 291.

An agreement for the purchase of a mining claim from patentee, reciting the patentee may have exclusive right to work the mine till he is paid the price, and for further security the purchaser transfers shares in a mining company on consideration that patentee will convey the property to purchaser, and signed by the purchaser alone, is a personal covenant of purchaser, and is not one running with the land, under Civ. Code, §§ 1460-1462, defining "covenants running with the land." San Domingo Gold Min. Co. v. Grand Pacific Gold Min. Co., 102 Pac. 548, 550, 10 Cal. App. 415.

An agreement by an owner of land with an adjoining owner that for the period of 10 years he will not sell or permit to be sold upon the premises any intoxicating liquor is not a "covenant running with the land." Sjoblom v. Mark, 114 N. W. 746, 748, 103 Minn. 188, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1129, 14 Ann. Cas. 125.

An instrument giving a person the right to construct a drainage ditch through the land of a person executing the instrument, without consideration and not acknowledged and recorded, was a mere "license," revocable at the will of the licensor and his grantee, and not a "covenant running with the land." Williams v. Beatty, 122 S. W. 323, 326, 139 Mo. App. 167.

COVENANT TO PAY

Where land is sold "under and subject" to a mortgage, it constitutes a "covenant" of indemnity for the protection of the grantor, and the vendee's liability is coextensive with the original obligation of the vendor. Appeal of May's Estate, 67 Atl. 120, 122, 218 Pa. 64.

COVENANT TO RENEW

A bare "covenant to renew" a lease means a renewal on the terms of the original lease. Hoft v. Royal Metal Furniture Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 371, 372, 117 App. Div. 884 (citing Tracy v. Albany Exchange Bank, 7 N. Y. 472, 57 Am. Dec. 538; Western New York & P. R. Co. v. Rew, 81 N. Y. Supp. 1093, 83 App. Div. 576).

See Properly Covered.

A planer, the shaft of which turned 3,500 revolutions a minute, protected only by a guard extending over to about the center of the knives, so that the feeder of the machine could not see them, was not "properly covered" as required by Code Supp. 1907, § 4999—a2, the words "properly covered" as so used meaning that the machinery should be protected by such device, made of such material and construction, as would shield those operating the machine or moving near it from contact therewith when in motion, when practicable, without unreasonably interfering with the efficiency of the machine; the word "proper" meaning "fit, suitable, and appropriate," and the word "cover" to "overspread the surface, to shelter, protect, lay, or set over." Kirchoff v. Hohnsbehn Creamery Supply Co., 123 N. W. 210, 212, 148 Iowa, 508.

COVERING

"Webster defines a 'covering' as 'anything which covers or conceals, as a roof, a screen, a wrapper, clothing, etc.'" United States v. Nicholls, 22 Sup. Ct. 918, 919, 186 U. S. 300, 46 L. Ed. 1173.

So-called "furnished needlecases" consisting of books or cases for holding needles during transportation and while needles in them are being used, are not "coverings," within Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 19, relative to coverings consisting of any unusual article, or form designed for use otherwise than in the bona fide transportation of merchandise to the United States. Guthman, Solomons & Co. v. United States, 148 Fed. 332, 333.

Bottles filled with ad valorem goods (ink) are not to be added to the dutiable value of the contents as "coverings," within the meaning of Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 19. Kimpton v. United States, 171 Fed. 78, 79, 96 C. C. A. 182.

Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 19, 26 Stat. 139, providing that the dutiable value of imports shall include "the value of all cartons, cases, crates, boxes, sacks and coverings of any kind," is not limited to encasements similar to "cartons, cases," etc.; and the term "coverings" extends to containers of liquids and similar substances, such as tins, kegs, jars, and terrines. Kimpton v. United States, 165 Fed. 236, 240.

Gelatin capsules containing a medicine are not "coverings," within the meaning of the tariff laws, not being for transportation, but an essential part of the article. United States v. Lehn & Fink, 172 Fed. 171, 172.

Paper articles, resembling pocketbooks in outward appearance, contained pockets filled with needles, and they were completed structures before the needles were added. Held, that they were not dutiable as coverings of the needles, under Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 19, 26 Stat. 139, nor dutiable as entireties composed of paper and metal (needles), but that they and the needles they contained should be classified separately, as though imported independently. United States v. Dieckerhoff, Raffioer & Co., 160 Fed. 449, 450, 87 C. C. A. 410.

Coverings for chocolate, consisting of small boxes, some in the form of a trunk having hinged tops and lined with fancy paper, are "coverings other than plain wooden," as used in paragraph 281, Schedule G, § 1, c. 11, Tariff Act 1897, 30 Stat. 172, providing that the weight and value of all "coverings other than wooden" shall be included in the dutiable weight and value of chocolate and cocoa contained therein. Cure v. United States, 123 Fed. 994, 995.

COVERTURE

See During Coverture.

"Coverture" is the legal condition of a married woman. Perkins v. Blethem, 78 Atl. 574, 575, 107 Me. 443, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1148.

COW

See Milch Cow.

An indictment for cattle stealing need not allege the sex, as the word "cow," when used in such an indictment, denotes such sex. Gibson v. State, 67 S. E. 888, 889, 2 Ga. App. 692.

A person indicted for larceny of a cow under Code 1907, §. 7324, providing that theft of a "cow or animal of the cow kind" is grand larceny, cannot be convicted of a larceny of a steer calf, since by common understanding the word "cow" includes only the female of the species, and a person cannot be convicted of the larceny of articles other than those named in the indictment, and hence on a trial under an indictment for the theft of three cows, where the proof was of the taking of a cow and two steer calves, there was evidence on which it might have been found that the cow and one calf had been given to accused by his mother, who owned them, a refusal to charge that proof of larceny of a steer calf was not proof of larceny of a cow was reversible error. Marsh v. State, 57 South. 387, 3 Ala. App. 80.

The distinction between a "cow" and a "steer" must be recognized in construing the statute relating to larceny; the one being a full grown female of the bovine genus, and the other being a castrated male of the same genus. An information charging larceny of a "cow" was not sustained by proof of larceny of a "steer." Mobley v. State, 49 South. 941, 942, 57 Fla. 22, 17 Ann. Cas. 735.

Heifer

An indictment charging larceny of a "cow" covers larceny of a "heifer." State v. Minnick, 102 Pac. 605, 607, 54 Or. 86.

The word "cow," as used in Acts 1900-01, p. 1242, making it unlawful to permit any horse, cow, etc., to run at large, was used in the general sense to include the female of the bovine genus of animals, and includes a yearling heifer or calf. Flowers v. State, 56 South. 36, 37, 1 Ala. App. 262.

COWHIDE WHIP OR STICK

An indictment charging that defendant assaulted and beat C. with "leather bridle reins," while armed with a pistol, with intent to intimidate C., and prevent him from defending himself, while not good as one for the offense denounced by Code 1906, § 1044, declaring a penalty for one who, under such circumstances, assaults and beats another with a "cowhide, whip, or stick," is good as one for common assault and battery. State v. Spigener, 50 South. 977, 978, 96 Miss. 597.

CR.

"The abbreviations 'Cr.' and 'Dr.,' when used in bookkeeping, mean to enter upon the credit and debit sides of the account respectively. They are generally used as adjectives, descriptive of the side of the account. They may also be used as nouns, the first as designating a person to whom an obligation accrues, and the latter, the person on whom the obligation rests, as creditor and debtor, and they may be used as words to designate the act of crediting or debiting an item on an account, but in none of these senses are they used to denote a present matured indebtedness. When a statement of account is made out using the term 'Dr.' without more, it simply indicates that the person owes the various items. It does not indicate a matured indebtedness. The usual and ordinary method of keeping books of account is to enter the items chargeable as they are made, although they may not be due or may not mature until a future time, so the abbreviation 'Dr.' as used in the heading of an account, does not indicate an indebtedness matured or due and unpaid." Jaqua v. She-walter, 37 N. E. 1072, 1073, 10 Ind. App. 238.

CRACKED CORN

In the manufacture of corn meal for culinary purposes, the corn is first kiln-dried, then cracked or ground between rollers, and afterwards bolted. A product made by the same rollers, but set farther apart so as not to crush the grain so finely and with the corn not kiln-dried and the product not bolted, but merely passed between the rollers and then loaded in the cars and variously known as "cracked corn," "chop," "coarse meal," was not in the ordinary acceptance of the term "meal" and was properly distinguished from meal in apportioning cars among shippers. State ex rel. Crandall v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 101 N. W. 23, 24, 72 Neb. 542.

As a vessel

A bill of lading provided that, unless the bill by express written agreement was to bear the cost of lighterage, it was agreed that the lighterage was for account and risk of the cargo, custom of the port notwithstanding. The bills contained a written clause that the freight was to be delivered by steamer or lighter at the steamer's option at a certain railroad in Rio de Janeiro, provided there was enough water and length to get alongside dock. The freight contract was indorsed, "These rates include delivery * * * providing there is water enough for craft to get alongside dock, and also include all derrick costs in discharging." Held, that the bill of lading did not provide that the cost of lighterage should not be at the expense of the cargo, but should be construed to mean that, if there was water and length enough to get the steamer alongside the dock, it was then at the steamer's option to discharge at the dock, or deliver by lighter at her own expense; the word "craft" meaning the steamer in question. Herr v. Tweedie Trading Co., 181 Fed. 483, 485, 104 C. C. A. 231.

CRAFTSMAN

The differences in meaning of the words "workman," "laborer," "artisan," "artificer," "mechanic," and "craftsman" are as follows: "Workman" is the general term which frequently applies to one who does relatively skilled work, as contrasted with a "laborer," whose work demands strength or exertion rather than skill. An "artisan" is one who is employed in an industrial or mechanic art or trade. "Mechanic," once synonymous with "artisan," is now commonly restricted to a workman who is skilled in constructing, repairing, or using machinery. A "craftsman" is one who practices a handicraft. "Artificer" commonly implies power of contrivance or adaptation in the exercise of one's craft. State v. City of Ottawa, 113 Pac. 391, 393, 84 Kan. 100.

CRANE

As machine, see Machine.

As machinery, see Machinery.

A crane used to lift molten metal in a manufacturing establishment, and operated by hand, is a machine within the factory act (Acts 1899, p. 234, c. 142, § 9), requiring the operator of a manufacturing establishment to guard vats, cogs, belting, etc., or machinery; the word "machine" including every mechanical device or combination of mechanical powers and devices to perform some function and produce a certain effect or result. Crawford & McCrimmon Co. v. Gose (Ind.) 82 N. E. 984, 985.

"Craps" is a game played with dice. Nicholson v. State, 71 S. W. 969, 970, 44 Tex. Cr. R. 410, 434.

"Craps" is a gambling game consisting of throwing dice for certain numbers. People v. McDermott, 97 N. Y. Supp. 901, 111 App. Div. 390.

"Craps" is a well-known game of chance played with dice, and is defined as "a game of chance in which the object is to guess the number thrown on two dice." Sims v. State, 57 S. E. 1029, 1 Ga. App. 776 (quoting and adopting the definition in Stand. Dict.).

"Craps" is a game played with dice for money. The method of play is that each player puts up his bet and rolls the dice to make seven or eleven. If he wins, each of the other players pay him the amount of his bet. If he loses, he passes the dice to the next player and the latter rolls. Morton v.

Provident Nat. Bank of Waco, 93 S. W. 189, 191, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 154.

A game of dice, in which one person sits behind the table and takes all the bets of the persons playing on the outside, the dice being thrown by the parties alternately, is not an ordinary game of "craps," or what is termed as "head to head game," but is a "banking game," punishable under Pen. Code 1895, art. 388, providing that any person who shall bet at any gaming table or bank shall be punished. Faucett v. State, 79 S. W. 548, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 113.

"Craps," played with dice upon a table, is a gambling device and prohibited under that clause of the statute prohibiting any kind of a gambling table, or gambling device adapted, devised, or designed for the purpose of playing games of chance for money. White v. State, 76 N. E. 554, 555, 37 Ind. App. 95.

CRATES

"By * * * 'crates,' * * * we understand those encasements which are not usually of permanent value, and such as are ordinarily used for the convenient transportation of their contents." United States v. Nicholls, 22 Sup. Ct. 913, 919, 186 U. S. 300, 46 L. Ed. 1173.

CRAVENETTE CLOTH

Certain woolen goods known as "cravenette cloths," which have been subjected to a process intended to make them rain-repellent, which are chiefly used for outer garments to be worn in rainy weather, and which, for all ordinary purposes, are waterproof, are dutiable as "waterproof cloth," under Tariff Act 1890, c. 1244, par. 369, § 1, Schedule J, 26 Stat. 593. Cravenette is not absolutely waterproof. In this respect it resembles gossamer and other materials universally recognized as waterproof. United States v. Brown & Eadie, 136 Fed. 550, 551, 69 C. C. A. 260.

Woolen or worsted fabrics known as "cravenette," which have been subjected to a process to render them nonabsorbent, are dutiable under Tariff Act October 1, 1890, c. 1244, § 1, Schedule J, par. 369, 26 Stat. 593, as water-proof cloth, and not under paragraph 302, Schedule K, as woolen or worsted cloths, or paragraph 395, Schedule K, as dress goods of wool, worsted, etc. Brown & Eadie v. United States, 126 Fed. 446, 447.

CREATE

The general lien of a landlord for rent, given by Code Ga. § 2795, to "date from the time of the levy of a distress warrant to enforce the same," is not created by judgment, nor obtained through legal proceedings, within the meaning of the bankrupt act of July 1, 1898, 30 Stat. 565, c. 541, § 67f, and is therefore not defeated by the provisions of that section, although the levy was made within four months of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy against the tenant. Henderson v. Mayer, 32 Sup. Ct. 699, 701, 225 U. S. 631, 56 L. Ed. 1233.

To create an office means to cause it to exist, and the act which provides for the organization and government of highway districts, etc. (approved March 8, 1911, Sess. Laws, c. 55, p. 121), does not create the office of commissioner of highway districts, but makes it possible for the people to organize highway districts and thereby bring into existence the office of highway commissioner. State v. Gooding, 124 Pac. 791, 792, 22 Idaho, 123.

In Const. art. 7, § 8, providing for the appointment of officers whose offices "shall be created by law," the word "create" means to bring into existence that which did not exist, and gives to the Legislature power to originate an office. Blue v. Tetrick, 72 S. E. 1033, 1035, 69 W. Va. 742.

The limitation on municipal indebtedness prescribed by Act April 29, 1902 (95 Ohio Laws, p. 321), being "that no municipal corporation shall hereafter 'create' or assume an aggregate indebtedness of outstanding and unpaid bonds under the authority of this act in excess of eight per cent. of the total value of all the property in it as listed and assessed for taxation," has only a prospective operation, and indebtedness "created" or assumed prior to the passage of the act may not be considered in ascertaining whether the prescribed limit of indebtedness has been reached. City of Tiffin v. Griffith, 77 N. E. 1075, 1076, 74 Ohio St. 219.

The words "created" and "formed," as used in Sess. Laws Wyo. 1909, c. 19, by which a new county of a designated name was created and formed out of described territory forming part of an existing county, and which provided that after the county should have organized it should constitute a portion of a judicial district and be attached to the existing county for the purposes of legislative representation, are limited in their meaning by the other provisions of the act, and do not effect an immediate division of the existing county, but the act is in the nature of an enabling act under which a new county may be constitutionally formed. Board of Com'rs of Big Horn County v. Woods, 106 Pac. 923, 926, 18 Wyo. 316.

As applied to corporations

The General Corporation Act (P. L. 1898, p. 408) permits any provision which the incorporators may choose to insert for the regulation of the business, conduct of the affairs of the corporation, and any provision "creating," defining, limiting, and regulating the powers of the corporation, provided such provisions be not inconsistent with the statute. Held, that such clause did not grant the right not only of creating, defining, limiting, and regulating the powers of the corporation, but also the right to authorize the directors to exercise the powers thus established according to any method the incorporators might see fit to adopt, the right to "create" being limited to the establishing of or regulating a power to be exercised by the corporation through its directors, which power shall not be inconsistent with the general act; and hence a provision in a certificate of incorporation that any resolution in writing, signed by all the board of directors, should constitute action by the board as if duly passed at a duly called meeting of the board, was unauthorized. Audenried v. East Coast Milling Co., 59 Atl. 577, 584, 68 N. J. Eq. 450.

The term "create," as used in Const. art. 11, § 13, prohibiting the Legislature from "creating" other than banking corporations, by special act, should not be given a literal interpretation, but should be so construed as to prohibit such a change in a corporation organized under a valid law as would materially extend its powers and privileges. Marion Trust Co. v. Bennett, 82 N. E. 782, 783, 169 Ind. 346, 124 Am. St. Rep. 228.

CREATED BY FRAUD

Only such debts created by the fraud of a bankrupt as were so created while he was acting as an officer or in a fiduciary capacity are excepted from the operation of a discharge in bankruptcy by Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, subd. 4, 30 Stat. 550, since to hold that the language of this subdivision, making an exception in favor of debts "created by his fraud, embezzlement, misappropriation, or defalcation while acting as an officer, or in any fiduciary capacity," includes all debts fraudulently contracted, would render meaningless the exception in subdivision 2, in favor of such claims for fraud as have been reduced to judgment. Crawford v. Burke, 26 Sup. Ct. 9-11, 195 U. S. 176, 49 L. Ed. 147.

CREATION OF NEW DEBT

The increase of a town debt due to accretions of unpaid interest on existing indebtedness is not a "creation of a new debt" within Const. art. 22, limiting municipal indebtedness. Leavitt v. Town of Somerville, 75 Atl. 54, 56, 105 Me. 517.

The issuance of refunding bonds by a municipality is not the creation of a new indebtedness within Const. art. 8, § 3, providing that no municipality shall incur indebtedness exceeding in that year the income and revenue provided for it for such year without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors thereof voting at an election to be held for that purpose. Veatch v. City of Moscow, 109 Pac. 722, 724, 18 Idaho, 313, 21 Ann. Cas. 1332.

CREATIVE FRANCHISE

"A 'creative' or corporate franchise confers upon the aggregation of individuals composing a corporation no greater measure of inherent right than is enjoyed by each individual citizen. In fact, the rights it may enjoy, in common with natural persons, are limited by express powers conferred upon it. The enumeration of powers in its charter is a limitation on corporate capacity, and not an enlargement of inherent rights, attaching to the legal person thus created. * * * A corporation may have power to acquire realty, and yet never own such property. Its corporate franchise, its charter, may grant the power to acquire and exercise separate, distinct, and varied franchises, but none may ever be acquired or owned. This distinction between the power to own, and ownership, is very important when we come to consider the difference between the creative franchise, vesting the power to acquire, and other franchises which it may subsequently acquire by purchase or acceptance. * * * It points the difference between the general, creative franchise to be, and the special franchises which, when accepted or purchased, vest privileges or franchises resting in special grant from governmental sources. Above all things, it eliminates the heresy that all special franchises, enjoyed and exercised by a corporation, whether acquired by acceptance or purchase, are merged in the general franchise which creates the corporation, and endows it with enumerated powers. The mere fact that a corporation is organized for the specific purpose of acquiring, and is given power to acquire, public uses or franchises, does not carry with it the idea that such franchises, when acquired, be they many or few, are merged in, and must be assessed as part and parcel of, the general corporate franchise." Where a corporation was authorized to acquire property, appropriate and distribute water, construct canals, and establish, collect, and receive rates, water rents, and tolls, and was authorized to exercise the right of eminent domain, the actual exercise of such powers by the construction of canals in a county other than that in which the corporation's principal place of business was located, constituted the use of a franchise by the corporation in such county which was there subject to taxation. San Joaquin & K. R. Canal & Irrigation Co. v. Merced County, 84 Pac. 285-288, 2 Cal. App. 593.

CREDIBLE—CREDIBILITY

See Goes to His Credibility; Incredible; Personal Credibility.

The word "credibility" is an ordinary English word, and when used in an instruction needs no explanation or definition. Barber v. State, 142 S. W. 577, 581, 64 Tex. Cr. R. 96.

A question as to the exercise of due care must be determined by the jury by considering the personnel of the witnesses, their apparent interest in the controversy, their qualifications to give expert or opinion evidence, all of which matters are properly cognizable under the term "credibility." Melzner v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 127 Pac. 146, 151, 46 Mont. 162.

CREDIBLE PERSON

The statute requiring that an affidavit upon which an information is based be made by a "credible person" contemplates a person competent to give evidence and worthy of belief, and the mere fact that a person's reputation for truth and veracity is attacked does not render him incompetent to make the affidavit. Jones v. State, 125 S. W. 914, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 313.

Where persons making affidavits in support of an application for a change of venue in a criminal case are examined in open court in regard to the truth of such application, and it appears that their means of knowledge are not sufficient to support the statements made in their affidavits, they are not "credible persons" within the statute requiring the application of an accused for a change of venue to be supported by the affidavits of at least three credible persons. Turner v. State, 111 Pac. 988, 992, 4 Okl. Cr. 164.

CREDIBLE WITNESS

A "credible witness" is one who is not disqualified to testify by mental incapacity, crime, or other cause. Historical Soc. of Dauphin County v. Kelker, 74 Atl. 619, 226 Pa. 16, 134 Am. St. Rep. 1010.

A "credible witness," within the rule that no person can be convicted of perjury except on the testimony of two credible witnesses or of one credible witness corroborated strongly by other evidence, is one who, being competent to give evidence, is worthy of belief, and all witnesses permitted to testify on the trial are competent, and the jury are the exclusive judges as to whether a witness is worthy of belief. Where the state's witnesses were impeached by proof that their reputation for truth was bad and that they were self-confessed criminals and gamblers, an instruction that to justify a conviction the falsity of the testimony of accused must be established by two credible witnesses or of one credible witness corroborated strongly by other evidence, and defining a credible witness as one who, being competent to give evidence, is worthy of belief, was sufficient. Anderson v. State, 120 S. W. 462, 466, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 360.

When the "credibility" of a witness is spoken of, it refers only to his integrity and to the fact that he is worthy of belief. The term does not imply that he has intelligence, or knowledge, or opportunity for knowledge of the particular facts in the case. Madden v. Saylor Coal Co., 111 N. W. 57, 59, 133 Iowa, 699.

"The word 'credible' means worthy of credit. When applied to the person of a witness, it bespeaks him to be a person of capacity to deserve credit; I say of capacity to deserve credit because no man can be sure of obtaining credit, let him be ever so credible." State v. Spivey, 90 S. W. 81, 87, 191 Mo. 87 (quoting and adopting definition in Hindson v. Kersey, 1 Day's Cases in Error, 41).

In instructions that the jury were the judges of the credibility of witnesses and that if they believed that any witness had sworn falsely, or that his testimony was inconsistent with other testimony which they believed to be true, or consistent with circumstances proven on the trial, then the testimony of one credible witness would be of more value than the evidence of such other witness, the term "credible" meant nothing more than such witness, as the jury gave credit for telling the truth and was used in the abstract without reference to any particular witness. Territory v. Garcia, 75 Pac. 84, 35, 12 N. M. 87.

One of the subscribing witnesses to a will containing a charitable bequest, after having been told by the other subscribing witness outside testator's office that testator desired him to be a witness to his will, went into the office, where testator was seated at a desk, with the will already signed by him in his hand. Testator's signature was in plain view of the witness, who, at testator's request, signed his name below that of the other subscribing witness, and opposite that of testator. Held, that such subscribing witness was a credible witness, within Act April 28, 1855 (P. L. 332) § 11, requiring such a will to be attested by two credible, and at the time disinterested, witnesses, it not being necessary that the witness see testator sign the will, testator's subsequent acknowledgment of his signature being sufficient. In re Kessler's Estate, 70 Atl. 770, 772, 221 Pa. 314, 128 Am. St. Rep. 741, 15 Ann. Cas. 791.

One who was an accomplice to a conspiracy to commit a perjury, and who admitted that he did in fact commit perjury for a monetary consideration, is not a "credible witness," within Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 786, requiring the evidence of two credible witnesses, or of one credible witness strongly corroborated, to convict of perjury. Conant v. State, 103 S. W. 897, 899, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 610.

As competent

The term "credible," as applied to subscribing witnesses of a will, means "competent." Gump v. Gowans, 80 N. E. 1086, 1087, 226 Ill. 635, 117 Am. St. Rep. 275 (citing Harp v. Parr, 48 N. E. 113, 168 Ill. 459); Smalley v. Smalley, 70 Me. 545, 548, 35 Am. Rep. 353; Swanzey v. Kolb (Miss.) 46 South. 549; In re Klein, 88 Pac. 798, 804, 35 Mont. 185.

As relating to the attesting witnesses to wills, the words "credible," "disinterested," and "competent," are treated as synonymous. Hiatt v. McColley, 85 N. E. 772, 774, 171 Ind. 91.

A "credible" witness to a will is a "competent" witness; one legally competent to testify to the facts which he attests by subscribing his name to the will. Jones v. Griesser, 87 N. E. 295, 238 Ill. 183, 15 Ann. Cas. 787.

"The word 'credible,' as used in a statute in reference to the attesting witness to a will, means competent; that is to say, the requirement of the statute is that the attesting witnesses to a will must be such persons as are not disqualified by mental imbecility, interest, or crime from giving testimony in a court of justice." Savage v. Bulger (Ky.) 77 S. W. 717 (quoting Fuller v. Fuller, 83 Ky. 345).

The statute of wills requires a will to be attested by two or more credible witnesses, and, in case of the death of a witness, proof of his handwriting is admissible with the same effect as if he had appeared and testified in his own person. The word "credible," as used in the statute, means "competent." It means a witness who, at the time of attesting a will, would be legally competent to testify in a court of justice to the facts which he attests by subscribing his name to the will. There can be no doubt that a witness would be competent to testify against an heir on an issue involving the execution of a will and the mental capacity of the testator, although his grandson might be interested in the result of the litigation. The interest which disqualifies a witness in such a case must be a present, certain, legal interest of a pecuniary nature. The test is whether he will either gain or lose financially, as the direct result of the suit, or whether the judgment or decree will be evidence for or against him in another action. O'Brien v. Bonfield, 72 N. E. 1090, 1091, 213 Ill. 428 (citing Boyd v. McConnel, 70 N. E. 649, 209 Ill. 396).

The word "credible," as used in Hurd's Rev. St. c. 148, § 2, requiring that all wills, testaments, and codicils shall be attested by two or more "credible" witnesses, means competent. Fearn v. Postlethwaite, 88 N. E. 1057, 1058, 240 Ill. 626.

The word "credible," in a statute requiring a will to be attested by credible witnesses, is used in the sense of "competent." An instruction which erroneously requires the jury to find that the instrument was subscribed by testator "in the presence of two credible witnesses" is without prejudice to contestants. Bramel v. Bramel, 89 S. W. 520, 521, 101 Ky. 64.

"Credible," as used in 29 Car. II, c. 23, § 5, providing that a will must be proved by two "credible" witnesses, meant no more and no less than competent. Lord Camden was of opinion that it was when he attested the will (Hindon v. Kersey [1765] 1 Bro. Adm'y & Civ. L. 284, note [24]; 4 Burn's Ecc. Law, 88; Bac. Abr. Wills [D], III), or to the period when he was called to prove it, as Lord Mansfield held (Windham v. Chetwynd, 1 Burr. 414; Lowe v. Jolliffe, 1 W. Bl. 366; Goodtitle v. Welford, 1 Dougl. 141). Bruce v. Shuler, 62 S. E. 973, 974, 108 Va. 670, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 686, 15 Ann. Cas. 887.

A "credible witness," within 3 Starr & C. Ann. St. p. 4026, c. 148, § 2, requiring wills to be attested in the presence of the testator by "two or more credible witnesses," is a witness who is not for any legal reason disqualified from giving testimony generally or, by reason of interest or other disqualifying statutory cause, incompetent to testify in respect to the particular subject-matter under investigation. Boyd v. McConnell, 70 N. E. 649, 209 Ill. 396.

"Debts" and "credits" are correlative. Wilde v. Mahaney, 67 N. E. 337, 338, 183 Mass. 455, 62 L. R. A. 813.

Any difference between the word "credit," as used in an instruction that any statement contradictory of a witness could be considered only in determining the weight and "credit" the jury would give the witness, and the word "credibility," was not of sufficient importance to require a reversal. Doolley v. State, 106 S. W. 676, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 491.

In an action to hold defendant as surety, a statement in the decision of the appellate court, that the question whether defendant's undertaking was original or collateral depending upon whether the "credit" was given to defendant or the purchaser of the goods, will be construed to mean whether the sole credit was given to defendant or the purchaser. East Baltimore Lumber Co. v. K'Nesett Israel Aushe S'Phard Congregation, 62 Atl. 575, 576, 100 Md. 639.

The word "credit," as appearing in section 10427, Cobbe's Ann. St. 1903, has been construed to mean net credits, and the indebtedness of the taxpayer may be deducted from the gross credits to ascertain the net credits to find the true value for assessment; but a taxpayer is not permitted to deduct from his gross credits an alleged item of indebtedness that exists merely as a matter of convenience in bookkeeping, and of which he is both payer and payee. It is only a bona fide indebtedness to another that he may deduct. Hoagland v. Merrick County, 115 N. W. 537, 81 Neb. 83.

A contract for the display of an advertisement on a theater curtain for such time as the theater would be open during specified seasons provided that it was not subject to cancellation, and that credit would be given for each entire week the advertisement was not shown. Held, that the word "credit" was used as the opposit of "debit" and as a correlative of "debt," and that, since there could be no debt where the contract was unexecuted, if the display of the advertisement was optional, it should not be construed as providing for its display at the option of the curtain company, but as requiring its display at all times when the theater was open with a set-off for any time that the theater was not open, and hence that a recovery for the display of the advertisement after the advertiser had directed its discontinuance was not precluded on the ground that the contract lacked mutuality of obligation. Imperial Curtain Co. v. Strauss, 135 N. Y. Supp. 577, 579, 76 Misc. Rep. 533.

CREDIT SALE

"A cash sale of cotton delivered on Saturday is not converted into a 'credit sale' because, on the Monday following, the commission merchant receives a check for the purchase money, deposits the same in bank, draws against the account thus increased, and marks the bill 'paid.'" *Charleston & W. "Creditor," however defined, is the correlative of "debtor." Hebert v. Handy, 72 Atl. 1102, 1104, 29 R. L. 543.

A "creditor" is a person to whom any obligation is due; one who has the right to require the fulfillment of an obligation. Morgan's Louisiana & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Stewart, 44 South. 138, 143, 119 La. 392 (Civ. Code, arts. 2132, 3556); In re Putman, 193 Fed. 464, 473.

"A 'creditor of an estate' is one who has a definite demand against the estate or a cause of action capable of adjustment and liquidation upon a trial." In re Chestnut St. Trust & Saving Fund Co.'s Assigned Estate, 66 Atl. 332, 333, 217 Pa. 151, 118 Am. St. Rep. 909.

A "creditor" within the meaning of Bankr. Act, § 1 (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544), is one who owns a claim, and the owner of a beneficial interest in a claim does not own the claim itself. In re E. T. Kenney Co., 186 Fed. 451, 456.

The word "creditor" may mean one having any character of claim against another, or one having a liquidated demand based on an agreement. Henley v. Myers, 93 Pac. 168, 170, 76 Kan. 723, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 779 (citing 2 Words & Phrases, pp. 1713, 1714, 1718, 1721).

"As to exempt property, there are, within the meaning of the statute of frauds, no 'creditors.'" Gibson v. Barrett, 87 S. W. 435, 75 Ark. 205.

The term "creditor" is defined by Civ. Code, § 2686, as follows: "Whenever one person by contract or by law is liable and bound to pay to another an amount of money certain or uncertain, the relation of debtor and creditor exists between them." This definition is much broader than is generally supposed, and would seem to include a liability for a wrongful conversion of property, for which trover would lie. "In a multitude of cases it has been repeatedly adjudicated that a party bound by a contract upon which he may become liable for the payment of money, although his liability be contingent, is a debtor, within the meaning of a statute avoiding all grants made to hinder or delay creditors. A surety is a creditor from the time the application is entered into or the bond signed, and the person whose claim arises from a tort, such as libel or slander, is a creditor." A plaintiff in a trover case is a creditor within the protection of a statute against fraudulent conveyances, even before judgment, and a surety on the defendant's bail bond in a trover case, who pays the judgment recovered by plaintiff, is also a creditor. Banks v. McCandless, 47 S. E. 332, 335, 119 Ga. 793.

A petitioner for condemnation is not in any sense a purchaser or creditor within the purview of the registration statutes. Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. v. Southern R. Co., 131 Fed. 657, 666, 66 C. C. A. 601.

Where claimant against an estate and the executors have consented that the surrogate determine the claim upon the judicial settlement of the executors' accounts the claimant is a creditor of the estate within the statute authorizing creditors, etc., to petition to compel executors to account in the Surrogate's Court. Clark v. Scovill, 83 N. E. 659, 660, 191 N. Y. 8.

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 2742, which provides that administration in case of intestate shall be granted to the widow or widower, next of kin, or the largest creditor, in that order of preference a representative of a bank, not authorized by law to act as administrator, is not a creditor within the meaning of the statute. Reed v. Bishop (Ind.) 97 N. E. 1023, 1026.

By the use of the word "creditors" in a statute giving a right to intervene at the hearing of an application for the judicial settlement of an administrator's account to "creditors" and persons interested in the estate, the Legislature did not mean "creditors," but meant instead "persons claiming to be creditors." It does not follow, however, that by the expression "persons interested in the estate" they meant "persons claiming to be interested in the estate." In re Thompson, 83 N. Y. Supp. 983, 984, 41 Misc. Rep. 223.

"Creditors," within Bankr. Act, § 67a, 30 Stat. 564, which provides that claims which for want of record or other reasons would not have been valid liens as against the claims of creditors of the bankrupt shall not be liens against his estate, contemplates the invalidity of a claim against some of the bankrupt's creditors. In re Thorp, 130 Fed. 371, 375.

The word "creditor," in Bankruptcy Act authorizing creditors to file a petition in bankruptcy, declaring that the word "creditor" shall include any one who owns a demand provable in bankruptcy, authorizing creditors other than the petitioners to be heard in opposition to the prayer of the petition, and allowing the bankrupt or any creditor to appear and plead to the petition, does not include a creditor who has a voidable preference, and he may not be counted against the petitioner in computing the number of creditors that must join in a petition for an adjudication in bankruptcy unless he surrenders his preference, and where he surrenders before adjudication he may be counted. Stevens v. Nave-McCord Mercantile Co., 150 Fed. 71, 74, 80 C. C. A. 25.

Under Revisal 1905, § 1203, providing that a receiver of the property and effects of a corporation may be appointed on application of a creditor or stockholder, where defendant, an insolvent corporation, failed to pay for certain machinery delivered to it by plaintiff, under an agreement that it should issue certain stock as such payment, and thereby became also liable for the use of the machinery and for injury to it, plaintiff was a creditor within the meaning of the statute; one who has a right to require the fulfillment of an obligation or contract for the payment of money being a creditor. Summit Silk Co. v. Kinston Spinning Co., 70 S. E. 820, 822, 154 N. C. 421, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 897.

Under Gen. Laws 1909 c. 215, § 21, providing that, if a "creditor" of an estate shall not prove his claim before the commissioners within the time fixed, he shall be barred of his action therefor, one who claims of the estate more than he owes it is a "creditor" and must prove his claim or be barred of any action for the recovery of it, and one who owes the estate more than the estate owes him is a "debtor." A bank in which intestate had deposited $700, and which had discounted his note of intestate for $400, which was not due until two months after intestate's decease, was a debtor entitled to set off the note against the deposit, though it did not prove the debt before the commissioners. Troup v. Mechanics' Nat. Bank, 53 Atl. 122, 123, 24 R. I. 377.

The word "creditors," as used in Civ. Code 1895, § 2634, declaring that the dissolution of a partnership by the retiring of an ostensible partner must be made known to the creditors and to the world, is not limited to persons who were creditors at the time of the dissolution, but a person who had previously sold goods and given credit to the firm during its continuance was within its meaning. Bush & Hattaway v. McCarty Co., 56 S. E. 430, 431, 127 Ga. 308, 9 Ann. Cas. 240 (citing Prentiss v. Sinclair, 5 Vt. 149, 26 Am. Dec. 288, 290; Bates, Partn. § 613; Parsons Partn. [4th Ed.] § 319; Askew v. Silman, 22 S. E. 573, 95 Ga. 678).

Where creditors petitioning for a revision of an order denying an involuntary petition in bankruptcy declared that a third person was a creditor of the alleged bankrupt, and the third person in his verified answer to the petition averred that he was a creditor in a specified sum above the value of the security held by him, and the answer was not denied, and the special master treated the third person as a creditor, the third person was a creditor within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 57, c, h, 30 Stat. 560, and he could plead to a petition in involuntary bankruptcy. Johansen Bros. Shoe Co. v. Alles, 197 Fed. 274, 277. 116 C. O. A. 636.

As all creditors

The term "creditors" of a bankrupt does not mean all creditors. In re Armstrong, 145 Fed. 202, 210.

Under Lien Law N. Y. 1897, c. 418, § 90, providing that an unfiled chattel mortgage is absolutely void as against the creditors of the mortgagor, the word "creditors" included all creditors, and not those only who were prejudiced by the mortgagee's failure to file. In re Schmidt, 181 Fed. 73, 75, 104 C. O. A. 107.

"Creditors," within Code Iowa 1897, § 2905, making invalid unrecorded conditional sales or liens on property sold to bankrupts as against purchasers without notice from or creditors of such bankrupts, means, not only attaching or execution creditors, but all creditors of the bankrupt. In re Smith & Shuck, 132 Fed. 301, 303.

Rev. St. Ohio 1908, § 4155—2, provides that all conditional sale contracts shall be void as to all subsequent purchasers and mortgagees, in good faith and "creditors" unless evidence by a writing, signed, etc., and also unless a statement under oath by the seller, of the amount of the claim, deposited with the county recorder of the county where the person signing the instrument resides at the time of its execution, if a resident of the state, and, if not, with the county recorder of the county in which the property sold is situated. Section 4150 provides that a chattel mortgage not accompanied by immediate delivery, and followed by actual and continued change of possession of the things mortgaged, shall be void as against the creditors of the mortgagor, unless a true copy is filed, etc. Held, that the word "creditors," as used in section 4155—2, included the same persons as were included by the same word used in section 4150, and, the latter having been construed by the Ohio court of last resort to include all creditors of the mortgagor represented by a duly appointed receiver, section 4155—2 should be construed to invalidate an unfiled conditional sale contract as against all creditors of the buyer represented by a receiver appointed by the federal court, under the rule that the construction of state statutes by the highest court of the state is conclusive on federal courts. Hamilton v. David C. Beggs Co., 179 Fed. 949, 951.

As assignee of claim

Since a "creditor" within the bankruptcy act includes every one who owns a provable demand or claim, a creditor within such definition is not disqualified as a petitioner because he acquired the claim by assignment after commission of an act of bankruptcy. In re Lewis F. Perry & Whitney Co., 172 Fed. 744, 745.

As attachment, judgment, or lien creditors

In Rev. Codes 1899, § 5048, relating to attachment and defining a "creditor" as one in whose favor an obligation exists by reason of which he is or may become entitled to the payment of money, the word "creditor" has its usual signification; that is, one to whom a debt is due, using the word "debt" according to its common meaning. Sonnesyn v. Akin, 97 N. W. 557, 560, 12 N. D. 227.

In the commercial and ordinary sense, the designation of "creditor" means one to whom a debt is due from another person, but in a more comprehensive sense, and as used in our statutes governing procedure and relief, the term includes those who have acquired a lien either by a legal or equitable attachment or by seizure and levy on execution. Under Rev. Laws, c. 152, §§ 10—12, 29, 31, authorizing the attachment of a husband's property on a libel by the wife for a divorce, etc., and chapter 147, § 3, providing that no trust concerning land shall prevent a "creditor" who has no notice thereof from attaching the land, a divorced wife, having no notice of a trust affecting land title to which is in her husband's name, may attach the same in proceedings to enforce a decree requiring the husband to pay for the support of a child of the parties; the word "creditor" including those who have a lien either by a legal or equitable attachment. Hill v. Hill, 82 N. E. 690, 691, 196 Mass. 509 (citing Sewall v. Sewall, 130 Mass. 201; Bailey v. Bailey, 44 N. E. 143, 166 Mass. 226; Purdon v. Blinn, 78 N. E. 462, 192 Mass. 387, 389; Snyder v. Smith, 69 N. E. 1069, 185 Mass. 58, 61; Gay v. Ray, 80 N. E. 603, 195 Mass. 8).

Creditors of an insolvent corporation sued it and its stockholders to enforce their liability, and judgment was entered determining who the creditors were and the liability of the stockholders, and appointing a receiver to enforce the adjudged liability. Thereafter a stockholder was discharged in bankruptcy, and in his schedule he named the creditors for whose benefit judgment was rendered, and not the receiver. Held, that his actual creditors were named in the schedule, in compliance with Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, and his discharge released him from liability on the judgment. Longfield v. Minnesota Sav. Bank, 103 N. W. 706, 707, 95 Minn. 54.

Comp. Laws 1897, § 9757, confers on the circuit court jurisdiction over directors and other officers of corporations, to compel them to account for their official conduct, to suspend or remove them from office, to set aside unlawful alienations of property, and to restrain and prevent such alienations. Section 9759 provides that such jurisdiction shall be exercised on bill or petition at the instance of the Attorney General, or at the instance of any creditor of the corporation. Held, that the word "creditor," in section 9759, is limited in its scope to a judgment creditor, and such section does not authorize an ordinary creditor to invoke the jurisdiction conferred by section 9757. McKee v. City Garbage Co., 103 N. W. 906, 908, 140 Mich. 497.

As used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, § 67, subds. "a" and "b" and section 70, relating to liens and the rights of creditors and to property transferred in fraud of creditors, the word "creditors" refers to such creditors as have secured some specific claim against, or lien on, the property involved. Skilton v. Codington, 83 N. Y. Supp. 351, 355, 86 App. Div. 166 (citing In re Economical Printing Co., 6 Am. Bankr. Rep. 615, 110 Fed. 514, 49 C. C. A. 133; In re Garcewich, 115 Fed. 87, 53 C. C. A. 510).

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64b, 30 Stat. 563, provides that debts owing to any person who by the laws of the states or the United States is entitled to priority shall be entitled to priority under the bankrupt law, and Code W. Va. 1906, c. 74, § 3103, declares that a deed of trust shall be void as to creditors until and except from the time it is duly admitted to record. Held, that since the word "creditors," as used in section 3103, has been construed by the Supreme Court of Appeals of the state to mean creditors who have secured a lien on the property, and not general creditors, bondholders of the bankrupt were not precluded from claiming their debts as secured by the bonds, as against general creditors, because the deed of trust was withheld from record. In re Charles Town Light & Power Co., 199 Fed. 846, 850.

Where a creditor bought from his debtor a crop upon which there was an unfiled chattel mortgage of which he had knowledge, without having established his right as a creditor by legal proceedings, he was not a creditor within the meaning of the law relating to the filing of chattel mortgages, nor a purchaser in good faith against an unfiled mortgage; and the rights of the mortgagee were superior to any which he acquired. Davidson v. Osborne, 136 N. Y. Supp. 247, 248, 151 App. Div. 747.

Same—In recording acts

Under the rule that an oral chattel mortgage is invalid only as to "creditors" and subsequent purchasers in good faith, the word "creditor" means judgment, execution, or attachment creditor. A subsequent mortgage with notice is not so regarded. Reiss v. Argubright, 92 N. W. 988, 989, 3 Neb. (Unof.) 756.

The term "creditor" as defined by the bankruptcy act includes any one who owns a demand or claim provable in bankruptcy. Brake v. Callison, 129 Fed. 201, 203, 63 C. C. A. 359; Clarke v. Rogers, 183 Fed. 518, 521, 106 C. C. A. 64; In re Crafts-Riordon Shoe Co., 185 Fed. 931, 934.

The word "creditor," as used in a statute declaring unrecorded chattel mortgages to be void as against creditors and bona fide purchasers for value, means creditors having some sort of lien fixed by law or legal proceedings upon the particular property, and does not include a mere general creditor. Eason v. Garrison, 82 S. W. 800, 801, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 574.

The word "creditors," as used in Code Iowa 1897, §§ 2905, 2906, declaring that a conditional sale contract not acknowledged or recorded shall be invalid as to creditors of the buyer, according to the decisions of the Supreme Court of Iowa, means lien creditors and that knowledge of the unrecorded instrument before the lien is obtained defeats their preferential right; the contract being good as between the parties. Nauman Co. v. Bradshaw, 193 Fed. 350, 353, 113 C. C. A. 274.

The term "creditors," within a statute making an unrecorded chattel mortgage or conveyance intended to operate as a mortgage where there is no change in possession void as against creditors of the mortgagor only while withheld from record, includes all those having some specific lien upon or right to mortgaged property and does not embrace mere general creditors. Youngberg v. Walsh, 83 Pac. 972, 975, 72 Kan. 220.

Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, arts. 3327, 3328, providing that chattel mortgages shall be void as to creditors and subsequent purchasers and lienors in good faith unless registered, the term "creditors" applies to those persons whose claims are upon certain conditions charged by law as specific liens upon the property, such as holders of attachments, executions, judgments, landlords' and mechanics' liens, and as to subsequent purchasers and lienors in good faith, and so such a mortgage is not void as to a prior trust deed on land which did not include the personality embraced in the chattel mortgage. Stewart & Alexander Lumber Co. v. Miller & Vidor Lumber Co. (Tex.) 144 S. W. 343, 346.

Under Gen. St. Kan. 1905, § 4523, making certain contracts which are not filed void as against "creditors" of the vendees, the term "creditors" means those having a specified lien upon or right to the property involved, and not mere general creditors. In re Fish Bros. Wagon Co., 164 Fed. 553, 554, 90 C. C. A. 427, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 433.

Ky. St. § 496, provides that no mortgage shall be valid against a purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice thereof, or against creditors until the deed shall be acknowledged or proved according to law and lodged for record. Held, that the term "creditors," as used in such section, did not include general creditors having no liens, and hence an unrecorded chattel mortgage on a computing scale, valid as between the parties, was valid against the mortgagors' estate in bankruptcy; no creditor of the bankrupt having fastened a lien thereon prior to bankruptcy, whether other debts of the bankrupt were created before or after such mortgage was made. In re Lausman, 183 Fed. 647, 649.

In Ky. St. 1903, § 496, providing that, until recorded, chattel mortgages shall not be valid against a purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice thereof, or against "creditors," and which applies also to contracts of conditional sale, the word "creditors," as construed by the state Court of Appeals, does not include general creditors, but only such as have acquired a lien. Crucible Steel Co. of America v. Holt, 174 Fed. 127, 128, 98 C. C. A. 101; Holt v. Crucible Steel Co. of America, 32 Sup. Ct. 414, 224 U. S. 262, 56 L. Ed. 756.

Attorney, agent, or proxy

Bankr. Act, § 1, cl. 9, providing that the word "creditor" shall include any one who owns a demand or claim provable in bankruptcy and may include his duly authorized agent or attorney or proxy, authorizes the signing of the names of the creditors to an involuntary petition by an attorney or agent. In re Hunt, 118 Fed. 282, 283.

The word "creditor" is defined in 30 Stat. 544, § 1, as including any one who owns a demand or claim provable in bankruptcy, and may include his duly authorized agent, attorney, or proxy. Rogers v. De Soto Placer Min. Co., 136 Fed. 407, 408, 69 C. C. A. 251 (quoting In re Herzkopf, 118 Fed. 101).

Claimant ex contractu

"Creditor" is ordinarily used as the antonym of "debtor," and involves a debt and a credit, and commonly signifies one who holds some contractual obligation against another. A common-law assignment for the benefit of creditors, reciting that it was executed by the assignors as copartners and the assignee, and both the firm and individual creditors of the assignors, does not require a city or its tax collector to assent in writing to the assignment to become entitled to the benefits in the collection of a tax, since the word "creditor" signifies a contractual obligation, and since a tax is not a debt. Boston v. Turner, 87 N. E. 634, 635, 201 Mass. 190 (citing In re Nicolin, 56 N. W. 587, 55 Minn. 130; New Jersey Ins. Co. v. Meeker, 37 N. J. Law, 282; Walsh v. Miller, 38 N. E.

381, 51 Ohio St. 462; State v. Georgia Co., 17 S. E. 10, 112 Ga. 34, 19 L. R. A. 485).

A "creditor," in a strict legal sense, is one who voluntarily trusts or gives credit to another for money or other property, but, in its more general and extensive sense, is one who has a right by law to demand and recover of another a sum of money on any account whatever. Under Sand. & H. Dig. § 4835, providing that, if any debtor fraudulently absconds from another state to this state without the knowledge of his creditor, the latter may commence suit against him, one who has a right of action against another to recover damages is a "creditor" of such person. Keith v. Hiner, 38 S. W. 13, 14, 63 Ark. 244.

Claimant ex delicto

A person having a claim for damages for slander is a "creditor" within the protection of the statutes against fraudulent conveyances. Papan v. Nahay (Ark.) 152 S. W. 107, 109.

A person having a claim growing out of a tort independent of contract is a "creditor," within Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 906, so as to entitle him to have canceled and set aside a conveyance of real estate made to defraud creditors. Shelby v. Ziegler, 98 Pac. 989, 991, 22 Okl. 799.

The word "creditor," as used in Shannon's Code, § 5212, providing that, when a debtor and "creditor" are both nonresidents of the state and residents of the same state, the "creditor" shall not have attachment against the property of his debtor, unless he swear that the property has been fraudulently moved to the state to evade the process of law in the state of their domicile, is not to be understood in the limited sense of a person to whom a sum of money is due by agreement, but should be read in the light of the original act, and be interpreted in a more enlarged and comprehensive signification, and so includes nonresidents who are seeking redress in damages for a tort. Bryan v. Norfolk & W. R. Co., 104 S. W. 523, 525, 119 Tenn. 349.

One having a right of action for damages against another for tort is a "creditor" of the wrongdoer, within B. & C. Comp. § 5508 et seq., declaring conveyances of property made with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors void as to such creditors. Seed v. Jennings, 83 Pac. 872, 874, 47 Or. 464.

Debtor and "creditor" are correlative terms implying correlative relations, simultaneous in their origin and inseparable in their existence. A person having a claim for damages arising out of a tort is not a "creditor" of the person liable on such claim within Rev. St. c. 148, § 49, making any person aiding any debtor to fraudulently dispose of his property liable to creditors, but after obtaining a judgment on such claim he is a creditor. Craig v. Webber, 86 Me. 504, 507.

The word "creditor," in P. L. 1896, c. 185, providing that whenever any corporation shall become insolvent any creditor may place it in the hands of a receiver, etc., means one standing in such relation to the assets of the corporation that he has a right to a share or a dividend, but he must at that time be a creditor as distinguished from one merely entitled to become a creditor by proof of a claim for damages, and one who has a claim for damages for tort cannot meet this test. Hoopes v. Basic Co., 61 Atl. 979, 980, 981, 69 N. J. Eq. 879 (citing Lehigh & W. Coal Co. v. Stevens & Condit Transp. Co., 51 Atl. 446, 63 N. J. Eq. 107; Ft. Wayne Electric Corp. v. Franklin Electric Light Co., 41 Atl. 217, 57 N. J. Eq. 7; Gallagher v. Asphalt Co. of America, 55 Atl. 259, 65 N. J. Eq. 258).

Claimant of specific property

A claimant of property held by a decedent in trust is not a "creditor," within the provisions of the probate law requiring the filing of claims. Probate Court of City of Pawtucket v. Williams, 73 Atl. 382, 386, 387, 30 R. I. 144, 19 Ann. Cas. 554.

As creditor at time of decedent's death

One holding a claim for funeral expenses is a "creditor," within R. L. 1905, § 3696, subd. 2, and may apply for administration pursuant to the provisions thereof. In re Eis' Estate, 139 N. W. 300, 308, 120 Minn. 122.

The word "creditor," in Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 2742, subd. 3, and section 2744, providing for the appointment as administrator of the largest creditor applying and residing in the state, is used in the usual sense as one whom the decedent owes, and hence, if one who had incurred the expense of the burial of a decedent could procure the appointment of an administrator, it would not be under the statute as a creditor, but under the equitable powers of the court in order to collect his charges. Hildebrand v. Kinney, 87 N. E. 832, 834, 172 Ind. 447, 19 Ann. Cas. 788.

The holder of a claim under a bond, to which a testator was a party, which arose during his lifetime, is a "creditor" within the meaning of Gen. Laws, c. 215, § 2, providing that claims of creditors against estates of deceased persons must be presented to the executor within the period of six months from the date of the first advertisement of the notice of the executor's qualification. Municipal Court v. Whaley, 57 Atl. 1061, 26 R. I. 25.

As creditor of fraudulent grantor

Any one who, but for a deed made to defraud creditors, would have the right to subject the property to his demand is a "creditor," entitled to sue in equity to set it aside under Code 1899, c. 74 (Code 1906, §§ 3099-3108). Carr v. Davis, 63 S. E. 326, 328, 64

W. Va. 522, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 58, 16 Ann. Cas. 1081.

Creditor of partnership

Under the Bankrupt Law, provision that a discharge shall release a bankrupt from all provable debts except such as have not been duly scheduled in time for proof and allowance, with the name of the "creditor," etc., the surviving partner of a firm creditor was correctly scheduled as a "creditor." Kaufman v. Schreier, 95 N. Y. Supp. 729, 730, 108 App. Div. 298.

The "creditors" of a partnership entitled to object to the assumption by the firm of a debt of the individual partner by the execution of notes are those creditors of the firm who held the claims against the partnership at the time of the execution of such notes. Merchants' Bank of Grenada v. Thomas, 121 Fed. 306, 311, 57 C. C. A. 374.

The word "creditors," within the meaning of a statute providing that the dissolution of a partnership by the retirement of an ostensible partner must be made known to creditors, is not limited to persons who were creditors at the time of the dissolution, but includes a person who had previously sold goods and given credit to the firm during its continuance. Mims v. Brook & Co., 59 S. E. 711, 712, 3 Ga. App. 247.

A "creditor of the partnership" is a person interested in the distribution of the assets thereof by the court through the medium of a receiver. Johnson v. Johnson, 107 N. W. 802, 804, 132 Iowa, 457.

As creditor while possession is in debtor

A New York statute provided that every chattel mortgage which shall not be accompanied by an immediate delivery and be followed by an actual and continued change of possession of the things mortgaged shall be absolutely void as against the "creditors" of the mortgagor and purchasers in good faith, unless filed, etc. Held, that the term "creditors" included all persons who were such while the chattels remained in the mortgagor's possession, though they did not obtain judgment or a specific lien until after delivery of the property to the mortgagee. In re Beede, 126 Fed. 853, 857, 860, 862.

Where chattel mortgages were kept off the record until just before one of the mortgagees took possession, claimants, who had not secured a lien on the property before the mortgagee took possession, were not "creditors," entitled to have the mortgage set aside as fraudulent, because the mortgagor, after executing the mortgage, was permitted to retain possession and make sales from the mortgaged stock in the ordinary course of business without accounting to the mortgagees, who were aware of the sales, for the proceeds. Mattley v. Wolfe, 175 Fed. 619, 620.

The term "creditors," within 1 Mills' Ann. St. § 2028, which provides that the term creditors, as used in the preceding section dealing with fraudulent transfers as against those who are creditors of the person making the assignment, shall be construed to include all persons who shall be creditors of the vendor or assignor at any time while such goods and chattels remain in his possession or under his control, would not embrace the holder of an account contracted more than six months after a transfer. Jones v. Mackenzie Bros., 73 Pac. 847, 848, 19 Colo. App. 121.

Where the transaction by which one became a creditor of a bailee was distinct from that in which he purchased the chattels in possession of the bailee, and he was not a creditor within Civ. Code 1902, § 2855, providing that every agreement between bailor and bailee whereby the bailor reserves title to himself shall be void as to subsequent creditors, unless recorded, his claim was not such a consideration as could make him a purchaser for value without notice, within the statute. Armour & Co. v. Ross, 58 S. E. 941, 943, 78 S. C. 294; Id., 58 S. E. 1135.

Under the Ohio statute which provides that conditional sales of chattels, under which delivery has been made, shall be void unless recorded, as against "all subsequent purchasers and mortgagees in good faith and creditors," a reservation of title in such a contract which had not been filed at the time of the bankruptcy of the purchaser is void as against his "creditors" whether their claims arose before or after the contract was made. Dolle v. Cassell, 135 Fed. 52, 56, 57, 67 C. C. A. 526.

Ky. St. 1903, § 496, provides that no deed of trust or mortgage conveying a legal or equitable estate to real or personal property shall be valid against a purchaser for a valuable consideration, without notice thereof, or against "creditors," until such deed shall be acknowledged or proved according to law, and lodged of record. Held, that the "creditor" against whom the conveyance shall not be valid is one who becomes a "creditor" at a time when the appearance of ownership arising from the debtor's possession may have misled him into the giving of credit upon the faith of such ownership, and not one who became a "creditor" prior to the acquisition of the property by the debtor. In re Ducker, 134 Fed. 48, 46, 67 C. C. A. 117.

The term "creditors," as used in relation to mortgages fraudulent as to creditors, includes all persons who were such while the chattels remained in the possession of the mortgagor under the agreement, and their rights are not affected by the fact that they did not obtain judgment or a specific lien until after the delivery of the property to the mortgagee. Citizens' State Bank of Tracy v. Brown, 124 N. W. 990, 992, 110 Minn. 176.

As creditor with claim filed or proved in bankruptcy

Under Bankr. Act, § 1, defining "creditor" so as to include any one who owns a demand or claim provable in bankruptcy, where a bankrupt's schedules disclosed the claim of P., and that the bankrupt claimed the same was barred by limitations, P. was entitled to examine the bankrupt as to the extent of his estate at an adjourned meeting of creditors before P. had formally filed his claim with the referee, in order that P. might determine whether the size of any possible dividend was sufficient to justify the expense of proving the claim, notwithstanding the rule requiring a creditor to file a formal claim before any examination. In re Kuffler, 153 Fed. 667, 668.

Heir of estate

An heir entitled to exoneration by the personal estate from a mortgage, held by a third party, is a creditor within Orphans' Court Act (P. L. 1898, pp. 738, 740) §§ 67, 70, which provides for publication by an administrator or executor of notice to creditors to bring in their claims within nine months from the date of such order, and that, after the expiration of such time, the court may, by final decree, order that all creditors not presenting their claims within such time shall be barred. Smith v. Wilson, 81 Atl. 851, 853, 79 N. J. Eq. 810.

Holder of certificate of deposit

A holder of a bank's certificate of deposit, payable on a fixed date with interest, is a "creditor" of the bank on a loan made to it for a fixed period on which interest is stipulated for, and is not a "depositor," within the constitution giving depositors who have not stipulated for interest a preference in case of the bank's insolvency. Taylor v. Hutchinson, 40 South. 108, 110, 145 Ala. 202.

Indorsers, guarantors, or sureties

Code 1907, § 4295, provides that every general assignment by a debtor of substantially all his property subject to execution in payment of a prior debt by which a preference is given to one or more creditors shall inure to the benefit of all the grantor's creditors equally, and that a general assignment within the section shall include any disposition of property by which the debtor conveys substantially all his property subject to execution to pay a prior debt or charges such property with the payment thereof. Held, that the word "creditor" was so used in its broad and general sense, and included a surety who had not paid the debt; and hence a conveyance by a debtor of substantially all his property to such surety in consideration that the surety would pay the debt was a general assignment for the benefit of all creditors. Smith v. Young, 55 South. 425, 426, 173 Ala. 190.

A guarantor, an indorser, an accommodation maker, or a surety, on the obligation of a bankrupt, is a creditor within the meaning of section 60b of the Bankruptcy Act of July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 562. The fact that the guarantor or indorser did not pay or induce the payment of the debt, but the payment was made by the bankrupt, does not except the case from the operation of the rule. Paper v. Stern, 198 Fed. 642, 644, 117 C. C. A. 346.

A guarantor is a "creditor" within the meaning of section 60b of the bankruptcy act (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 562), relating to the giving of preferences to creditors. Stern v. Paper, 183 Fed. 228, 231.

A surety is a creditor from the inception of his contingent liability within Code 1907, § 4295, relating to preferential assignments, and, after he has paid the surety debt, he may maintain a creditor's bill against the principal and other creditors to set aside fraudulent conveyances made while the liability of the surety was contingent, or to have them declared general assignments. Smith v. Young, 55 South. 425, 427, 173 Ala. 190.

A surety on a note is a "creditor" of the maker, within Code 1896, § 2158, making a conveyance of substantially all of a debtor's property to one or more creditors equivalent to a general assignment. Smith v. McCadden & McElwee, 86 South. 376, 377, 138 Ala. 284.

A surety on the bond of a contractor for government work, who under the federal statute is directly liable to laborers to whom the contractor is indebted for labor performed under the contract, is a creditor of the contractor to the extent of such liability, within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544, and the lending of money by the surety to the contractor to pay such claims, and the taking of security therefor, at a time when the contractor was insolvent and within four months prior to its bankruptcy, was the giving of a preference to a creditor and constituted an act of bankruptcy under section 3a (2) of the act. United Surety Co. v. Iowa Mfg. Co., 179 Fed. 55, 58, 102 C. C. A. 623.

An indorser on a bankrupt's matured note which is without other security is a "creditor" within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541. Bank of Wayne v. Gold, 180 N. Y. Supp. 942, 943, 146 App. Div. 296.

A surety is a "creditor," within the meaning of the provision of the bankrupt act condemning preferential transfers to creditors. Horstman v. Little (Civ. App.) 88 S. W. 286, 288.

A surety is a "creditor" of the principal debtor from the inception of his contingent liability, and will be protected in an action for reimbursement against a fraudulent conveyance by his principal pending such liability. Smith v. Pitts, 52 South. 402, 404, 167 Ala. 461.

A brother of a voluntary bankrupt who during the six months preceding the bankruptcy proceeding, by express tacit understanding, set out to pay the creditors who held collateral their full amounts and secure to himself whatever equity there was in such collateral above the amounts due the secured creditors, but to whom the bankrupt himself owed no money, and whose rights with respect to the bankrupt and his property were in aid of securing himself because he was an indorser upon a secured note of the bankrupt, was not a "creditor." Horton v. Bamford, 81 Atl. 761, 769, 79 N. J. Eq. 356.

A surety or indorser for a bankrupt is a "creditor" within the meaning of the bankruptcy law. Huttig Mfg. Co. v. Edwards, 160 Fed. 619, 620, 87 C. C. A. 521; Kobusch v. Hand, 156 Fed. 660, 662, 84 C. C. A. 372, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 660.

A surety on an obligation of a bankrupt is a creditor, within Bankr. Act 1898 (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541); and, when he has received from the bankrupt, within four months next preceding the filing of his petition, while the bankrupt is insolvent, a preference on an open account due him by the bankrupt, the surety will not be allowed his claim for the amount paid after the adjudication by him as surety, unless he returns the preference received on the open account. M. Kahn & Bro. v. Bledsoe, 98 Pac. 921, 922, 22 Okl. 666.

Legatee or devisee

Rev. St. 1895, art. 1896, subd. 3, authorizes parties interested in an estate to prevent administration thereof on the application of a creditor by giving a bond to secure said creditor or creditors. Held that, while a legatee is not in the strict meaning of the word a "creditor" of the estate, he is in effect a creditor of a solvent estate when the will bequeathing the legacy is established, and if not within the letter, it is within the spirit, of the statute, for those interested in the estate when an application for administration on it is made, who do not desire an administration thereof to defeat such administration by executing such bond as provided. Hummel v. Del Greco, 90 S. W. 339, 341, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 510.

Under Rev. St. § 6098, authorizing any heir or creditor of a deceased person to request an administrator or executor to reject any claim presented for allowance, a widow may file a requisition on an executor to disallow a claim, as the words "any heir," or "creditor," include devisees and legatees or any person whomsoever whose property may be affected by the recovery of a judgment. Todd v. Todd, 27 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 224, 227.

Mortgagee

As expressly defined by Civ. Code, § 3430, a "creditor" is one in whose favor an obligation exists through which he is or may become entitled to payment of money. The word is given very broad significance in determining the right to assail a fraudulent transfer of property. "A mortgagee is none the less a 'creditor' because the payment of the debt due him is secured by lien on specific property." Calkins v. Howard, 83 Pac. 280, 281, 2 Cal. App. 233.

Obligee in bond

The obligee in an appeal bond was a "creditor" of the surety thereon before the bond became absolute upon affirmance on appeal and the principal's failure to pay the judgment within the bulk sales act (Pub. Acts 1905, No. 223), making the sale in bulk of a stock of merchandise otherwise than in the ordinary course of trade void as to the seller's creditors unless he makes a detailed inventory showing the cost of each article sold, and unless the purchaser demands and receives from the seller a list of the names and addresses of seller's creditors with the amount of the indebtedness, etc., and notifies them of the terms of the proposed sale within five days before taking possession; a "creditor" being one having the right to require of another the fulfillment of an obligation. Hanna v. Hurley, 127 N. W. 710, 711, 162 Mich. 601.

Officer of corporation

An officer of a corporation which is a creditor of a decedent is not himself a "creditor" within a statute declaring that, if none of the relatives of a deceased person apply for letters of administration, a creditor will be entitled to letters. In re Owens' Estate, 85 Pac. 277, 280, 30 Utah, 351.

Pledgor

Where a broker buys stock for a customer on a margin, the title to such stock is in the customer, and not in the broker, who holds the same merely as pledgee to secure the advances made by him in the purchase. Hence the customer is not a creditor of the broker with respect to the transaction within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, subd. 9, 30 Stat. 544, and the transfer of the stock to the customer on the settlement of his account cannot be considered the giving of a preference by the broker on his bankruptcy within four months thereafter. Richardson v. Shaw, 147 Fed. 659, 660, 77 C. C. A. 643.

As purchaser

See Purchaser.

Receiver

Bankr. Act, § 1, subd. 9, provides that the word "creditor" shall include any one who owns a demand or claim provable in bankruptcy, and may include his duly authorized agent, attorney, or proxy. A receiver, for collection and enforcement of the liability of stockholders appointed pursuant to state statutes in a suit by creditors of an insolvent corporation to charge the stockholders with liability for its debts is covered by this definition, since, while he does not own a demand or claim, he is the duly authorized agent of those who do own a demand or claim. Dight v. Chapman, 75 Pac. 585, 587, 44 Or. 265, 65 L. R. A. 793.

Stockholder

Under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 18b, 30 Stat. 551, which provides that the bankrupt or any creditor may appear and plead to a petition in involuntary bankruptcy, stockholders of a corporation as such cannot appear and defend a proceeding against the corporation, unless such a showing is made as would entitle them to maintain or defend a suit in equity in its behalf. In re Eureka Anthracite Coal Co., 197 Fed. 216, 217.

Trustee in bankruptcy

General order in bankruptcy No. 17, authorizing "creditors" to except to the allowance of the bankrupt's exemption, does not exclude the trustee, who may except on behalf of all of the creditors to such allowance on the ground of the bankrupt's fraud. In re Rice, 164 Fed. 589, 591.

Wife

Frauds and Perjuries Act, § 4, provides that "every gift, grant, conveyance * * * made with the intent to disturb, delay, hinder or defraud creditors or other persons * * * shall be void as against such creditors, purchasers and other persons." Held, that the phrase "creditors and other persons" does not include the wife of the grantor with reference to her right under specified circumstances to take a one-half interest in his real estate in lieu of dower, under Dower Act, § 12. Blankenship v. Hall, 84 N. E. 192, 195, 233 Ill. 116, 122 Am. St. Rep. 149.

Of corporation

The vote of the stockholders of a corporation to add an amendment to the by-laws providing that no person should be allowed to hold more than $400 in stock of the corporation, together with the fact that from that time to the date the corporation was adjudged a bankrupt various persons, including defendant, held shares in excess of $400 with the knowledge and consent of the corporation, did not enlarge defendant's rights with reference to the withdrawal of his shares, nor make him a "creditor" of the corporation for the amount invested above $400. Richardson v. Devine, 79 N. E. 771, 772, 193 Mass. 336.

Persons were "stockholders" and not "creditors" of a corporation, where they received stock under a resolution in the handwriting of one of them, directing its issuance to them for advances, and retained it over four months, when they attached the certificates to their respective claims filed with the corporation's receiver; the papers in a suit by one of such persons in which the receiver was appointed reciting that they were stockholders, and not disclosing the amount of such advances as debts of the corporation, though a schedule of the corporation's debts was set out. Iserman v. International Stoker Co., 66 Atl. 605, 606, 72 N. J. Eq. 708.

CREDITOR SEEKING PREFERENCE

A factor's claim for reimbursement out of the proceeds of a consignment made by one adjudicated a bankrupt within four months thereafter for its advances and expenses incurred in his relation of factor and consignee does not constitute him a "creditor of the bankrupt, seeking a preference," within the meaning of the bankrupt act (Act July 1, 1898; c. 541, § 67f, 30 Stat. 565). Nisbet v. Sigel-Camplon Live Stock Commission Co. (Colo. App.) 123 Pac. 110, 120, 53 Colo. 333.

CREDITORS' BILL

See, also, Creditors' Suit.

"A 'creditors' bill' is an action in equity," while a suit by judgment creditor of a corporation to enforce liability of stockholders is an action at law. Padros v. Swarzenbach, 119 N. Y. Supp. 589, 591, 134 App. Div. 811.

CREDITORS OF THE MORTGAGOR

"Creditors of the mortgagor" does not mean any more than is expressed. It does not mean creditors of a third party to whom the mortgagor afterwards conveys the property, even if the third party assumes and agrees to pay the mortgage debt. The words of the statute are not to be extended by implication to other classes of persons than those named. Talcott v. Hurlbert, 76 Pac. 647, 649, 143 Cal. 4.

Comp. Laws Mich. § 9523, as amended by Pub. Acts 1907, No. 332, provides that every chattel mortgage not accompanied by immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession of the things mortgaged, shall be absolutely void as against "creditors of the mortgagor," or against subsequent creditors, unless the mortgage or a copy thereof be filed as directed in the statute. Held, that the words "creditors of the mortgagor," as determined by the Michigan Supreme Court, mean subsequent creditors in good faith and without notice of the mortgage, and that the statutory invalidity of an unfiled chattel mortgage extends to all creditors who become such after the giving and before the filing of the mortgage. Detroit Trust Co. v. Pontiac Sav. Bank, 196 Fed. 29, 33, 115 C. C. A. 663; In re Huxoll, 193 Fed. 851, 853, 113 C. C. A. 637.

CREDITORS' SUIT

A "class suit" is one in which one or more members of a numerous class, having a common interest, sue in behalf of themselves and all other members of that class. Such suits are sometimes called "creditors' suits" and sometimes "stockholders' suits." Seminole Securities Co. v. Southern Life Ins. Co., 182 Fed. 85, 96.

"A 'creditors' suit' may be maintained by judgment creditors on their own account and for their exclusive benefit, after a receiver of the debtor's property in supplementary proceedings has been appointed, to set aside as fraudulent and declare void a mortgage previously given by the judgment debtor upon his real estate, and to secure the proceeds of the debtor's property to the satisfaction of their judgments, where their judgments were recovered and became a lien on such real estate of the debtor prior to the appointment of the receiver." Ullman v. Cameron, 93 N. Y. Supp. 976, 979, 105 App. Div. 159 (quoting and adopting the definition in Gere v. Dibble [N. Y.] 17 How. Prac. 31).

CREDITS

See Moneys and Credits; Mutual Credits; Rule of Credits.

See, also, Credit.

"Credits" are in effect the mere legal right with which one is clothed to demand the delivery of money or other property in the future, and until such transfer of possession is made the property is taxed wherever it may be, and so far as credits are concerned, if it is demonstrable that the total wealth of the state can be once taxed without the taxation of credits in any form, the Constitution is satisfied without the taxation of credits. State ex rel. Wolfe v. Parmenter, 96 Pac. 1047, 1049, 50 Wash. 164, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 707.

As used in Laws 1901, p. 166, § 2, prohibiting the conducting of games of chance for money, checks, "credits," or any representative of value, or for any property or thing whatever, the word "credits" is a term of universal application to obligations due and to become due; and the expression "any representative of value" together with these words leave nothing of any of the classes of property enumerated. Hence a nickel in the slot machine, involving in its operation the element of chance as to whether the player obtained in cigars more or less than the value of his money, was prohibited by such statute. State v. Woodman, 67 Pac. 1118, 1120, 26 Mont. 348.

Complainant a New York life insurance corporation, made so-called "policy loans" to policy holders in Louisiana; the transactions being as follows: When sufficient premiums had been paid on a policy to give it a recognized reserve value, complainant on application would advance the amount of such reserve value to the holder, taking the policy in pledge, and requiring the insured to pay in addition to each future annual premium a sum equal to the interest on the amount of the advance. Such advance was never collected until the policy matured or lapsed, when it was deducted from the amount due from complainant thereon. Complainant also made to some policy holders what were called "premium lien note loans," which were essentially the same as the policy loans; the only difference being that, instead of making an advance, complainant extended credit for premiums when due, taking notes which were in like manner charged against the reserve value of the policy. Held, that the transactions were not loans in either case, but were merely advance payments on the earned value of the policies, and did not constitute "credits" in favor of complainant, which were taxable. New York Life Ins. Co. v. Board of Assessors for the Parish of Orleans, 158 Fed. 462, 472.

As debts

Const. art. 13, § 1, permits provision, except in case of credits secured, for a deduction from credits of debts due to bona fide residents. Pol. Code, § 3617, subd. 3, provides that a mortgage, or other obligation by which a debt is secured, when land is pledged, shall, for the purposes of taxation, be deemed an interest in the land so pledged, and by subdivision 6 the term "credits" means those solvent debts not secured owing to the person assessed, and the term "debt" means those unsecured liabilities owing by the person assessed to bona fide residents and section 3628, provides that, in assessing solvent credits not secured, a reduction shall be made of debts due bona fide residents, and section 3650, subd. 15, provides that in entering assessments containing solvent credits, subject to deduction, the assessor must enter in the proper column the value of debts and deduct them therefrom. Const. art. 13, § 4, provides that a mortgage, or other obligation by which a debt is secured, shall, for the purpose of taxation, be deemed an interest in the property affected. Pol. Code, § 3627, contains the same provision. Held, that a collateral security of credits by a loan on personalty was not a mortgage, etc., or "other obligation by which a debt is secured," within Const. art. 13, § 4, that section applying only to liens on land; nor was it a "mortgage or trust deed," within section 1, so that the person assessed on such credits was entitled to have his debts deducted therefrom; and Pol. Code, § 3629, subd. 6, directing the assessor to require each person assessed to show separately all solvent credits unsecured, is not applicable, not referring to the assessor's duty in making the assessment, but only prescribing the form of the taxpayer's return for the assessor's information. Bank of Willows v. Glenn County, 101 Pac. 13, 14, 155 Cal. 352.

Cash or money

"Money deposited in bank," as used in section 4, Revenue Act 1903 (Comp. St. 1903, p. 1283), is expressly discriminated from a "credit," which is defined by the following section (5) to include "every demand for money, labor, or other valuable thing, whether due or to become due." Critchfield v. Nance County, 110 N. W. 538, 77 Neb. 807.

Moneys due a bank from other banks are "credits" within Pol. Code, § 3680, defining "credits" as solvent debts, secured or unsecured, owing to a person. Clark v. Maher, 87 Pac. 272, 273, 34 Mont. 391.

Under Code, § 1808, defining taxable property as including "credits," and section 1309, defining "credits" as including money secured by deed, title bond, mortgage, or otherwise, the amount due to a vendor under a contract binding him to convey on payment of certain notes and the execution of other notes for the balance due, secured by mortgage, is taxable, though the contract was not signed by the vendee and contained no agreement in form of words on the vendee's part to make payment where it appeared that the parties intended the contract to be mutually obligatory. Cross v. Snakenberg, 102 N. W. 508, 509, 126 Iowa, 636.

Choses in action and notes

In Rev. St. § 5209, which makes it a criminal offense for any officer or agent of a national bank to embezzle, abstract, or willfully misapply "any of the moneys, funds, or credits of the association," the word "moneys" refers to the currency or circulating medium of the country, the word "funds" refers to government, state, county, municipal, or other bonds, and to other forms of obligations and securities in which investments may be made, and the word "credits" refers to notes and bills payable to the bank, and to other forms of direct promises to pay money to it. United States v. Smith, 152 Fed. 542, 544 (citing United States v. Greve, 85 Fed. 489).

"The term 'credit,' as used in the revenue law, 'includes every claim or demand for money, labor, merchandise, and other valuable things.' Hence debts due on open account to a nonresident are taxable at the domicile of the debtor, when they have arisen out of a business carried on in the taxing state and form part of the capital of the business. National Fire Ins. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 46 South. 117, 118, 121 La. 108, 126 Am. St. Rep. 313 (quoting Louisiana Act of 1898, No. 170, § 91); General Electric Co. v. Board of Assessors, 46 South. 122, 123, 121 La. 116.

Pol. Code, Cal. § 3617, subd. 6, defines taxable "credits" as those solvent debts not secured by mortgage or deed of trust owing to a person, firm, corporation, or association assessed for taxes. Bank of Woodland v. Pierce, 77 Pac. 1012, 1014, 144 Cal. 434.

In determining what were "credits" within the meaning of the tax law, counsel argued that they were obligations which represent taxable things which have changed their form, such as notes or open accounts for money loaned or property purchased; but the court held that outstanding uncollected accounts were a rather common variety of "credits" liable to taxation. Standard Marine Ins. Co., Limited, of Liverpool, England, v. Board of Assessors, 49 South. 483, 484, 123 La. 717, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 59.

Pol. Code Cal. § 3617, defines taxable "credits" as solvent debts not secured by mortgage or trust deed owing to the person, firm, or corporation assessed. Where a foreign corporation maintained branch banks in San Francisco, Portland, Or., and Tacoma, Wash., credits on the books of the San Francisco office, consisting of sums paid to the other branches for their benefit, and charged to them as mere matter of bookkeeping, without any promise or obligation on the part of the debited agencies to return the money to the San Francisco bank, were not credits arising in the state of California within Const. Cal. art. 13, § 1, declaring that all property in the state, not exempt under the laws of the United States, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, and that the word "property" shall include all moneys, credits, etc., capable of private ownership. London & San Francisco Bank v. Block, 186 Fed. 138, 140, 69 C. C. A. 136.

A notice of attachment of "credits and effects" belonging to defendant creates no liability of the garnishee for a debt due defendant. Clyne v. Easton, Eldridge & Co., 83 Pac. 36, 88, 148 Cal. 287, 113 Am. St. Rep. 253.

Plaintiff executed an instrument purporting to be a lease for ten years, with privilege of extension for five years more at an annual rental, the tenant to pay taxes, keep the premises in repair, and the buildings insured. Plaintiff also agreed to sell the premises to the tenant for $15,200, provided payment thereof was made on the 1st day of March of any year during the lease, payment of rent on the day being of the essence of the contract, and that, on failure of the lessee to perform, the lease should be canceled, except for rent or taxes due, and the lessee's option lost, and that, on the termination of the lease, the plaintiff agreed to give the tenant a warranty deed on payment of $15,200. When the contract was made, the tenant paid plaintiff $3,000 in cash, which, with the $15,200, made the agreed purchase price of the property, and the rent stipulated for was fixed at 5 per cent. of the deferred payment; the only right of the tenant being to occupy the premises as tenant, unless he exercised his option, and, if he did not, the $3,000 paid should be lost. Held, that the right of the tenant in addition to those acquired as lessee was only an option to buy the property on making payment of $15,200 without interest, and that the contract was therefore a lease, and not a contract for sale, and plaintiff was therefore not required to pay taxes on such contracts as "moneys and credits." Bissell v. Board of Review of Town of Dunlap (Iowa) 138 N. W. 830, 831.

Insurance policy

A policy of insurance issued by a fraternal benefit society is, after the death of the insured, and before proofs thereof are made to the society, a "credit," within the meaning of 3 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896 (2d Ed.) pp. 3398-3406, cl. 1, § 1, requiring all credits to be assessed and taxed, and Revenue Act 1898, cl. 6, § 292, defining "credits" to be every claim or demand for money due or to become due, and not including money on deposit, though the policy makes the furnishing of proofs of death a condition precedent to liability of the society thereon, and provides that the amount thereof shall not be due until 60 days after proof of death is filed. Cooper v. Board of Review of Montgomery County, 69 N. E. 878, 879, 207 Ill. 472, 64 L. R. A. 72.

As net credits

The word "credit," as used in Sess. Laws 1903, c. 73, providing that the taxpayer may deduct from the credits due him all just debts by him owing at the time of such return, means "net credit." State ex rel. Palmer v. Fleming, 97 N. W. 1063, 1067, 70 Neb. 529.

The term "credit" in the revenue law has been construed to mean "net credit." The revenue law which permits, under this interpretation, a taxpayer to deduct his bona fide debts from his gross credits, is not in conflict with Const. art. 9, § 1, requiring taxes to be uniform. Scandinavian Mut. Aid Ass'n v. Kearney County, 118 N. W. 333, 81 Neb. 478.

The word "credits," as used in Cobby's Ann. St. 1903, § 10,427, relating to taxation, means net credits, and the indebtedness of the taxpayer may be deducted from gross credits to find the true value of credits for assessment. Lancaster County v. McDonald, 103 N. W. 78, 79, 73 Neb. 453.

The word "credits," as used in Cobby's Ann. St. 1903, § 10,427, providing for the listing of credits for taxation, means, "net credits," and the indebtedness of a taxpayer may be deducted from the gross credits to find their true value for assessment. Oleson v. Cumming County, 115 N. W. 783, 784, 81 Neb. 209.

The word "credits," as used in the Revenue Law, means "net credits"; that "the taxpayer may deduct from his gross credits the amount of his bona fide debts in order to determine the true value of his credits for assessment rolls." Royal Highlanders v. State, 108 N. W. 183, 186, 77 Neb. 18, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 380.

Pensions or proceeds

Code, § 1309, defining the word "credit" as used in the chapter relating to taxation, which provides for the taxation of credits, provides that pensions of the United States are not included within such term. Code Supp. 1907, § 1304, enumerating property exempt from taxation, paragraph 7 of which relates exclusively to the property of soldiers and sailors, does not exempt from taxation property purchased with pension money. Held, that real estate purchased with pension money received from the United States government is not exempt from taxation. Beers v. Langenfeld, 128 N. W. 847, 149 Iowa, 581.

Under Rev. St. U. S. § 4747, providing that no pension money due to any pensioner shall be liable to seizure under process while in the course of transmission to the pensioner, and Code, §§ 1309, 4009, providing that the term "credit" in the chapter relating to assessment of taxes shall include every claim or demand due or to become due for money, and every annuity or sum of money receivable at stated periods, but United States pensions are not included, and declaring that all pension money shall be exempt from execution, interest received on pension money loaned out by a pensioner is not exempt from taxation. Bednar v. Carroll, 116 N. W. 315, 316, 138 Iowa, 338.

As personal property

See Personal Property.

Shares of stock

The stock of a building corporation was divided into classes, one of which consisted of prepaid stock, on which interest is payable out of the earnings at a rate not exceeding 6 per cent. per annum. The holders have the right to withdraw the amount paid in on stated conditions, and the association has the right to retire the stock on notice. The holders are members of the association, and eligible to vote and hold office. Held, that the stock is not a credit, within Gen. St. 1909, § 9222, providing that debts for purposes of taxation may be deducted from credits belonging to a person; the term "credits," as defined by Gen. St. 1901, § 7503, meaning demands for money or other valuable thing, whether due or not due. Abrahams v. Medlicott, 119 Pac. 375, 86 Kan. 106, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 137.

Code, § 1309, provides that the term "credit" as used in the chapter providing for the deduction of debts from credits listed for taxation shall include every claim or demand due or to become due for money, labor, or other valuable thing, every annuity or sum of money receivable at stated periods, and all money or property of any kind secured by deed, title bond, mortgage, or otherwise. Code, § 1308, being a substantial re-enactment of previous provisions on the subject, declares that all other property is subject to taxation in the manner prescribed, and that the section is intended to embrace "credits," including bank bills, government currency, and corporate shares of stock; corporate shares of stock being in all instances classified entirely separate from credits. Code, § 1360, required an assessment roll which should show the moneys and credits, but did not mention corporate shares of stock which had been previously required to be classified separately, and Code Supp. 1907, § 1360, again included corporate stock in the roll in addition to moneys and credits; the omission in the Code of 1897 evidently being an oversight. Held, that there was a definite legislative recognition of a distinction between the term "credits," as used in section 1309, and corporate shares or stocks are not "credits" within such section. Morril v. Bentley, 130 N. W. 734, 738, 150 Iowa, 677.

CREED

Acts 1891, p. 340, c. 132, prohibiting the wearing of the badge of a secret society by a nonmember, prohibits that which at common law is indictable as a cheat effected by illegal symbols which may affect the public at large, and against which common prudence may not guard, to the injury of one in some pecuniary interest, independently by any statute as to false pretenses and false personation, and is a valid police regulation directed against false pretenses and false personation of that particular kind, and is not in conflict with Const. art. 1, § 4, providing that no preference shall be given by law to any creed; the word "creed" meaning a formal declaration of religious belief, and not applying to benevolent or fraternal organizations. Hammer v. State, 89 N. E. 850, 852, 173 Ind. 199, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 795, 140 Am. St. Rep. 248, 21 Ann. Cas. 1034.

CREMATORY

In a "crematory" the ordinary garbage of a city, including half-decayed meat, dead animals, and the like, are subjected to a burning process, and the residue, as ashes, is used, in connection with the night-soil collections and ordinary stable waste, to make a fertilizer. Laird v. Atlantic Coast Sanitary Co., 67 Atl. 387, 388, 73 N. J. Eq. 49.

CREOLIN—PEARSON

As medicinal preparation, see Medicinal Preparation.

CREOSOTE

"Creosote" is wood tar oil. Halbert v. Texas Tie & Lumber Preserving Co. (Tex.) 107 S. W. 592.

CREPE PAPER

The provision for "crepe paper" in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 397, 30 Stat. 188, was intended to apply to paper subjected to a creping process; and a paper made by that process and resembling crepe paper generally, but somewhat heavier, and treated with sizing for waterproofing purposes, is dutiable thereunder. Flegel v. United States, 167 Fed. 537, 93 C. C. A. 215.

CREPITUS

"Crepitus" means a grating of the ends of broken bones. The Kenilworth, 137 Fed. 1003, 1005.

CRESCENDO RENTAL

By "crescendo rental" is meant a rental which, owing to certain well-known and universal laws, applicable to growing localities, provides for a gradual increase of the amount of rent at fixed periods during the term of the lease. Sohmer Co. v. C. H. Welling Inv. Co., 118 N. Y. Supp. 450, 452, 63 Misc. Rep. 439.

CREVICE

The words "crevice" or "range" are sometimes considered to be equivalent to the expression "lode" or "vein." St. Anthony Min. & Mill. Co. v. Shaffra, 120 N. W. 238, 239, 138 Wis. 507 (citing Beals v. Cone, 62 Pac. 948-958, 27 Colo. 473, 83 Am. St. Rep. 92; Van Zandt v. Argentine Min. Co., 8 Fed. 725; Terrible Min. Co. v. Argentine Min. Co., 89 Fed. 583).

CREW

See Train Crew.

Ship's crew as company, see Company.

A statement in the certificate of inspection of a steam vessel that her complement shall be a master, two mates, two engineers, and twelve "crew," does not necessarily mean that the twelve crew shall be sailors only, excluding firemen, and, in the absence of evidence that the vessel had not sufficient officers and crew at all times, she is not to be deemed unseaworthy in her crew because she had fewer than twelve sailors. In re Meyer, 74 Fed. 881, 892.

"When the 'crew' of a vessel is referred to, those persons are naturally and primarily meant who are on board her aiding in her navigation, without reference to the nature of the arrangement under which they are on board." The Bound Brook, 146 Fed. 160, 164.

CRIB

"Crib" is defined as a box or bin or similar, wooden structure for storing grain, salt, etc.; as a crib for corn or oats. And "cornercrib" is defined as a crib for storing corn. A "barn" is defined as a covered building designed for the storage of grain, hay, flax, or other barn products. The word "cornercrib," as used in a statute providing that "any person who willfully sets fire to or burns * * * any cornercrib or corn pen containing corn, or any barn, * * * is guilty of arson in the second degree," means a building or structure in its entirety, and not a room or apartment in a building or structure. Therefore an indictment charging the burning of a cornercrib is not sustained by proof that the building destroyed was a barn in which one room was partitioned off as a cornercrib. Jackson v. State, 40 South. 979, 980, 145 Ala. 54 (quoting and adopting definition in Cent. Dict. & Webst. Int. Dict.).

CRIBS

Where a house of prostitution contains numerous small rooms, such rooms are designated as "cribs." Pon v. Wittman, 81 Pac. 984, 985, 147 Cal. 280, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 688.

CRIME

See Attempt to Commit Crime; Common-Law Crime; High Crimes and Misdemeanors; Infamous Crime; Quasi Crime; Sexual Crimes; Continuing Offense.

See, also, Offense; Public Offense; Sodomy.

A "crime" is an act committed or omitted in violation of a public law either forbidding or commanding it, and in a comprehensive sense it includes minor offenses. Commonwealth v. Shields, 50 Pa. Super. Ct. 194, 203.

A "crime" is an act committed or omitted in violation of a public law either forbidding or commanding it. Town of Neola v. Reichart, 109 N. W. 5, 8, 131 Iowa, 492 (citing 4 Bl. Comm. 5).

The common-law definition of "crime," as given by Blackstone, is "an act committed or omitted in violation of a public law." Costello v. Feagin, 50 South. 134, 135, 162 Ala. 191.

"It is a principle of criminal law that an offense which may be the subject of criminal procedure is an act committed or omitted in violation of a public law, either forbidding or commanding it." United States v. Eaton, 12 Sup. Ct. 764, 767, 144 U. S. 687, 36 L. Ed. 591.

"For nearly all crimes and misdemeanors the laws of the states, and not the enactments of Congress, must be looked to for the definition of the offense." Wright v.

"Crimes" and misdemeanors in this state are such wrongs of a public nature as are punished by criminal proceedings in the name of the state. Adams Exp. Co. v. State, 67 N. E. 1033, 1039, 161 Ind. 328.

Where the public deems an act of private wrong as of a nature requiring the public protection for the individual, it makes the act punishable at its own suit and thus makes the act a "crime." Jernigan v. Commonwealth, 52 S. E. 361, 362, 104 Va. 850.

A "crime" or misdemeanor is defined to be an act committed or omitted in violation of a public law either prohibiting it or commanding it, and a crime is also defined as any wrong which the government deems injurious to the public at large, and punishes through a judicial proceeding in its own name. Under Rev. St. 1898, defining a criminal action as one prosecuted by the state as a party against a person charged with a public offense, the words "criminal offense," in section 4073, providing that a witness' conviction of a "criminal offense" may be proved on his cross-examination, etc., include misdemeanors as well as felonies, but do not include an offense punishable by a municipal ordinance. Koch v. State, 106 N. W. 531, 533, 126 Wis. 470, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1086, 5 Ann. Cas. 889.

Laws 1907, p. 196, c. 131, to define and prohibit unfair competition and discrimination, etc., provides (section 3) "that any person, firm or corporation violating the provisions of section 1, of the act shall upon conviction thereof be fined." Held, that it sufficiently prohibits the acts set out in section 1 to state an offense under Pen. Code, § 3, providing that a "crime" or "public offense" is an act or omission forbidden by law, and to which is annexed, upon conviction, a fine, though the law nowhere expressly "forbids" the act. State v. Central Lumber Co., 123 N. W. 504, 508, 24 S. D. 136, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 804.

Classification

"In most of the states and territories, by constitution or statute, * * * all crimes, or at least statutory crimes, not capital, are classed as felonies or as misdemeanors, accordingly as they are or are not punishable by imprisonment in the state prison or penitentiary." Mackin v. United States, 6 Sup. Ct. 777, 779, 117 U. S. 848, 29 L. Ed. 909.

Contempt

The constitutional provision protecting one against being put twice in jeopardy for the same offense applies only to charges of "crime," and does not include a contempt proceeding, which is only quasi criminal. Jones v. Mould, 132 N. W. 45, 49, 151 Iowa, 599.

Act and intention, or criminal negligence, necessary

"A crime consists in something more than the commission of an act; there must be a union of act and intention." Hence a statement which admits the commission of an act, but which also gives legal excuse or justification, is not a confession of the commission of a crime; for one may admit that he took a horse from a stable of another, and at the same time explain that he purchased the horse from a person named, claiming to own the horse, and that there was no criminal intent on his part. Owens v. State, 48 S. E. 21, 23, 120 Ga. 296.

To constitute a crime, there must be either the joint operation of act and intention or criminal negligence. Carbo v. State, 62 S. E. 140, 4 Ga. App. 533.

All grades of offenses included

The term "crime," as used in the federal and state Constitutions, forbidding involuntary servitude except as a punishment for "crime," includes misdemeanors and all offenses in violation of penal laws. Stone v. City of Paducah, 86 S. W. 531, 534, 120 Ky. 322.

According to Blackstone, "crime" and misdemeanor, properly speaking, are synonymous terms. United States v. Zarafonitis, 150 Fed. 97, 101, 80 C. C. A. 51, 10 Ann. Cas. 290 (quoting and adopting definition in 4 Steph. Comm. 57).

Const. art. 11, § 2, provides that the legal voters of every city and town shall have power to enact and amend their municipal charter, subject to the Constitution and criminal laws of the state. B. & C. Comp. § 1228, defines "crime" to include both felonies and misdemeanors, and any offense defined and made punishable by general statute. Held, that Local Option Law (Laws 1905, p. 47) § 10, regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors within the state, is a general law, and defines a crime within Const. art. 11, § 2, and that a city within a precinct voting for prohibition could not so amend its charter as to avoid the prohibition order of the county court. Baxter v. State, 88 Pac. 677, 678, 49 Or. 353.

"The word 'crime,' in its more extended sense, comprehends every violation of public law; in a limited sense, it embraces offenses of a serious or atrocious character." Callan v. Wilson, 8 Sup. Ct. 1301, 1303, 127 U. S. 540, 549, 32 L. Ed. 223.

A misdemeanor is not a "crime" within Const. 1901, § 104, subd. 14, prohibiting local laws fixing the punishment of crime; so that such section is not contravened by section 10 of the local road law for Pike county (Loc. Acts 1907, p. 509), making it a misdemeanor for one warned to work on the public roads to fail to appear, and declaring the punishment therefor. Chancey v. State, 54 South. 522, 523, 171 Ala. 83.

Ky. St. § 2095, subsec. 19a, provides that any juvenile or first offender of the age of 21 years or under committing any crime whereby punishment in the state prison or reform school is contemplated shall be sentenced to the house of reform. Section 1127 provides that offenses are either felonies of misdemeanors, and such offenses as are punishable by confinement in the penitentiary or with death are felonies, and all other misdemeanors, and section 1308 makes shooting in a public highway a misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment. Held, that a boy 16 years of age was a "first offender" though he had theretofore been convicted of shooting at random in a public highway; the statute only contemplating felonies within the term "crime," so that upon convicting him of manslaughter he should have been committed to the reform school. Henson v. Commonwealth, 147 S. W. 399, 400, 148 Ky. 631.

Under Rev. Code 1892, § 1502, defining "crime," as used in a statute, to mean any violation of law liable to punishment by criminal prosecution, and section 1746, authorizing the examination of any witness as to his conviction of crime, the examination may extend to misdemeanors as well as to infamous crimes. Lewis v. State, 37 South. 497, 85 Miss. 35.

The third article of the Oklahoma Constitution provides for a jury in the trial of "all crimes except in cases of impeachment." The word "crime" in its most extended sense comprehends every violation of public law. In a limited sense, it embraces offenses of a serious or atrocious character. "In our opinion, the provision is to be interpreted in the light of the principles which at common law determine whether accused in a given class of cases was entitled to be tried by a jury." It is not to be construed as relating to felonies or offenses punishable by confinement in the penitentiary. It embraces as well some classes of misdemeanors, the punishment of which involves or may involve the deprivation of the citizen. It would be a narrow construction of the Constitution to hold that no prosecution for a misdemeanor is a prosecution for a "crime," within the meaning of the third article, or a "criminal prosecution," within the meaning of the sixth amendment. A person charged with having committed a misdemeanor prior to statehood has a constitutional right of trial by jury composed of 12 persons. Miller v. State, 106 Pac. 810, 812, 3 Okl. Cr. 457 (quoting and adopting definition in Callan v. Wilson, 8 Sup. Ct. 1301, 127 U. S. 540, 32 L. Ed. 223).

The word "crime," in Const. U. S. art. 4, § 2, providing that a person charged in any state with treason, felony, or other crime who shall flee from justice and be found in another state, on demand of the executive authority of the state from which he fled shall be delivered up to be removed to the state having jurisdiction of the crime, embraces not only misdemeanors, but treason and felony as well, and includes every crime committed within the borders of the United States. Ross v. Crofutt, 80 Atl. 90, 91, 84 Conn. 370, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1295 (citing Hyatt v. New York ex rel. Corkran, 23 Sup. Ct. 456, 188 U. S. 697, 47 L. Ed. 657; In re Reggel, 5 Sup. Ct. 1148, 114 U. S. 642, 649, 29 L. Ed. 250; Knox v. State, 73 N. E. 255, 164 Ind. 226, 233, 108 Am. St. Rep. 291, 3 Ann. Cas. 539).

Expulsion or deportation of alien

Immigration Act March 3, 1903, c. 1012, § 9, 32 Stat. 1215, which makes it unlawful to bring into the United States any alien afflicted with a loathsome or with a dangerous contagious disease, and provides that if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that any alien so brought was afflicted with such disease at the time of foreign embarkation and that the existence of such disease might have been detected by means of a competent medical examination at such time, such transportation company shall pay to the collector of customs $100, for each and every violation of the provisions of this section, and no vessel shall be granted clearance papers while any such fine imposed upon it remains unpaid, does not create a "crime" so as to render it unconstitutional because it does not provide for a jury trial; the fine provided for being in fact a penalty, and, if suable at all, recoverable in debt, and not through criminal proceedings. International Mercantile Marine Co. v. Stranahan, 155 Fed. 428, 431.

Forgery

It is a "crime" to forge a fictitious name, if done with intent to defraud. People v. Browne, 103 N. Y. Supp. 903, 907, 118 App. Div. 793.

Fraud

Fraud is in its essential elements a crime. Prahar v. Tousey, 87 N. Y. Supp. 845, 847, 93 App. Div. 507.

Nuisance synonymous

While at common law every public nuisance was a "crime," and is under statute, the terms are not convertible and every crime is not a public nuisance. Hefferon v. New York Taxicab Co., 130 N. Y. Supp. 710, 712, 146 App. Div. 311.

Homicide

In a murder case, the court charged that it was contended by accused that he was elsewhere at the time of the commission of the homicide, and consequently that it was impossible for him to have committed it, that the contention constituted an alibi, which if established was a perfect refutation of any crime charged, and, being interposed by accused as proof that he was not guilty, it became the duty of the jury to pass upon the question whether accused was present at the scene of the homicide at the time of the commission thereof. Held, that the charge was not objectionable as assuming the proof of the crime charged against accused, on the hypothesis that "homicide" is synonymous with "crime," since the killing of a human being under any circumstances constitutes homicide, but whether a homicide is a crime depends on the circumstances under which it is committed. People v. Mar Gin Sule, 103 Pac. 951, 958, 11 Cal. App. 42.

Gen. St. 1901, § 1997, provides that a homicide without design to effect death, while accused is engaged in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate any crime or misdemeanor, not amounting to a felony, in cases when such homicide would be murder at common law, shall be deemed manslaughter in the first degree. Held, that "the crime or misdemeanor, not amounting to a felony" need not be necessarily independent of, and separate from, the homicide intended to be reduced from murder to manslaughter in the first degree, but may be involved in, and constitute a part of, such homicide. State v. Bassnett, 102 Pac. 461, 465, 80 Kan. 392.

Infamous offense

Const. U. S. Amend. 5, provides that for an infamous offense one shall not be required to answer unless on the presentment or indictment of a grand jury. Held, that an offense is "infamous" if it involves imprisonment for more than one year with or without hard labor, and that a "crime" within such provisions is not necessarily an infamous offense, but includes every offense of a serious or atrocious character, involving the possible infliction of long terms of imprisonment, which offenses must be tried by a jury. Low v. United States, 169 Fed. 86, 90, 94 C. C. A. 1.

Offense, criminal offense, and felonious offense synonymous

While the words "offense" and "crime" are in certain cases considered synonymous, the "offenses" specified by Military Code N. Y. § 95, for the most serious of which the punishment is dismissal from the service with a small fine, and no one of which is designated as a "crime," are not "crimes." People v. Wendel, 112 N. Y. Supp. 301, 302, 59 Misc. Rep. 854.

In Const. 1898, arts. 9, 12, the words "offense" and "crime" are used as synonymous. State v. Eubanks, 38 South. 407, 408, 114 La. 428.

"To say that 'crimes' means something different from 'criminal offenses' is something I cannot comprehend. A crime is a criminal offense, and a criminal offense is a crime." Schick v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 826, 827, 195 U. S. 65, 49 L. Ed. 99, 1 Ann. Cas. 585 (dissenting opinion).

Offenses by delinquent children

The purpose of the Ohio Juvenile Act, regulating the treatment and control of delinquent children, giving juvenile courts jurisdiction over delinquent children, defining a delinquent child as any child under 17 years of age who violates a law of the state, and providing for proceedings by affidavit and for commitment of delinquent children to the industrial school, the object of which is the reformation of its inmates as declared by sections 2083 and 2094, is to save children under the age of 17 years from conviction of crimes, and under it the state acts as a guardian of delinquent children, and the act is but an administrative police regulation, and an affidavit averring that a boy 14 years old is incorrigible, in that he shot another with intent to kill, does not charge a "crime," within Const. Ohio, art. 1, § 10, providing that no person shall be held to answer for an infamous crime except on indictment, and Const. U. S. Amend. 14, and the boy committed to the industrial school is not committed to prison, and is not entitled to a discharge on habeas corpus on the ground that his constitutional rights to prosecution by indictment have been invaded. Ex parte Januszewski, 196 Fed. 123, 126.

Punishment essential

Under the definition of a "crime" as "an act committed or omitted in violation of the public law, either forbidding or commanding it" (4 Bl. Com. 5), and Rev. Laws, c. 220, § 4, declaring that if no punishment for a crime is provided by statute the court shall impose such sentence as conforms to the common usage and practice, a violation of St. 1903, p. 155, c. 195, § 1, forbidding the use of the arms or the great seal of the commonwealth for advertising or commercial purposes, is a "crime," though the statute does not provide any punishment. Commonwealth v. R. I. Sherman Mfg. Co., 75 N. E. 71, 72, 189 Mass. 76, 4 Ann. Cas. 268.

Sexual intercourse

A charge on a trial for rape, that there was evidence tending to prove that defendant had been criminally intimate with prosecutrix prior to the alleged offense, was not prejudicial to defendant, though the court should not have used the word "criminally," as sexual intercourse between an unmarried man and an unmarried woman is not technically a crime. State v. Zempel, 115 N. W. 275, 276, 103 Minn. 428.

Suicide

The word "crime" signifies a public wrong which subjects the perpetrator to legal punishment. An attempt to commit suicide is not an indictable offense in the state of Maine. May v. Pennell, 64 Atl. 885, 887, 101 Me. 516, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 286, 115 Am. Jur. Rep. 334, 8 Ann. Cas. 351.

Sunday baseball

The playing of baseball on Sunday is not in itself a "crime," but is only such when it interrupts the repose and religious liberty of the community. People ex rel. Poole v. Hesterberg, 89 N. Y. Supp. 498, 499, 43 Misc. Rep. 510.

Violation of license laws

The word "crimes," in Const. U. S. art. 3, § 2, providing that the trial of all "crimes," except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury, etc., includes the offense of selling liquor without a license. The court said: "The word 'crime' in its more extended sense comprehends every violation of public law. In a limited sense it embraces offenses of a serious or atrocious character. In our opinion the provision is to be interpreted in the light of the principles which, at common law, determined whether the accused, in a given class of cases, was entitled to be tried by a jury. It is not to be construed as relating only to felonies, or offenses punishable by confinement in the penitentiary. It embraces as well some classes of misdemeanors, the punishment of which involves or may involve the deprivation of the liberty of the citizen." Bettge v. Territory, 87 Pac. 897, 898, 17 Okl. 85.

Violation of municipal ordinances

"Municipal offenses" are not "crimes," within the purview of the constitutional provision relating to the venue of actions. Moore v. City of Winder, 73 S. E. 529, 531, 10 Ga. App. 384.

A grand juror is not rendered incompetent because charged with a violation of a municipal sanitary ordinance; which is not a "crime or offense" within the intendment of section 1, Act No. 135, p. 216, of 1898. State v. Calhoun, 41 South. 360, 361, 117 La. 81, 82 (citing State v. Thibodeaux, 19 South. 680, 48 La. Ann. 600; State v. Nicholas, 33 South. 92, 109 La. 84).

The violation of a municipal ordinance is a "crime" within the meaning of Const. art. 1, § 1, par. 17, forbidding slavery or involuntary servitude save as a punishment for crime after legal conviction thereof, though the prosecution is had in a police court and the offender is not entitled to a trial by jury. The constitutional prohibition forbidding slavery or involuntary servitude was intended to prevent a re-establishment of slavery which at the time of the adoption of the constitutional provision had but recently been abolished. Pearson v. Wimbish, 52 S. E. 751, 754, 755, 124 Ga. 701, 4 Ann. Cas. 501 (citing Mayor, etc., of City of Monroe v. Meuer, 35 La. Ann. 1192).

"A 'crime' is an act committed in violation of a public law." The violation of a city ordinance was not a crime. City of St.

Louis v. Telkemeyer, 125 S. W. 1123, 1126, 226 Mo. 130 (quoting and adopting definition in City of Kansas v. Clark, 68 Mo. 588).

Though, under the Criminal Code, a violation of a municipal ordinance is not a "crime," a sentence to a municipal house of correction for violating an ordinance does not violate Const. U. S. Amend. 13, which prohibits involuntary servitude except as a punishment for crime; the word "crime" being used in the amendment in its most comprehensive sense, as prohibiting such involuntary servitude as is not inflicted as a punishment for an offense against the law, and not being intended to apply to such involuntary service as may be required by a parent or the state in maintaining discipline in its institutions, etc. City of Chicago v. Coleman, 98 N. E. 521, 523, 254 Ill. 338.

A violation of a city ordinance is not a "crime" or "misdemeanor," and a prosecution therefor is properly brought in the name of the city. City of Helena v. Kent, 80 Pac. 258, 261, 32 Mont. 279, 4 Ann. Cas. 235.

Violation of oleomargarine act

One who knowingly purchases or receives for sale any oleomargarine which has not been branded or stamped according to law is not guilty of a "crime" under Act Aug. 2, 1886, 24 Stat. 209, c. 840, prescribing a penalty for such an act. Schick v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 826, 827, 195 U. S. 65, 49 L. Ed. 99, 1 Ann. Cas. 585.

CRIME AGAINST NATURE

Pen. Code, § 286, provides that every person who is guilty of "the infamous crime against nature" committed with mankind or with an animal is punishable by imprisonment, etc. Where an information under such section designated the offense as the "crime against nature," and alleged that defendant committed the same on one Frank Derby by then and there having "carnal knowledge" of the body of said Frank Derby, it was fatally defective for failure to allege that Frank Derby was a male person, since the words "carnal knowledge" refer to sexual connection. People v. Carroll, 81 Pac. 680, 681, 1 Cal. App. 2.

Though by many common-law writers sodomy is spoken of as the "infamous crime against nature," the terms, "sodomy," "buggery," and "crime against nature" being often used as synonymous, strictly speaking sodomy is the crime when committed between two human beings, or man and man; while buggery is the same offense committed by a man with a beast. Penetration of the mouth is not sufficient to constitute the crime. Commonwealth v. Poindexter, 118 S. W. 943, 944, 133 Ky. 720.

Every person of ordinary intelligence understands what the "crime against nature" with a human being is, and an information describing the crime as the crime against nature with and upon a male human being by then and there attempting to have carnal knowledge of the body of such person, sufficiently described the crime. People v. Erwin, 88 Pac. 371, 4 Cal. App. 394.

Pen. Code, § 351, relating to sodomy, provides that every person who is guilty of the detestable and abominable crime against nature, committed with mankind or with a beast, is punishable by imprisonment, etc. Held, that the words "crime against nature," as used in such section, were not limited to the common-law crime of sodomy, which included only an act committed per anum, but covered unnatural carnal copulation by means of the mouth. State v. Whitmarsh, 128 N. W. 580, 583, 26 S. D. 426.

CRIMEN FALSI

"It is abundantly settled that, in order to fall within this designation [crimen falsi], a crime must be of such a character that it not only carries with it the element of falsehood, but it must be of such a nature as tends to obstruct the administration of public justice. Under the common law the conviction of the crime of embezzlement does not disqualify a witness because such offense is not embraced within the three disqualifying classes, treason, felony, and the crimen falsi. United States v. Sims, 161 Fed. 1008, 1014.

CRIMINAL

See Putative Criminal; Quasi Criminal.

A "penal statute" is one which enforces a forfeiture or penalty for transgressing its provisions or doing a thing prohibited. "Penal" is a much broader term than "criminal" and includes many statutory enforcements of police regulations the violations of which are in no sense crimes. Marter v. Repp, 77 Atl. 1030, 1031, 80 N. J. Law, 530.

A prisoner under sentence of death is a "criminal" in the eye of the law so long as the sentence remains in force, because he has been adjudged guilty of crime. Mollineux v. Collins, 69 N. E. 727, 728, 177 N. Y. 395, 65 L. R. A. 104.

"Criminals" is a word of broad significance and includes those who may have committed the most trifling infraction of a penal statute as well as those guilty of the most heinous offenses. The term obviously describes a large number of persons whom a constable would have no right to arrest without a warrant, and, where a constable who had boarded a train at a station and was killed while alighting therefrom after it had started, an allegation in the declaration by his administratrix to recover for the death that decedent boarded the train for the purpose of "apprehending criminals" did not show that decedent was anything more than a mere licensee on the train. Creeden v. Boston & M. R. R., 79 N. E. 344, 346, 193 Mass. 280, 9 Ann. Cas. 1121.

CRIMINAL ABUSE

"Carnal abuse" or "criminal abuse" is an act of assault or debauchery of the female sexual organs by the genital organs of the male and falls short of knowledge with its accompanying penetration. Under a statute providing that any person having carnal knowledge of a woman forcibly against her will, or who being 16 years old shall carnally abuse a woman under that age, etc., it is not accurate as a general proposition to say that carnal knowledge is carnal abuse. State v. Hummer, 65 Atl. 249, 251, 73 N. J. Law, 714 (Bishop Stat. Crimes [2d Ed.] p. 361, § 489).

CRIMINAL ACTION

A criminal action is one prosecuted by the state against a person charged with a public offense committed in violation of a public law. State v. Hamley, 119 N. W. 114, 115, 137 Wis. 458.

The word "actions," as used in Gen. St. 1901, § 1261, relating to the consent to actions against foreign corporations precedent to doing business in the state, includes a "criminal action" as defined in the Code of Civil Procedure; that is, "one prosecuted by the state as a party against a person charged with a criminal offense, for the punishment thereof." State v. International Harvester Co., of America, 99 Pac. 608, 604, 79 Kan. 371.

Action for penalty

An action under Rev. St. 1899, § 1017, subjecting a corporation failing to make statutory reports to a "fine," providing that no suit shall be maintained for any offense unless brought within a specified time, and requiring proceedings in the name of the state, on relation of the county, to recover the fine, is an action for a penalty, and not a "criminal action" within section 2815, authorizing the parole of persons convicted of crime; the word "fine" meaning penalty. State ex rel. Howell County v. West Plains Telephone Co., 135 S. W. 20, 21, 232 Mo. 579.

Bastardy proceedings

Under Laws 1895, p. 66, c. 24, creating the municipal court for the city of Oshkosh and giving it concurrent jurisdiction with the circuit court in all cases of crimes and misdemeanors arising in the city, with certain exceptions, and vesting it with jurisdiction of all criminal or bastardy cases, a bastardy proceeding is not a "criminal action," within the meaning of the statute. Goyke v. State, 117 N. W. 1027, 1028, 136 Wis. 557.

Disbarment proceedings

"A 'criminal action' is one prosecuted by the state as a party against a person charged with a public offense, for the punishment thereof. Under the statutes of this state, the remedy of disbarment is a special proceeding to deprive accused of his office of attorney and counselor at law, and is not a 'criminal proceeding.' In re Burnette, 85 Pac. 575, 576, 73 Kan. 609.

Peddling without license

A conviction of peddling without a 'license, as required by Laws 1908, p. 250, c. 190, § 7, is a "criminal action" within Rev. Code Cr. Proc. § 479, providing that the mode of review in criminal actions shall be by writ of error. State v. Cram, 105 N. W. 99, 20 S. D. 159.

Proceeding to remove judge

A proceeding under the provisions of Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, c. 68, art. 4, for the removal of a district judge, is not a "criminal action," but a special proceeding. Maben v. Rosser, 103 Pac. 674, 678, 24 Okl. 588.

CRIMINAL ASSAULT

"To constitute a 'criminal assault' there must be some evidence of an attempt or endeavor to do violence to the person." Haupt v. Swenson, 101 N. W. 520, 125 Iowa, 694.

CRIMINAL ATTEMPT

"An 'attempt' to commit a crime is an act done with intent to commit that crime and forming a part of a series of acts which would constitute its actual commission if it were not interrupted." The mere fact that a prisoner procured tools adapted to jail breaking, did not constitute an attempt to break jail. State v. Hurley, 64 Atl. 78, 79, 79 Vt. 28, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 804, 118 Am. St. Rep. 934.

CRIMINAL CAPACITY

"'Criminal capacity' involves primarily the ability to distinguish right from wrong; while 'testamentary capacity' involves the ability to understand the estate to be disposed of, the proper objects of bounty, and the nature of the testamentary act." Slaughter v. Heath, 57 S. E. 69, 71, 127 Ga. 747, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1 (quoting and adopting the definition of Page, Wills, pp. 108-111, § 94 et seq.).

CRIMINAL CASE OR CAUSE

Any criminal case, see Any.

Stage of, see Stage of Case.

The rulings of the various courts have not been uniform on what constitutes a "criminal case" within the purview of the Constitution providing that no person shall be compelled to testify against himself in a criminal case. In New York it was held that the term "criminal case," used in the clause, must be allowed some meaning, and none can be conceived, other than a prosecution for a criminal offense. But it must be a prosecution against him, for what is forbidden is that he should be compelled to be a witness against himself. Now, if he be prosecuted criminally touching the matter about which he has testified upon the trial of another person, the statute makes it impossible that his testimony given on that occasion should be used by the prosecution on the trial. It cannot therefore be said that in such criminal case he has been made a witness against himself by force of any compulsion used towards him to procure in the other case testimony which cannot possibly be used in the criminal case against himself. Rev. St. 1890, § 2203, providing no person shall be excused from testifying against another in prosecution for gaming, but that the testimony shall not be used against the witness, was invalid. The United States Supreme Court, speaking by Mr. Justice Blatchford, has held that it is a reasonable construction of the constitutional provision that the witness is protected from being compelled to disclose the circumstances of his offense, or the sources from which or the means by which evidence of its commission, or of his connection with it, may be obtained or made effectual for his conviction without using his answers as direct admissions against him. No statute which leaves the party or witness subject to prosecution after he answers the criminating question put to him can have the effect of supplanting the privilege conferred by the Constitution. In view of the constitutional provision, a statutory enactment, to be valid, must afford absolute immunity against future prosecution for the offense to which the question relates. Ex parte Carter, 68 S. W. 540, 544, 166 Mo. 604, 57 L. R. A. 654 (quoting People v. Kelly, 24 N. Y. 74; Counselman v. Hitchcock, 12 Sup. Ct. 195, 142 U. S. 547, 35 L. Ed. 1110).

The phrase "civil suit" in Rev. St. 1890, § 818, providing that a change of venue may be awarded in any "civil suit" for causes enumerated, refers to the legal proceedings by which the rights and remedies of private individuals are enforced or protected, in distinction to the words "criminal case," which refer to public wrongs and their punishment, and includes certiorari to review proceedings of the county court resulting in the granting to one of a dramshop license, since the proceeding involves the right of the licensee to sell liquor as a dramshop keeper, which is a private right. State ex rel. Bixman v. Denton, 107 S. W. 446, 448, 128 Mo. App. 304.

The words "criminal case" apply to proceedings in a court against an accused person charged with doing something forbidden, who, if found guilty, is punished. An order of a Circuit Court of the United States declaring a judgment in a criminal action abated by the death of accused after the entry of judgment of conviction is an independent proceeding of a civil nature and reviewable on writ of error by the Circuit Court of Appeals at the instance of the United States. United States v. Dunne, 173 Fed. 254, 257, 97 C. C. A. 420, 19 Ann. Cas. 1145.

The words, "civil case" and "civil suit" refer to the legal means by which the rights and remedies of private individuals are enforced or protected, in contradistinction to the words "criminal cases," which refer to public wrongs and their punishment. A proceeding under Rev. St. 1899, art. 3, c. 122, for the incorporation of a drainage district, is a "civil suit," within § 818, providing that a change of venue may be awarded in civil suits. State ex rel. Kochitzky v. Riley, 101 S. W. 567, 569, 203 Mo. 175, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 900.

Contempt proceeding

Under Rev. Laws, c. 193, § 9, which provides that a "judgment in a criminal case" may be examined on writ of error, and chapter 156, § 3, which declares that the Supreme Judicial Court shall have general superintendence of all inferior courts, to correct errors, etc., a judgment adjudging one guilty of a criminal contempt may be reviewed on writ of error. Hupley v. Commonwealth, 74 N. E. 677, 678, 188 Mass. 443, 3 Ann. Cas. 757.

Commitment for contempt for disrespect to the court is a "criminal proceeding" by which the citizen is deprived of his liberty, and hence presumptions and intendments will not be indulged to sustain a conviction. Contempt of court is a specific criminal offense, and a fine imposed is a "judgment in a criminal case," and the adjudication is a conviction. Ex parte Shull, 121 S. W. 10, 11, 221 Mo. 623, 133 Am. St. Rep. 496.

Exceptions

A criminal case brought to the Supreme Court on exceptions of the prosecuting attorney, as authorized by Rev. St. 1899, §§ 5378-5381, is "a criminal case" within section 99 creating the office of Attorney General, and requiring him to represent the state in all criminal cases in the Supreme Court. State ex rel. Gibson v. Cornwell, 85 Pac. 977, 980, 14 Wyo. 526.

Habeas corpus proceedings

Under Pen. Code 1911, art. 3, providing that no person shall be punished for any act or omission, unless the same is made a penal offense and a penalty affixed thereto by the written law, and the further provision of the Code that no person shall be prosecuted for a criminal offense, except by indictment in case of felony, by information in case of misdemeanor, or by complaint in justice's court; and in the absence of any statute making a criminal contempt an offense, a proceeding by habeas corpus to review an order committing relator to prison for such a contempt is not a "criminal case," so as to preclude a rehearing on motion of the state, within the rules prohibiting the state to have a new trial or an appeal in criminal cases. Ex parte Wolters, 144 S. W. 531, 588, 64 Tex.

Cr. R. 238 (per Harper and Prendergast, JJ.; Davidson, P. J., dissenting).

Proceedings before grand jury

Inquisition before the grand jury is a "criminal case" within the meaning of Const. U. S. Amend. 5, and Bill of Rights Ill. § 10, providing that no person can be compelled in any criminal case to give evidence against himself. People v. Argo, 86 N. E. 679, 680, 237 Ill. 173.

A proceeding before a grand jury for the purpose of determining whether a crime has been committed is a "criminal case" within the constitutional and statutory provisions that no person shall be compelled in a "criminal case" to be a witness against himself. People v. Gillette, 111 N. Y. Supp. 133, 135, 126 App. Div. 665.

Const. art. 2, § 23, providing "that no person shall be compelled to testify against himself in a criminal cause," is violated by the examination by a grand jury of one as to a felony who was subsequently indicted as accessory after the fact to the commission of the same felony, and taking place after the principals in the felony were indicted, as an investigation of a crime by a grand jury is within the term "criminal cause." State v. Naughton, 120 S. W. 53, 58, 221 Mo. 398.

Summary trial

A summary trial in a magistrates' court of New York City for disorderly conduct tending to a breach of the peace is not a "criminal case" within the meaning of Judiciary Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 30) § 5, which limits the Sunday jurisdiction of magistrates in a criminal case to the arrest, commitment, or discharge of accused. People ex rel. Burke v. Fox, 99 N. E. 147, 149, 205 N. Y. 490.

CRIMINAL CODE

Under the rule that the title of an amendatory act which expresses the legislative purpose intelligently is sufficient, and that an amendatory act is valid though there is a mistake in the title, the title of an act entitled "An act to amend the Criminal Code to change the punishment of persons convicted of misdemeanors" is sufficient, though the principal act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 38), commonly known as "Criminal Code," is an act to revise the law in relation to "criminal jurisprudence"; the words "criminal code" in the title of the amendatory act being synonymous with "criminal jurisprudence." People v. Van Bever, 93 N. E. 725, 726, 248 Ill. 136.

CRIMINAL CONSPIRACY

See Completed Criminal Conspiracy.

At common law, "criminal conspiracy" is an agreement to accomplish an unlawful purpose, or do a lawful act by criminal or unlawful means; the unlawful combination and agreement being the gist of the offense. Garland v. State, 75 Atl. 631, 633, 112 Md. 83, 21 Ann. Cas. 28.

"To make an agreement between two or more persons to do an act innocent in itself a 'criminal conspiracy,' it is not enough that it appears that the act which was the object of the agreement was prohibited. The confederation must be corrupt. The agreement must have been entered into with an evil purpose, as distinguishable from a purpose simply to do the act prohibited in ignorance. * * * The actual criminal intention belongs to the definition of the offense and must be shown to justify a conviction for conspiracy." People ex rel. Perkins v. Moss, 100 N. Y. Supp. 427, 431, 50 Misc. Rep. 198 (quoting People v. Powell, 63 N. Y. 88).

When the ingredients constituting the "criminal conspiracy" at common law and the ingredients constituting the "conspiracy to defraud" under anti-trust acts are examined, it is apparent that the offenses are not identical. The latter is doing business while a member of an illegal combination, while the former is a conspiracy to do an unlawful act, or a conspiracy to do a lawful act in an unlawful manner. The remedies against the common-law conspiracy were indictment for the criminal conspiracy and an action on the case for damages by an aggrieved party, or quo warranto by the state against an offending corporation. Hammond Packing Co. v. State, 100 S. W. 407, 410, 81 Ark. 519, 126 Am. St. Rep. 1047 (citing Eddy, Combinations, §§ 335-363, 371; Beach, Monopolies, §§ 77-87).

A "criminal conspiracy" is a combination of two or more persons by some concerted action to accomplish a criminal or unlawful purpose, or to accomplish some purpose, not in itself criminal or unlawful, by criminal or unlawful means. Harris v. Commonwealth, 73 S. E. 561, 562, 113 Va. 746, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 458.

Where the concerted action of two or more results in an increased ability to accomplish an injurious purpose, either the means or the purpose will be rendered criminal so as to amount to a criminal conspiracy, though the means or the end were not criminal if performed by a single individual. State v. Dalton & Fay, 114 S. W. 1132, 1137, 134 Mo. App. 517.

Criminal conspiracy is a confederation to do something unlawful, either as a means or an end. State v. Eastern Coal Co., 70 Atl. 1, 2, 29 R. I. 254, 132 Am. St. Rep. 817, 17 Ann. Cas. 96.

"'Criminal conspiracy' is a combination between two or more persons to do a criminal or unlawful act, or a lawful act by criminal or unlawful means. No overt act is necessary to constitute the offense, the gist of the offense being the unlawful conspiring together." An information charging one with setting fire to and burning a house belonging to others, and alleging that defendant, though not personally present when the building was fired, aided and abetted setting it on fire, charges the offense of arson, and not a conspiracy to commit arson. State v. Mann, 81 Pac. 561, 563, 39 Wash. 144.

"It is said that the gist of a 'criminal conspiracy' is the unlawful concurrence of many in a wicked scheme, and that the crime of conspiracy is complete without any act having been done to carry it into execution" (quoting and adopting the definition in State v. Trammell, 24 N. C. 379). "Crime is made to consist in the unlawful combination with an intent to prevent the enjoyment of any right granted or secured by the constitution" (quoting and adopting definition in United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. Ed. 588). A "criminal conspiracy" is defined to be an agreement of two or more persons to do an unlawful act or to do a lawful act by unlawful means. "A conspiracy must be a combination of two or more persons, by some concerted action, to accomplish some criminal or unlawful purpose, or to accomplish some purpose not in itself criminal or unlawful by criminal or unlawful means. We use the terms 'criminal' or 'unlawful' because it is manifest that many acts are unlawful which are not punishable by indictment or other public prosecution, and yet there is no doubt, we think, that a combination by numbers to do them would be an unlawful conspiracy, and punishable by indictment. * * * But yet it is clear that it is not every combination to do unlawful acts to the prejudice of another which is punishable as a conspiracy" (quoting and adopting definition in Commonwealth v. Hunt, 4 Metc. [45 Mass.] 111, 38 Am. Dec. 346). The definition that a "criminal conspiracy" consists of an "agreement of two or more to do an unlawful act, or to do a lawful act by unlawful means," may be shortened by omitting the latter half, for, where the conspiracy is to resort to unlawful means to secure the lawful end, such unlawful means is the unlawful act which the conspiracy contemplates. State v. Van Pelt, 49 S. E. 177, 180, 181, 191, 136 N. C. 633, 68 L. R. A. 760, 1 Ann. Cas. 495.

CRIMINAL CONTEMPT

See Quasi Criminal Contempt.

Criminal contempts embrace all acts committed against the majesty of the law, and the primary purpose of their punishment is the vindication of public authority. Fiedler v. Bambrick Bros. Const. Co., 142 S. W. 1111, 1113, 162 Mo. App. 528; Ex parte Clark, 106 S. W. 990, 996, 208 Mo. 121, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 389.

Criminal "contempts" are acts against the majesty of the law, or the court as an agency of the government. In re Smith, 107 N. W. 724, 144 Mich. 39 (quoting and adopting definition in 3 Current Law, 796).

A "criminal contempt" is conduct that is directed against the dignity and authority of the court. McCarthy v. Hugo, 73 Atl. 778, 779, 82 Conn. 262, 135 Am. St. Rep. 270, 17 Ann. Cas. 219; In re Rice, 181 Fed. 217, 220.

"Criminal contempts" are those acts in disrespect of the court or its process which obstruct the administration of justice or tend to bring the court into disrepute. People ex rel. Attorney General v. News-Times Pub. Co., 84 Pac. 912, 956, 35 Colo. 253 (quoting Wyatt v. People, 28 Pac. 963, 17 Colo. 258).

A "criminal contempt" at common law is generally defined as any act which tends either to obstruct the cause of justice or to prejudice the trial of any action or proceeding pending in court. Fellman v. Mercantile Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 41 South. 49, 52, 116 La. 723.

Criminal contempts of court consist in such disobedience of the mandates of the court as constitutes a defiance of the court's power and authority, and for which the guilty party is punishable by fine or imprisonment. Gompers v. Buck's Stove & Range Co., 33 App. D. C. 516, 565.

A "criminal contempt" is an act committed against the court as an agency of the government, and as to this class of contempts the public is primarily interested. A contempt of this character may consist in "speaking or writing contemptuously of the court, or judges acting in their judicial capacity." Contempts of this character need not relate to a cause that is still pending in the court. In re Fite, 76 S. E. 397, 405, 11 Ga. App. 665.

A "criminal contempt" proceeding is one "prosecuted to preserve the power and vindicate the dignity of the courts and to punish for disobedience of their orders." "A criminal contempt involves no element of personal injury. It is directed against the power and dignity of the court, and private parties have little, if any, interest in the proceedings for its punishment." Where, after an adjudication of bankruptcy, defendant knowingly took a part of the bankrupt's money, lent some of it on notes and mortgages in his name, and with some of it bought real estate in his name for the purpose of concealing it from the trustee in bankruptcy and appropriating it to himself, and the trustee brought suit for these notes and this real estate, and, after the suit was commenced and before the decree, defendant disposed of the notes and the real estate to innocent parties for the purpose of withdrawing the property from the jurisdiction of the court and defeating its coming decree, defendant was guilty of criminal contempt. Clay v. Waters, 178

Fed. 895, 389, 101 C. C. A. 645, 21 Ann. Cas. 897 (quoting In re Nevitt, 117 Fed. 448, 458, 54 C. C. A. 622).

"'Criminal contempts' are all those acts in disrespect of the court or its process, or which obstruct the administration of justice, or tend to bring the court into disrepute. To this class of contempts belong such acts as misconduct by attorneys or other officers, disobedience of subpoenas or other process, disobedience or insolent behavior in the presence or immediate vicinity of the court, and the like." Ex parte Hedden, 90 Pac. 787, 744, 29 Nev. 352, 13 Ann. Cas. 1173 (quoting definition in Rap. Contempts, § 21).

A "criminal contempt" means acts committed against the majesty of the law, the primary purpose of their punishment being the vindication of public authority; acts of disrespect to the court or its process; cases in which the state alone is interested in the enforcement of the order. Ex parte Wolters, 144 S. W. 531, 587, 64 Tex. Cr. R. 238 (per Davidson, P. J., and Harper, J.).

"'Criminal contempts' are all acts in disrespect of the court or its process which obstruct the administration of justice or tend to bring the court into disrepute. A criminal contempt is a misdemeanor, and an appeal from a judgment imposing a fine for such contempt must be taken as in other misdemeanor cases." French v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 97 S. W. 427, 429 (quoting Rap., Contempts, § 21, as quoted and approved in Wages v. Commonwealth, 13 Ky. Law Rep. 925).

A person soliciting an attorney engaged in the trial of a case to bribe the jurors through him by gifts of money is guilty of "criminal contempt." Hurley v. Commonwealth, 74 N. E. 677, 678, 188 Mass. 443, 3 Ann. Cas. 757.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 8, subds. 3, 4, defining a criminal contempt of court to be willful disobedience to the court's lawful mandate or resistance willfully to its lawful mandate, a party may not be convicted of criminal contempt for failing to appear for examination as to his property in proceedings supplementary to execution on the day directed by an order rather than two days later, when he actually did appear and offer to submit to the examination in the absence of any showing that his conduct was willful and intended. In re Jones, 110 N. Y. Supp. 565, 566, 126 App. Div. 112.

A "criminal contempt" may be a willful disobedience of the court's lawful mandates, or resistance willfully to its lawful mandate. It is a contempt whose cause and result are a violation of the rights of the public as represented by their constituted legal tribunals, and a punishment of the wrong is in the interest of public justice rather than in the interest of an individual litigant. If a fine is imposed, its maximum is limited by a fixed general law, and not by the needs of individuals, and its proceeds when collected go into the public treasury. A failure to appear for examination as to his property in proceedings supplementary to execution on the day directed by an order, rather than two days later when he actually did appear and offered to submit to the examination without any showing that the conduct was willful and intended, would not authorize the conviction of a person for a "criminal contempt." Matter of Jones, 110 N. Y. Supp. 565, 566, 126 App. Div. 112 (quoting and adopting the definition in Code Civ. Proc. § 8; People ex rel. Munsell v. Court of Oyer & Term., 4 N. E. 260, 101 N. Y. 245, 248, 58 Am. Rep. 691).

Civil contempt distinguished

Contempts are either civil or criminal, and criminal contempt consists of conduct on the part of one which amounts to an obstruction of justice, tending to bring the court into disrepute. Gordon v. Commonwealth, 133 S. W. 206, 208, 141 Ky. 461.

Contempts are of two classes: Criminal contempts, prosecuted to preserve the power of courts and to punish the offender; and civil contempts, prosecuted to preserve and enforce the rights of private parties and compel obedience to orders and decrees to enforce the rights and administer remedies which the court has found private parties entitled to. Merchants' Stock & Grain Co. v. Board of Trade of City of Chicago, 187 Fed. 398, 400, 109 C. C. A. 230.

Contempt proceedings are of two classes: Those prosecuted to preserve the power and vindicate the dignity of the courts by punishing the contemnor, and those prosecuted to compel observance and redress the violation of orders or decrees made in behalf of a party to an action pending before the court. The former are punitive and essentially criminal in their nature, and the government, the courts, and the people are interested in their prosecution. The latter are civil, remedial, and coercive in their nature, and the parties chiefly interested in their conduct and prosecution are the individuals whose private rights and remedies they are necessary to redress. Christensen Engineering Co. v. Westinghouse Air Brake Co., 135 Fed. 774, 779, 68 C. C. A. 476.

Willful disobedience is a "criminal contempt," while a mere disobedience by which the right of a party to an action is defeated or hindered may be a civil contempt. In re Westminster Realty Corp., 108 N. Y. Supp. 551, 553, 123 App. Div. 797 (citing People v.

Dwyer, 90 N. Y. 406; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 8, 14).

Contempts of court are generally classified as either civil or criminal; the former consisting in a disobedience of some judicial order made in the interest of another party to a proceeding, and the latter of acts disrespectful to the court or obstructive of the administration of justice or calculated to bring the court into disrepute. Ex parte Gudenoge, 100 Pac. 39, 43, 2 Okl. Cr. 110.

A "criminal contempt" proceeding is one prosecuted to preserve the power and vindicate the dignity of the courts and to punish for disobedience of their orders; while "civil contempt" is one instituted to preserve and enforce the rights of private parties to suits and to compel obedience to orders and decrees made to enforce the rights and administer the remedies to which the court has found them to be entitled. The president has no power to relieve from either fine or imprisonment imposed in proceedings for civil contempt. Heinze v. Butte & B. Consol. Min. Co., 129 Fed. 274, 283, 284, 63 C. C. A. 388 (quoting and adopting definition in Re Nevitt, 117 Fed. 448, 54 C. C. A. 622).

Willful disobedience of an order of court in a civil action is not a "criminal contempt"; in such a case the punishment is only ordered for the purpose of enforcing the order. Flathers v. State, 125 Pac. 902, 903, 7 Okl. Cr. 668.

CRIMINAL COURTS

Owing to the distribution of the jurisdiction into civil and criminal cases, the courts having jurisdiction of criminal cases were designated as "criminal courts," and those having jurisdiction of civil cases became known as "civil courts." State ex rel. Board of Education of St. Louis v. Nast, 108 S. W. 563, 566, 209 Mo. 703.

Const. art. 6, vests the judicial power of the state as to matters of law and equity in a Supreme Court, district court, county court, justices of the peace, and such other courts as may be provided by law. It then provides the jurisdiction of various courts designated, "district court," "county court," and "criminal court," and for the election of judges thereof. Article 14 treats of counties and county officers, not including the judge of the county court, and article 20, creating the city and county of Denver, and providing for the termination of the terms of office of county officers, declares that district and county judges and the district attorneys should serve their full term, respectively, for which they had been elected. Held, that the words "district," "county," and "criminal" in Const. art. 6, as prefixed to the word "court," had no other significance than to give appropriate names to the tribunals of government, and that a judge of the county court in the city and county of Denver was not a county officer within Const. art. 20, and hence, after the adoption of such article and the charter of the city and county of Denver, he continued to hold his office under Const. art. 6, and not under the charter, and this, notwithstanding the charter, provided additional duties for such office and also for two incumbents. Dixon v. People, 127 Pac. 930, 932, 53 Colo. 527.

CRIMINAL INTENT

A charge that "a 'criminal intent' is attributed to a person who even does a grossly careless act," which in the light of undisputed facts in the case meant, "a criminal intent is attributed to a person who kills another with a deadly weapon from gross carelessness," was not erroneous. It is immaterial whether we say the law attributes or presumes or imputes or infers or merely supplies the necessary "criminal intent" from gross carelessness. One cannot be permitted to say that he committed homicide with a deadly weapon accidentally, if it appears that it was the result of his gross carelessness. State v. Clardy, 53 S. E. 493, 499, 73 S. C. 340.

Criminal intent in forgery, under Rev. St. 1870, § 833, is to defraud any person, and it suffices if the forged instrument does or may prejudice the rights of another, and an intent to profit by the act is not a necessary element of the offense. State v. Laborde, 45 South. 38, 40, 120 La. 136.

While there must be a criminal intent to constitute a crime, the "criminal intent" is the doing of the act prohibited with the intent specified in the statute. Greene v. Frankhauser, 121 N. Y. Supp. 1004, 1011, 137 App. Div. 124.

To constitute criminal intent, it is necessary only that one make affidavit to statements knowing them to be false, whatever be his motive. People ex rel. Hegeman v. Corrigan, 87 N. E. 792, 796, 195 N. Y. 1.

CRIMINAL JURISDICTION

The word "jurisdiction," with reference to criminal proceedings, embraces every kind of judicial action on the subject-matter, from the finding of the indictment to the pronouncing of sentence. It means to have power to inquire into the fact, to apply the law, and to declare the punishment in a regular course of judicial proceeding. It is the right of administering justice through the laws, by the means which the law has provided for that purpose. It does not, however, depend on the sufficiency of the complaint; it being sufficient that the court has jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter. "Jurisdiction" is the power to hear and determine the subject-matter in controversy between the parties to a suit. If the law confers the power to render a judgment or decree, the court has jurisdiction. State v. Smith, 72 Atl. 710, 714, 29 R. I. 513.

The physical absence of the accused from the state of Missouri when the acceptance by a St. Louis corporation of his offer to render services in consideration of the compensation forbidden by Rev. St. § 1782, was dispatched by mail or telegram, does not deprive the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Missouri of jurisdiction of the offense, on the theory that the crime was not committed in that district, within the meaning of Const. art. 3, § 2, and Amendment 6, requiring the trial of all crimes against the United States to be held in the state and district where such crimes shall have been committed. Burton v. United States, 26 Sup. Ct. 688, 699, 202 U. S. 344, 50 L. Ed. 1057, 6 Ann. Cas. 362.

CRIMINAL JURISPRUDENCE

Under the rule that the title of an amendatory act which expresses the legislative purpose intelligently is sufficient, and that an amendatory act is valid though there is a mistake in the title, the title of an act entitled "An act to amend the Criminal Code to change the punishment of persons convicted of misdemeanors" is sufficient, though the principal act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 38), commonly known as "Criminal Code," is an act to revise the law in relation to "criminal jurisprudence"; the words "criminal code" in the title of the amendatory act being synonymous with "criminal jurisprudence." People v. Van Bever, 93 N. E. 725, 726, 248 Ill. 186.

CRIMINAL LAW

Village ordinances are not criminal laws, and prosecutions under them are not governed by the provision of the Constitution that all prosecutions shall be in the name of the state, but the action is properly brought in the name of the village. Village of Litchville v. Hanson, 124 N. W. 1119, 1120, 19 N. D. 672.

Under Const. art. 11, § 2, prior to its amendment November 8, 1910, providing for the enactment or amendment of corporate charters so long as the provisions thereof are not violative of the constitutional or criminal laws of the state, a provision of a charter in contravention of the criminal law, whether relating to felonies or misdemeanors, was invalid; the term "criminal laws" including all general statutes in force in the state, whether relating to acts malum in se or malum prohibitum, or to acts constituting felonies or misdemeanors. State v. Schluer, 115 Pac. 1057, 1060, 59 Or. 18.

CRIMINAL LIBEL

"Criminal libel" is defined by Pen. Code 1895, § 335, as a malicious defamation, expressed either by printing or writing, or signs, pictures, or the like, tending to blacken the memory of one who is dead, or the honesty, virtue, integrity, or reputation of one who is alive, and thereby expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule. Michael v. Bacon, 63 S. E. 228, 229, 5 Ga. App. 331.

Code, § 5086, defining criminal libel as the malicious defamation of a person, made public by any printing tending to provoke him to wrath or expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule, or to deprive him of the benefits of public confidence and social intercourse, is applicable to civil actions to recover damages for libel. Shelbley v. Ashton, 106 N. W. 618, 619, 130 Iowa, 195.

CRIMINAL NEGLIGENCE

Criminal negligence necessarily implies not only knowledge of probable consequences which may result from the use of an instrumentality, but also willful or wanton disregard of the probable effects thereof on others likely to be affected thereby. Carbo v. State, 62 S. E. 140, 4 Ga. App. 583.

The term "criminal negligence," as used in Cobbey's Ann. St. 1903, § 10039, which makes railroad companies liable for injuries to passengers being transported, except where the injury resulted from the criminal negligence of the person injured, means gross negligence such as amounts to a reckless disregard of one's own safety and a willful indifference to the consequence liable to follow. Riley v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 111 N. W. 847, 78 Neb. 748 (citing Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Winfrey, 93 N. W. 526, 67 Neb. 13; Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Porter, 56 N. W. 808, 38 Neb. 226; Omaha & R. V. R. Co. v. Chollette, 49 N. W. 1114, 33 Neb. 146).

A person is guilty of "criminal negligence" when he does some act or omits some duty under circumstances showing an actual intent to injure, or when the breach of duty is so flagrant as to warrant an implication that the resulting injury was intended; that is, when his negligent conduct is incompatible with a proper regard for human life. Negligence is the gist of the offense, and in the absence of recklessness, or of want of due caution, there is no criminal liability. Actual intent is not an essential element of the offense. It is enough if there is shown a negligent and reckless indifference of the lives and safety of others. One who drives an automobile willfully, recklessly, carelessly, and negligently, and at a rate of speed forbidden by the statute, upon the public streets or highways of this state, and thereby causes the death of another, is guilty of criminal homicide. Schultz v. State, 130 N. W. 972, 977, 89 Neb. 34, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 403, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 495 (quoting and adopting definition in Berry, Law of Automobiles, § 159).

A charge on a trial of an automobile driver for negligent homicide that "gross negligence" imports a thoughtless disregard of consequences, and that if the circumstances establish a degree of carelessness amounting to a culpable disregard of the safety of others, "criminal negligence" is established, and one who without intention to take life causes the death of another by his own unlawful act is criminally responsible, and it is unlawful for any person to operate an automobile recklessly, or at a rate of speed greater than is reasonable, having regard to the width, traffic, and use of the highway, etc., requires the jury, in order to convict, to find that accused with reckless disregard for the safety of others negligently drove his automobile in a public street and thereby caused the death of decedent, and is sufficiently favorable to accused. State v. Goetz, 76 Atl. 1000, 1001, 83 Conn. 437, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 458.

Where one is charged with a special duty, the nonperformance of which involves danger to the safety of others, the failure to perform the duty, even through inattention, is gross and culpable, or, in other words, criminal negligence. State v. Irvine, 52 South. 567, 569, 126 La. 434.

Criminal "negligence," as used in a statute exempting from liability, where an injury done arises from the criminal negligence of the persons injured, has been defined to mean gross negligence, such negligence as would amount to a flagrant and reckless disregard by a person of his own safety, and amount to a willful indifference to the injury liable to follow. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Zernecke, 22 Sup. Ct. 229, 230, 183 U. S. 582, 46 L. Ed. 339 (citing Omaha & R. V. R. Co. v. Chollette, 49 N. W. 1114, 33 Neb. 143).

CRIMINAL OFFENSE

See Specific Criminal Offense.

To constitute a "criminal offense" there must have been an act following an unlawful thought; mere intent to commit a crime not being such an offense. Ex parte Green, 103 S. W. 503, 505, 126 Mo. App. 309 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Bish., Cr. Law, § 204).

A "criminal offense" consists in a violation of a public law in the commission of which there shall be a union or joint operation of act, and intention or criminal negligence. Weare Commission Co. v. People, 70 N. E. 1076, 1079, 209 Ill. 528 (citing Hurd's Rev. St. 1899, c. 38, par. 280).

As all grades of crime

Under Rev. St. 1898, § 2598, defining a criminal action as one prosecuted by the state as a party against a person charged with a public offense, the words "criminal offense," in section 4073, providing that a witness' conviction of a criminal offense may be proved on his cross-examination, etc., include misdemeanors as well as felonies, but do not include an offense punishable by a municipal ordinance. Koch v. State, 106 N.

W. 531, 533, 126 Wis. 470, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1086, 5 Ann. Cas. 389.

Violation of city ordinance

The offense defined by a city ordinance prohibiting the furnishing of food by liquor dealers and prescribing a punishment by a fine or imprisonment is a "criminal offense" within the constitutional provision as to former jeopardy. City of St. Paul v. Stamm, 118 N. W. 154, 155, 106 Minn. 81.

Violation of military code

A violation of the rules and regulations of the military code which are merely disciplinary in their nature, designed to secure higher efficiency in military service, does not constitute a "criminal offense" within the meaning of section 7 of the Bill of Rights, declaring that no person shall be held to answer for a criminal offense unless on the presentment or indictment of the grand jury. State ex rel. Madigan v. Wagener, 77 N. W. 424, 426, 74 Minn. 518, 42 L. R. A. 749, 73 Am. St. Rep. 369.

CRIMINAL ORDINANCE

An ordinance relating to juvenile vagrants, and authorizing the commitment of such persons to the House of Good Shepherd, is not a criminal ordinance. It is a mere administrative police regulation, designed as a preventative against wrongdoing, and not as a punishment therefor. State ex rel. Cailhouet v. Marmouget, 85 South. 529, 533, 111 La. 225.

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE

The words "criminal procedure," in Laws 1895, c. 41, § 45 (Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 5306), entitled "Criminal Procedure," and providing that in all misdemeanor cases, before a warrant shall issue for the arrest of accused, the complaint must be submitted to the county attorney, etc., refer to all misdemeanors, whether the same are triable before the district court, probate court, or justice of the peace. Bailey v. Territory, 79 Pac. 775, 776, 15 Okl. 80.

The provisions of the statute governing the juvenile courts, where children are brought before it, are not intended to come within what is termed "criminal procedure." State v. Dunn, 99 Pac. 278, 280, 53 Or. 304.

CRIMINAL PROCEEDING

See Part of Criminal Proceedings.

Judgment in criminal proceeding, see Judgment.

See, also, Proceeding.

A proceeding under Acts 1909, c. 260, § 8, as amended by Acts 1911, c. 295, § 5, which provides for a proceeding by a grand juror or prosecuting attorney against a delinquent taxpayer and for the commitment of such taxpayer to jail or the workhouse by a justice of the peace or committing magistrate upon his failure to show reason why the tax has not been paid, to stand committed, until the tax, interest, and costs of proceedings are paid, is designed, not to punish the delinquent, but more as an additional proceeding to enforce the payment of the tax and to give an opportunity to escape commitment if sufficient reason for its nonpayment exist, so that it is not a "criminal proceeding" within Gen. St. 1902, § 1482, which provides that criminal courts of common pleas have jurisdiction only of criminal cases which are within the final jurisdiction of city, borough, and other inferior courts and which have been appealed therefrom to the criminal courts of common pleas, and section 1483, providing for the filing of an original information by the prosecuting attorney in cases of which such court may obtain jurisdiction by appeal from a lower court. State v. Hall, 84 Atl. 923, 86 Conn. 191.

The distinction between a "civil proceeding" and a "criminal proceeding" is not dependent on whether the crown or the sovereign is a party, but whether the real end or object of the proceeding is punishment or reparation. Code 1904, p. 1045, § 2071, declares any one who fishes in the waters on another's land guilty of a trespass, and provides that on conviction he shall be fined. Section 2073, p. 1046, provides that the offender shall be carried before a justice, who shall try the case, and that, if judgment be rendered against the offender, it shall be for the forfeitures and costs, and if he does not satisfy the judgment the justice shall commit him to jail for one month, unless satisfaction be made. Section 2070b, cl. 8, p. 1044, provides that all penalties imposed or collected under the provisions of the chapter of which the above sections are part shall be paid to the commonwealth. Section 3879, p. 2061, declares offenses which are not felonies to be misdemeanors. Held, that sections 2071 and 2073 create a criminal offense of the misdemeanor class and prescribe a criminal proceeding for their violation, and consequently an appeal from a judgment of conviction lies to the circuit court under Code 1904, pp. 2152, 2154, §§ 4106, 4107, providing for appeals to the circuit court from judgments of conviction in criminal cases before justices, although the fine imposed is less than $10, so that no appeal would lie to the circuit court under section 2947, p. 1562, providing for appeals in civil cases. Jernigan v. Commonwealth, 52 S. E. 361, 362, 104 Va. 850.

Bastardy proceedings

A "bastardy proceeding" is neither a civil nor criminal action, strictly speaking, but is a mere statutory proceeding designed primarily to enable the injured female to recover of the person who in the eyes of the law has committed a grievous injury to her, compensation therefor. Meyer v. Meyer, 102 N. W. 52, 55, 123 Wis. 538.

A "bastardy proceeding" is civil and not criminal in its nature, and is intended merely for the enforcement of a police regulation. State v. Addington, 57 S. E. 398, 399, 143 N. O. 633, 11 Ann. Cas. 314 (citing State v. Liles, 47 S. E. 750, 134 N. O. 735).

"Bastardy proceedings" are so far of a criminal nature that a person who is within the state only for the purpose of putting in special bail in an action in which he was arrested under a capias is not privileged from arrest on a charge of bastardy. Cady v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 102 N. W. 1025, 139 Mich. 618.

Habeas corpus proceedings

Habeas corpus proceedings are "civil" and not "criminal." Winnovich v. Emery, 93 Pac. 983, 989, 33 Utah, 345.

Habeas corpus proceedings is not intended to be summary and is not a "criminal proceeding" permitting admission to bail pending an appeal from the order dismissing the petition. Orr v. Jackson, 123 N. W. 958, 960, 149 Iowa, 641.

Inquest

An inquest over a dead body is a proceeding essentially criminal in its nature, and falls within the term "criminal proceedings," for which salaries are provided in lieu of fees given by Civ. Code 1902, § 8117; section 1006 providing for salaries of magistrates in Anderson county, and section 994 providing that magistrates shall receive annual salaries in lieu of fees in criminal cases or proceedings—and a magistrate in Anderson county holding an inquest cannot collect fees from the county therefor. Acker v. Anderson County, 58 S. E. 337, 77 S. C. 478.

Proceedings to destroy liquor

Proceedings under an act providing for the condemnation and summary destruction of liquor illegally kept for sale are civil in their nature, and not criminal. Kirkland v. State, 78 S. W. 770, 773, 72 Ark. 171, 65 L. R. A. 76.

Proceedings to expel or exclude aliens

A proceeding for the deportation of a Chinese laborer not having a certificate entitling him to residence required by the Chinese Exclusion Act is not a "criminal proceeding," and hence it is competent for the government to swear such person as a witness against himself. Low Foon Yin v. United States Immigration Com'r, 145 Fed. 791, 793, 76 C. C. A. 355.

"A proceeding under our law to expel or exclude aliens is not a criminal prosecution or proceeding." Where, in proceedings for the exclusion of Chinese aliens, the only evidence of citizenship offered was unsatisfactory testimony of one witness that he was an uncle of defendants and that they were both born in San Francisco, and defendants refused to be sworn in their own behalf, a finding against the aliens' right to remain was not erroneous. United States v. Moy You, 126 Fed. 226 (citing, in support of definition, Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 13 Sup. Ct. 1016, 149 U. S. 730, 37 L. Ed. 905; United States v. Lee Huen, 118 Fed. 456).

Proceedings had conformably to provisions of the act of February 20, 1907, § 3, for the deportation of any alien found practicing prostitution within three years after her entry into the United States, are not criminal, within the meaning of the guaranty of Const. U. S. Amend. 6, that in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the state and district wherein the crime shall have been committed. Zakonaite v. Wolf, 33 Sup. Ct. 31, 32, 226 U. S. 272, 57 L. Ed. 218.

Proceedings relating to juvenile vagrants

A proceeding under an ordinance relating to juvenile vagrants, and authorizing the commitment of such persons to the House of Good Shepherd, is not a criminal proceeding. State ex rel. Callouet v. Marmouget, 35 South. 529, 533, 111 La. 225.

As prosecution

See Prosecution.

Prosecution for violation of municipal ordinance

As far as imprisonment for the violation of a municipal ordinance is concerned, the prosecution for the infraction of the ordinance is to be regarded as a "criminal proceeding." Pearson v. Wimlish, 52 S. E. 751, 755, 124 Ga. 701, 4 Ann. Cas. 501 (citing Mayor, etc., of City of Macon v. Wood, 34 S. E. 322, 109 Ga. 149; Mayor and Council of Hawkinsville v. Ethridge, 22 S. E. 935, 96 Ga. 326).

Quo warranto

Proceeding by information in the nature of quo warranto was never more than incidentally "criminal," its main purpose in its early history having been, and its only one in recent times being, to try title to office. Territory ex rel. Hubbell v. Armijo, 89 Pac. 267, 268, 14 N. M. 205.

An information in the nature of quo warranto was originally "criminal" in form and purpose, but by a process of evolution has become a civil proceeding. State ex rel. Jackson v. Anheuser-Busch Brewery Ass'n, 90 Pac. 777, 778, 76 Kan. 184.

An information in the nature of quo warranto was a "criminal proceeding" in which, if the issue was found against the defendant in addition to a judgment of ouster, a fine was imposed. Meehan v. Bachelor, 59 Atl. 620, 73 N. H. 113, 6 Ann. Cas. 462.

An information in the nature of quo warranto is the substitute for the ancient writ of quo warranto, and its origin was essentially a "criminal prosecution" to punish encroachments upon the royal prerogative, and it still retains that character to the extent that the proceedings are criminal in form for the purpose of punishing the usurper and ousting him from enjoying the franchise. People v. Gartenstein, 94 N. E. 128, 129, 248 Ill. 546.

Originally both quo warranto and proceedings in the nature of quo warranto partook of the character of "criminal proceedings." State v. Des Moines City R. Co., 109 N. W. 867, 870, 135 Iowa, 694.

An information in the nature of quo warranto is properly a "criminal prosecution" instituted not only to fine the usurper but to oust him from the office, franchise, or liberty. State v. Sengstacken, 122 Pac. 292, 295, 61 Or. 455.

CRIMINAL PROSECUTION

See, also, Prosecution.

A "criminal prosecution" is the mode of formally accusing offenders or the means adopted to bring a supposed offender to justice and punishment by due course of law. A preliminary proceeding antedating an indictment for a felony is not any part of a "criminal prosecution" within Bill of Rights, § 10, guarantying rights to accused in such prosecutions. Kemper v. State, 138 S. W. 1025, 1045, 63 Tex. Cr. R. 1.

A "criminal prosecution" is instituted by the state through its officer selected for that purpose, and such officer is invested with a certain discretion with respect to the cases he will call to the attention of the grand jury, the number and character of witnesses, the form in which the indictment shall be drawn, and other details in the proceeding. Hale v. Henkel, 26 Sup. Ct. 370, 375, 201 U. S. 43, 50 L. Ed. 652.

The third article of the Oklahoma Constitution provides for a jury in the trial of "all crimes except in cases of impeachment." The word "crime" in its most extended sense comprehends every violation of public law. In a limited sense, it embraces offenses of a serious or atrocious character. In our opinion, the provision is to be interpreted in the light of the principles which at common law determine whether accused in a given class of cases was entitled to be tried by a jury. It is not to be construed as relating to felonies or offenses punishable by confinement in the penitentiary. It embraces as well some classes of misdemeanors, the punishment of which involves or may involve the deprivation of the citizen. It would be a narrow construction of the Constitution to hold that no prosecution for a misdemeanor is a prosecution for a "crime" within the meaning of the third article, or a "criminal prosecution" within the meaning of the sixth amendment. A person charged with having committed a misdemeanor prior to statehood has a constitutional right of trial by jury composed of 12 persons. Miller v. State, 106 Pac. 810, 812, 3 Okl. Cr. 457 (quoting and adopting definition in Callan v. Wilson, 8 Sup. Ct. 1301, 127 U. S. 540, 32 L. Ed. 223).

Pub. Laws 1903, p. 32, c. 1100, § 13, securing a judicial trial on appeal from the decision of the board of examiners in a proceeding to revoke a barber's certificate, but making no provision for a jury trial, is not in violation of Const. art. 1, § 10, guaranteeing a trial by jury in criminal prosecutions, since the proceeding is not a criminal prosecution. State v. Armeno, 72 Atl. 216, 218, 29 R. I. 481.

Action for forfeiture or penalty

An action against a foreign corporation to recover a penalty for violation of a statute, requiring the corporation to file a copy of its articles of incorporation as a condition precedent to the transaction of business within the state, is a "civil suit" and not a "criminal prosecution," within the meaning of the Constitution and laws of the state. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Andrews, 154 Fed. 95, 98 (citing St. Louis, A. & T. Ry. Co. v. State, 19 S. W. 572, 56 Ark. 166; Kansas City, S. & M. R. Co. v. State, 37 S. W. 1047, 63 Ark. 134; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. State, 60 S. W. 654, 68 Ark. 561; Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. State, 87 S. W. 631, 75 Ark. 369).

An action by the state for penalties imposed by the Texas anti-trust act declaring that corporations violating the act shall be guilty, and, when convicted, shall be subject to penalties recoverable by "suit" where the "offense" is committed, is not a "criminal prosecution," within Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 219, prescribing the time for the institution of criminal prosecutions, but is a civil suit; the word "offense" having reference to violations of the acts, and not being equivalent to the words "felony" or "misdemeanor," and the word "suit" being generally used to designate a civil case, and limitation is not available as defense. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State, 106 S. W. 918, 927, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 162.

As an action, suit, etc.

See Action; Suit.

Contempt proceedings

A criminal contempt proceeding is not a "criminal prosecution" as that term is used in Const. art. 1, § 12, providing that no person shall be compelled, in a criminal prosecution, to testify against himself, and hence the defendant may be compelled to testify, although he may claim his constitutional guaranty as to questions which would tend in any manner to incriminate him. State v. Sieber, 88 Pac. 313, 317, 49 Or. 1.

Proceedings for violation of city ordinance

The common-law definition of a "crime," as given by Blackstone, is "an act committed or omitted in violation of a public law," and the term "criminal prosecutions," as employed in Const. 1819, art. 1, § 10, giving the accused the right to be heard in all "criminal prosecutions," relates exclusively to prosecutions for violation of the public laws of the state, and a city ordinance is not a public law of the state, but a local law of the particular corporation, made for its internal practice and good government. Costello v. Feagin, 50 South. 134, 135, 162 Ala. 191.

Prosecutions under city or village ordinances are not "criminal prosecutions" within the North Dakota Constitution, providing that all prosecutions shall be in the name and by the authority of the state of North Dakota. "Offenses against ordinances enacted by a municipal corporation in the exercise of its legitimate police authority for the preservation of the peace, good order, health, or morals of the community, are not generally construed to be criminal cases in the proper sense of the term 'criminal,' and the prosecutions therefor are not 'criminal prosecutions' within the meaning of the Constitution, which refers to prosecutions for offenses essentially criminal under the general laws of the state." Village of Litchville v. Hanson, 124 N. W. 1119, 1120, 19 N. D. 672 (quoting City of Mankato v. Arnold, 30 N. W. 305, 36 Minn. 62).

CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY

The ability to distinguish between right and wrong as to a particular act about to be committed is the general test of criminal responsibility. Carter v. State, 58 S. E. 532, 535, 2 Ga. App. 254.

In a prosecution for murder, an instruction that "to be 'criminally responsible' a person must have intelligence and capacity to have criminal intent and purpose, and if his mental powers are so deficient that he has no will or no conscience, or any controlling mental power, or if from the overwhelming violence of mental disease his intellectual power is for the time obliterated so that he has not the power of volition to do right and refrain from doing wrong, he is not 'criminally responsible,' the questions to be determined being whether at the time of the killing he had the mental capacity to entertain the criminal act and whether in point of fact he did entertain it," is not rendered erroneous by the use of the word "act" instead of the word "intent," where the court in other instructions repeatedly referred to the intent of defendant as shown by the evidence, as distinguished from the mere act of killing, and told them that in every crime there must exist a union or joint operation of act and intent. State v. McGowan, 93 Pac. 552, 556, 36 Mont. 422.

CRIMINAL TERM

St. 1909, § 965, providing for criminal terms of the circuit court of a county, and for civil terms thereof, divides the circuit court of the county into criminal and civil terms, and while the one circuit judge of the judicial district embracing the county presides at both the criminal and civil terms, he is without jurisdiction to try a criminal case at a civil term or to try a civil action at a criminal term, the words "criminal term" applying to a term of court at which indictments are found and returned, and at which persons are tried for crimes and other penal offenses, and the words "civil term" applying to a term at which civil business is disposed of, and controversies cognizable at law or in equity are litigated. Where a criminal case was continued at a criminal term of a circuit court of a county having criminal and civil terms, the case could not be called for trial until the next criminal term, and the court was without jurisdiction to try the case at the intervening civil term. Smedley v. Commonwealth, 127 S. W. 485, 488, 138 Ky. 1, opinion modified 129 S. W. 547, 138 Ky. 1.

CRIMINATE

The fact that a witness may be asked to testify concerning a fact which is not a part of a criminal transaction, but is material in a prosecution based on such transaction, as giving his name or his presence in some locality remote from the scene of the crime, or stating whether he was, in fact, a public official at the time it is claimed the offense was committed, do not in themselves constitute incriminating statements tending to show him guilty of crime, though upon a prosecution it may develop that they are material. A "fact tending to criminate" is a fact forming a necessary and essential part of a crime. Rudolph v. State, 107 N. W. 466, 470, 128 Wis. 222, 116 Am. St. Rep. 32.

A husband's testimony "criminate" his wife so as to be incompetent if it directly charges her with an indictable offense, but not if it merely tends to impute a crime, so that on a trial of the wife's paramour the husband's testimony to the act of adultery was incompetent as criminating her, although she had been previously tried and acquitted. State v. Wilson, 81 N. J. Law, 77-79.

CRITERION

A request for instructions to appraisers of a water company's plant, that neither the reproduction cost of the existing plant, nor the cost at present of a new one, differently constructed, but equal or even superior in efficiency to the one now existing, is the legal "criterion" of the total value to be awarded, or even of the plant or structure value, is true, if by "criterion" is meant the sole or controlling test of present value; there being other elements besides cost of reproduction or replacement which affect present value. Kennebec Water Dist. v. Waterville, 54 Atl. 6, 18, 97 Me. 185, 60 L. R. A. 856.

CRITICISM

See Fair and Honest Criticism.

"Criticism," as distinguished from defamatory statements, is an expression of opinion of facts from which differences of opinion may reasonably arise, and, if it sticks to that, it is not defamatory, no matter though it be severe, hostile, rough, caustic, bitter, sarcastic, or satirical, for these are the weapons of "criticism"; and no matter how different the opinion may be to the opinion of others, or of a majority however great, provided it derives its color from the facts, and the rule that all "fair and honest criticism" on any published book is not libelous, unless the critic goes out of his way to attack the private character of the author, is contradictory, for going out of the way to attack an author's private character is not "fair and honest criticism." It is not criticism at all, for criticism is confined to the expression of opinions on facts about which opinions may in good faith differ. It is only false aspersions or statements of fact that can be defamatory. And they are no part of criticism. Where they begin criticism ends. MacDonald v. Sun Printing & Publishing Ass'n, 92 N. Y. Supp. 37, 40, 45 Misc. Rep. 441 (citing Sickels v. Kling, 64 N. Y. Supp. 252, 31 Misc. Rep. 287; Baum v. Clause [N. Y.] 5 Hill, 199; Ulrich v. New York Press Co., 50 N. Y. Supp. 788, 23 Misc. Rep. 168).

The distinction between "criticism" and "defamation" is that criticism deals only with things that invite public attention or call for public comment, and does not follow a public man into his private life or pry into his domestic concerns; it is not concerned with the individual but only with his work, as a true critic never indulges in personalities, but confines himself to the merits of the subject-matter by conducting a fair discussion of matters of public interest, for the judicious guidance of public taste or opinion. Triggs v. Sun Printing & Pub. Ass'n, 71 N. E. 739, 743, 179 N. Y. 144, 66 L. R. A. 612, 103 Am. St. Rep. 841, 1 Ann. Cas. 328.

CROOKED

"Crooked" applied to an individual means dishonest. Midland Pub. Co. v. Implement Trade Journal Co., 83 S. W. 298, 301, 106 Mo. App. 223, 817.

CROP

See Growing Crops.

Other crops, see Other.

Sale of crops as interest in property, see Interest (In Property).

See, also, Emblements.

The word "crop," in its general signification, "means the product of cultivated plants while growing, or that product after it has been harvested or severed from the stalk or root to which it was attached." As stated in Cottle v. Spitzer, 4 Pac. 435, 65 Cal. 434, 52 Am. Rep. 303: "'Crop,' as defined by Webster, is '(3) that which is gathered; the corn or fruits of the earth collected; harvest; the word includes every species of fruit or product gathered for man or beast; (4) corn or other cultivated plants, while growing (a popular use of the word); (5) anything cut off or gathered.' The etymology of the word 'crop' appears to be from the Saxon 'crop' or 'cropp,' signifying the crop of a fowl, a cluster of ears of corn, grapes, ears of corn, and from the Welsh 'croplad,' a gathering or taking hold of. Webst. verb. 'crops.' The definition given by Webster is even broader than the popular signification of the word. Under the former, as we see, not only is meant grain produced from annual vegetation, but also fruits from trees and perennial plants. But it is at least doubtful, if, under the common and restrictive acceptance of the term, anything more would be understood than products from annual plants, as cereals, maize, etc., and the latter appears to be the sense in which the term is employed in technical legal parlance. 'Crop,' says Bouvier, 'is nearly synonymous with emblements, and by this term is understood the crops growing upon the land. By crops is here meant the products of the earth which grow yearly and are raised by the annual expense and labor, or "great manurance and industry," such as grain, but not fruits which grow on trees, which are not to be planted yearly, or grasses and the like, though they are annual.' Bouv. Law Dict. word, 'Emblements.' According to Webst. Int. Dict., "crop" is: "That which is cropped, cut, or gathered from a single field, or of a single kind of grain or fruit of any single season, especially the product of what is planted in the earth; fruit; harvest; grain or other product of the field while standing." State Mut. Ins. Co. v. Clevenger, 87 Pac. 583, 17 Okl. 49 (citing Goodrich v. Stephens, 5 Lans. [N. Y.] 230).

The word "crop," in its general signification, means the product of cultivated plants while growing, or the product after it has been harvested or severed from the stock or root to which it is attached. Corey v. Struve, 116 Pac. 975, 977, 16 Cal. App. 310.

Growing grain or grass

The word "crops" includes growing grain or grass. Pen. Code, § 604, declaring that every person who maliciously injures or destroys any standing crops in any case for which a punishment is not otherwise prescribed is guilty of a misdemeanor, intends to punish the act of injuring or destroying, not the freehold itself, but the crops, grain, etc., growing thereon, and a complaint, charging that defendant willfully injured and destroyed a standing crop of grain, is not defective for failing to allege that such destruction was not committed by means of trespass to the freehold, and therefore punishable under section 602, subd. 3, providing that every person who willfully commits a trespass by either maliciously injuring or severing from the freehold of another anything attached thereto or the produce thereof is guilty of a misdemeanor. Hogan v. Superior Court of California in and for Merced County, 117 Pac. 947, 952, 16 Cal. App. 783.

CROP OF BEETS

The phrase "crop of beets" may be interpreted to include the tops of the beets. A lease of a farm which provided that a part should be devoted to the growing of a crop of beets, and that at the proper time and when directed by a sugar company the tenant would harvest, top, haul, and deliver the beets to the company, and when so delivered one-half of the beets in weight should be delivered in the name of the landlord as his property as a yearly rental, but which makes no provision for the disposition of the tops, does not give the tops to the tenant in view of the evidence that the landlord in such leases always kept the tops. Corey v. Struve, 116 Pac. 975, 977, 16 Cal. App. 310.

CROPPER

See Landlord and Cropper.

Place of business of, see Place of Business.

A "cropper" is one hired to work land and to be compensated by a share of the produce. Such a contract gives him no legal possession of the premises further than as a hireling. Wanamaker v. Buchanan, 83 Pa. Super. Ct. 138, 140.

A "cropper," who is himself to perform services and labor in making the crop, is within the provisions of the act of 1903, "to make it illegal for any person to procure money, or other thing of value, on a contract to perform services with intent to defraud." A "cropper" does not occupy the position of a partner. If the agreement contemplates that he shall not himself perform services but shall procure and furnish labor, he is not a servant but a contractor. If he is to work himself, he is a laborer. Vinson v. State, 52 S. E. 79, 80, 124 Ga. 19 (citing Padgett v. Ford, 43 S. E. 1002, 117 Ga. 508; De Loach v. Delk, 47 S. E. 204, 119 Ga. 884; Barron v. Collins, 49 Ga. 590; Duncan v. Anderson, 56 Ga. 398).

Tenant distinguished

One who takes land of another and agrees to cultivate the same and deliver to the owner one-third of the crop is a tenant and not a mere cropper. A "tenant" is one who rents land and pays for it either in money or a part of the crops, or the equivalent. A "cropper" farms the land and is paid for his work in a part of the crop. Hansen v. Hansen, 129 N. W. 982, 983, 88 Neb. 517.

Under Code, § 1754, which provides that, where lands are leased for agriculture or cultivated by a lessee, the crops shall vest in the possession of the lessor with a preferred lien for rents and advances, and section 1755, which provides a special action by the lessor to compel division of the crop, the lessee is not a mere servant working for wages, nor, except in the sense that he makes a crop, and the lease has that object in view, the term "cropper" is not in harmony with the language of the statute. Parker v. Brown, 48 S. E. 657, 660, 136 N. C. 280.

"The distinction between a 'tenant' and a 'cropper' is that a tenant has an estate in the land for a given time, and a right of property in the crops, and hence makes the division thereof between himself and the landlord in case of an agreement upon shares, while a cropper has no estate in the land, nor ownership of the crops, but is merely a servant, and receives his share of the crops from the landlord, in whom the title is." Taylor v. Donahoe, 103 N. W. 1099, 1100, 125 Wis. 513.

Where an honest attempt was made by a voter to make a cross in the appropriate square in the ballot, that the cross was imperfect does not invalidate the ballot. Lines which meet, but which do not intersect, do not form a cross essential to mark a ballot, but lines which intersect slightly make a cross sufficient to require the counting of the ballot. A ballot having a V-shaped mark in the square before a candidate's name, without any intersection of lines to form a cross, must be rejected. A ballot having in a party circle an irregular-shaped mark in the form of "T" must be counted. A ballot with dim crosses in the proper circle or square, made by pressing the pencil lightly, or by using a pencil with the lead broken, must be counted. A ballot having a mark in a party circle resembling the letter "O," without any attempt at a cross, cannot be counted. A ballot having a cross in the democratic circle and the names of the democratic and republican candidates for an office marked out with a lead pencil drawn horizontally through each name cannot be counted for the democratic candidate. A ballot having a lead pencil cross in the democratic circle and a large pencil cross covering the whole length of the democratic ticket, with no other marks, cannot be counted for a democratic candidate. A ballot was marked with pencil crosses in the squares before the first eight names on the socialist ticket, and down the entire length of the ticket was a large cross. The crosses in the squares and the large cross were partly erased. There were crosses in squares on the republican ticket and an erasure thereof. There were crosses in the respective squares on the democratic ticket. Held, that the ballot must be counted for the democratic candidates; the crosses on the socialist and republican tickets having been made by mistake, or the voter changing his mind. A ballot marked by a voter placing crosses in the squares before the names of opposing candidates for the same office cannot be counted. Brents v. Smith, 95 N. E. 484, 487, 488, 491, 250 Ill. 521.

A street or highway which extends to, but not beyond, another highway, "crosses and intersects" such highway, within the meaning of section 5 of the act approved August 13, 1910 (Laws 1910, p. 92), regulating the use of automobiles. Hayes v. State, 75 S. E. 523, 527, 11 Ga. App. 371.

The statutes of South Dakota conferring the power of eminent domain on railroad companies (Civ. Code, §§ 488, 505), while authorizing one railroad company to "cross, intersect, join and unite" its road with the railroad of any other company, do not authorize to build its road longitudinally upon the right of way of another company, and in the absence of such statutory authority it cannot condemn a right of way to do so. South Dakota Cent. R. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 141 Fed. 578, 585, 73 C. C. A. 176.

CROSS-BILL

See, also, Cross-Complaint; Cross-Petition.

A "cross-bill" may be filed to obtain affirmative relief for defendant in the original suit, to obtain a discovery in aid of a defense in that suit, to enable defendant to interpose a more complete defense than could be had by answer, or to obtain full relief to all parties and a complete determination of all controversies arising out of the matters charged in the original bill, and in a suit in a federal court of equity to establish and protect rights in the waters of a stream against other separate appropriators of water from the stream, all of whom are citizens of different states from complainant, the court may entertain a cross-bill by any or all of the defendants setting up priority of right as against complainant or their codefendants. Ames Realty Co. v. Big Indian Mining Co., 146 Fed. 166, 169.

A bill having been filed to enjoin a township from repealing an ordinance granting a street railway company a location for its tracks and their removal, "a cross-bill" was filed by the township, demanding that the company account as to compensation required by the ordinance granting such location to be made annually to the township. Held, that the "cross-bill" was not subject to the objection that it sought a legal remedy only, since, though a "cross-bill" filed against a codefendant must rest on considerations of equity, a more liberal rule applies as to a "cross-bill" filed against complainant. Asbury Park & S. G. Ry. Co. v. Township Committee of Neptune Tp., 67 Atl. 790, 794, 73 N. J. Eq. 323 (citing 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. 1549; Mitford, Eq. Pl. [81] 99; Shipman, Eq. Pl. 406).

As against plaintiff in the original bill, the cross-bill need not show any ground of equity or ask equitable relief. To obtain affirmative relief on behalf of a defendant a cross-bill must be filed, since such relief cannot be obtained under an answer. Inadequacy of legal remedies in the first place is not an essential element of a cross-bill. It must relate to the subject-matter of the original bill, but it is regarded as bringing forward purely legal claims. As stated in 2 Parsons, Contracts, pp. 562, 563: "The essential difference between recoupment or reduction on the one hand, and set-off on the other, is that in set-off the ground taken by the defendant is that he may owe the plaintiff what he claims, but that a part or the whole of the debt is paid in reason and justice by a distinct and unconnected debt which the plaintiff owes him; * * * while on a plea of recoupment a defendant may deduct from plaintiff's claim all just demands or claims owed by him, or judgments made by him in the very same transaction, or even in other but clearly connected transactions. They must, however, be so connected as fairly to authorize the defendant to say that he does not owe the plaintiff on that cause of action so much as he seeks, and not that he ought not to pay plaintiff so much, because on another cause of action the plaintiff owes him." As was said in Grisham v. Bodman, 20 South. 515, 111 Ala. 200: "Recoupment is not merely a cross-action, as is set-off; the plea does not confess the indebtedness counted on in the complaint and bring forward a counter indebtedness from the plaintiff to the defendant, as does the plea of set-off; but its proposition is that plaintiff's claim is based upon a particular contract or transaction, that to entitle the plaintiff to the sum he claims it was upon him to comply with certain obligations of the contract or to discharge certain duties which the law imposed upon him in the making or performing of the contract, that he has failed to comply with such obligations or to discharge such duties, and that thereby the defendant has been so damaged in the particular transaction, or in respect of the particular contract, that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover; or, in other words, that the plaintiff has no debt or a less debt than he claims, as the case may be, against the defendant." As is stated in 25 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law (2d Ed.) 558: "It is not necessary that the opposing claims should be of the same character, but it is sufficient if they arise out of the same transaction or relate to the same subject-matter, and are susceptible of adjustment in one action. Within this principle a claim originating in a contract may be recouped against one founded in tort." Ashe-Carson Co. v. Bonifay, 41 South. 816, 817, 818, 147 Ala. 376 (citing Davis v. Cook, 65 Ala. 617; Morton v. New Orleans & S. Ry. Co., 79 Ala. 591, 607; Whitfield v. Riddle, 78 Ala. 104; Nelson v. Dunn, 15 Ala. 501; Stevens v. Hertzler, 22 South. 121, 114 Ala. 564, 578; Wadsworth v. Goree, 96 Ala. 227, 10 South. 848; Nelson v. Dunn, 15 Ala. 502).

The office of a "cross-bill" is either to warrant the grant of affirmative relief to defendant in the original suit to obtain a discovery in aid of the defense in that suit, to enable defendant to interpose a more complete defense than that which he could present by answer, or to obtain full relief to all parties, and a complete determination of all controversies which arise out of the matters charged in the original bill. The fact that the cross-bill fairly tends to accomplish either of these purposes is generally a sufficient ground for its interposition. Koch v. Sumner, 108 N. W. 725, 726, 145 Mich. 358, 116 Am. St. Rep. 802, 9 Ann. Cas. 225.

A "cross-bill" is a bill filed by a defendant against the plaintiff or some other defendant, or both, in the same suit, touching the matter involved in the original bill. It may be used either to obtain a discovery in aid of the defense to the original bill, or to obtain relief for all parties touching the subject-matter of the bill. A cross-bill lies where a question arises between two defendants upon a case made out by evidence arising from pleadings and proofs between the plaintiffs and defendants, or where at the hearing it appears that the suit already instituted is insufficient to bring before the court all matters necessary to enable it to decide upon the rights of all the parties. Moon's Adm'r v. Highland Development Co., 52 S. E. 209, 212, 104 Va. 551.

A "cross-bill" must grow out of matters alleged in the original bill and is used to bring the whole dispute before the court, so that there may be a complete decree touching the subject-matter of the action. It is brought either to aid in the defense of the original suit, or to obtain a complete determination of the controversies between the original complainant and the cross-complainant over the subject-matter of the original bill. It may not interpose new controversies between codefendants to the original bill, the decision of which is unnecessary to a complete determination of the controversies between the complainant and the defendants over the subject-matter of the original bill. It is auxiliary to the proceeding in the original suit, and dependent upon it. Both the original and cross-bill constitute but one suit, so intimately are they connected together. Rickey Land & Cattle Co. v. Wood, 152 Fed. 22, 23, 81 C. C. A. 218 (citing Ayres v. Carver, 17 How. [58 U. S.] 591, 595, 15 L. Ed. 179; Ex parte South & N. A. R. Co., 95 U. S. 221, 225, 24 L. Ed. 355; Stuart v. Hayden, 72 Fed. 402, 410, 18 C. C. A. 618; Cross v. De Valle, 1 Wall. [68 U. S.] 1, 17 L. Ed. 515; Providence Rubber Co. v. Goodyear, 9 Wall. [76 U. S.] 807, 19 L. Ed. 587; Young v. Colt, 30 Fed. Cas. 841, 2 Blatchf. 373; Stonemetz Printers' Mach. Co. v. Brown Folding-Mach. Co., 46 Fed. 851).

See Answer.

As a defense or auxiliary suit.

A cross-bill is a mere auxiliary suit, and is to be considered as a defense to the original bill or proceeding necessary to the determination of some matter already in litigation. Oecil v. Karnes, 56 S. E. 885, 886, 61 W. Va. 543.

A "cross-bill" ex vi termini implies a bill by defendant against the plaintiff in the same suit, or against other defendants in the same suit, or against both, touching matters in question in the original bill. It is regarded as auxiliary to or as a dependency on the original suit, and its subject-matter is that of the original bill. Where a wife sued for alimony on the ground of the husband's desertion, the wife's adultery might be properly alleged as a cross-bill. Bickley v. Bickley, 34 South. 946, 947, 136 Ala. 548.

A "cross-bill" is auxiliary to the original suit and a dependency upon it, and it cannot introduce new controversies between the defendants to the original bill, the decision of which is in no way necessary to a complete determination of the controversy between complainant and the defendants over the subject-matter of the original bill. Gilmore v. Bort, 134 Fed. 858, 661 (citing Cross v. De Valle, 1 Wall. [68 U. S.] 5, 17 L. Ed. 515; Providence Rubber Co. v. Goodyear, 9 Wall. [76 U. S.] 807, 19 L. Ed. 587; Stuart v. Hayden, 72 Fed. 402, 18 C. C. A. 618).

A cross-bill is one brought by a defendant in a suit against complainant in the same suit, or against other defendants in the same suit, or against both, touching the matters in question in the original bill, and is considered as an auxiliary suit or a dependency upon the original bill, and can be sustained only on matters growing out of the original bill. Such cross-bill may set up new matter arising subsequently, but still it must constitute part of the same defense, or relate to the same subject-matter in such a way as to be a defense to the original suit. Special Tax School Dist. No. 1 of Palm Beach County v. Smith, 54 South. 376, 381, 61 Fla. 782, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 757.

A "cross-bill" in equity is but an auxiliary to the original suit, and depends thereon. It is brought in the court in which the original suit of which it becomes a part is pending, and must be preferred by a defendant to the original bill against plaintiff in the same suit, or against other defendants, or both. It must state the parties to the original bill, the object, prayer, or proceedings thereon, as also the facts and rights of the exhibiting party, the ground on which he resists complainant's claim, and should pray that the cross-cause and the original cause be heard at the same time, and one decree made adjudicating all the rights of the parties. United States v. Reese, 166 Fed. 347, 350.

"A 'cross-bill' is a mode of defense to the original suit, and in its subject-matter it must be confined to the scope of the original cause of action and to the defense set out in the answer of the cross-complainant." United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Newark, 66 Atl. 904, 906, 72 N. J. Eq. 841.

"A 'cross-bill' is considered a defense to the original action." 1 Bouv. Law Dict. 481. "A 'cross-bill' is nothing more than an addition to the answer. It makes a part of the pleading which states the defense; the answer being the other part." Canant v. Mapin, 20 Ga. 731. "A 'cross-bill,' ex vi terminorum, implies a bill brought by defendant in a suit against the plaintiff respecting the matter in question in that bill, and it is a weapon of defense in such case." Hawley v. Griffin, 97 N. W. 86-90, 121 Iowa, 667.

"A 'cross-bill' is brought by defendant in a suit against the plaintiff in the same suit, or against other defendants in the same suit, or against both, touching the matters in question in the original bill. It is brought either to obtain a discovery of facts in aid of the defense to the original bill, or to obtain full and complete relief to all parties as to the matters charged in the original bill. It should not introduce new and distinct matters not embraced in the original bill, as they cannot be properly examined in that suit. The cross-bill is an auxiliary to the proceeding in the original suit and a dependency upon it." Blythe Co. v. Bankers' Inv. Co., 81 Pac. 281, 286, 147 Cal. 82 (quoting and adopting the definition in Ayres v. Carver, 17 How. [58 U. S.] 591, 15 L. Ed. 179, and citing Cross v. De Valle, 1 Wall. [68 U. S.] 5, 17 L. Ed. 515).

New matter and parties

The office of a cross-bill is to obtain affirmative relief upon the case stated in the bill, not to obtain relief with regard to other matters. A cross-bill is a defense to the original bill, or a proceeding necessary to a complete determination of a matter already in litigation. A bill by a testamentary trustee and beneficiary against his co-trustees and cestuis que trust sought to have certain portions of the trust estate divided from the residue and held separately for certain cestuis que trust, claiming that it would be for the benefit of the parties interested. The answer, besides joining issue on the propositions of law and fact, assumed the character of a cross-bill, and, alleging misbehavior and incapacity of complainant, prayed that he be removed. In so far as the answer sought affirmative relief it should be stricken out, because it introduced an issue not affecting nor depending on the question whether complainant was entitled to relief, and only tended to complication and delay. Paine v. Sackett, 57 Atl. 376, 377, 25 R. I. 561 (quoting Story, Eq. Pl. § 399).

A "cross-bill" is one brought by the defendant against the plaintiff (and other parties, if necessary) in another suit touching the same matter, either to obtain discovery of facts in aid of a defense to the original bill, or to obtain full relief to all parties touching the matters of the original bill. Only such new facts are properly pleaded in a cross-bill as are necessary for the court to have before it in deciding the question raised in the original suit and to enable the court to do complete justice to all the parties in respect to the cause of action pleaded in the bill. Where an original bill was filed against a city to restrain a nuisance consisting of a pollution of a river, a cross-bill filed by the city, in which it admitted the nuisance, but averred that a certain water company had unlawfully diverted, for the benefit of another city, water which would otherwise have flowed past defendant city and helped to dilute its sewage, and that another water company had constructed a dam across the river below defendant city, which prevented the passage of sewage down the stream, was fatally defective as pleading matters not germane to the original bill. Doremus v. City of Paterson, 62 Atl. 8, 70 N. J. Eq. 296.

"The purpose of a 'cross-bill' is either to obtain a discovery in aid of a defense to the original bill or to obtain full relief to all the parties touching the matter of the original bill." A cross-bill cannot introduce a new controversy which is not necessary to be decided to have a final decree on the case presented by the original bill. New parties cannot be brought into a suit in equity by cross-bill. In a suit in equity by the purchaser of coal rights in lands, for a specific enforcement of the contract, the terms of which were in dispute, defendant cannot by cross-bill bring in as parties defendant the agents who made the contract on his behalf and with his approval to have their right to commissions determined, a controversy having no relevancy to the principal suit, and one in which complainant has no interest. Patton v. Marshall, 173 Fed. 350, 354, 97 C. C. A. 610, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 127.

"A 'cross-bill' is brought by a defendant in a suit against the plaintiff in the same suit, or against other defendants in the same suit, or against both, touching the matters in question in the original bill. It is brought either to obtain a discovery of facts, in aid of the defense to the original bill, or to obtain full and complete relief to all parties as to the matters charged in the original bill. It should not introduce new and distinct matters not embraced in the original bill, as they cannot be properly examined in that suit, but constitute the subject-matter of an original independent suit. The cross-bill is auxiliary to the proceeding in the original suit and a dependency upon it." Special Tax School Dist. No. 1 of Dade County v. Smith, 54 South. 376, 381, 61 Fla. 782, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 757 (quoting Van Zile, Eq. Pl. & Pr. § 212).

A motion to strike the cross-bill, as being based on matters irrelevant to the case made by the original bill, is properly overruled; the real basis of the bill to enjoin waste pending orators' action of ejectment being a claimed forfeiture of the contract of purchase, under which, if in force, defendant has rights paramount to those of orators on the case made by their bill; and defendant by his answer denying a forfeiture in equity, and by cross-bill praying that the contract be performed, and that further prosecution of orators' action of ejectment be enjoined, so that the cross-bill is a proceeding to procure a complete determination of a matter already in litigation, and the new facts introduced by it being such only as are necessary to have before the court in the decision of the questions raised in the original suit, to enable it to do full and complete justice to all parties in respect to the cause of action on which orators rest their right to aid or relief. Van Dyke v. Cole, 70 Atl. 593, 595, 81 Vt. 379.

CROSS-COMPLAINT

See, also, Cross-Bill; Cross-Petition.

A "cross-complaint" is in the nature of an original action. When the defendant files such a complaint and seeks affirmative relief, he becomes the plaintiff, and plaintiff becomes defendant. Waterman v. Bash, 89 Pac. 556, 558, 46 Wash. 212 (citing Powell v. Nolan, 67 Pac. 712, 27 Wash. 318; Pom. Rem. & Rem. Rights, § 806).

Code Civ. Proc. § 661, provides that the forms of pleading shall be those prescribed in the Code. Section 662 provides that the only pleadings allowed on the part of the plaintiff are the complaint, a demurrer to the answer, and a reply, and, on the part of the defendant, the demurrer to the complaint, the answer, and the demurrer to the reply. By section 690 the answer may consist of denials and statements of new matter; the new matter being a defense or counterclaim. By section 754 every allegation of new matter in a reply is deemed to be denied. By Laws 1905, c. 5, the plaintiff, in a reply, may allege any new matter not inconsistent with the complaint constituting a defense to the counterclaim or new matter in the answer. In an action by an attorney to foreclose his attorney's lien on certain land, a defendant answered, setting forth that she had a mortgage on the property, and seeking the foreclosure of the same, and plaintiff filed a reply alleging that defendant had received rents and profits from the property amounting to a specified amount. Held, that plaintiff's allegations as to the amounts received by defendant were denied, a contention that defendant's pleading constituted a "cross-complaint" and plaintiff's second pleading an answer which required from defendant a reply, in the absence of which the affirmative allegations of plaintiff's second pleading were admitted, being untenable. Gilchrist v. Hore, 87 Pac. 443, 445, 34 Mont. 443.

Under Rev. St. 1887, § 4188, the scope of pleading for a "cross-complaint" is not as comprehensive as for a counterclaim, for a cross-complaint must relate to or depend upon the contract or transaction upon which the main case is founded, or affect the property to which the action relates, while a counterclaim may go further, and, if the cause arose on contract, may set forth any other action arising out of contract. Hunter v. Porter, 77 Pac. 434, 438, 10 Idaho, 72.

In an action of ejectment, where defendants filed a purported cross-complaint, which did not relate to the land for the recovery of which the action was brought, it was not a "cross-complaint" within Code Civ. Proc. § 442, permitting defendant seeking affirmative relief against any party, relating to or depending upon the transaction upon which the action is brought, or affecting property to which the action relates, to file, with his answer, a cross-complaint, and hence a demurrer was properly sustained thereto. McFarland v. Matthai, 95 Pac. 179, 180, 7 Cal. App. 599.

Under the Code of Practice abolishing all forms of action, relief may be properly granted according to the facts alleged and proved in a pleading, though such facts are not such as to constitute a "cross-complaint," by which name the pleading was designated: Randolph v. Nichol, 84 S. W. 1087, 1040, 74 Ark. 93.

Where plaintiff agreed to sell all its lumber to a foreign corporation and brought suit against the corporation for the price of lumber sold, an answer, alleging that plaintiff had not delivered all the lumber manufactured by it but had wrongfully disposed of a large part of it, was a defense operating to defeat plaintiff's recovery, and therefore not a "counterclaim" or "cross-complaint," within St. § 3656. The declaration that the statutory counterclaim embraced both recoupment and set-off must be applied in the sense in which it is employed in the statute, namely, a cross-demand of the defendant against the award in which the plaintiff is entitled upon the cause of action alleged by him, and the term "counterclaim" must be used as referring to a cause of action of the defendant constituting a defense for affirmative relief, and not as a defense which goes only to defeat plaintiff's cause of action. Rib Falls Lumber Co. v. Lesh & Mathews Lumber Co., 129 N. W. 595, 597, 144 Wis. 362.

An answer setting up grounds for and claiming affirmative relief is termed by the Code a "cross-complaint"; but the failure to so designate such a pleading by the pleader did not affect his rights thereunder, where issue was joined and the case was fairly before the court. Schneider v. Reed, 101 N. W. 682, 684, 123 Wis. 488.

CROSS-CUT

Pol. Code, § 3611, provides that a "cut" or "cross-cut," or a tunnel which cuts a lode at a depth of ten feet below the surface, or an open cut at least ten feet in length along the lode from the point where the lode may be in any manner discovered, is equivalent to a discovery shaft, within section 3612, requiring declaratory statements to set forth the dimensions and location of the discovery shaft or its equivalent sunk upon lode or placer claims. Wilson v. Freeman, 75 Pac. 84, 85, 29 Mont. 470, 68 L. R. A. 833.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

"Cross-examination" is not only to ascertain the means of knowledge which the witness has of the things about which he has testified, his feelings, prejudices, capacity, etc., but it is also to try his integrity (for which the party introducing him has vouched), and to do that the right exists to take him over the whole course of matters involved in any one of the issues of the whole case, so that, if he be caught in any willful misstatement of any matter material to any of those issues, the opposite party may ask the jury to place no reliance in any other thing he has said. But if no question is asked by the party having him sworn, there is no reason for cross-examination, since his want of knowledge, his prejudices, feelings, etc., are not involved, and his integrity is of no consequence." Harris v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co., 91 S. W. 1010, 1011, 115 Mo. App. 527.

CROSS-PETITION

See, also, Cross-Bill; Cross-Complaint.

By Civ. Code Prac. § 96, subsec. 3, a "cross-petition" is defined as "the commencement of an action by a defendant against a codefendant," and it is not allowed to a defendant except upon a cause of action which affects or is affected by the original cause of action. Where a vendor sued to recover the purchase price, and such action was consolidated with actions by creditors of the vendor against him, and the creditors sought to reach the fund owing from the vendee, the vendor had a right by cross-petition to be heard as to the amount owing him. Brackett's Adm'r v. Boreing (Ky.) 89 S. W. 496, 499.

Under Civ. Code Prac. § 96, subsec. 3, which defines a "cross-petition" to be the commencement of an action by defendant against a codefendant or some person not a party to the action, and which is not allowed to a defendant except upon a cause of action which affects or is affected by the original cause of action, an action by sureties of a sheriff, sued on his bond for wrongful levy on property, over against the sureties on the bond of attaching creditors indemnifying the sheriff, and but for which indemnity the attachment would not have been levied, is so connected with the other cause of action that the sheriff's sureties could proceed by cross-petition in the original action against sureties on the indemnifying bond to be subrogated to the sheriff's right thereunder. Dine v. Donnelly, 121 S. W. 685, 687, 134 Ky. 776.

CROSS-SECTION

See Accurate Cross-Section.

CROSS-TALK

"Cross-talk," as a term of the telephone business is the production by magnetic induction between adjacent electric annunciators of a transfer of a voice current from one talking circuit to another. Western Electric Co. v. North Electric Co., 130 Fed. 457, 458, 64 C. C. A. 396.

CROSS-TIES

As lumber, see Lumber.

CROSS-WALK

"There is no variance between the notice of a claim for injury, filed with the city, where it stated that the injury was caused by a fall on the "walk" near the northeast corner of S. & M. street, and a petition, where the claim was referred to as a "cross-walk," "cross-walk" and "walk" mean the same thing. Both are sidewalks, and the city is bound to keep both in repair. Ottawa v. Green, 83 Pac. 616, 618, 72 Kan. 214.

CROSSING

See Farm Crossing; Grade Crossing; Open Crossing; Property Crossing; Railroad Crossing.

Any road crossing, see Any.

In order that a railroad "crossing" shall exist, the railroad and the highway must intersect each other at some degree, or at least one must be superimposed on the other. Borough of South Amboy v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 73 Atl. 852, 856, 76 N. J. Eq. 57.

A finding that plaintiff, when struck by a team, was "crossing the junction" of two streets, as alleged in the complaint, is authorized, although he was on the edge of the sidewalk, and for two or three seconds had stopped to look across. Drew v. Farnsworth, 71 N. E. 783, 784, 186 Mass. 365.

The word "crossing," as used in Code 1906, § 4058, making it the duty of every railroad company to make and maintain convenient and suitable crossings over its track for necessary plantation roads, means a crossing over the whole width of the right of way. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. McGowan, 46 South. 55, 56, 92 Miss. 603.

Code, § 2063, provides that a railway company desiring to cross another at grade may be compelled by the other to interlock the crossing; section 2065 provides for the modification of any decree relating to the expense of interlocking crossings; and section 2064 provides that, on proceedings under section 2063, not less than one-third of the cost shall be apportioned to either road. The word "crossing," as used in the statute, is not the actual crossing, but includes the interlocking. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Gowrie & N. W. R. Co., 99 N. W. 181, 182, 123 Iowa, 543.

A railroad company operated a line of railroad from a junction at Kennett easterly to Pascola; thence east to Hayti; and thence east to Caruthersville. It constructed a branch from Pascola in a southerly direction to Deering, and subsequently extended the line so as to cross the Caruthersville branch at grade 400 feet west of the Pascola station, and ran north to Wardell. There was no separate operation of the two lines, nor any separate train run on the track between Deering and Wardell, but they were operated as two spurs, forming a part of the main line. Held, that the railroad company was not required to maintain a depot at the Pascola crossing, within Rev. St. 1899, § 1075, requiring every railroad corporation to maintain at all "crossings" of other railroads a passenger depot. State ex Inf. Collins v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 142 S. W. 279, 281, 238 Mo. 605.

The violation of a local ordinance which forbids driving faster than a walk over or upon a crossing is negligence per se, if such violation contributes proximately to an accident, the word "crossing" including not merely that part of the street used ordinarily by pedestrians in moving from one side of the street to the other, but the entire area covered by the intersection of two streets. Stein v. United Railroads of San Francisco, 113 Pac. 663, 664, 159 Cal. 368.

The purpose of a "switch" is to direct a car from the course, while that of a "crossing" is to keep it on the course. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Ohio Brass Co., 130 Fed. 542, 546.

Where an automobile ordinance provided that automobiles should slow down to four miles an hour at crossings, the term "crossings" should be construed as referring to street crossings. Eichmann v. Buchholt, 107 N. W. 325, 128 Wis. 385, 8 Ann. Cas. 435.

"What is the crossing of a railway right of way? Not alone, we think, the boards or other appliances which must be laid between the rails and adjacent to them on the outside, and cattle guards and wing fences to keep cattle from straying on the right of way beyond the crossing; but such structures, too, as will enable a wagon or team to go safely and conveniently on the track. This is said to be the legal definition of the word 'crossing' in an authoritative treatise on railroad law, and respectable authorities are cited in support of the text. 8 Elliott, Railways, § 1097. In contemplation of law, a crossing is not only that portion of the earth's surface immediately by or between the rails of a track, but the approaches on both sides of the track; and it is incumbent on a railroad company to construct approaches needed to make a crossing usable, and so courts of authority have decided." Birlew v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 79 S. W. 490, 491, 104 Mo. App. 561.

The word "highway," within Rev. St. c. 52, § 86, providing that no engine or train shall run across a highway near the compact part of a town at a speed greater than six miles an hour, unless the railroad maintains a flagman, a gate, or certain signals at such crossing, is not limited to ways established by county commissioners or municipal authorities, but is used in its more generic and popular legal sense. A certain way was a short cut-off between two roads. There was evidence justifying a finding that, though never laid out as a way, under the statute, it had been open, and commonly used by the public for travel for at least 40 years, and that the public had gained a prescriptive right of travel thereover. A railroad company, when it built its road, took a deed of the premises providing that the company would maintain a train crossing over the track at such place, and it appeared that the successor of such railroad company had kept the crossing open, planked, and at times it stretched a rope across the way while fast trains were passing, and maintained a sign at the crossing on which were the words "Railroad Crossing," which, as well as being a warning, was an invitation to the public to use the crossing. Held, that the crossing was a "highway" within Rev. St. c. 52, § 86, providing that no engine or train shall run across a highway near the compact part of a town at a speed greater than six miles an hour, unless the company maintains a flagman, gate, or certain signals there. The phrase "near the compact part of a town" in Rev. St. c. 52, § 86, providing that no engine or train shall run across a highway near the compact part of a town at a speed greater than 6 miles an hour, unless the railroad maintains a flagman, a gate, or certain signals at such crossing, is not limited to the largest or principal compact part of a town, but applies to any compact portion, and includes a village with church, schoolhouse, engine house, store and dwelling houses, in all at least 25 buildings, and all situated within 350 feet of the central point. Moore v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 76 Atl. 871, 873, 106 Me. 297.

As crossing in same level

A railroad crossing of roads in its primary and natural sense is an intersection in the same plane, and does not include an underpass which obviates the necessity of a crossing. In a broader sense the word covers all the means by which a traveler passes from one side of an obstructing line to another. Libby v. Canadian Pac. Ry. Co., 73 Atl. 593, 82 Vt. 316.

In a deed to a railroad company containing a covenant that it would provide grantor with "a suitable and convenient road 'crossing' across the track of said railway," the natural meaning of the quoted expression is a grade crossing. Speer v. Erie R. Co., 60 Atl. 197, 198, 68 N. J. Eq. 615.

CROTON WATER

As spring water, see Spring Water.

CROWBAR

A "crowbar" or "pinch bar" is an iron bar about 4 or 4½ feet long, round except for a foot or more at the lower end, which is square, and about 1 or 1½ inches in diameter. The lower or square end of the bar is cut off diagonally so as to form a pointed wedge with one of the square surfaces and an obtuse angle with the opposite square surface. The last point of contact between the diagonal cut-off and the square surface is called the heel and the former point of contact the point. Gussart v. Greenleaf Stone Co., 114 N. W. 799, 800, 134 Wis. 418.

CROWD

Two or three persons would constitute a "crowd" within an averment in a petition, in an action for negligent shooting, that a pistol was fired "into a crowd." Morgan v. Mulhall, 114 S. W. 4, 6, 214 Mo. 451.

CROWN

See Pleas of the Crown.

CROWN CORK

A "crown seal" or "crown cork" consists of a cap of hard metal with corrugated flange, containing a sealing disk of the diameter of the cap, placed upon a bottle having an annular projecting shoulder, under which the corrugated flange of the cap is compressed by suitable pressure into fixed contact with the neck of the bottle, and at the same time the cap with the inclosed sealing disk is forced down upon the mouth of the bottle, making a tight seal, which is held in place by the locking effect of the compression of the corrugated hard-metal flange under the swell of the annular shoulder. The corrugations of the flange, among other uses, afford a projecting edge for the engagement of any simple tool by which, when it is desired to open the bottle, the whole device can be easily and quickly pried off. Crown Cork & Seal Co. v. Imperial Bottle Cap & Machine Co., 123 Fed. 669, 670.

CROWN GRANT

A crown grant of land under navigable waters is a grant of the crown's private property, subject to the public rights in the navigable waters held in trust by the crown for the people. Lewis Blue Point Oyster Cultivation Co. v. Briggs, 91 N. E. 846, 847, 198 N. Y. 287, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1084, 19 Ann. Cas. 694; Id., 114 N. Y. Supp. 313, 129 App. Div. 574.

CROWN LAND

Lands owned by the province of Quebec and known as "crown lands" correspond to what is known in this country as public lands. Myers v. United States, 140 Fed. 648, 649.

CROWN SEAL

See Crown Cork.

CRUDE

The word "crude," as used in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 43, providing for a duty on opium, "crude" or unmanufactured is used in the sense of not refined; consequently powdered opium produced by grinding and sifting lump opium, which has been subjected to an artificial process of evaporation, is "crude" in the sense that it has not been refined. Merck & Co. v. United States, 143 Fed. 694, 695.

Powdered opium prepared by a series of processes from gum opium, resulting in a more valuable article having a new use and a new commercial signification, is not opium "crude" or unmanufactured, within the meaning of a tariff act. Merck v. United States, 151 Fed. 14, 15, 80 C. C. A. 510.

"Crude" or "prime crude" is a standard grade of oil. Authority to a broker to sell it could not be limited to a right to sell only "season's prime," which was not a classification known in the exchanges of the country. Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Shreveport Cotton Oil Co., 35 South. 610, 611, 111 La. 387.

CRUDE ARTICLE

So-called lentiscum or lentiscus, consisting of the leaves or stems of the pistacia lentiscus, or mastic tree, ground or crushed to a finely powdered condition, is held to be a crude article, and to be within paragraph 482, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, 30 Stat. 195, relating to "articles in a crude state used in dyeing or tanning." Leber & Meyer v. United States, 135 Fed. 243, 244.

CRUDE DRUGS

Where the process of placing crude balsam in gelatin capsules has resulted in an article with a greater value and an improved condition, the combination is not classifiable as "crude drugs not advanced in value or condition," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 548, 30 Stat. 197. United States v. Lehn & Fink, 172 Fed. 171, 172.

CRUDE FEATHERS

Eagle and condor quills, which are ornamental feathers, but are in a crude state, and require further treatment before becoming suitable for ornamental purposes, are dutiable as crude feathers, and not as ornamental feathers, under paragraph 425, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, 30 Stat. 181. Brodie v. United States, 135 Fed. 914; Spero v. Same, 135 Fed. 915.

Crude ostrich feathers, which in that condition are never used for ornamental purposes, but need to be dressed and otherwise manufactured before becoming suitable for such use, are dutiable as "feathers * * * crude," and not as "ornamental feathers," under paragraph 425, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, 30 Stat. 191. Brodie v. United States, 135 Fed. 914, 915.

CRUDE MINERAL

Ground corundum ore, that has been advanced in value by processes of manufacture for a specific use, is not a "crude mineral," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 614, 30 Stat. 199, nor "manufactured sand," within the meaning of paragraph 671, 30 Stat. 1688, but is dutiable as emery by similitude, under section 1, Schedule N, par. 419, 30 Stat. 191. F. W. Myers & Co. v. United States, 178 Fed. 462, 463.

Where marble waste, a comparatively valueless material, has been converted into a commodity of use and value by a special manufacturing process whereby it has acquired a new name and use, it ceases to be a "crude mineral" and becomes a manufactured one. United States v. Graser-Rothe, 164 Fed. 205, 207.

Whetstone blocks, of an approximately rectangular shape, which after being quarried have had their projections removed by a process of rough dressing, and which are used in that state, held within the provision for "minerals, crude, or not advanced in value or condition by refining or grinding, or by other process of manufacture," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 614, 30 Stat. 199. Charles A. Johnson & Co. v. United States, 152 Fed. 656, 657.

So-called granito or terrazo, produced by crushing the waste of marble quarries and sifting or sorting it into various sizes, is subject to classification as an unenumerated manufactured article, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 6, 30 Stat. 205, rather than as "waste," under section 1, Schedule N, par. 463, 30 Stat. 194, or as minerals "crude," under section 2, Free List, par. 614, 30 Stat. 199. United States v. Graser-Rothe, 164 Fed. 205, 206.

The zinc ores known as carbonate, silicate, and sulphide of zinc are free of duty, the carbonate and silicate as "calamine," and the sulphide as "minerals, crude," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, pars. 514, 614, 30 Stat. 196, 199, except that when they contain lead they are subject to the duty provided on "lead-bearing ore of all kinds," in section 1, Schedule C, par. 181, 30 Stat. 166. United States v. Brewster, 167 Fed. 122, 123, 92 C. C. A. 574.

CRUDE OPIUM

Powdered opium is not dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 43, 30 Stat. 153, as opium, "crude or unmanufactured," but, under paragraph 20, 30 Stat. 152, as a drug advanced in value or condition. Merck v. United States, 151 Fed. 14, 15, 80 C. C. A. 510.

CRUDE SAND

Under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 671, 30 Stat. 201, relating to "sand, crude or manufactured," "crude sand" is such as is found in nature, and "manufactured sand" is, though manufactured substantially the same as crude sand; and pulverized corundum, which is not produced from crude sand, is therefore not sand of either kind within the meaning of the act. F. W. Myers & Co. v. United States, 155 Fed. 502, 503.

CRUDE STATE

The term "crude state," as used in Tariff Act 1897, c. 11, § 2, admitting without the payment of tariff certain articles in a "crude state," does not include chrome slum, which is a by-product of the process of manufacturing certain coal tar colors. In that process two products are formed, and these combined with water constitute chrome alum, which is then in the form of a paste. This paste is thereafter treated with sulphuric acid, and from the solution the chrome alum of importation crystallizes out. The alum as thus crystallized is not in a "crude state." Kuttruff, Pickhardt & Co. v. United States, 169 Fed. 283, 284, 94 C. C. A. 559.

CRUDE TURPENTINE

As personal property, see Personal Property.

"Crude turpentine" in boxes includes "scrape," resin, and gum. Melrose Mfg. Co. v. Kennedy, 51 South. 595, 596, 59 Fla. 812.

CRUEL

In a limited sense, anything is "cruel" which is calculated to give pain or distress, and, since punishment imports pain and suffering to the offender, it may be said that all punishments are in some sense cruel. State v. Tomassi, 69 Atl. 214, 217, 75 N. J. Law, 739.

A policeman, upon resistance to lawful arrest, or an attack putting him in danger of bodily harm, may use force against force, using no more than is necessary, and although in doing so he might severely assault and bruise the prisoner, and such assault might be "cruel" (that is, heartless and unfeeling), yet it would not be illegal; and hence the mere averment, in a petition based on an alleged breach of a policeman's official bond, that he had arrested plaintiff, "wrongfully, cruelly, and severely assaulted and beat and bruised him," was not sufficiently specific as to constitute a cause of action. Connelly v. American Bonding & Trust Co., 69 S. W. 960, 961, 113 Ky. 903.

The question as to whether one is criminally "cruel" to animals does not depend on whether he thought he was unnecessarily cruel but on whether he was so in fact and did unnecessarily cruel acts knowingly. Commonwealth v. Magoon, 51 N. E. 1082, 1083, 172 Mass. 214, 215.

CRUEL AND INHUMAN TREATMENT

See Cruelty.

CRUEL AND UNUSUAL MANNER

Under a statute defining manslaughter in the second degree to be a killing in a "cruel and unusual manner," etc., to constitute the offense "there must be some refinement or excess of cruelty sufficiently marked to approach barbarity and to make it especially shocking, and the unusual character of the manner displayed must stand out as sufficiently peculiar and unique to create surprise and astonishment and to be capable of discreditation as rare and strange." State v. Knoll, 83 Pac. 622, 623, 72 Kan. 237.

Sand. & H. Dig. Ark. § 1660, providing that the killing of a human being, without design to effect death, in the heat of passion, but in a "cruel and unusual" manner, unless under circumstances that would constitute excusable or justifiable homicide, shall be adjudged manslaughter, is not applicable to a killing with a pistol. In one sense, "all killing is cruel, but, in the sense of the statute, killing with such a common and effective instrument of death as a pistol cannot be regarded as cruel; still less is this manner unusual." Tanks v. State, 75 S. W. 851, 852, 71 Ark. 459.

CRUEL AND UNUSUAL PUNISHMENT

See Vasectomy.

The word "cruel," as used in the Constitution, providing that cruel and unusual punishments shall not be inflicted, was intended to prohibit torture, agonizing punishment, but never intended to abridge the selection of the lawmaking power of such kind of punishment as was deemed most effective in the suppression of crime. State v. Woodward, 69 S. E. 385, 389, 68 W. Va. 66, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1004; Same v. Wamsley, 69 S. E. 475, 68 W. Va. 103; Id., 69 S. E. 476, 68 W. Va. 104.

Rem. & Bal. Code, § 2287, authorizing the court to direct the performance of an operation for the prevention of procreation on a person adjudged guilty of statutory rape, is not invalid as authorizing "cruel punishment," in violation of Const. art. 1, § 14, where the operation known as vasectomy may be performed in a few minutes under an anæsthetic, without entailing any wound infection or confinement to bed. State v. Feilen, 126 Pac. 75, 77, 70 Wash. 65, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 418.

A statute providing that, when any person indicted for an offense is acquitted by reason of insanity, the jury shall so state in the verdict, and, if the discharge of the insane person is deemed dangerous to the community, he may be committed to prison, does not violate the constitutional provision prohibiting the infliction of "cruel punishment." Ex parte Brown, 81 Pac. 552, 554, 39 Wash. 160, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 540, 109 Am. St. Rep. 868, 4 Ann. Cas. 488.

It is not easy to define "cruel and unusual punishments" within the constitutional inhibition. In a limited sense anything is cruel which is calculated to give pain or distress, and, since punishment imports pain and suffering to the convict, it may be said that all punishments are in some sense cruel. But of course the Constitution does not mean that crime for this reason is to go unpunished. On the contrary, it plainly contemplates that crime can only be effectually deterred by inflicting some sort of pain or suffering upon the convicted offender. Electrocution Act (P. L. 1906, p. 112) is not unconstitutional as prescribing "cruel and unusual punishments."

State v. Tomassi, 69 Atl. 214, 217, 75 N. J. Law, 739.

Death

A statute providing that every person under life sentence in a state prison, who with malice aforethought commits an assault on the person of another with a deadly weapon or instrument, or by means or force likely to produce great bodily injury, is punishable with death is not unconstitutional as inflicting "cruel and unusual punishment." Ex parte Finley, 81 Pac. 1041, 1042, 1043, 1 Cal. App. 198.

Pen. Code, § 246, providing that every person undergoing a life sentence in a state prison, who with malice aforethought commits an assault with a deadly weapon, or by any means or force likely to produce great bodily injury, is punishable with death, is not violative of Const. art. 1, § 6, prohibiting "cruel or unusual punishment," as the infliction of the death penalty by any methods ordinarily adopted by civilized people is neither a cruel nor unusual punishment, unless it be so disproportionate to the offense for which it is inflicted as to shock the moral sense of the people. People v. Oppenheimer, 106 Pac. 74, 77, 156 Cal. 733.

Disproportionate punishment

Assessing a penalty at 30 years' confinement in a penitentiary for burglary of a private residence at night is not cruel or excessive punishment, where the Legislature has provided that punishment for burglary at night shall not be less than 5 years. Handy v. State, 80 S. W. 526, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 406.

Under Mansf. Dig. § 1628 (Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, § 971), providing that every one stealing any cattle shall be guilty of a felony and imprisoned at hard labor not less than one or more than five years, a sentence for two years in the penitentiary at hard labor on conviction of the larceny of a calf was not the imposition of a cruel and unusual punishment. Clampitt v. United States, 89 S. W. 666, 668, 6 Ind. T. 92, 10 Ann. Cas. 1087.

Pen. Code, § 337a, making poolselling punishable by imprisonment in the county jail or state prison for not less than 30 days and not more than a year, is not in conflict with Const. art. 1, § 6, prohibiting cruel and unusual punishments; imprisonment in the county jail or state prison not being cruel or unusual, which relate only to punishments of a barbarous character and unknown to the common law, such as by burning at the stake, breaking on the wheel, and the like. Ex parte O'Shea, 105 Pac. 776, 779, 11 Cal. App. 568.

The sentence of one convicted of criminal libel to imprisonment in the penitentiary for five years, with hard labor, which is the maximum penalty prescribed by Code, § 815 (81 Stat. 1323, c. 854), for such an offense, is not in itself a cruel and unusual punishment in the sense of the constitutional prohibition against such punishments. It is not so much the extent as the nature of the punishment that makes it cruel and unusual. Raymond v. United States, 25 App. D. C. 555, 560.

A nine-year penitentiary sentence, on a conviction of manslaughter for recklessly shooting out of a car window and killing a girl alongside the track, was not a cruel and unusual punishment within the meaning of the Constitution. State v. Lance, 63 S. E. 198, 201, 149 N. C. 551.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 4496, imposing upon a railroad company a penalty of five per cent. per month on the value of a shipment during its negligent detention in transportation, does not amount to "cruel or unusual punishment" within the state and federal Constitutions. Texas Cent. R. Co. v. Hannay-Frerichs & Co. (Tex.) 130 S. W. 250, 253.

Acts 31st Leg. c. 50, § 1, in force March 17, 1909, provides that if any person by promise of marriage shall seduce an unmarried female under 25, and if, after prosecution is begun, the parties marry before the defendant pleads to the indictment, and the defendant, within two years after said marriage, without his wife's fault, such as would entitle him to a divorce, shall abandon her, he shall be guilty of a penitentiary offense. Held, that the act does not impose a "cruel or unusual punishment" within Const. art. 1, § 13. Thacker v. State, 136 S. W. 1095, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 294.

CRUEL AND UNUSUAL WEAPON

Under section 4362, Rev. St. 1898, providing that the involuntary killing of another by any weapon or by any means, neither cruel nor unusual, etc., a lighted kerosene lamp full of oil must be considered a "cruel and unusual weapon." Bliss v. State, 94 N. W. 325, 329, 117 Wis. 596.

CRUELLY

A dog is the subject of property, both in the absence of statute and under Revisal 1905, § 3299, making it a misdemeanor to willfully injure or cruelly kill any useful animal, and defining the word "animal" as including every living creature, and the word "cruelly" to include every act causing unjustifiable physical pain or death, so that accused was guilty of the offense of willfully killing a dog, where the dog, when killed, was in the street outside of his turkey yard, which was inclosed by an impassable fence and gate, and could have been driven away; the fact that the dog had been in the yard before, harassing the turkeys, and his bad habits being immaterial. State v. Smith, 72 S. E. 321, 324, 156 N. C. 628, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 910.

The words "cruelly, unreasonably, and maliciously" are relative terms. While it might not be cruel or unreasonable to whip an ox with an ox whip, or, even in some instances, to use such a whip in whipping a man, for a strong man in whipping a child of tender years to use such a whip might be regarded by a jury as "cruel, unreasonable, and malicious." To establish the offense of "cruelly, unreasonably, and maliciously" beating and ill treating a child, it is not necessary that any marks of physical injury should appear on the child's body, and, where the evidence showed that a father whipped his child for several hours with an ox whip, that she cried out from the pain, and that he said he intended to kill her, there was sufficient proof of the corpus delicti, although there were no marks of physical injury. Stone v. State, 57 S. E. 992, 1 Ga. App. 292.

CRUELTY

See Extreme Atrocity or Cruelty; Extreme Cruelty.

In a suit for divorce from bed and board, based on alleged cruel and inhuman treatment, the test is whether, under all the facts proved, plaintiff could, with safety to person and health, continue to live with defendant. It is not cruel and inhuman treatment, justifying a divorce for a husband residing with a second wife and his children by a former wife, to separate her from them, and to provide for himself and her elsewhere, if it be necessary for the protection of the children against the wife's abuse, or evil influences, or for the peace and happiness of all concerned. Maxwell v. Maxwell, 71 S. E. 571, 572, 69 W. Va. 414.

There is no exact standard of what constitutes "cruel and inhuman treatment," authorizing a limited divorce, it depending upon the temperament, breeding, and condition in life of the parties, which cannot be made to appear in a printed record, so that, in the absence of legal error, the courts will be reluctant to disturb the finding of facts of the trial justice. Tower v. Tower, 119 N. Y. Supp. 506, 507, 134 App. Div. 670.

"Cruel treatment," as a ground for divorce, under Civ. Code 1895, § 2427, is "the willful infliction of pain, bodily or mental, upon the complaining party, such as reasonably justifies an apprehension of danger to life, limb, or health. * * * The intention to wound is a necessary element of the cruel treatment for which a divorce is allowed." Brown v. Brown, 58 S. E. 825, 129 Ga. 246.

An allegation that a wife has hindered her husband from making large sums of money by refusing to join with him in the conveyance of real estate owned by him does not show cruel treatment within the meaning of the divorce law. Hofman v. Hofman, 82 N. E. 477, 40 Ind. App. 476.

"Cruelty" is frequently a term of relative meaning," and "where the wife has brought upon herself the ill treatment of which she complains by her own misconduct," or "if, by a gross violation of her duties as wife, she has provoked her husband to go further than he should have gone, the blame in a great measure rests with herself, and it would require a much stronger case to authorize a divorce than if her conduct had been blameless." May v. May (Ala.) 39 South. 879 (quoting and adopting David v. David, 27 Ala. 222, 224, 225).

Cruel treatment, within Civ. Code 1895, § 2427, making such treatment ground for divorce, is the willful infliction of pain, bodily or mental, upon the complaining party, such as reasonably justifies an apprehension of danger to life, limb, or health, and mere petulance, rudeness, and occasional sallies of passion do not constitute such treatment. Stoner v. Stoner, 67 S. E. 1030, 1031, 134 Ga. 368.

The crime of pederasty, whether restricted to sodomy, as commonly understood, or defined so as to include bestial habits and improper intimacy with the male sex, is cruel and inhuman treatment, within the meaning of the divorce statutes. Crutcher v. Crutcher, 38 South. 337, 86 Miss. 231.

"Indignities to the person" and "cruel and barbarous treatment" are two distinct causes of divorce, and in the legislation on the latter a distinction is made between the case where the wife, and the case where the husband, is the complaining party. In the former the language of the statute is, "when any husband shall have, by cruel and barbarous treatment, endangered his wife's life." Act March 13, 1815 (8 Smith's Laws, p. 286). In the latter the language is, "where the wife shall have, by cruel and barbarous treatment, rendered the condition of her husband intolerable or life burdensome." Act May 8, 1854 (P. L. 644); Act June 25, 1895 (P. L. 308). This distinction has been recognized by the decisions as substantial. The acts or conduct of a wife toward her husband that will entitle the latter to a divorce must be not only such as render his condition intolerable and life burdensome, but such as amount to cruel and barbarous treatment. Both of these statutory elements must concur. If by other means which do not constitute legal cruelty his condition is rendered intolerable, this clause of the statute does not apply. The decisions in which it has been held or said that the cruel and barbarous treatment which will entitle a wife to a divorce must endanger life do not apply to a libel filed by a husband. In a libel for divorce, in determining whether there was cruel and barbarous treatment within the meaning of the statute, the whole conduct of the wife toward her husband during the period of the alleged ill treatment should be considered. Fay v. Fay, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 328, 329.

"Cruelty," to justify a decree a mensa et thoro in favor of a wife, means such conduct by the husband as will justify the court in believing that if he is allowed to retain his power over his wife, and she is compelled to remain subject to him, her life or health will be endangered, or that he will render her life one of such extreme discomfort or wretchedness as to incapacitate her to discharge the duties of a wife. Taylor v. Taylor, 70 Atl. 323, 324, 73 N. J. Eq. 745 (citing Black v. Black, 30 N. J. Eq. 215).

Any act or conduct on the part of a spouse which tends to impair either the mind or the body is "cruelty," under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 1067, which provides that cruel and inhuman treatment is a ground for divorce. Zweig v. Zweig, 93 N. E. 234, 235, 46 Ind. App. 594.

Accusation of infidelity

Where a husband had repeatedly falsely charged that his wife was unchaste, and that he was not the father of their youngest child, which charges had so injured the wife's health as to imperil her life, they constituted such cruel and inhuman treatment as to entitle her to a divorce. Turner v. Turner, 97 N. W. 997, 122 Iowa, 113.

Continual charges to a wife of unchastity with a disavowal of paternity of the children, made continuously in the presence of others and in the presence of the children, would constitute "cruelty" within the meaning of the divorce laws. Morris v. Morris, 107 Pac. 186, 57 Wash. 465.

For one without justification to charge his wife with intercourse with other men is cruel and inhuman treatment within the divorce statute. Cooper v. Cooper (Ind.) 99 N. E. 782, 783.

Communication of disease

A separation from bed and board on the ground of cruel treatment is properly granted a wife who has become inoculated with gonorrhea and syphilis by her husband, who was treated for the diseases six months before the marriage, and consulted a physician relating thereto within three days of the marriage. Carbajal v. Fernandez, 58 South. 581, 130 La. 812.

Habits or conduct toward others

Where a husband brought another woman into his home, to whom he showed marked attention both in public and in private, and both stated to the wife that they loved each other, and the husband told her that he cared no more for her, which resulted in her becoming nervous and anæmic and ill in health, such conduct amounted to cruel and inhuman treatment, entitling her to a divorce. Craig v. Craig, 105 N. W. 446, 447, 129 Iowa, 192, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 669.

Though drunkenness, not habitual, is not ground for divorce from bed and board, under Code 1906, c. 64, § 6, allowing such a divorce where either party after marriage becomes an habitual drunkard, such drunkenness is no excuse for cruelty, and cruelty resulting from drunkenness is a cause for divorce. Maxwell v. Maxwell, 71 S. E. 571, 572, 69 W. Va. 414.

Under a statute entitling the wife to a divorce for the husband's behavior in such "cruel and inhuman manner" as to indicate a settled aversion to her, or destroy her peace and happiness, a showing that the husband had for more than six months been meeting the correspondent, made her gifts, and when charged with adultery had practically admitted his guilt, and had used harsh and cruel epithets to his wife and made efforts to poison the minds of his children against her, and had declared that he would like to see her in poverty, and that he had a settled aversion toward her, constituted such "cruel and inhuman treatment" as to entitle the wife to a divorce. Zumbiel v. Zumbiel, 69 S. W. 708, 710, 113 Ky. 839, 841.

Mental distress

Personal violence to a wife, coupled with threats to do her personal injury, the effects of which are to make her nervous and constantly afraid, constitute cruelty justifying a divorce. Utley v. Utley, 118 N. W. 932, 155 Mich. 258.

The ordinary meaning of "cruelty," in actions for divorce, is that the act endangers or threatens the life, limb, or health of the aggrieved party. To this, in our courts, is added any outrage upon the feelings inflicting mental pain or anguish. Plaintiff's complaint for divorce alleged that his wife had stated to numerous citizens of the community that he was unchaste, all of which she knew to be false; that she endeavored to destroy his business; that she was petulant and irritable, frequently asserting that she cared nothing for him, for his home, or business; that she refused to take any interest in the home or to prepare the daily meals for himself and his hands; and that she read frivolous literature, to the neglect of her household duties, and was cold, abusive, and indifferent to plaintiff's happiness, by reason of which she kept complainant in continual distress and trouble, destroying his peace of mind and breaking up his home. Held, to charge "cruel and inhuman treatment" authorizing a divorce as provided by Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 1044. Massey v. Massey, 80 N. E. 977, 978, 81 N. E. 732, 40 Ind. App. 407.

In divorce actions "cruelty," "extreme cruelty," "cruel and inhuman treatment," and the like may be established by evidence of any line of misconduct persisted in by the offending party to such an extent as to cause injury to the life, limb, or health of the other, or to threaten or to create a danger of such injury, and it is not necessary that such injury, present or threatened, should be the direct result of such misconduct, but it is sufficient if it is produced by grief, worry, or mental anguish occasioned by such misconduct. Mathewson v. Mathewson, 69 Atl. 646, 648, 81 Vt. 173, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 300.

"What merely wounds the mental feelings is in few cases to be admitted, where they are not accompanied by bodily injury, either actual or menaced. Mere austerity of temper, petulance of manners, rudeness of language, a want of civil attention and accommodation, even occasional sallies of passion (if they do not threaten bodily harm), do not amount to legal cruelty." Levin v. Levin, 46 S. E. 945, 946, 68 S. C. 123.

Pederasty

The crime of "pederasty," whether restricted to sodomy, as commonly understood, or defined so as to include bestial habits and improper intimacy with the male sex, is "cruel and inhuman treatment," within the meaning of the divorce statutes. Crutcher v. Crutcher, 38 South. 337, 86 Miss. 231.

Physical violence

"Cruelty," in the statute authorizing a divorce on the ground of cruelty, means physical acts of violence, bodily harm endangering life or limb, and such acts as raise a reasonable apprehension of bodily harm and show a state of personal danger incompatible with the married state; and bad temper, petulance of manner, rude language, want of civil attentions, or angry or abusive words are not sufficient. Trenchard v. Trenchard, 92 N. E. 243, 245 Ill. 313.

"'Cruelty,' in the sense of the statutes on this subject, is such conduct in one of the married parties as renders his continuance of cohabitation either so dangerous to the other party in fact, or attended with such reasonable apprehension in the mind of the other, to the physical distress or discomfort of the other, as to demand his separation on the ground of the real physical safety of the other or of mental or physical capacity of the other to discharge well the duties of husband or wife." Crutcher v. Crutcher, 38 South. 337, 86 Miss. 231 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Bish. Mar. & Div. [4th Ed.] 716).

"Cruelty," within the divorce law, is any conduct of a husband which furnishes reasonable apprehension that the continuance of the cohabitation would be attended with bodily harm to the wife, though it does not necessarily require actual violence. Evidence that a husband ran the wife out of the house and threatened to kill her shows such cruelty as to warrant a decree in her favor. Carr v. Carr, 55 South. 96, 97, 171

Ala. 600 (quoting with approval Smedley v. Smedley, 30 Ala. 715).

Cruel and inhuman treatment as a ground for absolute divorce consists of actual or threatened physical violence endangering the personal health or safety, or creating a reasonable apprehension therefor, or such other equivalent and serious misconduct which is so plainly subversive of the relationship of husband and wife as to make it impossible to discharge the duties of married life. Williams v. Williams, 112 N. W. 528, 530, 101 Minn. 400.

It is not necessary, to obtain a divorce for "cruel and inhuman treatment," for the wife to show physical assaults; but it is sufficient if the husband's general ill treatment has been such as to endanger her health and life. Where a wife was comparatively a well woman when she was married, and within a few weeks thereafter her husband became abusive, insulting, profane, and vulgar, showed a lack of affection, and failed to furnish her with the necessities of life, by which her health and spirits were broken, she was entitled to a divorce for cruelty. Rader v. Rader, 113 N. W. 817, 136 Iowa, 223.

While it is not necessary, to establish "cruel and inhuman treatment" in a suit for separation and support, to prove actual physical violence inflicted by the husband on the wife, but it is sufficient to prove a course of ill treatment by the husband, by words of abuse or otherwise, having a natural effect of keeping her in a state of mental agony, viz., acts which indicate a studied and persistent attempt by the husband to render her life intolerable, mere incompatibility of temperament, or capricious or arbitrary conduct, is insufficient. Kinsey v. Kinsey, 124 N. Y. Supp. 30, 31.

Personal violence is not required, in order to constitute such cruel and inhuman treatment as will authorize a divorce. Pierce v. Pierce, 38 South. 46.

Such conduct and acts by a husband toward his wife as produce reasonable apprehension in her of personal violence, or produce mental anguish, distress, and sorrow, and render living together miserable, impairing, or likely to impair, the wife's health or mind, is "cruel and inhuman treatment" authorizing a divorce, though there be no personal violence. Goff v. Goff, 53 S. E. 769, 772, 60 W. Va. 9, 9 Ann. Cas. 1083.

Refusal of sexual intercourse

The habitual refusal of a wife to accede to her husband's request for sexual intercourse is not "cruel treatment" of such a nature as to render their living together insupportable, within the meaning of the divorce statute, where the husband is old, his virility diminished, and amorous desires feeble. Varner v. Varner, 80 S. W. 386, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 381.

Threats

Threats evidently intended to be executed, and so understood by the injured party to the marriage contract, inducing in the mind of the latter a reasonable apprehension of danger to life or health, rendering it extremely difficult to discharge the duties of the domestic relation, constitute such "cruel and inhuman treatment" as to justify a decree of divorce in a suit instituted for that purpose. Benfield v. Benfield, 74 Pac. 495, 44 Or. 94.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

- Administration of drug

Revisal 1905, § 3299, relating to cruelty to animals, enumerates as subjects protected from cruelty any useful beast, fowl, or animal, and provides that the words "torture," "torment," or "cruelty" shall include every act, omission, or neglect whereby unjustifiable physical pain, suffering, or death is permitted. Held, that poisoning chickens is within the purview of the statute. State v. Bossee, 59 S. E. 879, 145 N. C. 579.

Beating

Penal Code 1895, § 105, defines the word "cruelty" as "every willful act, omission, or neglect, whereby unjustifiable physical pain, suffering, or death is caused or permitted," and hence the infliction of unjustifiable pain upon a cow is a violation of section 703, defining an offense, the gist of which is cruelty to a domestic animal. James v. State, 57 S. E. 959, 1 Ga. App. 779.

CRUSH

CRUSHED STONE

"Crushed stone" is not a term of exact meaning, but stone broken by machinery may be of different sizes after being crushed, and yet the entire product will be properly so denominated. Viernow v. City of Carthage, 123 S. W. 67, 69, 139 Mo. App. 276.

CRUSHING

"Crushing," as defined by the Standard Dictionary, consists of breaking into bits by pressure; the process being simply a reduction in size. So called "granito" or "terrazzo," produced by crushing the waste of marble quarries and sifting or sorting it into various sizes, is subject to classification as an unenumerated manufactured article under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 8, 30 Stat. 205. United States v. Graser-Rothe, 164 Fed. 205, 206.

CRYSTALLINE

"Crystalline" is thus defined by the Century Dictionary: "Consisting of crystal, relating or pertaining to crystals or crystallization, formed by crystallization; of the nature of a crystal, especially as regards its internal structure, cleavage, etc., opposed to amorphous." A patent covering "as a new product calcium carbide existing as masses of aggregated crystals" is valid, but is limited to one form of crystalline carbide "existing in masses of aggregated crystals," and does not include other forms which had been previously produced. Union Carbide Co. v. American Carbide Co., 172 Fed. 120, 125.

CRYSTALLINE CALCIUM CARBIDE

On a claim for patent, "as a new product, crystalline calcium carbide, having a bluish iridescence," the claimant afterwards inserted the words "existing as masses of aggregate crystals," this was held, on a motion for preliminary injunction, to cover calcium carbide existing as a mass of crystal grains, devoid of their characteristic forms and closely packed together, termed a "crystalline aggregate" if not "crystalline calcium carbide" in any form, and an injunction granted. Union Carbide Co. v. American Carbolite Co., 188 Fed. 334, 335.

CUBAN INVOICE

A provision in a charter party for the carriage of a cargo of timber from a Cuban port to New York, fixing the freight per thousand feet, "Cuban invoice," means the same as "Cuban invoice measure"; the term having a known meaning in the trade, as relating to a peculiar system of measurement. Arenburg v. Grupe, 135 Fed. 233, 239.

CUL-DE-SAC

See, Also, Public Alley.

A "cul-de-sac" may be a highway, and it is not essential that a highway be open at both ends so as to form a thoroughfare, but it may be closed at one end by private land or buildings, and uninterrupted travel on a highway for over 50 years under a claim of right is sufficient to establish a highway by prescription, though it is not open at both ends. State v. Rixie, 97 Pac. 804, 805, 50 Wash. 676.

A "cul-de-sac" may be a public road. A road may go to a park, or some public institution, or through a neighborhood, without being open except at one end, and it is not essential that a highway should be open at both ends in order for it to be a public road. Penick v. Morgan, 62 S. E. 300, 303, 131 Ga. 385 (quoting Elliott, Roads & St. [2d Ed.] § 2).

Where an owner of land divided it into two equal parts by an open strip of land commencing at a street and running to the rear of the lot, where it did not connect with any other street, there was a "cul-de-sac." While it is not a legal impossibility for such a cul-de-sac, although not a thoroughfare, to be a public highway, a verdict that it is a public highway should be supported by very clear and satisfactory evidence, and a verdict that it is not a public highway should not be disturbed on appeal, unless the evidence is almost overwhelmingly the other way. Gilfillan v. Shattuck, 75 Pac. 646, 648, 142 Cal. 27.

CULPABLE

CULPABLE NEGLECT

"Culpable neglect," as used in Rev. St. 1883, c. 87, § 19, providing that relief in equity will depend upon the proposition that a creditor is not chargeable with "culpable neglect" in not seasonably prosecuting his claim, is less than gross carelessness, but more than the failure to use ordinary care; it is a culpable want of watchfulness and diligence, an unreasonable inattention and inactivity of creditors who slumber on their rights. Holway v. Ames, 60 Atl. 897, 898, 100 Me. 208.

CULPABLE NEGLIGENCE

An instruction that "culpable negligence" is the want of that usual and ordinary care and caution in the performance of an act usually and ordinarily exercised by a person under similar circumstances and conditions held correct. Kent v. State, 126 Pac. 1040, 1043, 8 Okl. Cr. 188.

"'Culpable negligence' is the omission to do something which a reasonable, prudent, and honest man would do, or the doing of something which such a man would not do, under the circumstances surrounding the particular case." Noonan v. Luther, 104 N. Y. Supp. 684, 685, 119 App. Div. 701 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1780).

The phrase "culpable negligence," as used in Rev. St. c. 89, § 21, authorizing the Supreme Court to allow a bill in equity to be filed by a creditor of the decedent's estate after the statutory time for filing claims, means censurable, blameworthy neglect, the neglect which exists when the loss can be fairly ascribed to plaintiff's own carelessness, improvidence, or folly. Beale v. Swasey, 75 Atl. 134, 106 Me. 35, 20 Ann. Cas. 396.

Under a fidelity bond to secure faithful performance of his duty by a clerk in a railroad freight office, which exempted liability for any loss by mistake, error of judgment on the part of any employé, or by robbery, unless by or with his connivance or culpable negligence, defining such negligence as the failure to exercise that degree of care and caution which men of ordinary prudence and intelligence usually exercise in regard to their own affairs of the same character, the clerk's delivery of goods consigned to shipper's order, with draft against the purchaser attached to bill of lading, made to the purchaser without presentation of the original bill of lading properly indorsed, in violation of the carrier's rule, was "culpable negligence," within the meaning of the bond. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 148 S. W. 671, 676, 125 Tenn. 658.

Under Civ. Code Cal. § 2629, providing that "an insurer is not liable for a loss caused by the willful act of the insured, but he is not exonerated by the negligence of the insured or of his agents or others," expressly made a part of a marine policy on cargo, there can be no recovery for loss or damage resulting directly from the act of the master in designedly undertaking to force the vessel through floating ice on a voyage to Alaska, with knowledge of the dangers to be encountered and with ample time to have avoided them, in order to arrive more quickly at his destination and secure a better market for his cargo. Such conduct is not mere negligence but is a willful omission to perform his legal duty and an intentional commission of a wrongful act. The court quotes from the opinion of Chief Justice Shaw in Chandler v. Worcester Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 3 Cush. (57 Mass.) 328, which was an action on a fire policy: "By an intent to burn the building we understand a purpose manifested and followed by some act done, tending to carry that purpose into effect, but not including a mere 'nonfeasance.' Suppose the assured, in his own house, sees the burning coals in the fireplace roll down onto the wooden floor and does not brush them away. This would be mere nonfeasance. It would not prove an intent to burn the building; but it would show a 'culpable recklessness' and indifference to the rights of others. * * * To what extent such negligence must go, in order to amount to 'gross misconduct,' it is difficult, by any definitive or abstract rule of law, independently of circumstances, to designate. The doctrine of the civil law that 'crassa negligentia' was of itself proof of fraud, or equivalent to fraudulent purpose or design, was no doubt founded in the consideration that although such negligence consists in doing nothing, and is therefore a nonfeasance, yet the doing of nothing, when the slightest care or attention would prevent a great injury, manifests a willingness, differing little in character from a fraudulent and criminal purpose, to commit such injury." Standard Marine Ins. Co. v. Nome Beach Lighterage & Transp. Co., 133 Fed. 636, 648, 67 C. C. A. 602, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1095.

Intent implied

"Culpable negligence" does not necessarily result from an "intentional" act. If the killing is caused by culpable negligence, then it is not necessarily "intentional." Hence a requested instruction that culpable negligence is not merely an omission to use ordinary caution and care, but must be the result of intentional act, or acts which are done without the exercise of ordinary care or caution, was erroneous, because requiring it to be the result of "intentional" acts. Kent v. State, 43 South. 773, 774, 53 Fla. 51 (citing State v. Lochwood, 24 S. W. 1015, 119 Mo. 463).

CULTIVATE—CULTIVATION

See Suitable for Cultivation; Susceptible of Cultivation; Usually Cultivated and Improved.

A "pasture" field is not "ground under cultivation," within Rev. Code, c. 48, § 1, providing that "every planter shall make a sufficient fence about his cleared ground under cultivation at least five feet high," etc. State v. Perry, 64 N. C. 305, 306.

Code Civ. Proc. § 370, provides that for the purpose of constituting adverse possession by one claiming title founded upon a written instrument, etc., land is deemed to have been possessed, where it has been usually cultivated or improved. Defendants and their predecessors had openly and notoriously, for a sufficient length of time to create the presumption of a grant, cut and removed for purposes of husbandry the hay which grew on salt meadow land; that being the only purpose for which the land could be used. Held, that as to "cultivate" meant to improve the product of the earth by manual industry, and "improved" land generally meant such as had been reclaimed and was used for husbandry, whether for tillage, meadow, or pasture, the yearly cutting and removal of the grass was such an act of ownership as to constitute a technical adverse possession within the statute. Shinnecock Hills & Peconic Bay Realty Co. v. Aldrich, 116 N. Y. Supp. 582, 587, 132 App. Div. 118.

A state of cultivation being the converse of a state of nature, land which one, before marrying, permitted to revert to its natural condition, was not in a state of "cultivation" during the marriage, so as to entitle his widow to dower therein, under Pub. St. 1901, c. 195, § 4, even if so permitting it to revert is forestry, though when, each year, he removed mature trees, he did it so as not to damage small ones. Snow v. Snow, 75 Atl. 881, 75 N. H. 433.

Defendant purchased an acre tract of salt meadow in January, 1887, but by his deed acquired only an undivided one-fifth of the land. After he acquired his deed, he cut the salt grass from the land, which was the only use to which it was adapted, until February 15, 1907, when he conveyed the land to plaintiff. Held, that the land had been usually "cultivated" so as to give defendant title by adverse possession. Koch v. Ellwood, 123 N. Y. Supp. 502, 503, 138 App. Div. 584.

The turpentine industry does not involve a "cultivation" of the trees, so as to make the sap fructus industriales, which may as properly be taken by an entryman as grasses or fruits; "cultivation," as an agricultural term, not being applicable to the process of extracting turpentine sap. United States v. Waters-Pierce Oil Co., 196 Fed. 767, 769, 116 C. C. A. 391.

CULTIVATED INCLOSURE

The term "cultivated inclosure" in the clause of the mining lease made by the Osage Nation on March 16, 1896, to Foster, which prohibits boring wells on the Osage Indian reservation for oil and gas on such inclosures, includes those made after as well as those which were in existence at the date of the lease. An inclosure which contains a cultivated tract and an uncultivated tract is a cultivated inclosure, and the lessee may not prospect or bore wells on the former, but he may do so on the latter if his operations do not unnecessarily interfere with the use of the cultivated tract for agricultural purposes. Barnsdall Oil Co. v. Leahy, 195 Fed. 731, 735, 115 C. C. A. 521.

CULTIVATED LANDS

A mill lot, upon which a mill is erected, is "cultivated and improved land," within Rev. St. c. 18, § 18, authorizing the selectmen of a town to lay out private ways for one or more of its inhabitants leading from land under improvement to a town or highway. Lyon v. Hamor, 73 Me. 56, 57.

CULVERT

The words "bridge" and "culvert" as used in the statute giving an action for damages caused by reason of the insufficiency of "any bridge or culvert" are not synonymous. Cleveland v. Town of Washington, 65 Atl. 584, 585, 79 Vt. 498.

A tile drain consisting of an opening or a channel through which water flows is a "sluice," and "culvert" includes "sluice." Herrick v. Town of Holland, 77 Atl. 6, 11, 83 Vt. 502.

CUMBERSOME

CUMBERSOME PACKAGE

A cage 2½ feet high and 2 feet square is a "cumbersome package," within a rule of a street car company prohibiting passengers from carrying cumbersome packages into the cars. Ray v. United Traction Co., 89 N. Y. Supp. 49, 51, 96 App. Div. 48.

CUMULATIVE

"Where one thing is cumulative of another, whether it be remedy, penalty, or power, we are speaking commonly of two things which are at least consistent, and might, without incongruity, be applied at the same time." An action for mandamus under Act March 2, 1889, c. 382, § 10, amendatory of the Interstate Commerce Act, which authorizes an action by a shipper against an interstate carrier to compel compliance with the act, and provides that "the remedy here given by mandamus shall be cumulative," does not preclude relator from proceeding with regard to the same matter by petition to the Interstate Commerce Commission; the remedies being "cumulative." Merchants' Coal Co. v. Fairmont Coal Co., 160 Fed. 769, 779, 88 C. C. A. 23.

The provisions of the amendment to Rev. St. Ohio, § 3256, and of section 3300, now sections 8806, 8807, and 8809, Gen. Code, relating to stock purchases and holdings, are clearly cumulative and meet the requirements of section 3269, now section 8733, Gen. Code, reciting that a "special provision shall govern unless it clearly appear that the provisions are cumulative"—the word "clearly" meaning in a clear manner, without obscurity, without entanglement or confusion, without uncertainty; and "cumulative" meaning "additional," that which is superadded to another thing of the same character and not substituted for it. Mannington v. Hocking Valley Ry. Co., 183 Fed. 133, 153.

The term "cumulative," as used in Tex. Acts 1899, p. 257, c. 146, § 14, providing that the provisions of the act shall be held to be "cumulative" of all laws now in force in this state, indicates a harmonious coexistence and cooperation rather than a consolidation of two things into one. An amendment of a statute is not cumulative because it repeals and takes the place of the part of the law that it amends, thereby becoming a part of the law amended, and such act of 1899 does not become a part of the anti-trust act of 1895 (Acts 1895, p. 112, c. 83), so as to incorporate into the former the provision of section 12 of the latter, exempting certain organizations from the operation of the latter act. State v. Laredo Ice Co., 73 S. W. 951, 952, 96 Tex. 461.

CUMULATIVE EVIDENCE

"Cumulative evidence" is additional evidence of the same kind to the same point. Clark v. Gallagher, 52 Atl. 539, 541, 74 Vt. 331.

"Cumulative evidence" is additional evidence offered to establish a fact to which witnesses have already testified, and it does not necessarily include all evidence which tends to establish the same ultimate or principally controverted fact. Saylors v. State, 70 S. E. 975, 976, 9 Ga. App. 227.

"Cumulative evidence" is "additional evidence of the same kind to the same point." Evidence is not rendered noncumulative, so as to afford a basis for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, merely because it is to be furnished by a stranger to the litigation on a matter covered only by the testimony of the parties. Horner v. Schinstock, 96 Pac. 143, 144, 77 Kan. 663 (quoting and adopting definition in 12 Cyc. p. 922).

Evidence is cumulative so as not to be ground for new trial which only multiplies witnesses as to one or more facts, or adds other particulars of the same general character. Garza v. State (Tex.) 145 S. W. 590, 591.

Testimony of a surgeon that, in the progress of an operation involving the opening of the abdomen of a patient, he found an intestine ruptured is not merely "cumulative," in that, upon an external examination, he concluded that such a rupture probably existed. To be cumulative, new evidence must not only prove a conclusion to a fact already testified to, but it must tend to prove it in the same way. It must be evidence of the same kind to the same point. Bousman v. Stafford, 81 Pac. 184, 185, 71 Kan. 648.

Evidence of an admission of the same kind, and to the same point, as that given in evidence on the trial, though made to another person, at a different time and place, and under different circumstances, is cumulative, and is not ground for a new trial. Goshorn v. Wheeling Mold & Foundry Co., 64 S. E. 22, 27, 65 W. Va. 250.

"Evidence is 'cumulative' if it relates to the same subordinate or specific fact to which proof was before adduced, but not when it tends to prove a new fact respecting the general question or point in issue." "From some of the cases on this subject it may, perhaps, be inferred that courts have supposed all additional evidence to be cumulative merely which conduced to establish the same ground of claim or defense before relied upon, and that none would be available for a new trial unless it disclosed or established some new ground. But this does not seem to us to be the true rule, as recognized in the best considered cases. There are often various distinct and independent facts going to establish the same ground on the same issue. Evidence is cumulative which merely multiplies witnesses to any one or more of these facts before investigation, or only adds other circumstances of the same general character. But that evidence which brings to light some new and independent truth of a different character, although it tend to prove the same proposition or ground of claim before insisted on, is not cumulative, within the true meaning of the rule on this subject. When petitioners, claiming as descendants of a decedent, put in evidence a certified copy of a record of a marriage in a foreign country purporting to be the marriage of decedent, but judgment went against them, newly discovered evidence consisting of a photograph of the original marriage record, containing the signatures of the contracting parties, one of which signatures was that of decedent, was not cumulative within the rule relating to new trials, though it tended to prove the ultimate fact sought to be proved. In re McClellan's Estate, 111 N. W. 540, 542, 21 S. D. 209.

"Cumulative evidence" is additional evidence of the same kind to the same point, and, where evidence offered on motion for new trial is merely additional upon the same point upon which evidence was given at the trial, it will be rejected as cumulative; but where it is respecting a new and distinct fact, though it tends to establish the same general result, sought to be established by evidence at the trial, it is not cumulative, and will be received if otherwise competent. Kroger v. Ryan, 94 N. E. 428, 431, 83 Ohio St. 299.

"Cumulative evidence" is additional evidence of the same kind to the same point. Where the material question on trial in a criminal case was as to the identity of defendant, and the evidence relied on to obtain a new trial only went to the question of identity, it was cumulative. May v. State, 60 Atl. 1, 77 Vt. 330.

Testimony which is corroborative only of that given by a party to the suit, and does not corroborate the testimony of any disinterested witness, is "cumulative evidence," within the rule that a new trial will not be granted for newly discovered evidence which is merely cumulative of that introduced at the former trial. O'Toole v. Faulkner, 75 Pac. 975, 977, 34 Wash. 371.

Cumulative evidence, within the rule excluding it when offered as newly discovered evidence as ground for new trial, is additional evidence in support of the same point, which is of the same character with evidence already produced, and if it is of a different kind upon the same issues, or of the same kind upon a different issue, it is not cumulative. State v. De Marias, 130 N. W. 782, 784, 27 S. D. 303, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 154.

"Cumulative evidence" is evidence tending to prove the same point to which other evidence has been offered. It is additional or corroborative evidence to the same point; that which goes to prove that which has already been established by other evidence. Evidence cannot be regarded as cumulative merely because it tends to establish the same ultimate fact or principle controverted, but to be such it must be further or additional evidence of the same kind to the same point. Torian v. Terrell, 93 S. W. 10, 12, 122 Ky. 745.

"Cumulative evidence" for which a new trial will not be granted is evidence of the same kind or character, to the same point, which is not the case in a suit depending on the true location of a government quarter section corner, there having on the trial been no direct evidence of the location of the corner, but the witnesses, surveyors, having treated it as a lost corner, and proceeded to re-establish it by secondary evidence, the courses and distances from other recognized original corners, and the newly discovered evidence being the government corner stone, discovered in place, direct evidence to which the courses and distances must yield. Tucker v. Wyoming Coal Min. Co., 104 Pac. 529, 530, 18 Wyo. 97.

"Cumulative evidence" is evidence of the same kind, to the same point. Thus, if a fact is attempted to be proved by the verbal admissions of a party, evidence of another verbal admission to the same effect is cumulative. Where a witness testified to making a payment to L. at a certain time and place, and L. testified that no such payment was made at any time or place, newly discovered evidence that the place did not exist at the time of payment is not "cumulative" within the rule as to new trials. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co. v. Loughmiller, 69 N. E. 264, 266, 33 Ind. App. 309 (citing 1 Greenl. Ev. § 2; Hines v. Driver, 100 Ind. 315, 327).

"Cumulative evidence," within the rule that courts will grant with great reluctance new trials on the ground of newly discovered evidence which is merely cumulative, is evidence of the same kind as that given to the same point on the trial; but evidence establishing the disputed fact by other circumstances than those shown on the trial is "corroborative evidence," and, when newly discovered, authorizes a new trial. Williams v. State, 54 South. 857, 858, 99 Miss. 274.

Where plaintiff called a witness to testify to statements made by defendant and rested his case, and defendant then testified giving a contradictory version of the conversation in which such statements were said to have been made, further evidence on the part of plaintiff to the same conversation was "cumulative." Yeaton v. Chapman, 65 Me. 126, 127.

CUMULATIVE LEGACY

Where a testator, after making several legacies, gave the residue of his estate to his heirs, and on the same day executed a codicil giving a certain sum to three persons, who were his heirs, "and no more," it was held that the three heirs were not excluded by the words "and no more" from sharing in the balance of the estate; but such words applied only to the amounts mentioned in the codicil. In re Sigel's Estate, 62 Atl. 175, 176, 213 Pa. 14, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 397, 110 Am. St. Rep. 515.

CUMULATIVE REMEDY

A cumulative remedy is one created by statute in addition to one which still remains in force, and when a statute gives a new remedy, and contains no negative, express or implied, of the old remedy, the new one provided is cumulative and the party may elect between the two. Bowles v. Neely, 115 Pac. 344, 346, 28 Okl. 556.

CUMULATIVE SENTENCE

A "cumulative" sentence is a sentence to begin in the future upon the expiration of a prior sentence. A court may lawfully impose a sentence to begin in the future upon the expiration of a prior sentence imposed by another and different tribunal of the same commonwealth. Rigor v. State, 61 Atl. 631, 633, 101 Md. 465, 4 Ann. Cas. 719.

Successive sentences—that is, one to commence on the expiration of another for distinct offenses—are not cumulative sentences. Harris v. Nixon, 27 App. D. C. 94, 97.

CUPOLA

A declaration by a servant for injuries alleged that defendant maintained "a one and two story building, * * * a one story building having a second story or cupola, or a portion of the same near the middle part which was connected to the first story" by a "stairway which was in fact a ladder" not having any handrail, by reason of which plaintiff fell and was injured. Held, that the terms "stairway" and "ladder" are not synonymous, a stairway pertaining to architecture and having various technical parts, consisting of risers, treads, nosings, fliers, and winders, and being stationary, while a ladder is in the nature of a tool consisting of a frame, usually portable, of wood, metal, or rope, used for ascent or descent, consisting only of two parts the sides and cross-steps or rounds, which form the steps, and a cupola is not a story of a building, but is the top of a structure, usually a cup-shaped spherical roof, though the term is also applied to any similar structure rising above the roof of a building, whatever its shape may be; and, while the declaration was indefinite as to the description of the building, an allegation that plaintiff was required to use such "stairway" in the course of his employment sufficiently alleged a violation of Pub. Laws 1909, No. 285, § 14, providing that stairways with substantial handrails shall be provided in manufacturing establishments, and, where necessary, steps shall be substantially covered with rubber for the better safety of persons employed in such establishments, the risk of which plaintiff did not assume, and was therefore not demurrable. Davis v. Buss Mach. Works, 135 N. W. 303, 304, 169 Mich. 498.

CURATIVE ACT

See, also, Healing Act.

A "curative act" is one intended to give effect to past acts or transactions which are ineffective because of neglect to comply with some requirement of law, and is intended to operate retroactively. Schamblin v. Means, 91 Pac. 1020, 1022, 6 Cal. App. 261 (citing Baird v. Monroe, 89 Pac. 352, 354, 150 Cal. 560).

A curative act is necessarily retrospective in character, and undertakes to cure errors or irregularities in legal or administrative proceedings, and to give effect to contracts for failure to comply with some technical requirement. McSurely v. McGrew, 118 N. W. 415, 419, 140 Iowa, 163, 132 Am. St. Rep. 248.

CURB

See On the Curb.

Sidewalks are generally elevated above the outer edge of the street, and the line of demarcation is designated by what is usually known as the "curb," which is only a level with the sidewalk. The distance from the top of the curb to the street surface varies, but is seldom less than from six to eight inches. City of Vincennes v. Spees, 74 N. E. 277, 280, 35 Ind. App. 389.

Tenement House Act, par. 17, defines "curb" as the level of the established curb line where the same exists, taken at the center of the street frontage. Board of Tenement House Supervision of New Jersey v. Schlechter, 83 Atl. 783, 784, 83 N. J. Law, 88.

Under a municipal ordinance making it the duty of one driving an automobile, on turning the corner of any street, to leave a space of at least six feet between the curb and the automobile, where, in repairing a building, debris was piled in the corner of the street, and a fence or barricade had been constructed on the outside, such fence became the "curb" within the meaning of the ordinance, the purpose of which was to keep vehicles in rounding corners out of the path usually taken by foot passengers; the word "curb" being used as the most convenient term to mark one of the boundaries of the path and not in a technical sense. Domke v. Gunning, 114 Pac. 486, 488, 62 Wash. 629.

"The common meaning of the word 'curb,' as applied to a street, is a stone or row of stones, or a similar construction of concrete, wood, or other material, along the margin of the roadway, as a limit to the roadway and a restraint upon and protection to the adjoining sidewalk space. The word could not be applied to such an impassable construction across a roadway which would prevent travel." Lyman v. Town of Cicero, 78 N. E. 830, 222 Ill. 379.

CURB LINE

The "curb line" of a street is the dividing line between the roadway and that portion reserved on each side of the roadway for the use of pedestrians. Wetmore v. City of Chicago, 69 N. E. 234, 206 Ill. 367.

An ordinance for a street improvement provided "that L. street, together with a" street intersections within the north and south lines of said L. street from the center line of S. avenue to the west curb line of

A. avenue, be improved by curbing, grading, and paving the same with a brick pavement and a concrete combined curb and gutter," etc.; the provision in regard to the curb and gutter being that a "granite concrete combined curb and gutter shall be constructed upon each side of all intersecting streets, and produced between said points from the street line to the curb line of said L. street." Held that, even though the use of the words "curb line" means the roadway face of the curb, the ordinance did not contemplate, and the improvement did not include, the construction of a curb on the west side of A. avenue. Chicago Consol. Traction Co. v. Village of Oak Park, 80 N. E. 42, 43, 225 Ill. 9.

CURBING

"Curbing" is a necessary part of the improvements contemplated by a statute authorizing cities to cause streets to be "constructed" and "paved" at the abutting owners' expense. City of Excelsior Springs v. Ettenson, 96 S. W. 701, 705, 120 Mo. App. 215 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5239).

Under Avondale City Charter, § 12, declaring that not more than one-third of the cost of street improvements should be assessed against abutting property owners, "not including sidewalks," an assessment against property owners for the entire cost of "guttering" was erroneous. While "curbing" may be so constructed as to make it a part of the sidewalk, "guttering" is a part of the street proper and not of the sidewalk. Harton v. Town of Avondale, 41 South. 934, 939, 147 Ala. 458 (citing Job v. People ex rel. Tetherington, 61 N. E. 1079, 193 Ill. 809; Allman v. Dist. Columbia, 3 App. D. C. 8, 17; Wilson v. Chilcott, 21 Pac. 901, 12 Colo. 600, 602, 603).

CURE

See Gall Cura.

The word "cure," relative to the obligation of a vessel to cure, means proper care of an injured seaman, and not a positive cure, which may be impossible, and the duty is to furnish means of cure and to use all reasonable efforts for that purpose. The Mars, 149 Fed. 729, 731, 79 C. C. A. 435.

Under the doctrine in admiralty that a seaman, who sustains injuries in the service of the ship, shall be cured at the expense of the ship, the term "cure" was probably employed originally in the sense of taking charge or care of the disabled seaman and not in that of positive healing. The Troy, 121 Fed. 901, 906.

"Improved," used with reference to an insane person, is not the equivalent of "cured." Only such patients of the state hospital for the insane as have been discharged as cured, or are not insane, are entitled to an order of restoration to the rights of citizenship. Johnson v. Schoch, 118 Pac. 696, 697, 85 Kan. 837.

CURED BY VERDICT

The term "cured by verdict," applied to defective pleading, signifies that a court will, after verdict, presume the particular thing appearing to be defectively or imperfectly stated, or omitted, in the pleading, was duly proved. Walters v. City of Ottawa, 88 N. E. 651, 653, 240 Ill. 259.

CURED MEAT

The tax imposed by section 16 of chapter 5106, p. 9, Laws of 1903, is upon the wholesale dealer in "fresh" meats only. Whether the same be either "packed or refrigerated," it must be, at the time that he sells it in the ordinary course of his business, in that state where it can properly be termed "fresh meat," as contradistinguished from cured or salted meats, in order to render him liable to the occupational tax imposed by said section. Meats technically known as "cured," from having been treated with salt, smoke, etc., keep in an edible condition indefinitely, even in the warmest latitudes, whereas the same meats, when untreated and fresh, though capable of being kept in their fresh and natural condition for long periods in a low temperature, either natural or artificial, quickly spoil, become putrid, and unfit for food when subjected to high or even mean or ordinary temperatures. It is upon the wholesale dealer, in the last-described commodity, that the said section 16 of chapter 5106, p. 9, Laws of 1903, imposes the license tax, and not upon the dealers in "cured" or salted meats. Florida Packing & Ice Co. v. Carney, 41 South. 190, 192, 51 Fla. 190 (citing Cross v. Seeberger, 30 Fed. 427).

CURRENCY

See Lawful Currency.

As coin or equivalent

"There is no principle on which the sensibilities of communities are so easily excited, as that which acts upon the 'currency'; none of which states are so jealous as that which is restrictive of the exercise of the sovereign powers." Briscoe v. Bank of Kentucky, 11 Pet. (36 U. S.) 257, 312, 9 L. Ed. 709.

"Currency" is broad enough to include gold and silver, as well as what is usually termed paper currency, so that an indictment charging theft of a person of $2 in money, lawful currency of America, and of the value of $2, was sustained by proof of the theft of $2 in silver. Britain v. State, 105 S. W. 817, 819, 820, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 169.

See Prices Current and Commercial Lists.

CURRENT ACCOUNT

Mutual current account, see Mutual Accounts.

CURRENT BREAKER

A "current breaker" is a device fixed against the inside of the roof or hood of a trolley car just overhead where the motor-man stands, and through which the electric current drawn from the wire on the outside passes. Its office is to prevent an excess of the current from flowing through the motors. An excess of current causes the device to open with a flash and a report, and while it is open no current can pass through. Masterson v. St. Louis Transit Co., 103 S. W. 48, 50, 204 Mo. 507.

CURRENT EXPENSES

The limit of 1.12 mills for current expenses fixed by Laws 1909, c. 245, § 5, does not apply to a road levy of one mill under Laws 1911, c. 248, § 33; the maintenance of a road, designated a "county road," under the latter act not being a part of the current expenses of the county, within the meaning of the previous limiting act. State ex rel. Faulconer v. Board of Com'rs of Cowley County, 119 Pac. 327, 330, 86 Kan. 201.

Sess. Laws 1903, p. 42, was passed immediately after a holding by the Supreme Court that a city which had reached the constitutional limit of indebtedness had no power to pay out funds for any purpose, and provided that, even after a city had reached the constitutional limit of indebtedness, it should still have power to manage and conduct its affairs on a cash basis, and pay its reasonable and necessary current expenses. Held, that an expenditure to install and operate a water system to belong to the city is not for current expenses, and not authorized by the statute. Helena Waterworks Co. v. City of Helena, 78 Pac. 220, 222, 31 Mont. 243.

The term "current and incidental expenses," as used in St. Paul Charter 1905, p. 37, subsec. 22, means the reasonable necessary expenses, not otherwise provided for, for carrying into effect the duties imposed by the charter; and advertising the city is not such an expense, but is payable out of the contingent fund for promoting the welfare of the city. Mitchell v. City of St. Paul, 130 N. W. 66, 67, 114 Minn. 141.

Of railroads

The "current expenses" of a railroad includes expense occasioned by repairs and purchase of materials for improvement of the road. Poland v. Lamolille Val. R. Co., 52 Vt. 144, 163.

CURRENT FISCAL YEAR

Ky. St. § 3219, relating to taxes by cities of the second class to defray expenses of schools for the "current fiscal year," refers to the fiscal year of the city beginning January 1st, as against the contention that the school board was a part of the common school system of the state, and that the "current fiscal year" was that of the state, which Constitution, § 169, fixes as commencing July 1st. Board of Education v. Nelson, 58 S. W. 700, 701, 109 Ky. 203.

CURRENT INFORMATION

"A copyrighted article published without authority is not 'current information' free for the use of all." American Press Ass'n v. Dally Story Pub. Co., 120 Fed. 766, 769, 57 O. C. A. 70, 66 L. R. A. 444.

CURRENT MARKET PRICE

A provision in a will that, if any residuary legatee desire to purchase any of the real or personal property, he may do so at its "current market price" at the time of testator's death as valued by the executors, etc., applies to real as well as personal property, for real estate has a current market price. In re Walbridge, 91 N. E. 590, 591, 198 N. Y. 234.

CURRENT MARKET VALUE

"Real estate has a 'current market value' the same as personal property, though it may be much more difficult of ascertainment," and a provision in a will that, if any residuary legatee desire to purchase any of the real or personal property, he may do so at its "current market price" at the time of testator's death, as valued by the executors, etc., applies to real as well as personal property. In re Walbridge, 91 N. E. 590, 591, 198 N. Y. 234.

CURRENT MONEY

See Lawful Currency.

The expression "current money of the United States" covers any kind of currency of the United States which is guarantied by the government and passes as money. Butler v. State, 81 S. W. 743, 744, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 287.

"The term 'current money of the United States' means that which, by the act of Congress, is made a legal tender, whether coin or currency; and this has been construed to include legal tender treasury notes of the United States, demanded notes of the United States, and coin money of the United States, but does not include national bank bills." Allegation in an indictment for larceny, describing the property stolen as "one $5 bill, current money of the United States, of the value of $5," is not proven by evidence that the prosecutor did not know whether the money stolen was a national bank note, a treasury note, or a silver certificate, but knew that it was a $5 bill, and was good American money, as "current money" means that which by act of Congress, whether coin or currency, is made legal tender. Summers v. State, 76 S. W. 762, 45 Tex. Cr. R. 423.

As lawful currency or money

"Current money" means money which passes from hand to hand and from person to person and circulates through the community and is synonymous with "lawful money." Current money is that which is generally used as a medium of exchange. State v. Quackenbush, 108 N. W. 953, 955, 98 Minn. 515.

Treasury notes

Where an indictment charges theft of "current money" of the United States of America, giving the denomination and value thereof, the allegation can be proven by theft of United States legal tender treasury notes, or of United States demand notes, or of United States gold or silver certificates, or of national bank bills of the United States. Gold and silver coins having always been treated as "money." Berry v. State, 80 S. W. 630, 631, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 420.

CURRENT MONTH'S ACCOUNT

In a guaranty to pay the "current month's account" of a certain firm on the 15th of the following month, if not paid by them before, when made in response to a request for a guaranty to pay the bills of one month upon the 15th of the succeeding month, if not already paid, the phrase "current month's account" meant the account that would accrue from month to month and not merely the account of the month then current. Celluloid Co. v. Haines, 57 N. E. 691, 692, 176 Mass. 415, 417.

CURRENT NEGOTIABLE PAPER

Negotiable notes, which have been placed in the hands of the maker by the payee, before maturity, to sell to a third person, cease to be "current negotiable paper," according to the law merchant, while in the hands of the maker, and are subject to garnishment at the suit of a judgment creditor of the payee. Hutcheson v. King, 83 S. W. 215, 216, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 151.

CURRENT YEAR

The statutory limitation on the power of the county board to contract for bridge building, to cost a sum not greater than the amount of money on hand in the county bridge fund derived from a levy of "previous years" and two-thirds of the levy of the "current year," gives no authority to the board to take into account the levy of the "current calendar year" prior to the making of such levy. Until it is made, there is no "levy of the current year." Ordinarily the terms "this year," "current year," or "the previous year" mean in each instance the calendar year in which the event under discussion took place and the one before it, but the Legislature did not have this meaning in putting the words into this statute. Clark v. Lancaster County, 96 N. W. 593, 599, 69 Neb. 717.

The words "current year" in Code Prac. art. 645, exempting from seizure upon execution, apart from the land, corn, provisions, and other supplies necessary for running the plantation to which they are attached for the current year, means from harvest to harvest, and not a calendar year. Hinton v. Roane, 50 South. 798, 124 La. 927, 134 Am. St. Rep. 526.

As used in Rev. St. § 2745, providing that a police jury, before fixing the taxes for the "current year," shall estimate expenditures and publish same, the words "current year" relate to the year in which the taxes are levied and assessed, and their use does not militate against the theory that the budget of expenditures may be adopted before the beginning of such year. Murphy v. Police Jury, St. Mary Parish, 42 South. 979, 982, 118 La. 401.

The expression "current year," in Rev. St. 1906, § 2808, authorizing the county auditor on discovery of any omitted real estate to add to the taxes of a "current year" the taxes which have been omitted for the preceding years, means the "current tax year," and not the "current calendar year." Pittsburg, O., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. County Treasurer of Clark County, 85 N. E. 49, 50, 78 Ohio St. 227.

CURRENT YEARLY PAY

Congress, in using the words "current yearly pay" as the basis of the computation of the longevity pay provided for by the act of May 13, 1908, must be deemed to have adopted its construction of those words as used in Rev. St. § 1262, giving a 10 per cent. longevity increase on "current yearly pay," which it declared by the act of June 30, 1882, 22 Stat. 118, c. 254, should be computed on the yearly pay of the grade. Plummer v. United States, 32 Sup. Ct. 467, 469, 224 U. S. 137, 56 L. Ed. 697.

"Current yearly pay," as used in Rev. St. § 1262, providing that there shall be paid to the officers below the rank of brigadier general "10 per centum of their 'current yearly pay' for each term of five years of service," and "pay proper," as used in the acts of Congress May 26, 1900, and March 2, 1901, mean the regular, ordinary pay which an officer may be entitled to under the facts in his case, and if, by virtue of length of service, he is entitled to receive the compensation provided for in section 1262, that compensation is his "pay" or his "pay proper," as distinguished from other probable compensation by any allowances or commutations, or otherwise. The "pay proper," on which the percentage of increased pay to an army officer serving in the Philippine Islands is to be computed, under Acts May 26, 1900, c. 586, 31 Stat. 211, and March 2, 1901, c. 803, 31 Stat. 903, includes the longevity pay to which he is entitled, under Rev. St. § 1262, as well as the minimum pay prescribed by section 1261 for his grade. United States v. Mills, 25 Sup. Ct. 434, 436, 197 U. S. 223, 49 L. Ed. 732.

CURTESY

In addition to curtesy, see In Addition to. See, also, Husband's Dower.

To curtesy there were four requisites: (1) Marriage; (2) seisin of wife during coverture; (3) birth of a child; (4) death of the wife. Decedent left, him surviving, his wife and four children. The latter conveyed to the widow a life estate in the real estate belonging to their deceased father. One of such children died prior to the widow, leaving a husband and children. On the widow's death the husband was entitled to an estate by the curtesy in two-thirds of the interest of the property in which his wife had seisin at the time of the death of her father. Valentine v. Hutchinson, 88 N. Y. Supp. 862, 863, 43 Misc. Rep. 314.

Curtsey is the estate to which by common law a man is entitled on the death of his wife in the lands or tenements of which she was seised in possession in fee simple or in tail during their coverture, provided they had lawful issue born alive which might have been capable of inheriting the estate, and it attaches to the wife's equitable as well as her legal estates of inheritance. Armstrong v. Wood, 195 Fed. 137, 141.

All the requisites of curtesy existed where there was a valid marriage, children born alive and the wife died seised of real property. In re Starbuck's Estate, 116 N. Y. Supp. 1030, 1031, 63 Misc. Rep. 156.

By Act May 2, 1890, c. 182, § 31, 26 Stat. 94, sections 566, 567, Mansf. Dig., was extended over Indian Territory with a proviso excepting Indians and their estates. By act June 7, 1897, c. 3, § 1, 30 Stat. 83, such laws were made to apply to all persons in the territory "irrespective of race" and by the Curtis Act June 28, 1898, c. 517, § 26, 30 Stat. 504, it was provided that the laws of the Indian tribes should no longer be enforced. Held that, by virtue of such provisions, a non-citizen husband of a Creek allottee who died after the birth of a child of the marriage was entitled by the curtesy to a life estate in her allotted lands. Armstrong v. Wood, 195 Fed. 137, 141.

Curtsey is an estate created by law in the real property of the wife, subject to being divested by her will or deed and is not derived from the wife's estate or by inheritance from her; Laws 1896, p. 619, c. 547, § 281, the general rule of descent, not including curtesy, and section 280 providing that that article does not affect a limitation of an estate by curtesy. In re Starbuck's Estate, 116 N. Y. Supp. 1030, 1032, 63 Misc. Rep. 156.

Minor's Institutes, vol. 2, p. 103, thus defines "curtesy": When a man takes a wife seised during the coverture of an estate of inheritance, legal or equitable, such as that the issue of the marriage may by possibility inherit it as heir to the wife, has issue born alive, and the wife dies, the husband surviving has an estate in the land for his life, which is called an estate by the curtesy, and the requisites of an estate by the curtesy are marriage, seisin of the wife, birth of issue alive, and death of the wife. Dozier v. Tolson, 79 S. W. 420, 421, 180 Mo. 546, 103 Am. St. Rep. 536.

A "tenancy by curtesy" arises where a man marries a woman seised of an estate of inheritance (that is, of land and tenements in fee simple or fee tail), and has by her issue born alive capable of inheriting her estate. There are four requisites necessary to make a tenancy by curtesy: Marriage, seisin of the wife, issue, and death of the wife. The marriage must be canonical and legal, and the seisin of the wife must be actual; the possession of the land must not be a bare right to possess, which is seisin in law, but an actual possession, which is seisin in deed, and therefore a man cannot be tenant by curtesy of a remainder or reversion. Snyder v. Jones, 59 Atl. 118, 119, 99 Md. 693 (quoting 2 Bl. Comm. 126).

"Tenancy by curtesy" is defined by Littleton as: "Where a man taketh a wife seised in fee simple or in fee tail general or seised as heir in tail especial and hath issue by the same wife, male or female, born alive, albeit the issue after dieth or liveth, yet if the wife dies the husband shall hold the land during his life." And Justice Kent in his Commentaries, vol. 4, p. 27, says: "Tenancy by the curtesy is an estate for life created by the act of the law. When a man marries a woman seised at any time during the coverture of an estate of inheritance in severalty in coparcenary, or in common, and hath issue by her born alive, which might by possibility inherit the same estate as heir to the wife, and the wife dies in the lifetime of the husband, he holds the land during his life by curtesy." The husband's right to curtesy at the common law was contingent upon their being issue of the marriage born alive, capable of inheriting the mother's estate; and as he has no estate by curtesy at the wife's death, unless such issue has been born, he could have had no interest prior to the birth of such issue. Turner v. Heinberg, 65 N. E. 294, 295, 30 Ind. App. 615.

The estate by the "curtesy" is created by the law, and is as independent of the wife as is the wife's dower independent of the husband. It is dependent for its creation on certain facts, one of which is that the wife in her lifetime, and during the marriage, was seised of an estate of inheritance, but that, facts given and the other conditions having existed, the law by its own force creates the estate. From 12 Cyc. the following definitions are taken: "Curtesy is the estate to which by common law a man is entitled on the death of his wife to the lands or tenements of which she was seised in possession in fee simple or fee tail during coverture, provided they had lawful issue born alive which might have been capable of inheriting the estate." Page 1002. And in a note to the text it is said: "It is a freehold estate in the husband for his natural life cast upon him by operation of law immediately upon the happening of the necessary incidents." The same author further says: "Curtesy initiate becomes a vested interest as soon as it attaches to the wife's estate and cannot be modified or abolished by the Legislature of the state; but until it attaches it is a mere right and may be modified or destroyed. When vested, curtesy initiate is an estate in the husband for his natural life, separate and distinct from the estate of the wife." Id. pp. 1003, 1004. And again: "On her death the surviving husband, if all other requisites have existed, becomes vested with a freehold estate known as curtesy consummate." Id. p. 1008. Estate by the curtesy is not a creation of a statute. It is created by the common law. We do not find it mentioned in the writings of the common law that the estate by the curtesy is free from the burden of the wife's debts, as we do find it said that the widow takes her dower free from the husband's debts; but the reason for that is that by the common law the wife could make no debts. But the estate by the curtesy which we have is as it came to us through the common law, and is affected by our statutes only as they expressly or by necessary implication affect it. Under section 6869, Rev. St. 1889 (now section 4340, Rev. St. 1899 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 2382]), a married woman's real estate is her separate estate. She is given the sole right to its possession, its rents and profits. The husband is thereby deprived of his common-law right to the possession of his wife's land during coverture, and to that extent his curtesy initiate is impaired, but it is not destroyed, and upon the death of the wife it becomes consummate. Myers v. Hansbrough, 100 S. W. 1137, 202 Mo. 495.

As interest in property

See Interest (In Property).

CURTESY CONSUMMATE

The requisites of "curtesy consummate" are marriage, seisin, issue, and death of the wife. Richardson v. Richardson, 64 S. E. 510, 511, 150 N. C. 549, 134 Am. St. Rep. 948.

CURTESY INITIATE

A husband's curtesy initiate is merely a status, and not a vested right; nor is it separately alienable during coverture, but a mere possibility or expectancy, which may be destroyed at the will of the owner of the fee, and, not being coupled with any interest in the property, cannot be made the subject of mortgage or transfer. Hope v. Seaman, 119 N. Y. Supp. 713, 719.

Curtesy is initiate from the time of seisin and the birth of issue alive, and, unless it is defeated by will or deed, becomes consummate on the wife's death, and relates back to the time it became initiate. In re Starbuck's Estate, 116 N. Y. Supp. 1030, 1031, 63 Misc. Rep. 156.

At common law, a husband had no vested curtesy interest in lands of his wife, until the birth of issue, and he then became a tenant by the "curtesy initiate" to a separate estate for his life in his wife's lands, the profits of which during that period were exclusively his own. Richardson v. Richardson, 64 S. E. 510, 511, 150 N. C. 549, 134 Am. St. Rep. 948.

CURTILAGE

See Within the Curtilage.

Garden or land adjoining

"Curtilage" is a yard, courtyard, or piece of ground lying around or near to a dwelling house, included within the same fence; a fence or inclosure of a small piece of land around a dwelling house, usually including the buildings used in connection with the house, which inclosure may consist wholly of a fence or partly of a fence and partly of the exterior side of buildings so within the inclosure. It includes the yard, garden, or field which is near to and usually in connection with the dwelling house. At common law the word was very nearly synonymous with courtyard. The word always denotes an inclosure, including the dwelling house, though changed conditions in this country and the absence of fences in many instances may necessarily affect the definition so as not to render the presence of an inclosure indispensable. But to supply the place of an inclosure there must be apparent necessity for the use of the outhouse alleged to be within the curtilage either as a part of the dwelling house or that the use of such outhouse is indispensably necessary to the domestic comfort of the household. A barn and corncrib about 50 yards from the dwelling house, the yard of which is not inclosed, but which are themselves separately inclosed by a high plank fence not connected in any way with the dwelling house, cannot be said to be within the curtilage of the dwelling house. Hutchins v. State, 59 S. E. 848, 849, 3 Ga. App. 300.

Under Act June 4, 1901 (P. L. 431), providing that curtilage to be regarded as appurtenant to a building and bound by a mechanic's lien filed against it is such as is reasonably needed for the general purpose for which the structure is erected, and belongs to the same owner, curtilage, as a general rule, does not extend beyond the lot on which the building is erected, but if more land is reasonably needed for the general purpose of the structure, and at the time the structure is being erected the owner intends that another lot in addition to the one upon which it is built shall be included in the curtilage, a mechanic's lien will cover the other lot, and hence will cover a lot separated from a hotel property subject to lien by a railroad and intervening private lands, where the lot contains a mineral spring, and it was the owner's intention to use it in connection with the hotel as a sanitarium, and to erect a light and heat plant on the lot. Wirsing v. Pennsylvania Hotel & Sanitarium Co., 75 Atl. 259, 260, 226 Pa. 234, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 831.

CUSTODIA LEGIS

See Custody of the Law.

CUSTODY

See Care and Custody; Held in Custody; Possession, Custody, or Control.

See, also, Imprison—Imprisonment.

✓ "Custody" means a keeping, guarding, care, watch, inspection, preservation, or security of a thing, and carries with it the idea of the thing being within the immediate personal care and control of the person to whose custody it is subjected. Turner v. Coffin, 74 Pac. 962, 968, 9 Idaho, 338.

To constitute a violation of Pen. Code, § 266d, making it a felony for any person to receive money or any valuable thing for placing in "custody" any female for the purpose of causing her to cohabit with a male to whom she is not married, the female in question must be under some sort of restraint, so that she is not free to come and go, or otherwise act as she pleases. People v. Drake, 121 Pac. 1006, 162 Cal. 248.

"Custody" means keeping, and implies responsibility for the protection and preservation of the thing in custody. Martin v. United States, 168 Fed. 198, 204, 93 C. O. A. 484.

Gen. St. 1902, § 363, prescribing who shall have the "custody and control" of a decedent's remains, does not limit such "custody and control" to the immediate possession of a dead body prior to interment. Hence a widow, having removed and reinterred her husband's body in her own burial lot, could not be compelled to remove the same to its original place of interment in the lot of the husband's mother. Swits v. Swits, 71 Atl. 782, 81 Conn. 598.

"There is a difference between the terms 'custody' and 'possession.' 'Possession' is the present right and power to control a thing. A person has the 'custody' of property, as distinguished from the 'possession,' where he merely has the care of it for one who retains the right to control it, and who therefore retains constructive possession. Where goods are delivered by the master to his servant or other agent, he parts with the custody only, and not the possession; he has constructive possession. A servant, therefore, or other agent, who has merely the care and custody of his master's goods, is guilty of larceny if he converts them to his own use without his master's consent." Shipp v. Patton, 93 S. W. 1033, 123 Ky. 65 (quoting and adopting 1 Robertson's Ky. Cr. Law, § 420).

A ship bound from Antwerp to San Francisco, with a cargo of cement, encountered such rough weather in attempting to round Cape Horn and was subjected to such strain that her deck seams opened and a part of the cargo was damaged by water. She finally abandoned the attempt and completed the voyage by way of the Cape of Good Hope and Australia. At the time of her change of course, she was 370 miles distant from Port Stanley, where she could have been repaired; but she did not put in for repairs, and before she reached Australia the cargo received further damage by reason of the open seams. The change of course, and also the determination of the master to proceed without putting in for repairs, were matters pertaining to the "navigation and management of the vessel," within Harter Act Feb. 13, 1893, c. 105, § 3, 27 Stat. 445, and not to the "custody, care, or proper delivery" of the cargo, within the meaning of section 2, and that, assuming the vessel to have been in all respects seaworthy and properly manned, equipped, and supplied, at the beginning of the voyage, she was exempted by the act from liability for the damage caused or contributed to by the failure to repair. Corsar v. J. D. Spreckels & Bros. Co., 141 Fed. 260, 262, 72 C. O. A. 378.

As charge or control

A third person permitted by the officers of election to inspect a ballot, or who by force took a ballot within his control, is a "person having custody or control" of a ballot, within the meaning of Ky. St. § 1476, making it a felony for any person intrusted with the custody or control of a ballot to mutilate or place distinguishing marks thereon. Commonwealth v. Goulet, 125 S. W. 1083, 1085, 137 Ky. 464.

A city ordinance requiring the city treasurer to deposit moneys in his hands belonging to the city to such banks as might qualify as provided in the ordinance but not attempting to restrict the paying out by him under the law of such moneys by his own checks, would not operate to deprive him of the custody of such moneys within Comp. Laws 1897, § 2424, providing that a city treasurer may be required to keep all moneys in his hands belonging to the corporation where designated by ordinance, but that no such ordinance shall take the custody of such money from the treasurer; "custody" in such connection meaning immediate charge and control, and not the final absolute control of ownership. Territory v. Matson, 113 Pac. 816, 818, 18 N. M. 135.

Guardianship

The words "custody and tuition," as applied to minors, "have more than ordinary signification, for they include not only the person but the care and management of the personal estate, and also the profits of the real estate of the minor; that is, the guardianship of the person includes the guardianship of the estate." In re Burdick's Estate, 95 N. Y. Supp. 206, 207, 47 Misc. Rep. 28.

In Laws 1893, p. 303, c. 175, giving a surviving parent authority by will or deed to dispose of the "custody and tuition" of their minor children, "custody and tuition" indicates the management of property. "Tuition" implies not alone the instruction of the minor, but the expenditure of money for that instruction, which is one of the important duties imposed upon guardians or one charged with the control of a minor. Matter of Kellogg, 96 N. Y. Supp. 965, 967, 110 App. Div. 472.

Imprisonment

"'Custody,' in criminal law, is the same thing as detention, in civil law, and is synonymous with 'imprisonment.'" "'Imprisonment' is the detention of a person contrary to his will." While the provisions of the Code in bail trover proceedings contemplate imprisonment in jail, the defendant may petition for release from any detention against his will by a sheriff or his deputy by virtue of proper bail process. Everett, Ridley & Co. v. Holcomb, 58 S. E. 287, 289, 1 Ga. App. 794 (citing Rap. & L. Law Dict.).

A person in prison under a conviction by a state court on an indictment charging him with being accessory to a murder, and pending an appeal from such conviction, is not "in custody" in violation of the Constitution or of a law or treaty of the United States. Ex parte Powers, 129 Fed. 965, 966.

CUSTODY OF THE LAW

A thing is in custodia legis when it is shown that it has been and is subjected to the official custody of the judicial executive officer in pursuance of his execution of a legal writ, and where property attached is sold under order of the court and attachment is dissolved, the proceeds are in custodia legis. First Nat. Bank v. Livingood, 109 P. 987, 988, 83 Kan. 118 (quoting 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1801).

When property is lawfully taken by virtue of legal process, it is in the "custody of the law." Property once levied on remains in the custody of the law and is not liable to be taken by another execution in the hands of a different officer, and especially by an officer acting under another jurisdiction. Personal property levied upon under a fiel facias is in the custody of the law so as to empower the court by attachment, punishment for contempt, and the writ of restitution to maintain jurisdiction against parties, its own officers, and all other persons. August v. Gilmer, 44 S. E. 143, 144, 53 W. Va. 65 (quoting and adopting Bouv. Law Dict. tit. "Custodia Legis," and Hagan v. Lucas, 10 Pet. 411 [35 U. S.] 9 L. Ed. 470).

The filing of a petition in bankruptcy and the adjudication thereon operates to place the property of the bankrupt in the "custody of the law." Moore Mfg. Co. v. Billings, 80 Pac. 422, 424, 46 Or. 401.

One charged with crime and at large on bail is constructively in the "custody of the law," for he is in custody of his bondsmen, who are his jailers, with the right to seize him and deliver him up to the court at any time, and with the right to imprison him until that can be done. A nonresident who is arrested on a criminal charge while temporarily in the state, and who is held for trial and who gives bail for his appearance for trial, and who subsequently comes into the state to attend his trial, is constructively in the custody of the law, and is within the jurisdiction by compulsion, and not voluntarily in aid of the administration of justice, and he is not exempt from service of process in a civil suit while remaining in the state after his acquittal for a proper purpose and not unreasonable in duration. Netograph Mfg. Co. v. Scrugham, 90 N. E. 962, 963, 197 N. Y. 377, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 333, 134 Am. St. Rep. 886.

CUSTOM

See Right of Way by Custom.

A method of doing a thing becomes a "custom" through its adoption by many prudent men, who, in selecting it as a rule of conduct, have necessarily found it to be a reasonably safe method. Their uniform conclusion, as exhibited by their actions, is not only persuasive evidence that their method is reasonably careful, but also that one not recognized by usage and less safe is not reasonably careful. Brunke v. Missouri & K. Telephone Co., 90 S. W. 753, 754, 115 Mo. App. 36.

A method of doing a thing becomes a "custom" through its adoption by many prudent men who, in selecting it as a rule of conduct, have necessarily found it to be a reasonably safe method, and such conclusion is not only persuasive evidence that the method adopted is reasonably careful, but also that one recognized by usage as less safe is not a reasonable one. Spencer v. Bruner, 103 S. W. 578, 580, 126 Mo. App. 94 (quoting and adopting the definition in Brunke v. Missouri & K. Tel. Co., 90 S. W. 754, 115 Mo. App. loc. cit. 39).

Popularly the word "custom" may be used as a synonym for "mode" or "practice," but in law it means something else. Collins v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 136 N. W. 628, 630, 150 Wis. 305.

"Custom" is second law," "Custom" is the best expounder of the law." "Things which are done contrary to the custom and usage of our ancestors neither please nor appear right." "The usage of a court becomes somewhat the law of the court, and the fact that the profession for nearly a century have proceeded on the theory that a circuit court loses jurisdiction by an appeal, and that jurisdiction is not handed back to that court except by some appropriate entry remanding the cause for further proceedings, is very good evidence of what the law is." Donnell v. Wright, 97 S. W. 928, 931, 199 Mo. 304 (quoting in order Brown's Case, 4 Coke, 21; 2 Inst. 18; The Case of Corporations, 4 Coke, 78).

The use of the words "usage," "usual," "custom," and "ordinary," in certain questions asked in a negligence case, did not convert them into inquiries relative to the existence of any "custom," where it was apparent that the only object of the inquiry was to inform the jury as to the ordinary manner in which the work inquired about was performed, and from the result of such inquiry determine whether or not defendants were or were not guilty of negligence. Fritz v. Western Union Tel. Co., 71 Pac. 209, 213, 25 Utah, 263.

Evidence that a certain course is "generally" and "usually" pursued in a particular manner is sufficient to establish a custom, and it is not necessary to show that the particular manner is never deviated from. Glantz v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 134 N. W. 242, 243, 90 Neb. 606.

A binding "custom" must be certain, definite, uniform, and known or so notorious that it would have been known to any person of reasonable prudence who dealt with its subject by the exercise of ordinary care. Where plaintiff's witnesses testified that there was a custom of doing certain railroad work in a certain way, and defendant's witnesses testified they did the same work at the same time in a different way, a finding of a uniform custom was not authorized. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Lindeman, 143 Fed. 946, 949, 75 C. C. A. 18.

A "custom" which will enter into and affect the rights and liabilities of persons in their dealings with each other must be certain, uniform, and either known to the public sought to be charged thereby or so general and notorious that knowledge and adoption thereof must be presumed. Russell's Ex'r v. Ferguson, 60 Atl. 802, 77 Vt. 433 (citing Baltimore Base Ball Club & Exhibition Co. v. Pickett, 28 Atl. 279, 78 Md. 375, 22 L. R. A. 690, 44 Am. St. Rep. 304; Citizens' Bank of Baltimore v. Grafflin, 31 Md. 507, 1 Am. Rep. 66; Harper v. Pound, 10 Ind. 32; Smith v. Gibbs, 44 N. H. 335; Linsley v. Lovely, 26 Vt. 123).

"Customs" have sprung from the necessities and the convenience of business and prevailed in duration and extent until they acquired the force of law. This mass of our jurisprudence has thus grown, and will continue to grow, by successive accretions." Merchants' Nat. Bank v. State Nat. Bank, 10 Wall. (77 U. S.) 604, 651, 19 L. Ed. 1008.

Immemorial, universal usage

The term "custom" refers to those usages which have existed and been universally recognized for so long a period as to acquire the force of law and be binding without the assent of the individual, while "usage" refers to an established method of dealing adopted in a particular place, or by those engaged in a particular vocation or trade, which acquires legal force because people make contracts in reference thereto. Byrd v. Beall, 43 South. 749, 751, 150 Ala. 122 (citing 12 Cyc. p. 1033).

As part of contract

A custom, to constitute a fixed element of a contract, must be certain, settled, and uniform, and known to the parties. Manzke v. Goldenberg, 129 S. W. 32, 35, 149 Mo. App. 12.

Usage distinguished

CUSTOM OF MERCHANTS

"Some of the states have adopted the law merchant, others have not." Nathan v. Louisiana, 8 How. (49 U. S.) 73, 82, 12 L. Ed. 992.

"In Mississippi the custom of merchants has been adopted as part of the common law." Musson v. Lake, 4 How. (45 U. S.) 262, 279, 11 L. Ed. 967.

CUSTOM OF THE PORT

"Custom of the port" means the practice or usage based on the facilities for unloading vessels, known to those engaged in the business of unloading. Cargo of The Joseph W. Brooks, 122 Fed. 881, 884.

CUSTOMARY

See As Customary.

An instruction, in an action for the death of an automobilist struck by a car, that the street railway company must use reasonable care to operate its cars on public streets with regard to "the lawful and customary use" of the streets by others, and that

If, at the time decedent was killed, the company was not operating the car with regard to "the lawful and customary use" of the streets, but negligently operated the car, it was liable, is not erroneous as referring to the extent of travel, of which there was no evidence, but refers to the use of the street by the public; the word "lawful" meaning according to law as distinguished from an unlawful use, and the word "customary" meaning according to usage and referring to the mode of using the streets. Smiley v. East St. Louis & S. Ry. Co., 100 N. E. 157, 158, 256 Ill. 482.

CUSTOMARY DISPATCH

A provision in a charter party for "customary dispatch" in discharging has reference to the local custom at the port of discharge. Gilbert Transp. Co. v. Borden, 170 Fed. 706, 707, 96 C. C. A. 26.

CUSTOMARY USE OF STREET

The customary or usual and ordinary use of a street is for travel from one point to another by the usual and lawful modes of travel, and the use of a street by an automobile operated with due care according to the police regulations of the state is both a "customary and a lawful use of the street." Smiley v. East St. Louis & S. Ry. Co., 100 N. E. 157, 158, 256 Ill. 482.

CUSTOMER

A petition, in an action for unlawful interference with trade, which shows that plaintiff had regularly established routes for retailing oil from tank wagons, that it had supplied its customers with cards, which were displayed when oil was wanted, that defendant hired persons and furnished them with oil wagons to go about the streets soliciting the patronage of plaintiff's customers, and vexing his customers and falsely deprecating its wares, and that defendant caused its drivers to conceal the fact that the wagons and teams and oil were the property of defendant, is broad enough to justify a recovery for an interference with existing contracts between plaintiff and its customers; a "customer" being one with whom business men have repeated or regular dealings, and a customer of a retailer in oils being one to whom the retailer makes sales under contract or without contract. Dunshie v. Standard Oil Co. (Iowa) 126 N. W. 342, 344.

CUSTOMS

"Customs" are duties charged upon commodities on their being imported into or being exported from a country. As to imports, they can cover nothing which is not actually brought into the country. American Sugar Refining Co. v. Bidwell, 124 Fed. 683, 685 (quoting and adopting definitions in Lawder v. Stone, 23 Sup. Ct. 79, 187 U. S. 281, 47 L.

CUSTOMS GALLON

The "customs gallon" of the United States is the wine gallon of 231 cubic inches, which is uniformly referred to by the authorities as standard gallon of this country. J. M. Ceballos & Co. v. United States, 139 Fed. 705 (citing Nichols v. Beard, 15 Fed. 435, and Standard and Century Dictionaries).

CUT—CUTTING

See Deep Cutting; Double Cut.

As part of railroad structure, see Railroad—Railway.

The word "cut" most usually signifies to make an incision with a sharp instrument; to cut or sever by the application of a sharp knife or edged instrument of some kind. American Steel & Wire Co. of New Jersey v. Denning Wire & Fence Co., 176 Fed. 564, 571.

Where the seller covenanted to permit the purchaser to cut "all hemlock, spruce," etc., located on a certain lot, the words "to cut" import the same right as "to cut as his own," or as "to have." Brown v. Bishop, 74 Atl. 724, 727, 105 Me. 272.

As used in the descriptive portion of a chattel mortgage, the phrase "and all cordwood and piling 'cut' by or for me" has but one meaning; that is, that the property intended to be effected had been cut and was in esse in that form at the time. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Hill Mercantile Co., 71 S. W. 797, 798, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 196.

A "cut" in a highway is the opposite of an embankment. Where plaintiff was injured by the overturning of her sleigh while passing through a cut in a highway, caused by alleged defective banks sloping to the wrought surface of the highway, such cut was not a "dangerous embankment and defective railing," within Laws 1893, p. 47, § 1, providing that towns shall be liable for damages happening to a person traveling upon a dangerous embankment and defective railing on any highway by reason of any defect rendering it unsuitable for travel. Miner v. Town of Hopkinton, 60 Atl. 433, 434, 73 N. H. 232.

Pol. Code, § 3611, provides that a "cut" or "crosscut" or a tunnel which cuts a lode at a depth of 10 feet below the surface, or an open cut at least 10 feet in length along the lode from the point where the lode may be in any manner discovered, is equivalent to a discovery shaft within section 3612, requiring declaratory statements to set forth the dimensions and location of the discovery shaft or its equivalent sunk upon lode or placer claims. Willson v. Freeman, 75 Pac. 84, 85, 29 Mont. 470, 68 L. R. A. 833.

An instruction, defining "cutting and wounding" with a knife as meaning the intentional infliction of a wound by one person on another by cutting the person of such other with a knife, should have followed the language of Ky. St. § 1186, defining the offense, and was especially wrong in omitting the qualification "with intent to kill." Bailley v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 70 S. W. 838, 839.

Sawing off the end of a railroad tie containing the owner's brand is within St. 1909, § 1409, subsec. 11 (Russell's St. § 5867), making it a crime to "cut out, cancel, obliterate, or deface" the brand. Bennett v. Commonwealth, 118 S. W. 332, 334, 133 Ky. 452.

Under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 252, 30 Stat. 170, relating (1) to "rose plants" and (2) to "cuttings" of "shrubs" and of "plants," rooted rose cuttings that have been placed in sand to facilitate handling, but have never been in soil, fall within the latter provision as cuttings of shrubs or plants. United States v. American Exp. Co., 158 Fed. 808, 86 C. C. A. 68.

OUT AND REMOVE

Under the terms of a contract whereby defendant was to have until a certain time to "cut and remove" certain logs from plaintiff's land, the term "cut and remove" imposes on defendant the duty not only to cut the logs but to remove the same before the limitation expires, and on his failure to do so the title to all the logs severed from the soil reverted to the owners of the land, and the latter could recover the same. Alexander v. Bauer, 102 N. W. 387, 94 Minn. 174.

On a permit to "cut and remove" timber from state lands prior to June 1, 1900, the person to whom it was issued had only the right to "cut and remove" during the life of the permit, and was liable in trespass for removal of timber cut during that time but not removed until afterwards. State v. Rat Portage Lumber Co., 115 N. W. 162, 164, 106 Minn. 1.

CUT GLASS

Tariff legislation having distinguished between glass and form of it known as paste, articles in chief value of paste, cut, are not within the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 100, 30 Stat. 157, for goods in chief value of cut "glass," but are dutiable as manufacturers of "paste," under paragraph 112, 30 Stat. 158. United States v. New York Merchandise Co., 167 Fed. 684.

OUT-OFF

Of railroad

A railroad track leading from one main track to another by means of which cars may be switched from one to another is called a "cut-off." Houston & T. O. R. Co. v. Finn (Tex.) 107 S. W. 94, 95.

OUT-OFF LEVER

The lever on a machine used in making sewer pipe which operates the knife used to cut the pipe to the required length, is called the "cut-off lever." Dickey v. Dickey, 86 S. W. 909, 910, 111 Mo. App. 304.

OUT-THROAT MORTGAGE

See Kansas Cut-Throat Mortgage.

CUTTING SIZE

The "cutting size" of post cards, imported in a folded, undetached condition, should be ascertained, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 400, 30 Stat. 188, by measuring each card by itself, rather than taking the whole series as the unit of measurement. Downing & Co. v. United States, 172 Fed. 447, 448.

CUTCH

The importation in question, being an extract of the bark of the mangrove, used for tanning, is classifiable as "cutch," under paragraph 542 of the Tariff Act of July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 197. United States v. Marden, 175 Fed. 153.

CYCLONE

Dictionary definitions are not always reliable signboards for legal construction of contracts. It is a conceded fact among etymologists, as well as a matter of common learning, that words have their development and enlargement, so that in time they are used and understood among people so as to express and comprehend a broader application than was implied in their origin, if not in an entirely different sense. Words undergo in lexicography the changes attached to them in common parlance. The law, in its flexibility, constantly adjusting and adapting itself to new conditions as they arise, declares that words and phrases employed in business transactions and in ordinary dealings among men shall be deemed to have been employed in their popular sense and acceptance, unless it clearly appears that they were intended to be used in their technical or more restricted sense. Thus, where a policy, insuring against loss from the accidental discharge or leakage from an automatic sprinkler system, exempted insurer from liability for loss caused by earthquakes or cyclones, or by blasting or by explosions of any kind, or by the fall or collapse of any building or buildings or part thereof, the term "cyclone" should be construed in its popular sense as referring to any character of a windstorm, distinguished by its concentrated force and violence, so resistless as to make it especially destructive to buildings in its narrow pathway, and was not limited to a storm proved to have been characterized by high winds rotating about a center of low atmospheric pressure, which center moved with greater or less velocity. Accordingly, in construing the word "cyclone" in said policy in order to ascertain the sense in which it was employed, the rule of "noscitur a sociis" may be applied. So, where the policy excepts from liability injury resulting from or caused by earthquakes, or cyclones, or blasting, or explosives of any kind, etc., held that, from its associates, the conclusion is warranted that it was not the purpose to apply the insurance policy to a violent windstorm, which, like an earthquake, blasting, or explosive, from without, was calculated to so jar or topple the building as to dislodge the automatic sprinkler, whereby the house was flooded and the injury done. Maryland Casualty Co. v. Finch, 147 Fed. 388, 396, 77 C. C. A. 566, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 808.

CYLINDER

The Standard Dictionary defines one use of the word "cylinder" as meaning any cylindrical portion of a machine, especially if hollow, proportioned so as that the length of it exceeds the diameter. In mathematics the word "cylinder" is often used so loosely that in order to point out a right cylinder, which is a solid, it is sometimes advisable to connect with it the word "circular," styling it a "circular cylinder." Anything which approximates a right cylinder and which permits the friction necessary in generating electricity would be called in the science of electricity a cylinder. Eastern Paper Bag Co. v. Continental Paper Bag Co., 142 Fed. 479, 498.

CYLINDER GLASS

The term "cylinder glass," as used in the Tariff Act of 1897 (30 Stat. 151), is descriptive of glass manufactured by first blowing the glass into large cylinders, flattening it on hot iron plates, then cutting it into squares and sizes named in the statute, and finishing it by polishing or beveling. The provision in the Tariff Act, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 107, for an additional duty of 5 per cent. ad valorem on "cylinder * * * glass * * * when beveled * * * or otherwise ornamented or decorated" is applicable to the "cylinder glass * * * polished," which is enumerated in paragraph 102 of said act. Riegelman v. United States, 127 Fed. 493.

CY PRES

When the donor's scheme for administering a trust breaks down, it is the duty of the court by the doctrine of cy pres to devise one for that purpose "as nearly" like the donor's as possible. Adams v. Page, 79 Atl. 837, 838, 76 N. H. 96.

"Cy pres," relating to the administration of charitable trusts, means the doctrine by which courts of chancery administered charitable trusts under the kingly prerogative. In re Nilson's Estate, 116 N. W. 971, 972, 81 Neb. 809.

"Cy pres" is a judicial rule of construction applied to a will by which, when the testator evinces a general charitable intention to be carried into effect in a particular mode which cannot be followed, the words shall be so construed as to give effect to the general intention. It is applied only to valid charitable gifts. Lynch v. South Congregational Parish of Augusta, 82 Atl. 432, 435, 109 Me. 82.

The doctrine of "cy pres," recognized and administered by the English Court of Chancery with reference to trusts, being based on the prerogative power of the King, is not recognized in Alabama. Universalist Convention of Alabama v. May, 41 South. 515, 147 Ala. 455.

"Where an apparent charitable intention has failed, whether by incomplete disposition at the outset or by subsequent inadequacy of the original object, effect will be given to it by a 'cy pres' or approximation of application, notwithstanding that in ordinary cases the trust would be void for uncertainty, or would result to the donor or his representatives." Crow v. Clay County, 95 S. W. 369, 375, 196 Mo. 234 (citing and adopting definition in Adams, Equity, 69).

The rule "cy pres" is applied in the English Chancery Court to sustain bequests, where charity is the general substantial intention, and no object is mentioned, or if mentioned, fails for any reason, or where the mode provided for the execution of the charity is uncertain and impracticable. Grant v. Saunders, 95 N. W. 411, 412, 121 Iowa, 80, 100 Am. St. Rep. 310 (citing 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 595; Boyle, Char. 147, 155).

The doctrine of cy pres obtains in New Jersey but cannot be applied where donor himself has directed what disposition shall be made of the trust property in the event of a failure of the charitable use to which he has directed it to be devoted. Larkin v. Wikoff, 72 Atl. 98, 104, 75 N. J. Eq. 462.

The "cy pres" doctrine does not involve a deviation from the founder's intention as to the objects of the charity but only from his directions as to the management, varying only administrative duties originally meant to be governed by circumstances. The doctrine in its last analysis is found to be a simple rule of judicial construction designed to aid the court to ascertain and carry out as nearly as may be the intention of the donor. There are two features in this doctrine: (1) The right to exercise prerogative authority enabling a court to deal with a bequest to a charitable use having no designated particular purpose as a bequest to charity generally, treating the purpose as the legatee, or a bequest for an illegal purpose or some purpose impossible of execution for some reason; and (2) the right, by liberal rules of construction, to deal with a trust having a designated particular purpose, though in general terms, and enforce it within the limits of such purpose, supplying the trustee, if necessary. The first-named feature of the doctrine is not exercised in this country, but the latter element is. Tincher v. Arnold, 147 Fed. 665, 676, 77 C. C. A. 649, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 471, 8 Ann. Cas. 917 (citing Lackland v. Walker, 52 S. W. 414, 151 Mo. 210; McDonogh v. Murdoch, 15 How. [56 U. S.] 367, 14 L. Ed. 732; In re Daly's Estate, 57 Atl. 180, 208 Pa. 58; Amory v. Attorney General, 60 N. E. 391, 179 Mass. 89; Stuart v. City of Easton, 74 Fed. 854, 21 C. C. A. 146; In re Mercer Home for Disabled Clergymen of the Presbyterian Faith, 29 Atl. 781, 162 Pa. 232; John v. Smith, 102 Fed. 218, 42 C. C. A. 275; City of Philadelphia v. Girard's Heirs, 45 Pa. 9, 28, 84 Am. Dec. 470; Doyle v. Whalen, 32 Atl. 1022, 1026, 87 Me. 414, 31 L. R. A. 118; Taylor v. Keep, 2 Ill. App. 368, 383; Kronshage v. Varrell, 97 N. W. 928, 120 Wis. 161).

The doctrine of "cy pres" is the doctrine of nearness or approximation; and it appears in English jurisprudence in three separate departments. Firstly, in the law of testaments, where a personal legacy has been given upon a condition precedent, and the literal performance of this condition has become impossible from unavoidable circumstances and without fault of the person to be benefited. Here it is sufficient if the condition be performed as nearly as it can be. Secondly, in the law of private trusts, where lands are limited to an unborn person for life, with remainder to his first and other sons, successively, in tail. Here, in order to secure the flowing of the testator's bounty to the issue, the limitations may be held to create an estate in tail in the first taker. Thirdly, in the law of charitable trusts, where gifts have been made for charitable purposes, which, either originally or in the course of time, cannot be literally executed. Here the gift will be administered as nearly as may be according to the donor's purpose under general rules of law. A trust, which is declared for public worship and instruction for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons according to the Presbyterian faith and polity is enforceable, either exactly or, under the doctrine of cy pres, approximately. MacKenzie v. Trustees of Presbytery of Jersey City, 61 Atl. 1027, 1035, 67 N. J. Eq. 652, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 227.

"Cy pres" is a doctrine of the early common law, by which, if gifts were made for charitable uses that were illegal or contrary to public policy, or that were impossible to be carried into effect, the King, as general supervisor of charities, or the chancellor acting for him, could devote them to such other charitable purposes, cy pres the original gift, as he pleased. This power does not exist in America, and the English cases in which gifts to illegal charities were devoted to other charitable purposes, either expressly under the prerogative power of the King, or by confusing that power with the judicial powers of the chancellor, are not authority here. The power of equity being limited to supplying the mode of carrying out a charitable bequest to an identified or ascertainable object, a bequest "to the poor" generally could not be aided cy pres. Thompson's Ex'r v. Brown (Ky.) 70 S. W. 674, 677, 62 L. R. A. 398 (citing Perry, Trusts, § 718).

Where there is an intention exhibited to devote the gift to charity, and no object is mentioned, or the particular object fails, the court will execute the trust "cy pres" and will apply the fund to some charitable purposes similar to those (if any) mentioned by the donor. If the donor declare his intention in favor of charity indefinitely, without any specification of objects, or in favor of defined objects which happen to fail from whatever cause, even though in such cases the particular mode of operation contemplated by the donor is uncertain or impracticable, yet, the general purpose being charity, such purpose will, notwithstanding the indefiniteness, illegality, or failure of its immediate objects, be carried into effect. Loch v. Mayer, 100 N. Y. Supp. 837, 839, 50 Misc. Rep. 442 (quoting Pom. Eq. Jur. [3d Ed.] § 1027).

Testatrix, having no knowledge of the work conducted for the benefit of sick seamen in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, but having previously given small sums to W., a missionary working there, bequeathed the surplus of her estate, if any, to the hospital fund for sick seamen at Navy Yard, Brooklyn, care of W., chaplain. Held, that the Court of Chancery could not, under the "cy pres" doctrine, decree the bequest to another institution, conducting religious and charitable work among the sailors of larger scope than that conducted by W., but the bequest lapsed; where the conditions existing at the time of testator's death make the actual charitable purpose impracticable of accomplishment, the gift lapses (citing Teale v. Bishop of Derry, 47 N. E. 422, 168 Mass. 341, 38 L. R. A. 629, 60 Am. St. Rep. 401; and 2 Perry on Trusts, § 726). A court of equity will carry out the expressed general charitable purpose of the donor by the use of means other than those specified, when such means have become impracticable or impossible of use. But in such cases there is a general or comprehensive charitable purpose set forth in the will or inferable from its provisions, beyond which the court will not go in its substitution. Brown v. Condit, 61 Atl. 1055, 1057, 70 N. J. Eq. 440.

DAILY NEWSPAPER

The court will not presume that a paper was published "daily" from the mere fact that the word "daily" is a part of the name of the paper. Fox v. Wright, 91 Pac. 1005, 1006, 152 Cal. 59.

Under the general rule that, in the absence of direction to the contrary, a notice required by law to be published must be given in the English language and in a newspaper printed in that language, and under Baltimore Charter, § 14 (Laws 1898, p. 274, c. 123), providing that in contracting for public work, unless otherwise provided for in that article of the charter, proposals for bids shall be advertised in two or more daily newspapers published in the city, a publication in one German and one English newspaper is invalid; that sections 43 and 49 (pages 294, 297) expressly authorize the publication in German newspapers of notices of the sale of property for taxes, indicating a legislative intent to require publication of notices under section 14 in English newspapers, rather than an intent to embrace a German newspaper within the term "daily newspaper." Bennett v. City of Baltimore, 68 Atl. 14, 15, 106 Md. 484, 14 Ann. Cas. 419.

A newspaper published every day in the week, except Sundays and Mondays, was a "daily paper," within a city charter provision requiring publication of legal advertising of the city in a daily paper printed and published in the city. Fairhaven Pub. Co. v. City of Bellingham, 98 Pac. 97, 51 Wash. 108, 16 Ann. Cas. 420.

A newspaper issued every day of the week, except Sunday, is a "daily newspaper," within a statute requiring notice of foreclosure sales to be published in daily newspapers; the term "daily newspaper" being employed in such statute in contradistinction to the term "weekly," "semiweekly," or "tri-weekly" newspaper. Wilson v. Petzold, 76 S. W. 1093, 116 Ky. 873.

DAM

See Milldam; Power Dam.

A "dam" is as much an artificial mechanism as a pump, when applied to diversion of water from a stream or a disturbance of the natural order of things. Garvey Water Co. v. Huntington Land & Imp. Co., 97 Pac. 428, 432, 154 Cal. 232.

A "dam" is a structure composed of wood, earth, or other material, erected in and usually extending across the entire channel at right angles to the thread of the stream, and intended to retard the flow of water by the barrier, or to retain it within the obstruction. Morton v. Oregon Short Line Ry. Co., 87 Pac. 151, 153, 48 Or. 444, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 344, 120 Am. St. Rep. 827.

"A 'dam' is the work or structure raised to obstruct the flow of the water in a river," or "a barrier to prevent the flow of liquid, especially a bank of earth, or wall of any kind, as of masonry or wood, built across a water course, to confine and keep back flowing water." Penobscot Log Driving Co. v. West Branch Driving & Reservoir Dam Co., 66 Atl. 542, 545, 102 Me. 263 (quoting and adopting Webster's Dict.; 12 Cyc. p. 1183).

Mills' Ann. St. § 2272, makes the owners of reservoirs liable for all damages from leakage or overflow of the waters or by floods caused by breaking of the embankments. Laws 1899, c. 126, § 9, provides that none of its provisions shall relieve the owner of any such reservoir from the payment of damages caused by the breaking of the embankments thereof, but in the event of any such reservoirs overflowing or the embankments, dams, or outlets breaking or washing out, the owners thereof shall be liable for all damages occasioned thereby. Held, that the owners of reservoirs are liable absolutely for all damages from leakage or overflow of the water, or by floods caused by the breaking of an embankment, and they are not relieved from such liability by the fact that they have omitted nothing that human skill and foresight could suggest in the construction and maintenance of the reservoir to render it absolutely safe, and their liability is the same, even if they have used a natural hillside as a part of the restraining wall and it washes out, as the words "embankment" and "dam" must be construed as including barriers. Garnet Ditch & Reservoir Co. v. Sampson, 110 Pac. 79, 48 Colo. 285.

Damages in general legal acceptation means compensation for the loss incurred or the injury sustained in the given case. Myhra v. Chicago, M. & P. S. Ry. Co., 112 Pac. 939, 942, 62 Wash. 1; North Coast R. Co. v. A. A. Kraft Co., 115 Pac. 97, 102, 65 Wash. 250.

"Damages" is "the value in money of what is lost or withheld; the estimated money equivalent for detriment or injury sustained; that which is given or adjudged to repair a loss." Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Falconer (Ky.) 97 S. W. 727, 728 (quoting Cent. Dict.).

"Damage" is but the measure in money for a detriment which has occurred in the past, and which may with certainty be said will occur in the future (Civ. Code, § 3283). Heilbron v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, 90 Pac. 706, 707, 151 Cal. 271.

"Damages" means compensation for the loss suffered or the injury sustained, and are not to be awarded unless based on something more substantial than guess, assumption, or speculation. Jones v. Nelson, 112 Pac. 88, 89, 61 Wash. 167.

"Damages" are either general or special. Hoskins v. Scott, 96 Pac. 1112, 1114, 52 Ore. 271.

"Damages" are allowed as compensation which the law affords to persons whose rights have been invaded. Actual damages are for actual losses, and the amount of such losses may sometimes be anticipated, and the extent of a possible future loss, to be paid in the event of a breach of contract, may be agreed on in advance, where there is difficulty in determining the extent of the loss. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Gaba, 97 Pac. 435, 437, 78 Kan. 432.

In an action of negligence for injuries received from an explosion, "damages" are of two kinds: "Compensatory," such as make the wrong to be whole as of the time of the injury, or "punitive," where the tortious act is aggravated by evil motive, malice, violence, oppression, or fraud. The probable loss of profits to plaintiff which might have been earned except for the injury depends on so many contingencies that such damages are termed "speculative" and are not recoverable. James McNeil & Bro. Co. v. Crucible Steel Co. of America (Pa.) 56 Atl. 1067, 1070, 1071.

The primary object of damages is compensation to the injured party, which should be for the natural and proximate result of the wrong done; and the general rule aims to give compensation for the loss sustained and to put the party in as nearly the same condition as he would have been had the contract been performed. Prestwood v. Carlton, 50 South. 254, 262, 162 Ala. 327.

"Damages," briefly defined, means compensation for the legal injury. Jemo v. Tourist Hotel Co., 104 Pac. 820, 823, 55 Wash. 595, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 926, 19 Ann. Cas. 1199.

Attorney's fees

As used in Rev. St. 1892, § 1724, par. 1, providing that the plaintiff in replevin may have judgment for his damages caused by the taking and detention, the word "damages" is not sufficiently comprehensive to embrace the attorney's fees, incurred by the plaintiff in prosecuting his action. Gregory v. Woodberry, 43 South. 504, 505, 53 Fla. 566.

A bond given by a contestant in a will contest on an appeal from an adverse judgment of the county court, conditioned on his performing whatever judgment may be rendered against him and on his paying all "damages" which the executor has sustained by reason of the appeal, does not authorize a recovery of attorney's fees paid by the executor in successfully resisting the appeal. Williams v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 93 Pac. 1119, 1120, 42 Colo. 118, 15 Ann. Cas. 722.

Debt

An indebtedness incurred—a liability to pay—is a "damage." Although the court had no jurisdiction to enjoin a prosecuting attorney from prosecuting for a crime, attorney's fees incurred in procuring the dissolution of the injunction and in defeating the action were "damages" within the terms of the undertaking given on the granting of the injunction. Littleton v. Burgess, 91 Pac. 832, 835, 16 Wyo. 58, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49 (citing Noble v. Arnold, 23 Ohio St. 265).

Exemplary damages

The term "damages" is defined in Bouvier's Law Dictionary as: "The indemnity recoverable by a person who has sustained an injury. The sum claimed as such indemnity by plaintiff in his declaration; and the term includes not only compensatory, but also exemplary or punitive or vindictive and double or treble, damages." Under the constitutional provision that justices' courts shall not have jurisdiction when the demand exceeds $300, a judgment for $396, treble damages for withholding possession of premises, and for $100 rent due, is beyond the jurisdiction of the court. Fitchett v. Henley, 104 Pac. 1060, 1065, 31 Nev. 826.

Injury distinguished

There is a wide distinction between "damage" and "injury." They bear the same relation to each other as cause and effect. An injury in its legal sense is misconduct, and damage is the legal term applified to the loss resulting from misconduct. Carroll v. Rye Tp., 101 N. W. 894, 897, 13 N. D. 458.

While the verbs "to injure" and "to damage" are nearly synonymous, "injure" and "damage" are not always legally synonymous, as there may be damnum absque injuria. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Smith, 60 S. E. 353, 354, 3 Ga. App. 644.

Injury synonyms

The word "damaged," in section 23, Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, forbidding allowance for damages to imported goods in the estimation of and liquidation of duties thereon, is used in the sense of impairment or injury. Lawder v. Stone, 23 Sup. Ct. 79, 83, 187 U. S. 231, 47 L. Ed. 178.

In discussions of the character of damages for which a party guilty of negligence resulting in an injury is liable, the term "injury" must be understood as synonymous with "damages." Johnson v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 53 S. E. 362, 365, 140 N. C. 574.

The words, "or damage," in a statute requiring claims against a municipality for damages arising from a defective street or sidewalk to be presented within 90 days after the happening of such injury or damage, relate to the damages that arise immediately after the injury to the party or to his property, and not to such as may be sustained by a third person as a secondary result, both caused by the original injury. We are firmly of the opinion that it was not the intention of the Legislature to include within the statute secondary claims or damages arising out of death which are suffered by third persons by reason of such death. Brown v. Salt Lake City, 93 Pac. 570, 573, 33 Utah, 222, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 619, 126 Am. St. Rep. 828, 14 Ann. Cas. 1004 (citing and adopting McKelgue v. Janesville, 31 N. W. 298, 68 Wis. 50; Pye v. Mankato, 38 N. W. 621, 38 Minn. 536; Moran v. City of St. Paul, 56 N. W. 80, 54 Minn. 279; Dawes v. City of Great Falls, 77 Pac. 309, 31 Mont. 9; Maylone v. City of St. Paul, 42 N. W. 88, 40 Minn. 406).

In discussions of the property owner's right to compensation for property damaged, text-writers and adjudicated cases use the words "damaged," "injured," and "injuriously affected" as meaning substantially the same thing. The term as used in constitutional provisions requiring compensation to be made for property "taken or damaged" should be liberally construed in favor of the individual whose property is affected. As used in Const. 1902, art. 4, § 58, providing for the awarding of damages, if any, to adjacent property not taken, they were intended to enlarge the rights to compensation. They embrace and give a remedy for impairment of property by noise, smoke, dust, and cinders arising from the lawful operation of a railroad and were not intended to cover merely such damages as would have previously formed the basis of an action. Tidewater Ry. Co. v. Shartzter, 59 S. E. 407, 409, 107 Va. 562, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1053.

Loss synonyms

"Damage" means loss. Compensation would be inadequate that did not cover the loss sustained. For delay of a carrier in delivering freight, there may be recovered not only such damages as normally result therefrom, but such as result from special circumstances known to the carrier at the time of the contract. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mink, 103 S. W. 294, 295, 126 Ky. 337.

It is not error for the court in its instructions to use the words "loss" and "damage" interchangeably. Turner v. Woodward, 51 S. E. 762, 123 Ga. 866.

Penalty distinguished

There is a marked technical distinction in the law between "damages" and penalty. Bouvier, in his Law Dictionary, says "damages" are based on the idea of a loss to be consummated; a damage to be made good. A sum in which a wrongdoer is mulcted simply as punishment for his wrong, and irrespective of any loss caused thereby, is a fine or penalty rather than "damages." The word as used in Rev. St. 1909, § 8523, providing that operators of automobiles who failed to use the highest degree of care shall be liable in damages, means "damages" and not penalty. Nicholas v. Kelley, 139 S. W. 248, 250, 159 Mo. App. 20.

Rents and profits

"While in some cases the profits to be accounted for are spoken of as damages, yet in no case that has been presented is it held that damages, as distinct from or additional to profits, can be decreed in equity in a copyright case, as in patent cases. While the word 'damages' is used in decrees, it is used synonymously with 'profits.' Confusion can be avoided by omitting the word 'damages,' since the word 'profits' is more accurate, and sufficient." Social Register Ass'n v. Murphy, 129 Fed. 148.

The word "damages," in Civ. Code, § 2452, declaring that the sale of a thing not the property of, the seller may give rise to "damages," has the same meaning as in other sections of the Code, and therefore includes loss of profits not speculative or uncertain in their nature. Jefferson Sawmill Co. v. Iowa & Louisiana Land Co., 48 South. 428, 431, 122 La. 983.

Where, in a suit for unlawful detainer, the court's conclusions of law were that $400 rents should be awarded plaintiff, there was no impropriety in designating the amount as "damages" in the judgment; as Civ. Code, § 3281, declares that every person who suffers detriment from the unlawful act of another may recover compensation therefor in money, which is called "damages." Keyes v. Moy Jin Mun, 68 Pac. 476, 477, 136 Cal. 129.

Total loss included

Laws 1899, p. 261, c. 131, authorizing the condemnation of land for private irrigation ditches, declares (section 6, p. 262) that in case the owner of the land fails to appear, the court shall impanel a jury to determine the value of the land occupied and the damages; and section 7, p. 263, provides the same procedure where the defendants appear. Held, that the word "damages," as so used, includes damages to the whole tract, in addition to the value of the land actually taken. Weed v. Goodwin, 78 Pac. 36, 37, 36 Wash. 31.

For breach of contract

The damages which are described in Rev. Codes 1899, § 4978, declaring that for the breach of an obligation arising from contract the measure of damages, except when otherwise expressly provided by the Code, is the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all the detriment approximately caused thereby, or which in the ordinary course of things would be likely to result therefrom, are the damages which are the natural consequences of a breach of contract, and the statute authorizes compensation for all detriment which follows as a natural and proximate consequence of the breach, and prohibits a recovery for damages which are not natural and proximate consequences. In an action for damages for the breach of a contract to thresh grain, the loss of grain by exposure to storms is a remote, and not a proximate, consequence of the breach, and will not sustain a recovery, in the absence of any special or exceptional circumstances. Hayes v. Cooley, 100 N. W. 250, 251, 13 N. D. 204.

"Damages" is the sum awarded by way of compensation to make whole the person who suffers, and in breach of contract they are such as arise in the natural course of things or such as may reasonably be supposed to have been contemplated by the parties when making the contract, as the probable result of its breach. Kimball Bros. Co. v. Citizens' Gas & Electric Co., 118 N. W. 891, 895, 141 Iowa, 632.

For infringement of patent

In patent nomenclature, what the infringer makes is "profits," and what the owner of the patent loses is "damages." Diamond Stone-Saving Mach. Co. of New York v. Brown, 166 Fed. 306, 92 C. C. A. 224.

"Damages," as used in a decree finding an infringement of a copyright and "assessing damages," is synonymous with "profits," as no recovery beyond the gains and profits realized from the infringement may be had in such case. Social Register Ass'n v. Murphy, 129 Fed. 148.

"Damages," under the patent laws, refer to what plaintiff has lost, and "profits" to what the defendant has earned, by the unlawful use of the patented invention. A contract between the owners of two patents covering similar inventions, by which joint licenses were to be issued at the request of the second party, who was to recover a share of the license fees for the use of the patent of the first party, and also of the "damages" payable from infringers of such patent, does not entitle him to share in the sum recovered by a suit in equity, as "profits" realized by an infringer, where no "damages" were allowed. Wooster v. Trowbridge, 115 Fed. 722, 728.

The word "damages," in Rev. St. § 4900, providing that no damages shall be recovered for an infringement of a patent except on proof that defendant was notified of the infringement, and continued after such notice to make, use, or vend the article so patented, includes profits, and neither damages nor profits are recoverable except for infringement after such notice was given. Lorain Steel Co. v. New York Switch & Crossing Co., 153 Fed. 205, 208 (citing Lowell Mfg. Co. v. Hogg, 70 Fed. 787).

In Rev. St. § 4900, which provides that, where a patentee has failed to mark the patented articles as therein required in any suit for infringement, "no damages shall be recovered by the plaintiff except on proof that the defendant was duly notified of the infringement" and continued to infringe after such notice, the word "damages" is used as meaning all sums which the complainant would be entitled to recover and includes profits. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Condit Electrical Mfg. Co., 159 Fed. 154, 155.

For injunction

"Damages," as used in an injunction bond, binding the signers to pay costs and damages, did not include attorneys' fees for the opposite party. Jones v. Rountree, 74 S. E. 1096, 1097, 11 Ga. App. 181.

In Code Civ. Proc. § 611, providing that the bond on an application to enjoin an action for money only must secure all the damages awarded against the party restrained in the action in which the injunction issued, the word "damages" means those which the enjoined party may sustain by reason of the injunction under section 623, providing for the ascertainment of such damages by the court, by a referee, or by a writ of inquiry, and does not include a recovery on an equitable counterclaim for foreclosure of a chattel mortgage interposed in the injunction suit, in which defendant is the actor and occupies the position of plaintiff. W. H. Brace Co. v. Kraft, 89 N. E. 1093, 1094, 196 N. Y. 468.

For obstruction of highway

Mills' Ann. St. § 3960, forbidding any one to flow waste water on a highway so as to damage the same, the word "damage" includes all those obstructions which make it inconvenient or dangerous for travel. This section was intended to and did supplant section 1357, forbidding any person to obstruct or injure any highway so as to render it "inconvenient or dangerous." Eaton v. People, 70 Pac. 426, 427, 30 Colo. 345.

For personal injury

"Damages" for a personal injury is such sum as will compensate the party for the injury sustained. The deprivation of the party's ability to care for himself is an element to be considered in assessing the damages. Kline v. Santa Barbara Consol. Ry. Co., 90 Pac. 125, 128, 150 Cal. 741.

Civ. Code, § 3333, provides that the "damages" to be awarded in an employe's action for injuries shall be the amount which will compensate for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, whether it could have been anticipated or not. An instruction that the jury might award such sum as would fairly and fully compensate plaintiff for any injuries received did not authorize an award according to any feeling the jury might have, nor suggest anything else than that they must exercise their judgment from all the evidence in the case as to what the proper amount of damages should be. Hersberger v. Pacific Lumber Co., 88 Pac. 587, 590, 4 Cal. App. 460.

An instruction that the jury should add whatever amount plaintiff would be entitled to for pain and suffering to such sum as they should find he was entitled to for damages was not prejudicial to defendant, where it was clear from the entire charge that the court used the word "damages" to mean such damages as resulted from plaintiff's impaired and diminished earning capacity. Macon, D. & S. R. Co. v. Joyner, 59 S. E. 902, 904, 129 Ga. 683.

If a car containing passengers is stopped while in transit, and the passengers are directed by the conductor to change to another car, which is on a track parallel to the first, and if, while they are so doing, the employes of the company put out the lights of the first car, and cause it to jerk suddenly, resulting in injury to a passenger who is in the act of making the change, this would be an "injury resulting from the running of the cars" of the company, within the meaning of the statute, and would also be a "damage done by a person in the employment and service of the company," so as to raise the statutory presumption of negligence against it. Georgia Ry. & Electric Co. v. Reeves, 51 S. E. 610, 611, 123 Ga. 697.

For taking property

The compensation that must be made on the discontinuance of streets under Laws 1895, c. 1006, authorizing the discontinuance of streets, and providing for the payment of damages, is "damages" within the act, and the payment of compensation is absolutely necessary. In re Mayor, etc., of City of New York, 52 N. Y. S. 588, 597, 28 App. Div. 143.

The legal vacation by a city of streets and alleys is not a taking or "damaging without compensation." Scrutchfield v. Choctaw, O. & W. R. Co., 88 Pac. 1048, 1050, 18 Okl. 808, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 496 (quoting and adopting definition given in City of East St. Louis v. O'Flynn, 10 N. E. 395, 119 Ill. 200, 59 Am. St. Rep. 795).

That there is a distinction, in regard to property taken for public use, between "compensation" (for property actually taken) and "damages" (to the remainder of it), is indicated by Code 1896, § 1718, providing merely that the compensation must not be reduced because of benefits. Town of Eutaw v. Botnick, 43 South. 739, 740, 150 Ala. 429.

Under a statute providing that, where a city shall establish a grade requiring any cut or fall in a street belonging to it, the damages arising from the making of the grade may be ascertained as therein provided, the word "damages" is used in its proper sense, and includes consequential damages, and is not limited to damages for actual trespass upon private property in the construction of the improvement. Fletcher v. City of Seattle, 88 Pac. 843, 844, 43 Wash. 627.

Code 1902, § 1414, as amended by Act Feb. 9, 1906 (Laws 1906, p. 10, c. 12), provides that, when damage is done to adjacent lands by the establishment of a cemetery as provided for in the preceding sections, the owners of lands damaged may recover from the municipality or person establishing the cemetery, etc. Held, that the word "damaged" is used in the same sense that it is in Const. 1902, § 58, prohibiting the passage of laws whereby private property may be damaged for public use without just compensation, as meaning damage to the corpus of the property, and hence the owner of adjacent farm land could not recover damages because the land was rendered less desirable for residence purposes, or because of personal annoyance or discomfort in its use, by reason of the establishment of a cemetery. Lambert v. City of Norfolk, 61 S. E. 776, 777, 108 Va. 259, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1061, 128 Am. St. Rep. 945.

"The word 'damage' embraces more than the mere physical taking of property and is not restricted to cases where the owner is entitled to recovery as for a tort at common law." A leasehold is such an estate as that if, in the construction by the municipal authorities of a city of a public improvement in one of its streets, the estate of one holding such an interest in real property be damaged, he may sustain an action. Pause v.

City of Atlanta, 26 S. E. 489, 491, 98 Ga. 92, 58 Am. St. Rep. 290.

"Damages" caused abutting owners by a temporary interference with their right of access to their property made necessary by the construction of a public improvement do not constitute damage to property not taken within the meaning of the Constitution. An owner cannot recover such damages from a city under an ordinance requiring a railroad company to elevate its tracks by reason of which a switch track connecting with the premises was disconnected during the progress of the work, although under the ordinance the city assumed all damages incident to the work, the term "damages" as used therein creating no new liability, but the ordinance simply determined as between the city and the railroad company which should pay the damages to which the owner would be entitled without the ordinance. Chicago Flour Co. v. City of Chicago, 90 N. E. 674, 676, 243 Ill. 268.

"Damages" and "compensation" are sometimes used interchangeably to represent the purchase money paid for rights acquired by the eminent domain. But it is better to let "compensation" stand for purchase money and "damages" for indemnity for a trespass. Whatever confusion there may be in the use of terms, the difference between compensation and damages is frequently expressed in the rule that they shall not be ascertained in a single proceeding or suit." Abernathy v. South. & W. Ry. Co., 63 S. E. 180, 185, 150 N. C. 97 (quoting Randolph, Em. Dom. § 222).

The term "damages to the owner," in St. 1898, § 1848, providing that in condemnation proceedings there shall be appraised the value of the land proposed to be taken and the damages that will be suffered by the owner by reason of the taking, means the diminution of the value of the land not taken, by direct injury thereto as to the whole ownership therein, legal and equitable. Stamnes v. Milwaukee & S. L. R. Co., 109 N. W. 100, 101, 131 Wis. 85.

The measure of damages to abutting property being the difference in its value just before and after the change, abutting property, not taken, is not "damaged" within the statute, where it is worth no less after the improvement than before, whether the interest be that of tenant or owner. City of Detroit v. Detroit United Ry., 120 N. W. 600, 603, 156 Mich. 106.

DAMAGE BY THE ELEMENTS

See Elements.

DAMAGE FOR PUBLIC USE

A railroad's interference with a property owner's right to ingress and egress by means of a street, on which his property abuts is "damage" within Const. Wash. art. 1, § 16, providing that no private property shall be taken or damaged for public or private use without just compensation. Idaho & W. N. R. R. v. Nagle, 184 Fed. 598, 600, 106 C. C. A. 578.

As used in Const. art. 1, § 17, providing that no personal property shall be taken, damaged, or destroyed for public use without adequate compensation, the word "damaged" does not require railroads to condemn rights incidentally invaded, as a condition precedent to the exercise of right granted to it by a city to use a street. Settegast v. Houston, O., L. & M. P. R. Co., 87 S. W. 197, 200, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 623.

Const. 1902, § 58, provides that the Legislature shall not enact any law whereby private property shall be taken or damaged for public uses without just compensation. Held, that the provision, in so far as it relates to property damaged, merely provides a new right of action, and, as the word "damaged" is neither enlarged nor restricted by the Constitution, it is used with its common-law meaning, not damage to the feelings, tastes, or sentiments, but physical damage to the corpus or to some right of property appurtenant thereto. Lambert v. City of Norfolk, 61 S. E. 776, 777, 108 Va. 259, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1061, 128 Am. St. Rep. 945.

The word "damaged," in Const. art. 6, § 13, providing that private property, shall not be taken for public use or damaged without compensation, means legal damages, and one making a reasonable use of his property is not liable for any damages suffered by any other person flowing from such use, and the power of eminent domain vested in a person or corporation does not lessen or increase his or its rights or liabilities in regard to payment of damages suffered through the exercise of such power beyond what they would be, if he or it took the damaged property without the exercise of such power, except that for the taking or damaging he or it may be required to respond before the taking or damaging. Hyde v. Minnesota, D. & P. Ry. Co., 136 N. W. 92, 97, 29 S. D. 220, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 48.

"When soil is removed from its natural position by one owner and the soil of an adjoining owner is thereby permitted to fall, such result is not a consequential damage, but a direct injury. * * * It is true that the word 'damaged' has been held to mean such damages as were recoverable at common law between individuals; but, in view of the rule that the carrying away of land by its own weight is not consequential damage, but is an actual infringement and 'taking of property,' we think the same rule should apply where the land is carried away by means of water which is released in a public street by any means which would amount to an actual 'taking' and a resulting damage." And hence where land is carried away by means of water which is released in a public street through the operations of certain railroads in constructing a tunnel under the street, the damage so occasioned is an actual infringement and "taking of property," within the Constitution, declaring that private property shall not be "damaged" for public use without just compensation. Farnandis v. Great Northern R. Co., 84 Pac. 18, 20, 21, 41 Wash. 486, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1086, 111 Am. St. Rep. 1027.

Where a city in condemnation proceedings acquired the right to lower the grade of property abutting on a street to 77 feet below the average level of abutting property, and to slope such property back from the street to prevent the soil from sliding into the street, the construction of the slope was not a taking of the abutting property, but merely a "damaging" thereof, within Const. art. 1, § 16, providing that no private property shall be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation, and Act March 9, 1893 (Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 775), entitled "An act to enable cities to exercise the right of eminent domain for the taking and damaging of land and property for public purposes." Compton v. Seattle, 80 Pac. 757, 759, 38 Wash. 514.

Where an owner continues in the use and enjoyment of his property and property rights after the completion of a public improvement to the same extent and for the same purpose as before, his property has not been "taken" within Const. art. 1, § 22, providing that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without compensation, and it cannot be "damaged" within that provision except by the invasion of a theoretical legal right. Salt Lake City v. East Jordan Irr. Co. (Utah) 121 Pac. 592, 596.

The word "damaged," in the Missouri Constitution declaring that private property shall not be taken or "damaged" for public use without just compensation, includes damage to adjoining property from the establishment or the change of a grade of a street or alley; but it excludes damage by the cracking and falling of the walls of buildings from the removal of lateral support. The damage to a four-story brick building and its contents by the laying of a sewer in an adjoining alley below the plane of the foundation of the building, after the owner knew in time to prop and protect his building that the sewer was to be laid, and that there was danger that it would cause his building to crack and settle, whereby the lot in its natural state would not have been caused to settle or crumble, but whereby the building was cracked, and it and its contents were injured to the amount of tens of thousands of dollars, is damnum absque injuria, and the owner is not entitled to compensation therefor. Johnson v. St. Louis, 172 Fed. 31, 40, 96 C. C. A. 617, 18 Ann. Cas. 949.

In discussing the meaning of the word "damaged" as used in the constitutional provision that private property shall not be damaged for public use without just compensation, the court says: "I cannot agree with defendant's counsel that the Constitution of 1875 contemplates only such a direct and necessary damage as would in effect be only a taking of property, or that the damage there contemplated must be such as necessarily and inevitably flows from the passage of an ordinance or law providing for the public work. On the contrary, I believe the provision in question was intended to have a practical and real meaning—was intended to provide a remedy for all damages proximately resulting to property from the doing of work for public use. Such is the plain and ordinary signification of the language employed." Johnson v. City of St. Louis, 137 Fed. 439, 441.

The ownership of a lot abutting on a street carries with it as property the right of unimpaired access and egress, and whatever impairs that right and causes a depreciation in the value of the lot constitutes damage within the meaning of Const. art. 1, § 17. Powell v. Houston & T. O. R. Co., 135 S. W. 1153, 1155, 104 Tex. 219.

Consequential injury

The words "or damaged," as used in a constitutional provision that property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation, do not entitle a property owner to an injunction to prevent the improvement of a street until mere consequential damages to his property are ascertained and paid. Clemens v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 82 S. W. 1, 3, 184 Mo. 46, 67 L. R. A. 362, 105 Am. St. Rep. 526.

Under a constitutional provision providing that no private property shall be taken or "damaged" without just compensation, the word "damaged" does not give a right of action where the injuries would have been, in the absence of the word, damnum absque injuria in an action against a natural person or private corporation. A property owner may recover damages under such provision for injuries resulting from the operation of a railroad, such as the jarring of his property, the casting of cinders and emission of smoke thereon, which physically affects the property itself, but cannot recover damages for the ringing of bells, sounding of whistles, rumbling of trains, and similar noises, and the emission of smoke, gases, and odors, incident to the proper operation of the road, nor for excavating through and obstructing streets near his property which he uses in common with the general public, although to a greater extent, but which are not adjacent to such property. Smith v. St. Paul, M. & M. Ry. Co., 81 Pac. 840, 842, 843, 844, 39 Wash. 355, 70 L. R. A. 1013, 109 Am. St. Rep.

889 (citing the definition in Aldrich v. Metropolitan Co., 83 N. E. 155, 195 Ill. 456, 57 L. R. A. 237; and City of Chicago v. Union Stockyards & Transit Co., 45 N. E. 430, 164 Ill. 224, 85 L. R. A. 281).

The word "damage," as used in Const. art. 1, § 17, providing that no person's property shall be taken, damaged, or destroyed for or applied to public use without adequate compensation being made, means every loss or diminution of what is a man's own, occasioned by the fault of another, whether this result directly to the thing owned, or be but an interference with the right which the owner has to the legal and proper use of his own. If by the construction of a railway or other public work an injury peculiar to a given property be inflicted upon it, or its owner be deprived of its legal and proper use, or of any right therein or thereto—that is, if an injury not suffered by that particular property or right only in common with other property or rights in the same community or section, by reason of the general fact that the public work exists, be inflicted—then such property may be said to be damaged. A property owner is entitled to recover from a railroad which constructs its yards so near plaintiff's residence as that the noise, smoke, cinders, and gas from the operation by defendant of its locomotives injuriously affects the plaintiff's property. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Calkins (Tex.) 79 S. W. 852, 853.

Where the line of a commercial railroad is constructed along a street near plaintiff's residence block in a city, the jarring of the earth of respondent's lots, the casting of soot and cinders thereon, the emission of smoke physically injuring property, constitute "damage" within Const. Wash. art. 1, § 16, providing that property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation. Idaho & W. N. R. v. Nagle, 184 Fed. 598, 601, 106 C. C. A. 578.

One can recover for the vibrations, noises, smoke, etc., produced by the operation of trains, which by causing annoyance and discomfort depreciate the value of his property, since Const. art. 1, § 17, provides that no person's property shall be "taken, damaged, or destroyed," for, or applied to, a public use without adequate compensation made, unless by consent of such person. Novich v. Trinity & B. V. Ry. Co., 101 S. W. 476, 477, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 664.

Where the city established an alleyway without a culvert or drain, which caused surface water to back up on plaintiff's premises, it is liable under the direct provisions of Const. § 242, which allows compensation for property injured or destroyed, as well as that taken, for a public use. Ewing v. City of Louisville, 131 S. W. 1016, 1017, 140 Ky. 726, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 612.

As injure

The change in Const. 1869, art. 5, § 14, made in 1902, so as to prohibit any law whereby property shall be taken or damaged for public uses without just compensation by inserting the words "or damaged," was intended to enlarge the right to compensation and to give a remedy for every physical injury to property whether by noise, smoke, gases, vibrations, or otherwise. The words "damaged," "injured," and "injuriously affected," when used in this connection, are generally regarded as equivalents. Tidewater Ry. Co. v. Shartzler, 59 S. E. 407, 408, 409, 107 Va. 562, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1063.

The word "damaged," as used in a constitutional provision that no person's property shall be taken, damaged, or destroyed for public use without adequate compensation, applies to injury suffered by particular property or a right only in common with other property or rights in the same community or section by reason of the existence of the public work, and does not authorize a recovery where no damage is done to property except such as is suffered by the same community or section by reason of the general fact that the public work exists. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Powell (Tex.) 125 S. W. 330, 331 (citing Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Fuller, 63 Tex. 467; Gainesville, H. & W. Ry. Co. v. Hall, 14 S. W. 259, 78 Tex. 169, 9 L. R. A. 298, 22 Am. St. Rep. 42).

DAMASK

See Cotton Table Damask.

DAMN RASCAL

The term "damn rascal" is opprobrious and is one of the strongest expressions to convey the idea of moral turpitude. Smith Bros. & Co. v. W. C. Agee & Co. (Ala.) 59 South. 647, 649.

DAMNUM

See Damage—Damages.

There is a distinction between "damnum" and "injuria." The former means only harm, hurt, loss, damage; while the latter comes from "in," against, and "jus," right, and means something done against the right of the party, producing damage, and has no reference to the fact of the amount of damage. King v. Lamborn, 186 Fed. 21, 28, 108 C. C. A. 123.

DAMNUM ABSQUE INJURIA

An injury to plaintiff not flowing from the wrongful act of any one is "damnum absque injuria." Brooks v. Cedar Brook & S. C. R. Imp. Co., 19 Atl. 87, 82 Me. 17, 7 L. R. A. 460, 17 Am. St. Rep. 459.

Where a parcel license to construct a dam and an irrigation ditch on one's land is revoked by the licensor granting a railroad right of way across the land to the extent that the license is interfered with by the construction of the railroad as authorized by the grant, any injury to the licensee resulting from such construction is "damnum absque injuria." Archer v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 108 Pac. 571, 575, 41 Mont. 56, 137 Am. St. Rep. 692.

"The right to damages constituting a legal cause of action requires the concurrence of two things: That the party claiming them has suffered an injury; and that there is some person who is legally answerable for having caused it. If one suffers an injury for which no one is liable, it gives no legal claim for damages. It is 'damnum absque injuria.'" Again: "Where there has been no violation of a right, the situation is described as 'damnum absque injuria,' in which circumstances a recovery is not permitted no matter to what extent plaintiff may have sustained damages." Brunson v. Southwestern Development Co., 104 S. W. 593, 597, 7 Ind. T. 209 (quoting and adopting definitions in Suth. Dam. [3d Ed.] § 3; Wats. Dam. § 2).

Where each party is equally innocent of a mistake as to facts with reference to which they act, and there is no concealment of facts which the other party had a right to know, and no surprise or imposition exists, the mistake or ignorance, whether mutual or unilateral, is "damnum absque injuria." Cohen v. Numsen, 65 Atl. 432, 433, 104 Md. 676.

"A channel or other depression in the ground forming the bank of a river through which water escapes and flows from the river only at times of high water does not constitute a natural water course, and obstructing the flow of water therein from the river, to the injury of another, is 'damnum absque injuria.'" Cole v. Missouri, K. & O. R. Co., 94 Pac. 540, 542, 20 Okl. 227 (quoting Singleton v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 72 Pac. 786, 67 Kan. 234; Abbott v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 83 Mo. 272, 53 Am. Rep. 581).

When, under the provisions of the Maine Milldam Act, a milldam has been legally erected across a nonnavigable river, and the location of such dam is neither illegal nor wrongful, and such dam has been constructed in a suitable, skillful, and proper manner, and is in no way defective or inadequate for the purpose for which it was constructed, and the owners of such dam have neither unreasonably, negligently, nor wantonly discharged the head of water accumulated by such dam, but by reason of such dam the current or flow of such river has been deflected towards the shore, thereby causing injury to a highway along the bank, such damage is the "damnum absque injuria" of the common law. Inhabitants of Durham v. Lisbon Falls Fiber Co., 61 Atl. 177, 180, 100 Me. 238.

The rule of "damnum absque injuria" requires that an injury occurring from a slight defect in a city street be charged to the carelessness of the traveler or to unavoidable mischance, rather than to the treasury of the city. Gastel v. City of New York, 86 N. E. 833, 834, 194 N. Y. 15, 128 Am. St. Rep. 540, 16 Ann. Cas. 635.

Every man has the right to the actual use and enjoyment of his own property, and if, while in such actual use and enjoyment and without negligence or malice on his part, an unavoidable loss occurs to his neighbor, it is "damnum absque injuria"; for the rightful use of lands by its owner may cause damage to another without any legal wrong. Where defendants operated a coal mine near a tributary of a stream, and pumped water from its mine and conveyed it by pipe 75 feet and emptied it into a drain from which the water flowed naturally into the stream, rendering it unfit for plaintiff's purposes and injurious to the boiler in his mill, the defendant was liable. H. B. Bowling Coal Co. v. Ruffner, 100 S. W. 116, 118, 117 Tenn. 180, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 923, 10 Ann. Cas. 581.

Mere consequential injuries to an owner of property claimed to have been damaged by a public improvement, arising from discomfort, disturbance, injury to the business, and the like, remain, as before, "damna absque injuria"—particular sacrifices which society has the right to inflict for the public good. The true question is whether the causes complained of have substantially damaged the value of the property by diminishing its market value for rental or sale. Helmer v. Colorado Southern, N. O. & P. R. Co., 47 South. 443, 444, 122 La. 141 (citing McMahon v. St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co., 6 South. 640, 41 La. Ann. 827).

The question of admiralty jurisdiction over a tort occurring partly on land and partly on water is determined by the place of the consummation and substance of the injury. This latter element of the wrong is necessarily the only substantial cause of action; otherwise it would be "damnum absque injuria." Hermann v. Port Blakely Mill Co., 69 Fed. 646, 651.

If the Legislature, acting within constitutional limitations, directs or authorizes the doing of a particular thing, the doing of it in the authorized way and without negligence cannot as a general rule be wrongful. If damage results as a consequence of its being done, it is "damnum absque injuria." Lund v. St. Paul, M. & M. Ry. Co., 71 Pac. 1032, 1034, 31 Wash. 286, 61 L. R. A. 506, 96 Am. St. Rep. 906.

The injuries resulting to the estate below from the act of the proprietor of the estate above in discharging into a natural drain the waste oil and salt water proceeding from the wells sunk on his premises is not "damnum absque injuria." McFarlain v.

Jennings-Heywood Oil Syndicate, 43 South. 155, 156, 118 La. 537 (citing Civ. Code, art. 660).

Incidental damage resulting from the proper exercise of functions for which defendant is not responsible is "damnum absque injuria." City of Newark v. Hatt, 71 Atl. 330, 331, 77 N. J. Law, 48 (citing Marcus Sayre Co. v. Newark, 45 Atl. 985, 60 N. J. Eq. 361, 367).

"An innocent person upon an accusation of crime may be arrested and ruined in his career, and the damage he thus sustains is 'damnum absque injuria,' unless the case is such that he can maintain an action for malicious prosecution or false imprisonment. He is exposed to the risk of such a damage by being a member of an organization or society, and his compensation for such risk may be found in the general welfare which the society is organized to promote." Pleasants v. Smith, 43 South. 475, 476, 90 Miss. 440, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 173, 122 Am. St. Rep. 317 (quoted and adopted from Davis v. Soc. for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, 75 N. Y. 362).

"Damnum absque injuria" is a loss for which the law provides no remedy. Where a brick manufacturing plant constitutes a nuisance to an adjoining landowner, causing damage to his crops by escaping gases from the kilns, the use is not damnum absque injuria. Powell v. Brookfield Pressed Brick, etc., Mfg. Co., 78 S. W. 646, 649, 104 Mo. App. 713.

Any incidental damages resulting to members of the public, from the exercise of a lawful privilege granted for the public good, beyond that caused to their property against which they are protected by the Constitution, is to be regarded as "damnum absque injuria," which must be borne because the work which inflicts it is authorized by law for the general welfare. St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Shaw, 92 S. W. 30, 99 Tex. 559, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 245, 122 Am. St. Rep. 663.

Where a railroad is constructed and maintained along a highway in front of a man's land, he may recover damages for such obstruction or impairment of his rights and easement in the public highway as constitute damages peculiar to himself, and independent of such damages as he sustained in common with the public, but he cannot recover damages for those general inconveniences which he is subjected to in common with the public. He can recover for such damages as are not "damnum absque injuria." Smith v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 79 Pac. 868, 146 Cal. 164, 106 Am. St. Rep. 17.

The damages from lawful acts inspired by malice and bad motive is in the eye of the law "damnum absque injuria." Standard Oil Co. v. Doyle, 82 S. W. 271, 273, 118 Ky. 662, 111 Am. St. Rep. 331.

Injury to surface water or springs by mining, either from adjoining lands or from underneath the surface of the particular land, is "damnum absque injuria" when the mining is done in a competent and workmanlike manner. Weaver v. Berwind-White Coal Co., 65 Atl. 545, 548, 216 Pa. 195.

DAMNUM PRÆDICTUM ET MALUM SECUTUM

"Verbal expressions by a person contemplating crime are sometimes thrown out voluntarily and purposely, but in so obscure and intangible a form as to amount to nothing more than mere general intimations. They are, in fact, parts of a system of preparation, but of the most preliminary kind, intended to explore the way for more direct action in the future. The criminal ventures no further than to hint at or obscurely allude to the act he has in contemplation. But, notwithstanding the art which may be employed, they frequently fall of their intended effect, from the mere want of the art to conceal it. Their essential clumsiness is sometimes manifest, and the result of their utterance is the very reverse of that intended, namely, to fix attention upon the party uttering them, and thus to establish between him and the event alluded to the very connection he seeks to avoid. Hence, when the event comes to happen, the expression anticipating it is at once remembered. There is what the civilians would call 'damnum prædictum et malum secutum'—a very pregnant and reasonable ground of suspicion. On this account, expressions of this kind often become important, as elements of circumstantial evidence, constituting a material link in the chain of precedent circumstances tending to fix a crime charged upon the party accused of its commission." On trial for arson, evidence that defendant and his co-indictee were at the store which was burned, after business hours, and some time before the burning; that defendant was seen prowling about the place, taking note of localities and objects; that, in conversation with different persons, he made covert threats, verbal intimations, and declarations of intention, so-called—is admissible, as tending to connect defendant with the burning. State v. Crawford, 12 S. W. 354, 355, 99 Mo. 74 (quoting and adopting definition in Burrill, Circ. Ev. [3d Ed.] 333-335).

DANCE HALL

An open-air dancing pavilion in a private amusement park conducted for profit is not a "dance hall," within New Orleans City Charter, § 21, as amended by Act No. 99 of 1904, providing that the city council shall not grant any privilege for the opening of any barroom, saloon, concert saloon, or dance hall, except upon the written consent of a majority of the property holders within a certain radius. Israel v. City of New Orleans, 58 South. 850, 851, 180 La. 980.

Rev. Laws 1905, § 4936, provides that one who permits any person under the age of 21 years to be or remain in a dance house owned, kept, and managed by him shall be guilty of a misdemeanor but does not define a "dance house." Held, that the term must be construed, in accordance with its ordinary usage, as a place maintained for promiscuous and public dancing, the rule of admission to which is not based upon personal selection or invitation. State v. Rosenfield, 126 N. W. 1068, 1069, 111 Minn. 301, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 331, 137 Am. St. Rep. 557.

A railroad track is a place of constant and almost imminent "danger," as a man in possession of his natural faculties must presumptively know. Beach v. Southern Ry. Co., 61 S. E. 664, 665, 148 N. C. 153.

In a special finding of a jury, that when defendant shot plaintiff the "danger" to defendant's father was not such as to induce a person exercising reasonable and proper judgment to interfere in order to prevent the consummation of such injury, the word "danger" meant "apparent danger," and hence was a finding against defendant's claim that he acted in the reasonable belief that his aid was necessary to prevent injury to his father, although in fact there was no real danger. Sloan v. Pierce, 85 Pac. 812, 813, 74 Kan. 65.

DANGERS OF NAVIGATION

The phrases "dangers of the sea" and "dangers of navigation" and "perils of the seas" do not indicate any different intent as used in exceptions in bills of lading, and all are treated as convertible terms. The exception, however, does not embrace losses flowing from culpable or negligent stowage of cargo or other improper acts of the master which are proximate causes of loss. Baxter v. Leland, 2 Fed. Cas. 1043, 1049, 1 Abb. Adm. 348.

Inevitable dangers

"Dangers of navigation" or "perils of the sea," as used in bills of lading or concerning shipping, mean only those dangers which are inevitable, and do not excuse the vessel from liability for loss caused by negligence. Pettyjohn v. Oregon Coal & Navigation Co., 113 Pac. 438, 440, 58 Or. 392.

DANGERS OF THE SEA

See Perils of the Sea.

DANGEROUS

See Manifestly Dangerous; Palpably Dangerous; Unsafe and Dangerous.

The word "dangerous," as applied to appliances furnished by a master to his servant, means not reasonably safe. Rigsby v. Oil Well Supply Co., 108 S. W. 1123, 1131, 180 Mo. App. 128.

Where a pedestrian sued for injuries sustained by his coming in contact with the tongue of a wagon left in a city street at night, an instruction that, if the street, by reason of the existence of the wagon and tongue thereon, was rendered "dangerous and unsafe," etc., was not objectionable as imposing a greater duty on the city than the law required; the words "dangerous and unsafe" being equivalent to a statement that the street was not thereby "reasonably safe." Hall v. City of St. Joseph, 146 S. W. 458, 461, 163 Mo. App. 214.

DANGEROUS AGENCY

"Railroad torpedoes" are loaded with some high explosive, and with a sufficient amount thereof to cause a loud explosion; and they are "dangerous agencies," as respects the liability of the railroad company for injuries to children caused by their explosion. Euting v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 92 N. W. 358, 359, 116 Wis. 13, 60 L. R. A. 158, 96 Am. St. Rep. 936.

DANGEROUS ALLUREMENT

A reservoir owned by a waterworks company, without circumstances making it especially hazardous or enticing to children, is not a dangerous allurement, and the owner thereof is under no more obligation to infant trespassers in respect thereto than to adults. Akron Waterworks Co. v. Swartz, 28 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 627, 633.

DANGEROUS CALLING

Where defendant contracted with a city to furnish water for fire and other purposes, it did not thereby enter into a "public calling" in any sense different from the public duty to supply the city with water with which it could combat fire; nor was the water company's business a "dangerous calling," so as to impose upon it a duty to property owners within the city to furnish proper fire pressure so that for mere nonfeasance property owners damaged could recover against it in tort. German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Home Water Supply Co., 174 Fed. 764, 769, 99 C. C. A. 258.

DANGEROUS CONDITION

Any dangerous condition, see Any.

A horse race upon a street is not a defect or want of repair therein, or a dangerous condition thereof, for which the city is liable to a traveler upon the street struck by one of the horses. Marth v. City of Kingfisher, 98 Pac. 436, 442, 22 Okl. 602, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1238.

DANGEROUS DEVICE

An automobile is an ordinary vehicle of pleasure and business and is not necessarily a "dangerous device," being no more dangerous per se than a team of horses and a carriage, or a gun, sailboat, or motor launch. Cunningham v. Castle, 111 N. Y. Supp. 1057, 1061, 127 App. Div. 580.

DANGEROUS EMBANKMENT

Where plaintiff was injured by the overturning of her sleigh while passing through a cut in a highway, caused by alleged defective banks sloping to the wrought surface of the highway, such cut was not a "dangerous embankment and defective railing" within Laws 1893, p. 47, § 1, providing that towns shall be liable for damages happening to a person traveling upon a dangerous embankment and defective railing on any highway by reason of any defect rendering it unsuitable for travel. Miner v. Town of Hopkinton, 60 Atl. 433, 434, 73 N. H. 232.

Under Laws 1893, p. 47, authorizing actions against towns for injuries by defects in a bridge, culvert, or sluiceway, or dangerous embankments and defective railings, the steps leading from a sidewalk to the crosswalk over a street is not a "dangerous embankment" for which railings must be provided. Wentworth v. Town of Pittsfield, 62 Atl. 218, 219, 73 N. H. 358.

DANGEROUS ESTABLISHMENT

Any other dangerous establishment, see Any Other.

DANGEROUS EXPOSURE

"Dangerous exposure," as affecting the responsibility for so exposing a vessel or its tackle that it is liable to injure another vessel, means an exposure that is clearly liable to receive or inflict injury in the ordinary chances, mistakes, or hazards of navigation, such as are to be reasonably apprehended as liable to arise. The Overbrook, 142 Fed. 950, 952, 74 C. C. A. 120 (quoting and adopting the definition in The Mary Powell, 31 Fed. 622; Id., 36 Fed. 598).

DANGEROUS INSTRUMENT

See Turntable.

DANGEROUS INSTRUMENTALITY

A team of mules, drawing a wagon partially loaded with lumber, and driven by a negro boy 17 years old, is not a "dangerous instrumentality," so as to render the owner of the team liable for the death of a boy 10 years old, riding in the wagon at the invitation of the driver, caused by the running away of the team, irrespective of whether the invitation of the driver was within the scope of his employment. Dover v. Mayes Mfg. Co., 72 S. E. 1067, 1070, 157 N. C. 324.

DANGEROUS IN THEMSELVES

"An attempt has been made in a very few illogically reasoned cases to draw a distinction between instrumentalities 'dangerous in themselves,' and those dangerous by reason of improper use, and confine the master's liability to cases due to mismanagement of the former class alone. An analysis will show that the distinction is more imaginary than real, and too refined to be of any practical benefit as a method of determining legal responsibility. The argument has a degree of plausibility when limited to agencies inherently dangerous, even when most carefully handled, such as dynamite and similar substances, as distinguished from those of like character, such as gasoline, naphtha, and the like, only dangerous when proper precautions are not observed; but the sophistry of the argument becomes apparent and refutes itself when we come to the consideration of dangerous engines, machinery, or appliances. No appliance is dangerous of itself, but practically every appliance may become dangerous by improper use. * * * No appliance when at rest is dangerous in itself. It is by operation alone that it becomes capable of causing injury." Whether a railroad tricycle speeding along the track was a dangerous instrumentality, within the rule holding the master liable for injuries caused by a servant in the use of a dangerous instrumentality, was a question for the jury. Barmore v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co., 38 South. 210, 215, 85 Miss. 426, 70 L. R. A. 627, 3 Ann. Cas. 594.

DANGEROUS MACHINERY

A conveyor hoist in a tool factory consisted of pans on which tools were placed for transportation up and down, moving at the rate of about one foot per second. It was perfectly safe to operate so long as the person using it did not place some portion of his body inside the conveyor shaft between the pans, and keep it there for a sufficient length of time to allow the succeeding pans to strike him. Held, that such conveyor was not a "dangerous machine" as distinguished from an ordinary elevator or other moving machine in a factory, so as to render a master liable for injuries to a minor servant under 18 years of age while negligently operating the conveyor under Labor

Law (Laws 1897, c. 415) § 81, as amended by Laws 1899, c. 192, providing that no male person under the age of 18 years shall be permitted to operate or assist in operating dangerous machinery of any kind. Gallenkamp v. Garvin Mach. Co. (N. Y.) 99 N. E. 718, 720; Id., 86 N. Y. Supp. 378, 380, 91 App. Div. 141.

Plaintiff, an oller of machinery on a coal dock, was injured by his hand becoming caught in a grooved cable wheel while oiling it with a swab attached to a stick, and during such operation, under ordinary conditions, his hand would not come closer to the set screws and shaft than from 12 to 15 inches. Held, that such wheel and screw were not so located as to be dangerous to employes in the discharge of their duty within St. 1898, § 1636j, requiring it to be securely guarded or fenced. Gulland v. Northern Coal & Dock Co., 132 N. W. 755, 756, 147 Wis. 391.

A set screw attached to a revolving shaft in such a position that it may be dangerous to employes necessarily about the machinery renders the machinery dangerous, within St. 1898, § 1636j, providing that the machinery therein specified, when so located as to be dangerous to employes in the discharge of their duty, must be securely guarded or fenced. Monahan v. Fairbanks-Morse Mfg. Co., 132 N. W. 983, 986, 147 Wis. 104.

Whether a machine was dangerous depended upon whether, in the ordinary course of operation, danger to the operator was to be reasonably anticipated; and hence, in an action for personal injuries, the exclusion of evidence that a machine had been in operation about 1½ years without accident, and also that for more than 20 years the defendant had been using some 20 similar machines without accident, was error. Bachmann v. Little, 137 N. Y. Supp. 699, 701, 152 App. Div. 811.

DANGEROUS OCCUPATION

The operation of a freight elevator is a "dangerous occupation," within the meaning of Pub. Acts 1901, p. 157, No. 113, § 3, providing that no child under 16 years of age shall be employed at an employment whereby its life or limb is endangered. Braasch v. Michigan Stove Co., 118 N. W. 366, 367, 153 Mich. 652, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 500.

Gen. St. 1909, §§ 5095, 5098, relating to employment of persons under 16 years of age in dangerous places and providing a penalty for its violation, an employe less than 16 years old injured at such an occupation may recover damages, though the statute does not in terms give a right of action. An occupation is dangerous within such statute whenever there is reason to anticipate injury to the person engaged in it, whether from the inherent character of the work or the manner in which it is carried on, though the danger may be eliminated by due care by the employe. Casteel v. Pittsburg Vitriified Paving & Building Brick Co., 112 Pac. 145, 146, 83 Kan. 533.

A 15 year old boy, employed in a sawmill where shafts, saws, pulleys, and other machinery driven by steam was operated, was engaged in a "dangerous occupation," within the meaning of the statute requiring permits from school superintendents in order to entitle one to employ a child of school age to work at a dangerous occupation. Jacobson v. Merrill & Ring Mill Co., 119 N. W. 510, 511, 107 Minn. 74, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 309.

DANGEROUS PROXIMITY

Allegations of the complaint, in an employe's action for personal injuries from unguarded cogwheels in a rolling mill, that plaintiff and other employes were required to work near the wheels, and that, at the time of the accident, plaintiff was directed to do work requiring him to be very near them, sufficiently declared that the employes were required to work in "dangerous proximity" to the unguarded cogwheels. King v. Inland Steel Co., 96 N. E. 337, 339, 177 Ind. 201.

DANGEROUS SITUATION

A "dangerous situation" is one from which danger or accident may be reasonably apprehended, not may possibly happen. Hancock v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 601, 605, 100 App. Div. 181.

DANGEROUS WEAPON

See Assault with Dangerous or Deadly Weapon.

"A 'dangerous weapon' is one likely to produce death or do great bodily harm." In Blish. St. Crimes (3d Ed.) § 320, it is said that the phrase is a milder term than "deadly weapon." While it is more correct to use the statutory word "dangerous" than the word "deadly," the use of the word "deadly" in the charge to the jury in a homicide case does not constitute an error of which the accused can complain. Clemons v. State, 37 South. 647, 650, 48 Fla. 9.

"A 'dangerous weapon' is one likely to produce death or great bodily injury, * * * or perhaps it is more accurately described as a weapon which, in the manner it is used or attempted to be used, endangers life or inflicts great bodily harm." The mere pointing of an unloaded pistol at another does not constitute the crime of assault with a dangerous weapon. One who, within shooting distance of another, points at him a pistol apparently loaded, and believed to be loaded by the person at whom it is pointed, commits a criminal assault, although the pistol is not in fact loaded. Price v. United States, 156 Fed. 950, 952, 85 C. C. A. 247, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1272, 13 Ann. Cas. 483 (quoting and adopting the definition in United States v. Williams, 2 Fed. 64).

A "dangerous weapon" is any weapon dangerous to life as actually used. State v. Edmunds, 104 N. W. 1115, 1117, 20 S. D. 135 (citing And. Law Dict. 1110).

Hatchet

Where accused struck his wife several times on the head with a hatchet, causing wounds from which she did not recover for considerable time, and a physician testified that the wounds were all serious, and that the hatchet in the hands of a strong man like accused was a weapon with which a person could be killed, it was sufficiently shown to be a "dangerous weapon." Stanton v. State (Tex.) 151 S. W. 808, 809.

Pistol

"An empty revolver merely pointed at a person and not used to strike with is not a 'dangerous weapon,' however much the person at whom it is pointed may be in fear. A loaded revolver pointed at a person within shooting distance is a dangerous weapon as a matter of law." Lipscomb v. State, 109 N. W. 986, 988, 130 Wis. 238.

A loaded revolver is a "dangerous weapon," within the meaning of Pen. Code, § 189, defining manslaughter in the first degree as a homicide committed without a design to effect death by a person in the heat of passion by the means of a "dangerous weapon." People v. Granger, 79 N. E. 833, 834, 187 N. Y. 67.

DARDANARI

Under the Roman law persons who monopolized grain and other produce of the earth were called "dardanarii." State v. Eastern Coal Co. (R. I.) 70 Atl. 1, 4.

DARK BAY

An indictment for obtaining credit under false representations by mortgaging a "dark bay" mule is not sustained by proof that the mule was a "mouse-colored" mule. Berrien v. State, 9 S. E. 609, 83 Ga. 381.

DASH

An instruction, in an action against a railroad for personal injuries resulting from the frightening of plaintiff's team at a crossing, that if defendant's train dashed out from behind box cars on the track in view of plaintiff's team, and made unnecessary noise by the escape of steam, defendant failed to exercise ordinary care, was objectionable as being an instruction on the weight of the evidence, the word "dash" meaning to draw with violence or haste; to rush with violence; to strike violently; to shatter. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Burk (Tex.) 146 S. W. 600, 603.

Such date, see Such.

Where a benefit certificate, executed as a substitute for the original certificate bearing the date of the original certificate, stipulated that it should be invalid on the suicide of a member within three years from the date of the certificate, the date referred to the time specified in the original certificate, the word "date" indicating the time fixed; and hence the suicide of the member more than three years from the date of the original certificate did not invalidate the substituted certificate. Wood v. Brotherhood of American Yeoman, 126 N. W. 949, 950, 148 Iowa, 400.

As day, month, and year

The term "date," as used in a statute requiring an instrument to be dated, means the day, month, and year, and giving the year alone is insufficient. In re Price's Estate, 112 Pac. 482, 483, 14 Cal. App. 462.

Under statute requiring holographic will to be "dated" by testator, such a will is sufficiently dated which gives the day, month, and year, though not the place of execution. Stead v. Curtis, 191 Fed. 529, 537, 112 C. C. A. 463.

As referring to fraction of day

"The common law knows of no fractions of a day; custom, however, and that introduced, too, principally by banks, has limited the 'day' to a few hours of business. This and whatever other rules have been adopted by consent, and merely for the convenience of commercial men, are departures from the common-law doctrine." Renner v. Bank of Columbia, 9 Wheat. [22 U. S.] 581, 585, 6 L. Ed. 166.

Of arrival

In rules of a railroad company requiring the payment of demurrage on cars where more than a stated number of days elapse "between the date of arrival of each car and date released," the phrase "date of arrival" must be construed in its ordinary sense, as meaning the date on which the car in fact arrives at its point of destination, and not the date on which the consignee receives notice of such arrival, and "date released" as meaning the date when the car becomes again available for use by the company. Hite v. Central R. Co. of New Jersey, 171 Fed. 370, 372, 96 C. C. A. 326.

Of bankruptcy

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, subd. 4, 30 Stat. 544, defines a bankrupt as a person against whom an involuntary petition has been filed, and subdivision 10, 30 Stat. 544, defines the terms "date of bankruptcy," "time of bankruptcy," or "commencement of proceedings," or "bankruptcy," with reference to time, to mean the date when the petition is filed. Section 8, 30 Stat. 549, declares that the death of a bankrupt shall not abate the proceedings. Held, that the death of a bankrupt after the filing of an involuntary petition against him, though prior to service, does not abate the proceedings. Shute v. Patterson, 147 Fed. 509, 510, 78 C. C. A. 75 (citing In re Hicks, 107 Fed. 910; Scheuer v. Smith & Montgomery Book & Stationery Co., 50 C. C. A. 312, 112 Fed. 406).

Of commencement of action

Where a petition for mandamus to compel the restoration of petitioner's name to the pay roll as a policeman stated no cause of action, and after adverse rulings on precisely similar petitions in other cases was withdrawn, and an amended petition filed, the date of filing of the amended petition was to be taken as the "date of the commencement of the action" for the purpose of determining whether petitioner was guilty of laches. Kenneally v. City of Chicago, 77 N. E. 155, 162, 220 Ill. 485.

Of deed

The "date" of a deed is the date of its acknowledgment. Northern Coal & Coke Co. v. Bates, 143 S. W. 13, 15, 146 Ky. 624.

Of finding

The "date of the finding" of an indictment is the date of its return and presentation to the court. State v. Pelouquin, 76 Atl. 888, 889, 106 Me. 358.

Of issue

"Date of issue," when applied to notes, bonds, etc., of a series, ordinarily means the arbitrary date fixed as the beginning of the term for which they run, without reference to the precise time when convenience or the state of the market may permit of their sale or delivery. * * * It was a fair contract. There can be no wrong done if the term of some of the bonds in the hands of the purchasers is something less than twenty years." Wright v. East Riverside Irr. Dist., 138 Fed. 313, 324, 70 C. C. A. 603 (quoting and adopting Yesler v. City of Seattle, 25 Pac. 1014, 1 Wash. 308).

Of notice

Under an insurance certificate providing that assessments should be paid within 30 days from the "date of the notice," the notice does not mean the printed paper merely, but the information thereby conveyed to the insured, and the "date of the notice" is not the date of the paper, but, when sent by mail, is the date on which it was or should have been received by insured in the due and regular course of the mails. Ferrenbach v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n, 121 Fed. 945, 947, 59 C. C. A. 307.

Of patent

Choctaw-Chickasaw Supplemental Agreement July 1, 1902, c. 1362, 32 Stat. 643, § 16, provides that "all lands allotted to members of said tribes, except such land as is set aside to each for a homestead as herein provided, shall be alienable after issuance of patent as follows: One-fourth in acreage in one year; one-fourth in acreage in three years and the balance in five years, in each case from date of patent." Allotments to members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes were made under what is known as the Atoka Agreement, embodied in Curtis Act June 28, 1898, c. 517, 30 Stat. 495, and such Supplemental Agreement. The Curtis Act provided that patents to the allottees should be jointly executed and delivered by the Principal Chief of the Choctaw Nation and the Governor of the Chickasaw Nation, and the Supplemental Agreement made no change in that respect. There was no provision in either of the agreements, as there was in those with the Creeks and Cherokees, requiring the patents to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior. Held, that in view of the provision of Act March 3, 1893, c. 209, 27 Stat. 645, authorizing generally allotments in severalty of the lands of the Five Civilized Tribes, that upon such allotment the reversionary interest of the United States in the lands allotted "shall be relinquished and shall cease," there was no necessity for such approval to operate as a relinquishment of that interest, and that the "date of patent" referred to in said section 16 of the Supplemental Agreement, from which the periods of restriction were to run, was the date when the patent was signed by the second of the two chief executives of the tribes. In re Lands of Five Civilized Tribes, 199 Fed. 811, 817.

Of subscription

A railroad proposed that a city subscribe for certain of its stock to aid in the construction, on condition that the road be completed to a certain point within 24 months "from the date of the subscription." After an election resulting in favor of the proposition, a resolution of the city council was passed August 15, 1901, directing the mayor to subscribe for the stock, but no subscription was actually made until April 15, 1902. Held, that the subscription was not completed until the latter date, from which the time within which the railroad was bound to complete its line began to run, and not from the date of the passage of the resolution. Red River Furnace Co. v. Tennessee Cent. R. Co., 87 S. W. 1016, 1020, 113 Tenn. 697.

Of will

The Century Dictionary defines the verb "date," "to mark with a date, as a letter or writing." Held, that an olographic will, defined by Civ. Code, § 1277, as one that is entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of the testator himself, is not rendered invalid by the fact that the date therein written is erroneous, and not the date on which the will was actually written. In re Fay's

Estate, 78 Pac. 340, 341, 145 Cal. 82, 104 Am. St. Rep. 17.

DATE RELEASED

A coal company contracted with a railroad company for the carriage of coal from the mines to tidewater, where the coal was loaded on vessels. When cars arrived at tidewater, they were placed in the railroad company's yards until a vessel of the shipper was ready to load, when it registered at the railroad company's pier and such company placed it in a berth and ran the cars out on the pier and dumped the coal into the vessel as a part of the transportation. There was delay at times in the arrival of the vessel and placing it in the berth. The schedule of rules respecting charges filed by the railroad company with the Interstate Commerce Commission required the payment of demurrage when there was an average detention of cars for more than five days, computed on the basis of the time between the date of arrival of each car and "date released." The date of arrival meant the time of the arrival of the car in the yards and not upon the pier, nor the time when notice of arrival was given the shipper's agent, and "date released" did not mean date when the car was unloaded, but the date when the shipper's vessel was registered at the pier as ready to load. Hite v. Central R. of New Jersey, 171 Fed. 370, 374, 375, 96 C. C. A. 326.

DAUGHTER

See Stepdaughter.

The word "daughter," as used in Code, § 4936, declaring intercourse with a daughter to be incest, indicates relationship without reference to whether it is legitimate or not. State v. Goodsell, 116 N. W. 605, 606, 138 Iowa, 504.

The word "daughters" is not a technical, legal term, to which a fixed and determined meaning must be given regardless of the sense in which it is employed, but is flexible and subject to construction, to give effect to the intention of the testator. Connor v. Gardner, 82 N. E. 640, 644, 230 Ill. 258, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 73.

DAY

See Calendar Day; Clear Days; Election Day; First Day of the Term; From Day to Day; Law Day; Rainy Days; Return Day; Secular or Business Day; Sunday; Weather Working Day; Working Days.

Every day, see Every.

Successive days, see Successive.

Under section 79 of the election statute, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquor on an election day, the word "day" includes as well the hours before the opening and after the closing of the polls as those during which the same are open. Aimo v. People, 122 Ill. App. 398, 400.

Under section 83, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, 30 Stat. 213, prescribing that "on and after the day" when the act went into effect the duties provided by the act should be applicable to goods previously imported for which no entry has been made, the word "day" refers to the time or moment when the act took effect; and merchandise imported on that day would not escape the application of the act, unless it was also entered before the act became effective. Hartwell Lumber Co. v. United States, 128 Fed. 306, 308; United States v. Edwin S. Hartwell Lumber Co., 142 Fed. 432, 435, 73 C. C. A. 548.

An acrobatic performer's contract provided that she would receive $300 at the end of each "week" after the last performance on Saturday for services rendered, to be performed at such theaters and such other places and on such "days" as might be determined by plaintiff. Held, that it was no objection to the enforcement of such contract by injunction that it provided for exhibitions on Sunday, since, if such exhibitions were prohibited, the words "days" and "week" as used in the contract would be construed to mean week days only. Keith v. Kellermann, 169 Fed. 196, 201.

The "days" referred to in the Louisiana statute providing that the accused shall be served with a copy of the information two "days" before the trial are not required to be "judicial days." State v. Baudoin, 40 South. 239, 115 La. 837.

As calendar day

Ordinarily a contract by the day means the calendar day, or hours of a calendar day ordinarily used. Collins v. Carlin, 106 N. Y. Supp. 235, 236, 121 App. Div. 524.

Laws 1905, p. 161, c. 103, § 3, in relation to the sale of school lands, provides that the envelope in which a purchaser makes his bid shall be preserved by the commissioner of the land office without being opened until the day following the date when the land comes on the market. Held, that the word "day" does not mean the next calendar day, but the next day on which the land office is required to be open; and where the next calendar day was a legal holiday, it was proper to make the opening on the day following. Fessenden v. Terrell, 98 S. W. 640, 100 Tex. 273.

The word "day," as used in St. 1898, § 2454, as amended by Laws 1903, p. 81, c. 45, limiting the compensation of the county judge to $5 per day for each day actually engaged in matters not appertaining to probate business, means a calendar day, and he cannot, by working over hours, entitle himself to more than the per diem allowance for one calendar day. Hoffman v. Lincoln County, 118 N. W. 850, 852, 137 Wis. 353.

The term "three days," in Const. art. 4, § 12, providing that if any bill presented to the Governor is not returned to the house in which it originated within three days, Sundays excepted, it shall become a law, was not employed to denote in all cases three calendar days. It denotes a period which cannot end except upon a day when the house to which the provision refers is or has been in session. State ex rel. Town of Norwalk v. Town of South Norwalk, 58 Atl. 759, 760, 77 Conn. 257.

As from midnight to midnight

Unless the contrary is fixed by statute, a "day" extends over the 24 hours from one midnight to the next midnight. State v. Richardson, 109 N. W. 1026, 1029, 16 N. D. 1.

Rev. St. 1899, § 3011, provides for the punishment of licensed dramshop keepers who keep open on the day of any general election. In a prosecution of a dramshop keeper for opening at 6 o'clock p. m., after the polls were closed on a day of general election, held, that under Rev. St. 1899, § 4160, requiring words and phrases to be taken in their usual sense, "the day" consisted of 24 hours, commencing and terminating at midnight, although the polls are to be open only from 7 o'clock a. m. until 6 o'clock p. m., or until sundown, as provided by section 6991. State v. Meagher, 101 S. W. 634, 635, 124 Mo. App. 333.

A "day" constitutes 24 hours, extending from midnight to midnight. Muckenfuss v. State, 116 S. W. 51, 52, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 229, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 783, 131 Am. St. Rep. 813, 16 Ann. Cas. 768.

A legal day commences at 12 o'clock midnight, and continues until the same hour the following night. Cheek v. Preston, 72 N. E. 1048, 1049, 34 Ind. App. 343.

As indivisible point of time

"The law does not take notice of a part of a 'day.' Its division of time into days is to allot, say, 24 hours to the day; each day ending at midnight. So a day in law may be very much less than 24 hours. It may, of course, be less in fact than one hour, or even one minute. Where time is an element of a fact, its beginning is deemed to have been coincident with the first moment of the day of the event. * * * Hence one born on June 9, 1888, at 11:59 p. m., is deemed in law to have been born on the first moment of that day. By like rule, on the first moment of June 8, 1904, he has encompassed 21 complete years, although, as a matter of fact, we see that he lacks 47 hours and 58 minutes of having done so." Erwin v. Benton, 87 S. W. 291, 294, 120 Ky. 536, 9 Ann. Cas. 264.

The word "days," as used in Pol. Code, § 1192, as amended in 1901, providing that certificates of party nominations may be filed not less than 20 days before the day of election, refers to a day as a unit of time and not as an aggregation of a certain number of hours, minutes, or seconds. A certificate of party nominations offered for filing on October 17th, containing the names of persons to be voted for at an election on November 6th, was in time. Cosgriff v. Board of Election Com'rs of City and County of San Francisco, 91 Pac. 98, 99, 151 Cal. 407.

Sunday excluded

Where a charter provided that after one idle day the charterer had 10 "days" to load, and that for every day's detention thereafter he should pay demurrage, he was entitled to 11 "days" to load, including Sundays, holidays, or stormy days, and likewise where a charter party provided that the charterer, after one idle day, should have 10 "working days" to load, before demurrage should be charged, he was entitled to 11 days, excluding Sundays and holidays, but not stormy days. Hughes v. J. S. Hoskins Lumber Co., 136 Fed. 435, 436 (citing Pedersen v. Eugster, 14 Fed. 422; Sorensen v. Keyser, 52 Fed. 163, 2 C. C. A. 650; Hagerman v. Norton, 105 Fed. 996, 46 C. C. A. 1).

As twenty-four hours

Where a verdict was returned on May 31st, but judgment was not rendered until the following day, the judgment was not invalid under L. O. L. § 201, providing that judgment, when upon a question of fact, shall be entered the day given; the statute merely being designed to create a lien as soon as possible, and the expression "day" evidently meaning within 24 hours after verdict. Casner v. Hoskins (Or.) 128 Pac. 841, 850.

The word "day," as used in Const. § 72, providing that if any bill shall not be returned by the Governor within five days, Sundays excepted, after it shall have been presented to him, etc., it shall become a law, means a full day of 24 hours. Carter v. Henry, 39 South. 690, 691, 87 Miss. 411, 6 Ann. Cas. 715.

An order in term time setting a motion for a new trial for hearing in vacation keeps the term open, so far as the case is concerned, until the expiration of the day to which the hearing is adjourned, during all of the 24 hours of which the court has jurisdiction of the motion and can grant any proper order relative thereto. Cole v. Illinois Sewing Mach. Co., 66 S. E. 979, 980, 7 Ga. App. 338.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 189, providing that defendant may within "twenty-four hours" from the time the replevin undertaking is given, except to the sufficiency of the sureties, the exceptions must be taken within 24 hours from the time the undertaking is given, and defendant is not entitled to the entire "day" after that on which the undertaking is given to except thereto. Barton v. Shull (Neb.) 97 N. W. 292, 293.

As working day

The word "day" ordinarily means 24 hours, from midnight to the following midnight; but the Legislature may designate a different period of time as a day for particular purposes, as in the statute providing that 8 hours of labor between the rising and setting of the sun shall constitute a legal day's work, when there is no special contract or agreement to the contrary, under which statute the word "day," in contracts of employment to which the statute applies, would mean 8 hours. People v. Keating, 93 N. E. 95, 96, 247 Ill. 76.

Rev. St. 1899, § 2586, provides that eight hours shall constitute a day's labor for all "coal miners and laborers," etc. Section 2587 declares that the word "day," in all contracts between any owner, lessee, or operator of any mine with any such miner or laborer, shall mean eight hours, and section 2589 declares that any owner, lessee, or operator, his or its agent, employes, or servants violating any of the provisions of the chapter, shall be fined, etc. Held, that the words "employes" or "servants," used in section 2589, should be construed to mean employes or servants of the mine owner occupying positions of "agents," and not to include miners and laborers, so that a miner was not subject to punishment under the penal provision for working more than eight hours a day. State v. Thompson, 87 Pac. 433, 15 Wyo. 136 (citing Holden v. Hardy, 18 Sup. Ct. 383, 390, 169 U. S. 366, 398, 42 L. Ed. 780).

DAY AFORESAID

A count, alleging that the right of action sued on accrued on the "day aforesaid," referring to a day set out in a preceding count, which specified a number of different days, was bad. Opdycke v. Easton & A. R. Co., 52 Atl. 243, 68 N. J. Law, 12.

DAY ASSIGNED

Under 24 Del. Laws, p. 652, c. 244, § 12, providing that, when the "day assigned" for holding a Court of Oyer and Terminer shall be when the petit jury is in attendance on the Superior Court or Court of General Sessions, such jury shall constitute a part of the panel of the petit jurors to attend the Court of Oyer and Terminer, the regular panel of 40 petit jurors in attendance on the Superior Court or Court of General Sessions at the time a trial is had in the Court of Oyer and Terminer must serve as part of the panel of the petit jurors of that court; the words "day assigned" meaning every day fixed by the judges for holding that court, whether by precept or by adjournment from time to time. Sigerella v. State (Del.) 74 Atl. 1081, 1084, 1 Boyle, 157.

DAYBREAK

Daybreak is the dawn or first appearance of light in the morning. Sullivan v. Chicago City Ry. Co., 167 Ill. App. 152, 159.

DAY BY DAY

A provision of a charter party that the charterer shall pay demurrage "day by day" for detention of the vessel through his default does not require the owner to demand demurrage at the end of each day, but means one day after another or running days. Washington Marine Co. v. Rainier Mill & Lumber Co., 198 Fed. 142, 147.

DAY DURING THE TERM

Rev. St. 1899, § 4407, provides that a partition sale shall take place during some day of the term of the court and be governed by the rules for the sale of realty under execution, and section 3197 requires the officer to expose realty for sale under execution on some day during the term of the circuit court. Held, that the words "some day during the term," in section 4407, meant a day when the court was in actual session for transacting business, so that, where the court adjourned from the 9th to the 13th of October, a partition sale could not be made on the 12th. Davidson v. I. M. Davidson Real Estate & Investment Co., 125 S. W. 1143, 1151, 226 Mo. 1, 136 Am. St. Rep. 615.

DAY IN COURT

By his "day in court" to which a party is entitled before he shall be personally bound is meant that the party shall be duly cited to appear and be afforded an opportunity to be heard. Old Wayne Mut. L. Ass'n v. McDonough, 27 Sup. Ct. 236, 239, 204 U. S. 8, 51 L. Ed. 345.

It is a rule as old as the law that no one shall be personally bound until he has had his "day in court," by which is meant until he has been duly cited to appear, and has been afforded an opportunity to be heard. Judgment without such citation and opportunity wants all the attributes of a judicial determination. It is judicial usurpation and oppression, and never can be upheld where justice is justly administered. An infant two months old cannot be divested of real estate, in which he owns fee-simple title, by a judicial proceeding to which he was not a party, and of which he had no notice, and in which he was not represented by guardian or otherwise. Crapster v. Taylor, 87 Pac. 1138, 1140, 74 Kan. 771 (quoting Galpin v. Page, 18 Wall. [85 U. S.] 350, 21 L. Ed. 959).

The expression "day in court" means the opportunity of a defendant to resist enforcement of a claim, and, being guaranteed under the constitutional inhibition of taking property without due process of law, Ky. St. 1903, § 2971, providing that the board of school trustees may, without any proceeding, take possession of corporate realty which has es-cheated under the five-year period of limitation of the Constitution, is invalid. Louisville School Board v. King, 107 S. W. 247, 254, 127 Ky. 824, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 379.

DAY MESSAGE

A message was transmitted at night from a night message blank, which was changed to "day message," which the telegraph operator testified meant to transmit at once. No information was given the receiving office of the change, and no effort was made to deliver until the office hours next day. Held, that the telegraph company was liable for punitive damages, though an effort was made to deliver the following day during office hours, and, if such delivery had been made, the addressee could not have attended the funeral of his mother. Bolton v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 57 S. E. 543, 546, 76 S. C. 529.

DAY'S NOTICE

Where the power of sale in a mortgage requires "twenty days' notice of such sale in some one of the public newspapers printed in said city of Providence," a notice of sale to be held August 12th, published July 22d, 25th, 29th, August 1st, 5th, 8th and 11th, in a daily paper printed in Providence, is not sufficient. The "twenty days' notice" is to be continuous in the paper selected for 20 days. The use of the word "days" suggests to the ordinary mind a continuous daily notice, if it be in a daily paper. Washington v. Bassett, 10 Atl. 625, 626, 15 R. I. 563, 2 Am. St. Rep. 929.

DAYS OF GRACE

"Days of grace" by common acceptance and in the absence of statute came to be recognized as an absolute postponement of payment of a commercial paper, so that payment could not be demanded or suit maintained thereon within that time. Payment during the grace days was deemed performance of the contract to pay on the stipulated previous due day. Taylor v. Provident Savings Life Assur. Soc., 134 Fed. 932, 935.

DAY'S PAY

The term "day's pay," as shown by the evidence in an action for services in the rescue and floating of a barge under a contract on the basis of "day's pay," means the reasonable charge for the use of men and wrecking material in the prosecution of the work. Merritt & Chapman Derrick & Wrecking Co. v. Tice, 103 N. Y. Supp. 333, 334, 118 App. Div. 123.

DAY'S WORK

Rev. St. c. 82, § 36, establishing the rule that a "day's work" shall be 10 hours' actual labor unless the contract stipulates for a longer time, 10 hours constitute a legal "day's work" in a gristmill where labor is hired at a per diem compensation, without specifying the length of time of a day's work. Bachelder v. Bickford, 62 Me. 526, 527.

Laws Mont. 1905, c. 50, § 1, providing that eight hours shall constitute a "day's work" on municipal work, etc., in ore mills, smelters, and mines, and section 2, providing for the punishment of any one violating any of the provisions of section 1, prohibits the employment of laborers more than eight hours a day, and does not contemplate punishing those who fail to work that long. State v. Livingston Concrete Bldg. & Mfg. Co., 87 Pac. 980, 981, 34 Mont. 570, 9 Ann. Cas. 204.

DAYTIME

"Daytime" means any time from 30 minutes before sunrise to 30 minutes after sunset. Grant v. Hass, 75 S. W. 342, 343, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 688.

Under the statute fixing and defining "daytime" as including 30 minutes before sunrise, evidence that witness found a burglar in a room at about 10 or 15 minutes past 5 a. m. on a day in August, when the sun rose at about 18 minutes past 5 o'clock, was sufficient to justify submission of a count charging entry in the daytime. Long v. State, 127 S. W. 208, 211, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 209, 21 Ann. Cas. 405.

DE BENE ESSE

See Appearance De Bene Esse.

The right of an examination de bene esse should not be extended beyond the cases of a single witness, the age of 70, and dangerous illness to a prisoner charged with a capital felony. Anonymous, 19 Ves. 321. See, also, Abraham v. Newton, 8 Bing. 274, 275; Brown v. Southworth (N. Y.) 9 Paige, 351, 353; Hall v. Stout, 4 Del. Ch. 269, 273.

The jurisdiction which courts of equity exercise to perpetuate testimony is open to great objections: First, it leads to a trial on written depositions, which is much less favorable to the cause of truth than the viva voce examination of witnesses. But what is still more important, inasmuch as those written depositions can never be used until after the death of the witnesses, and are not indeed published till after the death of the witnesses, it follows, whatever perjury may have been committed in those depositions, it must necessarily go unpunished. And this testimony has therefore this infirmity: that it is not given under the sanction of the penalties which the general policy of the law imposes upon the crime of perjury. It is for these reasons that courts of equity do not entertain bills to perpetuate testimony, generally, for the purpose of being used upon future occasion, unless where it is absolutely necessary to prevent a failure of justice. If it be possible that the matter in question can, by the party who files the bill, be made the subject of immediate judicial investigation, no such suit is entertained; but if the party who files the bill can by no means bring the matter in question into present judicial investigation (which may happen when his title is in remainder, or when he is himself in possession), there courts of equity will entertain such a suit, for otherwise the only testimony which could support the plaintiff's title might be lost by the deaths of his witnesses. Where he is himself in possession, the adverse party might purposefully delay his claim with a view to that event. It is therefore ground of demurrer to a bill to perpetuate testimony, generally, that it is not alleged by the plaintiff that the matter in question cannot be made by him the subject of present judicial investigation; but courts of equity do not merely entertain jurisdiction to take or preserve testimony, generally, to be used on a future occasion, where no present action can be brought, but also to take and preserve testimony, in special cases, in aid of a trial at law, where the subject admits of present investigation. At law, no commission to examine witnesses who are abroad, for the purpose of being used at the trial, can go without the consent of the adverse party. Courts of equity will, upon a bill filed, grant such commission without the consent of the adverse party. So courts of equity will entertain a bill to preserve the testimony of aged and infirm witnesses, to be used at the trial at law, if they are likely to die before the time of trial can arrive; and will even entertain such a bill to preserve the testimony of a witness who is neither aged nor infirm, if he happen to be the single witness to support the case. Angell v. Angell, 1 Sim. & S. 83, 89.

The power of the court to appoint, on the application of plaintiff residing in a foreign country, a commissioner to take his testimony de bene esse under P. L. 1900, pp. 375, 376, §§ 45, 46, authorizing the taking of the testimony of a witness or party de bene esse before a commissioner appointed by the court on notice, is not limited by P. L. 1902, p. 459, providing that where a material witness or a party is absent from the state the court in its discretion, on such terms as it may direct, may issue a commission, and the court appointing a commissioner to take the testimony of a party on notice may not impose terms; the phrase "de bene esse" meaning provisionally, referring to the right to offer the evidence depending on the absence of the witness at the time of trial. Baelde v. San Domingo Imp. Co. (N. J.) 83 Atl. 485, 487.

A deposition de bene esse relating to a criminal charge under an order of the General Sessions previous to any indictment found in that court or sent there for trial is extrajudicial and void. People v. Restell (N. Y.) 3 Hill, 289, 294.

To entitle a party to maintain a bill to take testimony de bene esse, plaintiff must aver: First, that there is a suit pending in which the testimony of the witnesses named will be material; second, that the suit is in such condition that the depositions cannot be taken in the ordinary methods prescribed by law, and that the aid of the court of equity is necessary to perpetuate the testimony; third, the facts which the plaintiff expects to prove by the testimony of the witnesses sought to be examined, that the court may see that they are material to the controversy; fourth, the necessity for taking the testimony, and the danger that it may be lost by delay. Richter v. Jerome, 25 Fed. 679, 680.

DE FACTO

"De facto" means in law by fact; from, arising out of, or founded in fact; in fact, in deed; in point of fact; actually; really. McCahon v. Leavenworth County Com'rs, 8 Kan. 437, 442 (quoting and adopting Burrill, Law Dict.).

DE FACTO CORPORATION

Although a private corporation may not have complied with all the statutory requirements, it is a "de facto corporation." Conley v. Daughters of the Republic of Texas (Tex.) 151 S. W. 877, 883.

A "corporation de facto" is one where there is a charter or some law under which a corporation with the powers assumed might lawfully be created and a user of the rights claimed to be confirmed by such charter or law, or where there has been a bona fide attempt to organize a corporation under the charter or an enabling statute. Where there was a bona fide effort to comply with the law relative to the creation of school districts, and the people affected acquiesced therein and elected a board of education which exercised all the functions pertaining to the corporation, it was a corporation de facto. Board of Education v. Berry, 59 S. E. 169, 172, 62 W. Va. 433, 125 Am. St. Rep. 975.

A corporation cannot act simultaneously in the dual capacity of corporation de jure and a corporation de facto, so a corporation de jure cannot in the character of a corporation de facto exercise powers not granted to it by its charter. Boca & L. R. Co. v. Sierra Valleys Ry. Co., 84 Pac. 298, 303, 2 Cal. App. 546.

In order that there be a de facto corporation, two things are essential: First, there must be a law under which the corporation might lawfully be created; and, second, user. Chicago Open Board of Trade v. Imperial Bldg. Co., 136 Ill. App. 606, 612.

Any actual organization of a municipality in ostensible possession and the actual exercise of municipal powers is a "de facto corporation." City of Salem ex rel. Roney

v. Young, 125 S. W. 857, 859, 142 Mo. App. 160.

In order to constitute a corporation de facto, there must be a valid charter or law under which the corporation might be formed, a bona fide attempt to incorporate under such charter or law, colorable compliance with the charter or law, and the exercise or user of corporate powers. Such a corporation cannot exist where a de jure corporation of the kind which it purports to be is not authorized by statute, or where the statute under which it purports to exist is unconstitutional and void. Clark v. American Canal Coal Co., 73 N. E. 727, 729, 35 Ind. App. 65.

It is held to be essential to the existence of a "de facto corporation" that there be: First, a valid law under which a corporation with the powers assumed, might be incorporated; second, a bona fide attempt to organize a corporation under such law; and, third, an actual exercise of corporate power. The lack of any one of these elements will defeat the claim. Farmers' Mutual v. Reser, 88 N. E. 349, 351, 43 Ind. App. 634.

It is essential to the existence of a "de facto corporation" that four conditions should exist: First, a valid law under which a corporation with the powers assumed might exist; second, a bona fide attempt to organize as a corporation under that law; third, a colorable or apparent compliance with the requirements of the law; fourth, user of the corporation powers. If the general railroad law, under which an attempt was made to organize a corporation, did not give the right to build the road which it was organized to build, the corporation would not be de facto for the purpose of employing attorneys, or any other purpose. Gillette v. Aurora Ry. Co., 81 N. E. 1005, 1009, 228 Ill. 261.

Generally, where there is an attempt in good faith to incorporate under a law authorizing incorporation, and corporate functions are exercised, there is a corporation de facto, and its legality can only be questioned in a direct proceeding by the state, and cannot be questioned collaterally or by one dealing with it as a corporation; but to constitute a de facto corporation there must be a law authorizing its incorporation. Imperial Bldg. Co. v. Chicago Open Board of Trade, 87 N. E. 167, 170, 238 Ill. 100.

Before there can be a de facto corporation, there must be a valid law under which a corporation may be formed, a bona fide attempt to incorporate under it, and an actual exercise of corporate powers. Jennings v. Dark, 92 N. E. 778, 782, 175 Ind. 332.

A municipal corporation, created by an unconstitutional law, is a "de facto corporation," and, so long as the state does not terminate its existence by direct proceedings by the attorney general, it may exercise through its officers the powers conferred on it as completely as if it were created by a valid law, and public policy requires obedience from its citizens. Lang v. City of Bayonne, 68 Atl. 90, 92, 74 N. J. Law, 455, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 93, 122 Am. St. Rep. 391, 12 Ann. Cas. 961.

A "de facto corporation" exists where the law authorizes such corporation and where the company has made an effort to organize under that law and is transacting business in the corporate name. If there has been an honest attempt of the corporators to organize a corporation under the laws of the state and all the necessary steps have been taken, except that the final certificate has not been recorded by the recorder of deeds, and the necessary officers are elected who proceed to the transaction of business as a corporate body, there is a corporation de facto. A warehouse company which obtains a certificate from the Secretary of State in due form and from that time does business as an incorporated company, carrying on a general storage business, issuing warehouse certificates signed by the president and secretary, and procures and uses a seal and receives notice from the Secretary of State as to the affidavit concerning trusts, and receives the customary notice as to the annual report to be filed, and fills out and returns in due course the documents required by such notices, and sends the statement required by law to a state board of equalization, and, in short, does everything that the law requires from the time the certificate was received by the Secretary of State, except the recording of the certificate as required by Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, p. 497, c. 32, § 4, is a "de facto corporation." Marshall v. Keach, 81 N. E. 29, 31, 227 Ill. 35, 118 Am. St. Rep. 247, 10 Ann. Cas. 164 (citing American Trust Co. v. Minnesota & N. W. R. Co., 42 N. E. 153, 157 Ill. 641; Bushnell v. Consolidated Ice Mach. Co., 27 N. E. 596, 138 Ill. 67; 1 Cook, Stock, Stockh. & Corp. [3d Ed.] § 234).

Members of three informal mutual telephone associations tentatively adopted articles of incorporation and elected officers and directors, but a few days later laid the articles on the table. The proposed directors contracted with an existing telephone company for joint operation of the lines. Subsequently, dissension among the members having arisen, defendant and another proposed director failed to act further, and the board attempted to fill their places. The reorganized board levied an assessment for incorporation and operating expenses, which defendant and 10 others of the 13 members on one line refused to pay. Afterwards, articles of incorporation were filed by one member from each of two of the lines and two from the third. The articles did not purport to include nor recognize by name as members all persons who previously attempted to act as directors, and did not ratify their action. Held, that the assessment may not be sustained as against defendant, on the theory that there was a de facto corporation. Mid-dle Branch Mut. Tel. Co. v. Jones, 115 N. W. 3, 4, 187 Iowa, 396.

Under Pub. Acts 1903, No. 232, which provides for the incorporation of companies for manufacturing and mercantile purposes, and requires that, before such corporation shall commence business, the president shall cause the articles of association to be recorded in the office of the Secretary of State and the county clerk of the county in which the company is to have its domicile, the filing of such articles is a simple inhibition, and, as no penalty is prescribed and no declaration made that acts done thereunder shall be void, a corporation may be a corporation de facto, though the articles are filed with the Secretary of State only, and business transacted at that time will bind the corporation as such and those doing business with it. A de facto corporation exists when there is shown the existence of a charter or law under which a corporation with the powers assumed might lawfully be created and used thereunder. Newcomb-Endicott Co. v. Fee, 133 N. W. 540, 542, 167 Mich. 574.

Where the proceedings to organize a reclamation district were entirely regular in form, except for the insufficiency of the publication of the petition for its formation, under the rule defining a de facto corporation as one which exists where a number of persons have organized and acted as a corporation, have conducted their affairs to some extent by the methods and through the officers usually employed by corporations, and have assumed the appearance, at least, of a legal corporate body, the reclamation district had a de facto existence. Reclamation Dist. No. 765 v. McPhee, 109 Pac. 1106, 1108, 13 Cal. App. 382.

There can be no "de facto corporation" unless the statute authorizes the formation of a de jure corporation. State v. Stevens, 92 N. W. 420, 421, 16 S. D. 309.

Where there has been an attempt by incorporators in good faith to comply with the law as to the filing of certificates of incorporation, and a certificate has been filed in one or more of the places required by law, and there has been user of the corporate name, the corporation is a "de facto corporation": but some of the statutory steps must be taken in an attempt to comply with the law. Stevens v. Episcopal Church History Co., 125 N. Y. Supp. 573, 579, 140 App. Div. 570.

Transaction of business by the promoters of a corporation as a corporation before the corporation was legally authorized to do so makes it a "de facto corporation" and was a matter for which the state alone could call it to account. Western Inv. Co. v. Davis, 104 S. W. 573, 581, 7 Ind. T. 152, 15 Ann. Cas. 1134.

A corporation is one de jure if its organization is effected in substantial conformity to the statutes, and a corporation de facto if a purpose is indicated to accept such statutes, but the organization is not in substantial conformity thereto. Mackay v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 72 Atl. 583, 586, 82 Conn. 73, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 768.

"The requisites to constitute a 'corporation de facto' are three: (1) A charter or general law under which such a corporation as it purports to be might lawfully be organized; (2) an attempt to organize thereunder; and (3) actual user of the corporate franchise." Whipple v. Tuxworth, 99 S. W. 86, 89, 81 Ark. 391 (citing Tulare Irrigation Dist. v. Shepard, 22 Sup. Ct. 531, 185 U. S. 1, 46 L. Ed. 773; Clark, Corp. 90; Finnegan v. Noerenberg, 53 N. W. 1150, 52 Minn. 239, 18 L. R. A. 778, 38 Am. St. Rep. 552; Stout v. Zulick, 7 Atl. 362, 48 N. J. Law, 599; Eaton v. Walker, 43 N. W. 638, 76 Mich. 579, 6 L. R. A. 102; Swartwout v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 24 Mich. 393; McFarlan v. Triton Ins. Co. [N. Y.] 4 Denio, 392; Spring Valley Waterworks v. City of San Francisco, 22 Cal. 434; Mackall v. Chesapeake & O. Canal Co., 94 U. S. 308, 24 L. Ed. 161; 3 Cook, Corp. [4th Ed.] § 637).

DE FACTO DEPOSITARY

Where a bank is named as a depositary of city funds, and tenders a bond reciting that the bank has been duly designated as a depositary, and then for a number of years the funds of the city are deposited in the bank in reliance upon the bond, and thereafter there is a default in the conditions of the bond, the bank will be deemed to be at least a "de facto depositary," and the sureties will be held liable although the steps prescribed by law in making the designation of the depositary may not have been strictly followed. Snattinger v. City of Topeka, 102 Pac. 508, 510, 80 Kan. 341.

DE FACTO DISSOLUTION

A "de facto dissolution" of a corporation means that dissolution which takes place in substance and in fact, in the case of corporations organized for pecuniary gain, when the corporation, by reason of insolvency, or for other reason, suspends all its operations and goes into liquidation. Youree v. Home Town Mut. Ins. Co. of Warrensburg, Mo., 79 S. W. 175, 176, 178, 180 Mo. 153.

DE FACTO JUDGE

A person acting and recognized by the public as judge of the district court of a county in a new district, before the law establishing such new district has become operative, by appointment of the Governor, under the erroneous belief that the new district was already in existence, is "judge de facto," and his acts in that capacity valid as to third persons and the public. State v. Ely, 113

N. W. 711, 715, 16 N. D. 569, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 638.

DE FACTO JURY

That certain members of a grand jury which returned an indictment were not assessed on the last assessment roll of the county on property belonging to them does not make such members any the less "de facto" grand jurors of a de jure grand jury. Kitts v. Superior Court of Nevada County, 90 Pac. 977, 980, 5 Cal. App. 462.

Under B. & C. Comp. §§ 117-123, abolishing a challenge to the panel, defining a challenge as an objection to an individual juror, either peremptory or for cause, and declaring that a challenge for cause is either that the juror is disqualified from serving in any action or that he is disqualified from serving in the particular action on account of bias, a litigant cannot object to jurors summoned in the manner prescribed by law and accepted by the court as legal jurors, on the ground that the law is unconstitutional, for a jury, though selected in pursuance of a void law, is selected under color of law and is a de facto jury, and, where the particular jurors so drawn are competent and qualified, a challenge cannot be interposed. State v. Ju Nun, 97 Pac. 96, 97, 53 Or. 1.

DE FACTO NOTARY

See De Facto Officer.

DE FACTO OFFICE

A de facto office cannot exist except in case of revolution, a complete overturning of constitutional authority, and usurpation of all power of government by occupants exercising a force superior to the constitutional authorities, and there cannot be under the Constitution a de facto office. Coquillard Wagon Works v. Melton, 125 S. W. 291, 292, 137 Ky. 189.

DE FACTO OFFICER

A "de facto officer" is one who is in possession of an office, discharging his duties under color of authority. In re Krickbaum's Contested Election, 70 Atl. 852, 854, 221 Pa. 521; Chandler v. Starling, 121 N. W. 198, 201, 19 N. D. 144.

A person to be a "de facto officer" of a corporation must hold the office under some appearance or color of right. Potomac Oil Co. v. Dye, 113 Pac. 126, 129, 14 Cal. App. 674.

A "de facto officer" is one who has the reputation of being the officer he assumes to be, and yet is not a good officer in point of law. Howard v. Burke, 93 N. E. 775, 777, 248 Ill. 224, 140 Am. St. Rep. 159.

An office is occupied de facto when it is held by one under an appointment or election giving color of title, though the appointment or election be invalid. State ex rel. Comstock

v. Hempstead, 78 Atl. 442, 444, 83 Conn. 554, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 927.

"A 'de facto officer' is one who is in office, who is recognized by the public as an officer, whose acts are acquiesced in by the public, and yet who has no legal right to the office." State ex rel. Rife v. Hawes, 76 S. W. 653, 656, 177 Mo. 360.

An "officer de facto" is one who has the reputation of being the officer he assumes to be, and yet is not an officer in law. Bedingfield v. First Nat. Bank, 61 S. E. 30, 32, 4 Ga. App. 197.

A "de facto officer" is one who is surrounded with the insignia of officer, and seems to act with authority. Jay v. Board of Education of City of Emporia, 26 Pac. 1025, 1026, 46 Kan. 525.

"A 'de facto officer' is one who, though not authorized by law to act in the official capacity he assumes, yet claims to be so authorized, and in fact does act as an officer." Huston v. Anderson, 78 Pac. 628, 630, 145 Cal. 320.

A mere claim to be a public officer and the exercise of the office will not constitute one an officer de facto, for there must be at least a fair color of title or acquiescence on the part of the public. Howard v. Burke, 93 N. E. 775, 777, 248 Ill. 224, 140 Am. St. Rep. 159.

An "officer de facto" is defined to be one whose acts, though not those of a lawful officer, the law upon principles of policy and justice will hold valid so far as they involve the interests of the public and third persons, where the duties of the office were exercised under color of a known election or appointment, void because the officer was not eligible; such eligibility being unknown to the public. Kitts v. Superior Court of Nevada County, 90 Pac. 977, 980, 5 Cal. App. 462.

"An 'officer de facto' is one whose acts, though not those of a lawful officer, the law, upon principles of policy and justice, will hold valid, so far as they involve the interests of the public and third persons, where the duties of the office were exercised (1) without a known appointment or election, but under such circumstances of reputation or acquiescence as were calculated to induce people, without inquiry, to submit to or invoke his action, supposing him to be the officer he assumed to be; (2) under color of a known and valid appointment or election, but where the officer failed to conform to some precedent requirement or condition, as to take an oath, give a bond, or the like; (3) under color of a known election or appointment, void because there was a want of power in the electing or appointing body, or by reason of some defect or irregularity in its exercise, such ineligibility, want of power, or defect being unknown to the public; (4) under color of an election or appointment by, or pursuant to, a public unconstitutional law before the same is adjudged to be such." Usher v. Western Union Telegraph Co. (Mo.) 98 S. W. 85, 99 (quoting and adopting the definition in State v. Carroll, 38 Conn. 449, 9 Am. Rep. 409); Henry v. Commonwealth, 103 S. W. 371, 372, 126 Ky. 357 (quoting and adopting definition in Mechem, Pub. Off. § 318); Oakland Paving Co. v. Donovan, 126 Pac. 388, 391, 19 Cal. App. 488; Heard v. Elliott, 92 S. W. 764, 765, 116 Tenn. 150 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Carroll, 38 Conn. 449, 9 Am. Rep. 409).

An "officer de facto" is one whose acts, though not those of a legal officer, the law upon principles of policy and justice will hold valid so far as they involve the interests of the public and third persons, where the duties of the office were exercised without a known appointment or election, but under such circumstances of reputation or acquiescence as were calculated to induce people without inquiry to submit to or invoke his action, supposing him to be the officer he assumed to be. The clerk of a school district not appointed at a legal or special meeting of the board, as he should have been, but who was for a number of years recognized by the board as clerk, and whose official acts were adopted by the board which knowingly permitted the county officers and the general public to deal with him as a legal officer, was an "officer de facto." State ex rel. Morehead v. Cartwright, 99 S. W. 48, 50, 122 Mo. App. 257 (quoting and adopting Usher v. Western Union Tel. Co., 98 S. W. 84, 122 Mo. App. 98).

An "officer de facto" is "one who acts under color of title, which color can only be given by a power having authority to fill the office." Village Law, Laws 1897, p. 386, c. 414, § 68, provides that the board of water commissioners shall be appointed by the board of trustees, and section 43 provides that certain offices, not including water commissioners, shall be elective and the rest appointive, except that the offices of clerk and street commissioner may be made elective by adoption of a proposition to that effect. A village adopted a proposition to make the office of water commissioner elective, and elected a water commissioner, who assumed to act as such. Such commissioner did not hold office under color of title, so as to make him an officer de facto. Village of Canaseraga v. Green, 88 N. Y. Supp. 539, 542 (quoting People v. Albertson [N. Y.] 8 How. Prac. 363).

To constitute a "de facto officer" "there must either be some appointment or election which might be supposed to be valid or possible, such an occupation of the office, without dispute and with general acquiescence, as would reasonably lead to the inference that such an authority existed, although not at the time known." Where a city charter requires the approval of the common council of the appointment of an officer, he is neither a de jure or a de facto officer, though appointed by the mayor, where he holds office despite the council's refusal to approve his appointment. Beresford v. Donaldson, 103 N. Y. Supp. 600, 606, 54 Misc. Rep. 138 (citing Williams v. Boynton, 42 N. E. 184, 147 N. Y. 433; Hand v. Deady, 29 N. Y. Supp. 683, 78 Hun, 76).

In the absence of any color of appointment or election, a mere intruder, to be treated as a "de facto officer," must have acted as such under such circumstances of reputation or acquiescence as are calculated to induce people, without inquiry, to submit to or invoke his action in the supposition that he is in truth an officer, and mere proof of his performance of the act concerning which a controversy arises is not sufficient proof of his authority to perform it. Buck v. Hawley & Hoops, 105 N. W. 688, 689, 129 Iowa, 406.

The essential to the creation of an "officer de facto" is that his incumbency should not be legal, but that it should be exercised by some election or appointment, attempted as of legal right, but invalid for want of power in the appointing body, or because of a defect in the election, and an officer so elected or appointed actually in possession of the office exercising its functions and acting under "color of title," which means an apparent right to the office, is an "officer de facto." Coquillard Wagon Works v. Melton, 125 S. W. 291, 292, 137 Ky. 189.

An "officer de facto" has been defined as one who has the reputation of being the officer he assumes to be and yet is not a good officer in point of law. The better and more modern view, however, is that no color of election or appointment is needed to constitute one an officer de facto. The true principle seems to be that there must be either some color of election or appointment or else an exercise of the office and an acquiescence on the part of the public for a length of time which would afford a strong presumption of at least a colorable election or appointment. While a "de facto officer" may be one who holds under color of election or appointment not altogether regular, there is still another class who may be de facto officers without regard to any election or appointment; that is, one who exercises the duties of an office for a length of time and acquiescence on the part of the authorities and of the public. In such cases the incumbent, regardless of his induction, may be considered a "de facto officer." The whole doctrine is founded on policy and necessity in order to protect the public and individuals, where they may become involved in the official acts of persons discharging the duties of an office without being lawful officers. A "de facto officer" may be such under the following circumstances: First, without a known appointment or election, but under such circumstances of reputation or acquiescence as are calculated to induce people, without inquiry, to submit to or invoke his action, supposing him to be the officer he assumes to be. Second, under color of a known and valid appointment or election, but where the officer has failed to conform to some precedent requirement or condition, as to take an oath, give a bond, or the like. Third, under color of a known election or appointment, void because the officer was not eligible, or because there was a want of power in the electing or appointing body, or by reason of some defect or irregularity in its exercise; such ineligibility, want of power, or defect being unknown to the public. Fourth, under color of an election or appointment by or pursuant to a public unconstitutional law before the same is adjudged to be such. Ex parte Tracey (Tex.) 93 S. W. 538, 542; Butler v. Phillips, 88 Pac. 480, 481, 38 Colo. 378, 12 Ann. Cas. 204 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Carroll, 38 Conn. 449, 9 Am. Rep. 409).

Const. art. 6, § 22, as amended by Sess. Laws 1901, p. 111, provides for the election in each county of a judge of a county court. Denver City Charter adopted March 29, 1904, increased the number of judges of the county of Denver to two and changed the time of the election. Held that, though the charter provision was unconstitutional, a county judge elected thereunder was "an officer de facto," and his judicial act therefore valid. Butler v. Phillips, 88 Pac. 480, 481, 38 Colo. 378, 12 Ann. Cas. 204.

A "de facto officer" is one who has a colorable right or title to the office accompanied by possession. It must originate in some kind of election or appointment to the office claimed, or, being an intruder or usurper, it must arise from the fact that he has exercised official functions under such circumstances and for so long a time, without interference, as to justify belief that he has been elected or appointed. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Quinn (Tex.) 100 S. W. 1036, 1038.

To constitute an officer de facto, he must have a presumptive or apparent right to exercise the office, resulting from either full and peaceable possession of the powers of such office, or reasonable color of title, with actual use of the office. State v. Messervy, 68 S. E. 766, 768, 86 S. C. 503.

A "de facto officer" is one who actually performs the duties of the office with apparent right, under claim or color of appointment or election, and it is immaterial that the appointing power could not give him good title to the office, or that the statute under which he claims to hold the office is unconstitutional. Lavin v. Board of Com'rs of Cook County, 92 N. E. 291, 295, 245 Ill. 496.

A "de facto officer" must be in fact the officer and must be entitled to actual possession and control of the office. If the officer de jure is in possession and is also the officer de facto, no other person can be an officer de facto for that office, as two persons cannot be officers de facto for the same office at the same time. McCahon v. Leavenworth County Com'rs, 8 Kan. 437, 442 (citing Boardman v. Halliday [N. Y.] 10 Paige, 223, 232; Morgan v. Quackenbush [N. Y.] 22 Barb. 72, 80).

A "de facto officer" is one who, by some color of right, is in possession of an office and for the time being performs his duties with public acquiescence, though having no right in fact. A member of the bar appointed by the Governor, without authority, to try a cause on the disqualification of the resident judge, is not a "judge de facto." Oates v. State, 121 S. W. 370, 381, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 571 (quoting and adopting Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 751).

While there can be no such thing as a de facto office, there may be a "de facto officer," whose apparent right arises out of action taken by the electorate or the appointing power under the supposed authority of an unconstitutional law before the same is declared unconstitutional. Where a city charter authorized three justices of the peace, and an amendatory act provided for only one, a justice elected under the latter statute, even though it was unconstitutional, was a "de facto officer" whose right to the office could not be collaterally attacked. Thompson v. Couch, 108 N. W. 363, 364, 144 Mich. 671 (citing Mechem, Pub. Off. §§ 318, 327; Walcott v. Wells, 24 Pac. 367, 21 Nev. 47, 9 L. R. A. 59, 37 Am. St. Rep. 478).

A person assuming the duties of supervisor of roads by virtue of a void election by the fiscal court, and discharging the duties of the office with the acquiescence of the court, even after the office had been declared vacant and another supervisor elected, is an "officer de facto." Henry v. Commonwealth, 103 S. W. 371, 372, 126 Ky. 357.

The office of commissioner to make an assessment for reclamation purposes is created by statute, and is a de jure officer, and, when one who is appointed, qualifies and participates in the performance of the duties of the commissioners, he acts under color of office and is a de facto officer, and as such his acts are valid; an "officer de facto" being one whose acts the law, upon principles of policy and justice, will hold valid as far as they involve the interests of the public and third persons where he holds under color of a known appointment, void because the officer is not eligible, such ineligibility being unknown to the public. Reclamation Dist. No. 70 v. Sherman, 105 Pac. 277, 284, 11 Cal. App. 399.

A person who is actually in possession of an office under color of title, by authority of those having power to elect, and who is performing its functions, is a "de facto officer," whose acts cannot be impeached in any proceeding in which he is not a party. Rosetto v. City of Bay St. Louis, 52 South. 785, 786, 97 Miss. 409.

One who was elected sheriff and qualified by filing his official oath and bond and entered upon the discharge of the duties of such office and exercised the functions thereof was a "de facto officer." Sprague v. Brown, 40 Wis. 612, 617.

Though the provisions of the city charter under which one was appointed to act as police justice were invalid, he was the police justice "de facto," whose right to exercise the office could not be determined in a collateral proceeding. State v. Bartlett, 35 Wis. 287, 288, 293.

A statute creating an office with prescribed duties has the force of law until condemned as unconstitutional by the courts, and in the meantime the incumbent is an "officer de facto" and his acts are as potent so far as the public is concerned as are the acts of any de jure officer. Lang v. City of Bayonne, 68 Atl. 90, 92, 74 N. J. Law, 455, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 93, 122 Am. St. Rep. 391, 12 Ann. Cas. 961.

One who has been commissioned as notary, and has taken the oath of office, and has been acting as notary for many years, and has the reputation of being such in the community in which he lives, but who has failed to file his oath of office in the offices of the Secretary of State and of the clerk of court, and has also failed to renew his bond every five years, as required by law, is a notary "de facto"; and acts passed before him have the same validity as acts passed before a notary de jure. The position of a notary public is an "office," and, where a person holds a commission as a notary and acts as one and has the reputation of being a notary public, he is a "notary public, de facto." Davenport v. Davenport, 41 South. 240, 241, 116 La. 1009, 114 Am. St. Rep. 575.

A "de facto officer" is one who, though not a holder of a legal office, is actually in possession of it, under some color of title, or under such conditions as indicate the acquiescence of the public in his actions. Where the mayor of a city appointed three persons to constitute the examining and trial board of the police department created by Rev. Codes Mont. § 3804 et seq., providing that the mayor shall nominate, and with the consent of the council appoint, three residents to constitute a board, and the persons appointed qualified, they were "de facto officers" from the time of their appointment by the mayor and their qualification, and the fact that subsequently the mayor submitted the appointments to the council for approval, and that the council refused to approve the appointments, was immaterial. State ex rel. Buckner v. City of Butte, 109 Pac. 710, 712, 41 Mont. 377.

A jury commissioner regularly appointed by the court and otherwise qualified, but who has failed to take and subscribe the oath prescribed by Code 1899, c. 116, § 3 (Code 1906, § 3708), is notwithstanding, a de facto officer, and a motion to quash the venire and discharge the panel on that ground is properly denied. State v. Medley, 66 S. E. 358, 359, 66 W. Va. 216, 18 Ann. Cas. 761.

"To constitute a person an 'officer de facto' there must be some facts, circumstances, or conditions which would reasonably lead persons, who have relations or business with the office, to recognize him as the lawful incumbent and submit to or invoke his official action, without inquiry as to his title." Where a de jure chief of police is, pending suit on charges against him in the district court, wrongfully suspended by order of the judge thereof at chambers, which order is later set aside and the suit dismissed, and where the city pays a chief of police de facto, during his incumbency, the salary provided by law, the officer de jure after obtaining possession of the office cannot recover from the city the salary for the same period. Stearns v. Sims, 104 Pac. 44, 46, 24 Okl. 623, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 475.

The officer in possession of the office of city treasurer, and who under the orders of the council pays out city money to settle claims, and is thus recognized as the acting officer, is the "de facto officer," though a third person assumes to perform the duties of the office, without recognition of his right by the municipal authorities; and a payment by the city of the salary of the officer to the de facto officer relieves it from liability therefor, though the third person is the de jure officer. Walters v. City of Paducah (Ky.) 123 S. W. 287, 288.

Under Pol. Code 1895, § 223, the official acts of a person while holding a commission as a public officer are valid as the acts of a "de facto officer," though he is absolutely ineligible to hold any civil office whatever in the state. Wright v. State, 52 S. E. 146, 124 Ga. 84 (citing Smith v. Bohler, 72 Ga. 546; Hinton v. Lindsay, 20 Ga. 746; Pool v. Perdue, 44 Ga. 454).

"An 'officer de facto' is one who executes the duties of an office under some color of right—some pretense of title—either by election or appointment." "A person actually in office by some right or title—not a mere usurper or intruder—although not legally appointed or elected thereto, or qualified to hold the same, is still an 'officer de facto,' or in fact." Where, in an election contest for the office of alderman, the contestee was unseated and the contestant seated and qualified and entered on the discharge of his duties, he was a "de facto officer," being in actual possession of the office under election or permission, and exercising its duties under color of right. City Council of City of Cripple Creek v. People ex rel. Ferguson, 75 Pac. 603, 604, 19 Colo. App. 399 (quoting and adopting definitions given in Hooper v. Goodwin, 48 Me. 79, 80; In re Ah Lee, 5 Fed. 899, 6 Sawy. 410; Jeffords v. Hine, 11 Pac. 351, 2 Ariz. 162).

Though the returns on the warrants for an election of mayor and aldermen are defective, the persons chosen mayor and aldermen who proceed to organize and to perform their respective duties as such under color of title, and claim of right, with the acquiescence of the citizens, are "de facto officers." Stuart v. Inhabitants of Ellsworth, 75 Atl. 59, 61, 105 Me. 523.

Persons claiming to be public officers while in possession of an office ostensibly exercising its functions lawfully and with the acquiescence of the public are "de facto officers." Town of Susanville v. Long, 77 Pac. 987, 988, 144 Cal. 362.

A "de facto officer" may be defined as one whose title is not good in law, but who is in fact in the unobstructed possession of an office and discharging its duties in full view of the public in such manner and under such circumstances as not to present the appearance of being an intruder or usurper. When a person is thus found openly in the occupation of a public office and discharging his duties, third persons having occasion to deal with him in his capacity as such officer are not required to investigate his title and may safely act upon the assumption that he is a rightful officer. Bonds signed by one claiming to act as the mayor of a city after his successor had qualified, but before he entered upon the duties of his office, and during a period in which the outgoing mayor and the common council were continuing to hold meetings as city officials without any protest or question being made in respect to their right to do so, cannot be held invalid on the ground that they were not signed by the legal mayor, since it is sufficient in that respect if they were signed by the mayor de facto. Waite v. Santa Cruz, 22 Sup. Ct. 327, 334, 184 U. S. 302, 46 L. Ed. 552.

De jure office required

There cannot be a "de facto officer" unless there is a corresponding office in existence. Bystanders who take upon themselves to open the poll before the order fixed by law for opening the poll has arrived cannot be said to be de facto commissioners. Until the hour comes for the election to be held, there cannot be said to be an election. But even if bystanders so acting before the hour of the opening of the polls could be held to be de facto commissioners in a case where the voter had been induced by appearances to believe that they had authority to receive his vote, they cannot be so held in the case of a voter who had himself appointed the commissioners and moreover had actual knowledge of who the regular commissioners were. Lower Terrebonne Refining & Mfg. Co. v. Police Jury of Parish of Terrebonne, 40 South. 443, 445, 115 La. 1019, 112 Am. St. Rep. 291.

There may be a "de facto officer," though no de jure office exists, as in de facto municipal corporations or de facto courts. A de facto court is a "competent court" or a "legally constituted court" within the meaning of the habeas corpus statute. The legal existence of a court organized and created under color of law cannot be questioned in habeas corpus sent out by one convicted before it. State ex rel. Bales v. Bailey, 118 N. W. 676, 678, 106 Minn. 138, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 775, 180 Am. St. Rep. 592, 16 Ann. Cas. 338.

The law recognizes no one, even as an "officer de facto," who fills an alleged public office that has no existence under any constitutional provision, or by virtue of any color of legislative enactment. An "officer de facto" is one who has the reputation of being the officer he assumes to be, and yet is not a good officer in law. Beddingfield v. First Nat. Bank, 61 S. E. 30, 33, 4 Ga. App. 197 (citing Herrington v. State, 29 S. E. 931, 103 Ga. 319, 68 Am. St. Rep. 95).

Where there is an existing legal office, one who assumes to fill the office and acquires the reputation of being the officer he assumes to be will be an "officer de facto," although there may be some irregularities in his appointment, election, or qualification which would be fatal to his title in a direct proceeding. City of Chicago v. Burke, 80 N. E. 720, 723, 228 Ill. 191 (citing Barlow v. Stanford, 82 Ill. 298; Leach v. People, 12 N. E. 726, 122 Ill. 420; Samuels v. Drainage Com'rs, 17 N. E. 829, 125 Ill. 536).

Hold over

A person in possession of a city office by virtue of holding over, and under a declaration of election made by the common council as the board of canvassers, is a "de facto officer," notwithstanding the existence of a bona fide dispute between him and a claimant as to the title to the office, and the claimant is not justified in attempting to take possession of the office by violence. Blain v. Chippewa Circuit Judge, 108 N. W. 440, 445, 145 Mich. 59.

The acting official who had received an appointment as deputy auditor during the previous term and continued to hold over is a "de facto officer." Board of Com'rs of Ramsey County v. Sullivan, 102 N. W. 723, 724, 94 Minn. 201.

Officer de jure distinguished

The only difference between an "officer de jure" and an "officer de facto" is that the former cannot be removed from his office in a proceeding instituted directly for that purpose, while an officer de facto may be; but until a de facto officer is removed in such a proceeding his acts are as valid as the acts of a de jure officer. Commonwealth v. Wotton, 87 N. E. 202, 208, 201 Mass. 81.

Where an alleged de facto board of directors of a private corporation was not in the actual exercise of its functions, and had not been recognized by the public, or by those having dealings with the corporation as a legitimate board of directors, and had not been performing generally the duties of a board of directors, it was not a de facto board, and had no rights. Technically speaking, the term "de facto officer" applies only to a public officer, and then usually only to an office having a physical existence and property. A de facto officer must be one publicly exercising the functions of an office, and actually in possession of it. The expressions "officer de facto" and "officer de jure" have in many instances been applied to directors and other managing agents of private corporations, but they do not possess the relation of officers to it, or to the public; their status being rather agents of their principal. Umatilla Water Users' Ass'n v. Irvin, 108 Pac. 1016, 1020, 56 Or. 414.

DE FACTO PRESIDENT OF SENATE

Where the President of the Senate continued to preside over that body while acting as Governor, but no vacancy in that office was declared and no effort was made to supplant him, he was a "de facto President of the Senate," and his acts in attesting bills were valid, even if his right to so act was suspended while acting as Governor. Simon v. State, 111 S. W. 991, 992, 86 Ark. 527.

DE FACTO STEWARD

"A 'steward de facto' is no other than he who has the reputation of being such steward, and yet is not a good steward in point of law," just as "an officer de facto is one who has the reputation of being the officer he assumes to be, and yet is not a good officer in point of law." Bedingfield v. First Nat. Bank, 61 S. E. 30, 32, 4 Ga. App. 197.

DE JURE

DE JURE CORPORATION

De facto corporation distinguished, see De Facto Corporation.

A corporation is one de jure if its organization is effected in substantial conformity to the statutes, and a corporation de facto if a purpose is indicated to accept such statutes, but the organization is not in substantial conformity thereto. Mackay v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 72 Atl. 583, 586, 82 Conn. 73, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 768.

A "corporation de jure" is one whose right to exercise a corporate function would prove invulnerable if assailed by the state in a quo warranto proceeding. Board of Education v. Berry, 59 S. E. 169, 172, 62 W. Va. 433, 125 Am. St. Rep. 975.

DE JURE OFFICER

De facto officer distinguished, see De Facto Officer.

Where a city charter requires the approval of the common council of the appointment of an officer, he is not a "de jure officer," though appointed by the mayor, where he holds office despite the council's refusal to approve his appointment. Beresford v. Donaldson, 108 N. Y. Supp. 600, 606, 54 Misc. Rep. 138.

Where an alleged de facto board of directors of a private corporation was not in the actual exercise of its functions, and had not been recognized by the public, or by those having dealings with the corporation as a legitimate board of directors, and had not been performing generally the duties of a board of directors, it was not a de facto board, and had no rights. Technically speaking, the term "de facto officer" applies only to a public officer, and then usually only to an office having a physical existence and property. A de facto officer must be one publicly exercising the functions of an office, and actually in possession of it. The expressions "officer de facto" and "officer de jure" have in many instances been applied to directors, and other managing agents of private corporations, but they do not possess the relation of officers to it, or to the public; their status being rather agents of their principal. Umatilla Water Users' Ass'n v. Irvin, 108 Pac. 1016, 1020, 56 Or. 414.

DE MINIMIS NON CURAT LEX

Where a judgment is for $1,000, a contention on appeal that it should be reduced to the extent of $17.70 involves the maxim of "De minimis non curat lex." Brady v. Ranch Min. Co., 94 Pac. 85, 86, 7 Cal. App. 182.

Under the maxim "de minimis non curat lex," a judgment will not be reversed for errors operating to the appellant's prejudice only in the sum of 76 cents. Hopkins v. Kitts, 94 Pac. 201, 202, 37 Mont. 26.

Where it is claimed that there is a defect in title because some points of the stone constituting the adjoining wall projected over the line of the lot from one to two inches, the maxim "de minimis non curat lex" can be applied. Ungrich v. Shaff, 105 N. Y. Supp. 1013, 1015, 119 App. Div. 843.

DE NOVO

See Hearing De Novo; Trial De Novo.

"De novo" means fresh; anew. Estes v. Denver & R. G. R. Co., 113 Pac. 1005, 1008, 49 Colo. 378.

An appeal from an assessment by the tax appeal court, on the ground of unfair valuation and inequality, was taken to the Baltimore city court under Baltimore City Charter, § 170, as amended by Acts 1908, c. 167, which provides that a person or city appealing to the Baltimore city court shall have a trial by the court, sitting without a jury, which shall hear the case de novo, and without declaring the acts of the appeal tax court void for any reason if notice has been given, shall assess or classify the property anew, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary shall affirm the assessment. Held, that the effect of the words "de novo" was that the assessment should be made de novo or anew, and that the duty of opening and closing was on the petitioner. City of Baltimore v. Hurlock, 78 Atl. 558, 560, 113 Md. 674.

DE SON TORT

DEAD

DEAD BODY

As property, see Property.

DEAD CABOOSE

An unattached caboose is known in railroad parlance as a "dead caboose." Edington v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 102 S. W. 491, 492, 204 Mo. 61.

DEAD DRUNK

See Drunk.

DEAD ENGINE

An engine having no steam is called a "dead engine," and one with steam is a "live engine." Turner v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 111 Pac. 433, 83 Kan. 315.

DEAD OIL

The article known as "carbolineum," or "carbolineum Avenarius," which consists of "dead oil" modified by the action of chlorine gas, is dutiable under the provision in paragraph 15, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, Tariff Act of July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 152, for "preparations of coal tar, not colors or dyes and not medicinal, not specially provided for," and is not dutiable under the provision for "chemical compounds," in paragraph 3 of said act (30 Stat. 151), or free of duty as "dead or creosote oil," under paragraph 524 of said act (Free List, § 2, c. 11, 30 Stat. 197). Dunning v. United States, 123 Fed. 1000, 1001.

DEAD RENT

A minimum royalty provided for in leases for mining purposes is called in England "dead rent." Robinson v. Kistler, 59 S. E. 505, 507, 62 W. Va. 489.

DEAD ROLLER

The rollers of an edger used in a saw-mill which bear down on the lumber and hold it firm on the saws are called "dead rollers." Trigg v. Ozark Land & Lumber Co., 86 S. W. 222, 223, 187 Mo. 227.

DEADMAN

As person, see Person.

An appliance used in raising poles, which consists of a round piece of timber 12 feet in length and 3½ inches in diameter, having a crotch or saddle attached to the top or end to receive and hold the pole in place in the process of raising or lowering it, is called a "deadman." Sandquist v. Independent Telephone Co., 80 Pac. 539, 38 Wash. 313.

"Deadmen" are appliances, like crutches on which a telegraph pole which is being lowered is permitted to rest while the men are changing their position and taking a new hold. Orr v. Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co., 44 S. E. 401, 402, 182 N. C. 691.

DEADEN TIMBER

The phrase "deaden timber," as used in a logging contract, means to circle the tree with a cut deep enough to interrupt the flow of the sap and thereby kill the tree. Des Allemands Lumber Co. v. Morgan City Timber Co., 41 South. 332, 334, 117 La. 1.

DEADENED WIRE

In stringing telephone wires, the wires are said to be "deadened" when they do not go beyond a pole that is fastened to that arm. Maryland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Cloman, 55 Atl. 681, 682, 97 Md. 620.

DEADLY WEAPON

See Assault with Dangerous or Deadly Weapon.

Other deadly weapon, see Other.

A "deadly weapon" is any weapon which is likely, from the use made of it at the time, to produce death or do great bodily harm. It is said that the term "dangerous weapon" is a milder term than "deadly weapon," yet otherwise of the same meaning. Clemons v. State, 37 South. 647, 649, 48 Fla. 9 (quoting 2 Bish. New Cr. Law, § 680, and Bish. St. Crimes, § 320).

A "deadly weapon" is a weapon likely to produce death. State v. Brooks (Del.) 84 Atl. 225, 227.

A deadly weapon is such a weapon as is likely to produce death when used by one person against another; and, if death is produced by the use of a deadly weapon, the provocation to reduce the killing from murder to manslaughter must be great. State v. Cephus (Del.) 67 Atl. 150, 151, 6 Pennewill, 160.

A "deadly weapon" is one likely to produce death or great bodily injury, and the manner in which it is used in the particular instance may enter into the question whether it is deadly. State v. Dunn, 120 S. W. 1179, 1182, 221 Mo. 530.

A "deadly weapon," within the rule that, where a killing was done with a deadly weapon, malice is presumed, is such a weapon as is likely to produce death, when used by one person against another. State v. Miele (Del.) 74 Atl. 8, 9, 1 Boyce, 33.

A weapon may or may not be deadly according to its size and the manner of its use. Smith v. State, 135 S. W. 152, 153, 61 Tex. Cr. R. 349.

Baseball bat

A baseball bat is not, per se, a "deadly weapon." Crow v. State, 116 S. W. 52, 53, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 200, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 497.

Brick

Whether a brick is a "deadly weapon" is a question for the jury, in a prosecution for assault with such an instrument. State v. Sims, 31 South. 907, 80 Miss. 381.

Buggy trace

Some weapons are per se deadly, and others, owing to the violence and manner of use, become deadly. In the latter class of cases, where the deadly character of the weapon is to be determined by the relative size and condition of the parties and the manner in which it is used, it is proper and necessary to submit the matter to the jury with proper instructions. So far as defendant is concerned, there is no error in submitting to the jury the question whether his assault on his wife was with a "deadly weapon"; he being very strong, large, and robust, she being very frail and weak, and sick at the time of the assault, and he having violently assaulted her with a buggy trace 2½ feet long. State v. Archbell, 51 S. E. 801, 139 N. C. 537.

Club or stick

"A club may or may not be a 'deadly weapon' (within the meaning of Pen. Code 1895, art. 334, providing punishment for rudely displaying a pistol or other 'deadly weapon,' etc.). It was the evident purpose of the Legislature to confine the deadly weapons mentioned to pistols, guns, or weapons of like character, usually understood to be deadly," and a hickory club a little longer than an ordinary walking stick, weighing 11 ounces, is not a "deadly weapon," within the purview of the statute. Fuller v. State, 87 S. W. 832, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 300.

A heavy wooden stick is not ex vi termini a deadly weapon or a deadly instrument, within Pen. Code, § 245, subjecting to punishment every person committing an assault with a deadly weapon. People v. Perales, 75 Pac. 170, 171, 141 Cal. 581.

A stick 2½ to 3 feet long and about an inch in diameter is not as a matter of law a "deadly weapon." Renow v. State, 120 S. W. 174, 175, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 343.

Gun

A gun fired for the purpose of frightening is not necessarily a "deadly weapon."

Angel v. State, 74 S. W. 553, 554, 45 Tex. Cr. R. 135.

An instruction defining a "deadly weapon" to be a gun within carrying distance is erroneous when applied to a state of facts which show that defendant's gun was loaded with squirrel shot, and that at the time of the shooting the parties were from 125 to 200 yards apart, it not being possible that a serious injury could have been inflicted by the discharge of the defendant's gun at such a distance from the party alleged to have been assaulted. Scott v. State, 81 S. W. 952, 953, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 315.

Hands and feet

A person's hands and feet are not "deadly weapons," within the meaning of the law, and, where death results unintentionally from their use in an assault, the result is not murder but involuntary manslaughter. Thomas v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 86 S. W. 694, 695.

Knife

A knife is not necessarily a "deadly weapon." Burris v. State, 58 S. E. 545, 2 Ga. App. 418.

A knife having a blade 2½ inches long is a deadly weapon. Baker v. State (Tex.) 81 S. W. 1215, 1216.

An ordinary pocketknife with a three-inch blade is not per se a "deadly weapon." Henderson v. State, 115 S. W. 588, 590, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 170.

A knife with a blade 2½ or 3 inches long, not in any respect bent or injured, was, in the hands of deceased, a stalwart man, a "deadly weapon." Hudson v. State, 129 S. W. 1125, 1127, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 650, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1324.

An instruction that a knife is a "deadly weapon" is correct. Johnson v. State, 130 N. W. 282, 284, 88 Neb. 565, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 965.

A penknife may or may not be a deadly weapon. If the weapon is such that from the manner of its use it is likely to produce death, it is of course a deadly weapon. State v. Roan, 97 N. W. 997, 998, 122 Iowa, 136.

An ordinary pocketknife is not necessarily a deadly weapon, and in this case it was a question of fact for the jury whether the pocketknife, if they believed one was used, was a deadly weapon. Clemons v. State, 128 Pac. 739, 741, 8 Okl. Cr. 452.

A pocketknife is a "deadly weapon," within Code 1906, § 1110, providing that if any person, having or carrying any dirk, dirk knife, sword, sword cane or any deadly weapon, the carrying of which concealed is prohibited, shall, in the presence of three or more persons, exhibit the same in a rude, angry, or threatening manner, not in necessary self-defense or shall in any manner unlawfully use the same in any fight or quarrel, on conviction he shall be fined, etc. State v. Ware (Miss.) 59 South. 854.

Pistol

A loaded pistol is a deadly weapon. Ewing v. Commonwealth, 111 S. W. 352, 355, 129 Ky. 237.

A pistol, used as a firearm, is a "deadly weapon." Hartfield v. State, 134 S. W. 1180, 1182, 61 Tex. Cr. R. 515.

In a prosecution for homicide, the court properly charged that a pistol was a deadly weapon, from the use of which malice would be presumed in the absence of rebutting evidence, and that when the killing was malicious no conviction could be had for any offense less than murder. Henningburg v. State, 45 South. 246, 247, 153 Ala. 13.

Whenever a pistol is used as a firearm, it is per se a "deadly weapon," and it is therefore unnecessary for the court in such a case to define "deadly weapon." Lofton v. State, 128 S. W. 384, 386, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 270.

A pistol is a deadly weapon with which an aggravated assault may be committed. Face v. State (Tex.) 79 S. W. 531, 533.

A pistol used in striking another is a "deadly weapon," within St. § 1166, providing for the punishment of any one who shall willfully and maliciously "strike" another with a knife, sword, or "other deadly weapon," with intent to kill. Riggs v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 33 S. W. 413, 414.

Whether a person pointing a cocked pistol at another in an angry and threatening manner is guilty of assault with a "deadly weapon" depends on whether or not the pistol was loaded, where accused was not within striking distance of the other party. Territory v. Gomez (Ariz.) 125 Pac. 702, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 975.

Rock

A "deadly weapon" is one which, in the manner used, is likely to produce death or serious bodily injury. Such term does not per se include a rock, in the absence of proof of its size or character. Taft v. State (Tex.) 97 S. W. 494, 496.

Shotgun

A shotgun used as a firearm is a "deadly weapon." Deneaner v. State, 127 S. W. 201, 202, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 624.

Where, in a prosecution for aggravated assault, it was shown that accused fired at prosecutor with a double-barreled shotgun, and there was no question but that the assault was made with a gun, and that in the manner of its use it was a deadly weapon, the court could properly assume such fact, and charge that an assault becomes aggravated when committed with a gun; the same being a deadly weapon. Kosmoroski v. State, 127 S. W. 1056, 1058, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 296.

Where, in a homicide case, the weapons used were a shotgun and six-shooter of 45 caliber, and the court in its charge on murder in the first degree defined a "deadly weapon" as a weapon reasonably sufficient to accomplish death by the mode of its use, the failure to define a "deadly weapon" in the charge on murder in the second degree was not reversible error. Wheeler v. State, 121 S. W. 166, 167, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 547.

Steel screw-driver

Where the weapon used by the defendant in a homicide case, a steel screw-driver, was of such a nature that defendant was able to drive it through the skull of an adult with one hand, at a single blow, and where the weapon was introduced at the trial, although no description of it is preserved by the evidence, an instruction telling the jury, as a matter of law, that it was a "deadly weapon," is properly given. State v. Belfiglio, 134 S. W. 508, 232 Mo. 235.

Whip

Where the buggy of deceased accidentally came in collision with that of defendant, they being strangers, and deceased, angered at his buggy being smashed, followed defendant and brought about the difficulty by seizing the head of defendant's horse on his not heeding deceased's profane order to stop, whereupon defendant struck and killed him, an instruction on aggravated assault should be given, under Pen. Code, arts. 714, 719; evidence merely that death resulted from the blow, and that it was struck with a "stick" or "the butt end of a blacksnake whip," not being necessarily conclusive that the instrument was a "deadly weapon." Coleman v. State, 90 S. W. 499, 501, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 82.

DEAL—DEALING

See Cessation of Dealings; Continuous Dealings; Mutual Dealings.

The term "deal" is not a technical term and has no peculiar or local signification, and, where no extrinsic facts appear to create ambiguity, evidence as to its meaning is inadmissible. First Nat. Bank of Greenfield v. Coffin, 38 N. E. 444, 162 Masa. 180, 182.

An agreement by defendant, a broker, that if he ever got a deal in plaintiff's office he would divide commissions with him, referred to transactions involving the sale or exchange of property; the word "deal" being defined by Webster as "an arrangement to attain a desired result by a combination of interested parties." Reynolds v. Pray, 127 N. W. 50, 51, 148 Iowa, 213.

"Dealings," as used in Code 1891, p. 728, § 6, providing that "an action by one partner against his copartner for a settlement of the partnership accounts * * * may be brought until the expiration of five years from a cessation of the dealings in which they are interested together, but not after," embraces any act done after the dissolution of the partnership in winding it up, such as the collection or payment of debts due to or by the firm. Smith v. Zumbro, 24 S. E. 653, 657, 41 W. Va. 623 (quoting Sandy v. Randall, 20 W. Va. 247).

Gen. St. c. 181, § 25, providing that the Supreme Court may order service of any process upon persons out of the state for the purpose of dealing with any property, relation, or person within the state according to law, contemplates a "dealing" with the person, if not judicially, at least directly, and not incidentally and as a means to some ulterior end which does not concern the person, and does not warrant an order for such service on a husband, sued with his wife, who is in the state, in order that he may take the body of the wife on execution. Kelly v. Denniston, 13 R. I. 128.

As buy or sell as a business

"To 'deal' in a commodity is to negotiate or make bargains in respect of that commodity, to traffic therein as buyer or seller, or otherwise engage in mutual intercourse, or transactions in respect thereto. The purpose being to accomplish a change from one to another of interest in, or title to, property, to deal in stock, cattle, and horses, therefore, is to engage in the business of buying and selling such property with the object of gain." Wilson v. Delaney, 118 N. W. 842, 843, 137 Iowa, 636 (citing 13 Cyc. p. 285; Webst. Dict.; Cent. Dict.; 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1897).

As traffic

Revisal 1905, § 2112, establishes the method by which a married woman may become a registered free trader, and section 2113 declares that a married woman, having complied therewith, shall be a free trader and authorized to contract and deal as a feme sole. Held, that the words, "contract and deal," in their primary acceptation, refer to the ordinary bargains and trades incident to some business enterprise, the word "deal" being defined to mean, to traffic, to transact business, to trade, and that neither of such words included a conveyance of real estate, and hence a married woman, though a free trader within the statute, could not convey her separate land, without joinder by her husband and acknowledgment, as prescribed by Revisal 1905, § 952. Council v. Pridgen, 69 S. E. 404, 406, 153 N. C. 443.

Dealing in futures

The transaction termed "dealing in futures" is one whereby one person agrees to sell a commodity at a certain time in the future for a certain price, the other party agreeing to pay such price, with knowledge that the first party has none of the commodity to deliver at the time, but with the understanding, that when the time arrives for delivery, settlement is to be had in differences, the purported buyer to pay the difference between the market price and the agreed price if the market price is less than the agreed price, and the purported seller to pay such difference if the market price is higher than the agreed price. Henry Hentz & Co. v. Booz, 70 S. E. 103, 110, 8 Ga. App. 577.

Pub. Laws 1889, c. 221, makes void contracts for the sale of articles therein named for future delivery, where it is not intended that the articles shall be actually delivered, but only that the difference between the contract price and the market value at the time stipulated shall be paid. Under Pub. Laws 1905, c. 538, providing that it shall be unlawful to open or establish an office for "dealing in futures," as forbidden by the act of 1889, the business forbidden is that usually described as the business of running a bucket shop. A purchase for actual delivery of necessary commodities required in the ordinary course of business, and not for wagering or gambling on the fluctuations of the market, does not constitute a dealing in futures. State v. McGinnis, 51 S. E. 50, 51, 138 N. C. 724.

An instruction that a person "dealing in futures on margins" (that is, conducting an establishment where persons are permitted to come together and buy or sell commodities with an agreement for future delivery), when it is not in good faith intended to deliver the commodities, when the understanding of the parties is to receive or pay the difference between the agreed price and the market price at the time of settlement, would be guilty of maintaining a gaming house was not error. Anderson v. State, 58 S. E. 401, 402, 2 Ga. App. 1.

Dealing in grain

Where the owner of a gristmill, and who sold grain at retail, on a sale of the business agreed with the purchaser not to in any "way, form, or manner" deal in grain within 10 miles of the mill for a term of years, it was a breach of the contract for him, as a traveling salesman, thereafter to sell grain at wholesale within the territory in question. Clark v. Britton, 79 Atl. 494, 76 N. H. 64.

DEALER

See Itinerant Dealer; Junk Dealer; Liquor Dealer; Retail Dealer; Retail Liquor Dealer; Wholesale Dealer.

A person whose business is to buy and sell is a "dealer." State v. Silverman, 70 Atl. 1076, 1077, 1078, 75 N. H. 50.

"Dealers" are the middlemen between the manufacturers or producers and consumers. Commonwealth v. Vetterlein, 63 Atl. 192, 193, 214 Pa. 21 (quoting Commonwealth v. Campbell, 33 Pa. 380).

A "dealer" is one whose business it is to buy and sell merchandise, goods, and chattels, as a merchant, storekeeper, or broker; the term being synonymous with "trader." State v. Rosenbaum, 68 Atl. 250, 251, 80 Conn. 327, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 283, 125 Am. St. Rep. 121.

A "dealer" is a trader or one whose business is to buy and sell. The term is broader than shopkeeper, which is a term limited to one who keeps a shop for the sale of goods, one who sells goods in the shop or by retail, in distinction from a merchant or one who sells by wholesale. State v. Cohen, 63 Atl. 928, 929, 73 N. H. 543 (citing Cent. Dict.; State v. Canney, 19 N. H. 135, 137).

In the most restricted sense, a "dealer" is one who takes profit in the distribution of goods and wares to the trade, in addition to the manufacturer's profit. Chattanooga Plow Co. v. Hays, 140 S. W. 1068, 1069, 125 Tenn. 148.

"Dealer," in the popular and therefore the statutory sense of the word, is not one who buys to keep or makes to sell but one who buys to sell again. He stands immediately between the producer and the customer and depends for his profit, not upon the labor he bestows upon his commodities, but upon the skill and foresight with which he watches the markets. Commonwealth v. Vetterlein, 63 Atl. 192, 193, 214 Pa. 21 (quoting Norris v. Commonwealth, 27 Pa. 494).

In Acts Sp. Sess. 25th Leg. c. 18, subd. 85, providing that every person dealing in lightning rods shall pay an annual tax of $36 to the state and $18 to the county, and that every person canvassing for the sale of lightning rods shall pay an annual tax of $100 to the state and $50 to the county, the word "dealer" is used in the sense of one who buys and sells at his place of business, and one who pays the dealer's tax is not authorized to make sales by canvassing, so that the act is not in violation of Const. art 8, §§ 1, 2, providing that taxation shall be equal and uniform upon the same class of subjects. Camp v. State, 135 S. W. 146, 147, 61 Tex. Cr. R. 229.

The word "dealer" generally applies to one who buys and sells—a trader. But where a municipal ordinance declares that "any merchant, billiard table or tenpin alley keeper, or other dealer, who shall keep open doors on the sabbath day," shall be subject to a punishment prescribed, the word "dealer" is to be construed in connection with the words preceding it. So construed it would include one who operated a "penny arcade" or place where a number of machines were kept for profit, each of which, by a mechanical arrangement, exhibited pictures to a person who dropped a penny into a slot. Fichtenberg v. City of Atlanta, 54 S. E. 933, 126 Ga. 62.

Where accused was licensed as a dealer in junk in M., and, though he had no place of business in A., and no license to deal in junk in that town, bought junk there for cash, carried it to M., and there sold it in the course of his business in M., he was a "dealer" in A., within Pub. St. 1901, c. 124, § 4, providing that any dealer in such articles without a license, in any town having adopted the provisions of the act, shall be fined, etc.; the word, "dealer" not being used in a restricted sense, which would require an act of selling, as well as purchase, but sufficiently describing one who bought with the intention of selling again. State v. Silverman, 70 Atl. 1076, 1077, 1078, 75 N. H. 50.

Manufacturer

A manufacturer of agricultural implements is not a "dealer" or "merchant," within Acts 1909, c. 479, § 3, and Assessment Act 1907 (Acts 1907, c. 602) §§ 8, 26, 27, providing for taxation of dealers and merchants; sales being made only to jobbers and commission men, and the only profit taken being for manufacturing the articles sold. Chattanooga Plow Co. v. Hays, 140 S. W. 1068, 1069, 125 Tenn. 148.

A manufacturer of acetylene gas lighting systems who sells through soliciting agents is not a "merchant" or "dealer" within Kirby's Dig. § 516, which provides that section 513, which makes void notes given in ordinary form for the price of patented machines, etc., shall not extend to merchants and dealers who sell patented things in the usual course of business; the words "merchant" and "dealer" meaning persons engaged in the business of buying and selling merchandise or other personal property in the usual course of trade. C. B. Ensign & Co. v. Coffelt (Ark.) 145 S. W. 231, 234.

Under the provisions of the following section 16, c. 5106, Laws of 1903: "That all wholesale dealers in fresh meats packed or refrigerated shall pay to the state a license tax of one hundred dollars in each county and for each place of business"—the word "dealer" does not comprehend a person who merely buys a commodity in one form and converts it by his skill and labor into an entirely different commodity, and then sells it, such, for example, as one who buys lumber, with which he manufactures furniture or any other useful commodity that he sells, cannot be termed a "dealer in lumber." The true meaning of the word "dealer," as it is used in this statute, is one who habitually and constantly as a business deals in and sells any given commodity; and a "wholesale" dealer therein comprehends one who sells in large or wholesale quantities, as contradistinguished from one who sells in small lots at retail. Florida Packing & Ice Co. v. Carney, 41 South. 190, 192, 51 Fla. 190 (citing Goodwin v. Clark, 65 Me. 280; Commonwealth v. Gormly, 34 Atl. 282, 173 Pa. 586; Overall v. Bezeau, 37 Mich. 506).

The term "manufacturer," in its ordinary acceptation, denotes one who, through his skill and labor, shapes or combines material into a new product, and where a firm merely ordered from a foreign manufacturer a given quantity of waists of a certain pattern, a sample of which had been previously furnished them by the manufacturer, the firm was merely a "dealer" and not a manufacturer." Remy, Schmidt & Pleissner v. Healy, 126 N. W. 202, 203, 161 Mich. 266, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 139, 21 Ann. Cas. 74.

The words "merchants" and "dealers," according to common understanding, mean something different from the word "manufacturers." The former are generally employed to designate persons engaged in the business of buying and selling merchandise or other personal property in the usual course of trade; the latter to designate those engaged in the business of making or producing articles for use or sale. Union County Nat. Bank, Liberty, Ind., v. Ozan Lumber Co., 179 Fed. 710, 715, 103 C. C. A. 584.

Merchant

The words "dealers" and "merchants" mean something different from the word "manufacturers" and are generally employed to designate persons engaged in the business of buying and selling merchandise or other personal property in the usual course of trade. A corporation contracting to make and deliver a patented log loader, and doing so, and taking notes therefor, it not a "merchant" or "dealer," within Kirby's Dig. Ark. §§ 513-516, requiring negotiable notes taken by any seller in payment for a patented machine to be on a printed form stating specified facts. Union County Nat. Bank, Liberty, Ind., v. Ozan Lumber Co., 179 Fed. 710, 715, 103 C. C. A. 584.

Partner

Where a statute prohibited a merchant and dealer in spirituous liquors from keeping open his place of business on Sunday for the purpose of traffic and sale, a member of a firm engaged in the sale of spirituous liquors was a "dealer," within such statute, and was amenable in his individual capacity. Morris v. State, 89 S. W. 832, 833, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 562.

Dealer in intoxicating liquors or spirits

To render one who "sells or offers for sale" malt liquors subject to special tax as a "dealer in malt liquors," under Rev. St. § 3244, his ownership of such liquors is not essential. Western Express Co. v. United States, 141 Fed. 28, 30, 72 C. C. A. 516.

Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 5379, as amended by Pub. Acts 1903, p. 83, No. 62, requiring the payment of a tax on the business of selling or keeping for sale at retail intoxicating liquors, and section 5380 providing that retail dealers of spirituous or intoxicating liquors, etc., shall include all persons who sell by the drink to any person or persons, one who sells a single drink is a retail "dealer" engaged in the business and liable to prosecution for selling without having paid the tax. People v. Wilcox, 115 N. W. 973, 974, 152 Mich. 39.

Revisal 1905, § 3524, provides that when a dealer in intoxicating drinks makes a sale either directly or indirectly, or gives away such drinks, to any unmarried person under the age of 21 years, knowing him to be such, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and any person who keeps on hand intoxicants for the purpose of sale or profit shall be considered a dealer. A firm's agent took a minor's order for a case of whisky, which was shipped to the town of the minor's residence, and draft for the price with bill of lading attached was sent to defendant bank for collection, and the cashier, also a defendant, was informed by the minor's uncle that he was a minor and unmarried, but thereafter surrendered the bill of lading to the minor when he paid the draft. Held, that neither defendant nor its cashier was a "dealer" in intoxicants within the statute, and hence could not be convicted thereunder. Spencer v. Fisher (N. C.) 76 S. E. 731, 733.

Dealer in milk

Rev. St. § 4200—11, providing that no dealer in milk shall sell, exchange, or deliver, or have in his custody or possession with intent to sell, milk from which the cream or part thereof had been removed, unless in a conspicuous place on the vessel from which the milk is sold is placed the words "skimmed milk," distinctly marked, the word "dealer" includes a person who sells milk obtained from his own cows as well as one who buys and sells milk. Gullder v. State, 26 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 221, 222.

Dealer in oil

One who acquires, possesses, handles, and sells oil may properly be said to deal in oil, whether he has bought it to sell again or not, within Acts 29th Leg. p. 358, c. 148, entitled "An act for the levy and collection of a tax on individuals," etc., owning, operating, managing, or controlling for profit the business of wholesale "dealers" in coal oil, etc. Texas Co. v. Stephens, 103 S. W. 481, 486, 100 Tex. 623.

Dealer in oleomargarine

Plaintiff was a grocer who, before the passage of Act. Cong. Aug. 2, 1886, c. 840, 24 Stat. 209, had sold oleomargarine, but ceased handling it thereafter; but, having two or three customers who desired it at their request and for their accommodation he sent orders in their respective names to the manufacturer for 10-pound packages at a time to be shipped to each customer in his care. They were shipped to a local branch house, addressed and billed to the customers, and the branch house left the packages at plaintiff's store, and plaintiff delivered them, with other groceries, and the customers returned the bills to him, and he remitted to the manufacturer each month, charging the customers with the cash sent, and plaintiff made no profit out of the transaction. Held, that plaintiff was not a "dealer in oleomargarine"; the transaction not being a sale by him. Tucker v. Grier, 160 Fed. 611, 616, 87 C. C. A. 513.

Testator devised all his property to his wife for life, and provided in the succeeding clause that, in case of the death of testator and his wife "at the same time," he bequeathed his estate to his sons and daughters in specified proportions; the portions bequeathed to the daughters to be free from the control of their husbands. Held, that the word "death" was used to mean the state of being dead, and not the act of dying, and hence, the wife having survived testator and died, his children were entitled to take under the will. Sanger v. Butler, 101 S. W. 459, 461, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 527.

DEATH DUTY

"'Death duties' are an exaction to be paid to the state upon the occasion of death and the consequent transfer of ownership in the property of the decedent, through the intervening custody and administration of the law, to the persons designated by the law, through the statutes regulating wills, descents, and distribution." Appeal of Nettleton, 56 Atl. 565, 568, 76 Conn. 235.

"The system of 'death duties' prevailing in England and that adopted by Congress, leaving out of view the differences in rates and the administrative provisions, were substantially identical and of a threefold nature; that is, a probate duty charged upon the whole estate, a legacy duty charged upon each legacy or distributive share of personality, and a succession duty charged against each interest in real property." The general revenue law (Laws 1902, c. 3), imposing a tax on inheritances and legacies, imposes a tax on the right of the beneficiaries to take and not on the right of the decedent to give. In re Macky's Estate, 102 Pac. 1075, 1077, 46 Colo. 79, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1207 (quoting and adopting definition in Knowlton v. Moore, 20 Sup. Ct. 747, 178 U. S. 41, 44 L. Ed. 969).

A "death duty," as used in Gen. St. 1902, §§ 2367, 2377, imposing "death duties" on the estates of deceased persons, is an exaction by the state to be collected from the property left by a deceased person while it is in its custody, prescribed upon the occasion of his death and the subsequent devolution of his property, by the force of its laws. Under that statute making the tax payable by the administrator but containing no other express provisions for the collection and payment of the duties, the duties are payable, by necessary implication, from property or the proceeds of property not applied to the satisfaction of debts and administration expenses. Appeal of Hopkins (Conn.) 60 Atl. 657, 658, 659.

DEATH PENALTY

DEBAUCH

A female is "debauched" when, by arts and blandishments, she is deceived, corrupted, and drawn aside from the right path, and she is carnally known. Every illicit connection is not "seduction." It cannot be said that a female is drawn aside from the path of virtue unless she is honestly pursuing that path when approached. If her mind is corrupt and polluted by lewd thoughts, and she is ready to submit to improper embraces, as opportunity offers, from her own lustful propensity, and without any arts or blandishments of him with whom she has sexual intercourse, in such case she cannot be said to be seduced by the party with whom she has improper sexual relations. State v. Fogg, 105 S. W. 618, 623, 206 Mo. 696.

Seduce distinguished

Rev. St. 1889, § 3486, provided that any person who should, "under promise of marriage, seduce and debauch any unmarried female of good repute should be punished." This section was amended by Acts 1897, p. 106, entitled "An act to amend section 3486, chapter 47, article 2, of the Revised Statutes of Missouri of 1889, relating to the seduction of unmarried females under 18 years of age," and changed the section, so as to provide that any person who should, under promise of marriage, seduce or debauch any unmarried female, etc., should be punished. Held, that the words "seduce" and "debauch," though ordinarily not synonymous, were used in such section synonymously, and that the word "or" must be construed to mean "and," in order to bring the offense defined within the title, so that an instruction that the jury could convict, if they believed prosecutrix was either seduced "or" debauched by defendant under promise of marriage, was erroneous. The word "seduce," when used alone, usually implies the offense of inducing an unmarried woman, under or by promise of marriage, to surrender her chastity; while the word "debauch," ordinarily imports the deflowering of a woman, whether with or without her consent, and, if with her consent, whether that consent was obtained by promise or persuasion, or followed from her own desires. State v. Long, 141 S. W. 1099, 1101, 238 Mo. 383.

DEBENTURE

See Entitled to Debenture.

The word "debenture" does not of itself import a secured indebtedness. Rarton Nat. Bank v. Atkins, 47 Atl. 176, 180, 72 Vt. 33.

A "debenture" is a certificate given in pursuance of law, by the collector of a port of entry, for a certain sum due by the United States, payable at a time therein mentioned, to an importer, for drawback of duties on merchandise imported and exported by him, provided the duties on the said merchandise shall have been discharged prior to the time aforesaid. W. H. Thomas & Son Co. v. Barnett, 135 Fed. 172, 175 (quoting and adopting definition in Bouv. Law Dict.).

"A 'debt' is defined as 'that which is due from one person to another, whether money, goods, or services; that which one person is bound to pay to or perform for another; that which one is obliged to do or suffer.'" Bonhoff v. Wiehorst, 108 N. Y. Supp. 437, 441 (quoting and adopting the definition in Imperial Dictionary, and citing Latimer v. Veader, 46 N. Y. Supp. 823, 20 App. Div. 426).

"Debts" are a species of intangible property following the domicile of the owner for the purposes of taxation. Ellis v. People, 65 N. E. 428, 429, 199 Ill. 548.

"Between two persons mutually indebted, the balance is the 'debt.'" First Nat. Bank of Sharon v. City Nat. Bank of Kansas City, 76 S. W. 489, 490, 102 Mo. App. 357 (quoting with approval from Commercial Bank of Albany v. Hughes [N. Y.] 17 Wend. 101).

The word "debt" has several recognized meanings. Any financial obligation is a "debt" in a broad and general sense; but, where the term is used technically and restrictively, it implies an ascertained amount, and sometimes, as well, a foundation in contract. Henley v. Myers, 93 Pac. 168, 170, 76 Kan. 723, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 779 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, pp. 1891, 1892; 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7628).

A "debt," in its general sense, is a specific sum of money which is due or owing from one person to another, and denotes not only an obligation of the debtor to pay, but the right of the creditor to receive and enforce payment. Trask v. Livingston County, 109 S. W. 656, 660, 210 Mo. 582, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1045.

The word "debts" includes every claim and demand upon which a judgment for a sum of money, or directing the payment of money, could be recovered in an action (Code Civil Procedure New York, § 2514). In re Gall, 74 N. E. 875, 877, 182 N. Y. 270.

A debtor having but one "debt" and no assets to which the trustee can take title, may become a voluntary bankrupt under section 4, Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 30 Stat. 547, which provides that any person who has "debts," except a corporation, shall be entitled to the benefits of the act; section 1, subd. 29, providing that words importing the plural number may be applied to and mean only a single person or thing. In re Schwaninger, 144 Fed. 555, 557.

The orphans' court, authorized by statute to order a sale of lands of a decedent for the payment of his debts when the personality is insufficient for that purpose, may not order a sale of the real estate of a testator to pay the debts and funeral expenses of his wife, notwithstanding his will, devising his estate to his wife for life and at her death and the payment of the wife's debts and funeral expenses to a daughter; the word "debts" referring to the debts of decedent alone. Morris v. Dorsey, 77 Atl. 44, 46, 77 N. J. Eq. 460.

Const. art. 13, § 1, permits provision, except in case of credits secured, for a deduction from credits of debts due to bona fide residents. Pol. Code, § 3617, subd. 3, provides that a mortgage, or other obligation by which a debt is secured, when land is pledged, shall, for the purposes of taxation, be deemed an interest in the land so pledged, and by subdivision 6 the term "credits" means those solvent debts not secured owing to the person assessed, and the term "debt" means those unsecured liabilities owing by the person assessed to bona fide residents and section 3628, provides that, in assessing solvent credits not secured, a reduction shall be made of debts due bona fide residents, and section 3650, subd. 15, provides that in entering assessments containing solvent credits, subject to deduction, the assessor must enter in the proper column the value of debts and deduct them therefrom. Const. art. 13, § 4, provides that a mortgage, or other obligation by which a debt is secured, shall, for the purpose of taxation, be deemed an interest in the property affected. Pol. Code, § 3627, contains the same provision. Held, that a collateral security of credits by a loan on personalty was not a mortgage, etc., or "other obligation by which a debt is secured," within Const. art. 13, § 4, that section applying only to liens on land; nor was it a "mortgage or trust deed," within section 1, so that the person assessed on such credits was entitled to have his debts deducted therefrom; and Pol. Code, § 3629, subd. 6, directing the assessor to require each person assessed to show separately all solvent credits unsecured, is not applicable, not referring to the assessor's duty in making the assessment, but only prescribing the form of the taxpayer's return for the assessor's information. Bank of Willows v. Glenn County, 101 Pac. 13, 14, 155 Cal. 352.

Administration expenses

Rev. Codes, § 4799, provides that, on insolvency, all property, real or personal, without any distinction between them, is chargeable for the payment of debts except as otherwise provided, and section 7546 declares that all a decedent's property shall be chargeable with his debts, the expenses of the administration, and the allowance to the family, except as otherwise provided in the Code and in the Civil Code. Held, that the exceptions referred to homesteads set apart and allowances made for the support of the family pending administration, and that, with these exceptions, all of the decedent's property was equally liable for the payment of debts, using the term in its general sense, to include debts, family allowances, expenses of administration accrued and to accrue. Plains Land & Improvement Co. v. Lynch, 99 Pac. 847, 850, 38 Mont. 271, 129 Am. St. Rep. 645.

Advancements

Though an advancement is not a "debt" in any sense, testator may nevertheless impose such conditions on his devise to the beneficiary advanced as he sees proper and as are not unlawful. Montgomery's Trustee v. Brown, 121 S. W. 472, 475, 134 Ky. 592.

An "advancement" differs from a "debt" in that there is no enforceable liability on the part of the child to repay during the lifetime of the donor or after his death except in the way of suffering a deduction from his distributive share. Duckett v. Gerig, 79 N. E. 94, 95, 223 Ill. 284.

Alimony

Alimony is not due and payable as debt, damages, or penalty, but is an award on consideration of equity and public policy, founded on the obligation growing out of the marriage relation, that the husband must support his wife, which obligation continues after legal separation without her fault. Fickel v. Granger, 93 N. E. 527, 528, 83 Ohio, 101, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 270, 21 Ann. Cas. 1847.

An allowance of alimony is not a "debt," within the constitutional provisions forbidding imprisonment for debt, and may be enforced by attachment for contempt, and not alone by fieri facias and process of sequestration. Adams v. Adams (N. J.) 83 Atl. 190, 192.

Rev. St. 1899, § 2926, provides for an allowance of alimony and maintenance, and declares that the court may award execution for the collection thereof or enforce judgment by any lawful means in accordance with the practice of the court. Section 2927 gives a general lien on realty; and section 4327a declares that no property shall be exempt from execution or garnishment on a decree for alimony or maintenance. Held, that a decree allowing alimony or maintenance was a "decree for a debt," which was therefore not enforceable by imprisonment in contempt proceedings under section 4685, declaring that no person shall be arrested, held to bail, or imprisoned on any mesne process or execution, founded on any civil action whatsoever, and Const. art. 2, § 16, prohibiting imprisonment for noncompliance with an order for the payment of a "debt." Ex parte Kinsolving, 116 S. W. 1068, 1071, 135 Mo. App. 631.

A discharge in bankruptcy does not bar the collection of arrears in alimony and allowance for the support of minor children, due under a decree in an action for divorce, since such liability, although fixed by a decrees which is beyond the power of the court to alter or amend, because it did not reserve any right of subsequent modification or amendment, is not a "debt" within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 63, 30 Stat. 562, providing for the proving of debts which are a fixed liability as evidenced by a judgment. Wetmore v. Markoe, 25 Sup. Ct. 172-175, 196 U. S. 68, 49 L. Ed. 390, 2 Ann. Cas. 265.

A wife's claim for support of herself and children pendente lite granted under Rev. St. 1895, art. 2985, authorizing the allowance of temporary alimony is not a "debt," within the constitutional provision prohibiting imprisonment for debt. Ex parte Davis, 111 S. W. 394, 395, 101 Tex. 607, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1140.

The claim of a divorced wife under a decree for alimony in gross is a "debt" of the estate of her former husband, within Rev. Laws, c. 144, § 9, providing that the court may order the property of absentees to be applied to the discharge of such "debts" as may be proved against them. Purdon v. Blinn, 78 N. E. 462, 463, 192 Mass. 387.

Amount due bank

Neither a board of relief nor the superior court on appeal from its action could deduct from a taxpayer's list of taxable property a debt due a bank; the debt not being within Gen. St. 1902, § 2349, authorizing deduction of the amount of a debt when the amount can be added to the creditor's list. Cheney v. Town of Essex, 76 Atl. 1098, 1100, 83 Conn. 493.

Bailment distinguished

See Bailment.

Chose in action

The terms "chose in action" and "debt" are synonymous. A "chose in action" is the right of a creditor to be paid, while a "debt" is the obligation of the debtor to pay. "As said by Prof. Minor: 'The chose in action, or right of the creditor, is a personal right which adheres to him wherever his situs may be. It may for some purposes be his legal situs (or domicile), for others, his actual situs. Just as, in the case of tangible chattels, though the title thereto follows the owner, and its transfer will be regulated by the law of the owner's situs, yet this transferee's ability to enforce that title may be in the exceptional cases determined by a different system of law, should the chattels be actually situated elsewhere. So, also, in the case of debts, though the right to enforce them follows the owner (the creditor), and his transfer is therefore to be governed by the law of his situs; yet his or his transferee's ability to enforce that right may depend upon another jurisdiction and system of law, if he has to resort to another state to sue the debtor.'" Smead & Powell v. D. W. Chandler

Claim synonymous

The word, "claim," as used in the bankruptcy act providing for appeals from a judgment allowing or rejecting a debt, or claim of $500 or over, means a "debt." Where a creditor holding a note given by a bankrupt firm, signed as surety by a member of the firm, also bankrupt, having proved the debt against the firm estate, also filed it as an individual debt against the estate of the surety, the only question determined by an order allowing such claim was that it was a provable debt against the individual estate of the partner, and such order was reviewable only by appeal under the Bankruptcy Act; the amount allowed being over $500. In re Mueller, 135 Fed. 711, 714, 68 C. C. A. 349.

While the word "claim" is used in its signification of the demand or assertion of a right in Bankr. Act, § 2, subd. 11, 30 Stat. 554, c. 541, in respect of "all claims of bankrupts to their exemptions," it is also used in many parts of the act as referring to "debts" presented for proof against estates in bankruptcy. Holden v. Stratton, 24 Sup. Ct. 45, 46, 191 U. S. 115, 48 L. Ed. 116 (citing Hutchinson v. Otis, 23 Sup. Ct. 778, 190 U. S. 552, 555, 47 L. Ed. 1179, 1180; In re Whitener, 105 Fed. 180, 44 C. C. A. 434; In re Columbia Real Estate Co., 112 Fed. 645, 50 C. C. A. 406).

The use of the word "claim" in the preamble of Laws 1907, c. 244, which provides for a liquidation of a claim against the state, does not show that the Legislature did not intend to recognize the claim as a debt or obligation, since the term "debt" is of large import, and includes all which is due to a person under any form of obligation or promise, and which in its enlarged sense covers any kind of a just demand. Hanly v. Sims, 94 N. E. 401, 404, 175 Ind. 345.

Compensation for appropriation of private property

The statutory liability of a city to pay damages for the taking of land for highway purposes pending a petition for assessment thereof by a jury is not a debt within St. 1909, c. 490, pt. 1, § 4, cl. 2, declaring that personal property for purposes of taxation shall include debts due the person to be taxed more than he is indebted or pays interest for. Powers v. City of Worcester, 97 N. E. 95, 96, 210 Mass. 471.

Conditional, uncertain, contingent, or future obligation

A sum payable on a contingency is not a "debt," nor does it become a "debt" until the contingency happens. Where a city contracted on June 5, 1900, for the installation of police and fire alarm telegraph systems, for which the city agreed to pay a monthly rent at a specified rate for five years, with the right to purchase each at a price specified, and no liability could accrue against the city until after the commencement of the succeeding fiscal year, the fact that at the time the contracts were made there was no money in either of the funds designated for the payment of the indebtedness which might accrue, and that no sinking fund was provided for, did not render the contracts invalid, under Const. art. 11, § 18, prohibiting cities from incurring indebtedness for any purpose exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for that year, and Sacramento City Charter, § 25, subd. 22, declaring that in no case shall a liability be created or a warrant be drawn against any fund beyond the actual amount of money existing in the fund, with which to meet the same; there being no proof that sufficient money would not be paid into the funds specified to meet the liability under the contracts before they should accrue. Doland v. Clark, 76 Pac. 958, 960, 143 Cal. 176.

Under a provision of the articles of incorporation of a building and loan association that "no stock shall be transferred unless all debts due the association are first paid," the association did not, as against a transferee of stock from a shareholder, have a prior claim for unliquidated damages arising from such shareholder's defalcation while an officer of the association; the term "debts" in this connection not including unliquidated claims by way of damages for a tort. Jewell v. Nuhn (Iowa) 138 N. W. 457, 458.

Under Membership Corporations Law, § 11, which provides that the directors of membership corporations shall be liable for debts of the corporation contracted during their term of office and payable within one year or less from the date it was contracted, if an action on an unsatisfied judgment against the corporation is brought against the directors within one year of its return, a contingent liability, or a liability for breach of an executory contract, is not a "debt," and a debt is "contracted" only when the contingency upon which it is to arise occurs, and, where a lease for one year is executed by the directors of a membership corporation at a yearly rental payable monthly in advance, no debt is "contracted" for monthly installments of rent maturing after their term of office has expired. Dunn v. Neustadt, 129 N. Y. Supp. 161, 163, 72 Misc. Rep. 1.

The right of attachment to secure the payment of a "debt not yet due" is "confined to cases where, in addition to other requisites, there is an existing debt, although not exigible—debitum in praesenti, solvendum in futuro—an existing, absolute liability to pay at a future time, and does not embrace cases of prospective and conditional liability"; nor will an attachment lie where the debt is unliquidated and its amount uncertain, and hence ought not to serve as the basis of a positive oath. E. Sondheimer Co. v. Richland Lumber Co., 46 South. 806, 809, 121 La. 786 (citing Cross, Plead. p. 281).

A claim is sufficiently certain as a "debt" or "demand," under the attachment laws of Texas (Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 186 et seq.), where the petition alleges an undertaking to pay the reasonable value of certain plans prepared by plaintiff, and the affidavit to the petition states that the defendant is indebted to him in the sum of $1,050, and in the prayer for the attachment plaintiff alleges that the debt, interest, and costs will amount to the sum of $1,000. Hall v. Parry, 118 S. W. 561, 565, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 40.

"Debt," prior to the adoption of the Code, was an action for the recovery of a sum certain, and hence would not lie to recover damages for breach of covenants in a deed. Hayden v. Patterson, 88 Pac. 437, 438, 39 Colo. 15.

Rev. St. 1909, §§ 6704, 6711, subjects a homestead to levy of execution on all causes of action existing at the time of its acquisition, which is the date of the filing of the homestead deed in the proper office for the record of deeds. Defendant who, in June, 1903, promised to marry plaintiff, and set February 24, 1904, for the wedding, purchased a farm in October, 1903, and filed his deed for record February 11, 1904, and six days later married another woman, and in March occupied the farm as his homestead, and a judgment against him in plaintiff's action for breach of marriage promise was obtained in May following. Held, that while the word "debt," as used in the homestead law, extended its operation to include indebtedness arising out of money obligations not due, a "debt" was an unconditional promise to pay a fixed sum at some specified time, differing from a contract to be performed in the future upon a condition precedent which might never happen; that the term "cause of action" meant matter for which an action might be brought, and accrued when a person first had the right to bring an action; that, even though the property did not become a homestead until after the cause of action upon which process was founded had accrued, plaintiff's cause of action did not accrue when the promise of marriage was made; and hence that the homestead was not subject to execution on her judgment. Sperry v. Cook, 152 S. W. 313, 321, 247 Mo. 132.

Corporate stock

At common law, corporate shares were not subject to attachment or levy, not being considered as a chattel or "debt." Fowler v. Dickson (Del.) 74 Atl. 601, 605, 1 Boyce, 113 (citing Foster v. Potter, 37 Mo. 525).

Owners of a majority of the stock of a railroad company sold their holdings under an agreement to pay off all indebtedness of the company and deposited the proceeds of the stock to be paid out in discharge of such indebtedness on vouchers issued by the directors; the surplus remaining to be divided between them in proportion to their several holdings. Held, that the sum which a stockholder had paid for his stock was not a debt of the company, and the directors had no authority to allow and pay a claim therefor as against another stockholder. Jackson v. White, 188 Fed. 775, 779, 110 C. C. A. 481.

Costs

Costs of prosecution are not a "debt," within Const. 1890, § 30, which prohibits imprisonment for debt. Ex parte McInnis, 54 South. 260, 261, 98 Miss. 773.

The word "debt," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64b, subd. 5, referring to debts owing by the bankrupt, refers only to such debts as are based upon contract, express or implied, or to personal obligations for the payment of money imposed upon the bankrupt by statute. Therefore a claim for taxable costs incurred in good faith by a creditor of a bankrupt in an attachment suit to recover a provable debt, which attachment was rendered void by subsequent bankruptcy proceedings, is not a "debt." In re The Copper King, 148 Fed. 649, 650.

Counsel fees

An order of a court of bankruptcy, allowing expenses incurred by a bankrupt's trustee for counsel fees, is not one allowing a "debt or claim" against the estate, within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 25a, 30 Stat. 553, and appealable thereunder, but is an administrative order over which the Circuit Court of Appeals is given jurisdiction to superintend and revise by section 24b, and such mode of review is exclusive. W. J. Davidson & Co. v. Friedman, 140 Fed. 853, 72 C. C. A. 553.

Demand distinguished

See Demand.

Fine

A fine for a misdemeanor is not a "debt" due the state. Hall v. Coleman, 75 S. E. 1132, 138 Ga. 734.

A fine imposed for a violation of a city ordinance is not a debt within the meaning of the constitutional provision forbidding imprisonment for debt. Peterson v. State, 112 N. W. 306, 310, 79 Neb. 132, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 292, 126 Am. St. Rep. 651.

While it is true that a fine and costs in criminal actions are "debts," they are also a part of the punishment imposed as a result of the conviction and judgment, and imprisonment at hard labor for nonpayment is not unconstitutional as being imprisonment for a debt. State v. Morgan, 53 S. E. 142, 144, 141 N. C. 726 (citing 11 Cyc.; In re Sanborn, 52 Fed. 583).

Funeral expenses

In a proceeding to collect a collateral inheritance tax under a statute providing that reasonable funeral expenses are included within the term "debts" which the statute requires to be deducted, a finding that the amount to be expended for the erection of a tomb was reasonable cannot be reviewed, where the record does not show how much was reserved for that purpose. Morrow v. Durant, 118 N. W. 781, 783, 140 Iowa, 437, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 474, 17 Ann. Cas. 850.

Interest

The term "debt" embraces interest as well as principal, and "interest," in the absence of an express agreement, is a mere incident of the debt, and may be recovered as damages for its detention. Central Bank & Trust Corp. v. State, 76 S. E. 587, 589, 139 Ga. 54.

In determining whether a "debt" will be created by a proposed issue of municipal bonds in excess of the limit authorized by law, the interest reserved is not to be taken into account and added to the principal. Interest becomes a part of the debt, or a debt at all, only when it is earned. Carlson v. City of Helena, 102 Pac. 39, 44, 39 Mont. 82, 17 Ann. Cas. 1233.

Judgment

A "judgment," for most purposes, is to be regarded as a new "debt." It destroys by merger the original cause of action, substituting a new obligation for the old. The real asset which the owner of the judgment possesses is not the record of the judgment but the debt which it evidences, and, this being true, there is no logical reason for the view that, in fixing the location of property for the purposes of administration, a distinction should be made between a simple contract debt and a judgment debt. Though differently evidenced, both are contract debts, belong to the same species of intangible property, and should be governed by the same principles. Miller v. Hoover, 97 S. W. 210, 212, 121 Mo. App. 568 (citing 1 Freem. Judgm. [4th Ed.] § 217; Swancy v. Scott, 9 Humph. [28 Tenn.] 327).

Every "judgment" is for most purposes to be regarded as a new "debt"; the chief and perhaps the only exception being in cases when the technical operation of the doctrine of merger would produce manifest hardship. This new debt is not in general affected by the character of the old one. Though the cause of the action may have arisen from a tort, the judgment therefore is not any the less a contract or in the nature of a contract. Mayor, etc., of City of Anniston v. Hurt, 37 South. 220, 222, 140 Ala. 394, 103 Am. St. Rep. 45 (quoting 1 Freem. Judgm. § 217; 1 Cyc. p. 79).

A judgment against a surety on a supersedeas bond is a "debt" contracted at the date of the approval of such bond, within the meaning of that clause of the timber culture law which provides that land acquired under such law shall not be liable for the satisfaction of any debt contracted before the issuance of the final certificate thereof. Leiman v. Chipman, 117 N. W. 885, 886, 82 Neb. 392.

Judgment for tort

A judgment in tort is not a "debt" within Const. art. 1, § 24, providing that no person shall be imprisoned for debt except in cases of fraud. Ex parte Berry, 67 S. E. 225, 85 S. C. 243, 20 Ann. Cas. 1344.

In Code 1906, § 909, making a stockholder liable to a certain extent for the "debts" of the corporation contracted during the ownership of the stock, the word "debts" should be construed according to its common and usually understood significance, and so construed would not include damages awarded for commission of torts, as a judgment for infringement of patent. Avery & Sons v. McClure, 47 South. 901, 903, 906, 94 Miss. 172, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 256, 19 Ann. Cas. 134.

The word "debts," in Rev. Laws 1902, c. 149, § 2, authorizing the executor, who is a residuary legatee, to give a bond conditioned on the payment of all "debts" and legacies of testator, etc., embraces a judgment against an executrix on a claim founded on the fraud of testator. Lothrop v. Parke, 88 N. E. 666, 667, 202 Mass. 104.

A judgment against a street railway company, in an action for tort for injuries received by plaintiff while a passenger on a car, is not a debt for which the directors may be made liable, under Rev. Laws, c. 112, § 19, providing that the directors of a street railway company shall be jointly and severally liable to the extent of its capital stock for all "debts and contracts" until the whole amount of such capital stock shall have been paid in and a certificate filed, etc. The term neither includes torts nor judgments for torts. Savage v. Shaw, 81 N. E. 303, 195 Mass. 571, 122 Am. St. Rep. 272, 12 Ann. Cas. 806 (citing Child v. Boston & Fairhaven Iron Works, 137 Mass. 516, 50 Am. Rep. 328; Heacock v. Sherman, 14 Wend. [N. Y.] 58; Chase v. Curtis, 5 Sup. Ct. 554, 113 U. S. 452, 23 L. Ed. 1038; Leighton v. Campbell, 20 Atl. 14, 17 R. I. 51, 9 L. R. A. 187; Bohn v. Brown, 33 Mich. 257; Cable v. McCune, 26 Mo. 371, 72 Am. Dec. 214; Cable v. Gaty, 34 Mo. 573, 86 Am. Dec. 126; Doolittle v. Marsh, 9 N. W. 54, 11 Neb. 243).

Legacy

A legacy is not a debt within the meaning of Civ. Code 1895, § 3355, par. 1, authorizing a widow, under certain circumstances, to pay the debts of her husband's estate and take possession of the same. Harrell v. Harrell, 51 S. E. 283, 284, 123 Ga. 267.

As legal obligation

The essence of a "debt" is a legal liability on the part of one person to pay money to another at some time, which liability is enforceable by a judicial action. Kidd v.

Puritana Cereal Food Co., 122 S. W. 784, 788, 145 Mo. App. 502.

A "debt" is money due upon a contract, without reference to the question of the remedy for its collection. It is not essential to the creation of a debt that the borrower should be liable to be sued therefor. Campbell v. State ex rel. Brett, 99 Pac. 778, 784, 23 Okl. 109.

The word "debt," in Laws 1893, p. 200, c. 100, authorizing executors and administrators to compromise or compound any debt or claim owing by the estate of their testator or intestate, includes every claim and demand on which a judgment for a sum of money, or directing the payment of a sum of money, could be recovered in an action. In re Gilman's Estate, 87 N. Y. Supp. 128, 129, 92 App. Div. 462.

The legal acceptation of the word "debt" is not limited to the idea of a determinate sum of money due on an express agreement, but applies to obligations imposed by law or quasi contracts, as well as to obligations arising from contracts, express or implied. The word is also defined as meaning all that is due a man under any form of obligation or promise. In practice it means a form of action which lies to recover a sum certain, and it lies whenever the sum due is contained or ascertained in such a manner as to be readily reduced to a certainty without regard to the manner in which the obligation was incurred or is evidenced. Morgan's Louisiana & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Stewart, 44 South. 138, 143, 119 La. 392 (quoting definition in Grey v. Bennett, 3 Metc. [44 Mass.] 522).

Legislative investigation expenses

A resolution providing for a legislative investigation and the expenses thereof does not create a "debt" within Const. art. 8, § 8, relating to the passage of laws creating a state debt; the term "debt" being used to refer to matters mentioned in section 6, and not to ordinary legislative expenses. State ex rel. Rosenheim v. Frear, 119 N. W. 894, 896, 138 Wis. 173.

Liability for breach of contract

Court and Practice Act 1905, § 984, provides that after the settlement of an estate, and after two years from the notice of qualification of administrator, the heirs shall be liable for all debts for which suits could not have been brought against the personal representative. Sections 985 and 987 give a creditor holding a contingent claim, the right of action on which did not accrue during the period within which an action could be brought against the personal representative, a right to sue in equity all persons so liable. Held, that a demand for breach of a covenant for quiet enjoyment constitutes a "debt," within section 984, which must be recovered by a suit in equity under section 987. Hebert v. Handy, 72 Atl. 1102, 1103, 1104, 29 R. I. 543.

A covenant of warranty is not considered a debt until broken. McKillop v. Burton's Adm'r, 74 Atl. 78, 80, 82 Vt. 408.

Liability for corporate debts

The liability of a corporation as principal to a surety upon its note is a debt, falling under the direct provisions of Kirby's Dig. § 859, making the president and secretary of a corporation liable for all debts contracted during the period of neglect or refusal to file the report of the financial condition of the corporation, as required by section 848. Under the provisions of Kirby's Dig. § 859, which makes the president and secretary of a corporation liable for its debts incurred during any period of neglect or refusal to file a financial report according to section 848, the liability of its officers is confined to debts incurred during the period of neglect or refusal, but not to debts renewed during that time. Therefore the president and secretary of a corporation who failed to file the report required were not liable to a surety on a note of this corporation, where the contract of suretyship had been entered into previous to their neglect. Griffin v. Long (Ark.) 131 S. W. 672, 674, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 855.

Under Business Corporation Law (Laws 1892, c. 691, § 6, taken from Laws 1875, p. 763, c. 611, § 34), providing that stockholders of a full liability corporation shall be severally and individually liable for the corporate debts, and Stock Corporation Law (Laws 1892, c. 688, § 55, taken from Laws 1875, c. 611, § 25), providing that no stockholder shall be personally liable for any corporate debt not payable within two years from the time it is contracted, the liability of a corporation as an assignee of a lease, stipulating for the rent payable quarterly in advance, is a "contingent liability," which only ripens into a debt as the rent falls due, and therefore is not a "debt," within the meaning of the statutes. Sanford v. Rhoads, 99 N. Y. Supp. 407, 408, 113 App. Div. 782 (citing Garrison v. Howe, 17 N. Y. 458; Gold v. Clyne, 31 N. E. 980, 134 N. Y. 262, 17 L. R. A. 767; Whitney Arms Co. v. Barlow, 68 N. Y. 34).

Liability for tort

An action against real estate brokers for deceit in selling land is governed by Rev. St. 1895, art. 3354, requiring actions for a "debt," not evidenced by a written contract, to be brought within two years, and not by article 3358, requiring actions other than for the recovery of land, for which no limitation is otherwise prescribed, to be brought within four years. Gordon v. Rhodes & Daniel, 116 S. W. 40, 41, 102 Tex. 300.

A liability arising out of a tortious act is not a "debt" or "debt contract," within Rev. St. U. S. § 2296, exempting a homestead from liability for "debts." Shelby v. Zeigler, 98 Pac. 969, 998, 22 Okl. 799.

The term "debt," in Rev. Codes 1899, § 5352, subd. 6, provides that the plaintiff may have the property of the defendant attached when the debt upon which the action is commenced was incurred for property obtained under false pretenses, means a debt which has been assented to by the defendant, and an attachment cannot be had in an action to recover damages for tort. Sonnesyn v. Akin, 97 N. W. 557, 560, 12 N. D. 227.

A judgment entered by a state court in New York on a general verdict for plaintiff in an action for breach of promise of marriage, although seduction is also alleged, is one on contract, and does not create a debt for a willful and malicious injury or for seduction of an unmarried female within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17a (2). 30 Stat. 550, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 5, 32 Stat. 798, which excepts such debts from those dischargeable in bankruptcy, especially since under the law of the state the plaintiff could not maintain an action in tort for her own seduction, and the court may, on the bankruptcy of the defendant, under section 11 of the act, stay proceedings for the enforcement of such judgment. In re Warth, 196 Fed. 571, 574.

In Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 68a, 30 Stat. 565, providing that mutual debts between the estate of a bankrupt and a creditor shall be set off against each other and the balance only allowed or paid, the word "debts" should be construed to include a right of action against the creditor for injury to the bankrupt's property, which passed to the trustee under section 70a (6), although unliquidated. In re Harper, 175 Fed. 412, 424.

As a liquidated demand

The "debts" which may be proved under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, § 63, subd. "a," 30 Stat. 562, c. 541, are fixed liabilities, as evidenced by a judgment or an instrument in writing absolutely owing, whether payable immediately or not, and claims for unliquidated damages are not generally provable. Brown & Adams v. United Button Co., 149 Fed. 48, 50, 79 C. C. A. 70, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 961, 9 Ann. Cas. 445.

The word "debt," within Code 1858, § 2203, which authorizes administration upon the estate of a nonresident in a county where a debtor resides, means a fixed or specific sum due by contract, and does not include unliquidated damages recoverable for tort. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Herb, 143 S. W. 1138, 1141, 125 Tenn. 408.

The term "debt" does not include a claim for unliquidated damages. Claims for damages against the assignor of a claim for rent for delay in performing a contract to repair, for negligence in the performance thereof, for water and gas furnished, for injury to defendant's business, being mere unliquidated damages and not "debts," are not available under Rev. St. 1899, § 4487, providing that, if two or more persons are mutually indebted in any manner and one of them commences an action against the other, one "debt" may be set off against the other, though such "debts" are of a different nature. Scarritt Estate Co. v. J. F. Schmelzer & Sons Arms Co., 86 S. W. 489, 490, 110 Mo. App. 406 (citing Bolden v. Jensen, 69 Fed. 745, 746; In re Adams, 12 Daly, 454; Watson v. McNairy, 1 Bibb [4 Ky.] 356; Lindsay v. King, 23 N. C. 401; Dowling v. Stewart, 3 Scam. [4 Ill.] 193; Baum v. Tonkin, 1 Atl. 535, 110 Pa. 569; Powell v. Oregonian R. Co., 36 Fed. 726, 2 L. R. A. 270).

Unliquidated demands against plaintiff pleaded by defendant in an action on a note constituted a counterclaim but not a "debt" subject to set-off under Rev. St. 1900, § 1806, and verdict for plaintiff is not an adjudication of defendant's demands. Thayer-Moore Brokerage Co. v. Campbell, 147 S. W. 545, 546, 164 Mo. App. 8 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1864).

In Rev. Laws, c. 159, § 3, cl. 8, authorizing suits to reach, in payment of a debt, property fraudulently conveyed, the word "debt" is not used in its technical sense, but includes ordinary contract obligations, although the amount due has not been definitely ascertained. Woodbury v. Sparrell Print, 73 N. E. 547, 548, 187 Mass. 426.

An attachment could not be sued out under Rev. St. 1899, § 366, subd. 14, authorizing an attachment where the debt sued for was fraudulently contracted by the debtor, in aid of an action for money had and received by defendant under land contracts which plaintiff was induced to make by defendant's false and fraudulent representations as to the value and location of the land; there being no "debt" within the meaning of the statute. Steele v. Brazier, 123 S. W. 477, 480, 481, 139 Mo. App. 319.

Kirby's Dig. Ark. § 848, requires the president and secretary of every corporation to file annual reports, and section 859 provides that, if the president or secretary of any such corporation neglects or refuses to do so, they shall be liable for all debts of the corporation contracted during the period of such negligence or refusal. Held that, since the word "debt" means an obligation resting on one person to pay or perform something that is due to another, the state or condition of being indebted to another, and includes all that is due by one person to another in any form of obligation or promise, the term, as used in such section, was not limited to obligations certain, arising from an express agreement, but included as well corporate obligations consisting of unliquidated damages for breach of contract. Proctor-Gamble Co. v. Warren Cotton Oil Co., 180 Fed. 543, 547.

Money in bank

"Accounts," "claims," and "debts" belonging to a mercantile business are not ordinarily used to embrace money in bank, but to designate the accounts, claims, and debts against customers. Wyatt v. Norris, 66 S. E. 1016, 1017, 66 W. Va. 667.

Note

Webster's International Dictionary defines "debt" to be "that which is due from one person to another, whether money, goods, or services; that which one person is bound to pay to another or to perform for his benefit; thing owed; obligation; liability." After a note has been transferred by the payee, there is no debt due the payee from the maker. Commonwealth v. Morton, 140 S. W. 685, 686, 145 Ky. 521.

A gift of the donor's note in her lifetime, without consideration, was not such a "debt" against her estate as would justify the sale of her real estate to pay it. Dacy v. Goll, 90 N. E. 179, 242 Ill. 606.

Obligation distinguished

Rev. Codes 1899, § 5047, relating to attachment, defines "debtor" as one who, by reason of an existing obligation, has or may become liable to pay money to another, whether such liability is certain or contingent, and, so defined, the term "debtor" has its usual signification (that is, one from whom a debt is due), using the word according to its common meaning. Section 3762 defines an "obligation" as a legal duty by which a person is bound to do or not to do a certain thing. The sections quoted make it plain that the Legislature has broadened the common meaning of the words "debtor" and "creditor" so as to include all persons from whom or to whom obligations are due, whether arising from contract or imposed by law; but none of these provisions define the term "debt" or furnish ground for the contention that "debt" and "obligation" are synonymous. It will be conceded that the common and ordinary meaning of the term "debt," in legal acceptance of the term, is an obligation resting upon contract, either express or implied. Under the statutory definitions of a debtor, it is not necessary to owe a debt. It is sufficient if one owes an obligation imposed by law. Every debt, however, is an obligation, but every obligation is not a debt. "Obligation" is the broader term; "debt" the narrower. The term "obligation" includes all debts. The term "debt" does not include all obligations, but only that particular kind of obligations known as debts. The statement, therefore, that the Legislature has specifically defined the term "debt," and that the term "debt" is synonymous with the word "obligation," is not sustained by the statute. Section 5352, subd. 6, providing that plaintiff may have the property of the defendant attached when the "debt" on which the action is commenced was incurred for property obtained under false pretenses, applies only when the action is commenced upon a debt which has been assented to by the defendant, and does not apply in actions to recover damages for torts. Sonnesyn v. Akin, 97 N. W. 557, 560-563, 12 N. D. 227.

As an obligation ex contractu

A "debt" is generally defined as a sum of money due by certain and express agreements founded upon an express or implied contract to pay a certain amount at a certain time. Morrill v. Bentley, 130 N. W. 734, 740, 150 Iowa, 677.

The word "debt" is of large import, including not only debts of record or judgment and debts by specialty, but also obligations arising under simple contract to a very wide extent, and in the popular sense includes all that is due to a man under any form of obligation or promise. A contract between plaintiff and his agent provided for advances to the agent to be repaid from commissions to be earned, and that the agent should remain in the employment so long as he was in "debt" to plaintiff. Held, that the use of the word "debt," with reference to advances, implied no different mode of repaying than that provided for by the terms of the contract, and did not import personal liability. Arbaugh v. Shockney, 72 N. E. 668, 669, 34 Ind. App. 268 (citing Bouvier's Law Dict.).

The words "debt or debts," as used in a provision in a contract between a life insurance society and an agent to the effect that the society may offset against any claims for commissions under the contract any debt or debts due at any time by the agent to the society, apply only to such debts as arise out of the relation created by the contract, and do not entitle the society to offset against renewal premiums due thereunder advances made to the agent after the relation had ceased and the agent's rights under the contract had been assigned to a third person, of which the society had notice. Campbell v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 130 Fed. 786, 787.

In a broad and general sense, a debt is whatever one owes. In a purely technical sense, it is that for which an action of debt will lie—a sum of money due by certain and express agreement. A debt is not a contract, but it may be the result of a contract. Hornbeck v. State ex rel. Davidson, 71 N. E. 916, 917, 33 Ind. App. 609.

Judicial definitions of the term "debt" must be read in connection with the facts out of which their necessity arose, and in a broad sense a "debt" is whatever one owes. In a purely technical sense, it is that for which an action for debt would lie; a sum of money due by certain and express agreement. A "debt" is not a contract, but it may be the result of a contract. Strong v. Ross, 71 N. E. 916, 917, 33 Ind. App. 586.

A "debt" is something due from one person, the debtor, to another called the creditor, and may be created by simple contract, or evidenced by specialty or judgment, according to the nature of the obligation giving rise to it. Summit Silk Co. v. Kinston Spinning Co., 70 S. E. 820, 823, 154 N. C. 421, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 897.

"Debts" are obligations for the payment of money, founded on contract, express or implied." New Jersey v. Anderson, 27 Sup. Ct. 137, 140, 203 U. S. 483, 51 L. Ed. 284 (quoting Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 472, 26 L. Ed. 197).

Penalties

An action to recover a penalty for violating an ordinance is a civil action, though commenced by affidavit and warrant, and the penalty imposed is not a "debt," within the meaning of the Constitution, so as to prohibit its enforcement by arrest and imprisonment; and hence an ordinance requiring licenses to run certain vehicles, including automobiles, was not unconstitutional for imposing a penalty of fine and imprisonment for noncompliance therewith. City of Chicago v. Morell, 93 N. E. 295, 296, 247 Ill. 383.

The liability of a bankrupt for the statutory penalty for cutting trees, imposed by Code Ala. 1907, § 6035 et seq., is not a "debt" founded upon an implied contract, which can be proved against his estate in bankruptcy, under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 63a (4), 30 Stat. 562. In re Southern Steel Co., 133 Fed. 498, 500.

Since the word "debt" may embrace a penalty recoverable by civil action, an action on a liquor dealer's bond for selling liquor to a minor is not an action founded on a contract in writing, but an action for a debt not so evident, and is therefore barred after two years by Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 3354, subd. 4. Hillman v. Gallagher (Tex.) 120 S. W. 505, 506.

As provable debt

"Debt," as used in the Bankruptcy Act, includes any debt, demand, or claim provable in bankruptcy. Brake v. Callison, 129 Fed. 201, 203, 63 C. C. A. 359.

The word "debt," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 68a, 30 Stat. 565, relating to the setting off of debts against a bankrupt, includes any debt provable in bankruptcy; and a debt is provable, whether due or not at the time of bankruptcy. Germania Savings Bank & Trust Co. v. Loeb, 188 Fed. 285, 289, 110 C. C. A. 263.

Nothing is within the purview of the provisions of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544, relating to preferences except with reference to debts which may be proved for a dividend, but, on the other hand, anything which may be proved is within the purview of such provisions. Clarke v. Rogers, 183 Fed. 518, 522, 106 C. C. A. 64.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 51, 30 Stat. 547, provides that the net proceeds of the partnership property shall be appropriated to the payment of partnership debts, and the net proceeds of the individual estate of each partner to the payment of his individual debts; that if any surplus remains of property of any partner, it shall be added to the partnership assets and be applied to the payment of partnership debts, and vice versa; section 1, par. 11, declares that the term "debt" means any debt, demand, or claim provable in bankruptcy; section 63a(1) declares that debts of the bankrupt may be proved and allowed against his estate which are a fixed liability, as evidenced by a judgment or an instrument in writing absolutely owing at the filing of the petition against him, whether then payable or not, with any interest thereon which would have been recoverable at that date, or with a rebate of interest on such as were not then payable and did not bear interest; and section 63a (5) authorizes the allowance of provable debts reduced to judgment after the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, "less costs incurred and interest accrued after the filing of the petition and up to the time of the entry of such judgments." Held, that where the estate of an individual bankrupt partner was more than enough to pay his individual debts, but the individual estates of both partners and the partnership property was insufficient to pay partnership debts, the claim of an individual creditor for interest accruing after the filing of the bankruptcy petition was not a "debt" which the creditor was entitled to have paid out of the partner's individual assets as against partnership creditors. In re Chandler, 184 Fed. 887, 888, 107 C. C. A. 209.

The term "debt" is defined in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, 30 Stat. 544, to include any debt, demand, or claim provable in bankruptcy. Prior to the filing of an involuntary bankruptcy petition the bankrupt made an assignment of his claim on insurance policies, constituting his sole assets, and the assignee rendered valuable services in attempting to collect the claims. On a trustee in bankruptcy being appointed, the assignee turned over to him the policies, with all proofs and claims, subject to a lien for allowances for the expenses incurred, and the trustee in bankruptcy subsequently settled the claims with the insurance companies. The claim of the assignee for expenses and services was not a debt. In re Levitt, 126 Fed. 889, 891.

The liability of a bankrupt indorser of commercial paper, which did not become absolute until after the filing of a petition, is a "debt" within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, subd. 11, 30 Stat. 544. In re Philip Semmer Glass Co., 135 Fed. 77, 78, 67 C. C. A. 551.

"Debt" is defined as a sum of money due by certain and express agreement, as by bond for a determinate sum, a bill or note, a special bargain, or a rent reserved on a lease, where the amount is fixed and specific, and does not depend on any subsequent valuation to settle it. 3 Bl. Comm. 164. Since the separate property of a married woman residing in Florida, under the laws of that state, is liable in equity for her business obligations, where she is engaged in business on her own account, though not a free trader, such obligations constitute "debts" within Bankr. Law, § 1 (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544) declaring the term "debt" to include any debt, demand, or claim provable in bankruptcy, and section 63, 30 Stat. 562, declaring that debts of a bankrupt may be proved and allowed against his estate which are founded on an open account, or on a contract, express or implied. MacDonald v. Tefft-Weller Co., 128 Fed. 381, 385, 63 C. C. A. 123, 65 L. R. A. 106.

Refunds

The sum authorized to be refunded by an ordinance providing for the refunding of money previously paid by persons for paying in front of their property, according to the front foot rule, is not a "debt," within the meaning of Const. art. 11, §§ 5, 7, providing that no debt shall be created by any city, unless at the same time provision be made for payment by the creation of a sinking fund, etc., and such an ordinance is not unconstitutional. City of Houston v. Stewart, 87 S. W. 668, 665, 99 Tex. 67.

Salary of public officer

The word "debt," used in the San Antonio city charter, providing that any debt contracted by any officer, the payment of which has not been previously provided for by ordinance, shall be void, etc., has no reference to the salaries of officers and employees, provision for the appointment of which is made in the charter, and the pay of policemen and firemen is not a debt created by any officer of the city, but is one that arises from their appointment in a legal way, on the performance of the duties of their positions. City of San Antonio v. Beck (Tex.) 101 S. W. 263, 265.

Securities distinguished

The lien which arises by operation of law on the execution of a deed to secure a debt is a legal entity distinct from the debt itself, securing the payment of the debt not only by affording evidence of its existence, but by providing for its payment, the terms "debt" and "security" not being synonymous. McIntire v. Garmany, 70 S. E. 198, 199, 8 Ga. App. 802.

A contract of guaranty is to be strictly construed, and a guaranty executed to a bank of the payment of any "debt" which a corporation may "contract or become liable for to said bank" cannot be enlarged to render the guarantor liable on guaranties by the corporation of collateral notes pledged by it to the bank, which guaranties did not constitute debts of the corporation, but were merely executory contracts, on which its liability was contingent. National Bank of Commerce of Kansas City, Mo., v. Rockefeller, 174 Fed. 22, 30, 98 C. C. A. 8.

Set-off

A set-off is a "debt" due defendant from plaintiff. Ashland Coal & Coke Co. v. Hull Coal & Coke Corp., 68 S. E. 124, 128, 67 W. Va. 503.

See Stock (In Corporation Law).

Surety's claim for contribution

A claim by one surety against another for contribution becomes a "debt" only on payment by the former in excess of his share, and therefore, where such excessive payment is made after the issuance of a patent to the latter under the homestead act, the land is not exempt under Rev. St. U. S. § 2296, providing that lands acquired under the act shall not be liable to the satisfaction of any "debt" contracted prior to the issue of the patent therefor. Shoemaker v. Stimson, 47 Pac. 218, 219, 16 Wash. 2.

Tax

Taxes are not "debts" in the ordinary sense of that word. Hecox v. Teller County, 198 Fed. 634, 635, 117 C. C. A. 338.

A tax is not founded upon a contract, express or implied, and is not a "debt," within the statute of limitations. Bradford v. Storey, 75 N. E. 256, 257, 189 Mass. 104.

A tax is not a debt founded on contract, but is an impost levied by the government operating in invitum. State ex rel. George v. Dix, 141 S. W. 445, 446, 159 Mo. App. 573.

A "tax" is not a debt of the person charged or a judgment against him, but is a contribution or demand in a sum fixed by law enforceable in a prescribed method, and of a salable and transferable nature, and a sale of the right to receive a tax, and of its lien, does not affect their character or their relation to the taxpayer or his property. Gautier v. Dittmar, 97 N. E. 464, 467, 204 N. Y. 20, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 960.

A common-law assignment for creditors, which recited that it was executed by assignors as copartners and the assignee and both the firm and individual creditors, does not require a city or its tax collector to assent in writing to the assignment to become entitled to its benefits in the collection of a tax; the word "creditor" signifying one holding a contractual obligation against another, and a tax not being a "debt," though Rev. Laws 1902, c. 13, §§ 32, 33, and chapter 159, § 3, cl. 7, give to a tax collector the right of a creditor in the collection of taxes. City of Boston v. Turner, 87 N. E. 634, 635, 201 Mass. 190.

A tax is not ordinarily regarded as a "debt." Where a county diverts to its own treasury a part of the money it has collected on taxes levied by a city, no statute of limitation runs against an action by the city to recover the amount so wrongfully withheld. City of Osawatimie v. Board of Com'rs of Miami County, 96 Pac. 670, 672, 78 Kan. 270, 180 Am. St. Rep. 369, 16 Ann. Cas. 403.

A "debt" is a sum of money due by contract, express or implied, and is thus distinguished from a tax, which is a charge on persons or property to raise money for public purposes and operates in invitum. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Wright, 53 S. E. 251, 262, 124 Ga. 596.

"A 'tax' is a charge imposed by the Legislature for the purpose of revenue. It is not founded on contract and does not establish the relation of debtor and creditor. It is an enforced proportional contribution levied by authority of the state." Baillies v. City Council of City of Des Moines (Iowa) 102 N. W. 813 (quoting and adopting definition in Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 472, 26 L. Ed. 197, and citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1883).

Taxes are "debts" due to the government, which property owners have no more right to withhold than a private debt. Mariner v. City of Milwaukee, 131 N. W. 442, 443, 146 Wis. 605.

A tax is generally defined as a burden imposed by legislative authority to raise money for public purposes. In its essential characteristics it is almost universally held not to be a debt or in the nature of a debt; the distinction being that a tax does not rest on contract, while a debt does. Hanson v. Franklin, 123 N. W. 386, 388, 19 N. D. 259.

A tax is not strictly a "debt." It lacks the nature of a debt in that, though for a sum certain, it is not founded upon any agreement or assent of the person or persons against whom it is assessed, but is a burden for public purposes imposed in invitum. As an obligation or duty created by statute to pay money, however, it is quasi contractual, although there may be difficulty as to the remedy for its enforcement in a given case. In re United Button Co., 140 Fed. 495, 502.

While taxes are not in a strict sense "debts," they are so denominated in the Bankruptcy Act. Section 17 of that act (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 550) being as follows: "Debts' Not Affected by a Discharge. A discharge in bankruptcy shall release a bankrupt from all of his provable debts except such as (1) are due as a tax levied by the United States, the state, county, district or municipality in which he resides," etc. And section 64, 30 Stat. 563, being as follows: "Debts Which Have Priority. The court shall order the trustee to pay all taxes legally due and owing by the bankrupt to the United States, state, county, district or municipality in advance of the payment of dividends to creditors," etc. And section 1, 30 Stat. 544, declares that the word "debt" shall include any debt, demand, or claim provable in bankruptcy. A tax provable in bankruptcy is within the latter definition. In re William F. Fisher & Co., 148 Fed. 907, 912.

"Debt," as used in Const. art. 7, § 7, par. 1, providing that the debt thereafter incurred by any county, municipal corporation, or political division of the state shall not exceed 7 per cent. of the assessed value of all taxable property therein, and that no county, municipality, or division shall incur any new debt except for a temporary loan or loans to supply casual deficiencies on revenue not to exceed one-fifth of 1 per cent. of the assessed value of taxable property therein without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified voters, but that any city, the debt of which does not exceed 7 per cent. of the assessed value of taxable property at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, may be authorized to increase the amount of the debt 3 per cent. on the assessed valuation, means: (1) The word "debt" is not to be construed, in its broad and unrestricted sense, of a liability by one person to pay money or other thing of value to another. (2) A liability for current expense can be incurred by a municipal corporation for any one year, provided there is, at the time of incurring the liability a sufficient sum in the treasury of the city which may lawfully be appropriated to the payment of the liability incurred, or if a sufficient sum to discharge the liability can be raised by taxation during the current year; and such a transaction would not create a "debt," within the meaning of that word as it is used in the Constitution. (3) It was the purpose of the Constitution to provide a system of finance for subordinate public corporations, under which there should be each year contracts made for the expenses of the year, and these were to be paid out of moneys arising from taxes levied during the year; that is, that each year's expenses should be paid by taxes levied during the year, and no item of expense was to be paid except out of the taxes levied during the year in which the contract for such expense was made. (4) Any liability which was not to be discharged by money already in the treasury, or by taxes to be levied during the year in which the contract under which the liability arose was made, is a "debt," within the meaning of the Constitution and cannot be incurred without the preliminary sanction of a popular vote unless it be for a temporary loan to supply casual deficiencies of revenue. Butts County v. Jackson Banking Co., 60 S. E. 149, 150, 129 Ga. 801, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 567, 121 Am. St. Rep. 244 (quoting and adopting the definition in City Council of Dawson v. Dawson Waterworks Co., 32 S. E. 913, 106 Ga. 713).

Const. 1901, § 224, provides that no county shall become indebted in an amount, including present indebtedness, greater than $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of the assessed value of the property therein. Section 215 prohibits any county from levying a greater rate of taxation in any one year than one-half of 1 per cent. on the value of taxable property therein, provided that, to pay any debt thereafter created to erect public buildings, it may levy special taxes not exceeding one-fourth of 1 per cent., when authorized by law. Pursuant to Code 1907, §§ 183-189, authorizing the levy and collection of a special tax to erect public buildings, a county adopted resolutions levying a special courthouse tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent. for the years 1909-1917, not to exceed a certain aggregate sum with interest thereon, as represented by county warrants provided for in the contract with the contractor, and provided that the resolution should constitute a continuing contract and should not be repealed so long as any of the warrants and interest thereon remained unpaid. The contract with the contractor provided for the levy of such a special courthouse tax and for the issue of warrants with interest coupons attached; it being agreed that no debt shall be thereby created by the county but, instead, an assignment of the proceeds of the special tax levy for the years stated. The principal of the aggregate amount agreed to be levied for all the years, added to the existing indebtedness of the county, would exceed $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of the assessed valuation of the county property. Held, that section 215 could only operate within the limitation fixed by section 224, and, in view of the purpose of the latter section, which was to prevent the creation of unnecessary debts, the contract for the erection of the courthouse created a "debt" within section 224, and hence was void as exceeding the limitation contained therein. Hagan v. Commissioners' Court of Limestone County, 49 South. 417, 423, 160 Ala. 544, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1027.

A tax is not a debt, nor in the nature of a debt. It is an impost levied by authority of government, upon its citizens or subjects, for the support of the state. Peter v. Parkinson, 93 N. E. 197, 199, 83 Ohio, 36, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 751.

A tax is a "debt" due to the taxing power, for which an action of debt will lie.

Schermerhorn's Ex'r v. Commonwealth, 60 S. E. 65, 66, 107 Va. 707.

A "tax," in the ordinary sense, is not a "debt"; it does not involve an element of contractual obligation and is not enforceable by ordinary remedies for the collection of debts, without statutory authorization in that regard. State v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 108 N. W. 594, 608, 128 Wis. 449.

While, for the purposes of allowance and classification, a tax may be treated as a "debt" under the administration act, yet the executor of a trustee, who has accounted for the trust fund and turned it over to a new trustee, and to whom the tax was not presented for allowance and classification, cannot be held personally liable for the amount of the tax. State v. Mississippi Valley Trust Co., 108 S. W. 97, 101, 209 Mo. 472.

"A 'tax,' in its essential characteristics, is not a 'debt,' nor in the nature of a 'debt.' A 'tax' is an import levied by authority of government upon its citizens, or subjects, for the support of the state. It is not founded on contract or agreement. It operates in invitum. A 'debt' is a sum of money due by certain and express agreement. It originates in and is founded upon contracts, express or implied." United States v. Chamberlin, 156 Fed. 881, 884, 84 C. C. A. 461, 13 Ann. Cas. 720 (quoting and adopting the definition in City of Camden v. Allen, 26 N. J. Law, 398).

Gen. St. 1902, § 2407, providing that taxes shall become a debt due from the persons against whom assessed, simply provides a remedy for the collection of taxes by ordinary action, and does not change the character of a tax which is a public burden imposed by law on the individual for public purpose, and is not a debt in the ordinary sense, and is not within section 1110, limiting actions for debt. Town of Cromwell v. Savage, 82 Atl. 972, 973, 85 Conn. 376.

Taxes upon the property of the assignor are not "debts" from which he may be discharged under chapter 385, Laws 1889 (1 Sanb. & B. St. §§ 17020-1702u). In re Assignment of Riddell, 67 N. W. 1135, 1136, 93 Wis. 564.

Laws 1907, p. 1682, c. 721, § 1, subd. 3, providing for the refund to taxpayers of the excess of school taxes judicially determined excessive, is not unconstitutional as imposing upon one person the debt of another, since taxes are not to be regarded as debts within the constitutional prohibition relating thereto, and, even if they were, the statute merely adjusts the debt, in that it returns to the "debtor" the excess paid by him over what was due from him, and merely provides for an abatement of the excessive portion of the tax, and not for a donation or gift. People ex rel. Eckerson v. Board of Education, etc., of School Dist. No. 1 of Haver- straw, 110 N. Y. Supp. 769, 774, 126 App. Div. 414.

"While taxes are not, strictly speaking, debts, yet they are obligations or liabilities," and, where a testator by will directed payment of all funeral expenses and "debts" out of his personal estate as soon as practicable and gave the balance of the personal estate to his wife, the intention was to include all obligations and liabilities against the estate of every character, including taxes. Penn's Ex'r v. Penn's Ex'r, 87 S. W. 306, 307, 120 Ky. 557.

"Taxes levied or imposed by the state are not 'debts' in the ordinary acceptation of that term, so as to make them bear interest under the general interest laws of the state." State v. Mut. Life Ins. Co. of New York, 93 N. E. 213, 223, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 256.

DEBT (Action of)

An action of "debt" lies whenever a statute gives a right to recover damages, reduced pursuant to its provisions to a certain sum, if no other specific remedy is provided. Bigelow v. Cambridge & O. Turnpike Corp., 7 Mass. 202, 204.

An action for money, recoverable as damages for fraud, is an action for a "debt," as that word is used in Rev. St. 1895, art. 3354, subd. 4, requiring actions for a debt, not evidenced by a written contract, to be brought within two years. Gordon v. Rhodes & Daniel, 116 S. W. 40, 42, 102 Tex. 300.

The common-law action of "debt" lies only for the recovery of money or its equivalent in sum certain, or that can be readily rendered certain by mathematical computation, and will not lie to recover damages and breach of contract unless such damages have been fixed and liquidated by prior agreement or judgment between the parties. United States v. Alcorn, 145 Fed. 995, 1000.

By common-law procedure, the appropriate form of an action at law to recover an amount due upon a judgment is an action of "debt." Such an action lies for the recovery of a fixed and definite sum due upon a contract, whether it be a contract of record, like a judgment, or a contract by specialty, or a simple contract. In such a form of action, therefore, the plaintiff must declare on a contract and must claim the amount alleged to be due on the contract. It differs from an action of "assumpsit" in that the latter is for recovery of damages for the nonperformance of a parol or simple contract. Du Bois v. Seymour, 152 Fed. 600, 602, 81 C. C. A. 590, 11 Ann. Cas. 656.

The words "action of debt" in Rev. St. 1895, art. 3106, providing that, where usurious interest shall be received or collected, the person paying the same or their legal reprerepresentatives may by "action of debt" recover double the amount of the interest so received or collected, do not refer to the action technically known at common law as an "action of debt," but an action to recover the penalty for receiving usury is in the nature of an action of debt, and must be brought in the county of defendant's residence. Wartman v. Empire Loan Co., 101 S. W. 499, 501, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 469.

By action of "debt," as used in Rev. St. 1895, art. 3106, providing for the recovery of a penalty for receiving usury, the Legislature did not mean to require that the action be technically that action known as such at common law, for the reason that we have no forms of action. An action under that statute is not an action of tort, but is an action of "debt," or in the nature of "debt." Wartman v. Empire Loan Co., 101 S. W. 499, 501, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 469 (quoting and adopting Rosetti v. Lozano, 70 S. W. 204, 96 Tex. 57).

DEBT ACCRUING TO TERRITORY

Taxes due the territory of Oklahoma prior to statehood, on account of omitted property, constituted a debt accruing to the territory, under the schedule to Const. § 3 (Bunn's Ed. § 452), and the Legislature of the state may make a provision for the recovery thereof by the state. Anderson v. Ritterbusch, 98 Pac. 1002, 1007, 22 Okl. 761.

DEBT AGAINST ESTATE

A "debt against an estate" ordinarily contemplates a debt owed by the deceased, but a "claim against an estate" is not so restricted and within a refunding bond given by an heir may include funeral expenses, current taxes, etc., and the lawful expenses of administration, including a commission for the administrator. Callaway v. Title Guaranty & Trust Co., 111 S. W. 905, 906, 132 Mo. App. 466.

DEBT BY SPECIALTY

A "debt by specialty" is a sum of money due or acknowledged to be due by deed or instrument under seal. Hudson Trust Co. v. Boyd, 84 Atl. 715, 80 N. J. Eq. 267.

DEBT CONTRACTED

The terms "liability incurred" and "debt contracted" are equally familiar. When the subject of liabilities is brought to the attention, they occur to the mind with equal readiness, and when contrasted their significations are clear and definite. If an act provided that lands should be exempt from every liability incurred, there could be no doubt that they would be free from all liabilities, both from those arising out of contracts and from those arising out of torts. Brun v. Mann, 151 Fed. 145, 155, 80 C. C. A. 513, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 154.

Where a company agreed in writing not under seal to cut and remove a specified number of feet of timber each year for five years, the title only vested in the company so fast as the timber was severed from the land and there was no absolute "debt contracted" within the meaning of section 20, relating to the provisions of section 14, and debts contracted by corporations not complying with section 14. Cady v. Sanford, 53 Vt. 632, 636.

Plaintiff contracted on September 27, 1909, for the construction of a heating plant by a corporation of which defendants were directors, and work was commenced about November 15, 1909, and was completed and final payment of the price made on May 23, 1910, and plaintiff sued the company on March 31, 1911, for damages for constructing the plant and recovered judgment, and execution was returned unsatisfied. Pub. Acts 1907, No. 137, § 12, provides that any director of a corporation failing to file a report within the time prescribed, who has neglected to join in such report, shall be liable for all the debts of the corporation contracted since the filing of the last report. Held, that the directors were not liable to plaintiff for the amount of the judgment against the corporation because they did not file the annual report for the year 1910, since the liability of the corporation for failure to perform the contract was incurred when the directors were not in default in filing the report, so that the judgment was not a "debt contracted" since the filing of the last report within the statute. Weber v. Draper, 136 N. W. 596, 598, 170 Mich. 550.

The liability to testator's estate of his surviving partner for assets thereof, which he collected and for which he never accounted, is not a "debt contracted with decedent" in his lifetime, or with his executor, within Code 1896, § 239, providing for setting off debts so contracted against the distributive share of such debtor. Noble v. Tait, 37 South. 278, 279, 140 Ala. 469.

Judgment for tort

A judgment for damages, in an action in tort, is not a "debt contracted," within Rev. St. U. S. § 2296, which provides that no land acquired under the provisions of the homestead law shall in any event become liable to the satisfaction of any "debt contracted" prior to the issuance of the patent therefor. Shelby v. Ziegler, 98 Pac. 989, 994, 22 Okl. 799.

A judgment against a physician for the unskillful treatment of an injury, though it was alleged he promised careful treatment, is not a debt by contract, within Const. 1874, art. 9, § 2, exempting property from seizure on process from any court on debt by contract. Miller v. Minturn, 83 S. W. 918, 919, 73 Ark. 183.

Obligation ex delicto

"The words 'debts contracted,' as used in the Constitution of Michigan (article 16, § 2), relating to the exemption of homesteads from liability, are words of large import and include all kinds of claims arising not only on contract but in tort." In re Harper, 175 Fed. 412, 424.

"The ordinary signification of the term 'debt contracted' includes neither a liability for a wrong done nor a judgment for damages caused thereby." Brun v. Mann, 151 Fed. 145, 156, 80 C. O. A. 513, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 154.

DEBT CREATED BY FRAUD

A judgment, based on a debt fraudulently created, is a "debt created by fraud" of a bankrupt within Rev. St. U. S. § 5117, which provides that bankruptcy shall not discharge such debts. Young v. Grau, 14 R. I. 340, 341.

Defendant sold sheep on which plaintiff had a lien and applied the proceeds thereof to his own purposes. Held, that this was a "debt created by fraud," within section 5117, Rev. St. U. S., relating to discharge in bankruptcy. Darling v. Woodward, 54 Vt. 101, 103.

DEBT, DEFAULT, OR MISCARRIAGE OF ANOTHER

An oral agreement whereby one of the parties agrees with the other to pay his debt to a third person is not invalid as a promise to answer for the "debt, default, or miscarriage of another." Fosha v. Prosser, 97 N. W. 924, 926, 120 Wis. 336.

DEBT DUE

See Due (In Commercial Law); Due in the Same Right; Due or To Become Due; Due the Public.

DEBT INCURRED AFTER APPROPRIATION EXHAUSTED

Second-Class Cities Law, § 79, made any expenditure or the incurring of any debt by a city officer or department in excess of the amounts appropriated for the fiscal year then current unlawful and not binding on the city. Laws 1910, c. 254, § 1, authorizes the city of Yonkers to create a funded debt by the sale of bonds to the amount of $40,000 and to apply the proceeds to the payment of any debts and expenses of the city incurred during the fiscal years 1908 and 1909 remaining unpaid after appropriations applicable thereto had been exhausted. Section 2 required claims for such debts and expenses to be audited as other claims. Prior to 1910 an officer of a department, after the exhaustion of all moneys appropriated to the department, incurred a debt for feed for the horses used in the department. This claim was duly audited, but the comptroller refused to pay it. Held that the claim was for a "debt incurred after appropriations" applicable to the payment thereof "had been exhausted," and was within Laws 1910, c. 254, though under Second-Class Cities Law, § 79, no debt incurred beyond the appropriation could be a debt of the city in a strict legal sense. People ex rel. Wiffler v. Miller, 124 N. Y. Supp. 368, 369, 68 Misc. Rep. 445.

DEBT MATURING IN THE YEAR

The resolution of commissioners of a courthouse district, levying a tax "for the purpose of paying the debts and interest of the said district maturing in the year 1911," specifies distinctly the purpose for which the tax is levied, as required by Const. § 180; "debts," as modified by "maturing in the year 1911," being used in the sense of current expenses incurred during the year in maintaining the courthouse. Streine v. Commissioners of Campbell Courthouse Dist., 149 S. W. 928, 931, 149 Ky. 641.

DEBT OF ANOTHER

See Promise to Answer for Debt, Default, etc.

Where a grantee of land assumes as a part of the consideration for the conveyance a mortgage debt of the grantor, such debt is not the "debt of another" within the statute of frauds, but becomes the grantee's debt, who becomes personally liable therefor on his contract, whether it be in writing or by parol. Southern Indiana Loan & Savings Inst. v. Roberts, 86 N. E. 490, 491, 42 Ind. App. 653.

DEBT OF COUNTY

DEBT OF FIDUCIARY CHARACTER

A "debt of a fiduciary character," under U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3428, as amended by U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1907, p. 1028, excepting from debts released by a discharge in bankruptcy those created by fraud, embezzlement, misappropriation, or defalcation, while acting as an officer or in any fiduciary character, applies only to technical trusts, such as those arising from the relation of attorney, executor, or guardian, and not to debts due by a bankrupt in the character of an agent, factor, commission merchant, and the like. Young v. Clark, 93 Pac. 1056, 1058, 7 Cal. App. 194.

DEBT OF MUNICIPALITY

See Indebted—Indebtedness.

DEBT OF RECORD

See, also, Judgment.

Any demand against a corporation, which has been merged in a judgment, becomes a "debt of record." Henley v. Myers, 93 Pac. 168, 170, 73 Kan. 723, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 779.

A "debt of record" is a sum of money which appears to be due by the evidence of a court of record. Hudson Trust Co. v.

Boyd, 84 Atl. 715, 80 N. J. Eq. 267 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1891).

"While some courts of other states hold that there can be no action on a judgment of a justice of the peace as they are not 'debts of record,' this court has sustained action on them when regular and final." Deck v. Wright, 116 S. W. 31, 32, 135 Mo. App. 536.

DEBT OR DEMAND

An unliquidated claim for damages for a tort on behalf of a ward is not within St. § 2030, providing that a guardian may compound a "debt or demand" owing to the ward. Manion v. Ohio Val. Ry. Co., 36 S. W. 530, 531, 99 Ky, 504 (citing And. Law Dict., "Claim," "Demand").

Under Code 1907, § 5359, a "debt or demand not sounding in damages merely" is one which, when the facts on which it is based are established, the law is capable of measuring accurately by a pecuniary standard. In an action for rent, damages for failure to repair according to a contract may be set off as not sounding in damages merely. Donnelly v. House, 49 South. 324, 325, 160 Ala. 325.

DEBT OWED

A "debt owed" may not be a debt due, but the phrase "the debt at that time owed by the state of Pennsylvania," in a trust agreement under which one deposited money in trust to be accumulated for the benefit of the state of Pennsylvania until the fund so accumulated should be equal to the debt at that time owed by the state, when it should be paid over to the treasurer of the state to discharge the debt, means the principal of the debt, whether due or not due, and where the amount deposited was $2,000, and the indebtedness of the state at the time was $40,000,000, the state took no vested interest in the fund, since it was to receive the benefit of the fund only on a contingency which might never happen, or might happen at some indefinite time in the future in excess of the limitation of the rule against remoteness or accumulations, and the trust is void, and the fund recoverable by the personal representative of the settlor after his death. Russell v. Girard Trust Co., 171 Fed. 161, 163.

Money due the state of Minnesota for binding twine manufactured by the state in its penitentiary and sold is a "debt," and a debt owing to the state within the meaning of Rev. Laws Minn. 1905, §§ 4618, 4633, which gives priority in distributing the estate of insolvents to "debts owing to the United States and to the state." In re Western Implement

Co., 166 Fed. 576, 581; In re Mercer, 171 Fed. 81, 96 C. C. A. 185.

As expressly defined by Civ. Code, § 3429, a "debtor" is one who, through an existing obligation, is or may become liable to pay money to another, whether such liability be certain or contingent. Calkins v. Howard, 83 Pac. 280, 281, 2 Cal. App. 233.

However defined, the word "creditor" is correlative of "debtor." Hebert v. Handy, 72 Atl. 1102, 1104, 29 R. I. 543.

A "debtor" is one who owes a debt; he who may be constrained to pay what he owes. Morgan's Louisiana & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Stewart, 44 South. 138, 143, 119 La. 392 (Civ. Code, art. 2132).

Plaintiff deposited a check with defendant bank for collection as plaintiff's agent. Defendant forwarded it to the F. bank for collection, with the instruction, "Remit New York exchange." The F. bank remitted the proceeds of the collection by its own draft on a New York bank, which the New York bank, at direction of the receiver of the F. bank, who in the meantime had been appointed, refused to pay. Held, that the F. bank was liable as trustee for the money collected; there being no authorization by defendant that its relation should be changed to that of "debtor," so that defendant was not liable. Holder v. Western German Bank, 136 Fed. 90, 92, 68 C. C. A. 554.

Where the affidavit in poor debtor proceedings names two debtors, the word "debtor," used in the certificate authorizing the arrest, may be construed as "each said debtor." Stearns v. Hemenway, 37 N. E. 766, 767, 162 Mass. 17.

The word "debtor," as employed in Rev. Code, § 4380, disqualifying a juror who stands in the relation of debtor to either party, means one who is liable on a contract, either express or implied, or by operation of law, to respond to another, either in the present or at some future date. Hall v. Chattin, 106 Pac. 1132, 1133, 17 Idaho, 664.

The word "debtor," in Code Civ. Proc. S. D. 1908, § 346, limiting exemptions to a debtor who is the head of a family, and a single person who is not the head of a family, does not include a partnership within section 363, authorizing a partnership to claim one exemption of §750 out of firm property, and the latter section is inoperative. In re Novak, 150 Fed. 602, 603.

The word "debtor," as used in Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Sturm, 19 Sup. Ct. 797, 174 U. S. 710, 43 L. Ed. 1144, where the court says: "The essential service of foreign attachment laws is to reach and arrest the payment of what is due and might be paid to a nonresident to the defeat of his creditors. To do this he must go to the domicile of his debtor, and can only do it under the laws and procedure in force there. This is a legal necessity, and considerations of situs are somewhat artificial. If not artificial, whatever of substance there is must be with the 'debtor.' He and he only has something in his hands"—means the garnishee, the one owing the debt sought to be subjected by attachment. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Rogers, 44 S. E. 300, 304, 52 W. Va. 450, 62 L. R. A. 178.

Rev. Codes 1899, § 5047, relating to attachment, defines "debtor" as one who, by reason of an existing obligation, has or may become liable to pay money to another, whether such liability is certain or contingent, and, so defined, the term "debtor" has its usual signification (that is, one from whom a debt is due), using the word according to its common meaning. Section 3762 defines an "obligation" as a legal duty by which a person is bound to do or not to do a certain thing. The several sections quoted make it plain that the Legislature has broadened the common meaning of the words "debtor" and "creditor" so as to include all persons from whom or to whom obligations are due, whether arising from contract or imposed by law; but none of these provisions define the term "debt" or furnish ground for the contention that "debt" and "obligation" are synonymous. It will be conceded that the common and ordinary meaning of the term "debt," in legal acceptance of the term, is an obligation resting upon contract, either express or implied. Under the statutory definitions of a debtor, it is not necessary to owe a debt. It is sufficient if one owes an obligation imposed by law. Every debt, however, is an obligation, but every obligation is not a debt. "Obligation" is the broader term; "debt" the narrower. The term "obligation" includes all debts. The term "debt" does not include all obligations, but only that particular kind of obligations known as debts. The statement, therefore, that the Legislature has specifically defined the term "debt," and that the term "debt" is synonymous with the word "obligation," is not sustained by the statute. Section 5352, subd. 6, providing that plaintiff may have the property of the defendant attached when the "debt," on which the action is commenced, was incurred for property obtained under false pretenses, applies only when the action is commenced upon a debt which has been assented to by the defendant and does not apply in actions to recover damages for torts. Sonnesyn v. Akin, 97 N. W. 557, 560-563, 12 N. D. 227.

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR

The relation of banker and depositor is that of "debtor and creditor"; as soon as the deposit is received it becomes the money of the bank, and the bank is a debtor to the depositor for that amount. It is in no sense a trustee, and the rule of reasonable care has no application in respect of moneys so received by the bank, and it is bound absolutely to pay or discharge the liability like any other obligation it owes. Fricano v. Columbia Nat. Bank, 103 N. Y. Supp. 189, 191, 118 App. Div. 567.

Where a banker selected as county depositary received as such the funds of the county, the relation between the depositary and the county was that of debtor and creditor, the depositary not being a public officer having charge of public funds. Henry County v. Salmon, 100 S. W. 20, 201 Mo. 136.

The deposit of money in a savings bank creates the relation of "debtor and creditor" between the depositor and the bank. The transaction between a depositor and a bank is really a loan of money and not a deposit in the strict legal sense of the term. The bank borrows the money, becomes the owner of it, and is charged with a contractual obligation to repay an equal amount at a future time in accordance with the terms of the banker's contract. Schippers v. Kempkes (N. J.) 67 Atl. 1042, 1043.

DECALCOMANIA

"Decalcomania," as defined by the Century Dictionary, is the practice or process of transferring pictures on marble, porcelain, glass, wood, and the like, while, as defined by the Standard Dictionary, it is the process of transferring prints from paper and making them adhere to the glass, porcelain, or the like. "Decalcomania" paper is not dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, pars. 400, 403, 80 Stat. 188, 189, as lithographic prints or printed matter, being commercially a distinct article from either, but falls under the provision of "surface-coated papers * * * printed," under paragraph 398, 80 Stat. 188. United States v. O. G. Hempstead & Son, 159 Fed. 290, 291.

DECEIT

See Action for Deceit or Fraud.
See, also, Fraud; Invidious Machinations.

"'Deceit' consists in leading a man to damage by willfully or recklessly causing him to believe and act on a falsehood." Haines v. Franklin, 87 Fed. 139, 141.

"'Deceit' is actual fraud, and, where the apparent consent of one party to a contract has been induced by the actual fraud of the other, the contract is voidable." Beare v. Wright, 103 N. W. 632, 634, 14 N. D. 26, 69 L. R. A. 409, 8 Ann. Cas. 1057.

Duress and "deceit" are simply different methods by which fraud is consummated. The same remedies are available to the injured party. Neibuhr v. Gage, 108 N. W. 884, 887, 99 Minn. 149.

A fraud, within the contemplation of the law, is such act as would justify a rescission of a contract on its discovery, the elements of which are said to be "that where one makes a false representation of a material fact, knowing it to be false, with the intent to induce the person to whom it is made to rely on it, and this person does rely on it, is deceived, and peculiarly damaged, it is "deceit" which will avoid the contract. First Nat. Bank of Wellington v. Person, 111 N. W. 730, 731, 101 Minn. 30.

A person's false swearing that he was not served with summons and complaint, and obtaining others to corroborate his statement, whereby he obtained an order or mandate from the court which stayed the opposite party from proceeding under the judgment, is a "deceit" within Code Civ. Proc. § 14, empowering courts of record to punish by fine and imprisonment a party to an action or special proceeding for any deceit or abuse of a mandate or proceeding of the court. Dollard v. Kovonsky, 113 N. Y. Supp. 793, 797, 61 Misc. Rep. 392.

False representations to a married woman as to title to property which her husband had formerly owned, and as to the disposition of the proceeds of its sale, which induced her to believe that her husband was to receive one-half of such proceeds, when in fact he was to receive nothing, were material representations and sufficient to constitute an inducement leading her to release her dower interest in the property, and, as such, afforded grounds for an action of "deceit," although she did not expect to directly receive any money herself in consideration for such release. Garry v. Garry, 72 N. E. 335, 187 Mass. 62.

Where a vendor makes false representations as to material facts relating to the property sold, having at the time knowledge that his statements are false or what the law regards as equivalent to such knowledge, and intending that the purchaser shall rely upon them as an inducement to the purchase, he is liable in an action of deceit where the purchaser relies thereon to his damage. White Sewing Mach. Co. v. Bullock (N. C.) 76 S. E. 634, 636.

Under Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 14, art. 1, c. 15, par. 743, defining actual fraud by a party to a contract, as the suggestion as a fact of that which is not true, by one who does not believe it to be true, or the positive assertion, in a manner not warranted by the information of the person making it, of that which is not true, though he believes it to be true, and defining "deceit" as the suggestion as a fact of that which is not true by one who does not believe it to be true, or the assertion as a fact of that which is not true by one who has no reasonable ground for believing it to be true, a party is guilty of fraud and "deceit" where, with intent to induce another to enter into a contract, he makes a positive assertion which is material in a manner not warranted by his information, or where he is not shown to have had reasonable grounds for believing it to be true, where the assertion so made is not true, even though believed by the party making it. In such case the definite assertion as a fact of that which is untrue concerning that of which the party has no knowledge is tantamount to the assertion of something which the party knows to be untrue. Garvin v. Harrell, 113 Pac. 186, 188, 27 Okl. 373, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 862, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 744.

The mere fact that a director, who knows that his bank is insolvent, takes no action to close the bank or announce its insolvency does not make him liable for "deceit" to persons who have extended credit after the bank became insolvent on the assumption that it was solvent. Hart v. Evanston, 105 N. W. 942, 944, 14 N. D. 570, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 438.

To constitute deceit and fraud by the use of language, the language need not affirm the existence or nonexistence of something which is untrue. It is sufficient if the language of one party misleads the other as to the existence of a fact and induces him to contract. Marietta Fertilizer Co. v. Beckwith, 61 S. E. 149, 151, 4 Ga. App. 245.

"Deceit," in the law, has a broad significance. Any device or false representation by which one man misleads another to his injury, and fraudulent misrepresentations by which one man deceives another to the injury of the latter, are deceit. Where a person is induced to change her status, from that of an unmarried to that of a married woman, with all of the duties and obligations pertaining to the changed relationship, if this result is accomplished by deceit, she has, within the law, been deceived; she has been induced to do that which, but for the false practice, she would not have done, and has been led to change her position in most vital respects—respects which may affect her financially, as certainly as they affect her social and domestic status. People v. Chadwick, 76 Pac. 884, 886, 143 Cal. 116 (citing And. Law Dict.).

To constitute actionable deceit, representations must be false to defendant's knowledge, be made with intent to deceive, must deceive, and result in injury from reliance thereon. Remmers v. Remmers, 117 S. W. 1117, 1121, 217 Mo. 541.

"Fraud," within the contemplation of the law, is such as will justify rescission of a contract upon its discovery, the elements of which are said to be that where one makes a false representation of a material fact, knowing it to be false, with intent to induce a person to whom it is made to rely on it, and this person does rely on it, and is deceived, and pecuniarily damaged, it is "deceit" which will avoid the contract. First Nat. Bank of Wellington v. Person, 111 N. W. 730, 731, 101 Minn. 30 (quoting and adopting definition in Riggs v. Thorpe, 69 N. W. 891, 67 Minn. 217).

Rev. Codes, § 5072, providing that one who willfully deceives another with intent to induce him to alter his position to his injury is liable for the resulting damages, and section 5073, defining "deceit" by subdivision 4, including a promise made without any intention of performing it, are declaratory of existing rules of law, and a party to a contract, who proves that the adverse party entered into the contract without any intention of performing his part of it, or without any intention of performing any one or more of the provisions therein made by him as to a material matter, is entitled to damages for the deceit. Kelly v. Ellis, 104 Pac. 873, 874, 39 Mont. 597.

A declaration alleging that defendant, fraudulently intending to damage and ruin plaintiff and bring upon her pain and suffering of mind and body, paid his attentions to her as a suitor; that he fraudulently represented that, though he was married, the marriage was void; that plaintiff, relying on his representations, entered into the marriage relation with him, lived with him for years as his wife, and had children by him; that she desired a public ceremony, and that he promised to have the same performed; that thereafter defendant refused to keep the promises, and on obtaining a divorce from the former wife married another woman, and deserted plaintiff and refused to support her and her children—is not in seduction or for breach of promise to marry but sets up a good cause of action for fraud and "deceit." Sears v. Wegner, 114 N. W. 224, 226, 150 Mich. 388, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 819.

In order to maintain an action for "deceit," the statement relied on must have been false, must have been made with actual or constructive knowledge of its falsity, and must have actually misled or deceived. Southern Exp. Co. v. Fox & Logan, 115 S. W. 184, 185, 131 Ky. 257, 133 Am. St. Rep. 241.

Rev. St. 1899, § 8528, as amended by Acts 1905, p. 215, authorizing the Board of Dental Examiners to revoke the license of any dentist for "fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation" in the practice of dentistry, is not invalid for uncertainty because the quoted words have a well-defined meaning in law and in common use; the word "fraud" meaning an intentional perversion of truth to induce another in reliance on it to part with some valuable thing belonging to him, or to surrender a legal right, the word "deceit" meaning any trick or contrivance used to defraud another to his injury, and the word "misrepresentation" meaning untrue, improper, or unfaithful representation, such as a false statement of account, or as a misrepresentation of one's motives. The words "gross violation of professional duties" in Rev. St. 1899, § 8528, as amended by Acts 1905, p. 215, authorizing the revocation of the license of a dentist for "fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation in the practice of dentistry, or for gross violation of professional duties," are used to cover offenses similar to and belonging to the same general class as those denounced by the words "fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation," so that the statute is not invalid for uncertainty on the ground that the words "gross violation of professional duties" have no well-defined meaning. State ex rel. Williams v. Purl, 128 S. W. 196, 201, 202, 228 Mo. 1.

A complaint in an action by a wife for damages for the separation of herself from her husband, which alleges that the separation was caused by her harsh and cruel treatment of him, that her attitude and conduct toward him were induced by false statements knowingly made to her by defendant concerning her husband, with the intent to cause a separation between the wife and her husband, and that, when she discovered the falsity of the representations and the intent of defendant, she sought for her husband, but was unable to ascertain his whereabouts, though stating no cause of action for the abduction or enticement of the husband from the wife, states a cause of action for deceit within Civ. Code, §§ 1708, 1709, providing that every one must abstain from infringing on any of the right of another, and that one who willfully deceives another with intent to induce him to alter his position to his injury is liable for the resulting damages, and within the general rule that an action for deceit lies where a party has made a false representation of a material fact susceptible of knowledge, knowing it to be false, or not having sufficient knowledge to warrant the representation, with intent to induce the person to whom it is made to rely on it, and to do or refrain from doing something to his pecuniary injury, when such person, acting with reasonable prudence, is thereby deceived and injured, and the mere fact that the conduct of the wife was the direct cause of the separation did not relieve defendant from liability. Work v. Campbell, 128 Pac. 943, 945, 164 Cal. 343, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 581.

"Deceit" exists within the meaning of Philippine Island Code, art. 1269, providing there is deceit when, by words or insidious machinations on the part of one of the contracting parties, the other is induced to execute a contract which without them he would not have made, where the party who obtains the consent does so by means of concealing or omitting to state material facts with intent to deceive, by reason of which omission or concealment the other party was induced to give a consent which he would not otherwise have given. Strong v. Repide, 29 Sup. Ct. 521, 524, 213 U. S. 419, 53 L. Ed. 853.

DECEIVE

"Deception," as used in the statute (Rev. St. § 3718a) conferring jurisdiction on justices of the peace in cases of violation of the law to prevent adulteration and deception in the sale of dairy products and drugs and medicines, means deception because of, or the result of, adulteration and deception caused by the imitation and counterfeiting of the natural products of food, such as cheese, butter, and all artificial counterfeit foods and drinks, so that the sale of a well-known patent medicine by its ordinary name was not within the act, though it contained morphine and was not marked poison. *State v. DECENT BURIAL

The determination as to how a corpse shall be dressed for burial and the quality of the coffin and the box in which it is to be placed, as well as the depth of the grave, are matters for those who have the burial in charge, so that what is a "decent," "proper," or "respectable" burial will vary with the financial or social standing of the deceased and his relatives, the customs of the community, and the rules of religious, social, and political organizations to which he may have belonged. Seaton v. Commonwealth, 149 S. W. 871, 872, 149 Ky. 498, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 211.

DECIDUOUS PLANT

"'Evergreen,' used as an adjective, means 'always green; verdant throughout the year' (Cent. Dict.); or 'retaining greenness or verdure throughout the year; not deciduous' (Stand. Dict.). As a noun the word is defined as 'a plant that retains its verdure through all seasons, as the pine and other coniferous trees, the holly, laurel, holm oak, ivy, rhododendron, and many others' (Cent. Dict.). In the provision for 'evergreen seedlings,' the word is doubtless used by way of contrast with 'deciduous,' as indicated in the provision for 'fruit and ornamental trees, deciduous and evergreen.'" A deciduous plant is one which loses its leaves, etc., every year, especially in the autumn. In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 252, 30 Stat. 170, the provision for "evergreen seedlings" is not restricted to such evergreen plants as the conifers and box, but extends to those that retain their verdure or greenness throughout the year; and seedlings of rhododendrons and laurels, that remain green constantly are included in said provision. United States v. Ouwkerk, 153 Fed. 916, 917.

The by-laws of an association formed to aid its members in the collection of their debts and to settle disputes between its members and between members and others, provided that, where correctness of accounts between members and others was disputed and a settlement refused in consequence, unless the debtor should arbitrate as provided for members, the matter might be referred by the creditor member to the executive committee, who should determine the action of the association, and its decision as to the justice or otherwise of the claim, so far as the member of the association as such was concerned, should be final. Held, that where the claim of a member against one who was not a member was referred to the executive committee, and a hearing was had, and the committee on advice of its counsel dismissed the claim, there was a "decision as to the justice or otherwise of the claim," within the by-laws, and mandamus to compel further action will be denied. People ex rel. Huber Co. v. Manufacturers' & Dealers' Protective Ass'n, 104 N. Y. Supp. 575, 577, 54 Misc. Rep. 332.

Of city engineer

A contract by a city for the construction of sewers provided that if, in the course of the work, the city became dissatisfied therewith, it might proceed to complete the work, and the expense in doing so should be allowed to it by the contractors in accordance with the decision of the city engineer, from whose decision there should be no appeal. The contingency occurred, and the city did some work in the premises and then relet the contract for completion. Held, that the report by the city engineer in office on the final completion of the work to the mayor, showing an estimate of the amount of work done and material furnished by the contractor to whom the work was relet, and showing on its face that it referred only to the relations of the city and such contractor, was not a "decision" of the engineer, within the meaning of the first contract. Such report was not sufficient to constitute a "decision" within the meaning of the first contract, as it did not deal with the entire work, including that done by the city, but related only to the work by the subsequent contractor. City of San Antonio v. L. A. Marshall & Co. (Tex.) 85 S. W. 315, 316.

Of commissioners

An award of commissioners in eminent domain proceedings is neither a verdict, a report, nor a "decision," within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 1235, which provides that where final judgment is rendered for a sum of money granted by a verdict, report, or decision, interest on the sum awarded must be computed by the clerk and included in the amount of the judgment. In re Pine's Stream & East Meadow Stream in Town of Hempstead, 114 N. Y. Supp. 681, 684, 129 App. Div. 929.

Of county commissioners

The word "decision," as used in Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 8754, providing that any person aggrieved by any "decision" of the board of commissioners may appeal therefrom to the circuit court, and section 7859, providing that from any decision of such commissioners shall be allowed an appeal to the circuit court, means judicial decisions only; that is, decisions that involve some judicial act. It includes a decision of the board of county commissioners finding that a majority of the landowners have signed the petition for a road. Ross v. Becker, 81 N. E. 478, 479, 169 Ind. 166.

Of referee

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1228, providing that, where the whole issue is one of fact which was tried by a referee, the report stands as a decision of the court, and section 1229, providing that in an action to annul a marriage, or for a divorce or separation, judgment cannot be taken, of course, on a referee's report as prescribed in section 1228, the terms "decision of the referee" and "findings of the referee" mean the referee's decision and findings as to matters of fact, actually referred to him by the order of the court, and limit the subject of the report to the issues raised by the pleadings. To any other extent, his findings are not the findings of a referee within the statute, and the court will render a judgment agreeably to the actual determination of the facts upon which the referee was authorized to pass. Bowe v. Bowe, 106 N. Y. Supp. 608, 610, 55 Misc. Rep. 403.

DECISION (Of Court)

The decision on a motion to amend the declaration is not a "decision, ruling, or finding," within the meaning of Court & Practice Act 1905, § 481, providing that a party aggrieved by a "decision, ruling, or finding" of the court upon an issue of fact or matter of law may except thereto. Hebert v. Handy, 67 Atl. 325, 326, 28 R. I. 330.

The "decision" referred to in Code Civ. Proc. § 1033, declaring that the party in whose favor judgment is rendered and who claims costs must deliver to the clerk and serve on the adverse party within five days after the verdict or notice of the decision of the court memorandum of costs, means a judgment entered on a motion, and, where the court rendered judgment on a motion of nonsuit, cost bill filed five days after the judgment was signed is within the time prescribed. In re Purcell's Estate, 128 Pac. 932, 938, 164 Cal. 300.

Dismissal of appeal

Where an appeal bond given under Rev. St. § 2042, contained the statutory condition that the appellant would prosecute the appeal to a decision, a dismissal of the appeal is a "decision" within the purview of the bond. Hill v. Keller, 139 S. W. 523, 524, 157 Mo. App. 710.

As finding of facts and conclusion of law

The word "decision," as used in Rev. Codes, § 4434, as added by Laws 1911, c. 119, relating to the record wherein a desire to procure a review on appeal of the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict or decision, includes the trial court's findings of fact and conclusions of law where a case is tried to the court. Buster v. Fletcher, 125 Pac. 226, 229, 22 Idaho, 172.

"Decision," as used in Rev. Codes, § 4439, authorizing a new trial because of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict or other decision, or that it is against the law, and as used in the section providing for notice of intent to move for a new trial, means the findings of fact and conclusions of law of the court, and not the judgment; and the motion for a new trial must be directed to the decision, and not to the judgment. Caldwell v. Wells, 101 Pac. 812, 813, 16 Idaho, 459.

Under Gen. St. 1901, § 4756, providing that an application for new trial shall be made within three days after the verdict or decision was rendered, the word "decision" refers to or includes the announcement by the court of the determination of the issues submitted to it in a cause tried without a jury. Brubaker v. Brubaker, 86 Pac. 455, 74 Kan. 220.

Findings synonymous

Though a motion for a new trial because "the finding and judgment of the court is not sustained by the evidence" and "is contrary to law" might have been overruled because of its form, yet, where it was granted the defect in form is not available on appeal. "The court could have concluded, the trial having been by the court, that the word 'finding' in the motion was equivalent to the word 'decision,' and, having done so, the court might have treated the word 'judgment' as surplusage." Balph v. Magaw, 70 N. E. 188, 189, 33 Ind. App. 399 (citing Rodefer v. Fletcher, 89 Ind. 563; Rosenzweig v. Frazer, 82 Ind. 342; Christy v. Smith, 80 Ind. 573; Wilson v. Vance, 55 Ind. 384; Gates v. Baltimore & O. S. W. Ry. Co., 56 N. E. 722, 154 Ind. 338).

The term "decision," as used in Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 568, authorizing a new trial on the ground that the verdict or decision is not sustained by the evidence or is contrary to law, necessarily includes a special or a general finding; the words "decision" and "finding" being substantially synonymous. Wolverton v. Wolverton, 71 N. E. 123, 125, 163 Ind. 26 (citing Weaver v. Appleton, 46 N. E. 642, 147 Ind. 304, 306; Gates v. Baltimore & O. S. W. Ry. Co., 56 N. E. 772, 154 Ind. 338, 342; Weston v. Johnston, 48 Ind. 1, 2; Wilson v. Vance, 55 Ind. 394, 396; Christy v. Smith, 80 Ind. 573, 577; Rodefer v. Fletcher, 89 Ind. 563, 564).

Under a statute authorizing a new trial on the ground that the decision of the court is not sustained by sufficient evidence, specifications for a new trial that the "special findings" specified were not sustained by sufficient evidence, were without the issues, and were contrary to law, and that the court erred in not finding certain facts specified, were insufficient, since by the "decision" of the court referred to in the statute is meant "the special finding," when one has been required. Major v. Miller, 75 N. E. 159, 161, 165 Ind. 275.

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 568, cl. 6, specifying as grounds for a new trial that the verdict or "decision" is not sustained by the evidence, an assignment that the findings of the court are not supported by the evidence is sufficient; the word "decision" being employed in the statute in the sense of finding when the case has been tried by the court. Parkison v. Thompson, 73 N. E. 109, 112, 164 Ind. 609, 3 Ann. Cas. 677.

Findings distinguished

The "decision of the court" is the announcement by the court of its judgment and is distinct from the findings. Under Practice Act, § 486 (Comp. Laws, § 3581), requiring a party in whose favor judgment is rendered, and who claims his costs, to deliver a cost bill to the clerk within two days after the verdict or "decision of the court," the decision is the announcement by it of its judgment and is distinct from the findings. Linville v. Scheeline, 93 Pac. 225, 227, 30 Nev. 106 (citing Elder v. Frevert, 3 Pac. 237, 18 Nev. 278; Robinson v. Benson, 10 Pac. 441, 19 Nev. 331; State ex rel. Hoppin v. Cheney, 52 Pac. 12, 24 Nev. 222; Robinson v. Kind, 59 Pac. 863, 25 Nev. 261; Sholes v. Stead, 2 Nev. 108; Howard v. Richards, 2 Nev. 128, 90 Am. Dec. 520; California State Telegraph Co. v. Paterson, 1 Nev. 150).

Where proposed findings were submitted by the attorney for each defendant, and the court, instead of noting on the margin the disposition of each proposed statement, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1023, signed both proposed findings at the end thereof, no other decision being signed, the two separate sets of findings did not constitute a "decision," which is a condition precedent to the entry of judgment, as provided by section 1022. Edinger v. McAvoy, 119 N. Y. Supp. 327, 134 App. Div. 869.

Judgment synonymous

The word "decision," as used in Sess. Laws 1901, c. 81, § 40, providing that any person aggrieved by any decision of any probate court of any county in this territory may appeal to the district court, etc., means the same as "judgment" as used in Comp. Laws 1897, § 3305, providing for appeals from justices of the peace to the district court by the person aggrieved by the judgment rendered by a justice. Gentz's Estate v. Galles, 93 Pac. 702, 703, 14 N. M. 341 (citing 13 Cyc. p. 427; 1 Bouvier [Rawle's Revision] 517).

Judgment distinguished

"It is true that in an abstract sense there is a shade of difference between the import of the word 'decision' and the word 'judgment.'" But a motion for a new trial on the ground that the judgment is not sustained by sufficient evidence is a substantial statement of the grounds for new trial authorized by Rev. St. 1890, § 5305, cl. 6, that the verdict, report, or decision is not sustained by sufficient evidence or is contrary to law. Buckeye Pipe-Line Co. v. Fee, 57 N. E. 446, 447, 62 Ohio, 543, 78 Am. St. Rep. 743 (citing Abb. Law Dict. 351; Freem. Judgm. § 2; Whart. Law Dict. 235, 437).

The word "decision," in Gen. St. 1900, § 3624, providing that appeals may be taken where there shall be a final decision of any matter arising under the jurisdiction of the probate court, is of broader signification than "judgment." A decision of a probate court denying the application of an interested party for an order requiring the administrator to make an additional inventory of property, claimed to belong to the estate, but omitted from the inventory on file, is a final "decision" of a matter arising under the jurisdiction of that court, and an appeal may be taken therefrom. Dobson v. Holmes, 112 Pac. 131, 132, 83 Kan. 476.

"A 'decision' is in some respects like the verdict of a jury; it affords a proper basis upon which a judgment may be entered, but is not itself a judgment." Where the trial court filed an order adjudging that plaintiff recover from defendant a certain sum stated, and directed that defendant pay such amount to the clerk within 60 days from the filing of the order, and on default thereof directed the clerk to enter judgment for such sum at the expiration of 60 days, and to issue execution therefor, and the clerk merely entered a recital of the judgment in the judgment docket, but did not make any entry of the judgment in the record book, there was no judgment sufficient to sustain an appeal. Kennedy v. Citizens' Nat. Bank of Knoxville, 93 N. W. 71, 72, 119 Iowa, 123.

As law

See Law.

Opinion distinguished

Under Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 1955, providing that a plaintiff may take a nonsuit before the jury retires, and, on trial by the judge, before decision is announced, the term "decision" is not equivalent to "opinion," and, though the court in a case tried without a jury expressed an opinion indicating that he intended to render a decision in favor of the defendants, the plaintiffs would not be precluded thereby from having a nonsuit. Kidd v. McCracken (Tex.) 150 S. W. 885, 887 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1901).

Under a statute providing that, on the trial of an issue of fact by the court, its decision shall be given in writing and filed with the clerk, and that, in giving the decision, the facts found and the conclusions of law shall be separately stated, and judgment on the decision shall be entered accordingly, there is no "decision" till the making of the written findings, so that where the court orally gave an opinion, to the effect that judgment would go for defendant, and then, on plaintiff moving for judgment notwithstanding such opinion, entering written findings and conclusions on which judgment is rendered for plaintiff, it did not review and reverse its decision. Russell v. B. Schade Brewing Co., 95 Pac. 327, 328, 49 Wash. 362.

Suppression of depositions

Where, after plaintiff has announced readiness for trial, defendant's motion to suppress depositions taken by the plaintiff is sustained, the ruling is a "decision of the court on the trial," within Code 1896, § 614, so that plaintiff may take a nonsuit with bill of exceptions, and appeal from the ruling. Scheldegger v. Terrill, 39 South. 172, 173.

See Against Law.

DECISION AND DECREE ALLOWING FINAL ACCOUNT

A decree in a probate proceeding, reading, "It is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said final account of said administrator be, and the same is, settled, allowed, and affirmed," is a "decision and decree allowing a final account" of an administrator, within Comp. Laws 1900, § 3041, which authorizes an appeal from such a decision and decree. Bowman v. Bowman, 76 Pac. 634, 636, 27 Nev. 413.

DECISION IN WRITING

A "decision in writing," as used in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1010, 1021, requiring that on the trial of an issue of law by the court its "decision in writing" shall be filed, was not complied with by an order overruling a demurrer and directing an interlocutory judgment, though such order was sufficient to support the interlocutory judgment. Vincent v. Stearns, 93 N. Y. Supp. 482, 483, 47 Misc. Rep. 95.

DECISION OCCURRING ON THE TRIAL

The ruling on a demurrer to the evidence is a "decision occurring on the trial"; and, in order to enable the Supreme Court to review such ruling, it is necessary that a motion for a new trial be filed within the time prescribed by law. Ardmore Oil & Milling Co. v. Doggett Grain Co., 122 Pac. 241, 32 Okl. 280.

As res gestæ, see Res Gestæ.

DECLARATION (In Pleading)

A "declaration" is the specification in methodical and legal form of the circumstances which constitute the plaintiff's cause of action, and in making the specification of circumstances it is not sufficient to state mere conclusions of law, nor to state the result or conclusion of fact arising from circumstances not set forth in the declaration; nor is it sufficient to make a general statement of facts, which admits of almost any proof to sustain it. Campbell v. Walker (Del.) 76 Atl. 475, 477, 1 Boyce, 580.

DECLARATION OF HOMESTEAD

As conveyance, see Conveyance.

DECLARATION OF TRUST

A trust in favor of the church is declared by the entry in the books of a bank on the opening of an account by L., "M. Church subject to the order of L., trustee, $500," though it appears that L. intended to revoke the trust and use the money if she needed it. Littig v. Vestry of Mt. Calvary Protestant Episcopal Church, 61 Atl. 635, 636, 101 Md. 494.

The trustees of a church society adopted a resolution directing its treasurer to pay a specified sum toward a building, providing that an individual who had purchased the lots for the building should convey them to the church to be held by it until there was a legally incorporated church to take and hold the property. The official board of another church society adopted a report that the donation of the lots and the specified sum should be accepted with thanks. Held, that the action of the official board was not a "declaration of express trust" within the statute of frauds (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 59, § 9), especially since the individual did not convey the property to the latter church in trust, and since its official board was not by law enabled to declare a trust. Marie M. E. Church of Chicago v. Trinity M. E. Church of Chicago, 97 N. E. 262, 265, 253 Ill. 21.

The one thing necessary to give validity to a "declaration of trust"—the indispensable thing—is that the donor or grantor, or whatever he may be called, shall have absolutely parted with the interest which has been his up to the time of the declaration; shall have effectually changed his right in that respect, and put the property out of his power, at least in the way of interest. A mere savings bank deposit made by an intestate in her own name as trustee for another, who was a mere friend over which deposit intestate exercised complete control during her life, was insufficient to establish a trust. Nicklas v. Parker, 61 Atl. 267, 268, 69 N. J. Eq. 743 (quoting Stevenson v. Earl, 55 Atl. 1091, 1092, 65 N. J. Eq. 721, 725, 103 Am. St. Rep. 790, 1 Ann. Cas. 49).

"A 'declaration of trust,' without more, is not a contract. It is the act by which an individual acknowledges that property the title to which he holds in his own name in fact belongs to another, for whose use he holds it." Where a syndicate was formed for the purchase of land, and the title was conveyed to a disinterested party, who executed notes for the unpaid balance of the land in his own name, and at the same time prepared a declaration of trust to each one of the members of the syndicate, providing that each member should, when due, pay his proportionate share of the unpaid purchase money, and such declaration of trust was given to such members, and retained by them, they are bound by such declaration, though they may not have read it or informed themselves of its contents. Porter v. Woods, 39 S. W. 794, 797, 138 Mo. 539 (citing Bouv. Law Dict. 418).

Where land was conveyed to the trustees of a church "on condition" that the religious society should always bear a certain name; that no instrumental music should be used in the church, etc., there being no words whereby either party bound itself to the other for doing or not doing a particular thing, or for the existence or nonexistence of a particular state of facts and for breach whereof the party bound should be answerable in damages, and there being no words of determination or reverter, the instrument would be regarded as a declaration of trust. MacKenzie v. Trustees of Presbytery of Jersey City, 61 Atl. 1027, 1030, 67 N. J. Eq. 652, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 227 (citing Woodruff v. Woodruff, 16 Atl. 4, 44 N. J. Eq. 349-354, 1 L. R. A. 380; 2 Pars., Cont. *511; 4 Kent's Comm. *132; Woodruff v. Trenton Water Power Co., 10 N. J. Eq. 489, 492, 507, 508; Bouv. Law Dict.; Mills v. Davison, 35 Atl. 1072, 54 N. J. DECLARATORY ACT

A "declaratory act" is a declaration of what the law was, is, and shall be hereafter taken, and operates to settle the law retrospectively. Cuyler v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co., 131 Fed. 96, 97 (quoting and adopting the definition in Ex parte Poulson, 19 Fed. Cas. 1206).

DECLARATORY STATUTE

"A 'declaratory statute' is one which is passed in order to put an end to doubt as to what is the common law or the meaning of another statute and which declares what it is and ever has been." State v. Wirt County Court, 59 S. E. 981, 982, 63 W. Va. 230.

DECOCTION

The terms "beverage," "liquid mixture," or "decoction," as used in Ky. St. 1903, § 2557a, making the sale at retail of a beverage, liquid mixture, or decoction, which produces intoxication, unlawful in a territory wherein the sale of intoxicating liquor is prohibited, are used interchangeably, each synonymous with the other. Commonwealth v. Jarvis & Williams, 86 S. W. 556, 557, 120 Ky. 334.

DECORATED CHINA

Construing the provision for china decorated and china not decorated, in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, pars. 95, 96, 30 Stat. 156, held, that merely adding a color to white china for utilitarian purposes does not make decorated china, and that china and cooking serving dishes of which the sloping undersides are irregularly colored brown in order to conceal smoke and finger marks, and without decorative effect, are dutiable as undecorated china under the latter paragraph. G. W. Thurnauer & Bro. v. United States, 159 Fed. 122, 86 C. C. A. 86.

DECORATED EARTHENWARE

Earthenware, to which a single color glaze has been added, is, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 96, 30 Stat. 156, not only "decorated," but "stained," within the meaning of the paragraph. United States v. L. Straus & Co., 168 Fed. 569, 570.

DECOY

As entice

The word "decoy" means to lead into danger by artifice, to allure into a net or snare, to entice, to entrap, to allure (Webster's Dict.). As used in Pen. Code 1895, § 110, relating to the offense of enticing and decoying away children against the will of parents, it is qualified by the word "entice" and partakes of the meaning of that word; but even if a conviction under the statute had to depend on the word "decoy" alone it would be authorized, if defendant carried a boy of 15 years of age away against the will and without the consent of his parents and substituted his control for that of the parents, it may be said that the boy's tender years would most likely lead him into danger, lure him into snares, and entrap him in the meshes of vice and crime when deprived of that parental care. Arrington v. State, 59 S. E. 207, 208, 3 Ga. App. 80.

DECREE

See Consent Decree; Final Decree or Judgment; Interlocutory Decree; Judicial Decree; Money Decree.
See, also, Judgment.

The father of the child in question by his alleged second marriage had previously married, and he and his wife parted and lived apart. It was not shown that either of them procured a divorce, but he afterwards ran away with another woman, and they subsequently came back to the neighborhood where his former wife resided and to her knowledge lived together openly and notoriously as man and wife and discharged all of the duties of that relation toward each other until he died. Rev. St. 1909, § 342, provides that the issue of all marriages "decreed null in law or dissolved by divorce shall be legitimate." Held, that the word "decreed" was substantially equivalent to the word "deemed," which was used in the statute as it formerly stood, and, under the statute as construed, the children begotten by the husband of his alleged second wife were legitimate. Nelson v. Jones, 151 S. W. 80, 84, 245 Mo. 579.

Decisions and orders included

Pub. Acts 1907, p. 497, No. 340, § 2, provides that in chancery cases an appeal shall be taken within 40 days after filing of the decree. Held, that the word "decree" includes an order overruling a demurrer, and an appeal therefrom must be taken within 40 days from its filing, and not within 40 days from expiration of the time given to answer. Bliss v. Tyler, 121 N. W. 292, 156 Mich. 640.

The word "decree" in Acts 1907, p. 497, No. 340, § 2, providing that one aggrieved by the decree of a court in chancery may claim an appeal, includes an order overruling a demurrer. Moody v. Macomber, 120 N. W. 358, 359, 156 Mich. 76.

In legal parlance, the order of the court which apparently finally determines the rights of the parties in the action or suit is spoken of as the "judgment or decree," whether it is valid, voidable or void. Schlarb v. Castaing, 97 Pac. 289, 291, 50 Wash. 331.

"An order that may be deemed a 'decree' is defined in B. & C. Comp. § 547, as one which in effect determines the action or suit, so as to prevent a judgment or 'decree' therein." Sears v. Dunbar, 91 Pac. 145, 147, 50 Or. 36.

As decree in cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction

"Judgments" or "decrees," as used in 2 Stat. 244, c. 40, authorizing appeals from "judgments or decrees" in the District Court of the United States, mean "decrees and judgments in cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction only." United States v. Wonson, 28 Fed. Cas. 745, 746, 1 Gall. 5.

Discharge in bankruptcy

A discharge in bankruptcy is nothing more than a "decree" or "judgment" of the federal court by which it is granted, and must be proved, when offered in evidence, in the same manner as any other judgment or decree; and hence, where such discharge was merely certified by the clerk of the court, instead of being attested by the clerk, together with a certificate of a judge, chief justice, or presiding magistrate, as required by Shannon's Code, § 5580, it was properly excluded. Hamon v. Foust (Tenn.) 150 S. W. 418.

DECREE FOR ALIMONY

A "decree for alimony" is an unalterable, definite, and fixed judgment for money. Nixon v. Wright, 109 N. W. 274, 146 Mich. 231, 10 Ann. Cas. 547.

DECREE FOR DIVORCE

Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 8686, providing wives with property and maintenance from their husband's estates when neglected or deserted, etc., or when the husband has committed any offense sufficient to entitle the wife to a decree of divorce or separation, where a bill of complaint was in form substantially a bill for absolute divorce, except the prayer, which was for an allowance for separate maintenance, coupled with a prayer for general relief, the decree thereon for separate maintenance for life was a decree of separation, formerly called "a mensa et thoro," and was a "decree for divorce." Horning v. Horning, 127 N. W. 275, 276, 162 Mich. 130.

A "decree of divorce" is a proceeding in rem and terminates a marriage. Being a judgment in rem, it has extraterritorial force and is binding and conclusive on the parties to the cause, although one of them was at the time it was granted a nonresident of the state in which the divorce was granted. Stuart v. Cole, 92 S. W. 1040, 1041, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 478.

DECREE OF DISMISSAL

A "decree of dismissal," without more, is a decree that the court has jurisdiction and that there are no merits in the case, and it is reviewable by the Circuit Court of Appeals. Campbell v. Golden Cycle Min. Co., 141 Fed. 610, 612, 73 C. C. A. 260.

DECREE OF DISTRIBUTION

A "decree of distribution" is an instrument by virtue of which heirs receive the property of the deceased. It is the final determination of the rights of the parties to a proceeding, and, upon its entry, their rights are thereafter to be exercised by the terms of the decree. Sjoll v. Hogenson, 122 N. W. 1008, 1012, 19 N. D. 82.

DECREE PRO CONFESSO

A decree "pro confesso" on a cross-bill is not within rule 19 of the rules of practice in equity in the federal courts, providing that when the bill is taken "pro confesso" the court may proceed to a decree at any time after the expiration of 30 days from and after the entry of the order to take the bill "pro confesso," and that such decree shall be deemed absolute unless the court shall at the same term set aside the same, etc.; but such decree is within rule 1, providing that the circuit courts, as courts of equity, shall be deemed always open for the purpose of filing pleadings and making and directing all interlocutory motions, orders, rules, and other proceedings preparatory to hearing all causes on their merits, and hence the decree may be vacated on motion after the adjournment of the term. Blythe Co. v. Bankers' Inv. Co., 81 Pac. 281, 282, 283, 147 Cal. 82.

A "pro confesso" against a defendant authorizes no other decree against the defendant than the allegations of the bill show he is entitled to; so that in a suit by a tenant in common of lands against her cotenants for partition, and for recovery of her share of the rental value thereof, the bill, alleging merely that the premises had been in the use and occupation of certain two of the cotenants, does not authorize a personal judgment against the other cotenants for complainant's share of the rents, or a decree giving her a lien therefor on their interests in the land. Austin v. Barber, 41 South. 265, 266, 88 Miss. 553.

DECREPIT

Where decedent's widow testified that her husband was 5 feet 11 inches tall, weighed 147 pounds, was "real stout," and about 60 years of age, the court erred in charging that, if deceased was aged and decrepit, that would furnish a basis for a conviction of aggravated assault; the word "decrepit," as used in Pen. Code 1895, art. 601, declaring an assault aggravated if made on a decrepit person, meaning one who is disabled, incapable, or incompetent, from either physical or mental weakness or defects, so as to render him comparatively helpless in a personal conflict with one possessed of ordinary health and strength, and not merely a person broken down with age, and wasted or worn with infirmities of old age, etc. Little v. State, 135 S. W. 119, 121, 61 Tex. Cr. R. 197.

DEDI

The words "dedi," "concessi," and "demisi," when used in a conveyance of real estate, import and make a conveyance in law. Headley v. Hoopengartner, 55 S. E. 744, 747, 60 W. Va. 626.

When deeds were introduced and the warranty was either express or was implied from the word of grant, "dedi," neither the heir nor the assign of the grantee could take advantage of the warranty unless expressly named. But while this was so as to warranty, it was not so as to certain covenants; and chiefly among these were the covenants for title, the benefits of which passed with the land to the heir or the assign, though not expressly named. Wiggins v. Pender, 44 S. E. 362, 364, 132 N. C. 628, 61 L. R. A. 772 (quoting Rawle, Cov. [5th Ed.] p. 292, §§ 203, 204).

DEDICATION

See Implied Dedication; Statutory Dedication; Way Opened and Dedicated to Public Use.

A dedication is the devotion or giving of property for some proper object and in such manner as to conclude the owner. Hough v. Porter, 95 Pac. 732, 51 Or. 318; (1909) Id., 98 Pac. 1083, 1091, 51 Or. 318.

It is not necessary to a valid "dedication" of property for street purposes that the property should be within the limits of the city to which the dedication was made at the time of the making thereof. City of Meridian v. Poole, 40 South. 548, 549, 88 Miss. 108.

To constitute a "dedication" there must be an intention to appropriate the land to the use and benefit of the public, and acts and declarations of the landowner indicating such intention must be unmistakable and decisive in their character. A dedication is not required to be made by deed or other writing, but may be accomplished by acts or verbal declarations. It may be express or implied and may be brought about in every conceivable way by which the intention of the owner can be manifested, but such manifestation must be unequivocally and satisfactorily proved. Town of West Point v. Bland, 56 S. E.

802, 804, 106 Va. 792 (citing Harris' Case, 20 Grat. [61 Va.] 838, 837; Talbott v. Richmond & D. R. Co., 31 Grat. [72 Va.] 688, 689; Buntin v. City of Danville, 24 S. E. 830, 93 Va. 200, 204; Gate City v. Richmond, 33 S. E. 615, 97 Va. 337).

"Dedication of a road as a public highway" is the setting it apart by the owner of the land for the use of the public. People v. Myring, 77 Pac. 975, 976, 144 Cal. 351.

"Dedication" is a gift of land for a way, and an acceptance of the gift by the public, either by some express act of acceptance, or by strong implication arising from obvious, convenient, or frequent and long-continued use, repairing, lighting, or other significant acts of persons competent to act for the public. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Christie (Ind.) 100 N. E. 299, 301 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Words & Phrases, p. 1912).

As an appropriation for a public use

Dedication is an appropriation of land by its owner to the public use. Bellenot v. City of Richmond, 61 S. E. 785, 108 Va. 314.

Dedication is the intentional appropriation of land by the owner to some proper public use, reserving to himself no rights therein inconsistent with the free exercise and enjoyment of such use. Bartlett v. Harmon, 78 Atl. 842, 844, 107 Me. 451; Northport Wesleyan Grove Campmeeting Ass'n v. Andrews, 71 Atl. 1027, 1030, 104 Me. 342, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 976.

Dedication is the intended appropriation of land by the owner for some proper public use, reserving to himself no rights inconsistent with the full exercise and enjoyment of such use. Brown v. Dickey, 75 Atl. 382, 385, 106 Me. 97.

"Dedication" is the setting apart of land for public use and may be established by showing that the owner has platted ground, representing streets, alleys, and other improvements thereon, and has sold land upon the faith of such plats. East Atlanta Land Co. v. Mower, 75 S. E. 418, 422, 138 Ga. 380.

"Dedication is the deliberate act by which the owner of real property, without remuneration, devotes the fee or an easement therein to the use of the public." Where a city, with power to purchase and hold real estate for the use of the city, purchases land for a valuable consideration, it takes an absolute title, though the deed recites that it is understood that the premises are deeded to the city for city hall purposes only. City of Huron v. Wilcox, 98 N. W. 88, 89, 17 S. D. 625, 106 Am. St. Rep. 788.

Land is held to be dedicated when it is set apart by the owner for a public use. A dedication may be either express or implied. It is express when there is an express manifestation on the part of the owner of his purpose to devote the land to the particular public use, as in the case of a grant evidenced by writing. It is implied when the acts and conduct of the owner clearly manifest an intention on his part to devote the land to the public use. Culmer v. Salt Lake City, 75 Pac. 620, 621, 27 Utah, 252 (citing Schettler v. Lynch, 64 Pac. 955, 23 Utah, 305, 813).

There is no such thing at common law or by virtue of any provision of our statutes as the "dedication" of property to private person or corporation; "dedication" must be made to the public. Pittsburgh, O., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Warrum (Ind.) 82 N. E. 934, 937 (citing Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Whitham, 40 N. E. 1014, 155 Ill. 514, 28 L. R. A. 612, 46 Am. St. Rep. 355; McWilliams v. Morgan, 61 Ill. 89; Washb. Easem. 205; Watson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 48 N. W. 1129, 46 Minn. 321).

As either express or implied

Dedication is the appropriation or gift by the owner of land or an easement therein for the use of the public, and it may be express, where the appropriation is formally declared, or by implication arising by operation of law from the owner's conduct and the facts and circumstances of the case. McKinney v. Duncan, 118 S. W. 683, 684, 121 Tenn. 265.

Land is "dedicated" when it is set apart by the owner for a public use. The dedication may be either express or implied. It is express when there is an express manifestation on the part of the owner of his purpose to devote the land to the particular public use, as in the case of a grant evidenced by writing. It is implied when his acts and conduct manifest an intention to devote the land to the public use. To make the dedication complete, there must be not only an intention on the part of the owner to set apart the land for the use and benefit of the public, but there must be an acceptance by the public. Where the use of an alley was practically confined to parties owning or occupying property within a portion of a block through which the alley passed, and the expense of keeping it open and in repair was borne by them, there was no dedication. Culmer v. Salt Lake City, 75 Pac. 620, 621, 27 Utah, 252 (citing Schettler v. Lynch, 64 Pac. 955, 23 Utah, 305, 813).

"Dedications are classified into express and implied. * * * To constitute a 'dedication' of either class, confessedly there must be an intention to 'dedicate,' animus dedicandi, on the part of the owner of the property, and an acceptance by the public, or by some authorized person or body acting for and in its behalf. * * * Being a voluntary donation, it will not be presumed; but the clearest intention to do so must be shown. And if the use by the public is merely permissive, 'as existing by the toleration of the owner, and in subordination to, or recognition of, an implied license from him, the right will not mature into a title by prescription, but is revocable at pleasure.' And so, too, the user of the public must be of such character as to exclude the private rights of the owner. He must be shown to have abandoned his proprietary rights in and to the land; otherwise, the use of it by the public, not inconsistent with those exercised by him, must be regarded as permissive only, and not adverse." Attorney General v. Lakeview Land Co., 39 South. 303, 143 Ala. 291 (citing Irwin v. Dixon, 9 How. [50 U. S.] 10, 30, 13 L. Ed. 25; Jones v. Bright, 37 South. 79, 140 Ala. 268).

As requiring both intention to dedicate and acceptance

There can be no "dedication" unless there is an acceptance by the public. McLean Llewellyn Iron Works, 83 Pac. 1082, 1083, 2 Cal. App. 348; Gillespie v. Duling, 83 N. E. 728, 730, 41 Ind. App. 217; Moragne v. City of Gadsden, 54 South. 518, 170 Ala. 124.

"'Dedication' rests primarily upon intention, express or implied." Brown v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 102 Pac. 740, 742, 36 Utah, 257, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 86; Shanline v. Wiltsie, 78 Pac. 436, 437, 70 Kan. 177, 3 Ann. Cas. 140 (quoting State v. Adkins, 21 Pac. 1069, 42 Kan. 203).

Any act which clearly indicates the intention of the owner to set apart lands for use as a public highway is a sufficient "dedication," no particular form of dedication being necessary. Carter v. Barkley, 115 N. W. 21, 22, 137 Iowa, 510.

To establish a public street by dedication, the proof as to the offer of dedication and acceptance must be unequivocal. To establish a public street by dedication, there must be intention on the part of the owner to dedicate the land to the public for street purposes, and an acceptance by the public. City of Princeton v. Gustavson, 89 N. E. 653, 655, 241 Ill. 566.

To constitute a common-law dedication of land for a street, there must be an intention to dedicate and an acceptance and user by the public. Vance v. Village of Pewamo, 126 N. W. 978, 981, 161 Mich. 528.

The acceptance of a dedication may appear by acts showing an intent to receive the same. Miller v. Commissioners of Highways of Town of Jonathan Creek, 125 Ill. App. 431, 434, 435.

A "dedication" of land for public use rests on the intention or assent of the owner. Before there can be a valid dedication, there must have been an actual intention clearly indicated by deliberate and unequivocal words or acts to dedicate the property to the public. Columbia & P. S. R. Co. v. Seattle, 74 Pac. 670, 673, 33 Wash. 513 (citing Lewis v. City of Portland, 35 Pac. 256, 25 Or. 133, 22 L. R. A. 786, 42 Am. St. Rep. 772).

To constitute a dedication of private property for a public use, the owner must have intended to absolutely and irrevocably set it apart for that purpose. Hellbron v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas, 113 S. W. 610, 613, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 575.

In order to constitute a dedication at common law, it is essential: (1) That there be an intention on the part of the proprietor of the land to dedicate the same to public use; (2) that there be an acceptance thereof by the public; and (3) that the proof of these facts be clear, satisfactory, and unequivocal. The vital and controlling principal is the animus donandi, and, whenever this is plainly and unequivocally manifested on the part of the owner of the soil, either by formal declaration or by acts from which it may fairly be presumed, such as should equitably estop him from denying such an intention, the dedication, so far as the owner is concerned, is complete. * * * To make a sufficient dedication the proprietor of the soil must devote the portion thereof intended for public use to such use, and, on the part of the public, it must be accepted and appropriated to that use. A dedication is not an act of omission to assert a right, but is the affirmative act of the donor resulting from an active, and not a passive, condition of the owner's mind on the subject. A mere nonassertion of right does not establish a dedication unless the circumstances establish a purpose or intention to donate the use to the public. Stacy v. Glen Ellyn Hotel & Springs Co., 79 N. E. 133, 134, 223 Ill. 546, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 966 (citing City of Chicago v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 38 N. E. 768, 152 Ill. 561; Marsh v. Village of Fairbury, 45 N. E. 236, 163 Ill. 401; Alden Coal Co. v. Challis, 65 N. E. 665, 200 Ill. 222); Falter v. Packard, 76 N. E. 495, 496, 219 Ill. 356 (quoting and adopting definition in City of Chicago v. Borden, 60 N. E. 915, 190 Ill. 430).

"To make a sufficient dedication, the proprietor of the soil must devote the portion thereof intended for public use to such use, and, on the part of the public, it must be accepted and appropriated to that use. The acts on the part of the donor and the public of an intention to dedicate, accept, and appropriate the lands to public use, where the dedication is relied upon to support some right, must be clear. A dedication is not an act of omission to assert a right, but is the affirmative act of the donor, resulting from an active, and not a passive, condition of the owner's mind on the subject. A mere nonassertion of right does not establish a dedication unless the circumstances establish a purpose or intention to donate the use to the public." International & G.

N. R. Co. v. Cuneo, 108 S. W. 714, 716, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 622.

To constitute a "dedication" it is not always necessary that the intent to dedicate should actually exist in the mind of the landowner, who must be presumed to have intended what his conduct indicates; there must also be acceptance which may be implied, and where the use of the way as a highway is beneficial to the public, and it has been used for a highway for a considerable period with the assent of the landowner, and other land has been purchased and improvements made thereon by persons believing the way to be a highway, under circumstances known to the owner of the way, reasonably calculated to create such belief, and material injury would ensue to such persons if the landowner were permitted to close the way, the intent to dedicate and the acceptance of the donation will be implied, as between such persons, if the facts be such as under the established principles of law would ordinarily create an estoppel in pais. Acceptance may be shown by public use without any public work on the road. No specific length of time is necessary to constitute a valid "dedication." McClaskey v. McDaniel, 74 N. E. 1023, 1027, 37 Ind. App. 59.

A "dedication" of land for a public street is only complete upon an acceptance, which may be manifested in various ways. An express acceptance may be shown by some order, resolution, or action of the public authorities made and entered of record, or it may be implied by acts of the public authorities recognizing the existence of the street and treating it as a public way; but the proof of acceptance must be unequivocal, clear, and satisfactory. The acceptance may follow the offer to dedicate at once, but need only be within a reasonable time and before a withdrawal of the offer. People v. Johnson, 86 N. E. 676, 677, 237 Ill. 237.

The "dedication" of land to any public use is essentially a matter of intention. The principle of dedication rests largely upon the doctrine of estoppel in pais and, while there are general rules applicable to general lines of conduct by the owner, each case must, as a rule, be decided upon its own facts. Evidence that deeds, containing no reference to a park dedicated to the public, described lots conveyed by reference to an unrecorded plat, purported copies of which showed a tract reserved as a public square near the lots, none of the copies of the plat introduced in evidence being identified as the one to which the reference was made, or as having been in the possession of the grantor, was insufficient to show an offer to dedicate to the public the tract reserved as a park. Canton Co. v. City of Baltimore, 66 Atl. 679, 680, 106 Md. 69, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 129.

"Dedication" is established by proof of an act of dedication, and an intent to dedicate without reference to the period of public use. Davis v. Town of Bonapart, 114 N. W. 896, 898, 137 Iowa, 196.

The throwing of a strip open to the public as a part of a street cannot of itself amount to a "dedication" so as to bind a municipality, unless it performs some act of acceptance. Downing v. Coatesville Borough, 63 Atl. 696, 214 Pa. 291, 384.

Acceptance by the public of a "dedication" of a road for a highway may be express or implied. Public use for a long time, with the consent of the landowner, is sufficient acceptance, and the fact that the road has not been worked by public authorities does not prevent the acceptance. Gillespie v. Duling, 83 N. E. 728, 730, 41 Ind. App. 217.

As manifested by deed

The platting of a tract of land upon a map by the owner thereof, showing a street thereon, and the retaining of such map in the possession of such owner, and the making of deeds by reference thereto, by bounding the land described in the conveyances as upon such street, coupled with the subsequent marking out, crowning, and repairing of such street by such owner and grantor, is evidence of a "dedication" of such street to the public, and when accompanied by public user, or the acceptance by the municipality, by repairing or working such street, the dedication is conclusive as against such dedicator and all claiming through or under him. Board of Com'rs of Town of Keyport v. Freehold & A. H. R. Co., 65 Atl. 1035, 1036, 74 N. J. Law, 480.

The "dedication" of the streets and alleys in a plat of land is complete when the plat is filed for record and lots sold with reference to said plat, and a formal acceptance of such streets and alleys by the public authorities is not necessary. Boise City v. Hon, 94 Pac. 167, 168, 14 Idaho, 272.

A sale of lots according to a plan showing them to be on a street is a "dedication" of the street which cannot be revoked by the vendors. Garvey v. Harbison-Walker Refractories Co., 62 Atl. 778, 213 Pa. 177; In re South Western State Normal School, 62 Atl. 908, 909, 213 Pa. 244.

A sale of lots by reference to a plat constitutes a good dedication, even if the dedication by the plat itself has been incomplete. Kansas City & N. Connecting R. Co. v. Baker, 82 S. W. 85, 88, 183 Mo. 312.

It is a well-settled doctrine that where the owner of land, which has been laid off, mapped, and platted into blocks, lots, and streets as an addition to a city by a map placed on the public records, sells and conveys the lots or blocks by deeds referring to the map in the description thereof, it constitutes dedication to the public of such streets, and the rights in such streets become thereby vested in such purchasers and in the public. City of Corsicana v. Anderson, 78 S. W. 261, 263, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 596.

Where an owner of land sold a lot according to a map, which showed, adjoining the lot sold, two narrow strips marked "Lot A" and "Lot C," the unexecuted intention of the owner to make these strips private alleys for the use of the purchaser of lots, does not constitute a "dedication" of the strips as private alleys. Shultz v. Redondo Imp. Co., 105 Pac. 118, 120, 156 Cal. 439.

There seems to be no dispute that conveying property by bounding it on a street, which has actual form, and is in use for obtaining access to abutting premises, is evidence of an offer to dedicate under the rule that public highways may be created by "dedication" through offer and acceptance. Where a deed to city property named two streets as a part of the boundary and conveyed to their respective centers, there was a "dedication" to the public of the portions of such streets adjoining the property. Palmer v. East River Gas Co., 101 N. Y. Supp. 347, 349, 115 App. Div. 677.

Where the owners of land plat part of it into lots, blocks, and streets, and make and distribute blueprints thereof, showing the adjoining land as a park, and sell part of the lots on the representation that the park is a public park, and with their acquiescence citizens use it, and it is recognized generally as a public park for many years, there is an irrevocable dedication of it. Lueders v. Town of Tenino, 95 Pac. 1089, 49 Wash. 521.

As manifested by making or filing of map or plat

The filing of a map of property, showing the streets laid out thereon by the owner, works a complete "dedication" of such streets to the public. Van Duyne v. Knox Hat Mfg. Co., 64 Atl. 149, 151, 71 N. J. Eq. 375.

No particular form or ceremony is necessary in the "dedication" of land to public use if the assent of the owner of the land be shown and the fact of use for the purposes intended by the dedication. If the owner of land lay out a town and put a plot of plan of the streets on record or exhibit such plot and sell lots, it is evidence of actual dedication of such streets to public use according to the plan. State v. Southard (Del.) 66 Atl. 372, 373, 6 Pennewell, 247.

The marking of vacant lots on a plan for a park system dedicated to the public as "15x60" did not imply dedication thereof, the use of the lots not being adapted to any public purpose, so that the obstruction of them would work harm, inconvenience, or danger to the public, and they not being a part of the park system. Brown v. Dickey, 75 Atl. 382, 384, 106 Me. 97.

License distinguished

Parol dedication

A dedication of an easement to a public use may be by parol. Halley v. Scott County Fiscal Court (Ky.) 78 S. W. 149, 150.

Prescription distinguished

"Dedication" and "prescription" are distinguishable, in that "dedication" is established by proof of an act of dedication and an intent to dedicate without reference to the period of public use, while long user is an essential element of "prescription." Davis v. Town of Bonaparte, 114 N. W. 896, 898, 187 Iowa, 196.

As presumed from acts of owner

The acts and declarations of an owner, to constitute a "dedication" of land for a street, must be deliberate, unequivocal, and decisive, manifesting a positive and unmistakable intent to permanently abandon land to the specific public use; and where he does so an estoppel in pais operates against him. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Village of Ossining, 126 N. Y. Supp. 517, 518, 141 App. Div. 765; Town of Harper's Ferry v. Kaplon & Bro., 52 S. E. 492, 493, 58 W. Va. 482 (citing Pierpont v. Town of Harrisville, 9 W. Va. 215; Boughner v. Town of Clarksburg, 15 W. Va. 394; Miller v. Town of Aracoma, 5 S. E. 148, 30 W. Va. 606; Yates v. Town of West Grafton, 11 S. E. 8, 33 W. Va. 507; Hast v. Piedmont & C. R. Co., 44 S. E. 155, 52 W. Va. 396).

As presumed from user

A dedicated way must be duly adopted and accepted by the town in order to make it such; mere user by the public not being sufficient. Bacon v. Boston & M. R. R., 76 Atl. 128, 136, 83 Vt. 421.

Where complainant opened an extension of a street to tidewater, paved it, and permitted the city to use and drain it without material obstruction for a period of 20 years, there was a "dedication" of the property as a street. Canton Co. of Baltimore v. Mayor, etc., of City of Baltimore, 65 Atl. 324, 325, 104 Md. 582.

Where the complaint in a suit to abate a nuisance on a highway alleged that the strip of land was duly laid out as a highway, and both parties introduced, without objection, evidence of the laying out or establishing of the highway, its user and dedication, a judgment granting relief would not be disturbed merely because the court found that the strip had been used as a highway since a designated date, and that since such date it had been a duly dedicated highway; the term "dedication" being used to define the right arising from the user shown and found. People v. Quong Sing (Cal. App.) 127 Pac. 1052, 1055.

Where a tract of land bounded upon one side by a highway and upon the opposite side by a river had been purchased, and the purchasers had built a hotel upon the tract, and opened a road through the land in front of the hotel from the said highway to the river, which road was used for more than 20 years by such of the public as wished, not merely to visit the hotel, but to go to the river for a variety of purposes, and this use was in nearly in all instances without permission, and in all instances without interference, held, that a verdict finding a "dedication" of such road to the use of the public would not be set aside. Dover Tp., Ocean County, v. Brackenridge, 87 Atl. 689, 75 N. J. Law, 204.

Of subject of copyright

A "dedication" of a subject of a copyright implies an abandonment of the incorporeal hereditament as contrasted with a mere license to the public which implies a mere reservation of its enjoyment. The test is whether there is or is not such a surrender as permits the absolute and unqualified enjoyment by the public or the members thereof to whom it may be committed. Werckmeister v. American Lithographic Co., 134 Fed. 321, 325, 69 C. C. A. 553, 68 L. R. A. 591.

DEDUCEDEDUCTION OF FRAUD

"A 'deduction of fraud' may be made not only from deceptive or false representations and circumstances, which may be trivial in themselves, but decisive evidence in the case of a fraudulent design." Lindley v. Kemp, 76 N. E. 798, 800, 38 Ind. App. 355 (quoting and adopting 2 Kent, 484).

DEDUCTIONS

A statute provides that in assessing bank shares the assessor shall allow all the "deductions" and exemptions granted by law from the value of other taxable property owned by individuals, etc. Held that, if the intent was to allow the valuation of the bank stock to be reduced by deducting from the assets of the bank such securities as were exempt from taxation, the word "deductions" was inappropriate. Lippincott v. Lippincott, 66 Atl. 113, 114, 74 N. J. Law, 439.

Comp. St. Neb. 1885, c. 73, § 46, defines a deed to be any instrument in writing by which any real estate or interest therein is created, aliened, mortgaged, or assigned. Burns v. Cooper, 140 Fed. 273, 281, 72 C. C. A. 25.

The necessary elements of a valid deed are competent parties, a lawful subject-matter, a valuable consideration, apt words of conveyance and proper execution. Morison v. American Ass'n, 65 S. E. 469, 470, 110 Va. 91.

A deed of conveyance is not merely evidence of a gift or other grant. It is the gift or grant itself, and ipso facto operates to transfer or convey the title of the property described to the grantee. Alferitz v. Arrivillage, 77 Pac. 657, 658, 148 Cal. 646.

A deed of conveyance is a contract of conveyance, and the grantor will not be permitted to say that it is not. Wishart v. Gerhart, 78 S. W. 1094, 105 Mo. App. 112.

Civ. Code 1895, § 3599, provides that a deed to lands in this state must be in writing, signed by the maker, attested by at least two witnesses and delivered to the purchaser or some one for him, and be made on a valuable or good consideration, and a seal is not essential. Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. v. McKinney, 53 S. E. 701, 703, 124 Ga. 929, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 486, 116 Am. St. Rep. 215.

One who signs, seals, and delivers a deed, though not named therein as a grantor, is still bound as a grantor, and the "deed" is operative as a conveyance of his estate. Sterling v. Park, 58 S. E. 828, 829, 129 Ga. 309, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 293, 121 Am. St. Rep. 224, 12 Ann. Cas. 201.

A "deed of conveyance" is a sealed writing, signed by the party to be charged, which evidences the terms of the contract between the parties whereby the title to real property is transferred from one to the other inter vivos. Test Oil Co. v. La Tourette, 91 Pac. 1025, 1029, 19 Okl. 214.

"Technically, the use of the word 'deed' does not necessarily import a conveyance." Sanders v. Riedinger, 51 N. Y. Supp. 937, 30 App. Div. 277, 284. Its primary meaning was an instrument consisting of three things—writing, sealing, and delivering. 2 Bl. Com. 295. And hence, where testator created a trust for the benefit of his children and provided that on the death of the longest liver of his two daughters his executor should sell the property and distribute one-fifth to the appointees of testator's daughter by deed or will, the use of the word "deed" did not import a conveyance during the lifetime of the donee of the power. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Kip, 104 N. Y. Supp. 1092, 1094, 120 App. Div. 347.

A deed by a widow as the legal representative of her husband, which recites that, in consideration of an advancement to an heir of the part due him, to be deducted from the interest due him as an heir, in the final settlement of the estate, the tract conveyed is inventoried at a specified sum per acre and accepted by the heir as grantee on that valuation, and which grants a tract described, and which contains a general warranty clause, and which provides that, on the failure of title, the heir need not account for the value of the land in the final partition of the estate, is a deed within Rev. St. 1895, art. 3342, giving title to one holding under a deed for five years. Glasscock v. Dimmitt (Tex.) 141 S. W. 822, 824.

An instrument, duly attested, delivered to the grantee, and under which he went into possession, stating a grantor has "donated, granted, and conveyed unto E. for and during her natural life, and at her death to a little girl, nine years old, by the name of M., and in fee simple," certain property (describing it), reserving to the grantor the right to sell and convey the lands and lot if he chooses so to do, is a deed. Hamilton v. Cargile, 56 S. E. 1022, 1023, 127 Ga. 762 (citing Daniel v. Veal, 32 Ga. 589; White v. Hopkins, 4 S. E. 863, 80 Ga. 154).

The owner of property including a mortgaged lot conveyed it in trust, the trustee agreeing to pay the owner's debts and convey the remainder to any person whom the owner might designate by written instrument or will, and afterwards the owner by warranty deed conveyed the lot. On the owner's death, the trustee, as executor, brought interpleader, making parties the grantee and the heirs, who demanded conveyance of the lot to them. The heirs alleged undue influence, and the grantee claimed that it was the trustee's duty to execute to him a deed of the premises free of all incumbrances; the incumbrance in question being named and described in the pleading. The Supreme Court, in reversing a judgment for the heirs, remanded the cause with directions "to enter judgment directing the trustee to deed the property in dispute to the defendant" grantee. The trustee at the time was in possession of the mortgage by purchase with trust funds with the consent of the heirs. Held, that the mandate required an effective deed conveying the lot and not a mere quitclaim conveying nothing but the equity of redemption after payment of the incumbrance; the word "deed" in such a case, where a party asserts in his pleadings the right to a deed clear of incumbrance, meaning an effective deed. Itzel v. Winn, 124 N. W. 1033, 1035, 1036, 141 Wis. 645.

Blackstone defines a "deed" as a "writing sealed and delivered by the parties." Anderson's Law Dictionary adopts the above definition and says: "This comprehensive meaning includes any writing under seal, as a bond, lease, mortgage, agreement to convey realty, etc." as used in a statute providing that no "conveyance of land or contract to convey, or lease of land, for more than three years shall be valid against creditors or purchasers for a valuable consideration except from the registration thereof provided no purchase from any donor, or lessor shall avail to pass title" as against any unregistered deed executed prior to a certain date, the word is used in its broad generic sense and has the same scope as the words "conveyance of land" or "contract to convey or lease of land," as used in the statute. McNeill v. Allen, 59 S. E. 689, 690, 146 N. C. 283.

Comp. St. 1903, c. 73, § 46, defines the term "deed" to embrace every instrument in writing by which any real estate or interest therein is created, aliened, mortgaged, or assigned, or by which the title to any real estate may be affected in law or equity, except last wills, and leases for one year or less. Section 12 provides that every officer who shall take the acknowledgment of any deed shall indorse a certificate thereof, signed by himself, on the deed. Section 4 provides that the homestead of a married person cannot be conveyed or incumbered unless the instrument by which it is conveyed is executed and acknowledged by both husband and wife. The acknowledgment by both husband and wife of an instrument whereby it is sought to convey or incur a homestead is an essential step in the due execution of such instrument, which acknowledgment should appear from the instrument itself, in the form of a certificate of the officer before whom the acknowledgment was taken. Solt v. Anderson, 99 N. W. 878, 879, 71 Neb. 826.

The ordinary signification of the word "deed" is given by the Century Dictionary as that which is done, acted, performed, or accomplished. Abbott's Law Dictionary says "deed" is somewhat used in jurisprudence in its general vernacular sense of an act, something done; more frequently it has a technical meaning denoting (1) a written instrument under seal, and (2) more specifically a conveyance. In the first and broader of these meanings, deed includes all varieties of sealed instruments. The words "deed of release" in Civ. Code, § 5845, providing that an entry of satisfaction of a mortgage in the margin of a record shall have such effect, means simply the release of the mortgaged property from the lien of the mortgage. Swain v. McMillan, 76 Pac. 943, 945, 30 Mont. 433.

An instrument reciting that the grantor, for and in consideration of love and affection and $1 in hand paid, conveys and warrants to the grantee certain described real estate and that the grantor reserves to himself and wife the use and occupation of the lands as their homestead for and during their natural lives and during the life of the survivor of them, and also all the rents, issues, and profits thereof during their natural lives and during the life of the survivor of them, it being expressly understood and agreed by and between the parties that the grantee, who was the grandson of the grantors, should live with the grantors as a son, aid, assist, and care for the grantors in sickness and old age as a son, and, at the death of the survivor of the grantors, the title and interest in the lands should vest absolute in the grantees but not before, is a "deed." Venters v. Wickens, 79 N. E. 946, 948, 224 Ill. 569 (citing Shackleton v. Seebree, 86 Ill. 616; Harshbarger v. Carroll, 45 N. E. 565, 163 Ill. 636; Bowler v. Bowler, 52 N. E. 437, 176 Ill. 541).

The war revenue act (Act Cong. June 13, 1898, c. 448, 30 Stat. 448, provides that any person having in charge or trust, as administrators, executors or trustees, any legacies or distributive shares arising from personal property exceeding $10,000 in actual value passing after passage of the act, either by will or the intestate laws of any state or territory, or any personal property transferred by "deed, grant, bargain, sale or gift," made to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor or bargainer, etc., shall be subject to a tax. Held, that the words, "by deed, grant, bargain, sale or gift," as used in such act, referred to transfers without consideration only operative by way of gift. Blair v. Herold, 150 Fed. 199, 202.

Assignment of mortgage

Where the mortgagee of lands in the state died out of the state, and his foreign executors, who had not qualified in the state, executed a "deed" for the premises, their deed amounted to no more than an assignment of the debt and mortgage, and did not deprive the executors of the right to sell under the power of sale in the mortgage. Scott v. Blades Lumber Co., 56 S. E. 543, 549, 144 N. C. 44.

See Color of Title.

Contract

A "deed" is a contract between the grantor and grantee, although the grantee does not sign it. In re Millers' & Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 106 N. W. 485, 493, 97 Minn. 98, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 231, 7 Ann. Cas. 1144.

"Deeds" are contracts, and, when courts can ascertain from the deed itself the intent of the grantor, the deed will be construed so as to give that intent effect, and that intent will be carried out "as the mass of mankind would view it," and not in accord with the technical definition of the words. The rule that deeds must be construed most strongly against the grantor cannot be invoked to defeat the intent of the grantor, which fairly appears from the instrument as a whole. Negaunee Iron Co. v.

Iron Cliffs Co., 96 N. W. 468, 473, 134 Mich. 264.

Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 410, requires the county auditor to procure such books for records as the business of the office requires. Section 411 makes it his duty to record separately in books "deeds, grants and transfers of real property," and all other papers or writings required by law to be recorded. Section 4535 provides that all deeds, mortgages, and assignments of mortgages shall be recorded in the office of the county auditor, etc. Section 4536 provides that every instrument in writing, purporting to convey or incumber real property which has been recorded in the proper office, shall import notice to third parties. Held, that contracts for the sale of real estate are included within the meaning of the words "deeds, grants and transfers of real property," so as to authorize their record and make the record notice to subsequent purchasers. Under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 410, requiring the county auditor to procure such books for record as the business of the office requires, and, in view of the uniform custom throughout the state, to record all instruments affecting the title to real estate in deed records, those creating an incumbrance against real estate in mortgage records, and those evidencing title to personal property in miscellaneous records, the recording of an executory contract for the sale of real estate in miscellaneous records does not import notice. Bernard v. Benson, 108 Pac. 439, 441, 58 Wash. 191, 137 Am. St. Rep. 1051.

As conveyance by way of gift

The word "deed," in War Revenue Act June 13, 1898, c. 448, 30 Stat. 448, imposing a tax on any person in charge of property transferred by deed, grant, bargain, sale, or gift, made to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor, refers to transfers without consideration and operative by way of gift. Blair v. Herold, 150 Fed. 199, 202.

Delivery and acceptance essential

Blackstone defines a "deed" to be a writing sealed and delivered by the parties. Delivery is not only essential, but it is the final act that consummates the deed. Seibel v. Higham, 115 S. W. 987, 990, 216 Mo. 121, 129 Am. St. Rep. 502.

A "deed" placed in escrow, which was never delivered, but was recorded by the escrow holder in violation of the terms of the escrow agreement, has no effect as a "deed." Knapp v. Nelson, 92 Pac. 912, 913, 41 Colo. 447.

While a deed is defined as a written instrument signed, sealed and delivered, and it is essential to its validity that there should be a delivery, it is not essential that such delivery should consist of an actual, manual transfer thereof to the grantee. Graham v. Suddeth, 133 S. W. 1033, 1034, 97 Ark. 283.

Easement

The creation of an easement of a right of way by grant is within the terms of the statute requiring the record of every "deed of conveyance" of or for any lands, tenements, or hereditaments. Dahlberg v. Haeberle, 59 Atl. 92, 93, 71 N. J. Law, 514.

Lease

The word "deed," in Act May 28, 1715 (1 Smith's Laws, p. 94), providing for the acknowledgment and recording of deeds, included not only "conveyances of lands, tenements, and hereditaments" in the strict technical senses of that phrase, but also leases exceeding 21 years, and any deed intended to grant any estate for life or years, even though the latter is but a chattel interest subject to sale on execution. St. Vincent's Roman Catholic Congregation of Plymouth v. Kingston Coal Co., 70 Atl. 838, 839, 221 Pa. 349.

The word "deed," in common usage, means a conveyance of real estate. The word "deed," in a clause stipulating that the parties will by any deed thereafter executed prohibit any drilling for oil or gas on land, includes only a deed of conveyance, and not a lease. Test Oil Co. v. La Tourette, 91 Pac. 1025, 1029, 19 Okl. 214.

Mortgage

Absolute deed as mortgage, see Mortgage.

Under Rem. & Bal. Code, § 8746, providing that deeds, which include mortgages, shall be signed by the party bound thereby, it is not a requisite of a valid mortgage that it be subscribed as distinguished from signed by the party bound thereby. American Savings Bank & Trust Co. v. Helgesen, 116 Pac. 837, 841, 64 Wash. 54, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 390.

Necessity of words of grant

An instrument cannot be given the effect of a conveyance unless it contains words of grant. The use of the word "deed" by witnesses is a mere conclusion of the witnesses, and it cannot be presumed that a written instrument was a deed of conveyance, at least without proof that it contained sufficient words of grant. Capell v. Fagan, 77 Pac. 55, 58, 30 Mont. 507, 2 Ann. Cas. 37.

Under Gen. Laws 1896, c. 202, § 19, declaring the use of the word "grant" not necessary to convey tenements and hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, and section 11, providing that any form of conveyance in writing, duly signed and delivered by the grantor, conveys to the grantee the right and title of the grantor in the estate conveyed, whether absolute or limited, and section 4, providing that any instrument purporting to convey land is a "deed," although without seal, an agreement between the father and daughter providing that the daughter continue to live in certain premises and make it a home for her sister, who lived with her, without becoming a tenant, until further agreement between the parties, contained words sufficient to convey a life estate to the daughter; technical words of grant not being necessary. Disley v. Disley, 75 Atl. 481, 484, 30 R. I. 368.

See Patent.

Sealed instrument implied

A release by deed is a release by a written instrument under seal. Jackson v. Security Mut. Life Ins. Co., 84 N. E. 198, 200, 233 Ill. 161.

Under the common law of Maine and Massachusetts a written instrument without a seal is not a deed, and cannot convey land in fee. Brown v. Dickey, 75 Atl. 382, 385, 106 Me. 97.

A "deed" is a writing under seal. Under Real Property Law (Laws 1896, c. 547) § 208, providing that a conveyance of land should be subscribed at the end, a seal is not required to convey real estate in fee. Leask v. Horton, 79 N. Y. Supp. 148, 39 Misc. Rep. 144.

A "deed" in its broadest meaning includes all varieties of sealed instruments; while in its secondary and more common meaning signifies a writing under seal, conveying real estate. Malsby v. Gamble, 54 South. 766, 772, 61 Fla. 310 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1919).

Tax deed

A tax deed is a "deed," within Rev. St. 1895, art. 3342, providing that every suit to recover real estate as against any person enjoying peaceable and adverse possession thereof, etc., and claiming under deeds duly registered, shall be instituted within five years, etc., and will support a plea of limitations of five years without proof of prerequisites necessary to authorize the sale of the land for taxes. Lamberda v. Barnum (Tex.) 90 S. W. 698, 700.

The word "deed" in the statute relating to tax deeds does not mean a deed conforming in all things with the statutory form, but was used in its ordinary popular sense, namely, an instrument purporting to convey the land pursuant to a tax sale, and which, when tested by the common-law requirements, would on its face have been sufficient for that purpose, even though void either by reason of extrinsic facts, or by reason of nonconformity with the statutory form. Beggs v. Paine, 109 N. W. 322, 325, 15 N. D. 436.

Warranty of title imported

The tender of a deed without covenants or warranty is a sufficient performance of an agreement to give a "deed" for the premises. Ellis v. Burden, 1 Ala. 458, 467.

Will distinguished

The test whether a writing is a will or deed is the animus testandi, and, where the maker of an instrument intends a disposition which is in legal effect testamentary, the writing made will be held a will; but if he merely intends to convey a present estate or interest the instrument is a "deed." Belgarde v. Carter (Tex.) 146 S. W. 964, 965.

In determining whether an instrument be a "deed" or will, the main question is: Did the maker intend any estate or interest whatever to vest before his death and upon the execution of the paper? Or, on the other hand, did he intend that all the interest and estate should take effect only after his death? If the former, it is a deed; if the latter, a will. And it is immaterial whether he calls it a will or a deed. The instrument will have operation according to its legal effect. McLain v. Garrison, 89 S. W. 284, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 431 (citing Gillham v. Mustin, 42 Ala. 366; Trawick v. Davis, 5 South. 83, 85 Ala. 345).

Where an instrument contained the usual words of conveyance, having premises, habendum, tenendum, reddendum, condition, warranty, and covenants, and was not authenticated as a will, but was acknowledged as a deed, it must be accepted as a deed, the grant being in the present tense, for a will is as instrument which vests no present interest, but only appoints what is to be done after the death of the maker. Taylor v. Purdy, 151 S. W. 45, 46, 151 Ky. 82.

A deed in which the grantor's wife joined, which stipulates that the "grantors * * * reserve the use * * * of said premises for * * * their natural lives and the title of said grantees * * * shall become absolute only on the death of" the grantor and wife, is a "deed," and not a "will"; the quoted clause only reserving a life estate in the grantor and wife. White v. Willard, 83 N. E. 954, 957, 232 Ill. 464.

Testator and wife executed warranty deeds conveying their real property to their sons and sons-in-law which were delivered to W. to be delivered to the grantees after the death of the wife. On the same day testator executed a will reciting that he and his wife had sold their real estate to their heirs and deeded the same to them, with instructions that the wife should have one-half of the crop annually raised on certain of the property, etc. Held, that such deeds were not testamentary in character, but were operative of their own force independent of the will. Schillinger v. Bawek, 112 N. W. 210, 213, 135 Iowa, 131.

An instrument conveying land, "in consideration of the sum of $1 and other valuable considerations that" the defendant "shall look after my welfare and business when so required to do," "to take effect and be of force after my death," is not a will, but a deed of a remainder interest. Rogers v. Rogers, 43 South. 434, cause on suggestion of error conditionally reinstated Id. 946 (citing Baum v. Lynn, 18 South. 428, 72 Miss. 932, 80 L. R. A. 441).

A paper in the form of a deed, attested as a deed, and delivered to a named grantee, conveying certain property, together with all the rights and privileges thereunto belonging, "at my death forever in fee simple," is not testamentary. Kyle v. Kyle, 57 S. E. 748, 749, 128 Ga. 387.

"The general characteristics which distinguish 'deeds' from wills have been repeatedly declared; yet no definite, uniform test has been stated by which to determine the character and operation of each particular instrument, and none can well be. The intention of the maker is the ultimate object of inquiry—whether it was intended to be ambulatory and revocable, or to create rights and interests at the time of execution which are irrevocable. If the instrument cannot be revoked, defeated, or impaired by the act of the grantor, it is a deed; but if the estate, title, or interest is dependent on the death of the testator—if in him resides the unqualified power of revocation—it is a will." An instrument on its face purporting to be a deed, though there was evidence that the grantor told the draftsman that he wished to make a will, in the absence of any other proof from which a contrary intention could be inferred, is a "deed," provided there has been a valid delivery. Griswold v. Griswold, 42 South. 554, 555, 148 Ala. 239, 121 Am. St. Rep. 64 (citing Crocker v. Smith, 10 South. 258, 94 Ala. 295, 16 L. R. A. 576; Jordan v. Jordan, 65 Ala. 306).

To constitute a "will," the instrument must be one which is not by its terms sufficient to convey a present interest in the property, and the provision in a deed reserving to the grantors and the survivor of them the use and occupation of the premises, and providing that the full title and enjoyment thereof "shall only become operative on the death of the survivor of the grantors," does not change the nature of the instrument to that of a will, as a present interest passed by delivery of the deed. In re McIntyre's Estate, 120 N. W. 587, 588, 156 Mich. 240.

A will is "an instrument by which a person makes a disposition of his property to take effect after his decease, which is in its own nature ambulatory and revocable during his life. It is this ambulatory quality which forms the characteristic of wills; for, though a disposition by deed may postpone the possession of enjoyment, or even the vesting, until the death of the disposing party, yet the postponement is in such case produced by the express terms, and does not result from the nature, of the instrument." Consequently in an instrument whereby a husband conveys to his wife all his property, stipulating that the same shall be void during the husband's life, and then to become effective on his death, without court process of any kind, is a "deed," and not a "will." In re Hall's Estate, 84 Pac. 839, 840, 149 Cal. 143.

The rule is that if a paper passes no interest in the lifetime of the maker, whatever may be its form, if it is operative only upon his death, it is a "will," and to be effective must be probated. On the other hand, the object of all construction is to arrive at the intention of the parties, and their intention, where it is apparent on the face of the papers will be carried into effect, if it can be fairly done under its terms. The law favors the vesting of estates, and it prefers a construction of an instrument that will give it some effect, to one which will give it no effect. A deed to the grantor's wife and son recited that it was executed in order that the grantees might be provided for after the grantor's death; "that is, at the time of the death of the first party" the wife "is to have and to hold for life the property, and at her death the property is the property of" the son, "to have and to hold to him and his heirs forever." Held, that there was a present grant, with reservation of a life estate in the grantor, and not a testamentary disposition. Ecklar's Adm'r v. Robinson (Ky.) 96 S. W. 845, 846.

"A will is an instrument by which a person makes a disposition of his property to take effect after his decease, and which is in its own nature ambulatory and revocable during his life. It is this ambulatory quality which forms the characteristic of wills; for, though a disposition by deed may postpone the possession or enjoyment, or even the vesting, until the death of the disposing party, yet the postponement is, in such case, produced by the express terms, and does not result from the nature of the instrument. Thus, if a man, by deed, limit lands to the use of himself for life, with remainder to the use of A. in fee, the effect upon usufructuary enjoyment is precisely the same as if he should, by his will, make an immediate devise of such lands to A. in fee, and yet the case fully illustrates the distinction in question, for in the former instance A., immediately on the execution of the deed, becomes entitled to a remainder in fee, though it is not to take effect in possession until the decease of the settlor, while, in the latter, he would take no interest whatever until the decease of the testator should have called the instrument into operation." Nor does the fact that a deed of trust contains a full power of revocation render the instrument testamentary. Robb v. Washington & Jefferson College, 78 N. E. 359, 361, 185 N. Y. 485 (quoting and adopting definition in Jarman, Wills, p. 17).

An instrument from a husband to his wife containing apt words of conveyance and directing her to hold the property on certain trusts for the grantor, the trustee, and the grantor's children, and reserving a right to direct conveyances by the trustee to others and a power to revoke the entire instrument, was a "deed" and not a "testament." "To determine the character of an instrument as to its being a will or a 'deed,' it is necessary to ascertain the intention of the maker from the whole instrument read in the light of surrounding circumstances. If the intention at the time of the execution of the instrument was to convey a present estate, though the position be postponed until after his death, it is a 'deed'; but if the intention was that it should not convey any vested right or interest, but should be revocable during his life, it is a will." Cribbs v. Walker, 85 S. W. 244, 245, 74 Ark. 104 (quoting and adopting definition in Bunch v. Nicks, 7 S. W. 563, 50 Ark. 357).

DEED OF BARGAIN AND SALE

See Bargain and Sale.

DEED OF RELEASE

The words "deed of release," as used in Civ. Code, § 3845, providing that an entry of satisfaction of a mortgage in the margin of a record shall have such effect, means simply the release of the mortgaged property from the lien of the mortgage. Swain v. McMillan, 76 Pac. 943, 945, 30 Mont. 433.

DEED OF SALE

The informal instruments executed by the tax collector under Act No. 42, 1871, § 62, are known in the law of tax sales as "certificates of sale" in contradiction of "deeds of sale." Gauthreaux v. Theriot, 46 South. 892, 898, 121 La. 871, 126 Am. St. Rep. 328 (citing Cooley, Tax'n [3d Ed.] p. 992).

DEEM

As adjudge or determine

One meaning of "deem" is to "adjudge." Town of Checotah v. Town of Eufaula, 119 Pac. 1014, 1017, 31 Okl. 85. The word is so used in a statute which provides that any officer having authority to close an insolvent bank or to prevent the receipt of deposits, who does not exercise such authority, shall be "deemed" to have assented to the receipt of deposits. Ex parte Smith, 111 Pac. 930, 938, 33 Nev. 466; Ex parte Griffin, 111 Pac. 939, 33 Nev. 490.

The father of the child in question by his alleged second marriage had previously married, and he and his wife parted and lived apart. It was not shown that either of them procured a divorce, but he afterwards ran away with another woman, and they subsequently came back to the neighborhood where his former wife resided and to her knowledge lived together openly and notoriously as man and wife and discharged all of the duties of that relation toward each other until he died. Rev. St. 1909, § 342, provides that the issue of all marriages "decreed null in law or dissolved by divorce shall be legitimate." Held, that the word "decreed" was substantially equivalent to the word "deemed," which was used in the statute as it formerly stood, and, under the statute as construed, the children begotten by the husband of his alleged second wife were legitimate. Nelson v. Jones, 151 S. W. 80, 84, 245 Mo. 579.

As mean

The expression "shall be construed" and "shall be deemed" have been used time out of mind in statutes to import the same as "shall mean." Dilworth v. Schuylkill Imp. Land Co. of Philadelphia, 60 Atl. 47, 48, 219 Pa. 527.

As involving discretion

"Deem" does not signify an arbitrary exercise of will, but a deliberate exercise of judgment. "To deem" is to think, judge, hold as an opinion, decide or believe on consideration, to adjudge. State v. Cohen, 63 Atl. 928, 930, 73 N. H. 543 (citing Cent. Dict.).

As presumed

The word "deemed" is equivalent to "presumed," in an instruction that, if the location of a boundary line was in dispute, and if the adjoining owners caused it to be established and acquiesced in the line as established, the plaintiff would be "deemed" the owner of all lands up to such line. Cooper v. Slaughter (Ala.) 57 South. 477, 481.

DEEM BEST

Authority to executors and trustees under a will to invest the trust property in such manner "as they shall deem best" must be held to vest in them a reasonable and not an arbitrary discretion, and to imply a duty to execute the trust in accordance with existing laws governing trustees in the execution of their trust. Pabst v. Goodrich, 118 N. W. 398, 407, 133 Wis. 43, 14 Ann. Cas. 824.

DEEM FRAUDULENT

The language of Act March 28, 1905 (P. L. 62), making a sale in bulk of the whole, or a large part of a stock of merchandise and fixtures, not in the ordinary course of business, fraudulent as to creditors, that such sale without notice "shall be deemed fraudulent and voidable as against the creditors of the seller," is not to be construed as simply casting the burden of proving the good faith of the transaction on the purchaser, but is to be construed as meaning that non-compliance by the purchaser with the provisions of the act shall make the sale voidable as to creditors without regard to the intent of the parties to it. Wilson v. Edwards, 32 Pa. Super. Ct. 295, 301.

DEEP

DEEP CUTTINGS

The phrase "deep cuttings," in a charter provision authorizing a railroad company to acquire land for its tracks not to exceed four rods in width, except in the neighborhood of deep cuttings, means such cuts as may be necessary to enable the company to use for its track the entire authorized 66-foot right of way. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Brad-dock Borough, 83 Atl. 304, 306, 234 Pa. 312.

Such deer, see Such.

The word "deer," as used in Laws 1905, p. 161, § 13, declaring it unlawful to have in possession the carcass of any deer which has not thereon the natural evidence of its sex, extends to all deer, whether in a wild state or domesticated. State v. Weber, 102 S. W. 955, 956, 205 Mo. 36, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1155, 120 Am. St. Rep. 715, 12 Ann. Cas. 382.

The prohibition in the Forest, Fish, and Game Law, against the transportation of deer killed in the state, or possession for that purpose, except that one carcass or part thereof may be transported from the county where killed, when accompanied by the owner, etc., applies to domesticated as well as wild deer. *Dieterich v. DEFALCATION

See, also, Default.

"Defalcation" is the failure of one who has received money in trust or in a fiduciary capacity to account and pay over as he ought, and it particularly applies to the acts of a public and corporate officer. In re Harper, 133 Fed. 970, 978 (quoting and adopting definition in Courtney v. Beale, 5 S. E. 708, 84 Va. 692); the word does not necessarily imply any fraud or criminal act of the person guilty of it, and has a wider meaning than the words "fraud," "embezzlement," or "misappropriation." A municipal officer failing to pay over public moneys for which he is properly chargeable is guilty of a de-falcation. City of Syracuse v. Roscoe, 123 N. Y. Supp. 403, 410, 66 Misc. Rep. 317.

DEFAMATION—DEFAMATORY

See, also, Slander.

To "defame" is to speak evil of one maliciously; to dishonor; to render infamous. "Defamation" comprehends injury of another's reputation by calumny; aspersion by lying. Diener v. Star-Chronicle Pub. Co., 135 S. W. 6, 11, 232 Mo. 416.

"Defamation" is anything which tends to blacken or injure one's character or reputation. Dungan v. State, 57 South. 117, 118, 2 Ala. App. 235.

Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 7087, defines "defamation" as a false publication calculated to bring the person defamed into disrepute. State v. Mays, 107 Pac. 363, 365, 57 Wash. 540, 21 Ann. Cas. 830.

Any written words which directly or indirectly charge one with a crime or tend to injure his reputation or expose him to hatred, contempt, or ridicule are "defamatory." Richardson v. Thorpe, 63 Atl. 580, 73 N. H. 532.

A "defamatory" charge may be made indirectly, by insinuation, by sarcasm, or by mere questions, as well as by direct assertion in positive terms; and it matters not how artful or disguised the modes in which the meaning is concealed, if it is in fact defamatory. Lauder v. Jones, 101 N. W. 907, 910, 13 N. D. 525 (quoting definitions in Schenck v. Schenck, 20 N. J. Law, 208; Gorham v. Ives [N. Y.] 2 Wend. 536; McCoy v. Lightner [Pa.] 2 Watts, 352; Hotchkiss v. Oilphant [N. Y.] 2 Hill, 510; Rundell v. Butler [N. Y.] 7 Barb. 290; Gibson v. Williams [N. Y.] 4 Wend. 320; Andrews v. Woodmansee, [N. Y.] 15 Wend. 232; Solverson v. Peterson, 25 N. W. 14, 64 Wis. 198, 54 Am. Rep. 607; Buckstaff v. Viall, 54 N. W. 111, 84 Wis. 129; Allen v. News Pub. Co., 50 N. W. 1096, 81 Wis. 121; Goodrich v. Woolcott [N. Y.] 3 Cow. 231; Commonwealth v. Child, 13 Pick. [30 Mass.] 198; Wilson v. Noonan, 23 Wis. 105; Kennedy v. Gifford [N. Y.] 19 Wend. 296; Adams v. Lawson, 17 Grat. [58 Va.] 250, 94 Am. Dec. 455; Townshend, Slander & Libel [4th Ed.] §§ 164, 169; Newell, Slander & Libel [2d Ed.] 264-268).

The distinction between "criticism" and "defamation" is that criticism deals only with things that invite public attention or call for public comment, and does not follow a public man into his private life or pry into his domestic concerns. It is not concerned with the individual but only with his work, as a true critic never indulges in personalities, but confines himself to the merits of the subject-matter by conducting a fair discussion of matters of public interest, for the judicious guidance of public taste or opinion. Triggs v. Sun Printing &

Pub. Ass'n, 71 N. E. 739, 743, 179 N. Y. 144, 66 L. R. A. 612, 103 Am. St. Rep. 841, 1 Ann. Cas. 326.

DEFAULT

See Contract to Answer Default of Another; Debt, Default, or Miscarriage of Another; Omissions, Neglects, and Defaults; Promise to Answer for Debt, Default, etc.; Put in Default; Willful Default.

"Default" means anything wrongful—some omission to do that which ought to have been done by one of the parties; and a mere allegation that "because of the default of the defendant said premises were not conveyed" does not state the necessary facts to show to the court that the defendant did omit to do any thing that she was called upon to do. Davis v. Silverman, 90 N. Y. Supp. 589, 590, 98 App. Div. 305.

"Default" is the nonpayment of an obligation by the party bound to pay, without the consent of the parties having the right to waive the payment. Therefore, when the party entitled to demand payment waives the same by extending the time for payment, either for a definite or indefinite period of time, the person bound by the obligation cannot be said to be in "default." Arnot v. Union Salt Co., 79 N. E. 719, 721, 186 N. Y. 501 (citing De Groot v. McCotter, 19 N. J. Eq. 531; Thomson v. Poor, 42 N. E. 13, 147 N. Y. 402, 409; Toplitz v. Bauer, 55 N. E. 1059, 161 N. Y. 325, 333).

Default by a corporation in paying taxes on its capital stock was a default within a provision of the corporation's mortgage that, if it should suffer any lawful tax or charges to fall in arrear, whereby the security might become impaired, the mortgagee might foreclose, etc., and hence the mortgagee was entitled to a decree of sale under the terms of the mortgage. Union Trust Co. of Maryland v. Thomas, 66 Atl. 450, 453, 105 Md. 507.

A contract, which provided that the deed should be delivered to the vendee upon payment of a certain amount each year, from 1904 to 1910, and in case of "default in payment" the deed should be returned to the vendor, and previous payments should be used as rent on the premises, could not be construed so as not to put the vendee in default for nonpayment until 1910, and his failure to make any payment when it became due would amount to a default. Foxley v. Rich, 99 Pac. 666, 667, 35 Utah, 162.

In a provision of a charter party for the payment of demurrage "for each and every day's detention by default of charterers," the word "default" should be construed as meaning the failure to perform some duty imposed by the contract, and such failure only renders the charterer liable for demurrage. Wash- ington Marine Co. v. Rainier Mill & Lumber Co., 198 Fed. 142, 144.

Where a life insurance premium is paid by operation of an automatic loan provision, there can be no "default in premium payments." Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Commissioner of Insurance, 115 N. W. 707, 709, 151 Mich. 610.

In practice

As proceeding, see Proceeding.

A "default" is a failure to appear. Wolpert v. New York City R. Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 768, 769, 53 Misc. Rep. 536. Failure of a party to take a step required by law in the progress of a legal action. Acheson v. Inglis Bros. (Iowa) 135 N. W. 632, 633; Peterson v. Kissell, 125 N. W. 808, 809, 148 Iowa, 516. Thus when a defendant omits to plead within the time allowed for that purpose, or fails to appear at the trial, he makes "default." Leahy v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 107 N. W. 1060, 1062, 144 Mich. 304, 115 Am. St. Rep. 443 (quoting and adopting definition in Anderson's Law Dict. tit. "Default," and Burhill's Dict.).

A "default" confesses the material facts in the complaint and precludes defendant from making any objection to the relief authorized by the complaint until set aside in a proper proceeding. Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. King Land & Improvement Co., 120 Pac. 1066, 1067, 162 Cal. 44.

"Default," within Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1881, providing that no will shall be probated after four years from the death of testator unless the applicant was not in default in failing to present it for probate, is the applicant's default, so that the right of a purchaser of a devisee will not be lost by any default of his grantor. St. Mary's Orphan Asylum of Texas v. Masterson, 122 S. W. 587, 590, 57 Tex. Civ. App. 646.

DEFAULT JUDGMENT

See Judgment by Default.

As judgment, see Judgment.

DEFAULT OF ISSUE

See In Default of Issue.

DEFAULTING OFFICIAL

As used in Laws 1892, p. 620, c. 301, § 1, providing that in certain cases a defaulting official may be adjudged personally responsible, the term "defaulting official" should be construed in its broad sense and as including every official who fails to perform his full duty, and not be limited merely to officers found guilty of collusion or defalcation. Annis v. McNulty, 100 N. Y. Supp. 951, 956, 51 Misc. Rep. 121.

DEFEASANCE

An instrument which defeats the force or operation of some other deed or of an estate is a 'defeasance'; but, if the provision is in the same deed, it is a condition. Epperson v. Epperson, 62 S. E. 344, 345, 108 Va. 471.

"A 'defeasance' is a collateral deed, made at the same time of an feoffment or other conveyance, containing certain conditions, upon the performance of which the estate then created may be defeated or totally undone." Where the original transaction between a mortgagor and mortgagee was not in the form of a mortgage, but an absolute deed with a collateral written agreement to reconvey upon the payment of money at a specified time, the collateral instrument did not constitute a technical defeasance, though it was sufficient to secure to the grantor an equitable right of redemption, which may be released by parol or extinguished by such transaction between the parties as would render it inequitable that the mortgagor should be permitted to redeem. Ferguson v. Boyd, 81 N. E. 71, 72, 169 Ind. 537 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Black, Com. 327).

Where a deed of land conveyed in consideration of a contract for support, and a stipulation for the avoidance of the agreement in case of failure to perform the contract embraced in a separate instrument form parts of one transaction, the stipulation for avoidance constitutes a defeasance. Epperson v. Epperson, 62 S. E. 344, 345, 108 Va. 471.

DEFEAT

A plea that plaintiffs were "defeated" in another action between the parties involving the same controversy is insufficient as a plea of res adjudicata, as not showing that they were defeated on the merits. Goff v. Wilburn (Ky.) 79 S. W. 222, 233.

Where a purchaser of land at a tax sale voluntarily abandoned his suit subsequently brought to recover possession, he was not "defeated" therein within Kansas City Charter, art. 5, § 59, providing that, if a purchaser claiming under a tax deed, executed substantially as provided in the preceding section, should be defeated in a suit to recover the property, he might recover the purchase price, etc., from the owner. Russell v. Woerner, 110 S. W. 691, 692, 131 Mo. App. 253.

A portion of the heirs at law of a decedent employed an attorney to render services in a contest against the probate of an alleged will of the decedent, by which the heirs agreed to pay the attorney a stipulated fee "in case the will is defeated." The will was defeated, within the meaning of the contract, where a decree was entered by the probate court in accordance with a stipulation between all the parties in interest, secured with the aid of the efforts of the attorney, and of his advice, fixing the basis of distribution of the property of the decedent in kind, which, with the exception of some inconsequential bequests, was wholly at variance with the provisions of the will, and under which the clients of the obligors in the contract received a larger part of the estate than their share as heirs at law. Ingersoll v. Coram, 127 Fed. 418, 431.

DEFECT

See Formal Defect; Jurisdictional Defect; Latent Defect; Open and Obvious Defect.

Any defect, see Any.

Other defects, see Other.

The term "defect," as used in Code Iowa 1873, §§ 478, 479, which provide for the collection of assessments for public improvements completed notwithstanding any defect in any such municipal corporation, or its officers, means a mere informality or irregularity, and not a failure to make a valid contract. Allen v. Davenport, 132 Fed. 209, 223, 65 C. C. A. 641.

An imperfect description in an assessment roll is a "defect" in the proceedings affecting the jurisdiction to sell the land for taxes within Tax Law, § 132, authorizing the cancellation of tax deeds for such defects. People ex rel. Staples v. Sohmer, 134 N. Y. Supp. 543, 546, 150 App. Div. 8.

A defective plan adopted by a city for the construction of a sewer, resulting in the flooding of plaintiff's mine, was not a "defect," within Rev. Codes, § 3289, providing that notice of claim for injuries must be given before the city shall be liable for damages for any defect in a bridge, street, public work, etc. Kelly v. City of Butte, 119 Pac. 171, 172, 44 Mont. 115.

A sink hole in the floor of the brewery room used for washing empty beer kegs, being a proper part of the works and not a way, was not a "defect" within the meaning of such statute, and hence there could be no liability under the statute for injury to a brewery teamster, who, while incidentally in the washroom on his employer's business, slipped into the sink hole. Kern v. Welz & Zerweck, 136 N. Y. Supp. 412, 417, 151 App. Div. 432.

In highway

A "defect" for which a municipality is liable for injury resulting therefrom is anything in the state or condition of a highway which renders it unsafe or inconvenient for ordinary travel and may be either inert matter incumbering the highway or a structural defect therein; but an illegal use of the highway by men, animals, vehicles, engines, or other objects, while movable and actually being moved by human will or direction, is not such a defect. Hence a horse race upon a street is not a defect. Marth v. City of Kingfisher, 98 Pac. 436, 441, 22 Okl. 602, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1238. Nor is a rope used in moving a building and left stretched above a street after dark while not in use. Craig v.

Inhabitants of Leominster, 85 N. E. 855, 857, 200 Mass. 101.

A statute making every town liable for damages caused by any "defect in a highway," existing because of the neglect of its highway commissioner, applies only to defects interfering with travel along the highway, and does not apply to the failure of the commissioner to remove rubbish from a sluice under the traveled part of the highway, so that surface water is backed upon the adjoining premises. Winchell v. Town of Camillus, 95 N. Y. Supp. 688, 689, 109 App. Div. 341.

A limb of a tree standing in a public street, does not constitute a "defect" in the street, though constituting a menace to travel by reason of its liability to fall on pedestrians on a sidewalk, since the city is not required to remove the limb as a part of its duty to build and repair highways within its limits. Dyer v. City of Danbury, 81 Atl. 958, 959, 85 Conn. 128, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 405, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 784.

An instruction, that "by 'defect in the highway' is meant any condition that renders the highway not reasonably safe for travelers who exercise ordinary care in traveling upon it," was not open to the objection that there may be numerous defects in highways which render them unsafe for travelers in the exercise of ordinary care, but which are not defects in an actionable sense. Kortendick v. Town of Waterford, 125 N. W. 945, 947, 142 Wis. 413.

In railroad

The word "defect" within a statute making railroad companies liable for injuries sustained by employes through defects in cars, etc., means an existing unsafe and dangerous condition resulting from actionable negligence attributable to the employer. Ketchum v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. Ry. Co., 136 N. W. 634, 636, 150 Wis. 211.

The presence on a railroad track of coke which had fallen from cars other than that on which plaintiff had been working and which had been lying on the ground several hours, before plaintiff stumbled against it and was injured while trying to make a coupling, was a "defect" within the meaning of Acts 1905, p. 386, c. 163, providing that the defense of assumed risk shall not be available in actions against a railroad company where a person of ordinary care would have continued in the service with knowledge of the defect. El Paso & S. W. Ry. Co. v. Alexander (Tex.) 117 S. W. 927, 935.

A wire stretched over the track of a railroad company, not sufficiently high above a freight car on the track to permit an employe standing on the top of such car to safely pass under the wire, is not a defect in the way or track, where it is not shown that the wire is not a mere movable object temporarily placed too near the track. Hubbard v. Central of Georgia Ry. Co., 63 S. E. 19, 131 Ga. 658, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 738.

In sidewalk

The word "defect," as used in a charter giving a city complete control of its sidewalks and providing a method of enforcing the construction of walks by means of resolutions, notice to the property owner, assessment of the cost on the property, and sale thereunder, and that, if for any reason the city should be unable to compel the owner to construct and repair a sidewalk by fixing a lien on the property, the city should not be liable for any "defect" therein, means such defects as are intended to be prevented by the exercise of the power so granted and which exists because such power proves futile. Lentz v. Dallas, 72 S. W. 59, 61, 96 Tex. 258.

A dangerous accumulation of snow and ice on a sidewalk was a "defect" therein within Comp. St. 1905, c. 13, art. 2, § 107, exempting a city from liability for damages from a defective sidewalk, unless notice of the accident was filed with the city clerk within 20 days. McCollum v. City of South Omaha, 121 N. W. 438, 84 Neb. 413.

DEFECT IN DESCRIPTION

The words "defect in description," as used in a statute providing that realty taxes shall be assessed to the owners and separate tracts shall be separately described and valued, provided that no defect in description or mistake in valuation shall be taken advantage of to avoid payment of taxes unless the owner brought to the assessors a true account of his ratable estate, include an imperfect statement of area, courses, distances, or boundaries of the taxpayer's property, but only errors of description are included within the statute. Matteson v. Warwick & Coventry Water Co., 68 Atl. 577, 582, 28 R. I. 570.

DEFECT OF FORM

See Defect of Substance.

DEFECT OF HEIRS

The term "defect of heirs," as used in Ky. St. 1903, § 2971, part of the law for the government of cities of the first class, providing that so much property in a city as from alienage, "defect of heirs," failure of homestead, or other causes, shall escheat to the commonwealth, shall vest in the municipal board for school purposes, taken with the other modes of escheat, comprehends every case of escheat allowed and enumerated by the statute. Commonwealth for Use of Louisville School Board v. Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co., 99 S. W. 596, 598, 124 Ky. 497.

DEFECT OF PARTIES

A "defect of parties" plaintiff or defendant means sufficient parties, and has no application to a case of too many parties, or the joining of a person having no interest in the litigation. Mader v. Plano Mfg. Co., 97 N. W. 843, 845, 17 S. D. 553.

"Defect of parties" as a ground of demurrer means too few and not too many, and a demurrer on that ground can be interposed only for nonjoinder of necessary parties, and not for misjoinder. Tieman v. Sachs, 98 Pac. 163, 164, 52 Or. 560; United States v. Comet Oil & Gas Co., 187 Fed. 674, 679.

DEFECT OF REASON

A "defect of reason" is a disease of the mind, within Pen. Code, § 21, providing that one is not excused from criminal responsibility as insane except on proof that when he labored under such "defect of reason" as either not to know the nature and quality of the act or not to know it was wrong. People v. Carlin, 87 N. E. 805, 808, 194 N. Y. 448.

DEFECT OF SUBSTANCE

The delivery of blank informations signed by the county attorney to the clerk of a county court is not a defect of form only within the curative provision of the statute (section 6705, Snyder's Comp. St.) that no indictment or information shall be deemed insufficient by reason of a defect or imperfection in the matter of form, which does not tend to the prejudice of the substantial rights of the defendant upon the merits, but is a "defect of substance" and prejudicial to the substantial rights of the defendant. Fullingim v. State, 123 Pac. 558, 559, 7 Okl. Cr. 333.

DEFECT OF TITLE

That the water-closets of a tenement house are in the yard, instead of the house, or other violation of Tenement House Act, Laws 1901, p. 889, c. 334, is not such a "defect of title" as to justify refusal to accept the property under an agreement to convey good title. Woodenbury v. Spier, 106 N. Y. Supp. 817, 818, 122 App. Div. 396.

DEFECTIVE

A writ is defective when it lacks something which the law requires it to contain; and the defect, as in other cases where amendments are allowed, must appear on its face. McArthur v. Boynton, 74 Pac. 540, 542, 19 Colo. App. 234.

The title of a person who negotiates an instrument is "defective" when he obtains the instrument or any signature thereto by fraud, duress, or force and fear, or other unlawful means, or for an unlawful consideration, or negotiates it in breach of faith, or under such circumstances as amount to a fraud. Jobes v. Wilson, 124 S. W. 548, 551, 140 Mo. App. 281 (quoting and adopting the definition in Negotiable Instruments Law [Laws 1906, p. 248; Ann. St. 1906, § 463] § 55).

A machine constructed to be thrown in to and out of gear by a lever and clutch, which cannot be controlled thereby but starts of its own accord, may well be found to be "defective" within the meaning of the word, notwithstanding the opinion of witnesses to the contrary. Fries v. Bettendorf Axle Co., 101 N. W. 859, 860, 126 Iowa, 138.

A pulley with a small piece broken out of its rim is defective, and, in an instruction in an action for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by such defect, it is proper to refer to the break as a defect, the jury being instructed at the same time that plaintiff could not recover unless the break or defect caused the injuries sued for. Eagle & Phenix Mills v. Herron, 46 S. E. 405, 408, 119 Ga. 389.

DEFECTIVE HIGHWAYS

The words "defective highways," as used in an act making cities liable for bodily injuries sustained on highways, taken in connection with the body of the act held to make it entirely clear that the Legislature had in mind exclusively defects existing for want of repair, and did not intend that a highway should be considered defective when some private individual had wrongfully placed stones, vehicles, or other obstructions upon the street, and left them there. McEvoy v. City of Sault Ste. Marie, 98 N. W. 1006, 1011, 136 Mich. 172.

Where the water department of a city dug an excavation in a street four feet wide and four or five feet long to lay or repair a water pipe, without taking any precaution to warn travelers of any danger, the jury could find that the street was defective, under Rev. Laws, c. 51, § 1, requiring highways to be kept in repair. Igo v. City of Cambridge, 95 N. E. 557, 558, 208 Mass. 571.

DEFECTIVE MACHINERY

Machinery permitted to remain unguarded, in violation of Labor Law, § 81, is "defective," within the meaning of the Employers' Liability Act. Bell v. Proctor & Gamble Mfg. Co., 137 N. Y. Supp. 266, 268, 152 App. Div. 434.

DEFEND

The word "defend," as used in a policy of employer's liability insurance providing that the insurer, if suit was brought against the insured to enforce a claim for damages on account of an accident covered by the policy, on notice thereof, would take charge of the litigation, and on behalf of the insured defend against such proceedings, means, necessarily, that all the proceedings in the suit founded on the claim for damages against the insured must be taken care of by the insurer; and, after taking control of the proceedings, the insurer cannot thereafter be discharged except by payment of the indemnity to the assured, or securing his discharge. Sanders v. Frankfort Marine,

Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co., 57 Atl. 655, 658, 72 N. H. 485, 101 Am. St. Rep. 688. In this sense "defend" means to bear the burden of the litigation, to defray the expense of carrying it on. Munro v. Maryland Casualty Co., 96 N. Y. Supp. 705, 707, 48 Misc. Rep. 183.

DEFENDANT

See Codefendant; Material Defendant.
Any defendant, see Any.
See, also, Reus.

"Defendant" is the party called on to make satisfaction for the injury complained of by plaintiff. Accoust v. G. A. Stowers Furniture Co. (Tex.) 83 S. W. 1104, 1105 (citing Chase's Blackstone, 628, 627). He is the party who defends a suit. His attitude, as the word "defendant" implies, is one of defense; he being only required to stand and repel the assaults of his adversary. Latta v. Wiley (Tex.) 92 S. W. 433, 437.

"Defendant" in a decree may be taken to mean defendants. Jewett v. Feldheiser, 67 N. E. 1072, 1073, 68 Ohio St. 523. The word as used in a verdict against "defendant" in an action for personal injuries by a passenger against a company operating a street railroad and a company owning the road and leasing it to the operating company, in which but one defense is interposed, was used as a collective noun and included all the parties defendant. West Chicago St. R. Co. v. Horne, 64 N. E. 331, 332, 197 Ill. 250 (citing Bacon v. Schepflin, 56 N. E. 1123, 185 Ill. 122).

In condemnation proceedings the word "defendant" can be used only in an uncommon and liberal sense. The plaintiff complains of nothing, and the defendant denies no past or threatened wrong. Both parties are actors; one to acquire title, the other to get as large pay as he can. Metropolitan Water Co. v. Kansas City, 164 Fed. 738, 745.

The term "defendant," as used in a statute providing that an order of sale in foreclosure shall be stayed for nine months on request of the defendant, applies to the mortgagor or persons in privity with him, and not to cross-petitioners seeking to enforce a lien, or to parties defendant having only a contingent or collateral interest in the property. Clack v. Pahl, 106 N. W. 420, 421, 75 Neb. 161.

Code Civ. Proc. § 382, provides that, if the consent of any one who should have been joined as plaintiff cannot be obtained, he may be made a defendant, and section 395 provides that, in all cases not specially provided for, the action must be tried in the county in which the defendants or some of them reside, etc. Held, that where plaintiffs sued on a joint cause of action in favor of themselves and F., and F. refused to join as plaintiff and was therefore made a defendant, he was not "a defendant" within section 395 for the purpose of determining the venue of the action, which was properly changed notwithstanding his residence in the county where suit was brought to the county of the residence of the actual defendant. Donohoe v. Wooster, 124 Pac. 730, 731, 163 Cal. 114.

As claimant

The "defendant and his sureties," as referred to in Rev. St. 1892, § 1200, providing that if the verdict in claim proceedings is for plaintiff the court shall enter judgment awarding a recovery by the plaintiff from the "defendant and his sureties," are the claimant in the claim proceedings and principal in the claim bond and the sureties who sign the claim bond. Strobhar v. Jesse French Piano & Organ Co., 37 South. 177, 178, 48 Fla. 158.

As construed in plural

Where an affidavit in garnishment proceedings involving more than one defendant averred that "defendant has not, within the knowledge of the plaintiff, or of the person making affidavit in support of the application, property in their possession within the state, subject to execution, sufficient to satisfy such debt," it was held that the words "property in their possession" rendered the affidavit sufficient as extended to all the defendants. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Warnell (Tex.) 103 S. W. 690, 691.

As each defendant

The words "defendants except," in a record reciting that the court overrules the separate demurrer by each of the defendants to the complaint, to which ruling of the court the defendants except, mean the same as if the clerk had written "each of the defendants except." Whitesell v. Strickler, 78 N. E. 845, 847, 167 Ind. 602, 119 Am. St. Rep. 524.

Garnishee

One summoned as trustee in a process of foreign attachment is a "defendant" within St. 1827, c. 359, providing that, where there are two or more defendants living in different counties, a justice suit may be maintained against them all in the county in which either resides. Boynton v. Fly, 12 Me. 17, 19.

As judgment or execution debtor

A "defendant" against whose body Gen. St. 1872, c. 211, § 14, authorizes issuance of an execution, is the defendant in execution, and not merely the defendant in the suit, and will therefore include a plaintiff against whom a judgment has been obtained by defendant. Ex parte Thayer, 11 R. I. 160, 161.

Under a statute authorizing a "defendant" against whom a judgment has been rendered, or any person interested therein, having matters of discharge which have arisen since the judgment, to have the same discharged, on motion in a summary way, either in whole or in part, according to the circumstances, by "defendant" is meant the party against whom the judgment or decree has been entered, and not necessarily the defendant in the suit. Dunton v. McCook (Iowa) 94 N. W. 943, 944.

As party defendant

The word "defendant," as used in the earlier removal acts, having been construed by the Supreme Court to include only a party who was a defendant on the record in the state court, it must be given the same construction as used in Act March 3, 1875, c. 137, § 2, 18 Stat. 470, as amended, which limits the right of removal to the "defendant or defendants." Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. A. Waller & Co., 164 Fed. 358, 360.

"Defendants herein," as used in a decree reciting "the court finds that due and legal notice of the pendency and prayer of this suit has been given to the 'defendants herein' in conformity of law," and adjudging that judgments in favor of those similarly situated as well as the judgments in favor of the ten defendants named and in favor of the other defendants who appeared be annulled does not refer to the ten defendants whose names are written in the title of the decree and to them alone, as such a construction would be inconsistent with the decree against those similarly situated which could have been lawfully rendered only in case the publication of the notice had been made, and the words "defendants herein" must therefore be given a broader interpretation and must include those who are similarly situated as well as those whose names were written. Wallace v. Adams, 143 Fed. 716, 728, 74 C. C. A. 540.

As real party

The word "defendant," as used in a statute declaring that an action must be instituted in the county in which the defendant or some of the defendants resided or may be summoned, does not mean a nominal defendant, but one who has a substantial interest in the suit adverse to plaintiff. Miller v. Meeker, 74 N. W. 962, 963, 54 Neb. 452.

Unnecessary party

In view of section 539 denominating the parties to an action by referring to the plaintiff as the complaining party and "defendant" as the adverse party, under Rev. St. 1899, § 562, providing that suits shall be brought either in the county where defendant resides or where plaintiff resides, and defendant may be found, or, when there are several defendants residing in different counties, then in any such county, the joinder of a person as defendant who is not jointly liable with the other defendant and is not a necessary party is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction as against the party not residing in the county where the suit is brought. State ex rel. Jackson v. Bradley, 91 S. W. 483, 486, 193 Mo. 38.

DEFENSE

See Affirmative Defense; Be No Defense; Cause of Defense; Equitable Defense; Ground of Defense; Inconsistent Defenses; Meritorious Defense; Pretermitted Defense; Self-Defense; Valid Defense.

Any defense, see Any.

F frivolous defense, see Frivolous Pleading.

Other defense, see Other.

See, also, Denial.

A "defense" is any fact or state of facts which will defeat a cause of action in whole or in part. Scott v. District Court of Fifth Judicial Dist. of Barnes County, 107 N. W. 61, 62, 15 N. D. 259 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1939); but a recital of irrelevant facts does not constitute a defense. Frank v. Miller, 102 N. Y. Supp. 277, 278, 116 App. Div. 855.

A "defense" consists of matter which goes to defeat a right of action. Kilgore Lumber Co. v. Thomas & Hammonds, 128 S. W. 62, 64, 95 Ark. 43.

Gould says that "defense" is, in a less technical sense, used as well in legal as in popular language, to signify, not a form in pleading, but the subject-matter of the plea. In Nebraska it has been defined as applying to every matter tending to diminish or entirely defeat the plaintiff's cause of action. In other jurisdictions it has been interpreted as dealing with principles and not with pleadings. As employed in Const. 1901, § 95, providing that after suit is brought the legislature cannot destroy an existing defense, it has reference to the cause of action and not to the form, and objections for misjoinder and multifariousness are not "defenses" within that meaning of the term. Skains v. Barnes, 53 South. 268, 270, 168 Ala. 426 (citing Gould, Pl. § 15, p. 32; Baier v. Humpall, 20 N. W. 108, 16 Neb. 127; Youngblood v. South Carolina & G. R. Co., 38 S. E. 232, 60 S. C. 9, 85 Am. St. Rep. 824; 13 Cyc. pp. 762, 763).

While the word "defense" ordinarily denotes the means by which defendant prevents the success of plaintiff's action, as used in Act April 6, 1850 (Laws 1850, c. 172, p. 334), prohibiting corporations from interposing the defense of usury, it means any position or attitude in an action in which a corporation seeks to avoid its own contract by showing that it is usurious; but it will not preclude a corporate assignee of a pledgor from asserting the usury in the pledge where the original pledgor could have done so. Merchants' Exch. Nat. Bank of City of New York v. Commercial Warehouse Co. of New York, 49 N. Y. 635, 641.

"Defense," as used in Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 3107 excluding evidence of usury in certain actions "unless the same shall be specially pleaded and verified by the affidavit of the party wishing to avail himself of such defense," means "cause of action." Nocona Nat. Bank v. Bolton (Tex.) 143 S. W. 242, 243.

In the phrase "constitutes no defense to the action," the word "defense" is used in the sense of "bar," and is the language of text-writers generally in such connection. Kendall v. Dunn (W. Va.) 76 S. E. 454, 456, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 556.

Counterclaim distinguished

The word "defenses," as used in the rule that statutes of limitation affect remedies, not defenses, is limited to matters purely of defense, and does not embrace matters which may be used as the basis of a counterclaim or a cross-petition. Louisville Banking Co. v. Buchanan, 80 S. W. 193, 194, 117 Ky. 975, 4 Ann. Cas. 929.

Rev. St. 1898, § 2969, defines a "counterclaim" as one existing in favor of a defendant and against a plaintiff between whom a several judgment might be had in the action, and constituting a cause of action arising out of the transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action. In an action on a written contract, the answer, after denying the allegations of the complaint, alleged that a mutual mistake had been made in the contract and prayed to have it corrected, to which no reply was filed. Held, that the answer constituted a "counterclaim," not merely matter alleged in defense, and under Rev. St. § 2981, providing that, if the plaintiff fails to reply to the counterclaim, the same shall be deemed admitted, was to be taken as true. Dunham v. Travis, 69 Pac. 468, 470, 25 Utah, 65.

Failure of the payees of a note, on being sued thereon by their indorsee and on the maker's bankruptcy, to assert misrepresentations by the indorsee as to maker's solvency, which induced the payees to take the note, precludes subsequent suit by the payees to recover, on that ground, the amount they paid on judgment against them; the matter being "defensive" and not available as a "counterclaim," within Civ. Code Proc. § 17, permitting independent suit on matter which might have been used as a counterclaim. Jefferson, Noyes & Brown v. Western Nat. Bank, 138 S. W. 308, 310, 144 Ky. 62.

Plaintiffs contracted to cut the timber on defendant's land within two years for a certain price per thousand, part payable on receipt of bill of lading and invoice, and the balance when the cars were unloaded. A year later plaintiffs sued for the amount agreed on for a shipment of two cars. Defendants answered that plaintiffs had wholly failed to perform, whereby they were indebted to defendants in a specified sum (liquidated damages stipulated in the contract), less a credit for the two cars shipped. Held, that the answer did not state a defense, a "defense" going to defeat the right of action, plaintiffs not being bound by the contract to complete performance before being entitled to any payments thereunder, and the time for performance having still some time to run, but only stated a "counterclaim," which is a demand in favor of defendant, against the plaintiff, and one which he might have prosecuted, though the plaintiff had brought no action. Kilgore Lumber Co. v. Thomas & Hammonds, 128 S. W. 62, 64, 95 Ark. 43.

A "counterclaim" presupposes affirmative relief, and, while it may be a full defense to the action, it is not so necessarily. A "counterclaim" may also contain facts sufficient to constitute a defense to a cause of action and yet not be sufficient to warrant affirmative relief. Therefore the rule is that such substantive facts must be averred as will show a liability on the part of plaintiff to the defendant disclosing a complete right of action in his favor against the plaintiff growing out of the subject-matter alleged in the complaint. Where, in an action to cancel a note and mortgage on real estate on the ground of an alleged breach of warranty in the deed of the land from defendant to complainant, a paragraph of defendant's pleading sought a reformation of the deed and mortgage and a foreclosure of the latter, it was to be treated as a counterclaim, notwithstanding that it was designated by defendant as an "answer by way of counterclaim." Johnson v. Sherwood, 73 N. E. 180, 186, 84 Ind. App. 490.

Where plaintiff agreed to sell all its lumber to a foreign corporation and brought suit against the corporation for the price of lumber sold, an answer, alleging that plaintiff had not delivered all the lumber manufactured by it but had wrongfully disposed of a large part of it, was a "defense" operating to defeat plaintiff's recovery, and therefore not a "counterclaim" or "cross-complaint" within St. § 3656, declaring that the statutory counterclaim embraced both recoupment and set-off, must be applied in the sense in which it is employed in the statute, namely, a cross-demand of the defendant against the award in which the plaintiff is entitled upon the cause of action alleged by him, and the term "counterclaim" must be used, as referring to a cause of action of the defendant constituting a defense for affirmative relief, and not as a defense which goes only to defeat plaintiff's cause of action. Rib Falls Lumber Co. v. Lesh & Mathews Lumber Co., 129 N. W. 595, 597, 144 Wis. 362.

Denial

A denial is not a "defense." Zilver v. Cooper, 74 N. Y. Supp. 850, 851, 37 Misc. Rep. 158; Dunlap v. Stewart, 75 N. Y. Supp. 1085; Fells v. Dumary, 82 N. Y. Supp. 531, 532, 84 App. Div. 105. At common law a distinction was made between a denial and a "defense." A "denial" was said to be a traverse only of the complaint, while a "defense" was said to be an affirmative statement of new matter only. A "defense" denies the right of recovery and shows that plaintiff had no cause of action, or that it has been discharged. Skains v. Barnes, 53 South. 268, 270, 168 Ala. 426.

Although a "denial" is often spoken of as a "defense," strictly a "defense" can only consist of new matter. If there be no such new matter to plead as a defense, the answer should end with the denial or denials, and no fact which can be proved under a denial should be pleaded as a defense. Silver & Co. v. Waterman, 111 N. Y. Supp. 546, 549, 127 App. Div. 339.

Partial defense

"Defense," as used in the Code provision authorizing a defendant to set forth in his answer as many grounds of defense as he may have, contemplates either a total denial of the truth or validity of the complaint, or matters which go to the partial extinguishment of the claim. Bush v. Prosser, 11 N. Y. 347, 352.

As a plea of new matter

A "defense" consists of matter which cannot be proved under a denial. Stroock Plush Co. v. Talcott, 113 N. Y. Supp. 214, 216, 129 App. Div. 14; Schultz v. Greenwood Cemetery, 93 N. Y. Supp. 180, 181, 46 Misc. Rep. 299; Silver & Co. v. Waterman, 111 N. Y. Supp. 546, 549, 127 App. Div. 339.

Set-off

The word "defenses," as used in the opinion of the court in the case of Seeman v. Biemann, 84 N. W. 490, 108 Wis. 376, that in an action to enforce a subcontractor's lien the owner of the property affected is entitled to the benefit of all the "defenses" against the claim possessed by the principal contractor, includes all claims by way of set-off which the principal contractor has against the subcontractor. West Allis Lumber Co. v. Wiesenthal, 124 N. W. 498, 500, 141 Wis. 460.

DEFERRED

In a contract providing that "deferred" payments should bear interest at 6 per cent., "deferred" was used in the sense of "put off" credit. Goss Printing Press Co. v. Daily States Pub. Co., 33 South. 760, 761, 109 La. 759.

DEFERRED DIVIDEND POLICY

A "deferred dividend insurance policy" is one which provides that dividends from the surplus shall be declared only among those who survive a period of distribution. United States Life Ins. Co. v. Spinks, 103 S. W. 335, 336, 126 Ky. 405.

DEFICIENCY

See Casual Deficiency.

A mortgage "deficiency" is the balance due after exhausting the property given as security. The deficiency is contingent until it is made certain by sale of the mortgaged property and application of the proceeds. Bailey v. Block, 134 S. W. 323, 325, 104 Tex. 101.

Under Laws 1890, c. 322, tit. 7, empowering the trustees of a town to apply any excess in one fund to any "deficiency" in another, there is a "deficiency" where a tax imposed has not resulted in raising the amount authorized to be raised by the trustees; but, where there has been an amount expended or contracted to be expended for a specific purpose in excess of the amount appropriated for that purpose, the expense so contracted is not a deficiency. In re Taxpayers & Freeholders of Village of Plattsburgh, 50 N. Y. Supp. 356, 361, 27 App. Div. 353.

A "deficiency in the preceding year," within Insurance Law, § 268, as amended, which authorizes directors of a county co-operative insurance company to borrow money to pay a loss and to make an estimate of the sum necessary to pay losses and expenses for the current year and supply any deficiency in the preceding year, and assess the amount at such times as would be most advantageous to the company, embraces outstanding claims not paid when the year closed, including money borrowed to pay losses, and is not confined to claims originating in the preceding year. Skaneateles Paper Co. v. American Underwriters' Fire Ins. Co. of Monroe County, 114 N. Y. Supp. 200, 205, 61 Misc. Rep. 457.

The detention of a vessel under a time charter at an intermediate port under a quarantine regulation of the state because she came from a port which was presumptively infected was not caused by a "deficiency of men," within a clause of the charter party relieving the charterer from the payment of hire in case of delay from such deficiency. Clyde Commercial S. S. Co. v. West India S. S. Co., 169 Fed. 275, 278, 94 C. C. A. 551.

DEFILE

See Forcible Defilement.

Defilement of a female is accomplished when any male person not her husband has had sexual intercourse with her, regardless of whether she has given her consent. State v. Botha, 75 Pac. 731, 735, 27 Utah, 289.

DEFINE

See Undefined.

To "define" is to express with precision the constituent ingredients of the essence of that which is to be defined; incongruous, accidental, and extraneous features being left out—in such manner that the definition will not apply to any other object than that defined. McDougall v. Monlezun, 38 La. Ann. 228, 229.

The word "define," when used in the title of an act reading "An act to define and punish crimes against children," suggests that some offense is to be created and defined or a definition of some offense that already exists is to be inserted. Milne v. People, 79 N. E. 631, 632, 224 Ill. 125.

As contract or bound

Within the classification of water courses as those whose channels are known and defined and those unknown and undefined, the word "defined" includes a contracted and bounded channel, though the course of the stream may be unknown. Deadwood Cent. Ry. Co. v. Barker, 86 N. W. 619, 621, 14 S. D. 558.

As fix or establish

"Define," as used in the statutes and in Const. art. 11, § 14, declaring that laws shall be passed more clearly defining the property rights of the wife, signifies to prescribe, to fix the bounds, to establish and declare the limits of, any right, power, duty, etc. Dow v. Gould & Curry Silver Min. Co., 31 Cal. 629, 639.

The word "define," when used in connection with the duties of a public officer, means to "fix, establish, or prescribe authoritatively." A statute in placing upon a person appointed the duties of superintending a public institution, subject to the supervision of the county board of commissioners, defines his duties within the meaning of the statutory definition of a public officer, declaring that the term public officer shall be construed to mean all the officers of the state, and other persons whose duties are defined by law. Sanders v. Belue, 58 S. E. 762-764, 78 S. C. 171 (quoting Cent. Dict.).

Since the word "define" is frequently used in legislation to mean "create," or "establish," Act March 1, 1911 (Acts 1911, c. 87), entitled "An act defining the judicial district of the Shelby and Marion superior court, fixing the time and place of holding courts therein," etc., is not unconstitutional because it uses the word "defining" instead of "creating" or "establishing." State v. Bartholomew, 95 N. E. 417, 419, 176 Ind. 182.

DEFINED TERRITORY

By the terms of a contract plaintiff was appointed by defendant an agent for the sale of machinery at De Pere, such agent to have the privilege of making sales in the vicinity of De Pere. On the back of the printed form of contract was the following indorsement: "The design of a vicinity contract is to pay an agent the stipulated commission on whatever machinery he may sell under the provisions of the contract, not in the territory of another agent who had the exclusive right to sell in a defined territory." The agent's territory is not a "defined territory" within the meaning of the indorsement on the contract. The business of these agents is not to sit still at some place and sell machinery to those who come to the agent and want to buy it, but to canvass or work their territory; and these "vicinity contracts" are made, rather than those of a definite territory, on purpose to meet cases of this kind, where a locality may be more closely connected in a business way with any one village than one near by, and to avoid conflict between different agents from border territory. McGeehan v. Gaar, Scott & Co., 100 N. W. 1072, 1074, 122 Wis. 630.

DEFINITE

The word "definite," as used in Acts June 4, 1901 (P. L. 456), providing that from any definite judgment, order, or decree entered by the court of common pleas an appeal may be taken by the party aggrieved to the Supreme Court or superior court, is not used in the sense of "clear" or "unambiguous," but it is used in the same sense as "definitive" is used when prefaced to a decree, order, or judgment; that is, opposed to "interlocutory." Where a subcontractor agrees that no lien shall be filed by him, and that, if any is filed, any attorney may appear and strike it off, and a receiver for the owner of the building takes a rule to show cause why an attorney should not enter an appearance for the lien claimant and discontinue a lien proceeding begun by him, an order discharging the rule is interlocutory and not appealable, and not a "definite" order within the meaning of the word as used in the statute. Kurrie v. Cottingham, 57 Ala. 1106, 1107, 209 Pa. 12.

DEFINITE AND CERTAIN

The test whether a complaint should be made more "definite and certain" is whether it contains a plain and concise statement of facts constituting the cause of action, enabling defendant to ascertain the charge against him with sufficient definiteness to enable him to properly plead; and therefore the complaint need not show the dates or amounts of payments which are not specifically recoverable, but are merely evidence of the damages in an action for general damages for wrongful acts or negligence of defendant as agent of plaintiff. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Granniss, 103 N. Y. Supp. 835, 836, 118 App. Div. 830.

DEFINITE PERIOD

The rule that the payment of a debt due may be extended for a "definite period of time" upon a valuable consideration does not imply that the extension should be to a certain day; and when the extension is susceptible of being made definite or is understood by the parties to be for a definite period the agreement should be liberally construed, and hence an extension during one year and until December or Christmas of the next is a definite extension. Cummings v. Badger Lumber Co., 109 S. W. 68, 69, 130 Mo. App. 557 (quoting and adopting definition in West v. Brison, 13 S. W. 95, 99 Mo. 684).

DEFINITELY FIX

Under a congressional grant for a right of way for a railroad through an Indian reservation, providing for the filing of maps of definite location and the approval thereof by the Secretary of the Interior, the grant was a "floating" grant in present until the company filed its map of definite location, and the same was approved by the Secretary of the Interior, whereupon the grant became definite and fixed, attaching to the particular strip of land indicated by the map thus filed and approved, and the title to the land became thereupon vested in the railway company. The route must be considered as "definitely fixed" and cannot be the subject of change at the volition of the company. Spokane & B. C. Ry. Co. v. Washington & G. N. Ry. Co., 95 Pac. 64, 66, 49 Wash. 280 (citing Van Wyck v. Knevals, 1 Sup. Ct. 336, 106 U. S. 360, 366, 367, 27 L. Ed. 201); Oregon Short Line R. Co. v. Stalker, 94 Pac. 59, 63, 14 Idaho, 371 (quoting Van Wyck v. Knevals, 1 Sup. Ct. 336, 106 U. S. 360, 27 L. Ed. 201).

DEFINITION

The word "definition" is in itself difficult to define. What would be possible under a given state of facts would be impossible under another. The word must be accepted with reference to its relation to other words and terms. School Dist. No. 20, Spokane County, v. Bryan, 99 Pac. 28, 29, 51 Wash. 498, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1033.

DEF'LT

The entry, "def'lt," on a judge's docket, is a sufficient entry of the fact that no defense has been filed. Brawner v. Maddox, 58 S. E. 278, 281, 1 Ga. App. 332.

DEFORCEMENT

"Deforcement," within the law relating to ouster from possession, signifies the holding of any lands or tenements to which another person has a right and includes ouster affected by abatement, intrusion, disseisin, and discontinuance, any other species of wrong whatsoever, whereby he who has a right to the freehold is kept out of possession, but is contradistinguished from these in that it is only a detainer of the freehold from him who has the right of property, but never had any possession under that right. A species of deforcement is when the ancestor dies seised of an estate in fee simple, which descends to two of his heirs as parceners and one of them enters before the other and will not suffer the coparcener to enter and enjoy his moiety. Dobbins v. Dobbins, 53 S. E. 870, 872, 141 N. C. 210, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185, 115 Am. St. Rep. 682 (citing 3 Black. Com. 167, 174).

DEFORMITY

See Bodily Deformity.

DEFRAUD

See Hinder, Delay, and Defraud.

Injure or defraud, see Injure.

Scheme to defraud, see Scheme.

As defined by lexicographers, the word "defraud" means to deprive of right, either by procuring something by deception or artifice, or by appropriating something wrongfully; to defeat or frustrate wrongfully. The meaning of the word "defraud," when used in the common law or in a statute, is largely influenced by the sense in which it is used and the subject to which it relates. Curley v. United States, 130 Fed. 1, 7, 12, 64 C. C. A. 369.

"If a person shall fraudulently represent a fact to be true, knowing at the time that it is not true, and resorts to the fraudulent representation to obtain money from another, and does so obtain it, he would be guilty of 'defrauding another by deceitful means.'" Young v. State, 46 South. 580, 581, 155 Ala. 145.

The term "defraud," as used in Rev. St. § 5440, covering conspiracies to defraud the United States, cannot be regarded as used in its broadest sense or as covering constructive fraud known only in equity, but must be taken in its criminal aspect as known, if so known, to the common law. A conspiracy to have other persons make entry and purchase public lands, such lands to be conveyed to a corporation for the purpose of enabling the corporation to acquire a larger quantity of such lands than it could lawfully purchase, is not a conspiracy to defraud the United States; the common-law crime of obtaining goods and chattels by false pretenses not extending to the acquisition of realty. United States v. Keitel, 157 Fed. 396, 402.

Advantage and damage implied

To "defraud" implies the obtaining of an unconscionable advantage to one party or the unjust deprivation of property or rights belonging to the other. Under Pen. Code, § 515, providing that one who, with intent to defraud makes a false entry in a book of accounts, shall be guilty of forgery, and sections 718, 721, declaring that, where an intent to defraud is required, intent to defraud any person or association, etc., is sufficient, proof that the president of an insurance company made false entries in the company's books, with a view of excluding from the annual reports to the state insurance department all references to syndicate operations and collateral loans, is not alone evidence of an intent to defraud essential to constitute forgery. People v. Hegeman, 107 N. Y. Supp. 261, 267, 57 Misc. Rep. 295.

Artifice or deception implied

The term "defraud," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 5440, prohibiting a conspiracy to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose, should not be construed as limited to frauds respecting property rights, but includes the deprivation of any right by deception or artifice; the act being intended to secure the wholesome administration of the laws and affairs of the United States in the interests of the government. United States v. Stevenson, 30 Sup. Ct. 37, 38, 215 U. S. 200, 54 L. Ed. 157; United States v. Moore, 173 Fed. 122, 123, 128, 131 (citing United States v. Stone, 135 Fed. 392). "Defraud," as used in Rev. St. § 5440, providing for the punishment of conspiracy to defraud the United States, is not limited to frauds respecting property rights, but includes the deprivation by deception or artifice, of its right to perform a governmental duty. Curley v. United States, 130 Fed. 1, 3, 6, 7, 9, 11, 64 C. C. A. 369.

Criminal intent

"To render a deed fraudulent, it is not necessary that the debtor should intend to entirely defeat the creditor in the collection of his claim. Creditors are entitled not only to be paid, but to be paid as their claims accrue; and a debtor has no more right to postpone payment simply for his own advantage than to defeat it altogether. A purpose to delay and hinder a creditor is therefore fraudulent, although the debtor may honestly intend that all his debts shall ultimately be paid. Wait, Fraud. Conv. §§ 11, 318, will sustain this view. A conveyance may be made with intent to hinder or delay without an intent to absolutely defraud. Either intent is sufficient. The statute is in the disjunctive, and attempts to attach a separate and specific meaning to each of the words which it employs. A conveyance made by an embarrassed debtor with a view, which was known to the purchaser, to secure the property from attachment, is void, though honestly made; the debtor intending that all creditors should be paid in full." Edgell v. Smith, 40 S. E. 402, 404, 50 W. Va. 349.

Disturb, hinder, or delay synonymous

The word "defraud," as used in the phrase "disturb, hinder, delay, or defraud" creditors, is the most generic term of the four, and really includes all the others, since "to disturb, hinder, or delay" a creditor in the collection of his debts are only different modes of defrauding him of his rights, and these words are used merely as specific statements of various forms of fraud. The words

"for the purpose and with the fraudulent intent to defraud their creditors," as used in an affidavit for attachment, are sufficiently broad to include an intent to "hinder and delay their creditors," and, upon a motion to dissolve the attachment for the reason that the specific intent to defraud has not been established by the evidence, it is error to sustain the motion when it appears that the acts complained of were done with intent to hinder and delay creditors. Clayton v. Clark, 92 Pac. 1117, 1118, 76 Kan. 832, 123 Am. St. Rep. 169 (quoting 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1949).

The terms "defraud," "hinder," and "delay" are not equivalent terms, and to hinder or delay creditors is as much within Code 1906, § 3099, as to wholly defraud a creditor. Halfpenny & Hamilton v. Tate & McDevitt, 64 S. E. 28, 29, 65 W. Va. 296; Edgell v. Smith, 40 S. E. 402, 404, 50 W. Va. 349.

Use of mails to defraud

The federal statute making it an offense to use the mails to defraud does not make any discrimination with respect to the right to use of the mails by persons whose vocation is healing between those who profess to cure by the use of mental science and those who use drugs. The healer's good faith is the cardinal question, and, if he practices in good faith without intention to defraud he commits no offense, although in fact the theory and practice followed are worthless. Post v. United States, 135 Fed. 1, 9, 67 C. C. A. 569, 70 L. R. A. 989.

The provisions of the federal statute empowering the Postmaster General to issue orders stopping the use of the mails as an agency in conducting schemes or devices for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises, are not restricted to schemes or devices which are wanting of all the elements of a legitimate business, or in which it is intended to return nothing whatever, or nothing at all, equivalent in value for the money obtained, but embraces those whereby a business, otherwise legitimate, is systematically and designedly so conducted that, by means of false representations, its patrons are induced to part with their money in the belief that they are purchasing something different from, superior to, and worth more, than what is actually being sold, although they may approximate in commercial value the price asked and received. Harris v. Rosenberger, 145 Fed. 449, 455-458, 76 C. C. A. 225, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 762.

Officers of a labor union who send letters or circulars through the mails to customers of a manufacturing corporation to induce them to withdraw their custom from it for the purpose of ruining its business or forcing it to pay a fine imposed on it for employing nonunion workmen, whether such fine and boycott were initiated by such officers or by the union with their participation and approval, are guilty of the offense of using the mails to defraud, in violation of Rev. St. § 5480. United States v. Raish, 163 Fed. 911, 912.

DEGREE

See Appreciable Degree; Highest Degree of Care; Material Degree; Medical Degree.

Any degree, see Any.

Degrees of negligence, see Negligence.

In commission of crime, see Principal.

The term "degrees," in a statute providing that when by law an offense comprises different degrees an indictment may contain counts for the different degrees, is not used in a strictly technical sense, "but as indicating the principal crime as the genus and the lesser as the species and necessarily included within the larger offense," hence the statute does not apply to cases where the crime is not divided by statute and cannot be separated into degrees. State v. McKee, 104 S. W. 486, 488, 126 Mo. App. 524 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Keeland, 2 S. W. 442, 90 Mo. 337).

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 127, 30 Stat. 180, relating to forgings of whatever "degree or stage of manufacture," the words quoted relate only to different stages of the forging process, not extending beyond the completion of that process; and forms that, after being subjected to the final forging process, are further advanced into completed articles practically ready for use, such as axles, piston rods, etc., are removed from said provision into that for manufactured metal in paragraph 193, 30 Stat. 187. United States v. Thomas Prosser & Son, 177 Fed. 569, 570.

Pub. Acts 1909, No. 104, § 2, provides that in all actions against any railroad company by an employé for personal injuries contributory negligence shall not bar recovery, provided the employé's negligence was of a lesser degree than that of the defendant, its officers, agents, or employées, etc. Held, that such act was not merely declaratory of the common law, and that the word "degree" should be construed in the sense of "less," as though the proviso was "provided the negligence of such employé was less than the negligence of such company, its officers, agents or employées." Bruce v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 138 N. W. 362, 363, 172 Mich. 441.

DEGREE OF CARE

See High Degree of Care and Diligence; Highest Possible Degree of Care and Diligence.

DEGUMMED

Within Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, par. 387, 30 Stat. 186, imposing a duty of $2.50 a pound, if in the gum, and $3 a pound if boiled off, silk fabrics are "degummed" when they are "boiled off" or subjected to a process which removes the gum, and whether a particular piece has been degummed cannot be determined by mere inspection and manipulation, but only by weighing, boiling it off, and then weighing again. H. Mendelson & Co. v. United States, 154 Fed. 33, 34, 83 C. C. A. 145.

DELAY

See Hinder and Delay; Hinder, Delay, and Defraud; Unavoidable Delay; Unreasonable Delay; With as Little Delay as Possible; Without Delay. Good cause for, see Good Cause.

The word "delay," in Code Civ. Proc. § 572, providing for the discharge of defendant under arrest in civil action where plaintiff unreasonably delays the trial of the action, means a positive act in the way of obstructing the trial, and not a mere neglect to proceed, though the term in its ordinary sense may not imply a positive act. Goff v. Charlier, 89 N. Y. Supp. 722, 44 Misc. Rep. 28.

"Defraud," "hinder," and "delay," as used in a statute relating to fraudulent conveyances, are not synonymous. A purpose to hinder and delay a creditor is therefore fraudulent although the debtor may honestly intend that all his debts shall ultimately be paid. Halfpenny & Hamilton v. Tate & McDevitt, 64 S. E. 28, 29, 65 W. Va. 296. The word "delay" as used in such a statute refers not merely to a question of time, but to the interposition of obstacles in the way of creditors with fraudulent intent to hinder and delay. Linn v. Wright, 18 Tex. 317, 340, 70 Am. Dec. 282; Edgell v. Smith, 40 S. E. 402, 404, 50 W. Va. 349.

The words "vexation" and "delay" in Rev. St. 1909, § 2040, requiring appellant to file an affidavit stating that the appeal is not made for vexation or delay, are not synonymous, but the word "vexation" expresses a peculiar meaning not expressed by any other word in the statute, and an affidavit must contain the word "vexation" as well as the word "delay." Cassidy v. City of St. Joseph, 152 S. W. 306, 308, 247 Mo. 197.

As conversion

See Conversion.

Discrimination

Under Rev. St. Tex. 1895, art. 4574, providing that a railroad company which shall fail or refuse, under regulations of the Railroad Commission, to receive and transport without "delay" or discrimination, tonnage, etc., destined to any point on or over the line of a connecting line, shall be guilty of unjust discrimination, etc., the term "discrimination" is used in its ordinary acceptation as meaning a delivery showing a preference in favor of or against a shipper in the performance of any act essential to the completion of that service, and is synonymous with "delay" as used in the section. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Thompson (Tex.) 118 S. W. 618, 622.

DELECTUS PERSONARUM

The principle known as "delectus personarum," under which a third person cannot be introduced into a partnership as a partner without or against the consent of a single member, does not apply to mining partnerships. Blackmarr v. Williamson, 50 S. E. 254, 255, 57 W. Va. 249, 4 Ann. Cas. 265.

DELEGATA POTESTAS NON POTEST DELEGARI

The maxim, "Delegata potestas non potest delegari," expresses the general rule that an agent in whom trust or confidence is imposed, or who is required to exercise discretion or judgment, may not intrust the performance of his duties to another without the consent of his principal, and that one clothed with authority to act for a principal must ordinarily perform the act himself. Winkleblack v. Exchange Nat. Bank, 136 S. W. 712, 716, 155 Mo. App. 1 (quoting and adopting 31 Cyc. p. 1425).

DELEGATE

DELEGATION OF POWER

See Legislative Power; Police Power.

DELEGATIO

"Delegatio" is a form of novation wherein the debtor remains the same as at the first but a new creditor is substituted for the old. "This obligation is discussed by Pothier in his Treatise on the Law of Obligations (Evans' Ed.) vol. 1, pp. 434, 444, and it was at an early day recognized by the common law. See Bracton de Leg. Angl. Lib. 3, c. 2, § 13. In order to the validity of this particular form of the obligation, the concurrence of all three of the parties is requisite: The original creditor, on being otherwise satisfied, discharging the debtor; the new, or indicated, creditor, accepting the debtor as his own; and the debtor, on being discharged from the original contract, entering into the new obligation." Loper v. Somers, 61 Atl. 85, 86, 71 N. J. Law, 657.

DELETERIOUS

A preparation is not "deleterious" to human health, in the ordinary acceptance of that term, simply because one person in a multitude of those using it happens to meet with ill effects. Willson v. Faxon, Williams & Faxon, 122 N. Y. Supp. 778, 781, 138 App. Div. 359.

DELIBERATE—DELIBERATION—DELIBERATELY

The word "deliberate" is derived from two Latin words, which literally mean "concerning" and "to weigh." As an adjective it means that the manner of performance is determined upon after examination and reflection; that the consequences, chances, and means are weighed, carefully considered, and estimated. Craft v. State, 3 Kan. 451, 481, 483.

"Deliberation" means to carefully consider and examine the reasons for and against a choice or measure. The term is often used with reference to the deliberation of a legislative body, or of a board or council, as well as of a jury. People v. Richards, 82 Pac. 691, 693, 1 Cal. App. 566.

The word "deliberate," in a statute making it murder in the first degree for any person purposely and in his deliberate and premeditated malice to kill another, means the mental state or condition of the mind in considering, weighing, and deliberating on the motive which prompts or induces a certain act or line of action. State v. Lindgrind, 74 Pac. 565, 566, 33 Wash. 440. It involves prior purpose to do the act in question. Blevins v. State, 107 S. W. 393, 394, 85 Ark. 195.

"Deliberation" in murder means the weighing of considerations pro and con, after which the killing being determined on becomes willful, deliberate, and premeditated. State v. Mangano, 72 Atl. 366, 367, 77 N. J. Law, 544.

"Deliberately" premeditated malice aforethought means simply "thought upon, resolved upon beforehand, not a thing done suddenly, not a thing that comes into the mind of a sudden, and is done before there is time to think about it, but a thing thought upon or planned some time before, or thought upon long enough before the act is done so that it can reasonably be said to have become a purpose of the mind." Commonwealth v. Tucker, 76 N. E. 127, 138, 140, 141, 189 Mass. 457, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1056.

An information charging that a homicide was committed of defendant's "deliberately premeditated malice," instead of "deliberate premeditated malice," as used in the statute defining murder in the first degree, while not couched in the best English, was not defective, and was not rendered defective by misspelling the word "deliberately." State v. Lu Sing, 85 Pac. 521, 522, 34 Mont. 31, 9 Ann. Cas. 344.

Upon the trial of an indictment for murder, the defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree by a jury who had been instructed that "the human mind acts so quickly that if you find that this man shot, and had the interval of time, however short, to form that intention, it is enough, if he formed the intention and carried it out, that is what is meant by deliberation in the law." Held, that this instruction was erroneous under State v. Deliso, 69 Atl. 218, 75 N. J. Law, 808, and State v. Mangano, 72 Atl. 366, 77 N. J. Law, 544. State v. Clayton, 85 Atl. 173, 83 N. J. Law, 673.

As in a cool state of blood

Deliberation is prolonged premeditation, and as used in the statutes defining murder in the first degree implies a cool state of the blood, and is intended to characterize murders such as proceed from deep malignity of heart, or are prompted by motives of revenge or gain. State v. Speyer, 106 S. W. 505, 509, 207 Mo. 540, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 836.

"'Deliberately' means in a cool state of blood. It does not mean brooded over, considered, reflected upon for a week, a day, or an hour, but means an intent to kill, not under influence of passion aroused by some just or lawful cause, but in the furtherance of a formed design to gratify a feeling of revenge or accomplish some other unlawful act." State v. Forsha, 88 S. W. 746, 751, 190 Mo. 296, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 576; State v. Megorden, 88 Pac. 306, 312, 49 Or. 259, 14 Ann. Cas. 180; State v. Hottman, 94 S. W. 237, 239, 196 Mo. 110; State v. Kinder, 83 S. W. 964, 966, 184 Mo. 276; State v. McCarver, 92 S. W. 684, 686, 194 Mo. 717; State v. Sharp, 82 S. W. 134, 136, 183 Mo. 715; State v. Todd, 92 S. W. 674, 676, 194 Mo. 377; State v. West, 100 S. W. 478, 481, 202 Mo. 128; State v. Spaugh, 98 S. W. 55, 65, 200 Mo. 571; State v. Davis, 126 S. W. 470, 226 Mo. 493; State v. Vaughan, 98 S. W. 2, 5, 200 Mo. 1; Territory v. Gonzales, 68 Pac. 925, 928, 11 N. M. 301; State v. Barrington, 95 S. W. 235, 261, 198 Mo. 23; Hamblin v. State, 115 N. W. 850, 853, 81 Neb. 148, 16 Ann. Cas. 569; State v. Atchley, 84 S. W. 984, 989, 186 Mo. 174; State v. Jackson, 66 S. W. 938, 939, 167 Mo. 291.

Mind capable of conceiving a purpose implied

The word "deliberate" means to weigh the motives for an act, its consequences, the nature of the crime, or the things connected with the intention, with a view to a decision thereon, and implies that accused was capable of the exercise of mental powers. State v. Jancigaj, 103 Pac. 54, 56, 54 Or. 361 (quoting 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1953).

Premeditate synonymous

"Deliberation" and "premeditated" are synonymous. Cook v. State, 35 South. 665, 676, 46 Fla. 20; Dillon v. State, 119 N. W. 352, 356, 137 Wis. 655, 16 Ann. Cas. 913.

The two terms "deliberate" and "premeditate," while frequently used in connection with homicide as interchangeable, have not exactly the same meaning. "Premeditate" involves the idea of prior consideration, while "deliberation" indicates reflection, a weighing of the consequences of the act in more or less calmness. State v. Exum, 50 S. E. 283, 289, 138 N. C. 599.

No specific length of time implied

"Deliberation" means the lapse of a considerable time between the malicious intent to take life and the actual execution of that intent. Marzen v. People, 50 N. E. 249, 255, 173 Ill. 43.

"Premeditation" means thought of beforehand for any length of time no matter how short. There must be some appreciable period of time between the conception of the intention and the act of killing. State v. Prolow, 108 N. W. 873-875, 98 Minn. 459 (citing State v. Lentz, 47 N. W. 720, 45 Minn. 177; People v. Beckwith, 8 N. E. 662, 103 N. Y. 360; People v. Callaghan, 6 Pac. 49, 4 Utah, 49; People v. Nichol, 34 Cal. 211; People v. Hunt, 59 Cal. 430; Wharton, Crim. Law [10th Ed.] § 380; McClain, Crim. Law, vol. 1, § 358; 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5508); State v. Arata, 105 Pac. 227, 228, 56 Wash. 185, 21 Ann. Cas. 242. But the length of time that the intention existed is immaterial. State v. Powell (Del.) 61 Atl. 966, 971, 5 Pennewill, 24; Franklin v. State, 39 South. 979, 981, 145 Ala. 669 (citing Cleveland v. State, 5 South. 426, 86 Ala. 1, 6); State v. Daniel, 51 S. E. 858, 859, 139 N. C. 549; State v. Davis, 126 S. W. 470, 477, 226 Mo. 493; State v. Roberson, 64 S. E. 182, 184, 150 N. C. 837; People v. Gilbert, 92 N. E. 85, 89, 199 N. Y. 10, 20 Ann. Cas. 769; Green v. State, 39 South. 362, 363, 143 Ala. 2. The "deliberation" need not continue for an hour or even for a minute, but it is sufficient that the design to kill be fully formed and purposely executed. State v. Lang, 66 Atl. 942, 945, 75 N. J. Law, 1; State v. Megorden, 88 Pac. 306, 311, 49 Or. 259, 14 Ann. Cas. 180.

If a person reflects, though but for a moment, before he acts, it is unquestionably a sufficient "deliberation within the law of homicide." State v. Dodds, 46 S. E. 228, 231, 54 W. Va. 289; State v. Honey (Del.) 65 Atl. 764-766, 6 Pennewill, 148; Dunn v. State, 39 South. 147, 148, 143 Ala. 67 (citing Daughdrill v. State, 21 South. 378, 113 Ala. 32; Cleveland v. State, 5 South. 426, 86 Ala. 1; Smith v. State, 68 Ala. 424; Mitchell v. State, 60 Ala. 26).

If a killing is not the instant effect of impulse, if there is hesitation or doubt to overcome a choice matter as the result of thought, however short the struggle between the intention and the act, it is sufficient to characterize the crime as "deliberate and premeditated murder." People v. Koenig, 72 N. E. 998, 994, 180 N. Y. 155 (quoting Leighton v. People, 88 N. Y. 117). If a robber with a dirk or pistol turns a corner and meets a bank messenger with a roll of bills, and determines in one moment to get it, and the next shoots or stabs the messenger dead, takes the package, and flees, his malice is deliberately premeditated, though it occupies only a few seconds. Commonwealth v. Tucker, 76 N. E. 127, 138, 140, 141, 189 Mass. 457, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1053.

DELIBERATIONS AND INVESTIGATIONS

The fact that the assistant district attorney was present and examined witnesses in the grand jury room and consulted with the grand jury regarding the case of accused, although not shown to have been present when the grand jury was voting upon the indictment or deliberating upon it, is not equivalent to proof that he was present at the grand jury's "deliberations and investigations" in violation of Code Cr. Proc. 1895, arts. 414, 559; Moody v. State, 121 S. W. 1117, 1118, 57 Tex. Cr. R. 76.

DELICACY

The word "delicacy" means "extreme propriety," "critical niceness," and "fastidious accuracy." Raley v. State (Tex.) 105 S. W. 342, 344.

DELICT

See Corpus Delicti; In Pari Delicto.

The word "delict" in the definition of a right of action, to the effect that there must be a right claimed or wrong suffered by the plaintiff on the one hand and a duty or "delict" of defendant on the other, means an obligation repudiated or a duty unfulfilled. Bennett v. Thorne, 78 Pac. 936, 940, 36 Wash. 253, 68 L. R. A. 113.

DELINQUENCY

"Delinquency" is "a failure or omission of duty, a fault, a misdeed, an offense, a misdemeanor, a crime." A "delinquent" is one "failing in duty; offending by neglect of duty." Default of the owner of insured property in misstating the nature of his title constitutes a delinquency within a fire policy, providing that loss, if any, shall be payable to the mortgagee, and that 15 days' notice of any delinquency of the assured would be given to him before any suspension or cancellation affecting his interests. People's Sav. Bank v. Retail Merchants' Mut. Fire Ass'n of Iowa, 123 N. W. 198, 199, 146 Iowa, 536, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 455.

"Delinquency" and "misconduct" are synonymous. Bailey v. Examining and Trial Board of Police Department of City of Helena, 122 Pac. 572, 574, 45 Mont. 197.

The word "delinquent," as used in statutes relating to taxation, means nothing more than "overdue" and "unpaid." Jenswold v. Minnesota Canal Co., 101 N. W. 603, 604, 93 Minn. 382.

DELINQUENT CHILD

A "delinquent child" referred to in St. 1905, p. 81, § 3, providing that any dependent or delinquent child may be committed to the state school for juvenile offenders, is defined in chapter 610, § 2, subsec. 1, as an "incorrigible minor." Ex parte Lewis, 86 Pac. 996, 8 Cal. App. 738.

The delinquent children law (Sess. Laws 1908, p. 178, c. 85) provides that the words "delinquent child" shall include any child "16 years of age or under" who violates any law. Gibson v. People, 99 Pac. 333, 334, 44 Colo. 600; Wilson v. Same, 99 Pac. 335, 44 Colo. 608.

Under Laws 1907, p. 40, § 1, defining a "delinquent child" as one under 18 years of age who violates any law, is incorrigible, etc., an information charging that accused removed the clothes of an infant female and tried to induce her to have sexual intercourse by arousing her passions, etc., and alleging that the acts tended to lead such child to become a delinquent, sufficiently charged acts tending to induce a child to become "delinquent" as defined by the statute. State v. Dunn, 99 Pac. 278, 280, 53 Or. 304.

The words "delinquent children," as used in Act No. 82, p. 134, of 1906, defining the power of courts with reference to the care, treatment, and control of dependent, neglected, incorrigible, and "delinquent" children, mean children who may be charged with the violation of any criminal law of the state, excepting certain specified offenses, or any criminal ordinance of any city or parish in the state. In re Parker, 43 South. 54, 55, 118 La. 471.

DELINQUENT TAX

All delinquent taxes, see All.

A purchaser in a deed recorded in the auditor's office on December 30th of one year, who paid the taxes against him for the following year, need not pay a duplicate assessment against his vendor, levied through the negligence of the county auditor in failing to correct the tax duplicate, as required by Civ. Code 1902, § 366, so that the taxes against the vendor, though unpaid, are not "delinquent taxes," and sale of the land for nonpayment of such taxes is void. Smith v. Cox, 65 S. E. 222, 224, 83 S. C. 1.

By the phrase "on the third Monday in January following the assessment of taxes all unpaid taxes shall become delinquent," as used in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, c. 75, art. 10, § 101 (section 6013), providing that one-half of all the taxes shall be due on the 15th day of June and the 15th day of December of each year, and "on the third Monday in January following the assessment of taxes all unpaid taxes shall become delinquent," is meant only such taxes as are at that time due and unpaid, and its practical operation is this: If one-half of the tax levied is not paid by December 15th of each year, then upon the third Monday of January following the whole amount of the taxes shall be held to have become delinquent. If, however, one half of the tax be paid on or before the 15th of December, the remaining half cannot be held to be due before the 15th of June of the calendar year following. Norton v. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co., 86 Pac. 287, 289, 18 Okl. 482.

DELINQUENT TAX LIST

Return of, see Return.

By common usage of the term "delinquent tax list" is understood to refer to the notices or other matters with which such lists are included. State ex rel. Cronin v. Cronin, 106 N. W. 986, 987, 75 Neb. 738.

DELINQUENT TAXPAYER

After sale of lands for taxes, the owner is not a "delinquent taxpayer." Honeycutt v. Colgan, 85 Pac. 165, 186, 3 Cal. App. 348.

Under provisions requiring that notice of a proposed tax sale be served on the "delinquent taxpayer," a decedent cannot be considered as a "delinquent taxpayer." When the apparent or registered owner is dead, the notice should be served on the actual owner as the "delinquent taxpayer" as contemplated by the Constitution and statutes. Notice addressed to a deceased owner and served upon a major co-owner is sufficient to bind minor co-owners who have no qualified tutor, even though they reside with the major co-owner upon the property in question where the service is made. In re Interstate Land Co., 43 South. 173, 174, 118 La. 587.

DELIRIUM

"Delirium" is a mental state or condition for the time being of mental unsoundness and irresponsibility. State v. Nowells, 109 N. W. 1016, 1019, 135 Iowa, 53.

DELIRIUM TREMENS

"Delirium tremens" is defined as a violent delirium induced by the excessive and prolonged use of intoxicating liquors. A person suffering under or afflicted with delirium tremens for the time being may be as absolutely insane as an idiot or a maniac. Parish v. State, 86 South. 1012, 1022, 139 Ala. 16 (citing Webst. Dict.). "An attack of delirium tremens may sometimes follow a single excessive indulgence. Ray, in his treatise on Medical Jurisprudence, says that though it most commonly occurs in habitual drinkers, after a few days of total abstinence from spirituous liquors, it may be the immediate effect of an excess or series of excesses in those who are not habitually intemperate as well as in those who are." Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. v. Foley, 105 U. S. 350, 354, 26 L. Ed. 1055.

While it is well established that insanity will excuse crime, although superinduced by habitual drunkenness and only temporary in the sense that it is curable or will naturally pass off, a distinction is made between a fit of drunkenness sometimes called "delirium tremens" and temporary insanity, a disease resulting from violent dissipation and indulgence in liquors, technically called "delirium tremens." State v. Kidwell, 59 S. E. 494, 495, 62 W. Va. 466, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1024.

DELIVER—DELIVERY

See Claim and Delivery; Constructive Delivery; Failure to Deliver; Immediate Delivery; Manual Delivery; Misdelivery; Money Delivered; Sale and Delivery; Signed, Sealed and Delivered in the Presence of; Symbolical Delivery; Track Delivery; Valid Delivery.

Element of sale, see Sale.

"Delivery" means to place in the power or possession of another, to hand over or transfer to another, or to communicate or make known, but not necessarily an actual passing from one hand to another. Gloucester Mut. Fishing Ins. Co. v. Hall, 96 N. E. 679, 680, 210 Mass. 332, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 348.

"Delivery" of a deed means the final absolute transfer to the grantee of a complete legal instrument sealed by the grantor, covenantor, or obligor. Rendlen v. Edwards, 92 S. W. 731, 732, 116 Mo. App. 390. It is the final act and the formal declaration of the grantor's determination to complete the conveyance or enter into the contract. Garrett v. Goff, 56 S. E. 351, 356, 61 W. Va. 221. A deed is "delivered" where, after its execution, the scrivener, in accordance with the unconditional instructions of the grantor, turns it over to the grantee. Conway v. Rock, 117 N. W. 273, 274, 139 Iowa, 162.

"The acts that will constitute a delivery will vary with the different classes of cases, and will depend very much upon the character and quantity of the property sold, as well as the circumstances of each particular case." Rapple v. Hughes, 77 Pac. 722, 725, 10 Idaho, 338 (citing Lay v. Neville, 25 Cal. 545).

A letter from a husband to his wife bespeaking either an intention that a savings bank account in his name represented by a book remaining in his possession should belong to his wife, or an assurance that it already belonged to her, can in neither case be taken to evidence or effectuate the delivery necessary to a valid gift. In re Miller, 119 N. Y. Supp. 52, 55, 64 Misc. Rep. 232.

Where title to personal property is retained by the seller by attaching a draft for the purchase price to a bill of lading drawn to his own order, notice to be given the buyer, there is no "delivery" until after payment. Dilman Bros. v. Patterson Produce &

Commission Co., 58 S. E. 365, 366, 2 Ga. App. 213.

The first and fifth clauses of a contract for the sale of coal provided for delivery on the coal company's docks f. o. b. cars, prior loss to fall on the seller, to be paid for according to weights then determined, at a specified price per ton. The contract also required certain acts by the seller or by both buyer and seller jointly, creating the physical competency of the seller to perform. The second clause specified the time of accumulation of the coal and storage on the dock, and for inspection at the mine or elsewhere. A further paragraph provided for correction of weights applicable only to car weights after delivery at the dock, and the fourth clause required separation on the dock of the coal from which final deliveries were to be made, the last clause declaring that, if the seller should fail to deliver on the docks the full amount of coal of the quality provided for before the close of navigation, the railroad company might on 30 days' notice require other deliveries. Held, that the words "deliver" or "delivery," as used in the last clause, did not mean a final delivery, but a delivery as mentioned in the first clause, and that title to the coal did not pass to the railroad under the contract until final delivery f. o. b. on the cars at the dock. State ex rel. Pittsburgh Coal Co. v. Patterson, 120 N. W. 227, 230, 138 Wis. 475.

The word "deliver," in Rev. St. 1895, arts. 4574, 4575, which provide that a railroad company which refuses to transport and "deliver," without discrimination, tonnage, etc., destined to any point on or over the lines of any connecting line, shall be guilty of unjust discrimination, means more than physical delivery. A shipper at a station, having no freight agent, made out bills of lading routing car loads of lumber over a specified connecting line, and his wishes were known by the railroad. The conductor, who accepted the bills, erased, at the instance of the company, from the bill of lading such routing, and routed the goods over another line, by which they would secure a longer haul. The cars were placed on the track of the specified connecting line, and were in the "physical possession" of such line, but, by reason of a threat of the initial carrier that they would divert all its shipments from that line unless they followed the railroad's routing, such connecting line routed the lumber as fixed by the railroad, though it knew of the wishes of the shipper. Held, that the fact that the shipment was delivered to the designated connecting carrier, but not controlled and routed on its own line because of the action of the initial carrier, was refusal by the initial carrier to "deliver" without discrimination. Thompson v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas, 126 S. W. 257, 108 Tex. 372.

In a charter party, clauses as to "delivery," even as against any parol evidence, simply mean that the ship is turned over for the purpose of the charter. Callahan v. Munson S. S. Co., 130 N. Y. Supp. 869, 870, 71 Misc. Rep. 525. The word "deliver" in a charter party binding the charterer to "deliver" the vessel in port of destination to the owner, etc., is not inconsistent with a contract of affreightment merely. Grimberg v. Columbia Packers' Ass'n, 83 Pac. 194, 195, 47 Or. 257, 114 Am. St. Rep. 927, 8 Ann. Cas. 491.

Where a ship in response to the directions of the charterer put in at a given port and remained there to coal, there was a "delivery" within the terms of the charter party, providing for delivery at that port, even though the crowded condition of the dock prevented the ship from being coaled for several days. Anderson v. Bowring & Co., 197 Fed. 675, 676.

In an action against an administratrix to compel an accounting, a plea that defendant had "delivered and surrendered all assets in her hands as provided by law" is to be construed as meaning that she had delivered the assets to the legatees, or to the probate judge for their benefit. Odom v. Moore, 41 South. 162, 164, 147 Ala. 567.

A telephone company does not "deliver" a message in the ordinary acceptance of that word. It merely furnishes to the patron facilities for carrying on a conversation at long distance. Southern Tel. Co. v. King, 146 S. W. 489, 490, 491, 103 Ark. 160, 89 L. R. A. (N. S.) 402 (citing Northwestern Tel. Exch. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 79 N. W. 315, 76 Minn. 334).

A delivery to one mortgagee of chattels taken out of the legal rightful possession of another mortgagee by the joint wrongful act of the first mortgagee and the mortgagor is not a "delivery" within Rev. Laws, c. 198, § 1. Keepers v. Flettman, 100 N. E. 333, 334, 213 Mass. 210.

As either actual or constructive

It is not necessary that there should be a manual "delivery" of a deed to make it effectual. A constructive delivery, or in other words acts showing an intention on the part of the grantor that the deed shall be considered as completely executed, and the title transferred, is sufficient. Kelsa v. Graves, 68 Pac. 607, 608, 64 Kan. 777. Whether the delivery is so far completed as to pass the title is a question of fact, rather than of law, depending largely upon the intent of the grantor to vest the estate in the grantee. Chastek v. Souba, 101 N. W. 618, 619, 93 Minn. 418; Matson v. Johnson, 93 Pac. 324, 325, 48 Wash. 253, 125 Am. St. Rep. 924.

"Delivery" of a deed may be made by acts alone (that is, by doing something and saying nothing), or by words alone (that is, by saying something and doing nothing), or it may be delivered by both acts and words. It must, however, be delivered by something answering to the one or the other, or both, and with the intent thereby to give effect to the deed. Elliott v. Murray, 80 N. E. 77, 79, 225 Ill. 107 (citing Rountree v. Smith, 38 N. E. 680, 152 Ill. 493).

The acts necessary to constitute "delivery" within Mills' Ann. St. § 2027, providing that every sale of goods and chattels, unless accompanied by an immediate delivery and by an actual and continued change of possession, is presumptively fraudulent as against creditors of the seller or subsequent purchasers in good faith, are dependent on the nature and situation of the property, and, where the property does not reasonably admit of an actual delivery, it is sufficient if the buyer assume the control and dominion of the property so as to indicate to all concerned a change of ownership. J. W. Hugus & Co. v. Hardenburg, 76 Pac. 543, 545, 19 Colo. App. 464 (citing Cook v. Mann, 6 Colo. 21).

Actual manual delivery, when essential

"Delivery," within Civ. Code, § 1147, making a delivery essential to the validity of a gift, must be according to the nature of the thing. It must be an actual delivery, so far as the subject is capable of delivery. It must be secundum subjectam materiam, and be the true and effectual way of obtaining the command and dominion of the subject. Driscoll v. Driscoll, 77 Pac. 471, 473, 143 Cal. 528.

Acceptance implied

To constitute delivery, there must not only be a parting with control of the deed by the grantor, with present intention that it shall operate as a conveyance of land, but there must likewise be an acceptance, either by the grantee or by some one for him. Smith v. Moore, 62 S. E. 892, 897, 149 N. O. 185; McCune v. Goodwillie, 102 S. W. 997, 1006, 204 Mo. 306.

There was a "delivery and acceptance of a part of the goods" within the statute of frauds, where after the terms of the sale of coal were agreed upon, the seller requested the buyer to confirm their agreement in writing, and the buyer wrote the seller the next day confirming the contract, stating the price and other terms, and within six days thereafter the seller delivered 560 tons of the coal to the buyer, who paid for it. 2 Birds-eye's Rev. St. (3d Ed.) p. 2634; Thedford v. Herbert, 87 N. E. 798, 799, 195 N. Y. 63.

Plaintiff contracted with a transfer company to deliver his trunk at a depot. The transfer company's servant placed the trunk in the entrance of the baggage room of the depot company unchecked, without calling it to the attention of any agent of such company, or advising anyone to whom the trunk belonged. Thereafter another person mistook the trunk for his own and had it checked out. Held, that the mere placing of the trunk in the baggage room was not a "delivery" to the depot company, and that such company was therefore not liable for its loss. Gregory v. Webb, 89 S. W. 1109, 1111, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 360.

Placing of a car by one carrier on a transfer track maintained by it was not a delivery of the car to defendant road until the car was actually accepted by the train crew of defendant, whose duty it was to carry it to the place to which the car was destined. Seaboard Air Line Ry. v. Friedman, 57 S. E. 778, 779, 128 Ga. 316.

Acceptance by other than grantee

The delivery of a deed by the grantor to a third person, to be held by him and delivered to grantee upon grantor's death, is a valid delivery where there is no reservation by grantor of any control over the deed, though grantee has not empowered such third person to act for him. Rowley v. Bowyer, 71 Atl. 398, 399, 75 N. J. Eq. 80.

The delivery of a check as a gift causa mortis to a person other than the donee, but for his use and benefit, and with instructions to deliver the same to the donee, is a sufficient delivery to pass title, though it does not reach the hands of the donee until after the donor's death. Varley v. Sims, 111 N. W. 269, 271, 100 Minn. 331, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 828, 117 Am. St. Rep. 694, 10 Ann. Cas. 473.

Where decedent, an old bachelor of means, caused money to be deposited in a savings bank to the credit of his two sisters, the delivery to the bank was a delivery to them, and the donation had full effect eo instante. Succession of Zacharie, 43 South. 988, 990, 119 La. 150.

Change of possession implied

A written agreement by the vendor to "deliver" a ranch by a specified date obliges him to turn over the actual physical possession. Pierce v. Edwards, 89 Pac. 600, 601, 150 Cal. 650.

The term "delivered," when used in a contract of sale, means a transfer sufficient to give the seller an action for goods sold and delivered, or at least a complete voluntary transfer of the possession of goods from one to another. Under an agreement that, if plaintiff secured for defendant a contract for the sale of certain carriages, he should, when they were delivered, receive a commission, the defendant's offer of delivery and the buyer's refusal of acceptance will not support an action for the commission, unless there was an actual transfer of possession, or the buyer's refusal was caused by defendant's fault. Stanley v. Dryer, 127 N. Y. Supp. 468, 469, 70 Misc. Rep. 561.

A declaration alleged that plaintiff was in the employ of R.; that R. had contracted with defendants to deliver to them stone for building purposes on certain premises within the control of defendants; that, while in the employ of R. and as his servant, in the execution of the contract with defendants, plaintiff with a team delivered loads of stone on the premises; that it was the duty of defendants to provide for R. and his servants a safe and suitable way for delivery of the stone on the premises within their control, but defendants negligently failed to do so, but furnished plaintiff an unsafe, dangerous, and defective way, whereby plaintiff was injured. Held, that the word "delivery" as used in the declaration should not be construed in a narrow or technical sense, and, when read in connection with the other language of the declaration, imported a transfer of possession of the stone from R., through the agency of plaintiff to defendants with the consent of the latter, so that plaintiff was rightfully on their premises in making such transfer and entitled to a reasonably safe place to make the delivery, or a reasonable opportunity to determine for himself whether he would undertake to make the delivery under the circumstances. Power v. Beattie, 80 N. E. 606, 607, 194 Mass. 170.

To constitute a good "delivery" of policies, it is not necessary that they should have been in the actual possession of the insured. Hardy v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 70 S. E. 828, 832, 154 N. C. 430.

Change of title implied

To constitute "delivery of a deed," it must clearly appear that it was the intention of the grantor that the deed should pass the title at the time, and that he should lose all control over it. Brumby v. Jones, 141 Fed. 318, 323, 72 C. C. A. 466 (quoting and adopting definition in Gould v. Day, 94 U. S. 405, 24 L. Ed. 232).

Delivery by mail or to carrier

A copy of a motion for new trial is "delivered" to the adverse party when deposited in the mails addressed to him, within Superior Court Rule 41, which provides that no motion for a new trial shall be sustained unless within three days after verdict counsel of the complaining party shall file a motion for a new trial and cause a copy thereof to be "delivered to the adverse counsel on the day the same is filed or within such further time as the court may allow," in view of rule 27, which provides that such notice shall be served by delivering the same personally, or depositing it in the post office, postage prepaid. Gloucester Mut. Fishing Ins. Co. v. Hall, 96 N. E. 679, 680, 210 Mass. 332, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 348.

Delivery of goods to a carrier for transportation to the buyer thereof, in the absence of any agreement as to place of delivery, is "delivery" to the buyer. Burns v. Goddard, 51 S. E. 915, 916, 72 S. C. 355.

A delivery of intoxicating liquors to an express company in wet territory for carriage to the consignee in dry territory is not a "delivery" within Local Option Law (Laws 1907, p. 302) § 13, declaring unlawful the giving away or delivery of intoxicating liquor for the purpose of evading the law in anti-saloon territory. People v. Young, 86 N. E. 589, 591, 237 Ill. 196.

Where a contract of sale specified that "delivery" should be made to a certain railway, which ran through two places, where the sellers maintained their business office and factory, respectively, delivery to the railway at the factory, instead of at the place where the sellers' business office was located, constituted a sufficient delivery under the contract. Baird Bros. v. Walter Pratt & Co., 89 S. W. 648, 652, 6 Ind. T. 38.

Execution as importing

See Execute.

Form of ceremony

A "delivery" of a deed may be by acts without words, or words without acts; the only requirement being that the evidence should show an intention of the grantor that the deed shall become operative and effectual. Noble v. Fickes, 82 N. E. 950, 954, 230 Ill. 594, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1203, 12 Ann. Cas. 282.

No particular form or ceremony is necessary to constitute a "delivery" of a deed. It may be by acts without words, or by words without acts, or both. Anything which clearly manifests the intention of the grantor and the person to whom it is delivered that the deed shall presently become operative and effectual, and that the grantor loses all control over it, and that by it the grantee is to become possessed of the estate, constitutes a sufficient "delivery." Baker v. Hall, 73 N. E. 351, 353, 214 Ill. 364; Webster v. Sherman, 84 Pac. 878, 881, 33 Mont. 448 (quoting Cady v. Zimmerman, 50 Pac. 553, 20 Mont. 225). Where a husband and wife executed a deed conveying her realty, and the husband and wife agreed that there should be no actual delivery of it to the grantee until after the wife's death, but there was nothing to show that the grantee knew of the understanding, and the deed was actually delivered and recorded during the lifetime of the wife, it was held that the title passed as against the husband. Blake v. Ogden, 79 N. E. 68, 69, 223 Ill. 204.

An owner of a bond executed a formal assignment of it, and delivered the bond and assignment to the assignee, when it was put in the owner's safety deposit box for safe-keeping, marked as the property of the assignee, who thereafter took the bond from the box and kept it in her own box for a while, when it was returned to the owner's box, where it remained until the latter's death. Held, that there was a sufficient "delivery" with intent to pass title to constitute a valid gift of the bond inter vivos. Bone v. Holmes, 81 N. E. 290, 291, 195 Mass. 495.

As give

"Deliver" and "give" may be treated as synonymous.—Southern Exp. Co. v. State, 58 S. E. 67, 69, 1 Ga. App. 700.

Where the owner of a mercantile business decided to incorporate the same, and, on doing so, one-third of the stock was issued to an employé who had formerly been given one-fourth of the profits of the business in lieu of a salary, the owner taking the employé's notes for the stock and retaining the stock as security, but subsequently speaking of the employé's valuable services, and declaring his intention to give him the stock, and delivering the certificate to him and tearing up the notes, there is a sufficient delivery of the subject-matter to constitute a gift inter vivos. Denunzio's Receiver v. Scholtz, 77 S. W. 715, 716, 117 Ky. 182, 4 Ann. Cas. 529.

As give up for safe-keeping

A "delivery" of a deed is ineffective to pass title, where the grantor does not absolutely divest himself of control over it, or if it is not actually delivered, but is to become effective only upon the grantor's death, there is no valid delivery. Intent to give effect to the deed is essential to a valid delivery, and giving the grantee possession thereof for safe-keeping would not pass title. Benner v. Bailey, 84 N. E. 638, 639, 234 Ill. 79.

Intent

Intention is the controlling element which determines whether a deed has been delivered; a manual transfer from the grantor to the grantee not being essential, and not being sufficient in the absence of an intention to pass title. Hoyt v. Northup, 100 N. E. 164, 165, 256 Ill. 604.

Delivery is consummated when the grantor, by act, word, or both, parts with domination over the instrument, with intent to make it operative, which is accepted by grantee, and such intent is of the essence thereof. Chambers v. Chambers, 127 S. W. 86, 90, 227 Mo. 262, 137 Am. St. Rep. 567. Mere manual transition of an instrument is one thing; "delivery" thereof, as an element of contractual obligation, is another. The former without mutual intent to give validity to the paper, but a mutual intent to the contrary, does not constitute the latter. Carpenter v. Carpenter, 124 N. W. 488, 489, 141 Wis. 544.

A "delivery" of a deed is not effective without an intent on the part of the grantor that it is to be delivered, accompanied by an act to carry out such intent. Franklin Ins. Co. v. Feist, 68 N. E. 188, 190, 31 Ind. App.

390 (citing German Ins. Co. of Freeport v. Gibe, 44 N. E. 490, 162 Ill. 251; Osborne v. Eslinger, 58 N. E. 439; 155 Ind. 357, 80 Am. St. Rep. 240; Fifer v. Rachels, 62 N. E. 68, 27 Ind. App. 654). The mere placing of a deed in the hands of the grantee does not conclusively establish a "delivery" thereof, within the legal meaning of that word. Elliott v. Murray, 80 N. E. 77, 79, 225 Ill. 107 (citing Hollenbeck v. Hollenbeck, 57 N. E. 36, 185 Ill. 101, 103); Oswald v. Caldwell, 80 N. E. 181, 134, 225 Ill. 224; Ward v. Conklin, 83 N. E. 1058, 1060, 232 Ill. 553.

To constitute "delivery of a deed," it is not sufficient that there be a mere delivery of its possession, but the act must be accompanied with intent that the deed shall become operative as such. Melvin v. Melvin, 97 Pac. 696, 698, 8 Cal. App. 684 (citing Kenney v. Parks, 57 Pac. 772, 125 Cal. 146); Baker v. Hall, 73 N. E. 351, 353, 214 Ill. 364; In re Bell's Estate, 130 N. W. 798, 799, 150 Iowa, 725; Schlicher v. Keeler, 61 Atl. 434, 435, 67 N. J. Eq. 635. There must be an intention to part with control over it, and to place it under the power of the grantee, or some one for his use. New v. Germania Fire Ins. Co. (Ind.) 82 N. E. 1005, 1006; Indiana Trust Co. v. Byram, 72 N. E. 670, 672, 36 Ind. App. 6 (citing Berry v. Anderson, 22 Ind. 36; Dearmond v. Dearmond, 10 Ind. 191; Vaughan v. Godman, 94 Ind. 191); Corr v. Martin, 77 N. E. 870, 871, 37 Ind. App. 655.

What is a "delivery" of a deed depends on the intention of the grantor, and any disposal of a deed, accompanied by acts, words, or circumstances which clearly indicate that the grantor intends that it shall take effect as a conveyance, is a sufficient delivery. Russell v. May, 90 S. W. 617, 618, 77 Ark. 89; Aber v. Twichell, 116 N. W. 95, 96, 17 N. D. 229; Sappingfield v. King (Or.) 89 Pac. 142, 143, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1066. The real test is: Did the grantor by his acts or words, or both, intend to divest himself of title? If so, the deed is delivered. Young v. McWilliams, 89 Pac. 12, 15, 75 Kan. 248 (citing Lathmer v. Lathmer, 51 N. E. 548, 174 Ill. 418, 428; Albrecht v. Albrecht, 96 N. W. 1087, 121 Iowa, 521, 524).

The manual deposit of a deed with a third person, to receive and hold for the grantee, with intent thereby to give such paper effect as a deed, and to place the same beyond the custody and control of the grantor, will give such deed validity and efficacy as against the grantor, although some condition is imposed precedent to final delivery to the grantee which may serve to prevent vesting of actual title in him meanwhile. There must be physical tradition of the deed out of the grantor's possession, and there must be the intent to place it out of his control for the benefit of the grantee, in order to constitute delivery. Kittoe v. Willey, 99 N. W. 337, 121 Wis. 548.

There was no "delivery" of a deed, where the owner of a government homestead, to ostensibly divest himself of title in furtherance of a design to pre-empt other public land signed, acknowledged and recorded the deed which ran to his brother without the latter's knowledge, with no intention to deliver it, and where the grantor kept the deed in his own hands and retained possession of the homestead. McGuire v. Clark, 122 N. W. 675, 676, 85 Neb. 102, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 873.

"Delivery of a deed" is the consummation of the act, the completion of the contract, and in order to its accomplishment there must be a meeting of the minds of the parties of the purpose." Where a quitclaim deed, not intended to pass title, was given by a mother to her son and never recorded but immediately returned to secure the son's promise to support her, there was not a legal delivery sufficient to pass title. Rausch v. Michel, 91 S. W. 99, 104, 192 Mo. 293 (quoting and adopting the definition in McNear v. Williamson, 66 S. W. 190, 166 Mo. 367).

But there was delivery, when a grantor, executing a deed conveying land to take effect at his death, delivered the same to a third person, not for safe-keeping, but with the intention of parting with all control over it, and with instructions to deliver the deed to the grantee after the grantor's death and on payment of a specified sum to a third person, though the grantee died before the grantor. Held to show a delivery of the deed. McCurry v. McCurry (Tex.) 95 S. W. 35, 36.

The requisites of a "delivery" of an insurance policy are: (1) An intention on the part of the person executing the policy to give it legal effect as a completed instrument; (2) the evidencing of the intention by some word or act indicating that the insurer has put the instrument beyond his legal control, though not necessarily beyond his physical control; and (3) acquiescence by the insured in such intention. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Whitman, 79 N. E. 459, 461, 75 Ohio St. 312, 9 Ann. Cas. 218 (citing Vance, Ins. 169).

Whether there has been a "delivery" of a bond depends upon the intent of the obligor to perfect the instrument and make it at once the absolute property of the obligee, and it may be delivered by words without acts, by acts without words, or by both. Ehrlich v. Sklamberg, 119 N. X. Supp. 337, 339, 65 Misc. Rep. 5.

To constitute a "delivery" of a note, it must appear that the maker in some way evinced an intention to make it an enforceable obligation against himself according to its terms by surrendering control over it and intentionally placing it under the power of the payee or of some third person for his use. Digan v. Mandel, 79 N. E. 899, 901, 167 Ind. 586, 119 Am. St. Rep. 515 (quoting Purviance v. Jones, 21 N. E. 1099, 120 Ind. 162, 16 Am. St. Rep. 319).

Notice

Where a bankrupt, two years prior to adjudication, assigned his equity of redemption in certain pledged securities, and notified the pledgee of such assignment, such notice was equivalent to a "delivery" and a taking possession thereof by the assignee within the provisions of the bankruptcy act for notice to creditors of transfers, etc. In re Bird, 180 Fed. 229, 232.

Parting with dominion or control over implied

To constitute "delivery" of a deed, the grantor must part with all dominion, power, and control over it and must retain no right to reclaim or recall it. Stevens v. Stevens, 99 N. E. 917, 918, 256 Ill. 140.

"Retention by the grantor of power of control over the papers in the possession of a depositary deprives the manual tradition of effect as a delivery. The papers are still held by the latter merely as agent for the former, and therefore, in legal effect, by him." Ward v. Russell, 98 N. W. 939, 940, 121 Wis. 77.

To constitute a valid "delivery," a deed must pass from the possession and control of the grantor to that of the grantee, or to some one for his use and benefit, with the intent, at the time, that the title shall pass, or the instrument become effective as a conveyance. Gaylord v. Gaylord, 68 S. E. 1028, 1033, 150 N. C. 222. The "delivery" is consummated when the instrument has passed from the grantor to the grantee or some third person for his use without right of recall. The test of delivery is the relinquishment by the grantor of the custody or control of the deed. When he has formally executed it and acknowledged it and has delivered it unconditionally to the grantee or one acting for him, the transfer is completed and the title has passed. Clark v. Creswell, 78 Atl. 579, 580, 112 Md. 839, 21 Ann. Cas. 338.

The "delivery" of a deed implies a parting with the possession and a surrender of authority over it by the grantor, at the time, and no delivery, either absolute or conditional, can be made without parting at the time with the possession and with all power and control over it by the grantor for the benefit of the grantee. The delivery of a deed is as essential to the passing of the title to the land described in it as is the signing of it or the acknowledgment. It is the final act, without which all other formalities are ineffectual. To constitute a delivery, the grantor must part with the legal possession of the deed and of all right to retain it. The present and future dominion over the deed must pass from the grantor. Cassidy v. Holland, 130 N. W. 771, 773, 27 S. D. 287; Franklin v. Killilea, 104 N. W. 993, 996, 126 Wis. 88.

"Delivery" of a deed is accomplished by the grantor voluntarily passing it to the grantee, or handing it to some person for him, or by the grantor doing or saying something by means of which he discloses an unmistakable purpose to part with all control over the instrument and puts it out of his power to regain possession thereof. Pierson v. Fisher, 85 Pac. 621, 624, 48 Or. 223.

Where the grantor deposits a deed with a third person to be turned over on his death to the grantee, it constitutes a good "delivery" if he thereby surrenders all control over it. Young v. McWilliams, 89 Pac. 12, 13, 75 Kan. 243 (citing 13 Cyc. p. 569). But he must absolutely divest himself of all control over the same, and if he retains any custody or control over it, or if it is not actually delivered, but is to become effective only upon the grantor's death, there is no valid delivery. Benner v. Bailey, 84 N. E. 638, 639, 234 Ill. 79; Emmons v. Harding, 70 N. E. 142, 145, 162 Ind. 154. Where the grantor gives the deed to a third person with a direction to take and keep it, and, if the grantor ever calls for it, to deliver it to the grantee, and the grantor dies without more being done, there is no delivery as there would have been had the grantor parted with control of the deed, and given an unqualified direction that it be delivered, though after his death. Fortune v. Hunt, 63 S. E. 82, 83, 149 N. C. 358. In a suit to restore a deed it appeared that complainant and wife purchased a farm, the title being taken in the wife's name, and resided thereon up to the time of the wife's death. About ten years before the wife died she executed a deed of the farm to her husband, and gave it to him, to be destroyed if she survived him, and to be recorded only in case she did not. The husband survived the wife, but could not find the deed. Held sufficient to show that the deed had been executed and delivered, the fact that the grantor did not reserve the right to control the deed during the lifetime of her husband and delivered possession thereof to him operating as a "delivery" conveying the title in present. Dyer v. Skadan, 87 N. W. 277, 278, 128 Mich. 348, 92 Am. St. Rep. 461.

There can be no "delivery" of a deed unless the deed passes out of and beyond the control of the grantor, and into the actual or constructive control of the grantee. So long as the grantor retains control or the power to recall the possession of the paper, it cannot be said to have been delivered. The custody of the deed may remain with the grantor, provided the control or power to recall it has passed from him. Smith v. Moore (N. C.) 62 S. E. 893, 897 (citing Devlin, Deeds, § 278 et seq.); Taylor v. Selter, 65 N. E. 433, 435, 199 Ill. 555; Bogan v. Swearingen, 65 N. E. 426, 427, 199 Ill. 454; Noble v. Tipton, 76 N. E. 151, 152, 219 Ill. 182, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 645 (citing Hawes v. Hawes, 53 N. E. 78, 177 Ill. 469; Spacy v. Ritter, 73 N. E. 447, 214 Ill. 266). Hence where deeds were delivered to and held by one of the grantees, who was the grantor's man of business, subject to the grantor's control, revocation, or alteration while she lived, and the other grantee knew nothing of their existence until after the death of the grantor, there was no "delivery" of the deeds. Joslin v. Goddard, 72 N. E. 948, 949, 187 Mass. 165.

While "delivery" of a deed may be accomplished by a word or act, or by both, by which a grantor expresses a present intention to divest himself of title to property in an appropriate deed, the conduct of the grantor must be such as to divest himself of the title and all other control over the document purporting to convey it. Where the grantor sealed a deed in an envelope, and gave it to one of the grantees, with the request that she keep it for him until he called for it, and neither of the grantees knew the contents of the envelope after the grantor's death, there was no "delivery" of the deed. Sutton v. Gibson, 84 S. W. 835, 836, 119 Ky. 422 (citing Hudson v. Redford [Ky.] 67 S. W. 35).

The test of what constitutes a "delivery" of a gift is that the transfer must be such that, in conjunction with the donative intention, it completely strips the donor of the dominion of the thing given whether it were a tangible chattel or a chose in action. Parker v. Copland, 64 Atl. 129, 130, 70 N. J. Eq. 685 (quoting and adopting definition in Cook v. Lum, 26 Atl. 803, 55 N. J. Law, 373). If a donor with the clearly expressed intention of making a gift make an actual "delivery" into the hands of the donee, the fact that the donor has lawful access to the depository of the thing given does not invalidate the gift, if the donee has also the same access to said depository, and has such control over the thing given that he may remove it at any time he chooses to do so. Beaumont v. Beaumont, 152 Fed. 55, 59, 81 C. C. A. 251 (citing Corle v. Monkhouse, 25 Atl. 157, 50 N. J. Eq. 537, 546; Matthews v. Hoagland, 21 Atl. 1054, 48 N. J. Eq. 455, 485; Industrial Trust Co. v. Scanlon, 58 Atl. 786, 26 R. I. 228, 3 Ann. Cas. 863; Dennin v. Hilton [N. J.] 50 Atl. 600).

Relative to the statute of frauds the "delivery" of possession necessarily implies a change of dominion and control over the property. Where a seller of hogs had agreed to deliver them at the stockyards of a certain railroad company and took them there, but no one was there to receive them and weigh them, there was no "delivery." Shelton v. Thompson, 70 S. W. 256, 257, 96 Mo. App. 327.

Where an instrument is given by one of the signers to the obligee named therein, not as a completed instrument, but subject to the signer's control, or upon an agreed condition, the person receiving it is a mere depository, there not being a technical delivery to him, so that where the principal on a suretyship obligation running to a corporation gave the obligation to the chairman of the board of directors to get another to sign it as surety, who had promised to do so, and told the chairman to return it to him after such other had signed it, so that it could be presented to the board of directors, but it was never signed by such other, and the chairman kept it until it was delivered to the receiver of the corporation to be sued on, there was no "delivery" of the obligation. Dunlap v. Willett, 69 S. E. 222, 224, 153 N. C. 317 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, pp. 1965, 1966).

Recording

The recording of a deed is presumptive evidence of its "delivery," and, being for the grantee's benefit, is presumptive evidence of acceptance thereof, though the presumptions are rebuttable. McCune v. Goodwillie, 102 S. W. 997, 1006, 204 Mo. 306; Hartman v. Thompson, 65 Atl. 117, 122, 104 Md. 389, 118 Am. St. Rep. 422, 10 Ann. Cas. 92 (quoting and adopting definition in Stewart v. Redditt, 3 Md. 79).

The presumption cannot be overcome by declarations by the grantor that the deed was not delivered. Dickey v. Norris, 65 Atl. 541, 216 Pa. 184.

Sale implied

The word "deliver," in a memorandum of an oral contract for the sale of chattels, subscribed by the seller only, which is in these words, "I hereby agree to deliver at Cable eight hundred bushels of No. 2 rye to B. Bros. on or before September 25, 1901," imports a sale and delivery of the rye, and is a sufficient memorandum to satisfy the statute of frauds. Bowers v. Whitney, 92 N. W. 540, 541, 88 Minn. 168.

A resolution by corporate directors authorizing the president and secretary to execute and deliver bonds to be issued authorizes the sale of such bonds; the word "delivery" frequently being used to mean the change of title as well as the change of possession of property. McCormick v. Unity Co., 87 N. E. 924, 927, 239 Ill. 306.

As used in an ordinance providing that any person who shall sell, give away, furnish, or cause to be furnished or delivered any intoxicating liquors on Sunday shall be fined, the word "delivered" implies other and more general meaning than the specific or particular words "sell" or "give away"; and one who, at the request of a saloonkeeper, procures liquor from the saloon, which they use together, cannot be fined, since the word "delivered" must be held to extend only to a disposition ejusdem generis with a sale or gift. Norris v. Oakman, 35 South. 450, 451, 138 Ala. 411.

Sealing and acknowledging

Reading, signing, and acknowledgment of a deed without reservation, as a general rule amounts to "delivery." Glade Coal Min. Co. v. Harris, 63 S. E. 873, 876, 65 W. Va. 152.

As set apart

The mere setting aside of goods sold under executory contract of sale is not a "delivery"; they must at least be placed in the power of the vendee. Gross v. Ajello, 116 N. Y. Supp. 380, 382, 132 App. Div. 25. And the setting apart of a certain quantity of lead in a warehouse on mining property is not a "delivery" under a general contract to deliver a certain quantity of lead f. o. b. at another place. American Metal Co. v. Daugherty, 102 S. W. 538, 541, 204 Mo. 71.

But there was a "delivery" of coffee valid against an execution creditor, where it was left with the seller to be roasted, was set apart in different piles from the other stock of the seller, on the front bag of each pile a tag was sewed giving plaintiff's name and address and the kind of coffee and the number of bags, and it was to be delivered to plaintiff when roasted as he should from time to time order, and plaintiff paid part cash and gave notes for the balance, which he subsequently paid. Riggs v. Bair, 62 Atl. 1086-1088, 213 Pa. 402.

As shipment

See Shipment.

Temporary surrender for examination

The fact that a grantee in a deed may, after the execution of the instrument, take it into his hands, does not, of itself, establish a "delivery." Elliott v. Murray, 80 N. E. 77, 79, 225 Ill. 107 (citing Oliver v. Oliver, 36 N. E. 955, 956, 149 Ill. 542, 547).

Transport distinguished

Transport distinguished, see Transport—Transportation.

Of freight

Where a railway company, engaged in switching cars over its switch tracks to and from the transfer tracks of other lines of road, for fixed system of charges, had adopted the custom of receiving loaded cars on its switching tracks, and undertaking to deliver them to the transfer tracks at other points, there was a sufficient delivery to it of certain cars where the shipper had loaded and sealed the cars and notified the carrier's agent of that fact, and directed him to move the cars out, which the agent agreed to do. Texarkana & Ft. S. Ry. Co. v. Rosebrook-Josey Grain Co., 114 S. W. 436, 439, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 156.

Of telegram

"Deliver," as applied to a telegram, means "transmit and deliver." Kirby v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 58 S. E. 10, 12, 77 S. O. 404, 122 Am. St. Rep. 590.

DELIVERED

As given, see Given.

DELIVERED GALVESTON

The term "delivered Galveston," contained in letters of the buyer and the seller of wheat under an oral contract stating that it was to be "delivered Galveston," cannot be construed as a matter of law to require delivery in elevators at Galveston, and, the testimony as to the terms of the oral contract being contradictory, the construction of the contract in that respect was for the jury. Cameron Mill & Elevator Co. v. Chas. F. Orthwein's Sons, 120 Fed. 463, 469, 56 C. C. A. 618.

DELIVERING CARRIER

The distinction between a "delivering carrier" and a "forwarding carrier" is that the latter term applies to all carriers who transport goods to the "delivering carrier" and the former to the carrier who actually delivers the goods at their destination. Brunk v. Ohio & K. R. Co., 105 S. W. 443, 444, 127 Ky. 804.

DELUSION

See Insane Delusion; Insane—Insanity; Paranoia.

A systematized "delusion" is one based on a false premise, pursued by a logical process of reasoning to an insane conclusion; there being one central delusion, around which other aberrations of the mind converge. One may be possessed of a delusion concerning one subject, and yet be of sound mind on all other subjects, according to the weight of modern authority. A delusion cannot be predicated upon any purely esoteric and abstract subject, for the reason that beliefs concerning such subjects are speculative, and could not be proved false. Taylor v. McClintock, 112 S. W. 405, 412, 414, 87 Ark. 243.

Mistake of fact

"A 'delusion' is a belief in a fact for which there is no foundation." In re Merriman's Appeal, 66 N. W. 372, 373, 108 Mich. 454.

A "delusion" is the mind's spontaneous conception and acceptance of that as a fact which has no real existence except in the imagination, and its persistent adherence to it against all evidence. "Delusion" arises from morbid internal impulse, and has no basis in reason. Taylor v. McClintock, 112 S. W. 405, 412, 413, 414, 87 Ark. 243 (quoting and adopting definition in 4 Words and Phrases 3644; Whart. & S. Med. Jur. §§ 10, 20; And. Law Dict. "Delusion"; Smith v. Smith, 25 Atl. 12, 48 N. J. Eq. 570).

If one persistently believes supposed facts which have no real existence except in his imagination and against all evidence and probability, and conducts himself, however logically, upon the assumption of their existence, he is, with reference to this subject, under a morbid "delusion," and a delusion in that sense is insanity. Johnson v. Johnson, 65 Atl. 918, 920, 105 Md. 81, 121 Am. St. Rep. 570; Taylor v. McClintock, 112 S. W. 405, 412-414, 87 Ark. 243.

A "delusion" of a testator which will render him of insufficient testamentary capacity to execute a will must be the spontaneous product of the subjective processes of a disordered intellect, inducing a belief without any support in extrinsic evidence; and a mere error in judgment upon proven or admitted facts does not constitute a "delusion," however much it may be at variance with the conclusion reached by unprejudiced minds from the same facts. Stevens v. Myers, 121 Pac. 484, 488, 62 Or. 372.

Unchangeable belief

A "delusion" which might incapacitate one from making a will is a conception of the existence of something extravagant which has no existence whatever, but of which the person entertaining it is incapable of becoming permanently disabused by argument, reason, or proof. All delusions are not insane delusions; the difference between the two species being that one is the product of the reason, the other a figment of the imagination. A will may be set aside because induced by an insane delusion existing at the time of its making. Buford v. Gruber, 122 S. W. 717, 721, 223 Mo. 231 (quoting and adopting 2 Words and Phrases, pp. 1971-1973; Knapp v. Trust Co., 98 S. W. 70, 199 Mo. 668; Benoist v. Murrin, 58 Mo. 307).

A "delusion" is "a diseased state of mind in which a person believes things to exist, which exist only, or, in the degree they are conceived of, only in their own imaginations, with a persuasion so fixed and firm that neither evidence nor argument can convince them to the contrary." A person has a "delusion" who believes that a certain state of affairs exists which in fact does not and which can only be accounted for as the result of a perverted imagination without cause or evidence. Where a testator during nearly all his married life entertained a mistaken belief founded upon no sufficient grounds in regard to the fidelity of his wife, he was under a "delusion" such as would void a devise of his property to others on account thereof. In re Jenkins' Will, 80 N. Y. Supp. 664, 665, 39 Misc. Rep. 618 (quoting and adopting definition in Bouv. Law Dict. Citing In re Lapham's Will, 44 N. Y. Supp. 90, 19 Misc. Rep. 77; American Seamen's Friend Soc. v. Hopper, 33 N. Y. 624; Riggs v. American Tract Soc., 95 N. Y. 503).

DEMAND

See Just and Reasonable Demand; On Demand; Statement of Demand; Written Demand.

After demand, see After.

Other demand, see Other.

A "demand" is a requisition or request to do a particular thing specified, under a claim of right on the part of the person making the request. Penn Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Maner, 109 S. W. 1064, 1088, 101 Tex. 553. This is the sense in which the word is used in Rev. St. 1899, § 3705, which provides for interest "on accounts after they become due and demand of payment is made." The word "demand" need not be used in making such a legal request; but it is sufficient if any words are used which are understood by both parties to be a demand, or existence of a demand may be shown by circumstantial evidence or inferred from acts and declarations of the parties proven by direct evidence. Babbitt v. Chicago & A. Ry. Co., 130 S. W. 364, 367, 149 Mo. App. 439.

The commencement of an action for money is a "demand" therefor. Beekman Lbr. Co. v. Acme Harvester Co., 114 S. W. 1087, 1097, 215 Mo. 221. The bringing by a trustee in bankruptcy of an action to recover a sum alleged to have been paid by the bankrupt to a creditor as a preference is a demand which starts the running of interest on the claim. Kaufman v. Tredway, 25 Sup. Ct. 33, 34, 195 U. S. 271, 49 L. Ed. 190.

Where a broker who was carrying stocks for a customer which he had bought on margin made a general assignment, and a few days afterwards the customer wrote him asking the amount of his account, which he did not know, and stating that he would remit the amount to defendant for the stocks, and no action was taken by the broker or assignee on such letter, the stocks having been previously pledged by the broker and sold by the pledgee, and the broker was subsequently adjudged a bankrupt, the letter constituted a "demand," failure to comply with which was a breach of the contract and gave the customer an immediate right of action. In re Swift, 114 Fed. 947, 949.

The word "demand" in Laws 1898, No. 25, § 1, which permits a child residing in the vicinity of a school in an adjoining town, who can conveniently be better accommodated in such school, to demand the privileges of the school, and the tuition charged to be paid from the school money in the town in which the pupil resides, implies that the demand is to be made to some person or board, and does not mean the assertion by a pupil of an absolute right to attend another school, but contemplates an application to the board which they should consider. Town of Wallingford v. Town of Clarendon, 69 Atl. 734, 735, 81 Vt. 245.

The word "demand," in St. 1893, § 519, 511, providing that, if freight addressed to a place beyond the usual route of the carrier first receiving it is injured or lost, he must within a reasonable time after "demand" give satisfactory proof to the consignor that the loss or injury did not occur while it was in his charge, or he will be himself liable therefor, etc., does not mean a "demand" for payment for a loss, and a shipper is entitled to full and complete information regarding the shipment, so far as known to the first carrier, which could be used by such carrier in defending an action for damages. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. McGivney, 91 Pac. 693, 694, 19 Okl. 361.

Where a custom prevailed at defendant's mine, by which a miner was required to deposit a written demand for props in a box provided by defendant for that purpose, a miner's deposit of a signed order for props in the box was a sufficient "demand" for them, within Mines Act, § 16, providing that it shall be the duty of a mine manager to furnish a sufficient supply of props when demanded. Brazil Block Coal Co. v. Hotel, 192 Fed. 108, 110, 112 C. C. A. 448.

As actual demand

In the civil courts constructive demands may be, and are, recognized, but not so in a criminal court in the prosecution for an offense having as one of its statutory ingredients a refusal to pay on demand. A demand there means actual demand. Where a clerk of court held public funds collected under an agreement with the county pending a judicial determination as to whether he or the county was entitled to them, and the only demand made upon him was prior to the conclusion of the suit in the civil court in favor of the county, he could not be convicted of failure to pay over the same. Commonwealth v. Shoener, 61 Atl. 1093, 1095, 212 Pa. 527.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 3071, imposing a penalty for failure of an insurance company to pay a policy within a specified time when demand for payment has been made, does not authorize recovery unless there is a specific demand, and evidence of the furnishing of proofs of death, and of a statement by insured to the policy holder that it would not pay, and the bringing of suit on the policy, is insufficient. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Ford (Tex.) 130 S. W. 769, 778.

As appearance

See Appearance.

Debt due indicated

In the case of a demand note, the word "demand" is not to be treated as a part of the contract, but is used to show that the debt is due. Van Vliet v. Kanter, 119 N. Y. Supp. 187, 188, 65 Misc. Rep. 48 (citing McMullen v. Rafferty, 89 N. Y. 459).

It is well established that a promissory note payable on "demand" is due at once, and no demand is necessary before suit; the suit itself being a sufficient demand. Ex parte Howitz, 84 Pac. 229, 230, 2 Cal. App. 752.

DEMAND (Legal Obligation)

See Debt or Demand; Existing Demand. Liquidated demand, see Liquidated. State demand, see State.

Bouvier defines "demand" as a claim, a legal obligation, a word of art of an extent greater in its significance than any other word except "claim." Webster defines it as a thing or amount claimed to be due. It is broad enough to take in all claims demandable or solvable in money. Burns v. Reeves, 28 South. 554, 557, 127 Ala. 127.

The term "demand" may be used to indicate the amount that plaintiff could recover on the face of the summons, in the absence of defense. Riddle v. Bridgewater Milling Co., 64 S. E. 782, 783, 150 N. C. 689.

"Demand" is properly used in reference to a cause of action. Injury to land in that a county unlawfully entered thereon and constructed a road is a "demand" within a statute requiring all demands against a county to be presented to the county commissioners before the action shall be maintainable thereon. Henry v. Board of Com'rs of San Miguel County, Colo., 92 Pac. 697, 41 Colo. 267.

Where a lease for one year provided that the rent should be payable monthly, and suit was brought in a justice court before the end of the term for the installments of rent then due under the lease, the installments subsequently to become due were not a demand existing at the time of commencing that suit within 2 Mills' Ann. St. § 2644, providing that in suits commenced in justice court each party shall bring forward all his demands existing at the time of commencing the suit which are of such a nature as to be consolidated into one action or defense, and on failing to do so he shall be barred from suing for the demand not so consolidated. Ourtis v. Hammond, 95 Pac. 921, 922, 43 Colo. 277.

A statute or charter requiring "demands" against a city to be presented to the city council for rejection or allowance, or to be verified, does not apply to claims for damages for personal injuries. Gallamore v. Olympia, 75 Pac. 978, 979, 34 Wash. 379 (citing Sutton v. City of Snohomish, 11 Wash. 24, 39 Pac. 273, 48 Am. St. Rep. 847); Hill v. City of Fond du Lac, 14 N. W. 25, 26, 56 Wis. 242.

Claim distinguished

The words "demand" and "claim" are often interchangeable, and are taken as synonymous. But "demand" is not used in its broadest sense as equivalent with "claims" in Greater New York Charter, § 101, Laws 1901, p. 426, c. 466, providing that interest shall cease to run on sums awarded as damages six months after the date of the confirmation of the report, unless within that time demand therefor be made on the controller. It refers to a request made by the payee for money which has theretofore been legally determined as then payable to him, and which is specifically held for payment to him by the city. In re City of New York, 86 N. Y. Supp. 1035, 1038, 91 App. Div. 532.

A "demand" is a peremptory claim to a thing of right. It differs from a claim in that it presupposes that there is no defense or doubt about the question of right. "Demand" will not admit of delay, while "claim" implies that the right is or may be doubtful, and that negotiations shall be had to determine the same. A statement by an owner of land to the adjacent owner after the parties had agreed on a boundary line that he was not satisfied and would like to have the thing settled peaceably is not a "demand" for any part of the land in dispute essential to the maintenance of ejectment therefor. Walborn v. Zimmerling, 89 N. E. 517, 520, 46 Ind. App. 98.

The terms "claims" and "demands," in P. S. 2814, providing for the appointment of commissioners to receive and adjust claims and demands of persons against a decedent, mean the same. Batchelder v. White's Adm'r, 71 Atl. 1111, 1112, 82 Vt. 132.

The word "claim" is comprehensive. It is in a just, juridical sense a demand of some matter of a right made by one person upon another to do, or to forbear to do, some act or thing as a matter of duty. The term "demand," according to Lord Coke, is the largest word in law, except "claim," and a release of all demands discharges all sorts of actions, rights, titles, conditions before and after breach, executions, appeals, rents of all kinds, covenants, annuities, contracts, recognizances, statutes, commons, etc. Code Civ. Proc. § 3162, as amended by Laws 1897, p. 245, provides that the parties or assignees of parties to an action or proceeding against an executor or administrator on a claim or demand against the estate of a deceased person shall not be competent witnesses as to any matter of fact occurring before the death of such person. Held, that the complainant in a suit to enforce a trust in a mining claim against the executors of complainant's alleged co-owner was incompetent to testify to matters occurring before the death of the latter, and to conversations as to such claim, and to declarations of decedent that plaintiff was one of the grantees in the patent. Delmoe v. Long, 88 Pac. 778, 781, 35 Mont. 139, (quoting and adopting definition in Frigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. [41 U. S.] 615, 10 L. Ed. 1060; And. Law Dict.; and citing Bacon's Abridgement, title "Release," 283; Vedder v. Vedder [N. Y.] 1 Denio, 258).

The word "claim," as used in Rev. St. §§ 894, 1077, giving county commissioners power to pass on claims of the auditor for services and claims other than those of the auditor, naturally imports a matter of charge which is based on some statute or grows out of the performance of some authorized contract, wherein the inquiry of the commissioners as to the auditor is confined to whether or not the services were rendered; and to other claims to determine the amount due, as contrasted with a mere "demand" unsupported by law. Jones v. Commissioners of Lucas County, 48 N. E. 882, 886, 57 Ohio St. 189, 63 Am. St. Rep. 710.

The word "demand," in Code, §§ 1308, 1309, making all credits taxable, and defining "credit" as including every claim or demand due, or to become due, for money, labor, or other valuable thing, and all money or property of any kind secured by deed or otherwise, is more comprehensive than the word "debt," which imports a sum of money owing on a contract express or implied, and embraces rightful claims, whether founded on a contract, tort, or a superior right of property, and is a word of wider signification than any other except "claim," which means a demand of some matter as of right by one person on another to do or to forbear to do some act or thing as a matter of duty. Under Code, §§ 1308, 1309, a claim on a fire policy for a loss occurring December 23d, which depends for its validity on whether there has been any breach of the conditions of the policy on the part of insured and on his making proofs of loss, is taxable, though the amount of damages had not been ascertained on January 1st following, but ascertained at the time of assessing, and though the insurer had the option to rebuild, since the value of the claim must be estimated by the assessor who is not limited to conditions known on January 1st, but who may use such information as may be available at the time of assessing, and since the claim of insured on insurer, even though there be an election to rebuild, is for property due on contract or a claim due or to become due for money, labor, or other valuable thing. Talley v. Brown, 125 N. W. 248, 249, 146 Iowa, 360, 140 Am. St. Rep. 282 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, pp. 1202, 1973).

Debt distinguished

"Demand," as used in Code 1896, § 3728, permitting set-off of demands not sounding in damages, means more than "debt." Burns v. Reeves, 28 South. 554, 557, 127 Ala. 127.

DEMAND AGAINST ESTATE

The term "demand" within Kirby's Dig. § 114, which requires a claimant against a decedent's estate to append to his demand an affidavit stating that nothing has been paid on the demand except what is credited thereon, and that the sum demanded is justly due, includes all claims capable of assertion against such estates whether arising out of contract or tort, and whether presented by ordinary action or in the probate court. Hayden v. Hayden (Ark.) 150 S. W. 415, 416.

The word "demand," as used in statutes with reference to the allowance and payment of demands against the estates of deceased persons, does not include a claim for attorney's services rendered to the executor; such claims are entitled to priority of payment over the claims of creditors as expenses of administration. Matson & May v. Pearson, 97 S. W. 988, 988, 121 Mo. App. 120.

Expenses accruing after the death of decedent and in connection with the administration of his estate are "demands against the estate," within Mills' Ann. St. § 4870, dividing demands against the estates of decedents into four classes, and providing that one class shall include the expenses of administration and settlement of the estate. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. People, 98 Pac. 828, 831, 44 Colo. 557.

"Demand" and "claim," as used in P. S. 2814, which provides for the appointment of commissioners to receive and adjust claims and demands of persons against decedent, section 2820 which gives the court power to limit time to present claims, and section 2824 which provides that claims not exhibited shall be barred, mean the same thing. Batchelder v. White's Adm'r, 71 Atl. 1111, 1112, 82 Vt. 182.

"Demand," as used in a statute, which makes persons in whose behalf an action or proceeding is prosecuted against an executor or administrator upon a "claim or demand against the estate of a deceased person" incompetent as witnesses as to any fact occurring before death of such person, has the same meaning as when used in the Code provisions for the settlement of decedent's estates, where it is used synonymously with "claim" and has reference to such debts or demands against a decedent as might have been enforced against him in his lifetime by personal actions for the recovery of money, and upon which only money judgments would have been rendered. It does not include a family allowance. In re McCausland's Estate, 52 Cal. 568, 576 (quoting and adopting definition in Fallon v. Butler, 21 Cal. 32, 81 Am. Dec. 140). Nor a suit to enforce a trust in a mining claim against the executors of complainant's alleged co-owner. Delmoe v. Long, 88 Pac. 778, 781, 35 Mont. 139 (quoting and adopting definition in Frigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. 615, 10 L. Ed. 1060; Anderson's Law Dict.; and citing Bacon's Abridgement, title "Release," 283; Vedder v. Vedder [N. Y.] 1 Denio, 258).

DEMAND FOR RENT

The "demand for rent," within Code Civ. Proc. § 2231, subd. 2, authorizing summary proceedings against a tenant holding over after default in payment of rent, when "a demand of rent has been made" or at least three days' notice in writing, requiring, in the alternative, the payment of the rent, or the possession of the premises, has been served, is one made to the tenant personally for the payment of the rent absolutely, as distinguished from the three days' notice in the alternative. Peck v. Reid, 123 N. Y. Supp. 253, 255.

DEMAND NOTE

A "demand note," as between maker and payee, is due and payable immediately after delivery and without demand. It is an acknowledgment by the maker that a certain sum is due from him to the payee at the date of the note, and that the latter is entitled to payment of it immediately. The time of payment would be the same if the words "on demand" had been omitted. Curtis v. Smith, 53 Atl. 902, 903, 75 Conn. 423.

Where, in an action on a note, the jury found that an agreement had been made for an extension of the time of payment, that no definite time was agreed upon, and that a reasonable time for such delay was until plaintiff was dissatisfied with the security or until payment was demanded or offered, such finding cannot be considered as making the instrument a "demand note" in the ordinary legal meaning. Lyndon Sav. Bank v. International Co., 62 Atl. 50, 54, 78 Vt. 169, 112 Am. St. Rep. 900.

A note was not a "demand note" where it was not expressly payable on demand, and blanks were left for dates, and the holder was authorized by the maker and indorser to fill in the blanks, and did so, making the note payable on a certain date. Usef v. Herzenstein, 119 N. Y. Supp. 290, 292, 65 Misc. Rep. 45.

DEMAND ON CONTRACT

See Money Demand on Contract.

DEMENTIA

See Senile Dementia.

"Dementia" is but another word for "crazy"; and when an expert witness said in effect that if he was required to give a name to the disease under which a man over 80 years of age, "practically crazy on the subject of marriage," was laboring, he would call it "senile dementia," he only substituted a technical name for a common one. Hamon v. Hamon, 79 S. W. 422, 426, 180 Mo. 685.

DEMISE

See Grant and Demise.

The term "demise" is usually applied to leases and conveyances of real estate, and contains the idea of a grant. When parties have used it as the operative word applied to a transfer of timber rights and contracts, passing such interest for 91 years and more, by fair interpretation, and considering the nature of the interests, the parties could only have intended an assignment. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. v. Atlantic & N. C. Co., 61 S. E. 185, 190, 147 N. C. 368, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 223, 125 Am. St. Rep. 550, 15 Ann. Cas. 363. The word, also, properly applies to the instrument or means of conveyance. Weander v. Claussen Brew. Ass'n, 84 Pac. 735, 736, 42 Wash. 226, 114 Am. St. Rep. 110, 7 Ann. Cas. 536.

A contract between a life tenant and another was a cropping agreement and not a "demise," within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8089, which provides that when a tenant for life, who shall have demised any land, shall die on or after the rent becomes due and payable, his executor or administrator may recover from the undertenant the whole rent due, etc., where the contract provided that the latter should plow the land let and rented to him, and cultivate a crop of wheat, have it cut and threshed, and deliver one-third of the wheat to the life tenant as the part and share belonging to her, and that he would receive as his part, and in payment for the work and labor done by him, and expenses incurred by him in the production of the crop, two-thirds of the wheat, and the straw. Vawter v. Frame, 96 N. E. 35, 36, 48 Ind. App. 481.

"Demise," in an instrument purporting to "demise" land described for a specified term, and giving the lessee the right to explore and develop the land for oil, gas, and other minerals, means more than a license to enter and occupy for a specified purpose; a demise being a conveyance in fee, for life, or for years. Chandler v. Hart, 119 Pac. 516, 519, 161 Cal. 405, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1094.

Covenant for quiet enjoyment

Use of the word "demise" in a lease implies a covenant for quiet enjoyment. Clement v. Young-McShea Amusement Co., 67 Atl. 82, 83, 70 N. J. Eq. 677, 118 Am. St. Rep. 747 (citing 1 Washb. Real Prop. 323); Stott v. Rutherford, 92 U. S. 107, 109, 23 L. Ed. 486; Chandler v. Hart, 119 Pac. 516, 519, 161 Cal. 405, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1094; Ware v. Lithgow, 71 Me. 62, 64 (citing Grannis v. Clark [N. Y.] 8 Cow. 36; Barney v. Keith [N. Y.] 4 Wend. 502; Crouch v. Fowle, 9 N. H. 219, 32 Am. Dec. 350).

Covenant of power to give lease

The word "demise" in a lease for years created an implied warranty of title. Stott v. Rutherford, 92 U. S. 107, 109, 23 L. Ed. 486; Chandler v. Hart, 119 Pac. 516, 519, 161 Cal. 405, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1094; Headley v. Hoopengartner, 55 S. E. 744, 747, 60 W. Va. 626.

DEMISI

The words "dedi," "concessi," and "demisi," when used in a conveyance of real estate, import and make a conveyance in law. Headley v. Hoopengartner, 55 S. E. 744, 747, 60 W. Va. 626.

"If a man make a lease for years by the word 'concessi' or 'demisi' (which implies a covenant), if the assignee of the lessee be evicted, he shall have a writ of covenant." Wiggins v. Pender, 44 S. E. 362, 365, 182 N. C. 628, 61 L. R. A. 772 (quoting Rawle, Cov. [5th Ed.] § 318).

DEMONSTRATION

See Mathematical Demonstration.

DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

See Autoptic Preference.

The mere fact of negligence may be called "demonstrative evidence of negligence," for, although the evidence must always be detailed by the mouths of witnesses, yet, when the facts are thus disclosed, they either demonstrate negligence conclusively, or tend to demonstrate it, subject to explanation by the defendant showing that his conduct was consistent with due care. The principle is generally expressed in the Latin phrase "res ipsa loquitur." The meaning was thus expressed by Erle, J., in giving his judgment in a noted case: "Where the thing is shown to be under the management of the defendant or his servants, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from want of care." This definition has met with such general approval at the hands of judges in subsequent cases that it has become, so to speak, a legal classic. Oglesby v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 76 S. W. 623, 638, 177 Mo. 272 (dissenting opinion by Valliant, J., quoting with approval from Thomp. Neg.).

DEMONSTRATIVE LEGACY

See, also, General Legacy.

A "demonstrative legacy" is a bequest of a certain sum of money, stock, or the like, payable out of a particular fund or security. In re Fisher, 87 N. Y. Supp. 567, 568, 93 App. Div. 186 (citing Crawford v. McCarthy, 54 N. E. 277, 159 N. Y. 514); O'Day v. O'Day, 91 S. W. 921, 928, 193 Mo. 62, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 922 (quoting and adopting the definition in Armstrong's Appeal, 63 Pa. 312); Rogers v. Rogers (S. C.) 45 S. E. 176, 177 (quoting and adopting definition in Crawford v. McCarthy [N. Y.] 54 N. E. 278). A testator gave legacies of $2,000 each to five persons. He stated that his estate consisted of a claim against the United States, and in the clause naming the executor, he added that, when the claim should be collected from the United States, the legacies should be paid. Held, that the legacies were demonstrative, and on a deficiency of the fund they abated pro rata. Matthews v. Targarona, 65 Atl. 60, 64, 104 Md. 442, 10 Ann. Cas. 153 (quoting and adopting definition in Gelbach v. Shively, 10 Atl. 247, 67 Md. 501).

"A 'demonstrative legacy' is a bequest of a certain amount of money, stock, or the like, payable out of a particular fund or security." It partakes of the nature of a general legacy by bequeathing a specified amount, and also of the nature of a specific legacy by pointing out the fund from which the payment is to be made, but differs from a specified legacy in the particular that, if the fund pointed out for the payment of the legacy fails, resort may be had to the general assets of the estate. A direction in a will to a devisee to pay to another a certain sum on deposit in the devisee's name is a specific legacy and not a demonstrative one in favor of the latter. Crawford v. McCarthy, 54 N. E. 277, 278, 159 N. Y. 514.

A "demonstrative legacy" is a gift of money or other property charged on a particular fund in such way as not to amount to a gift of the corpus of the fund nor to evince an intent to relieve the general estate from liability in case the fund fails. Nusly v. Curtis, 85 Pac. 846, 847, 36 Colo. 464, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 592, 118 Am. St. Rep. 118, 10 Ann. Cas. 1184; White v. White, 53 S. E. 371, 372, 73 S. C. 261.

A "demonstrative legacy" is one of a certain amount or quantity, the particular fund or personal property being pointed out from which it is to be paid or taken; it differing from a "general legacy" in that it does not abate upon insufficiency of assets, and from a "specific legacy" in that there is recourse for its payment from the general estate in the event of ademption. Thompson v. Stephens, 75 S. E. 136, 137, 138 Ga. 205.

Bonds or stock

Where it appears that a legacy of bonds or securities is intended merely as the primary source for the payment of a legacy in money which is to be paid at all events, the legacy is demonstrative, and, on failure of the primary source of payment, the legacy, as one of money, is payable from the general estate. Blair v. Scribner, 57 Atl. 318, 326, 65 N. J. Eq. 493.

DEMURRAGE

As terminal charge, see Terminal Charge. Interest distinguished, see Interest (On Money).

Rate including, see Rate.

"Demurrage," in the proper sense of the term, is an allowance to a vessel in compensation for the earnings. she is improperly caused to lose, and can only be allowed when profits have either actually been lost or may reasonably be supposed to have been lost, and their amount was previously fixed by contract, or is proven with reasonable certainty. The Colombia, 197 Fed. 661, 662.

"Demurrage" is, strictly, a sum due by express contract for the detention of a vessel, in loading and unloading, beyond the time allowed in the contract of affreightment, and may also apply to the improper detention or delay of a vessel. Southern Ry. Co. v. Lewis, 51 South. 863, 864, 165 Ala. 451; Southern Ry. Co. v. Melton, 65 S. E. 665, 672, 133 Ga. 277 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1981). It also includes compensation for loss of a vessel's use during repair caused by collision. The Cumberland, 135 Fed. 234, 235.

Demurrage is an allowance made to the master of a ship by the freighters for staying longer in a place than the time first appointed for his departure. It generally depends on positive contract, and is inserted in the charter party; but it may also arise from the customs and usages of particular countries. Duff v. Lawrence (N. Y.) 3 Johns. Cas. 162, 168.

Railroad cars

A railroad may impose reasonable demurrage charges for delay in unloading cars. New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. George, 35 South. 193, 196, 82 Miss. 710.

It is competent for a common carrier whose customers, at their option, have the privilege of unloading for themselves the vehicles in which their freights are shipped, to adopt and enforce a reasonable regulation as to the time within which the vehicles may be unloaded free from any expense for storage, and to fix a reasonable rate per day at which storage will thereafter be charged for the use of such vehicles so long as they remain unloaded. A railroad may demand reasonable charges for demurrage, although there is no stipulation therefor in the bill of lading. Miller v. Georgia Railroad & Banking Co., 15 S. E. 316, 88 Ga. 563, 573, 18 L. R. A. 323, 30 Am. St. Rep. 170.

A railroad company may make a reasonable charge for delay in unloading cars after notice of arrival to the consignee, and such charge is not for transportation, storage, or delivery of freight, within Code, §§ 1202, 1203, which declare that no charge other than that provided by law shall be made. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Adams, 18 S. E. 673, 674, 90 Va. 393, 22 L. R. A. 530, 44 Am. St. Rep. 916.

"The right to demurrage, if it exists as a legal right, is confined to the maritime law, and only exists as to carriers by seagoing vessels. But it is believed to exist alone by force of contract. All such contracts of affreightment contain an agreement for demurrage in case of delay beyond the period allowed by the agreement, or the custom of the port allowed the consignee to receive and remove the goods. But the mode of doing business by the two kinds of carriers is essentially different. Railroad companies have warehouses in which to store freights; owners of vessels have none. Railroads discharge cargoes carried by them; carriers by ship do not, but it is done by the consignee. The masters of vessels provide in the contract for demurrage, while railroads do not, and it is seen these essential differences are, under the rules of the maritime law wholly inapplicable to railroad carriers." Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Jenkins, 103 Ill. 588, 599 (cited in Burlington & M. R. R. Co. v. Chicago Lumber Co., 19 N. W. 451, 15 Neb. 390, 393).

DEMURRER

See General Demurrer; Oral Demurrer; Parol Demurrer; Speaking Demurrer; Special Demurrer.

Frivolous demurrer, see Frivolous Pleading.

A "demurrer" is but a legal exception to the sufficiency of the pleading. Wapello State Sav. Bank v. Colton, 122 N. W. 149, 151, 148 Iowa, 359; State Board of Pharmacy v. Davey, 107 N. Y. Supp. 46, 48, 56 Misc. Rep. 568.

A demurrer is a part of the proceeding by which a cause is put at issue, and the order sustaining it eliminates from the pleading the matter demurred to. State v. Portland General Electric Co., 95 Pac. 722, 726, 52 Or. 502.

The meaning of "demurrer" is that, admitting the allegations of the bill or declaration to be true, they are not sufficient to sustain the action. Allen v. South Penn Coal Co., 52 S. E. 454, 459, 58 W. Va. 197.

A "demurrer" is an objection that the pleading against which it is directed is insufficient in law to support the action or defense, and that the demurrant should not therefore be required to further plead. It is not its office to set out facts; but it must stand or fall by the facts as alleged in the opposing pleading, and it can raise only questions of law as to their sufficiency. It is a fundamental rule of law that a demurrer will only lie for defects which appear upon the face of the alleged defective pleading, and extraneous or collateral facts, stated in the demurrer, cannot be considered in deciding upon its validity. Wood v. Kincaid, 57 S. E. 4, 5, 144 N. C. 393.

A "demurrer" is a pleading which imports that the party filing it objects to pleading further or introducing any testimony until he obtains the judgment of the court whether the statement of facts made by his adversary in his pleading is such as to require him to answer or proceed further. Bennett v. Bennett, 121 S. W. 495, 497, 137 Ky. 17, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 407 (quoting and adopting Newman, Plead. & Prac. § 540). The office of a demurrer is to specifically point out the defects in the pleading to which it is directed, so as to afford the opposite party the opportunity of curing such defect by amendment. Bryant v. Alabama Great Southern R. Co., 46 South. 484, 486, 155 Ala. 368.

A "demurrer," whatever it may be called, cannot be used to rid a single count of irrelevant, redundant, or improper matter. Under the Kansas Code, it is hardly accurate to designate a demurrer as general or special, and it has no other office than to challenge the sufficiency of pleadings upon one or more of the six specific grounds prescribed. Sparks v. Smeltzer, 93 Pac. 338, 339, 77 Kan. 44 (citing Mayberry v. Kelly, 1 Kan. 116).

The word "demurrer," as used in the statute allowing the state to appeal from a judgment on demurrer, has its usual significance as understood in criminal pleading; i. e., a pleading which puts in issue the legality of the last preceding pleading, and which is pleaded either to an indictment or to a special plea. State v. Moody, 64 S. E. 431, 432, 150 N. C. 847.

As an admission

A "demurrer" is an admission by the adverse party of the facts charged in the preceding pleading. It admits the truth of facts properly pleaded in pleading to which it is addressed, but demands judgment under the law applied to such facts. City of Baltimore v. Thomas, 80 Atl. 726, 728, 115 Md. 212.

The office of a "demurrer" is to admit the facts as alleged, but to declare them insufficient on which to predicate a cause of action or defense. Jefferson v. Scott (Tex.) 135 S. W. 705, 708.

A demurrer admits the truth of the facts stated in the pleading against which it is leveled, and invokes the judgment of the court thereon as to the law as to plaintiff's right of recovery or on matters in bar or avoidance set forth by the answer or reply. Pidgeon v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis, 133 S. W. 130, 131, 154 Mo. App. 20.

"While a 'demurrer' admits the truth of the material allegations of fact in the pleading demurred to, it does not admit arguments, legal conclusions, or inferences not supported by facts and circumstances therein set forth, nor the construction of statutes or facts that are immaterial or against common knowledge." State ex rel. Wyoming Agricultural College v. Irvine, 84 Pac. 90-93, 14 Wyo. 318; State ex rel. McNamee v. Stoble, 92 S. W. 191, 207, 194 Mo. 14; Bennett v. Bennett, 121 S. W. 495, 497, 137 Ky. 17, Ann. Motion to strike distinguished

A motion to strike seeks an order of court of less dignity than a judgment, while a demurrer raises an issue at law and seeks a trial and judgment on that issue. Ewing v. Vernon County, 118 S. W. 518, 519, 216 Mo. 681.

A "demurrer" goes to a pleading as a whole for insufficiency, and is thus distinguished from a motion to strike, which is applicable where the pleading, either as a whole or any part of it, is so framed as to prejudice, or embarrass, or delay a fair trial. If the answer to an alternative writ of mandamus is wholly insufficient as a pleading, a demurrer will lie; but, if it is wholly irrelevant and impedes a fair trial of the cause, it may be stricken on motion. State ex rel. Ellis v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 44 South. 230, 236, 58 Fla. 711.

DEMURRER TO EVIDENCE

The purpose of a demurrer to the evidence is not to bring before the court an investigation of facts in dispute, nor the weight of evidence, but to refer to the court questions of law arising on the facts as ascertained. Where the parol evidence in a cause is indeterminate or circumstantial, the defendant cannot demur to the evidence, and oblige the plaintiff to join in a demurrer without distinctly admitting on the record every fact which plaintiff's evidence conduces to prove. Bass v. Rublee, 57 Atl. 985, 986, 76 Vt. 395.

"A 'demurrer to evidence' admits the facts the evidence tends to prove, and in passing upon it the court is required to make every inference of fact in favor of the party offering the evidence which a jury might, with propriety, have inferred in his favor, and, if when viewed in this light it is sufficient to support a verdict in his favor, the demurrer should be overruled." Pitthan v. Schaithman, 108 S. W. 103, 104, 127 Mo. App. 29; Clark v. O'Toole, 94 Pac. 547, 550, 20 Okl. 319.

It is not the province of a "demurrer to evidence" "to bring before the court an investigation of the facts in dispute. It is intended to admit and state the facts which the other party attempts to prove, and not merely the testimony which may conduce to prove them. It is intended, also, to admit whatever the jury may reasonably infer from the evidence." Mugge v. Jackson, 39 South. 157, 160, 50 Fla. 235 (citing Ingram v. Jacksonville St. R. Co., 30 South. 800, 43 Fla. 324, 328; Morrison v. McKinnon, 12 Fla. 552, 557).

A "demurrer to the evidence," a proceeding now practically obsolete, was analogous to a demurrer to a pleading. It was an objection by one of the parties to an action at law, to the effect that the evidence which his adversary had produced was insufficient in point of law to make out his case or sustain the issue. Upon joinder in such demurrer the jury was discharged and the case was argued to the court, who gave judgment upon the facts as shown in evidence. The expression "demurrer to the evidence" is not strictly accurate, as applied to criminal proceedings, since, after the trial judge has overruled the demurrer, he cannot direct a verdict against the defendant or give judgment against him upon the demurrer. State v. Moody, 64 S. E. 431, 432, 150 N. C. 847 (quoting with approval from Black's Law Dict.).

"Strictly speaking, 'sustaining a demurrer to the evidence' in an equity case means the same that it means in a law case. It means that there is no evidence tending to sustain the plaintiff's case, and therefore none for the trier of fact to weigh. In a law case the court might with propriety overrule a demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence, and the jury might with equal propriety find for the defendant. And the same is true in an equity case. The court might overrule the demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence, and yet, when the case is submitted on the evidence, find for the defendant. In each case, it means that, as a matter of law, there is some evidence to be weighed, but, as a matter of fact, the evidence, when weighed by the trier of fact, is not satisfactory." Anthony v. Kennard Bldg. Co., 87 S. W. 921, 924, 188 Mo. 704.

Motion to instruct verdict distinguished

There is a distinction between a demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence and a directed verdict by the court in plaintiff's favor. To sustain a demurrer to the evidence it is not necessary for the court to pass on the credibility of plaintiff's witnesses. Their credibility is assumed and the probative facts given every reasonable intendment, but a verdict for plaintiff in cases where the burden is on him is not often to be given, even on undisputed testimony, as the jury may not believe the witnesses, and might reach a different conclusion from the inference. Link v. Jackson, 139 S. W. 588, 596, 158 Mo. App. 63.

A motion by defendant at the close of plaintiff's testimony, reciting that plaintiff had failed to allege or prove certain specified things, "wherefore defendant moves the court to instruct the jury to return a verdict for the defendant," was not a "demurrer to the evidence" but a "motion to direct a verdict," and the interposition of the same did not preclude defendant from introducing defensive evidence after it was overruled. Woldert Grocery Co. v. Veltman (Tex.) 83 S. W. 224.

DENIAL

See General Denial; Specific Denial. Argumentative denial, see Argumentative.

Frivolous denial, see Frivolous Pleading. See, also, Defense; Deny.

"Denial" implies a previous request. Beckhard v. Rudolph, 63 Atl. 705, 707, 68 N. J. Eq. 740.

A "denial" is a declaration that a statement made is untrue. It is a traverse of the statement of the opposite party. Hankins v. Helms, 100 Pac. 460, 461, 12 Ariz. 178.

As counterclaim

See Counterclaim.

DENIAL OF KNOWLEDGE OR INFORMATION

A "denial of knowledge or information" includes a denial of any knowledge or information. Hence an answer denying knowledge and information sufficient to form a belief as to the allegations contained in specified paragraphs of the complaint is in substantial compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 500, providing that the answer must contain a denial of each material allegation of the complaint controverted by the defendant, or of any knowledge or information thereof sufficient to form a belief. Hidden v. Godfrey, 85 N. Y. Supp. 197, 198, 88 App. Div. 498.

DENIED OR CANNOT ENFORCE

The phrase "denied or cannot enforce," in Rev. St. U. S. § 641, providing that when any civil suit or criminal prosecution is commenced in any state court against any person who is "denied or cannot enforce," in the judicial tribunals of the state, any right secured to him by any law providing for equal civil rights of citizens of the United States, such suit or prosecution may be removed into the federal Circuit Court, etc., has no application to any case where the rights secured to an accused by any law providing for the equal civil rights of citizens of the United States or of all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States are recognized or are not denied by the Constitution or laws of the state in which the prosecution is pending. The denial in summoning or impanelling jurors of any equal civil rights secured to an accused by the federal Constitution or laws does not, unless authorized by the state Constitution or laws as interpreted by its highest court, give the right to remove a criminal prosecution from a state to a federal Circuit Court. Commonwealth of Kentucky v. Powers, 26 Sup. Ct. 387, 398, 201 U. S. 1, 50 L. Ed. 633, 5 Ann. Cas. 692.

DENIZENS

"The king's grants shall not inure to the double intent, when made to an alien, of vesting in him the thing granted, and then, by implication, constituting him a 'denizen,' so as to enable him to hold an indefeasible estate." Doe ex dem. Gouverneur v. Robertson, 11 Wheat, 332, 352, 6 L. Ed. 488.

DENOMINATION

Our "denominations of money" are dollars, cents, and mills; the dollars being stated in figures in whole numbers, and the cents and mills decimally. It is a matter of common knowledge that .15, .25, .10, in a list of officers' fees, mean 15 cents, 25 cents, and 10 cents, respectively; that 3.31 means $3.31, and 1.50 means $1.50. Sawyer v. Wilson, 99 S. W. 389, 390, 81 Ark. 319.

DENSE

"Dense" is defined in Webster's International Dictionary as "having the constituent parts massed or crowded together; close; compact; thick; containing much matter in a small space; heavy; opaque." City of St. Paul v. Haugbro, 100 N. W. 470, 471, 93 Minn. 59, 66 L. R. A. 441, 106 Am. St. Rep. 427, 2 Ann. Cas. 580.

DENY

See Denial.

To "deny" is to contradict; to gainsay. If a defendant should say in an affidavit, as to an instrument sued on, "I never executed the instrument," this would be a direct denial. Longwell v. Day, 1 Mich. N. P. 286, 288.

To "deny" or abridge, in the sense of the fifteenth amendment to the federal Constitution, providing that the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, there must be some act of a state through its legislative, judicial, or executive departments, or some one exercising the power of the state, whether with or without the sanction of the law, to deny to otherwise qualified voters the right to vote on account of race, color, or condition. If individuals prevented a voter from voting, it would simply be an act of lawless violence; the right of suffrage would not be denied. Karem v. United States, 121 Fed. 250, 253, 57 C. C. A. 486, 61 L. R. A. 437.

DEODANDS

"At common law any personal chattel that even accidentally caused the death of a rational being was forfeited to the sovereign and sold, and the proceeds distributed to the poor, as a cart that ran over a person, a weapon, and the like. They were styled 'deodands.'" Daniels v. Homer, 51 S. E. 992, 994, 139 N. C. 219, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 997 (citing 1 Black Com. 300).

DEODORIZE

In a published statement, referring to plaintiff, a candidate for public office, that "it is as much the duty of a citizen to vote against Jimsweeney to-day as it would be to 'deodorize' against the cholera," the word "deodorize" may mean that his moral traits of character are such as to require his banishment from society, and if there is an inducement and innuendo, which, fairly interpreted, would give this meaning, may be libelous. Sweeney v. Baker, 13 W. Va. 158, 183, 81 Am. Rep. 787.

DEP. ON A/C LICENSE

A receipt for money received as "dep. on a/c license" indicates the purpose for which the money was paid, but it does not imply that the money so deposited was to be held conditionally, but on the contrary that it was deposited unconditionally on account of the license. Johanson v. Atkins, 32 South. 879, 881, 44 Fla. 185.

DEPART

DEPART FROM PORT

A vessel "departed from port," within Rev. Laws Mass. c. 198, § 15, which provides that the lien on a vessel for supplies, etc., given by the preceding section, shall be dissolved unless a statement of the demand is filed for record within 30 days after the vessel "departs from the port at which she was when the debt was contracted," where it made daily fishing trips from the port of Boston to sea, beyond the limits of the port and the state, although she did not touch at any other port. The Satellite, 188 Fed. 717, 721.

DEPARTMENT

See Chief of Department; Head of Department; Head of Principal Department; Legislative Department; Municipal Department; Paid Department; Principal Department.

The Louisville school board is not strictly speaking, a "department of municipal government" of the city, but is an independent corporation having in charge the educational facilities of the city of Louisville, and that city is one of the school districts of the state, but in dividing the tax levy it is so classed. No substantial difference can be pointed out between its right to the interest on delinquent tax bills and that of the board of park commissioners, the commissioners of charity, or the trustees of the public library. City of Louisville v. Louisville School Board, 84 S. W. 729, 730, 119 Ky. 574.

The city council of Boston is not a "department," within St. 1885, c. 266, § 6, vesting the executive powers of the city in the mayor, to be exercised through the several officers and boards of the city in their respective departments, and providing that such officers and boards shall in their respective departments make all necessary contracts, and St. 1890, c. 418, § 6, providing that all contracts made by any department of the city, involving a certain amount, shall not be deemed executed till the mayor's written approval is affixed thereto. A lease executed only by the mayor in behalf of the city, acting under a vote of the city council, which purported to authorize the board of health to lease the premises as a location for a boat landing, the rental to be charged to the appropriation for city council incidental expenses, was inoperative and void. Commercial Wharf Corp. v. City of Boston, 94 N. E. 805, 807, 208 Mass. 482.

The question whether employes are engaged in the same "department" should be determined by inquiring inter alia whether they are habitually associated or brought together in the performance of their duties, whether they are under the immediate direction and control of the same superior, and whether the duties of one have any relation to or connection with those of the other. An employe in the ladies' suit department of a department store, and an elevator operator through whose negligence she was injured while riding in the elevator, were engaged in different departments as a matter of law, within a statute providing that the fellow-servant rule should not apply as between servants engaged in different departments of labor. Judd v. Letts, 111 Pac. 12, 13, 158 Cal. 359, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 156.

A carpenter engaged in the construction of a building and a man operating a freight elevator used in a retail store are engaged in different "departments of labor." Morgan v. J. W. Robinson Co., 107 Pac. 695, 698, 157 Cal. 348.

The "department rule," which is the rule that servants of the same master engaged in different lines of work are not fellow servants within the meaning of the fellow-servant rule, is not limited to railroad cases alone. Where a painter, working on a car under the direction of a paint foreman having authority to hire and discharge men and direct their work, was injured through the negligence of a switchman working under the direction of the general superintendent of the whole car works, in which from 1,000 to 2,500 men were employed, the painter was not a fellow servant of the switchman. Koerner v. St. Louis Car Co., 107 S. W. 481, 484, 209 Mo. 141, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 292 (citing Parker v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 19 S. W. 1119, 109 Mo. 362, 18 L. R. A. 802).

Under Sand. & H. Dig. Ark. § 6248, declaring that employes of a railroad corporation shall not be considered fellow servants unless working together to a common purpose of the same grade, and in the same "department" of service, a fireman, who was injured by a collision of trains caused by the failure of a telegraph operator to deliver orders received by him from the train dispatcher, was not engaged in the same department or service of the corporation and was not a fellow servant with such telegraph operator. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Furry, 114 Fed. 898, 903, 52 C. C. A. 518.

DEPARTMENT REPORT

A report made by a court or by its direction, or in obedience to some requirement of the law, is a "department report." The reports enumerated in Const. arts. 4, 6, requiring all officers of executive departments and public institutions to make full and complete reports to the Governor, and requiring the judges of courts inferior to the Supreme Court to report in writing to the judges of the Supreme Court, are "department reports" contemplated by article 5, § 29, relating to the printing and distribution of department reports. Gillette v. Peabody, 75 Pac. 18, 20, 19 Colo. App. 356.

DEPARTURE

In pleading

See Material Departure.

A "departure" in pleading is where a party quits or departs from the case or defense he has first made and has recourse to another. Weiss v. Sandoval Zinc Co., 165 Ill. App. 417, 418.

"A 'departure' is the statement of matter in a reply, replication, rejoinder, or subsequent pleading, as a cause of action or defense, which is not pursuant to the previous pleading of the same party, and which does not support and fortify it." New matter in a reply which plaintiff is forced to plead to meet the allegations of the answer will not constitute a departure if it does not contradict the facts stated in the petition, and is not adopted as a new basis for relief in place of the cause of action presented by the petition. Hunter Milling Co. v. Allen, 88 Pac. 252, 257, 74 Kan. 679, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 291 (quoting and adopting definition in Johnson v. State Bank of Seneca, 52 Pac. 860, 861, 59 Kan. 250, 252).

A "departure" in a pleading is a desertion of the ground which the pleader occupied in his last antecedent pleading and a resort to another ground. If the reply asserts some right not counted upon in the declaration, it is a departure. In a suit upon a fire insurance policy, the stipulation against additional insurance being a condition subsequent and set up as a matter of defense by plea, a replication alleging a waiver was not inconsistent with nor a departure from the allegations of the declaration. Eagle Fire Co. v. Lewallen, 47 South. 947, 956, 56 Fla. 246 (citing Andrews' Steph. Pl.).

A "departure" in pleading is said to be when a party quits or departs from the case or defense which he has first made, and has recourse to another. Nelson v. First Nat. Bank, 36 South. 707, 710, 139 Ala. 578, 101 Am. St. Rep. 52 (citing McAden v. Gibson, 5 Ala. 341). When the declaration avers a delivery, etc., and the plea that the plaintiff did not deliver, etc., a replication that plaintiff tendered and defendant refused is a "departure" from the declaration. Pollard v. Taylor, 2 Bibb (5 Ky.) 234, 235.

A reservation in a plea is no new acquisition of a right but a part of the whole title stated in the plea and can in no sense be regarded as matter foreign to that contained in it. It was no "departure" in pleading for a defendant, after pleading liberum tenementum, to rejoin to a replication setting forth a demise that in the demise was contained a reservation to do the acts complained of as trespass. Dutton v. Holden (N. Y.) 4 Wend. 643, 644.

Where, in an action on policies, the complaint was in the ordinary form, and defendant pleaded breach of warranty and false representations, a reply that defendant was estopped to plead such defenses because defendant's physician examined decedent prior to the issuance of the policies, and found him to be in good health, was authorized and did not constitute a "departure." Ferrandini v. Bankers' Life Ass'n of Des Moines, Iowa, 99 Pac. 6, 8, 51 Wash. 442.

DEPENDENCY

See Country or Dependency.

The Dominion of Canada is a "dependency" of Great Britain, within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 393, 30 Stat. 187. Myers v. United States, 140 Fed. 648, 654.

DEPENDENT

See Legal Dependent.

"A 'dependent,' as the term is used in reference to benevolent associations, is one who is sustained by another or relies for support upon the aid of another." A child taken from an orphan asylum, when three years old, by a husband and wife, supported by them as a member of their family until 20 years old, and called and treated as their daughter, was during such time a "dependent" of the husband and could lawfully be made the beneficiary of a certificate issued to him by a benefit order which, under the statute and in its charter, was authorized to create a fund only "for the benefit of dependents of deceased members." Murphy v. Nowak, 79 N. E. 112, 114, 223 Ill. 301, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 393.

Act Pa. April 15, 1868 (P. L. 103), provided that all life policies which might thereafter mature, and which had been or should be taken out for the benefit of, or bona fide assigned to, the wife or children, or other relative "dependent" on the insured, should be vested in such wife, children, or other relative, free from the claim of insured's creditors. Shortly before the bankruptcy of a firm of which insured was a member, he directed a policy on his life, payable to his executors, administrators, or assigns, to be so changed as to be made payable to his sister as beneficiary. The sister at one time had lived with her father and brothers, including the insured, and had been their housekeeper; but there was no evidence that she was "dependent" on insured at any time. Held, that the attempted change of beneficiary to such sister was ineffectual to entitle her to the proceeds of the policy as against insured's trustee in bankruptcy. South Side Trust Co. v. Wilmarth, 199 Fed. 418, 420, 117 C. C. A. 650.

Where the constitution and by-laws of a fraternal benefit association and the statutes under which its charter is obtained, each authorize the issuance of beneficiary insurance certificates to members of the family, heirs, blood relation, or persons dependent upon the member, the term "dependent," as therein used, is intended to include persons other than members of the family, heirs, or persons related by blood. Sovereign Camp Woodmen of the World v. Noel, 128 Pac. 787, 789, 34 Okl. 596, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 648.

A hotel keeper, who agreed to furnish decedent, an unmarried man without living relatives, a home at the hotel for life, in consideration that decedent give him all his property, was not "dependent" on decedent within the above-cited statute. Modern Woodmen of America v. Comeaux, 101 Pac. 1, 2, 79 Kan. 493, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 814, 17 Ann. Cas. 865.

Dependence within Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 73, § 258, authorizing the organization of fraternal benefit associations for the benefit of families, heirs, blood relations, and dependents of the members, is a question of fact; but dependence founded on a moral duty to provide for another must be recognized, and a state of dependency may exist though no legal or moral duty rests on one to give aid to the dependent, but dependency cannot rest alone on a promise or contract, and the word "dependent" is in some sense at least used as similar to the dependence which usually obtains in the family relation. Royal League v. Shields, 96 N. E. 45, 48, 251 Ill. 250, 86 L. R. A. (N. S.) 208.

Under Gen. St. N. J. p. 153, § 24, which authorizes the incorporation of benefit associations to pay death benefits to the husband, wife, father, mother, son, daughter, brother, sister, and legal representatives of the member, the word "dependents," in a certificate of such an association providing for the payment of benefits to the family, "dependents" or orphans of the member as he might direct, could not be construed in its usual broad sense, but must be held to apply only to one of the persons named in such act. Klee v. Klee, 93 N. Y. Supp. 588, 589, 47 Misc. Rep. 101.

Claimant and her two sisters lived together, and, prior to the marriage of one of them to deceased, it was arranged that after the marriage the four should continue to "run the house," whereupon the wife and one sister, who was in ill health, kept the house, and claimant continued to work for wages, which she contributed to the common fund. After the death of the wife, the home was continued as before, whereupon deceased took out a benefit certificate, naming claimant as beneficiary, in order to assist her to support herself and her invalid sister after his death. Held, sufficient to show that claimant was "dependent" on deceased, within Rev. Laws, c. 119, § 6, limiting beneficiaries in such societies to dependents on the member. Wilber v. Supreme Lodge of New England Order of Protection, 78 N. E. 445, 446, 192 Mass. 477.

As any one not self-supporting

The word "dependent," as used in the by-laws of a beneficial association allowing dependents to be beneficiaries, means that the beneficiary must be dependent on the member in a material degree for support or maintenance or assistance, and the obligation on the part of the member to furnish must, it would seem, rest upon some moral, legal, or equitable grounds and not upon the purely voluntary or charitable impulse or disposition of the member. One who is grown and married and has a good salary is not a dependent, within the by-laws of a beneficial association allowing dependents to be beneficiaries. Morley v. Monk, 40 South. 411, 412, 145 Ala. 301.

Children

A daughter to whom her father paid over all his wages, and who managed a household and received board money from her brothers without accounting to her father, is "dependent" on the earnings of her father, within St. 1887, c. 270, § 2, providing that the next of kin who are dependent on an employé for support may maintain an action for his death. Houlihan v. Connecticut River R. Co., 42 N. E. 108, 110, 164 Mass. 555, 557.

Concubine

One who lived with the assured as his concubine is not a "dependent" person within the meaning of the by-laws of a fraternal benefit society, and is not entitled to the fund as a beneficiary. Miller v. Prella, 122 Ill. App. 380, 385.

Parents

For a parent to be "dependent" on a child for support within Rem. & Bal. Code, § 194, giving dependent parents a right of action for wrongful death of an adult child, it must appear that there is a substantial degree of dependency, need on the part of the parent, and a recognition of it on the part of the child, and an occasional contribution from a son to a parent does not establish a condition of dependency. Bortle v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 111 Pac. 788, 789, 60 Wash. 552, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 731. But the statute will not be so strictly construed as to say that it means wholly dependent or that the parent must have no means of support or livelihood other than the deceased. Neither a father, 46 years old, who has successfully carried on a teaming business, is practically out of debt, and who could probably find employment, except for a depression in business conditions, nor his wife are "dependent" within the statute. Kanton v. Kelly, 118 Pac. 890, 891, 65 Wash. 614 (citing Bortle v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 111 Pac. 788, 60 Wash. 552, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 731).

Where a bankrupt lived with his mother and provided for her protection, though she was not "dependent" on him for financial support, he nevertheless cared for a dependent female, and was entitled to the exemption of his homestead, within Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 5912, which provides that there shall be exempt from levy and sale of the property of every head of a family, or person having the care and support of dependent females of any age, who is not the head of a family, realty or personalty, or both, to the value in the aggregate of $1,600. In re Glisson, 182 Fed. 287, 288.

The mother of a member of a mutual benefit association not living with the insured but with her husband, an able-bodied man, 67 years old, who had recently failed in business, was not "dependent" on the insured because of gifts amounting to $200 within a few months before her death, and hence was not entitled to a benefit under a provision of the association's charter restricting the beneficiaries to dependents of members. Western Commercial Travelers' Ass'n v. Tennent, 106 S. W. 1073, 1077, 128 Mo. App. 541.

In order for a mother to recover, under the provisions of section 4424 of the Civil Code of 1910, for the tortious homicide of her minor child, it must appear that at the time of the homicide she was "dependent," either wholly or partially, upon the child, and that the child contributed substantially or materially to the mother's support. In such a case the mother may recover, notwithstanding the father of the child is in life, in good health, living with the family, and exercising his parental rights over the child up to the time of the child's death. It is the fact of contribution and dependency which creates the right of action in favor of the mother, and not the legal obligation to contribute to her support; and the contribution may be either in labor or in money. Fuller v. Inman, 74 S. E. 287, 290, 10 Ga. App. 680.

DEPENDENT CHILD

See State Public School for Dependent Children.

A minor child, who has during his entire life been maintained by his grandparents, who are able and willing to do so, and whose paternal relatives are also anxious to provide for him, is not a "dependent and neglected child" within Pub. Acts Ex. Sess. 1907, No. 6, § 1, as amended by Pub. Acts 1909, No. 310, providing that a dependent and neglected child shall be any child who, for any reason, is destitute or homeless, or dependent on the public, so as to give the probate court jurisdiction to dispose of his custody. Graham v. Gardner, 137 N. W. 223, 224, 171 Mich. 540.

Under Juvenile Court Law (St. 1911, pp. 658, 661, 666), providing in sections 1, 5, and 16 that the words "dependent person" shall mean any person under 21 years who has no parent or guardian willing or capable of exercising proper parental control, or who from any cause is in danger of growing up to lead an idle, dissolute, or immoral life, and section 26, making it a misdemeanor for any person to encourage, cause, or contribute to the dependency or delinquency of such person, an information in a prosecution for causing and encouraging the delinquency of a dependent child, which alleged that she was a female child of the age of 16 years or thereabouts, and had no parents or guardian willing and capable of exercising proper control, and by reason of that fact was in danger of growing up to lead an idle, dissolute, and immoral life, sufficiently charged the dependency of the minor child. Edgington v. Superior Court of Yolo County, 124 Pac. 450, 451, 18 Cal. App. 739.

The words "dependent children," as used in Act No. 82, p. 134, of 1906, entitled an act "defining the power of the district courts of this state and the city courts, with reference to the care, treatment, and control of dependent, neglected, incorrigible, and delinquent children under the age of 16 years," mean any children who are destitute, homeless, abandoned, or depending on the public for support, or who have not proper care or guardianship. In re Parker, 43 South. 54, 55, 118 La. 471.

Laws 1907, c. 41, § 1 (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 1642), defines a "dependent child" as one under the age stated who is dependent upon the public for support, or who is destitute, homeless, or abandoned, and section 2, Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 1643, defines a "neglected child" as one who has not proper parental care or guardianship. Held, that children were neither "dependent" nor "neglected," so as to charge their father for contributing to their neglect under the statute, where their mother, after unsuccessfully attempting to procure a divorce, had taken them to her sister's and refused to bring them to the home which the father offered to furnish on condition that she return to it. Wheeler v. State (Ind.) 100 N. E. 25, 26.

Juvenile court law (St. 1909, c. 133) defines, in section 1, a "dependent child" as any child found wandering and not having any home or proper guardianship, or who has no parent or guardian capable of exercising proper parental control, or whose home, by reason of neglect of his parents or guardian or person in whose custody he may be, is an unfit place. Ex parte Mills Sing, 112 Pac. 582, 14 Cal. App. 512.

DEPENDENT COVENANT

See Independent Covenant; Mutual and Dependent Covenants.

Whether a covenant is "dependent" or "independent" depends on the intention of the parties. Where a covenant goes only to a part of the consideration on both sides, and a breach may be compensated for any damages, it is generally considered independent. Lincoln Trust Co. v. Nathan, 74 S. W. 1007, 1010, 175 Mo. 32; Daly v. City of Carthage, 128 S. W. 265, 267, 143 Mo. App. 564; Withers v. Wabash R. Co., 99 S. W. 34, 37, 122 Mo. App. 282 (quoting and adopting Poage v. Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co., 24 Mo. App. 199).

DEPORTATION

See Order of Deportation.

"Deportation" is the removal of an alien out of the country simply because his presence is deemed inconsistent to public welfare, and without punishment being imposed or contemplated, either under the laws of the country out of which he is sent or under those of the country to which he is taken. A proceeding for "deportation," under the Chinese Exclusion Act, is not a criminal proceeding. Low Foon Yin v. United States Immigration Com'r, 145 Fed. 791, 793, 794, 76 C. C. A. 355 (quoting Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 13 Sup. Ct. 1016, 1020, 149 U. S. 698-709, 37 L. Ed. 905).

"Deportation," within the provisions of the Immigration Act that any alien who shall come into the United States "in violation of law" may be deported at any time within two years after arrival, means actual deportation, and not merely the commencement of proceedings therefor. Botis v. Davies, 173 Fed. 996, 1002.

DEPORTATION PROCEEDING

See Civil Action—Case—Suit—Etc.

DEPOSE

The word "depose" means to give evidence, bear witness or testimony. Bliss v. Shuman, 47 Me. 248, 252.

DEPOSIT

The word "deposit," as used in an agreement by the consignee of a ring obligating him to "deposit" with the consignor a certain sum on the execution of the agreement and certain sums on certain days thereafter, means payment, because of provision in the agreement that the deposit should become the absolute property of the consignor. People v. Gluck, 80 N. E. 1022, 1024, 188 N. Y. 167.

The word "deposited," in a policy of insurance on a stock of sugar and molasses deposited in the sugar manufactory on a sugar plantation on which there is a growing crop, does not refer exclusively to sugar and molasses then existing, but the policy covers sugar to come into the sugar house on the plantation as the result of the future operation of the factory, though the word "deposited," when standing alone, might well be considered as referring exclusively to sugar and molasses then existing and in the sugar house. Royal Ins. Co. v. Miller, 26 Sup. Ct. 46, 49, 199 U. S. 353, 50 L. Ed. 226.

Under Comp. Laws 1909, § 4792, providing that resignations of elective officers may be made by filing or "depositing" such resignation in the office of the county clerk, where a resignation is in fact received in the office while it is open by those in charge, even temporarily, and the attention of the clerk is called to it, it is "deposited" within the meaning of the law. State ex rel. West v. Breckinridge, 126 Pac. 806, 808, 34 Okl. 649.

As file

The word "deposit," as used in Act May 28, 1896, abolishing the office of circuit court commissioner and requiring such commissioners to deposit official documents in their possession with the clerk of the circuit court by which they were appointed, is not synonymous with "filing," and a clerk of court is not entitled to any fee for filing the various papers surrendered. United States v. Van Duzee, 22 Sup. Ct. 648, 650, 185 U. S. 278, 46 L. Ed. 909.

DEPOSIT (Noun)

See Bank Deposit; Certificate of Deposit; Contract of Deposit; General Deposit; Irregular Deposit; Money Deposited in Bank; On Deposit; Special Deposit.

Any deposit, see Any.

Other valuable minerals or deposits, see Other.

Valuable mineral deposits, see Valuable Minerals.

A deposit of money to one's credit in a bank does not operate to diminish the estate of the depositor; for when he parts with the money he creates at the same time, on the part of the bank, an obligation to pay the amount of the deposit as soon as the depositor may see fit to draw a check against it. It is not a transfer of property as a payment, pledge, mortgage, gift, or security. New York County Nat. Bank v. Massey, 24 Sup. Ct. 199, 201, 192 U. S. 138, 48 L. Ed. 380.

A "deposit" in a bank in discharge of an overdraft is not a deposit within a statute making it an offense to reserve a deposit in a bank known to be unsafe or insolvent. But the deposit of a check in a bank, it being treated by the depositor and the bank as money, the former obtaining credit upon which he may draw money, is a deposit of money within the statute. Ellis v. State, 119 N. W. 1110, 1113, 138 Wis. 513, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 444, 131 Am. St. Rep. 1022.

An indictment of the president of a bank for receiving a deposit knowing the bank to be insolvent, which alleged the receipt of a deposit of the value of $130, was sufficient to show that the deposit was in money, checks, or drafts aggregating the amount specified; the word "deposit" being used in its popular sense to imply that the depositor had placed in the bank money, or evidences or representatives of money such as banks of deposit are authorized to, and do, receive; so that the indictment was not defective for failure to accurately describe the items. Parrish v. Commonwealth, 123 S. W. 339, 341, 136 Ky. 77.

The expression "money deposited in bank," as used in section 4 of the revenue act of 1903, is intended to include money on general "deposit" in bank. Critchfield v. Nance County, 110 N. W. 538, 539, 77 Neb. 807.

Though, strictly speaking, a "deposit" of a portion of the purchase price of land, is not a payment to the vendor, still the word as ordinarily used, covers advanced payments to him. So construing the term, a purchaser upon the vendor failing to make title, as required by his contract for a sale of land, in equity is entitled to recover interest on any advances made on the purchase money, whether with a stakeholder or paid to the vendor, and is also entitled to a lien on the land for the amount of such deposits and the interest. Everett v. Mansfield, 148 Fed. 374, 375, 78 C. C. A. 188, 8 Ann. Cas. 956.

The term "deposit yielding metals or minerals of any kind," as used in B. & C. Comp. § 5668, gives laborers and materialmen a lien for the working or development of any mine or deposit yielding metals or minerals of any kind. Escott v. Crescent Coal & Navigation Co., 106 Pac. 452, 453, 58 Or. 190.

As a bailment

"A 'deposit' is commonly defined to be a naked bailment of goods to be kept without recompense and to be returned when the bailor shall require it." The depositor is liable for interest in the event of breach of duty, but is not liable in an action on the debt created until there has been a demand, except in case of wrongful conversion or loss by gross negligence of the depositor. Payne v. Gardiner, 29 N. Y. 146, 147; Bates v. Capital State Bank, 110 Pac. 277, 279, 18 Idaho, 429.

General and special deposit distinguished

A "deposit" is in law as well as in fact the placing or leaving with a banker a sum of money for safe-keeping. If the agreement between the parties is that the identical coin or currency shall be laid aside and returned, it is a "special deposit." But if the agreement is that the money shall be returned, not in the specific coin or currency deposited, but in an equal sum, it is a "general deposit." In either case the money is deposited for safe-keeping, and the only distinction between the two kinds of deposit is in the character of the return that is to be made, whether it shall be returned in the identical thing deposited, or in kind. Warren v. Nix, 135 S. W. 896, 899, 97 Ark. 374 (quoting definition from 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1998; citing State v. McFetridge, 54 N. W. 1, 84 Wis. 473, 20 L. R. A. 223).

A "general deposit" is where the bank is given custody of the money deposited with the intention, expressed or implied, that the bank is not required to return the identical money, but only its equivalent; the legal title to the money in such cases passing to the bank. A special deposit is one where the bank merely assumes charge or custody of the property without authority to use it, the depositor being entitled to receive back the identical thing deposited, in which case the title remains with the depositor, and, if the subject be money, the bank has no right to mingle it with other funds. Where money was deposited in a bank to secure payment of compensation under a well drilling contract, and, while the depositor had no right to check against the deposit, there was no agreement that the money should be kept separate from the other funds of the bank, it was a general and not a special deposit, though the transaction was called a "trust fund account" on the bank's books. Butcher v. Butler, 114 S. W. 564, 566, 134 Mo. App. 61.

"Deposits" in a bank are special or specific, and general. When the identical money or other thing deposited is to be restored or is given to the bank for some specific and particular purpose, the deposit is special or specific, and the property in deposit remains in the depositor, while general deposits comprise all moneys that are simply deposited in the bank on account of the depositor without being complicated by any other transaction than that of the depositing and withdrawing of the moneys by the customer from time to time, and such a deposit transfers the ownership of the money to the bank, and the relation between the bank and the depositor is that of debtor and creditor. City of Miami v. Shutts, 51 South. 929, 931, 59 Fla. 462 (quoting and adopting definition in Collins v. State, 15 South. 214, 33 Fla. 429).

As a loan

The "deposit" of money in a savings bank, creating the relation of debtor and creditor between the depositor and the bank, returnable on demand, in accordance with certificates of deposit issued at the time, is a "loan" within Insurance Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 28) § 36. People v. Thomas, 130 N. Y. Supp. 246, 249, 71 Misc. Rep. 339.

The "deposit" of money in a savings bank creates the relation of debtor and creditor between the depositor and the bank. The transaction between the depositor and the bank is really a loan of money and not a deposit in the strict legal sense of the term. The bank borrows the money, becomes the owner of it, and is charged with a contractual obligation to repay an equal amount at a future time in accordance with the terms of the banker's contract. Schippers v. Kempkes (N. J.) 67 Atl. 1042, 1043.

The deposits of a national bank constitute loans to it and confer on the depositor a mere chose in action. State v. Clement Nat. Bank, 78 Atl. 944, 949, 84 Vt. 167, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 22.

An ordinary "deposit" of money in a bank is not a loan of the money to the bank. Elliott v. Capital City State Bank, 103 N. W. 777, 778, 128 Iowa, 275, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1130, 111 Am. St. Rep. 198.

A "deposit" in a bank is a loan payable on demand, and the depositor may not as a general rule maintain an action for his deposit until he has first made a demand for its payment. Pratt v. Union Nat. Bank, 75 Atl. 313, 314, 79 N. J. Law, 117.

A., an employé of a national bank, wrote to a savings bank, stating that he had $5,000 he would like to deposit for six months at 6 per cent., and asked if they could use it. Through its cashier, the savings bank replied that it would use it on a straight-time certificate for one year at 6 per cent. Thereupon A. sent a draft for $5,000 payable to the savings bank, with a request for the certificate of deposit payable to himself, which he indorsed to the national bank. Held, that the transaction was a "deposit." Subsequently, upon a request from the savings bank for more money, the national bank wrote, offering to deposit more money, but refusing to make a loan. In response, it received a certificate of deposit, with a letter, asking that it be placed to the credit of the savings bank. The certificate was issued to L., the president of the savings bank, and was by him indorsed to A., who in turn indorsed it to the bank, which gave credit on its books to the savings bank for the amount of the certificate. The certificate was marked "Paid," taken up, and renewal certificates issued from time to time in the same way. After failure of the savings bank, recovery was sought on the last certificate, which was issued directly to A., and signed by the cashier of the savings bank. Held, that the transaction was a "loan" and not a "deposit," and hence did not create a preferential claim. State v. Corning State Sav. Bank, 113 N. W. 500, 503, 136 Iowa, 79.

Time and call deposits distinguished

"Deposits," in banking circles, are distinguished as "time" and "call" deposits. The former is for a specified time, and the latter is subject to call at the pleasure of the depositor, and banks receiving deposits offer no security, but the money is placed in the bank because of the confidence in its solvency and ability to repay. State v. Mitchell, 51 South. 4, 9, 96 Miss. 259, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1072, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 809 (quoting State v. Cadwell, 44 N. W. 700, 79 Iowa, 432).

A manufacturer of automobile bodies to whom a chassis was delivered to be fitted with a body only, and not for storage, is not a "depositary," within a statute providing that one who delivers to another any merchandise for which a bill of lading, receipt, or voucher has been issued, unless such receipt or voucher bears on its face the words "not negotiable," or unless such receipt is surrendered to be canceled at the time of delivery, is punishable, etc. Manny v. Willson, 122 N. Y. Supp. 16, 19, 137 App. Div. 140.

DEPOSITARY FOR HIRE

A warehouseman who agrees to hold goods for a specified time and deliver them on the owner's order becomes a "depositary for hire" under Civ. Code, § 1856, and his lien for charges is regulated by the title on liens. Shedoudy v. Spreckels Bros. Commercial Co., 99 Pac. 535, 537, 9 Cal. App. 398.
